Beethoven depicts the tragic end of the count, as he "coughs into the basket," with the unadorned simple device of the violins alone in unison. Four centuries ago in Flanders already, Goethe tells us the people were demanding "security and peace; freedom and order!" As for the interpretation, we may praise with adulation or cavil with picayunish disagreement, but it should not be forgotten for an instant, that the Boston Symphony Orchestra, as it played for us last night, and on the preceding concerts of this season, is producing an orchestral tone, and achieving an orchestral esprit-de-corps, whose realization in previous musical generations we question, and whose consummation in our day has not been surpassed.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM
AUG 9 - 1940

Spalding Gets Ovation at Music Festival

Playing of Beethoven Violin Concerto Leads to Five Encores

By LOUIS BIANCOLLI.

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 9.—With the weather co-operating beautifully, the Seventh Annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival, held in the Tanglewood Shed, moved into its second lap last night.

A huge audience of sprawlers, seated and standees, estimated at 6000 plus, enjoyed the festivities in true Berkshire style, applauding stormily and cheering after each number.

What was regarded as the greatest ovation in Tanglewood history was accorded Albert Spalding after his superb account of the Beethoven Violin Concerto.

Mr. Spalding came out five times, shook hands repeatedly with Serge Koussevitzky, and waved his thanks as the plaudits poured in from all sides.

With everything so ideal in the way of acoustics and atmosphere, seasoned concert goers were tempted to regard the performance as one of the best within memory. Certainly Tanglewood placed it second to none.

* * *

Intonation Is Clean.

Mr. Spalding played like an angel. His intonation was clean throughout. His tone unreeled like spun gold, and his phrasing was compounded of poetry and insight.

The accompaniment was the sort of thing one expects from Mr. Koussevitzky. It dovetailed perfectly. No loose ends anywhere. One moment it was a super orchestra playing, the next a subtly poised chamber ensemble unfailingly right.

In fact, recurringly it was a solid body of tone working like a solo unit on its own. In two places the balance slipped a little—where the orchestra in the first movement takes up the chief theme and the solo violin weaves fancy figures around it.

Mr. Spalding's tone lacked sufficient prominence to stand out individually in both places.

Like the rest of Series B, the concert was a Beethoven-Tschaikowsky colaboration, with Beethoven accounting for the Concerto and the Egmont Overature, and Tschaikowsky the Fourth Symphony.

* * *

A Brilliant Piece.

The Egmont piece went brilliantly, vibrant with tense drama and conflict. It mounted to stirring climaxes, and Mr. Koussevitzky's astonishing control kept things moving and growing in taut suspense. Such is the magic of the man.

The Tschaikowsky half of the series is designed to commemorate the centenary of the great Russian composer's death, which has brought up the question of why the Beethoven Concerto and not the Tschaikowsky?

All things considered there is more than enough Tschaikowsky on these programs to honor his memory, and the Beethoven Concerto ought to be a fitting memorial for any man.

Mr. Koussevitzky's Fourth is an old story. Yet, retold last night in the Berkshire hills, it sounded new and fresh. The symphony throbbed with pain and passion, and one heard a cosmic drama of the soul unfold.

There may be defects inTschaiksky. If so, Mr. Koussevitzky's dramatic sense concealed them in the pulsing drive and lyric sweep of the reading. Or perhaps he has merely probed the mainspring of Tschaikowsky's creative logic and followed accordingly.

107

THIS CLIPPING FROM
N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT

AUG 9 - 1940

Festival Music Thrills Record Concert Throng

Crowd of 7,500, Far Exceeding Last Year's Biggest, Spontaneously Applauds Performance of Beethoven and Tchaikovsky Works at Music Festival—Spalding Shares Honors With Koussevitzky and Boston Symphony—Stirring Performance Moves Audience—Governor Saltonstall Attends.

As anticipated by the management, the performance of two favorite Beethoven works, and one of Tchaikovsky's most popular and stirring symphonies, brought a record crowd to the opening concert of the second series of the Berkshire Symphonic festival at Tanglewood last night.

The throng surpassed by at least 500 the previous record crowd of 7,000 at the final concert last year. The weather continued to do its part to make the festival a success, remaining as ideal as it had been for the first series last week.

Orchestra Soloist Hailed

Attendants at the Festival concerts, accustomed to the perfection of the Symphony orchestra under the masterful leadership of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, have come to expect performances of the highest musical standard, and by their enthusiasm last night they left no doubt of their satisfaction with both the orchestra and with the guest artist, Albert Spalding, American violinist, who is a trustee of the Festival.

Spontaneous aplause for Mr. Spalding broke out between the movements of the Beethoven concerto for violin in D, in which he appeared with the orchestra, while again, following the first movement of Tchaikovsky's Fourth symphony, which concluded the program, the listeners were unable to restrain their enthusiasm.

It was in the slow second movement of the concerto that Mr. Spalding's full, warm tone, which carried effectively to all parts of the assemblage appeared to the best advantage while the Rondo which concludes the piece, was performed with great spirit by both orchestra and soloist, in perfect balance.

Tchaikovsky Work Is Climax

Opening last night's program was the oft-performed, but never better performed, overture to Goethe's "Egmont," by Beethoven, while the program reached its stirring finale with the Tchaikovsky work, which is unquestionably one of the most rousing pieces of music ever composed. Under the driving leadership of Dr. Koussevitzky, the musicians reached the heights in purveying to the audience the full emotional appeal of the Russian composer's work.

Incidentally, this series, which includes concerts tomorrow night and Sunday afternoon, is in commemoration of the 100th anniversary of Tchaikovsky's birth, and is devoted solely to works of Tchaikovsky and Beethoven. Tomorrow night Tchaikovsky's "Pathetique" will be presented, preceded by Beethoven's Sixth, the "Pastoral." The Sunday program includes Beethoven's Overture to "Coriolanus" and Symphony No. 4 and Tchaikovsky's Symphony No. 5.

Governor Attends

Among the attendants at last night's concert were Governor and Mrs. Leverett Saltonstall, who were guests of Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, president of the festival.

At noon yesterday, tickets for all the 6,000 seats in the vast shed had been sold. Sale of general admission tickets continued, however, and by the time the concert started had set a new record. As the time for the concert approached long lines formed at the box offices, and the last ticket was not sold until after the opening number.

Hundreds of those who entered on general admission tickets stretched themselves on the lawn at the rear of the shed to enjoy the music under the stars, while just as many stood behind the seats and in the areaways at the sides of the shed.

Distractions Are Lacking

One who had never attended the Festival before would undoubtedly be impressed by the silence and intentness with which the thousands of people grouped in the shed and outside listen to the music. Restless rustling of programs and even coughing, which are so frequently disturbing elements in such vast audiences, seem to be at a minimum at Tanglewood.

Whispering and craning at celebrities of which there is always a liberal sprinkling at Tanglewood, seems to be saved for the intermission, when 25 minutes is allowed for strolls about the grounds, visiting with friends, and partaking of refreshments at the tent maintained by the Thursday Morning club of Great Barrington.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW YORK, N. Y.
DAILY NEWS

AUG 10 1940

7,000 in Shed

The annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival opened at Stockbridge, Mass., Music Shed Thursday night to an audience of 7,000. Serge Koussevitsky again conducted.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES

AUG 9 - 1940

SPALDING SOLOIST AT TANGLEWOOD

Presents Beethoven's Violin Concerto at Night Program of Berkshire Festival

'EGMONT' OVERTURE GIVEN

Koussevitzky Also Conducts Boston Orchestra in Fourth Symphony of Tchaikovsky

By HOWARD TAUBMAN

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 8—The second long week-end of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival began here tonight at Tanglewood under auspices that were even more cheerful than those of the opening week. The audience was perhaps the largest Thursday assemblage in the seven-year history of the festival, estimated at more than 7,000, and the prospect was that the total attendance for the three concerts this week would prove to be the festival's record-breaker.

The weather man continued to cooperate as though he held membership in the festival association. The sunset hour, when the thousands gather for the concert and when the grounds at Tanglewood are lovely with the soft tints of twilight, was at its beneficent best. And the evening was fresh and cool, with a suggestion of a nip for those who had headed into the Berkshire Hills to escape the hot pavements of large cities.

All Tickets Sold by Noon

This week's programs by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky's direction are devoted to Beethoven and Tchaikovsky. Each of the three programs holds cherished works by each master, and the drawing power of these two names continues undiminished. At noon today the tickets for the music shed had all been disposed of for tonight's concert, and only general admission was available later in the day. The sale for Saturday night and Sunday afternoon also assures sell-outs for the seats under the shed, with many more certain to take up general admissions.

The number of general admissions to be had is unlimited. There are 6,000 seats in the shed. Holders of general admission may sit on benches or on the lawn on the fringe of the shed. Most persons prefer to spread blankets on the grass and to listen to the music under the stars. The shed itself is open on all sides, and the soft evening breeze brings the fragrance of the night to listeners under the high roof. But there is a better view of the new moon and the stars from the lawn, general admission holders will assure you, and you can lie on your back as you listen. The acoustics of the shed are so remarkable that it is possible to hear every detail of a score many yards beyond the building.

Spalding Plays Concerto

The Beethoven part of tonight's program began with the "Egmont" overture and followed with the violin concerto. The soloist was Albert Spalding, who is not only an eminent violinist but one of the guiding spirits of the festival. Mr. Spalding, a resident of Great Barrington and therefore a Berkshirite, is a member of the board of trustees of the festival. He is also active in the Berkshire Music Center, which is this year's addition to the festival.

Tchaikovsky was represented tonight by the Fourth symphony. At Saturday's concert Mr. Koussevitzky will direct the composer's Sixth symphony and will follow with the Fifth on Sunday. Thus his three outstanding works in this form will be heard in the course of the week. And thus the festival will observe the hundredth anniversary of the composer's birth.

As always the audience tonight was in a holiday mood and responded to the performances of the familiar music as if these scores were being experienced for the first time. There was unstinted applause for conductor, orchestra and soloist.

Again the audience was the amalgam of fashion and plain people that has become characteristic of these concerts. Officialdom was represented tonight by Governor Leverett Saltonstall of Massachusetts, and there was any number of other social, political, financial and artistic luminaries. Equally important to the festival authorities were the rank-and-file listeners, whose only object here is to hear great music played under virtually ideal circumstances. For they are the basic foundation of the festival's success up to now, and they represent the festival's hopes for an expanding future.

People who have watched audiences in many places have commented with enthusiasm on the freshness of this gathering's response. There is excitement in the listening, an excitement that communicates itself to artists and that causes them to play with even greater intensity.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE
AUG 9 - 1940

Music Festival In Berkshires Starts 2d Week

Koussevitzky Directs First Beethoven - Tchaikovsky Concert; Spalding Soloist

By Robert Lawrence

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 8.—The scope of the Berkshire Music Festival, which entered its second week tonight under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky, keeps gathering such significance that even the actual splendor of the programs as played by the Boston Symphony seems but part of a monumental scheme. This evening, the first of three Beethoven-Tchaikovsky concerts was given, with the German master's "Egmont" overture and D major violin concerto followed by the Russian's F minor symphony, No. 4. Albert Spalding, long a resident of the Berkshires, appeared as soloist in the concerto.

Mr. Spalding's performance was projected with the flawless taste and artistry which have long been his. This reading of the concerto was not cast in a big mold but stressed rather the cantilena and melodic embroidery to be found in Beethoven's score. Magnificent collaboration was furnished by the orchestra; but a full discussion of the concerto's effect, as well as an appraisal of the Tchaikovsky symphony, will have to be deferred until tomorrow. The soloist, who seemed slightly fatigued during the final movement, received an ovation from the audience of 7,000; and a similar reception greeted Dr. Koussevitzky's impassioned conducting of the "Egmont" overture.

A traversal of the festival grounds this afternoon revealed the strides that the Berkshire music center is making. On an improvised wooden platform in the Tanglewood Gardens overlooking what is surely one of the most lyrical sights in the East—the lake known as Stockbridge Bowl—a class in opera dramatics, under the direction of Herbert Graf, was rehearsing several dances from Handel's "Acis and Galatea," to be given here next week. One of Dr. Graf's students, training for the role of Max in Weber's "Freischuetz," strode upon the scene clad in Austrian gray-green, a feather perched in his hat. Against the background of the Stockbridge Bowl, which, with its irregularly shaped mountains, recalls the Wolfgangsee near Salzburg, one's mind turned irresistibly to another festival, now dead and lamented.

The Institute Orchestra, composed of students at the Berkshire Music Center, was playing inside the music shed as the writer passed. Two young conductors, students of Dr. Koussevitzky, took turns in leading the ensemble through Prokofieff's "Lieutenant Kije" and Tchaikovsky's overture-fantasia, "Romeo and Juliet." In general, the tone and precision displayed by the sixty-five young instrumentalists surpassed many Stadium performances of recent memory.

Last among the afternoon's activities was a rehearsal of the chorus which is to take part in next week's performance of the Bach B minor mass. Most of the conducting students and others who are specializing in advanced studies took part in the practice, held in a huge red barn whose open doors framed a vista of New England hillsides.

Tomorrow afternoon, the South Mountain cycle of chamber music near Pittsfield holds the center of attention. And on Saturday night the Berkshire festival will continue with two symphonies, No. 6 by Beethoven and Tchaikovsky, the "Pastorale" and the "Pathetique."

THIS CLIPPING FROM
COHOES, N. Y.
AMERICAN

AUG 10 1940

Mr. and Mrs. Charles Schreader and niece, Miss Florence McDermott of Remsen street will attend the Sunday concert of the Berkshire summer Symphony orchestra at Tanglewood, Stockbridge, Mass. Dr. Kossevitzky, celebrated concert conductor, is in charge of the summer concerts.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
SUN

AUG 9 - 1940

PLAYS FOR NEIGHBOR

Spalding Gives Beethove Concerto at Stockbridge.

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 9.—With the aid of what might b described as a country fiddler, the Berkshire Symphonic Festival resumed last night before an audien of more than 7,000. However, th record turnout for this year's festival season heard excellent music making, for the local pride was the admirable Albert Spalding of Great Barrington, New York and the world, who made his debut in this series as soloist in the Beethove concerto.

Mr. Spalding has played this durable score on some occasions with greater accuracy, but rarely with a more personal response to its inexhaustibly beautiful patterns, than there was in his performance last night—an elasticity in phrasing, a give and take with the orchestra that have sometimes resulted from a conscious effort on his part rather than a spontaneous one. The larghetto, in particular, was warmly emotional, and his treatment of the finale finely fanciful. An added element of personality was to be heard in Mr. Spalding's own cadenzas, which are both ingenious and tasteful.

It was an added pleasure to hear the orchestral score as clearly as Mr. Koussevitzky projected it, especially since his conception accorded so well with Mr. Spalding's.

The evening began with Beethoven's "Egmont" overture and concluded with a high pressured performance of Tchaikovsky's fourth symphony. The two sixth symphonies of these composers will be heard tomorrow night, and the Beethoven fourth and Tchaikovsky fifth on Sunday.

I. K.

This Clipping From DALLAS, TEX.
NEWS

AUG 10 1940

Boston Symphony To Honor Composer

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 9.—Commemorating the hundredth anniversary of Tchaikovsky's death, Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra will feature the composer's Symphony No. 4 in F Minor on the concert to be given in conjunction with the Berkshire Symphonic Festival Saturday evening at Tanglewood, near Lenox, Mass.

The remainder of the program will be comprised of the Coriolan Overture and the Symphony No. 4 in B Flat Major, Opus 60, by Beethoven.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM
AUG 10 1940

Calendar of Tourist Events

HROUGH Aug. 11—New Jersey: Middle Atlantic Mothboat Sailing Championships at Atlantic City.

HROUGH Aug. 17—Vermont: Music, drama and dance festival at Bennington.

HROUGH Aug. 18—Massachusetts: 7th annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival; nine concerts, Thursday and Saturday evenings, Sunday matinees; Boston Symphony Orchestra, at Stockbridge.

This Clipping From CLEVELAND, OHIO
NEWS

AUG 10 1940

Coda:

Berkshire Festival, with Dr. Serge Koussevitzky directing the Boston Symphony, offers the Beethoven and the Tschaikowsky Sixth symphonies tonight and tomorrow afternoon the Beethoven Fourth and "Coriolanus" overture and the Tschaikowsky Fifth . . . many Clevelanders are attending . . . we hear villagers surrounding Tanglewood, the Massachusetts summer home of the orchestra where the festival is given are reaping a harvest with rooms at $6 per day . . . "Daughter of the

This Clipping From
HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES
AUG 9 - 1940

Spalding and Orchestra Thrill Throng at Berkshire Festival

By CARL E. LINDSTROM
Special to The Hartford Times

Lenox, Mass.—The fourth concert of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival was sold out before noon yesterday, indicating that the Thursday concerts have become just as popular as the weekend programs. As usual, hundreds of grounds admissions were sold and the attendance must have equaled or bettered the previous mark of 6,500. Governor Saltonstall and many other notables were present.

Another criterion performance was added to Tanglewood's bright record in the Fourth Symphony of Tschaikowsky, whose works are being accented this year in recognition of the hundredth anniversary of the composer's birth. Albert Spalding was soloist in the Beethoven violin Concerto and for the opening Dr. Koussevitzky chose the Egmont Overture.

The Concerto is a favorite of Spalding's; he programmed it a number of times last season, including a performance with the Hartford Symphony Orchestra. He stirred a good deal of enthusiasm last night, being interrupted after the first movement by an ovation in which orchestra members and Dr. Koussevitzky joined. At the close, he was recalled many times.

Characteristically Spalding

It was a characteristic Spalding performance. He is a sensitive artist whose technical equipment includes a fine tone, but he cannot always command it.

The Larghetto was made to sing superbly and there were parts of the first movement which flowed with ripe, ruddy juices. The cadenza of the Rondo, however, produced some anemic double stopping and there were pitch faults to be noted. The trills were exquisitely fashioned.

But Albert Spalding has a perspective of high altitude and comprehension on this Concerto and he captures its essential nobility and sweetness of spirit. His interpretation had both metal and repose, as though the work absorbed him deeply and reverentially. It is not the sort of composition to produce a popular success, yet it found the large audience receptive and fully alive to its refining qualities.

On the other hand, Dr. Koussevitzky might be suspected of making his success come easily last night. Tschaikowsky's Fourth cannot fail, for even a routine performance brings down the house. But this was so far from routine that the atmosphere was electric with an excitement that found expression in one of the most prolonged demonstrations that the leader of the Boston Orchestra has faced at Tanglewood. His recent solemnity gave way to a gratified smile which spoke of the personal satisfaction he derived from a truly superior accomplishment.

Orchestra In Splendid Form

The orchestra was in splendid form, highly responsive and ready to deliver up all its power and brilliance in a score that has rich rewards for players and listeners alike. Again the audience interrupted at the conclusion of a first movement in order to release some of its accumulating enthusiasm. The same thing happened at the finish of the swiftly taken pizzicato ostinato but Koussevitzky chose not to recognize the applause either time. He piled up a tremendous climax for the last movement, working lavishly in ringing sonorities.

Nuances were broadly applied all evening, in fact, beginning with the Egmont Overture. Koussevitzky gave much latitude to the brass division, at times covering the string players.

All in all it was a concert of great effectiveness and splendor.

On Saturday evening, the program will be Beethoven's "Pastoral" Symphony and Tschaikowsky's "Pathetique." Sunday the Orchestra will play Beethoven's "Coriolanus" Overture and his Symphony No. 4 in B flat Major and Tschaikowsky's Symphony No. 5 in E minor.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
GREENFIELD, MASS.
RECORDER-GAZETTE
AUG 8 - 1940

Local Residents Hear Leslie at Stockbridge

Harold A. Leslie, conductor of the Pioneer Valley Symphony orchestra organized last summer and studying under Dr. Serge Koussevitzky at the school for conductors in conjunction with the Berkshire symphonic festival in Stockbridge, has been taking part in the weekly programs by the students. These, although not publicized, have had large audiences, including many from this section.

Leslie reported this week he expects to conduct a group of the students in the presentation of a concert on Friday evening to a small circle of professionals. He has been extremely busy every day, but has found time to listen to many of the morning rehearsals of the Boston symphony.

Among prominent musicians visiting the grounds recently was Arturo Toscanani, conductor.

The weekly concerts by the student group will close after next Tuesday. Among county residents who attended this week were Mr. and Mrs. Channing Bete of Bernardston road, Mrs. Bete's sister-in-law, Mrs. Conant, of Brighton, Dr. Knowlton Stone of Orchard street, Miss Elizabeth Fuller and Mrs. Mary Fuller of Deerfield, Mrs. Edward Rice of South Deerfield and Mrs. Harold Leslie.

THIS CLIPPING FROM COLUMBUS, O.
SUNDAY STAR
AUG 10 1940

* * *

Girl About Town

Georgie Raft, the dapper screen bad man, who used to do the Charleston in Broadway night clubs a dozen years back, is making a personal appearance at the Strand Theater. Dancing the Charleston is part of his act. He used to do it for a kind word; now he does it for plenty dollars. Norma Shearer is reported heading our way. Is the Raft-Shearer thing still on? . . .

If you insist on the nicest things, go to the Boston Symphony music festival up at Stockbridge, Mass. No hint of commonness or vulgarity must creep in. Sandwiches and pop are sold near the shed where the great band plays. "But no hamburgers or hot dogs!" Gertrude Robinson-Smith, president of the affair, told me. "Their odor is very unpleasant!"

Boston Transcript Aug 9, 1940

Tanglewood Music

Koussevitzky and Boston Symphony Launch Berkshire Festival, Tchaikovsky Centenary

By EDWARD DOWNES

LENOX, Aug. 9—An explosive performance of Tchaikovsky's Fourth Symphony by Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra opened this week's celebration of the Tchaikovsky Centenary at the Berkshire Festival last night. Koussevitzky's sympathy for the music of Tchaikovsky is well known to Boston music lovers, and his interpretations of the three great last symphonies are familiar. Yet last night this thrice familiar thing was once more a miracle.

Of all the Tchaikovsky symphonies, the Fourth hovers most perilously on the brink of bombast. In the hands of any but a master, it may easily sound cheap; and the painfully forthright outpourings of Tchaikovsky's tortured soul easily stale into cliche. Last night, from the first brassy fanfare — Tchaikovsky's motive of fate—the music was absorbed, the emotion was so intense that for a responsive listener it completely excluded the surrounding green woods and lawns and the fragrant evening breezes which ordinarily contribute so much to the enjoyment of music at "Tanglewood."

This rare ability of Koussevitzky's to fill the heroic gesture with a meaning which Tchaikovsky clearly intended and yet does not always convey by himself, this ability would be invaluable in the seldom heard first three symphonies of the Russian master. It is regrettable that during the three concerts which make up the Berkshire Festival's Tchaikovsky Centenary, only the three best known symphonies are to be heard.

Some Questions

Last night the program began with Beethoven's overture to Goethe's "Egmont" and the Beethoven D Major Violin Concerto with Albert Spalding as soloist. Why was it deemed inadvisable to give Tchaikovsky's Concerto instead? Surely two works by Tchaikovsky on one program would not have been too much for a centenary program.

The concerto was given a well considered and musicianly performance though we have heard both Mr. Spalding and Dr. Koussevitzky when they were more inspired. Was Koussevitzky perhaps holding down the dynamic of the Beethoven to afford a greater contrast for the Tchaikovsky Symphony to follow? The concerto was well received and the audience recalled Mr. Spalding repeatedly to acknowledge their applause.

The opening composition, the "Egmont" Overture, was timely as well as great music. Egmont, the heoric defender of the Netherlands against tyranny, fired the imagination of Goethe, fired the imagination of Beethoven, and from the Twentieth Century music shed of "Tanglewood" this music continues to hurl artistic defiance at Twentieth Century tyranny.

At the close of the concert seven thousand enthusiasts stood, stamped, cheered, and whistled their approval.

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN
AUG 9 - 1940

FOURTH FESTIVAL CONCERT IS GIVEN; CONDITIONS IDEAL

Albert Spalding Plays Violin Part of Beethoven's 'Egmont' Overture Given by Boston Symphony

By FRANCIS REGAL

Stockbridge, Aug. 8—The first concert of the second series, or the fourth of the nine concerts of the seventh Berkshire Symphonic festival, was given tonight in the music shed at Tanglewood by the Boston Symphony orchestra under conditions no less ideal than those which prevailed last week. The score for weather, indeed, is 100 per cent, and Nature has done her best to raise the festival spirit to a high pitch.

One of the pleasant features of the concerts is an intermission of 25 minutes, which gives visitors from a distance a chance to see the beautiful grounds of the estate which is the orchestra's summer home, and relaxation, talk and refreshment at the tents where cool drinks are sold contribute to the charm of a midsummer evening of music. The open sides of the music shed make smoking permissible, but during the music most of the listeners are too deeply absorbed in the performance to take time out for lighting a cigaret. These are not "pops" but programs of great and for the most part serious classics and the intent stillness in which they are listened to is impressive.

The expansion of the festival by half has given Dr Koussevitzky scope to depart somewhat from the original policy of presenting only great and famous symphonies made as interesting as possible by exceptional perfection in their performance, but the scheme is still classical rather than modern, and novelties are rarely given.

This program was such as might have delighted the grandparents of the thousands of people who were thrilled by it tonight. The three works given have long been prime favorites of music lovers—Beethoven's "Egmont" overture, his violin concerto, and the fourth symphony by Tschaikowsky. All that needs to be said about them was said long ago, but in the interpretation of them there is always room for the fresh creative impulse by which the rank of conductor or performer is gauged, and tonight the performance of all three works was thrilling. Albert Spaulding, who played the violin part of the concerto, has a large and beautiful tone which carried perfectly to the remotest parts of the vast gathering, and in breadth of style and beauty of phrasing he was at his best in this noblest of all violin concertos.

New Peak of Enthusiasm Shown by Large Audience

Tanglewood, Aug. 8—An audience of fully 7000 persons tonight cheered and applauded Dr Serge Koussevitzky, the Boston Symphony orchestra and Albert Spalding ,violinist, who played in a Beethoven concerto. It was the start of the second series of concerts in the Berkshire Music festival and a new peak of enthusiasm seemed to have been reached.

It was a perfect midsummer night and there was a large "gate" sale to hundreds who had postponed a decision about coming until the last minute. General admission receipts were $2700, at $1.50 per ticket, largest in the history of Tanglewood. The attendance was exceeded, if at all, only by that of the final concert last year.

The Connecticut valley, including Springfield, was well represented in the throng. Gov and Mrs Leverett Saltonstall arrived early and were the box guests of Mrs Charles Robinson Smith and Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith. Before going to Tanglewood the governor was the honored guest at dinner of the Berkshire Harvard club at Hotel Wendell.

Highway traffic arrangements in charge of Lieut John F. McLaughlin of the state police at Northampton, with eight patrolmen, were adequate and as at other concerts, parking was well handled by Sheriff James Bruce McIntyre and a company of 45 members of various Berkshire posts of the American Legion.

108

This Clipping From
HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES
AUG 9 - 1940

Spalding and Orchestra Thrill Throng at Berkshire Festival

By CARL E. LINDSTROM
Special to The Hartford Times

Lenox, Mass.—The fourth concert of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival was sold out before noon yesterday, indicating that the Thursday concerts have become just as popular as the weekend programs. As usual, hundreds of grounds admissions were sold and the attendance must have equaled or bettered the previous mark of 6,500. Governor Saltonstall and many other notables were present.

Another criterion performance was added to Tanglewood's bright record in the Fourth Symphony of Tschaikowsky, whose works are being accented this year in recognition of the hundredth anniversary of the composer's birth. Albert Spalding was soloist in the Beethoven violin Concerto and for the opening Dr. Koussevitzky chose the Egmont Overture.

The Concerto is a favorite of Spalding's; he programmed it a number of times last season, including a performance with the Hartford Symphony Orchestra. He stirred a good deal of enthusiasm last night, being interrupted after the first movement by an ovation in which orchestra members and Dr. Koussevitzky joined. At the close, he was recalled many times.

Characteristically Spalding

It was a characteristic Spalding performance. He is a sensitive artist whose technical equipment includes a fine tone. but he cannot always command it.

The Larghetto was made to sing superbly and there were parts of the first movement which flowed with ripe, ruddy juices. The cadenza of the Rondo, however, produced some anemic double stopping and there were pitch faults to be noted. The trills were exquisitely fashioned.

But Albert Spalding has a perspective of high altitude and comprehension on this Concerto and he captures its essential nobility and sweetness of spirit. His interpretation had both metal and repose, as though the work absorbed him deeply and reverentially. It is not the sort of composition to produce a popular success, yet it found the large audience receptive and fully alive to its refining qualities.

On the other hand, Dr. Koussevitzky might be suspected of making his success come easily last night. Tschaikowsky's Fourth cannot fail, for even a routine performance brings down the house. But this was so far from routine that the atmosphere was electric with an excitement that found expression in one of the most prolonged demonstrations that the leader of the Boston Orchestra has faced at Tanglewood. His recent solemnity gave way to a gratified smile which spoke of the personal satisfaction he derived from a truly superior accomplishment.

Orchestra In Splendid Form

The orchestra was in splendid form, highly responsive and ready to deliver up all its power and brilliance in a score that has rich rewards for players and listeners alike. Again the audience interrupted at the conclusion of a first movement in order to release some of its accumulating enthusiasm. The same thing happened at the finish of the swiftly taken pizzicato ostinato but Koussevitzky chose not to recognize the applause either time. He piled up a tremendous climax for the last movement, working lavishly in ringing sonorities.

Nuances were broadly applied all evening, in fact, beginning with the Egmont Overture. Koussevitzky gave much latitude to the brass division, at times covering the string players.

All in all it was a concert of great effectiveness and splendor.

On Saturday evening, the program will be Beethoven's "Pastoral" Symphony and Tschaikowsky's "Pathetique." Sunday the Orchestra will play Beethoven's "Coriolanus" Overture and his Symphony No. 4 in B flat Major and Tschaikowsky's Symphony No. 5 in E minor.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
GREENFIELD, MASS.
RECORDER-GAZETTE
AUG 8 - 1940

Local Residents Hear Leslie at Stockbridge

Harold A. Leslie, conductor of the Pioneer Valley Symphony orchestra organized last summer and studying under Dr. Serge Koussevitzky at the school for conductors in conjunction with the Berkshire symphonic festival in Stockbridge, has been taking part in the weekly programs by the students. These, although not publicized, have had large audiences, including many from this section.

Leslie reported this week he expects to conduct a group of the students in the presentation of a concert on Friday evening to a small circle of professionals. He has been extremely busy every day, but has found time to listen to many of the morning rehearsals of the Boston symphony.

Among prominent musicians visiting the grounds recently was Arturo Toscanani, conductor.

The weekly concerts by the student group will close after next Tuesday. Among county residents who attended this week were Mr. and Mrs. Channing Bete of Bernardston road, Mrs. Bete's sister-in-law, Mrs. Conant, of Brighton, Dr. Knowlton Stone of Orchard street, Miss Elizabeth Fuller and Mrs. Mary Fuller of Deerfield, Mrs. Edward Rice of South Deerfield and Mrs. Harold Leslie.

THIS CLIPPING FROM COLUMBUS, O.
SUNDAY STAR
AUG 10 1940

* * *

Girl About Town

Georgie Raft, the dapper screen bad man, who used to do the Charleston in Broadway night clubs a dozen years back, is making a personal appearance at the Strand Theater. Dancing the Charleston is part of his act. He used to do it for a kind word; now he does it for plenty dollars. Norma Shearer is reported heading our way. Is the Raft-Shearer thing still on? . . .

If you insist on the nicest things, go to the Boston Symphony music festival up at Stockbridge, Mass. No hint of commonness or vulgarity must creep in. Sandwiches and pop are sold near the shed where the great band plays. "But no hamburgers or hot dogs!" Gertrude Robinson-Smith, president of the affair, told me. "Their odor is very unpleasant!"

Boston Transcript

Tanglewood Music

Aug 9, 1940

Koussevitzky and Boston Symphony Launch Berkshire Festival, Tchaikovsky Centenary

By EDWARD DOWNES

LENOX, Aug. 9—An explosive performance of Tchaikovsky's Fourth Symphony by Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra opened this week's celebration of the Tchaikovsky Centenary at the Berkshire Festival last night. Koussevitzky's sympathy for the music of Tchaikovsky is well known to Boston music lovers, and his interpretations of the three great last symphonies are familiar. Yet last night this thrice familiar thing was once more a miracle.

Of all the Tchaikovsky symphonies, the Fourth hovers most perilously on the brink of bombast. In the hands of any but a master, it may easily sound cheap; and the painfully forthright outpourings of Tchaikovsky's tortured soul easily stale into cliche. Last night, from the first brassy fanfare — Tchaikovsky's motive of fate—the music was absorbed, the emotion was so intense that for a responsive listener it completely excluded the surrounding green woods and lawns and the fragrant evening breezes which ordinarily contribute so much to the enjoyment of music at "Tanglewood."

This rare ability of Koussevitzky's to fill the heroic gesture with a meaning which Tchaikovsky clearly intended and yet does not always convey by himself, this ability would be invaluable in the seldom heard first three symphonies of the Russian master. It is regrettable that during the three concerts which make up the Berkshire Festival's Tchaikovsky Centenary, only the three best known symphonies are to be heard.

Some Questions

Last night the program began with Beethoven's overture to Goethe's "Egmont" and the Beethoven D Major Violin Concerto with Albert Spalding as soloist. Why was it deemed inadvisable to give Tchaikovsky's Concerto instead? Surely two works by Tchaikovsky on one program would not have been too much for a centenary program.

The concerto was given a well considered and musicianly performance though we have heard both Mr. Spalding and Dr. Koussevitzky when they were more inspired. Was Koussevitzky perhaps holding down the dynamic of the Beethoven to afford a greater contrast for the Tchaikovsky Symphony to follow? The concerto was well received and the audience recalled Mr. Spalding repeatedly to acknowledge their applause.

The opening composition, the "Egmont" Overture, was timely as well as great music. Egmont, the heoric defender of the Netherlands against tyranny, fired the imagination of Goethe, fired the imagination of Beethoven, and from the Twentieth Century music shed of "Tanglewood" this music continues to hurl artistic defiance at Twentieth Century tyranny.

At the close of the concert seven thousand enthusiasts stood, stamped, cheered, and whistled their approval.

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN
AUG 9 - 1940

FOURTH FESTIVAL CONCERT IS GIVEN; CONDITIONS IDEAL

Albert Spalding Plays Violin Part of Beethoven's 'Egmont' Overture Given by Boston Symphony

By FRANCIS REGAL

Stockbridge, Aug. 8—The first concert of the second series, or the fourth of the nine concerts of the seventh Berkshire Symphonic festival, was given tonight in the music shed at Tanglewood by the Boston Symphony orchestra under conditions no less ideal than those which prevailed last week. The score for weather, indeed, is 100 per cent, and Nature has done her best to raise the festival spirit to a high pitch.

One of the pleasant features of the concerts is an intermission of 25 minutes, which gives visitors from a distance a chance to see the beautiful grounds of the estate which is the orchestra's summer home, and relaxation, talk and refreshment at the tents where cool drinks are sold contribute to the charm of a midsummer evening of music. The open sides of the music shed make smoking permissible, but during the music most of the listeners are too deeply absorbed in the performance to take time out for lighting a cigaret. These are not "pops" but programs of great and for the most part serious classics and the intent stillness in which they are listened to is impressive.

The expansion of the festival by half has given Dr Koussevitzky scope to depart somewhat from the original policy of presenting only great and famous symphonies made as interesting as possible by exceptional perfection in their performance, but the scheme is still classical rather than modern, and novelties are rarely given.

This program was such as might have delighted the grandparents of the thousands of people who were thrilled by it tonight. The three works given have long been prime favorites of music lovers—Beethoven's "Egmont" overture, his violin concerto, and the fourth symphony by Tschaikowsky. All that needs to be said about them was said long ago, but in the interpretation of them there is always room for the fresh creative impulse by which the rank of conductor or performer is gauged, and tonight the performance of all three works was thrilling. Albert Spaulding, who played the violin part of the concerto, has a large and beautiful tone which carried perfectly to the remotest parts of the vast gathering, and in breadth of style and beauty of phrasing he was at his best in this noblest of all violin concertos.

New Peak of Enthusiasm Shown by Large Audience

Tanglewood, Aug. 8—An audience of fully 7000 persons tonight cheered and applauded Dr Serge Koussevitzky, the Boston Symphony orchestra and Albert Spalding ,violinist, who played in a Beethoven concerto. It was the start of the second series of concerts in the Berkshire Music festival and a new peak of enthusiasm seemed to have been reached.

It was a perfect midsummer night and there was a large "gate" sale to hundreds who had postponed a decision about coming until the last minute. General admission receipts were $2700, at $1.50 per ticket, largest in the history of Tanglewood. The attendance was exceeded, if at all, only by that of the final concert last year.

The Connecticut valley, including Springfield, was well represented in the throng. Gov and Mrs Leverett Saltonstall arrived early and were the box guests of Mrs Charles Robinson Smith and Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith. Before going to Tanglewood the governor was the honored guest at dinner of the Berkshire Harvard club at Hotel Wendell.

Highway traffic arrangements in charge of Lieut John F. McLaughlin of the state police at Northampton, with eight patrolmen, were adequate and as at other concerts, parking was well handled by Sheriff James Bruce McIntyre and a company of 45 members of various Berkshire posts of the American Legion.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
BRIDGEPORT, CONN.
TELEGRAM

AUG 9 - 1940

109

Thousands at Tanglewood Hear Tschaikowsky Memorial Concert

By JOHN SELBY
(Associated Press Arts Editor)

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 8. —More people than there were seats in the Berkshire symphonic festival's "music shed" heard the fourth program of the seventh season tonight at Tanglewood, the festival's magnificent estate between this village and Lenox.

including hundreds who chose to sit in the open on steamer rugs and blankets.

The 6,038 seats inside the huge, wide-shaped structure can be supplemented indefinitely by benches placed along the sides and at the rear. These are under the stars instead of a roof, but such are the remarkable acoustics of the "shed" that even the most delicate pianissimos can be heard perfectly for a couple of hundred yards in each direction from the edges.

The weather again was perfect as it has been for each of the four concerts so far.

Tonight's guests of honor were Governor and Mrs. Leverett Saltonstall. Tonight's soloist was Albert Spalding, who is not only one of the great American violinists, but an official of the festival board and a neighbor. The Spalding estate is near Great Barrington, Mass., a few miles from Stockbridge.

The program was the first of Serge Koussevitzky's pocket-sized Tschaikowsky memorial, although two of the three works heard were by Beethoven. The music began with the latter's "Egmont" overture, and the first half closed with the Beethoven violin concerto with Spalding the soloist.

After intermission the audience heard one of the most affecting performances of Tchaikowsky's No. 4 symphony on th eexperience of this listener.

Spalding is by no means the most flashy violinist now before the public, but he certainly is one of the most serious and sincere. His idea of the concerto emphasized musical rather than technical considerations, and was roundly applauded.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra proved itself once again one of the great orchestras of history. Because the Berkshire festival is one of the few which does not use amplification, the audience heard its glorious tone unchanged by mechanical manipulation.

Concerts Saturday night and Sunday afternoon will complete the second third of the current festival.

THIS CLIPPING FROM LEWISTON, ME.
SUN
AUG 9 - 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM WILMINGTON, DEL.
NEWS
AUG 9 - 1940

This Clipping From
WATERBURY, CONN.
REPUBLICAN

AUG 9 - 1940

This Clipping From
HARTFORD, CONN.
COURANT

AUG 9 - 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM
LOWELL, MASS.
COURIER-CITIZEN

AUG 9 - 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM MERIDEN, CONN.
JOURNAL

AUG 9 - 1940

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
SUN
AUG 10 1940

Music Festival Fills Towns Of the Berkshires With Visitors

Special Dispatch to THE SUN.

BERKSHIRE HILLS, Mass., Aug. 10.—All of the important Berkshire summer resort towns are crowded with visitors for the current Music Festival and there is a constant succession of other entertainments. In the midst of the gayety, however, there is no letup in the Allied Relief work that is going on everywhere. A gala evening has been arranged by the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, Inc., Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, president, for next Friday night at Tanglewood.

Starting at 6 o'clock the varied program will include a concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky conductor; Strauss waltzes by the Boston Pops Orchestra, Arthur Fiedler conductor; folk dancing on the lawn, an auction, a hot buffet supper, fireworks, brief addresses by Gov. Lehman and Miss Dorothy Thompson with Dr. Archibald McLeish, librarian of Congress, presiding.

Subscribe for Boxes.

Among those who have bought boxes are Mrs. Henry Sloane Coffin, Mrs. Edward Thaw, Mrs. Samuel Gilbert Colt, Prof. and Mrs. Philip Marshall Brown, Mrs. Carl A. de Gersdorff, Mrs. Sidney C. Howard, Mrs. Leonard Clark Feathers, William H. Knapp, Mrs. John Nicholas Brown Jr., Mrs. Alvan T. Fuller, Mrs. George Lee, Miss Helen Frick, Mrs. William H. Moore, Mrs. Paul Moore and Mrs. Ira Nelson Morris.

Miss Natalie Hays Hammond has bought fifty admission tickets to be resold. Misses Helen C. and Mary C. Burnham of Boston have purchased fifty tickets to be given to students at the Tanglewood Music School.

Next Friday seventeen Berkshire gardens are to be opened to the public for the third week for benefit of the World Famine Relief Fund, of which Rev. Dr. Anson Phelps Stokes is honorary chairman for Berkshire and Mrs. W. Rockwood Gibbs, county chairman.

Among the gardens that may be seen are those on the estates of Mrs. Rodney Procter, president of the Lenox Garden Club; Miss Mabel Choate, Mrs. Carl A. de Gersdorff, Charles C. Griswold, Mrs. William Marshall Bullitt, Mrs. Carr V. Van Anda, Giraud Foster, Mrs. Charles James Kittredge, Mrs. Donald F. McPherson and Mrs. Walter Atherton.

Mrs. William Penn Cresson will open at Chesterwood, Stockbridge, the studio of her father, the late Daniel Chester French, sculptor, and the marble palace that the late Robb de Peyster Tytus built on the mountainside at the head of the Tyringham Valley also may be seen. This place, called Ashintully is now owned by Mr. and Mrs. John Stewart McLennan.

This Clipping From
ALBANY, N.Y.
TIMES UNION
AUG 10 1940

MUSIC
In Albany

By EDGAR S. VAN OLINDA

An estimated audience of 7,000 music lovers cheered themselves hoarse as the last crashing chords of Tschaikowsky's Fourth Symphony reverberated from the surrounding Berkshire hills of the great music shed in 'Tanglewood," to mark the end of the first concert in the second series of three in the Berkshire Symphonic Festival Thursday night.

That music is the universal language was proved by the amicable inclusion of the music of Germany and Russia with no diplomatic complications. Ideal weather conditions which have marked the entire festival since its opening concert prevailed, with a brilliant quarter-moon casting a benign blessing over the animated scene.

The program opened with Beethoven's overture to Goethe's play, "Egmont," a dramatic piece of writing which has survived the play for which it was written. Dr. Koussevitzky and the men of the Boston Symphony orchestra, gave a spirited and colorful performance which set the pace for the ensuing numbers. The second portion of the program was devoted to Beethoven violin concerto in D, op. 61 which ranks close to the highest place in the violin music of the world. It was fitting that the soloist chosen was Albert Spalding, American virtuoso and a summer resident of Stockbridge. Beethoven does not treat the violin as a mere soloist, but rather as an individual balance to the orchestra. Nor is he concerned with great technical exposition, aiming only to express musical thoughts, for which the violin and orchestra are the mediums of the moment. While Mr. Spalding does not possess a big tone, his is one of sensuous beauty colored with intrinsic musical value. His one opportunity for a display of his technical skill had its fruition in the cadenza which brings the inner movement to its most enobling climax. He received a tremendous ovation at the conclusion of the concerto and was recalled to the platform for many smiling-faced acknowledgements.

Koussevitzky and Tschaikowski are almost synonomous terms in the field of symphonic music. As an enthusiastic listener behind this reviewer so tritely expressed it, "he certainly went to town on that one." Perhaps this uncontrollable but highly effective bit of summation tells the story in the fewest words. It was significant, however, that under Dr. Koussevitzky's eloquent and exciting reading of the score the unwritten law of silence between movements was tossed to the Berkshire winds.

Tonight another capacity audience will be regaled with the Beethoven's "Pastoral" and Tschaikowsky's "Pathetique" symphonies, a program with tremendous emotional scope.

This Clipping From
ALBANY, N.Y.
KNICKERBOCKER NEWS
AUG 10 1940

Dorothy Maynor to Sing At Berkshire Festival

The Berkshire Festival at Lenox, Mass., marks an important anniversary this year for Dorothy Maynor, the young Negro soprano who will be heard on the Festival program next Saturday night, Aug. 17.

Just one year ago, Miss Maynor, an unknown young soprano from Norfolk, Va., went to the festival to listen to music conducted by Serge Koussevitzky, leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and ended up by making music herself for the great conductor.

Her surprise audition for him after one of the orchestra rehearsals has become part of this year's musical history—her singing for an audience of one, in the great empty shell which seats 6,000, Koussevitzky's immediate recognition of her fine voice, his invitation to her to sing for members of his orchestra.

The next day, the humble young singer who had planned to be a teacher of public school music sang for a critical audience of musicians an impromptu program which ranged from opera arias to Negro spirituals. Critics who were present proclaimed her the find of the decade. A sold-out house greeted Miss Maynor's concert debut in New York in November, the result being a triumph which recalled the first appearances in New York of such artists as Tibbett, Pons and Flagstad.

The year which has followed has indeed been an astonishing one for the young singer. During her first season she was engaged by four of the country's leading symphony orchestras, the New York Philharmonic, the Boston Symphony, the Philadelphia Orchestra and the Chicago Symphony Orchestra. An extensive concert tour was only limited by her desire to continue regular vocal study, yet her first season's concerts took her as far west as Wisconsin, as far south as Richmond.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
SUN

AUG 10 1940

Music.

The Quester happens to like the music of Brahms. On the program of the Berkshire Music Festival last week the Boston Symphony Orchestra had placed the second symphony of Brahms. Knowing the Quester's likes, Col. James E. Leath, the squire of Kinderhook, invited him and Mrs. Quester to occupy his box at the festival. Saturday night the chief work was Roy Harris's third symphony, a piece which those hearing must surely have admitted was indicative of progress in American music. On Sunday afternoon there was the second Brahms symphony, which the Quester has never heard played better, and Stravinsky's Capriccio, a tour de force which Sanroma, the Boston orchestra's pianist, and the other players seemed to enjoy playing. Those who did not like it are those who want pattern in their wall paper and tunes in their music. The Quester has ever since been hearing in his head bits from the second symphony, which is in a degree admirable because it obscures many things that were just as well not heard.

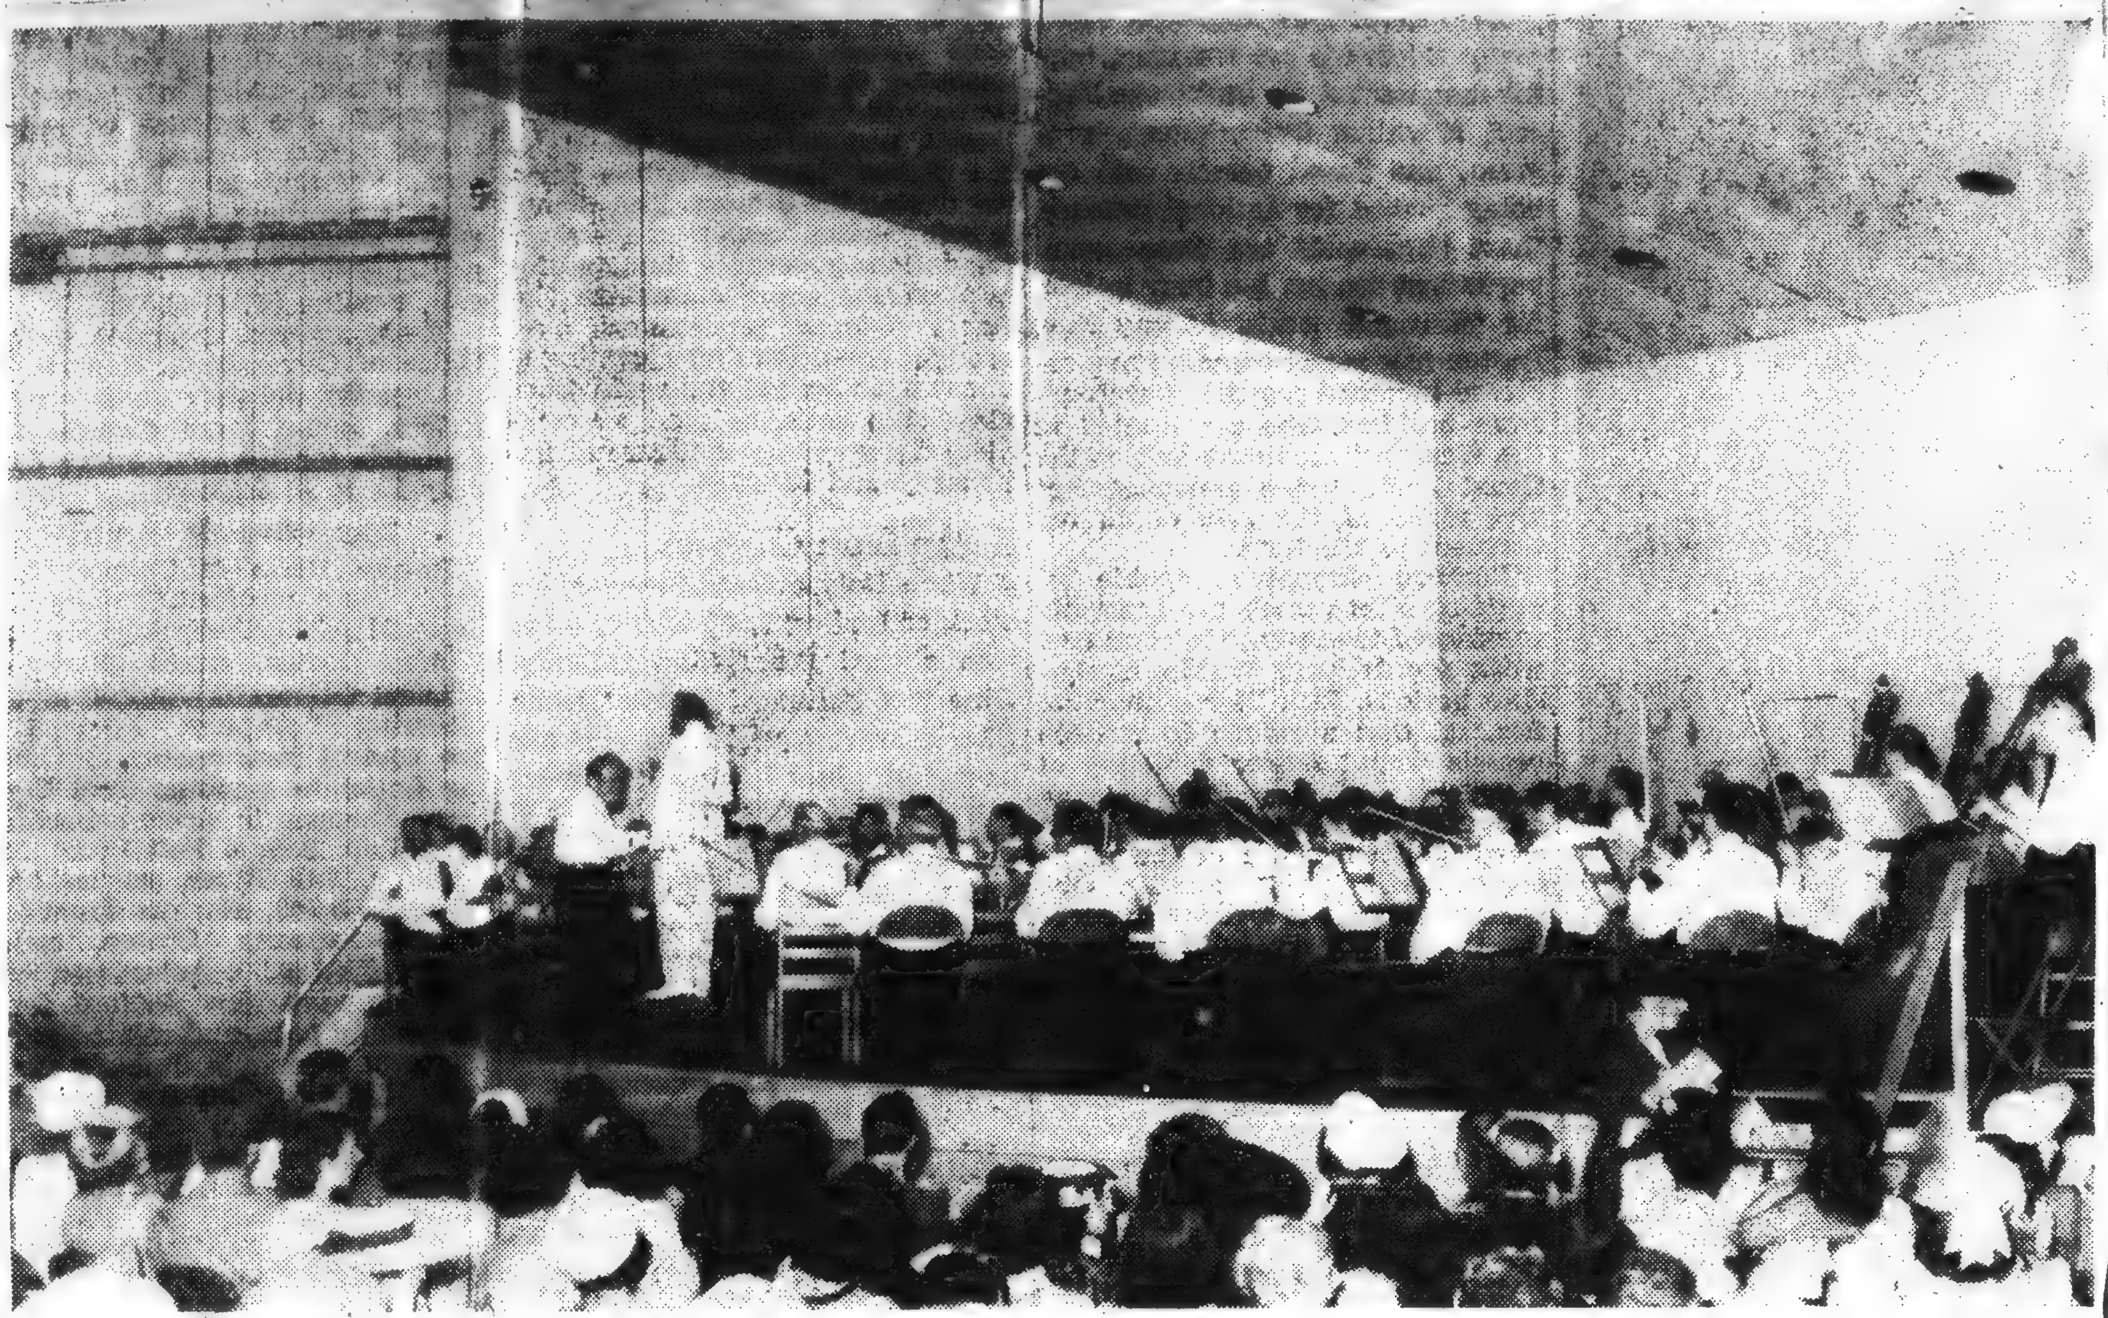
* * *

Old Music.

The Quester has often wondered whether the eighteenth century folk appreciated music as do those of a later day. He has come to the conclusion that they did not. In the first place the music of their day was based on what we call pattern, that is, Bach and Mozart wrote in prescribed forms, their music was all pattern, they did not foresee the freedom which was to come later and which released the composers from cut and dried formulae. Brahms freed himself from the tyranny of pattern and wrote as he felt. Consequently his music has a virility and a universality which are only possible after a secession from prescribed forms. The Quester has never been able to make up his mind which of the four Brahms symphonies he likes best. Just now, after hearing Koussevitzky's reading of the second, he feels that that is his favorite. Next week, after he hears the first, which is on the program at the last concert of the season, he will probably decide that he likes that best.

* * *

110



H. S. Babbitt

Symphonic Formalities, Informal Garb, at Tanglewood

Dr. Koussevitzky shares the applause with the Boston Symphony Orchestra by shaking hands with its concertmaster, Richard Burgin, after the performance of Brahms' Second Symphony on Aug. 4. Note that conductor and players are coatless.

The Berkshire Festival

By L. A. Sloper

Stockbridge, Mass.

With the musical arts all but eclipsed in Europe, the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, now in its seventh year, takes on an added significance. Its success matches its artistic importance. Its programs have been expanded from six to nine concerts, extending over three weeks. The attendance at the first three (Aug. 1-4) broke previous records. About 6,000 persons heard the first concert, 6,500 the second, and 7,400 the third. Enthusiasm was unrestrained. Prolonged handclapping was punctuated with cheers and "Bravos."

The international importance of the enterprise is further emphasized by the inauguration this summer of the long-planned Music Center, established at "Tanglewood" in connection with the festival. The Music Center offers "special opportunities to all for the practice and contemplation of music in its noblest aspects." It is divided into two sections: an Institute for Advanced Study, designed for those who intend to make music their career, and an Academy, for those who wish merely to increase their acquaintance with music and its interpretation.

The Center is sponsored by the Trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Dr. Serge Koussevitzky is its director, and G. Wallace Woodworth, chairman of the department of music at Harvard University, is assistant director. The faculty includes also composers, conductors, critics, and first-desk men, of the Boston Orchestra. There are about 300 students this year, and in classes in conducting, choral singing, orchestral playing, and opera dramatics they show their eager interest.

Dr. Koussevitzky's programs for the festival concerts this year again range freely through the symphonic repertory. No actual first performances are included. In this respect it should be noted that the festival audiences are made up in large part of summer visitors who have not had the opportunity of hearing the Boston Symphony Orchestra regularly at its winter concerts, and some of whom at least are not intimately acquainted with symphonic music. On this account, it has been thought wise to confine the programs, so far, to repertory pieces.

* * *

But the audiences are by no means innocent of musical knowledge. They have taken kindly to Stravinsky and Roy Harris, for example, as well as to the classical and romantic masters. No doubt in seasons to come, new works will find their way into the programs. In the meantime, the superb playing of the orchestra and the poetic interpretations of Dr. Koussevitzky have been sufficient attraction.

The orchestra was in top form in the first series of concerts. The lists included works by Mozart, Beethoven, Schumann, Berlioz, Brahms, Strauss, Debussy, Ravel, Stravinsky, and Harris. A near-novelty was Roy Harris' Symphony No. 3, first performed in February, 1939, by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. At that time it made an excellent impression, and that impression was confirmed on the present hearing. Harris is perhaps the most American of composers, and this is probably his most characteristic and most individual work to date. The composer, who is teaching at the Music Center this summer, was present to acknowledge the warm reception of his symphony.

* * *

Another work in the "modern" idiom was Stravinsky's witty Capriccio for piano and orchestra, with Jesús María Sanromá as soloist. Mr. Sanromá is particularly expert in this type of music, and the performance was brilliant and beautifully co-ordinated. There was an ovation at its close.

Gregor Piatigorsky, the distinguished cellist, joined the orchestra for a warmly conceived and vividly executed performance of Strauss' "Don Quixote," long a favorite vehicle for this combination of artists, not forgetting the valuable assistance of Jean Lefranc as viola soloist. Here again the enthusiasm of the audience was irrepressible.

Indeed, a more responsive group of listeners would be hard to find. Dr. Koussevitzky was, of course, the main hero and there were prolonged ovations for him at each concert, and particularly after the stirring interpretation of the Brahms Second Symphony on Sunday afternoon.

In further recognition of its international responsibilities, the festival will give an extra program on Aug. 16 to aid Allied relief. This program will include not only contributions from the orchestra and the Music Center, with famous guest artists, but addresses by Gov. Herbert H. Lehman of New York, and Dorothy Thompson, newspaper columnist, at a meeting under the chairmanship of Archibald MacLeish, poet, and librarian of the Congressional Library at Washington, D. C.

This Clipping From
CUE
NEW YORK, N.Y.
AUG 10 1940

MUSIC

Dr. Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra opened the Berkshire Symphonic Festival this year, again in the shed of Tanglewood where Nathaniel Hawthorne wrote his "Tanglewood Tales", with a program designed strictly for those to whom music is an art worthy of sober thought.

The Victorians might have called it "heavy fare", this program of three "firsts" — Beethoven, Schumann, and Sibelius. But the large and dressy audience, that began an eager descent upon the festival grounds a full hour before the magic deadline of 8:30, seemed to find no reason for yawning.

If one were given to picking at details, it would be possible, I suppose, to quarrel with the reading of specific movement; but, after all, the Boston Symphony Orchestra deserves no cavil or argument in the matter of total performance. The Sibelius work, one of Dr. Koussevitzky's most notable achievements in the past, earned an extraordinary response.

This year there are matters of individual improvement that should make the lot of the casual visitor especially agreeable. In the first place, nearly 3,000 extra seats, painted an ardent blue, have been spread upon the green lawn, affording late comers a chance to relax and bask in the benign warmth of the Boston horns.

Then again, the nerves of motorists have been spared further irritation this year. Parking arrangements are adequate and efficient.

The visiting constabulary is helpful and restful to the feminine eye. A new organ, donated by the Carnegie Foundation, has been added to the purely musical equipment of the shed.

The management has announced a gala program for the evening of Friday, August 16, for the benefit of the Allied Fund, Inc.

This Clipping From
CHICAGO, ILL.
TRIBUNE

AUG 10 1940

Front Views
By June

Visit in the Berkshires.

Pittsfield, Mass., Aug. 9. — Artur Rodzinski, who conducted this season at Ravinia, recently purchased a place in the Berkshires and bought goats he intended to raise as a hobby. The goats are to be sold shortly because their incessant bleating offends his music-conditioned ears. The first week of the Berkshire Symphonic festival he left his home one morning to get away from the noise of the goats and went to a rehearsal at the festival shed. Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony orchestra were at work on Strauss' Don Quixote and as Rodzinsky entered the shed they had reached Variation II., in which the bleating of sheep is accomplished on muted brass.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT

AUG 10 1940

FESTIVAL CROWDS MAY BREAK RECORD

New Attendance Marks Believed Likely

TWO CONCERTS

Tchaikovsky and Beethoven Works to be Performed at Tanglewood Tonight and Tomorrow.

Continuing the observance of the centennial of Tchaikovsky's birth, the Boston Symphony orchestra under Dr. Serge Koussevitzky will present two more of his symphonies at Berkshire Symphonic festival concerts tonight and tomorrow afternoon.

The festival management expects that previous attendance records will be shattered at the week-end concerts, provided the weather, which so far has cooperated 100 per cent, continues favorable. A new record of 7,500 was established Thursday night, and usually the attendance during the week-end is heavier than at the Thursday concerts.

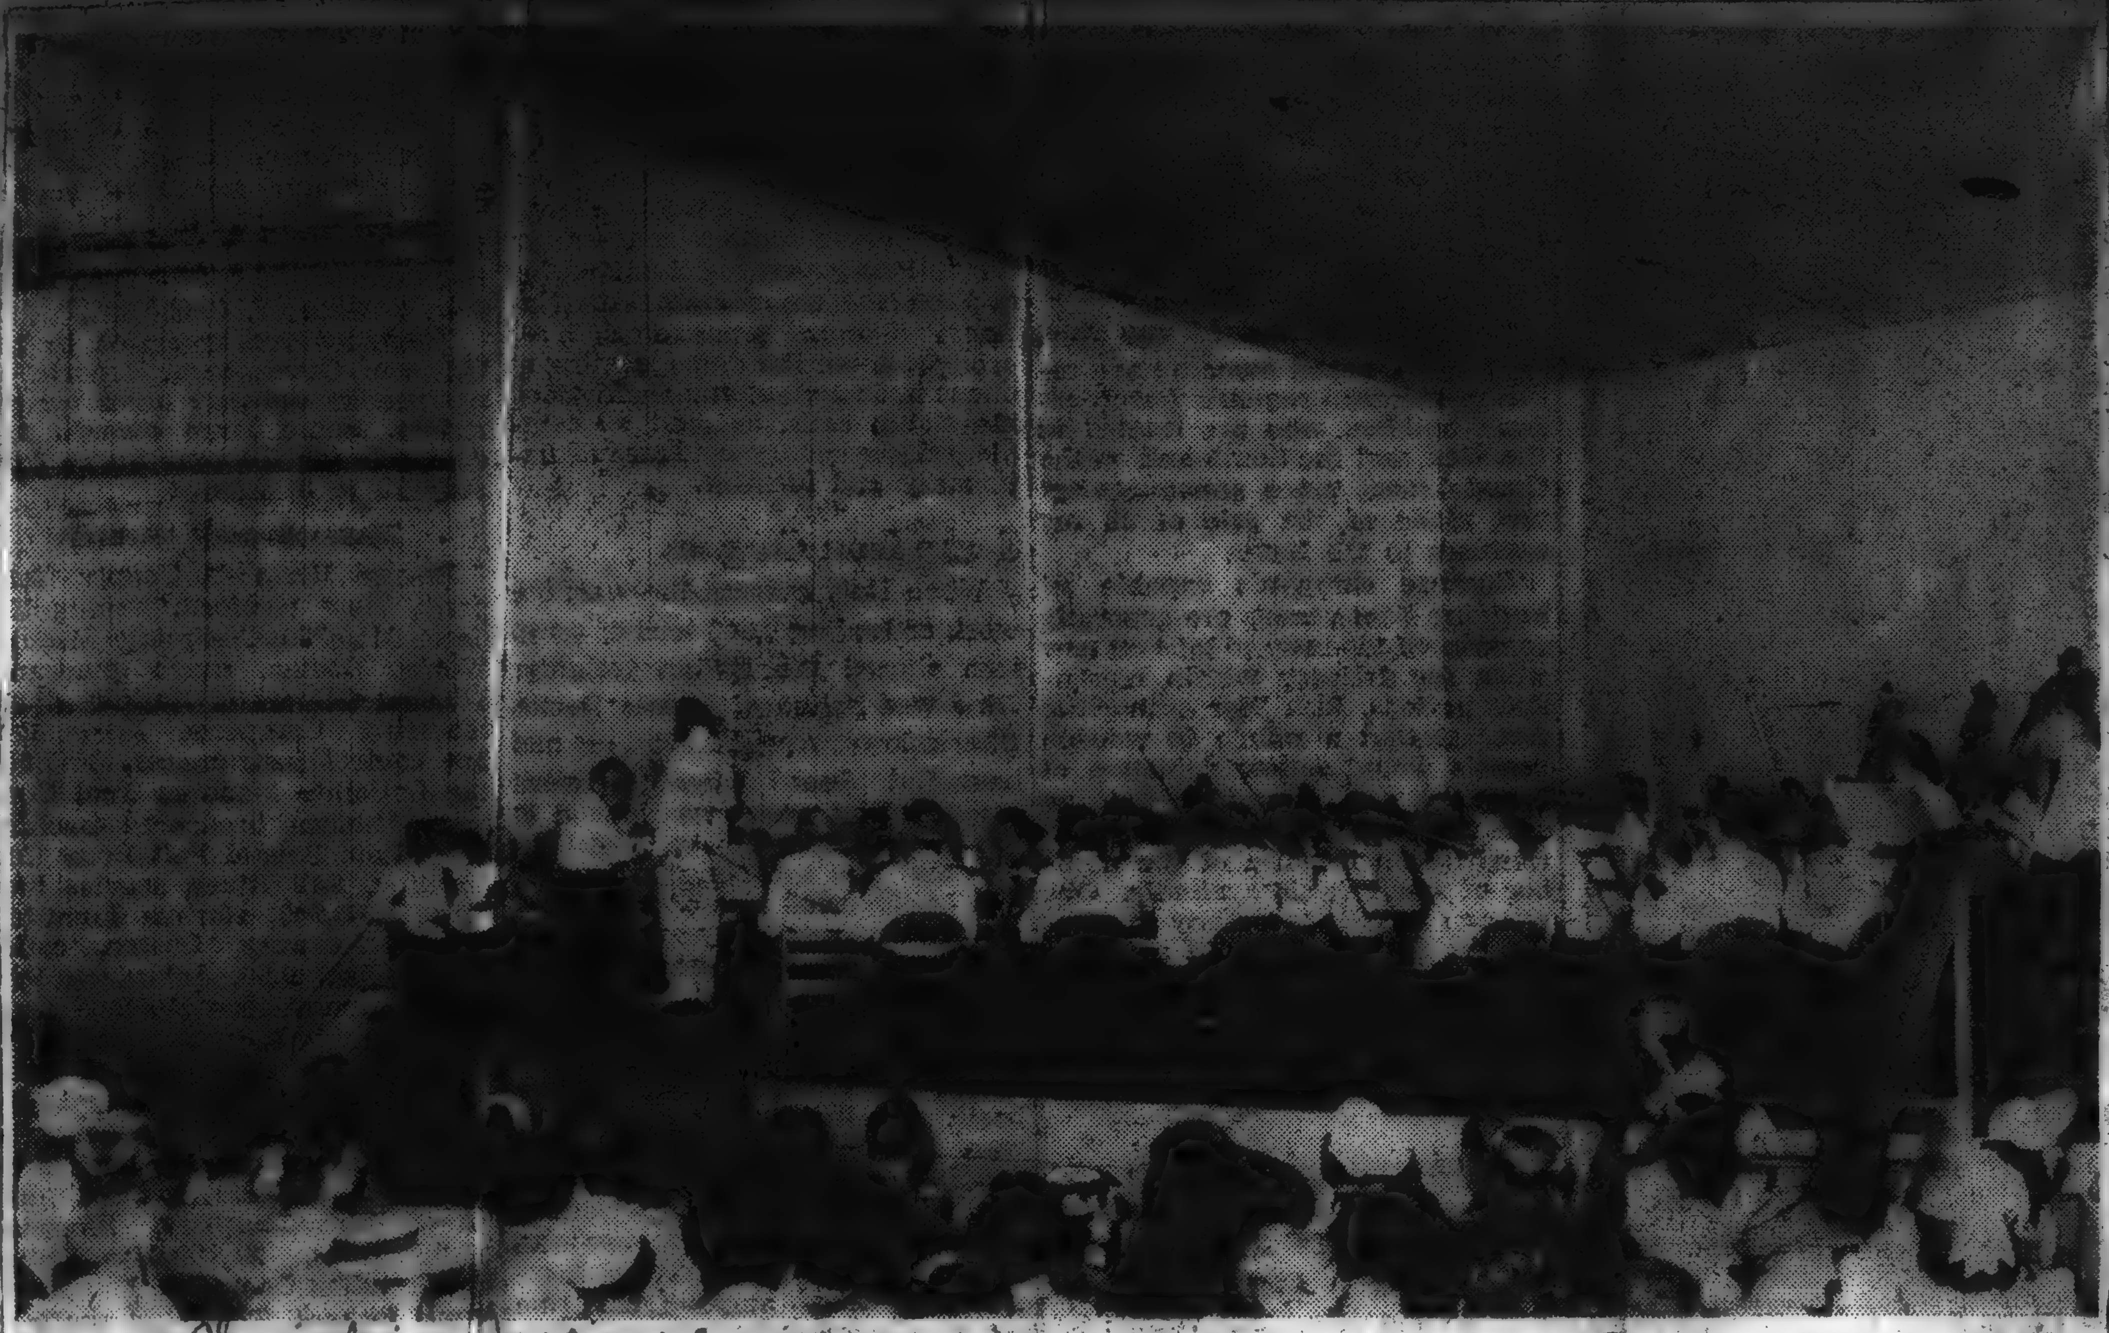
The program tomorrow night includes Tchaikovsky's Symphony No. 6 in B minor, the "Pathetique," which will be preceded by Beethoven's "Pastoral" Symphony No. 6 in F major. On Sunday afternoon, Dr. Koussevitzky will present Beethoven's "Coriolanus" overture, and Symphony No. 4 in B-flat major, and Tchaikovsky's Symphony No. 5 in E minor. The Tchaikovsky observance opened Thursday with the performance of his Fourth symphony.

The concert tomorrow night will start at 8.30 o'clock and the Sunday concert will start at 3.30.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NIAGARA FALLS, N. Y.
GAZETTE
AUG 10 1940

The seventh annual Berkshire festival given by the Boston Symphony under Serge Koussevitsky at Tanglewood near Stockbridge is attracting the attention of musical America. Thousands of music lovers from all over the country are attending the sessions. The whole idea of the festival was a dream created by Dr. Koussevitsky a quarter of a century ago. In the pre-revolutionary days in old Moscow, the Russian musician envisioned a music center which would be important to the basic ideals of any democracy. Now he has seen his dream come true right here in our own Berkshire hills in one of the only free lands left in the world today. Gathered in and around Stockbridge are 300 students of music, working together and studying the intricacies of music, plus thousands of outsiders who have come to hear the beautiful music of the orchestra. The final series of concerts opens on the fifteenth of August with the Bach B Minor Mass in which a chorus of 200 students from the orchestra's Berkshire Music Center will be heard. A week from tonight, Dorothy Maynor, Negro soprano discovered by Dr. Koussevitsky, will appear as soloist.

160



E. S. Babbitt Christian Science Monitor

Symphonic Formalities, Informal Garb, at Tanglewood Aug 10, 1940

Dr. Koussevitzky shares the applause with the Boston Symphony Orchestra by shaking hands with its concertmaster, Richard Burgin, after the performance of Brahms' Second Symphony on Aug. 4. Note that conductor and players are coatless.

This Clipping From
CUE
NEW YORK, N.Y.
AUG 10 1940

MUSIC

Dr. Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra opened the Berkshire Symphonic Festival this year, again in the shed of Tanglewood where Nathaniel Hawthorne wrote his "Tanglewood Tales", with a program designed strictly for those to whom music is an art worthy of sober thought.

The Victorians might have called it "heavy fare", this program of three "firsts" — Beethoven, Schumann, and Sibelius. But the large and dressy audience, that began an eager descent upon the festival grounds a full hour before the magic deadline of 8:30, seemed to find no reason for yawning.

If one were given to picking at details, it would be possible, I suppose, to quarrel with the reading of specific movement; but, after all, the Boston Symphony Orchestra deserves no cavil or argument in the matter of total performance. The Sibelius work, one of Dr. Koussevitzky's most notable achievements in the past, earned an extraordinary response.

This year there are matters of individual improvement that should make the lot of the casual visitor especially agreeable. In the first place, nearly 3,000 extra seats, painted an ardent blue, have been spread upon the green lawn, affording late comers a chance to relax and bask in the benign warmth of the Boston horns.

Then again, the nerves of motorists have been spared further irritation this year. Parking arrangements are adequate and efficient.

The visiting constabulary is helpful and restful to the feminine eye. A new organ, donated by the Carnegie Foundation, has been added to the purely musical equipment of the shed.

The management has announced a gala program for the evening of Friday, August 16, for the benefit of the Allied Fund, Inc.

The Berkshire Festival

By L. A. Sloper

Stockbridge, Mass.

With the musical arts all but eclipsed in Europe, the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, now in its seventh year, takes on an added significance. Its success matches its artistic importance. Its programs have been expanded from six to nine concerts, extending over three weeks. The attendance at the first three (Aug. 1-4) broke previous records. About 6,000 persons heard the first concert, 6,500 the second, and 7,400 the third. Enthusiasm was unrestrained. Prolonged handclapping was punctuated with cheers and "Bravos."

The international importance of the enterprise is further emphasized by the inauguration this summer of the long-planned Music Center, established at "Tanglewood" in connection with the festival. The Music Center offers "special opportunities to all for the practice and contemplation of music in its noblest aspects." It is divided into two sections: an Institute for Advanced Study, designed for those who intend to make music their career, and an Academy, for those who wish merely to increase their acquaintance with music and its interpretation.

The Center is sponsored by the Trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Dr. Serge Koussevitzky is its director, and G. Wallace Woodworth, chairman of the department of music at Harvard University, is assistant director. The faculty includes also composers, conductors, critics, and first-desk men, of the Boston Orchestra. There are about 300 students this year, and in classes in conducting, choral singing, orchestral playing, and opera dramatics they show their eager interest.

Dr. Koussevitzky's programs for the festival concerts this year again range freely through the symphonic repertory. No actual first performances are included. In this respect it should be noted that the festival audiences are made up in large part of summer visitors who have not had the opportunity of hearing the Boston Symphony Orchestra regularly at its winter concerts, and some of whom at least are not intimately acquainted with symphonic music. On this account, it has been thought wise to confine the programs, so far, to repertory pieces.

* * *

But the audiences are by no means innocent of musical knowledge. They have taken kindly to Stravinsky and Roy Harris, for example, as well as to the classical and romantic masters. No doubt in seasons to come, new works will find their way into the programs. In the meantime, the superb playing of the orchestra and the poetic interpretations of Dr. Koussevitzky have been sufficient attraction.

The orchestra was in top form in the first series of concerts. The lists included works by Mozart, Beethoven, Schumann, Berlioz, Brahms, Strauss, Debussy, Ravel, Stravinsky, and Harris. A near-novelty was Roy Harris' Symphony No. 3, first performed in February, 1939, by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. At that time it made an excellent impression, and that impression was confirmed on the present hearing. Harris is perhaps the most American of composers, and this is probably his most characteristic and most individual work to date. The composer, who is teaching at the Music Center this summer, was present to acknowledge the warm reception of his symphony.

* * *

Another work in the "modern" idiom was Stravinsky's witty Capriccio for piano and orchestra, with Jesús María Sanromá as soloist. Mr. Sanromá is particularly expert in this type of music, and the performance was brilliant and beautifully co-ordinated. There was an ovation at its close.

Gregor Piatigorsky, the distinguished cellist, joined the orchestra for a warmly conceived and vividly executed performance of Strauss' "Don Quixote," long a favorite vehicle for this combination of artists, not forgetting the valuable assistance of Jean Lefranc as viola soloist. Here again the enthusiasm of the audience was irrepressible.

Indeed, a more responsive group of listeners would be hard to find. Dr. Koussevitzky was, of course, the main hero and there were prolonged ovations for him at each concert, and particularly after the stirring interpretation of the Brahms Second Symphony on Sunday afternoon.

In further recognition of its international responsibilities, the festival will give an extra program on Aug. 16 to aid Allied relief. This program will include not only contributions from the orchestra and the Music Center, with famous guest artists, but addresses by Gov. Herbert H. Lehman of New York, and Dorothy Thompson, newspaper columnist, at a meeting under the chairmanship of Archibald MacLeish, poet, and librarian of the Congressional Library at Washington, D. C.

This Clipping From
CHICAGO, ILL.
TRIBUNE
AUG 10 1940

Front Views

By June

Visit in the Berkshires.

Pittsfield, Mass., Aug. 9. — Artur Rodzinski, who conducted this season at Ravinia, recently purchased a place in the Berkshires and bought goats he intended to raise as a hobby. The goats are to be sold shortly because their incessant bleating offends his music-conditioned ears. The first week of the Berkshire Symphonic festival he left his home one morning to get away from the noise of the goats and went to a rehearsal at the festival shed. Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony orchestra were at work on Strauss' Don Quixote and as Rodzinsky entered the shed they had reached Variation II., in which the bleating of sheep is accomplished on muted brass.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT
AUG 10 1940

FESTIVAL CROWDS MAY BREAK RECORD

New Attendance Marks Believed Likely

TWO CONCERTS

Tchaikovsky and Beethoven Works to be Performed at Tanglewood Tonight and Tomorrow.

Continuing the observance of the centennial of Tchaikovsky's birth, the Boston Symphony orchestra under Dr. Serge Koussevitzky will present two more of his symphonies at Berkshire Symphonic festival concerts tonight and tomorrow afternoon.

The festival management expects that previous attendance records will be shattered at the week-end concerts, provided the weather, which so far has cooperated 100 per cent, continues favorable. A new record of 7,500 was established Thursday night, and usually the attendance during the week-end is heavier than at the Thursday concerts.

The program tomorrow night includes Tchaikovsky's Symphony No. 6 in B minor, the "Pathetique," which will be preceded by Beethoven's "Pastoral" Symphony No. 6 in F major. On Sunday afternoon, Dr. Koussevitzky will present Beethoven's "Coriolanus" overture, and Symphony No. 4 in B-flat major, and Tchaikovsky's Symphony No. 5 in E minor. The Tchaikovsky observance opened Thursday with the performance of his Fourth symphony.

The concert tomorrow night will start at 8.30 o'clock and the Sunday concert will start at 3.30.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NIAGARA FALLS, N. Y.
GAZETTE
AUG 10 1940

The seventh annual Berkshire festival given by the Boston Symphony under Serge Koussevitsky at Tanglewood near Stockbridge is attracting the attention of musical America. Thousands of music lovers from all over the country are attending the sessions. The whole idea of the festival was a dream created by Dr. Koussevitsky a quarter of a century ago. In the pre-revolutionary days in old Moscow, the Russian musician envisioned a music center which would be important to the basic ideals of any democracy. Now he has seen his dream come true right here in our own Berkshire hills in one of the only free lands left in the world today. Gathered in and around Stockbridge are 300 students of music, working together and studying the intricacies of music, plus thousands of outsiders who have come to hear the beautiful music of the orchestra. The final series of concerts opens on the fifteenth of August with the Bach B Minor Mass in which a chorus of 300 students from the orchestra's Berkshire Music Center will be heard. A week from tonight, Dorothy Maynor, Negro soprano discovered by Dr. Koussevitzky, will appear as soloist.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM
AUG 10 1940

Koussevitzky Is One Busy Man

By LOUIS BIANCOLLI.

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 10.—On every lawn, in every classroom, in the concert shed, on everybody's lips one name recurs—Serge Koussevitzky—Dr. Koussevitzky to Berkshirites.

The name is written large on this music center. In fact, from the lowest foothills to the topmost peak of these lovely highlands Serge Koussevitzky is a synonym for music and musicianship.

He is the busiest man here. Conductor, teacher, supervisor, co-ordinator, guiding spirit, Dr. Koussevitzky is always on the go. The actual concerts are only one small part of his routine.

During the symphonic festival Dr. Koussevitzky is at the shed at 9:30 rehearsing the Boston Symphony. This occurs four times a week—Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday. A special rehearsal on Saturday morning is open to members of the festival. Rehearsals go on usually for three hours.

* * *

Follows Busy Schedule.

Dr. Koussevitzsky gives them everything. All observers agree the keynote is artistic discipline. He expects the best and gets it. He is usually calm and even tempered. After 16 year's association the men are attuned to his ways and few snags develop. No fits of fury, few harsh words—anyway not in this green paradise.

He rests and lunches from 12:30 to 2:30 on his estate three-quarters of a mile up the hills, called Bald Head. The place is heavenly. It overlooks Tanglewood and takes in a rolling vista of lake and hills.

At 2:30 he jumps into his car and returns to headquarters. He commutes between two classrooms, both devoted to conducting.

One is on the ground floor. He enters that first. Thirty conductorial aspirants assemble there and await the master. There are two pianos. Two students sit at them and run through a symphonic score, while a third wields a baton over them.

Dr. Koussevitzky speaks, crisply, to the point. Technic, interpretation, tradition are part of his teaching. Sometimes Paul Hindemith and Aaron Copland of the composition faculty come in to present the composer's point of view.

This is the general class. The instruction is largely in groups. The final personal touch is reserved for room No. 2 on the second floor. That's where Dr. Koussevitzky's five "participating conductors" are admitted to the final secrets.

The room is small, equipped with a baby upright, a phonograph and three large mirrors, one movable. The first question you ask is, "Why the mirrors? The answer is if more conductors mastered their art that way they mightn't make such monkeys of themselves on the podium.

* * *

Poise Held Imperative.

Dr. Koussevitzky believes in poise. The Berkshire Music Center hired a "gymnast" for the purpose and no baton-swinging student is going to leave this place a block of wood or a weeping willow.

Dr. Koussevitzky works individually in this room—that is, he confines himself with one of the chosen five at the time. The student "conducts" a recording. Whatever it is that spells orchestral magic is passed on here. No one else is admitted, not even a New York reporter.

At 4 Dr. Koussevitzky walks across the lawn to the shed for a rehearsal with the Institute Orchestra, which he supervises. These are advanced students working at the Center. All thirty members of the conducting class are there, including the quintet of "participating conductors." Also present are the "professors" of the Boston Symphony Orchestra—the first-desk men. These first-desk men have helped train the members of the student orchestra. What it amounts to is that players are watching players and conductors are watching conductors.

And this is where the five young directors get a crack at the real stuff, with the master viewing them sharply. Beside Dr. Koussevitzky, who keeps his eye on the baton, are concertmaster Richard Burgin, watching the violins; Georges Mager, watching the trumpets; Mr. Raichman, keeping tabs on the trombones, and so on down the line.

Of course, on the day of the concert Dr. Koussevitzky goes straight home after morning rehearsals and there's no seeing him until he strides out for the first number on the program. When he's not on the grounds Dr. Koussevitzky is at home. He never goes anywhere. Mrs. Koussevitzky is ill and has been confined to their beautiful home high above Tanglewood.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE
AUG 10 1940

Youth Figures Prominently at Music Festival

Predominates in Audiences at Berkshire Concerts; Program in Retrospect

By Robert Lawrence

PITTSFIELD, Mass., Aug. 9.—The Berkshire Music Festival continues with a prevailing atmosphere that seems almost unreal amid a world in upheaval. Youth is predominant here, both among the audiences and in the student body of the Music Center—the very youth that, at this time next year, may be facing military duty. And one cannot escape the feeling, during this festival, of gratifying one's senses on the rim of a volcano.

There is time now, during a lull in local activities, for a more ample discussion of last night's concert, when Serge Koussevitzky conducted the Boston Symphony in performances of Beethoven's "Egmont" overture and Tchaikovsky's Fourth Symphony, and Albert Spalding appeared as soloist in the Beethoven violin concerto. If any single impression may be said to remain most vividly, it is the orchestral accompaniment to the concerto, which assumed the proportions of a great symphonic canvas.

No Evidence of Tedium

The Beethoven concerto has never been noted for its brevity. For some listeners, the first movement, despite its heroic material, is overlong. Yet there were no evidences of longeur last night. The massive opening tutti carried an architectural significance that supported the entire work. And no less profound was the orchestra's playing of the soaring melody which frames the second movement. This was lyricism of the highest order, contrived by a leader who can extract the melos from any symphonic fabric.

Mr. Spalding, on his part, wrought much that was fine. His playing bore a sensitivity last night that found its most congenial moments in the slow movement and in the more reflective passages of the opening allegro. Always there was an admirable adherence to good taste and sound musicianship and gratifyingly often there were flights into an imaginative realm. Mr. Spalding has not a virtuoso equipment and there were times during the finale when his powers were severely taxed. But for the most part the soloist held his own technically and in the essence his reading proved to be intimate and poetic

Symphony Played Brilliantly

Following the concerto the Boston Symphony contributed a performance of the Tchaikovsky F Minor symphony that was breath-taking in its emtional surge and dynamic brilliance. Even to those who know this orchestra as an unrivaled technical machine, the absolute precision of the brass and wind choirs in last night's concert, the glittering elan of the strings in the pizzicato movement, surpassed expectations. Undoubtedly the Fourth Symphony—relying more upon external effect—has less inner fire than the Fifth and Sixth, which are to be played in the next two concerts. As played last night, however, it spoke a convincing refutation to those who would deny the genius of Tchaikovsky.

This morning the writer asked Dr. Koussevitzky if there were any artistic reason for his placing the works of Beethoven and Tchaikovsky side by side on three programs of the festival. "Yes," the conductor replied, with some display of feeling. "I am devoted to the music of Tchaikovsky and I am hoping to prove that he can stand together with Beethoven in the same evening without suffering from comparison. I can say, and thousands of people with me, that with Tchaikovsky it is only a matter of performance."

And on the basis of his performance last night Dr. Koussevitzky was correct.

Chamber Music Program

Further musical activity in the Berkshires centered this afternoon about South Mountain, the beautiful hilltop estate of Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge, south of Pittsfield, where weekly chamber-music concerts are given during the summer by the South Mountain String quartet. Today, the regular quartet, whose members are Kathleen Parlow and Edwin Ideler, violinists; Conrad Held, violist, and Willem Willeke, cellist, was augmented by the presence of Sprague Coolidge, violist, and Harvey Shapiro, cellist. They played [illegible] Reger's F Major sextet and the early string sextet of Arnold Schoenberg, "Verklaerte Nacht," familiar to symphony audiences as set forth by a full string section. The concert ended with Michael Haydn's C Major viola quintet.

The influence of Wagner upon Schoenberg's early output is well known, and "Verklaerte Nacht" enjoys more than its share, not only in harmonic treatment, but in the matter of length. Still, the work is arrestingly sensuous, and yesterday's players bestowed as much fervor upon it as they brought to the difficult Reger sextet.

Tonight there is to be an open-air demonstration at Tanglewood by Herbert Graf's class in opera dramatics, including a performance of Hindemith's tabloid "Hin und Zurueck," with the composer as part of the orchestra. It will be described tomorrow.

This Clipping From
WATERBURY, CONN.
REPUBLICAN
AUG 11 1940

BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL DRAWS OVER 9,000

Mrs. Roosevelt Among Tanglewood Crowd

Lenox, Mass., Aug. 10—(AP)—A record crowd of more than 9,000 tonight heard the second concert of the second series by the Boston Symphony orchestra, with Dr. Serge Koussevitzky conducting, at the Berkshire Symphonic festival at Tanglewood.

Mrs. Franklin Delano Roosevelt motored to the festival from Hyde Park, N. Y., and sat in the box section with friends. She declined an invitation to sit in the official box, explaining that she wished to attend only as a private patron.

The orchestra played two symphonies composed by Beethoven and Tchaikovsky, the "Pastorale" and the "Pathetique."

The opening selection was Beethoven's Symphony No. 6 in F Major while the latter part consisted of Tchaikovsky's Symphony No. 6 in B Minor.

Every seat in the shed was taken and the overflow crowd estimated at 3,500 lined the open air sides and sat on the lawn.

Festival officials predicted an attendance of 10,000 for tomorrow afternoon's concert.

The previous attendance record was attained Thursday with 7,500 patrons.

This Clipping From
NEW BEDFORD, MASS.
STANDARD TIMES
AUG 11 1940

This Clipping From
WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM
AUG 11 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM NORWICH, CONN.
RECORD
AUG 11 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE
AUG 10 1940

Every Saturday

* * * * *

Berkshire Enjoys Tremendous Resort Business During Festival Period. Suggestions Offered in Interest of Comfort.

Resort Dilemma

Resort-dependent Berkshire is in a quandary. Temporarily, it is in the Utopian situation of having all the paying guests it knows what to do with on week ends. Many of them are good-naturedly accepting rooming facilities not up to expectations in order to be accommodated at all.

Concededly better off in tourist patronage than any other New England resort center, the Berkshires face possibility of an actual serious shortage of rooms if the demand continues to grow. The Berkshire Symphonic Festival is nearly a sellout, even though expanded to a third week. General tourist trade, built up by intensive advertising, and the annual peak visitation by parents to boy and girl summer camps, have combined with the Festival to create a demand that may fill every available room.

Some Festival visitors are going to points as far as Northampton, in order to find just the quarters they want, motoring over for each concert. The Berkshire Hillls Conference and other agencies plan all-night rooming information service this week end, in order to place late applicants within the county. The Boston & Albany Railroad has arranged special emergency sleeper service at a siding for those brought here for the extra concert program for Allied Relief, Aug. 16, and considers extension of this device to regulate concert periods.

Yet, in view of the temporariness of the congestion, who would feel justified in risking the price of a substantial new hotel? The present situation applies only to about three midsummer weeks—assuring hardly a nucleus of the annual income necessary for such a project. The answer to Berkshire's problem, apparently, lies in one of two directions. One is the possibility, as seems very likely, that the Festival and other resort attractions will continue to expand, so as to bring large numbers of guests over a longer period. But this is a long term possibility, one that may not satisfactorily clarify the housing dilemma for some years The other is of more immediate likelihood, based in the opportunity for construction of several relatively small country inns, distributed throughout the county.

Unlike hotels, these smaller establishments would not require a high guest count. They would be able to fight annual overhead and realize a profit on reasonably sustained patronage. Because of their modest pretensions, such houses would appeal to all types of tourist. As a matter of fact, it is surprising that more have not sprung up in rejuvenated Berkshire, as at the longer-established resort sections. It seems sure that they would have a winter-long skier trade, because winter sportsmen, more than any other element of the resort crowds, have demanded complete informality, in keeping with heavy boots and flannel shirts. Often in winter, most small hostelries and tourist overnight houses have been filled. A large majority of skiers, inquiring of the Berkshire Hills Conference, have asked for small inns or farm house accommodations. One of the most successful Berkshire hostelries has facilities for only 60 guests, at the outside limit, yet is filled for many week ends distributed throughout the year. Dinner and luncheon entertainment rounds out a nice income.

Establishment of several inns—not elaborate, but comfortable and offering facilities at reasonable prices, might be Berkshire's immediate answer. These houses might take up the stress, felt by the large hotels in summer and by the overnight tourist homes in the winter sports season, at the same time earning a fair profit.

* * *

Two Suggestions

There are a few things that would add to the general comfort and convenience of the public turning out in such enthusiastic numbers for the Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts at Tanglewood.

For instance, it would greatly facilitate ease of departure from the Shed if the gates in the steel fence were doubled in size and opened at the close of the concerts. At present there seem to be a few bottlenecks.

It would also be greatly appreciated by the public if the roads entering the grounds were either sprinkled or given a coat of calcium chloride to lay the dust.

No doubt Berkshire Symphonic Festival trustees have observed these things as they have observed most everything else and will supply a remedy.

This Clipping From
HARTFORD, CONN.
COURANT
AUG 11 1940

Miss Maynor Returns To Tanglewood

Famous Negro Soprano to Be Heard There Saturday With Boston Symphony

Saturday at the Berkshire Festival in Stockbridge, Mass., Dorothy Maynor, the celebrated young Negro soprano, will complete an exciting musical year by appearing with the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the baton of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky.

Miss Maynor is one of the famous artists who will be heard in the six Sunday afternoon events of the Bushnell Concert Course this season. Others in the course are Josef Hofmann, pianist; Lily Pons, coloratura soprano; Busch and Serkin, violin-piano duo; Jascha Heifetz, violinist and John Charles Thomas, baritone.

At the Berkshire Festival Miss Maynor will sing two great classic works, "Adelaide," by Beethoven, and "Bella mia fiamma, addio," a lesser known cencert aria of Mozart. For her it will be a happy reunion with the orchestra which first discovered her.

Just one year ago, Miss Maynor an unknown young soprano, from Norfolk, Va., went to the Festival to listen to music conducted by Serge Koussevitzky, leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and ended up by making music herself for the great conductor. Her surprise audition for him after one of the orchestra rehearsals has become part of this year's musical history:—Her singing for an audience of one, in the great empty shell which seats six thousand, Koussevitzky's immediate recognition of her fine voice, his invitation to her to sing for members of his orchestra. The next day, the humble young singer who had planned to be a teacher of public school music sang for a critical audience of musicians an impromptu program which ranged from opera arias to Negro spirituals. Critics who were present declared her the find of the decade. A sold-out house greeted Miss Maynor's concert debut in New York in November, the result being a triumph which recalled the first appearances in New York of such artists as Tibbett, Pons and Flagsted.

An Exciting Year.

The year which has followed has indeed been an astonishing one for the young singer, to whom $25 the year before would have seemed impressive. During her first season she was engaged by four of the country's leading symphony orchestras, the New York Philharmonic, the Boston Symphony, the Philadelphia Orchestra and the Chicago Symphony Orchestra. An extensive concert tour was only limited by her desire to continue regular vocal study, yet her first season's concerts took her as far west as Wisconsin, as far south as Richmond, Va., and in each concert city delighted audiences agreed with Olin Downes, critic of the New York Times in his verdict that "she has virtually everything needed by a superb artist."

Yet all this acclaim has not upset Miss Maynor's fundamental simplicity in the least, and she is still incredulous about her success. "I hope only to be worthy of the great music I sing," she says. The daughter of a Norfolk, Va., minister, Dorothy Maynor received her first musical training in the choir of her father's church. She is a graduate of Hampton Institute, which she entered at fourteen and where she received her first vocal lessons. A few years later she toured Europe as a member of the institute's famous Negro chorus. Afterwards, she studied at the Westminster Choir School in Princeton, N. J. until a few friends, who believed in her talents, persued her to take some singing lessons in New York. She still studies religiously with her vocal teacher John Alan Haughton. This year the musical world has been stirred by the beautiful voice and unaffected artistry of this modest young women who "just likes to sing," and who in 12 months has captured the interest of the whole country.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES
AUG 10 1940

BERKSHIRES SCENE OF CHAMBER MUSIC

The South Mountain String Quartet Offers Its Sixth Concert in Pittsfield

REGER SEXTET IS HEARD

Work in F, Opus 118, Played—7,600 at Tanglewood Heard Albert Spalding

By HOWARD TAUBMAN
Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 9—The sixth concert in the series of eight at the Temple of Music on South Mountain in Pittsfield took over today's formal musical manifestation as the seventh annual Berkshire Symphonic festival observed its Friday off day. The South Mountain String Quartet presented an unhackneyed and uncommonly interesting program: Max Reger's Sextet in F, Opus 118; Arnold Schoenberg's "Die Verklaerte Nacht," Sextet in D minor, Opus 4, and Michael Haydn's Quintet in C, Opus 88.

The regular members of the South Mountain Quartet, who are Kathleen Parlow and Edwin Ideler, violins; Conrad Held, viola, and Willem Willeke, 'cello, had Sprague Coolidge, viola, and Harvey Shapiro, 'cello, as assisting artists. Mr. Coolidge is the son of Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge, founder of the South Mountain Quartet as well as of other chamber music ensembles, and Mr. Shapiro is a member of the NBC Symphony Orchestra and of the Primrose Quartet.

Visiting Artists Assist

The visiting artists joined effectively with the members of the quartet in smooth and comprehending performances. If the Reger Sextet seemed labored and cerebral the blame could not be charged to the musicans. Reger's music does not wear well. It lacks a sense of urgency that would make it viable for modern listeners.

The early Schoenberg work, however, is another matter. Written in a lush post-romantic vein, it has a profile and a character of its own. Mr. Schoenberg may perhaps look back on this score as a youthful indiscretion, but he will pardon us if we find it more attractive than some of his later emanations.

As for Michael Haydn, his quintet was light and graciously turned, as one would expect from a close relative of "Papa" Haydn. It was good program-making to place this work after Reger and Schoenberg, which are severe and solemn in general cast. The musicians traversed the difference of a century in stylistic approach with easy efficiency.

Whether one sat inside the temple of music or on the low wooden benches outside, one could hear the singing of the birds and the chirping of the crickets. They made a pleasant polyphonic background for the music. One must admit that birds and crickets are more impartial than music critics. They sang and chirped with equal zeal through Reger, Schoenberg and Haydn.

Attendance Sets Record

Officials of the Berkshire symphonic festival were still aglow today as they looked back on last night's record-breaking audience. The total attendance was about 7,600, several hundred better than the best crowd up to now, which gathered at last season's closing concert. The 6,000 seats in the music shed were all sold, and 1,600 general admissions were disposed of.

In fact, two customers arrived at the end of the first movement of the Tchaikovsky symphony, the last work on the program, and insisted on paying for general admissions and camping on the lawn. There were so many listeners sprawled over the vast lawn that fans out from the shed that one had to be careful as one walked for fear of stepping on some harmless music lover.

Last night performances were again of a high order. An incisive, mettlesome interpretation of Beethoven's "Egmont" overture led off. Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra were clearly in stride. The attacks were crisp, the tone transparent, the balance of the choirs admirable.

Albert Spalding Soloist

With Albert Spalding as soloist Beethoven's violin concerto was read with elevated feeling. Mr. Spalding's tone was light but elegant and suave. It carried perfectly through the vast spaces of the shed. The interpretation was couched on a severe, lofty plane. If anything, one sought for a little more sweep and passion. Only the cadenzas, especially that in the first movement, seemed to go on forever.

The evening was topped off by the Tchaikovsky Fourth Symphony. Mr. Koussevitzky directs Tchaikovsky with passionate conviction. His is no apologetic offering, but a full-blooded, rousing reading. If you do not like Tchaikovsky to begin with, you may like him less as Mr. Koussevitzky conceives him. For he is not secretly ashamed of the music. Of course, if you like Tchaikovsky, you could not ask for a more exhilarating performance. For our taste, it was a little overblown last night. But the audience clearly had no objections. There was a stunning demonstration—applause, shouting, handkerchief waving—at the end.

Plans for the Allied Relief benefit on Aug. 16 continue to expand. It was revealed today that all six New England Governors have granted their patronage to the event, and most of them may be here. Governor Lehman of New York will speak as will Dorothy Thompson, and Archibald MacLeish, Librarian of Congress, will preside.

A special train will come from Boston. The Pullman cars will be switched to a siding in Lenox to serve the guests for overnight use. At the festival grounds the ticket sale is being pushed, and chances for the great prize draw are selling briskly.

This Clipping From
NEW HAVEN, CONN.
REGISTER
AUG 11 1940

Berkshire Festival Outstanding Success

Marie Nash, Young Singer Who Replaces Marta Eggert In "Higher and Higher," Puts New Life Into Pleasant, If Crazy, Broadway Musical

By H. EARLE JOHNSON

AMERICA'S GREAT music festival enters its concluding week on Thursday with another impressive array of programs directed by Dr. Koussevitsky. The brilliance of the concerts thus far have amazed and delighted throngs whose enthusiasm has continued to mount with each successive performance. The beauty of the setting at Tanglewood, the undisputed excellence of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and the earnest good-will reflected ~~by all in this time~~ of world stress has lifted the Berkshire Symphonic Festival into the realm of great events in the world of art.

A unique benefit program is added to the Festival on Friday of this week, given on behalf of the Allied Relief Fund Inc. Dorothy Thompson, columnist, and Gov. Herbert Lehmann are added attractions—they will speak, not play! The magnificent grounds at Tanglewood will be scepe of many activities, with dancing groups in the garden, a chamber concert in the barn, an opera performance in the little theater, and finally a huge concert in the Shed combining many novel and entertaining features. Commencing at 6 o'clock, the panorama of entertaining events will last the evening through and conclude with general dancing. Latest announcement: Albert Spalding and Gregor Piatigorsky are added to the features.

Today at 3:30 o'clock Dr. Koussevitsky conducts Beethoven's Sixth (The Pastoral) Symphony and Tchaikovsky's Fifth. On Thursday beginning at 6 o'clock Bach's Mass in B minor will be performed with four eminent soloists and the chorus of the Music Center, and on Sunday Dorothy Maynor will be soloist. Saturday evening has a miscellaneous program.

Only an hour's distance from the Berkshire Symphonic Festival is the fine array of opportunities provided at Bennington where the school of the arts presents an elaborate array of striking works performed for the first time. Last evening saw the first performance of a melodramatic farce derived from Huckleberry Finn and entitled "The King and the Duke"; it is a play with music by Gregory Tucker and choreography by Martha Hill, and will be repeated tomorrow, Wednesday, and Friday evenings. This afternoon and on Friday there will be programs of contemporary music under the direction of Otto Luening, and on Wednesday and Saturday programs of 17th and 18th century music directed by Ralph Kirkpatrick. Events of especial interest in the world of the dance are the programs arranged by Martha Graham and Company for tonight, Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday; these include her new ballet "Letter to the World" with music by Hunter Johnson, "El Penitente", music by Louis Horst, and "Every Soul is a Circus" with music by Paul Nordoff.

It is reported that many of these performances of dance and play are already sold out. Prospective visitors to Bennington should ascertain what programs are yet available before embarking on what may otherwise be a futile errand.

Just outside of Pittsfield the South Mountain String Quartet, established in 1924 by Mrs. Coolidge, is continuing its series of eight chamber music recitals On Friday the program lists a Piano Quartet, Opus 16, by Beethoven, a new string quartet by Henk Badings, and the Trio in B flat by Schubert. These recitals are free to the public, but tickets should be requested in advance of Willem Willeke.

Professor Kortschak is at Cummington with occasional programs of chamber music and the Gordon String Quartet continues at Falls Village, with regular recitals on Wednesday and Sunday. At Jacob's Pillow, a dance recital by Ruth St. Denis provides an opporunity to see this distinguished dancer in one of her infrequent appearances.

Strolling about the grounds of Tanglewood, we learned a bit of information which may please the youngsters of New Haven since it concerns an important musical item finally captured for performance here next winteh. It seems that Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf" has been desired for the children's concerts, but there were obstacles in the way of securing the rights. Mr. Berman, hot in pursuit, finally caught him by the tail and extracted a promise that both would be present in the orchestra for the Young People's Series in Woolsey Hall. Now there is a little question concerning the narrator, for you will recall when the work was done by the Boston Symphony two years ago, Richard Hale told the story as it unfolded. The narrator is chosen, and well up in his part; he has talked in public farily often, and is not unknown to the young people. For further information, however, you must consult Mr. Berman, who should know.

This Clipping From
POUGHKEEPSIE, N.Y.
SUNDAY COURIER
AUG 11 1940

Berkshire Music Festival Features Concert By Boston Symphony Orchestra

Unbelievably precise, yet bending to the slightest whim of the conductor, the Boston Symphony orchestra, under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky, played the second in the Series A concerts of the Berkshire Music festival at Stockbridge.

One very modern work, the "Symphony No. 3" of Roy Harris, received an enthusiastic ovation. Composed in the autumn of 1938, this is a continuous work in one movement of about 20 minutes duration.

In the "Overture to 'Benvenuto Cellini'," op. 23, of Hector Berlioz, the Bostonians took full advantage of the coloristic possibilities provided in the score. Each phrase was treated with deft finesse, and the whole maintained the popularity which has favored it since its first performance in 1838.

Those who enjoy the programmatic were delighted with the interpretation given the "Don Quixote, Fantastic Variations on a Theme of Knightly Character, op. 35," of Richard Strauss. Each of the three main characters, the Don, Dulcinea, the lady of his dreams, and Sancho Panza, is identified by a theme, all three being mingled in the musical episodes of the work.

Two favorite concert pieces closed the program, the "Prelude to the Afternoon of a Faun" of Claude Debussy, and orchestral excerpts from the Ravel ballet," Daphnis and Chloe." Magically the chord clusters of Debussy's music create the atmosphere of a drowsy summer's day, with no attempt to follow a narrative program.

The "Daphnis and Chloe" ballet music, which has depended from the first on a life divorced from the dance, formed a beautiful close to this second concert.

B. B.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE
AUG 11 1940

Koussevitzky Heard Again at Music Festival

2 Symphonies Mark Second Beethoven-Tchaikovsky Concert at Tanglewood

By Robert Lawrence

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 10.—The second Beethoven-Tchaikovsky concert of this week's Berkshire Symphonic Festival was given tonight by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky. Two symphonies were played, the "Pastorale" and the "Pathetique."

Tomorrow's dispatch will carry a detailed review of the concert, but it was possible this morning at a rehearsal open to members of the festival association to form a broad idea of Dr. Koussevitzky's approach. It did not vary greatly from past performances by the Boston Symphony at Carnegie Hall, save that the Tchaikovsky work seemed to be projected on an even grander scale than heretofore. No little of the mood which dominated this morning's rehearsal was evoked through a masterly and stirring address by Olin Downes, music critic of "The New York Times," who spoke during the intermission.

Last night it was possible to hear a convincing demonstration of the work being accomplished here by Herbert Graf's class in opera dramatics. On a temporary stage which afforded only the most primitive lighting facilities, a series of operatic excerpts were presented in thoroughly satisfactory style, surmounting all temporary difficulties. The trio from Weber's "Freischuetz," the fourth act of Verdi's "Don Carlos," a duet from "The Bartered Bride" (the comic episode between Kezal and Hans), and the letter scene from Tchaikovsky's "Eugene Onegin," were presented along with Paul Hindemith's capsule opera. "Hin Und Zurueck." Notable singing was accomplished by several of the students, with Rose Dirman winning special honors as the Queen in "Don Carlos."

All these excerpts, except the Hindemith work, were given with Boris Goldovsky presiding at the piano. For "Hin Und Zureuck," a chamber orchestra had been assembled including Mr. Hindemith, J. M. Sanroma and Leo Litwin at [redacted]dition to other distinguished musicians on the harmonium and wind instruments. This ten-minute work—a comedy in which a plot is unfolded and then reverses itself from the point of climax back to the beginning of the action—was given an amusing performance, but it scarcely ranks among the memorable contributions to modern music.

THIS CLIPPING FROM MISSOULA, MONT.
MISSOULIAN
AUG 11 1940

At the Berkshire festival, the Boston Symphony concludes its "Series B" and its so-called Tchaikovsky festival this afternoon with Beethoven's "Coriolanus" Overture and Fourth Symphony, and Tchaikovsky's Fifth Symphony. Thursday's "Series C" opener is devoted to Bach's B Minor Mass, with a galaxy of outstanding singers and instrumental soloists, and Saturday's concert has Dorothy Maynor as soloist and includes works of Prokofiev, Hindemith, Mozart, Beethoven, Faure, and Bach-Respighi. As an interlude in the orchestral series, Friday brings a recital by the South Mountain String Quartet, with Pianist Harold Bauer as soloist.

Another series that runs through the whole week is that at Chicago's Grant park, where Leroy Shields and his orchestra have Soprano Ruth Lyon as guest artist today, the Chicago Symphony has Baritone Julius Huehn tomorrow and no soloist Tuesday and Wednesday, and Glenn Bainum and his band play Thursday. Plans for Friday have not been announced, and the annual Chicagoland Festival takes the place of a regular series concert on Saturday. This last event, as you know, is devoted to mass singing and band and orchestral performances by school organizations, and this year also features the nationally known Bengal Guards drill team of the Orange, Texas, high school.

This Clipping From
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
JOURNAL
AUG 11 1940

1/2

Music and Musicians

BY JOHN TEBBEL

DARIUS MILHAUD, in an interview last Sunday, acknowledged his debt to American jazz and paid tribute to its influence in the work of other contemporary French composers. That should convince (but probably won't) the diehards who insist that jazz has contributed nothing except noise to musical history. These gentry will doubtless answer that music really stopped with Debussy.

◆ ◆ ◆

Milhaud is another refugee genius and consequently America benefits again from the war. The premiere of his "Cortege Funebre" last week was impressive: Last Friday, in Robin Hood Dell, Philadelphia, a second Milhaud premiere occurred with the performance of his "Fantasie Pastorale." Stell Andersen, for whom the work was written, was piano soloist. Only last year Miss Andersen played it for the first time anywhere—in Paris.

◆ ◆ ◆

Reports seeping down from the fastnesses of Massachusetts indicate that the Berkshire Festival has touched new peaks this year. No sour critical note has been heard. Today, Dr. Koussevitzky offers two ~~symphonies, Beethoven's~~ sixth and Tschaikowsky's fifth. Bach's B mass is scheduled for Thursday night.

◆ ◆ ◆

Hearing Kirsten Flagstad sing recently in Washington was a double pleasure, first in the sheer joy of Madame Flagstad's voice, second in the discovery that Edwin McArthur is a first-rate Wagnerian conductor, despite malicious rumors to the contrary. Mr. McArthur got more sound and tone from the National Symphony Orchestra than we had hitherto believed it possessed.

◆ ◆ ◆

Note to Ambitious Women: You have from now until Nov. 1 to prove that the female is as good a composer as the male. By that time, the Women's Symphony Orchestra of Boston expects to have a number of works, none longer than 10 minutes, from which to pick a winner in its contest. The prize is a performance by the orchestra and subsequent publication. Ladies with musical ideas should write to Mrs. Elizabeth Grant, 74 Marlborough street, Boston, for further information.

◆ ◆ ◆

Welcome news to chamber music fans is the announcement that the Budapest Quartet has been engaged for the Library of Congress concerts formerly played by the Coolidge Quartet. They will be heard from August to October and from next March to May. One hopes the concerts will be broadcast frequently, as in the preceding series.

◆ ◆ ◆

People who expected a slim musical season in New York next winter because of the war should be delighted to learn that bookings are as much as 20 per cent. ahead of last year at this time. Offhand, we presume that the lack of musical markets elsewhere in the world is the reason for Manhattan's prosperity.

This Clipping From DALLAS, TEX.
NEWS
AUG 11 1940

Boston Symphony In Final Concert

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 10.—Final concert in the second series of programs to be presented by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky during the annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival will be given at 3:30 p.m. Sunday in the music shed at Tanglewood, near Lenox, Mass.

Featured on the program will be two complete symphonies: Beethoven's Symphony No. 6 in F Major, Opus 68 (Pastoral) and Tchaikovsky's Symphony No. 5 E Minor.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES
AUG 10 1940

BERKSHIRES SCENE OF CHAMBER MUSIC

The South Mountain String Quartet Offers Its Sixth Concert in Pittsfield

REGER SEXTET IS HEARD

Work in F, Opus 118, Played—7,600 at Tanglewood Heard Albert Spalding

By HOWARD TAUBMAN
Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 9—The sixth concert in the series of eight at the Temple of Music on South Mountain in Pittsfield took over today's formal musical manifestation as the seventh annual Berkshire Symphonic festival observed its Friday off day. The South Mountain String Quartet presented an unhackneyed and uncommonly interesting program: Max Reger's Sextet in F, Opus 118; Arnold Schoenberg's "Die Verklaerte Nacht," Sextet in D minor, Opus 4, and Michael Haydn's Quintet in C, Opus 88.

The regular members of the South Mountain Quartet, who are Kathleen Parlow and Edwin Ideler, violins; Conrad Held, viola, and Willem Willeke, 'cello, had Sprague Coolidge, viola, and Harvey Shapiro, 'cello, as assisting artists. Mr. Coolidge is the son of Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge, founder of the South Mountain Quartet as well as of other chamber music ensembles, and Mr. Shapiro is a member of the NBC Symphony Orchestra and of the Primrose Quartet.

Visiting Artists Assist

The visiting artists joined effectively with the members of the quartet in smooth and comprehending performances. If the Reger Sextet seemed labored and cerebral the blame could not be charged to the musicans. Reger's music does

---

This Clipping From
NEW HAVEN, CONN.
REGISTER
AUG 11 1940

Berkshire Festival Outstanding Success

Marie Nash, Young Singer Who Replaces Marta Eggert In "Higher and Higher," Puts New Life Into Pleasant, If Crazy, Broadway Musical

By H. EARLE JOHNSON

AMERICA'S GREAT music festival enters its concluding week on Thursday with another impressive array of programs directed by Dr. Koussevitsky. The brilliance of the concerts thus far have amazed and delighted throngs whose enthusiasm has continued to mount with each successive performance. The beauty of the setting at Tanglewood, the undisputed excellence of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and the earnest good-will reflec~~ted by all in this time~~ of world stress has lifted the Berkshire Symphonic Festival into the realm of great events in the world of art.

◆

A unique benefit program is added to the Festival on Friday of this week, given on behalf of the Allied Relief Fund Inc. Dorothy Thompson, columnist, and Gov. Herbert Lehmann are added attractions—they will speak, not play! The magnificent grounds at Tanglewood will be scepe of many activities, with dancing groups in the garden, a chamber concert in the barn, an opera performance in the little theater, and finally a huge concert in the Shed combining many novel and entertaining features. Commencing at 6 o'clock, the panorama of entertaining events will last the evening through and conclude with general dancing. Latest announcement: Albert Spalding and Gregor Piatigorsky are added to the features.

Today at 3:30 o'clock Dr. Koussevitsky conducts Beethoven's Sixth (The Pastoral) Symphony and Tchaikovsky's Fifth. On Thursday beginning at 6 o'clock Bach's Mass in B minor will be performed with four eminent soloists and the chorus of the Music Center, and on Sunday Dorothy Maynor will be soloist. Saturday evening has a miscellaneous program.

Only an hour's distance from the Berkshire Symphonic Festival is the fine array of opportunities provided at Bennington where the school of the arts presents an elaborate array of striking works performed for the first time. Last evening saw the first performance of a melodramatic farce derived from Huckleberry Finn and entitled "The King and the Duke"; it is a play with music by Gregory Tucker and choreography by Martha Hill, and will be repeated tomorrow, Wednesday, and Friday evenings. This afternoon and on Friday there will be programs of contemporary music under the direction of Otto Luening, and on Wednesday and Saturday programs of 17th and 18th century music directed by Ralph Kirkpatrick. Events of especial interest in the world of the dance are the programs arranged by Martha Graham and Company for tonight, Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday; these include her new ballet "Letter to the World" with music by Hunter Johnson, "El Penitente", music by Louis Horst, and "Every Soul is a Circus" with music by Paul Nordoff.

It is reported that many of these performances of dance and play are already sold out. Prospective visitors to Bennington should ascertain what programs are yet available before embarking on what may otherwise be a futile errand.

Just outside of Pittsfield the South Mountain String Quartet, established in 1924 by Mrs. Coolidge, is continuing its series of eight chamber music recitals On Friday the program lists a Piano Quartet, Opus 16, by Beethoven, a new string quartet by Henk Badings, and the Trio in B flat by Schubert. These recitals are free to the public, but tickets should be requested in advance of Willem Willeke.

Professor Kortschak is at Cummington with occasional programs of chamber music and the Gordon String Quartet continues at Falls Village, with regular recitals on Wednesday and Sunday. At Jacob's Pillow, a dance recital by Ruth St. Denis provides an opporunity to see this distinguished dancer in one of her infrequent appearances.

Strolling about the grounds of Tanglewood, we learned a bit of information which may please the youngsters of New Haven since it concerns an important musical item finally captured for performance here next winteh. It seems that Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf" has been desired for the children's concerts, but there were obstacles in the way of securing the rights. Mr. Berman, hot in pursuit, finally caught him by the tail and extracted a promise that both would be present in the orchestra for the Young People's Series in Woolsey Hall. Now there is a little question concerning the narrator, for you will recall when the work was done by the Boston Symphony two years ago, Richard Hale told the story as it unfolded. The narrator is chosen, and well up in his part; he has talked in public farily often, and is not unknown to the young people. For further information, however, you must consult Mr. Berman, who should know.

This Clipping From
POUGHKEEPSIE, N.Y.
SUNDAY COURIER
AUG 11 1940

Berkshire Music Festival Features Concert By Boston Symphony Orchestra

Unbelievably precise, yet bending to the slightest whim of the conductor, the Boston Symphony orchestra, under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky, played the second in the Series A concerts of the Berkshire Music festival at Stockbridge.

One very modern work, the "Symphony No. 3" of Roy Harris, received an enthusiastic ovation. Composed in the autumn of 1938, this is a continuous work in one movement of about 20 minutes duration.

In the "Overture to 'Benvenuto Cellini'," op. 23, of Hector Berlioz, the Bostonians took full advantage of the coloristic possibilities provided in the score. Each phrase was treated with deft finesse, and the whole maintained the popularity which has favored it since its first performance in 1838.

Those who enjoy the programmatic were delighted with the interpretation given the "Don Quixote, Fantastic Variations on a Theme of Knightly Character, op. 35," of Richard Strauss. Each of the three main characters, the Don, Dulcinea. the lady of his dreams, and Sancho Panza, is identified by a theme, all three being mingled in the musical episodes of the work.

Two favorite concert pieces closed the program, the "Prelude to the Afternoon of a Faun" of Claude Debussy, and orchestral excerpts from the Ravel ballet," Daphnis and Chloe." Magically the chord clusters of Debussy's music create the atmosphere of a drowsy summer's day, with no attempt to follow a narrative program.

The "Daphnis and Chloe" ballet music, which has depended from the first on a life divorced from the dance, formed a beautiful close to this second concert.

B. B.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE
AUG 11 1940

Koussevitzky Heard Again at Music Festival

2 Symphonies Mark Second Beethoven-Tchaikovsky Concert at Tanglewood

By Robert Lawrence

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 10.—The second Beethoven-Tchaikovsky concert of this week's Berkshire Symphonic Festival was given tonight by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky. Two symphonies were played, the "Pastorale" and the "Pathetique."

Tomorrow's dispatch will carry a detailed review of the concert, but it was possible this morning at a rehearsal open to members of the festival association to form a broad idea of Dr. Koussevitzky's approach. It did not vary greatly from past performances by the Boston Symphony at Carnegie Hall, save that the Tchaikovsky work seemed to be projected on an even grander scale than heretofore. No little of the mood which dominated this morning's rehearsal was evoked through a masterly and stirring address by Olin Downes, music critic of "The New York Times," who spoke during the intermission.

Last night it was possible to hear a convincing demonstration of the work being accomplished here by Herbert Graf's class in opera dramatics. On a temporary stage which afforded only the most primitive lighting facilities, a series of operatic excerpts were presented in thoroughly satisfactory style, surmounting all temporary difficulties. The trio from Weber's "Freischuetz," the fourth act of Verdi's "Don Carlos," a duet from "The Bartered Bride" (the comic episode between Kezal and Hans), and the letter scene from Tchaikovsky's "Eugene Onegin," were presented along with Paul Hindemith's capsule opera. "Hin Und Zurueck." Notable singing was accomplished by several of the students, with Rose Dirman winning special honors as the Queen in "Don Carlos."

All these excerpts, except the Hindemith work, were given with Boris Goldovsky presiding at the piano. For "Hin Und Zureuck," a chamber orchestra had been assembled including Mr. Hindemith, J. M. Sanroma and Leo Litwin at [redacted]dition to other distinguished musicians on the harmonium and wind instruments. This ten-minute work—a comedy in which a plot is unfolded and then reverses itself from the point of climax back to the beginning of the action—was given an amusing performance, but it scarcely ranks among the memorable contributions to modern music.

THIS CLIPPING FROM MISSOULA, MONT.
MISSOULIAN
AUG 11 1940

At the Berkshire festival, the Boston Symphony concludes its "Series B" and its so-called Tchaikovsky festival this afternoon with Beethoven's "Coriolanus" Overture and Fourth Symphony, and Tchaikovsky's Fifth Symphony. Thursday's "Series C" opener is devoted to Bach's B Minor Mass, with a galaxy of outstanding singers and instrumental soloists, and Saturday's concert has Dorothy Maynor as soloist and includes works of Prokofiev, Hindemith, Mozart, Beethoven, Faure, and Bach-Respighi. As an interlude in the orchestral series. Friday brings a recital by the South Mountain String Quartet, with Pianist Harold Bauer as soloist.

Another series that runs through the whole week is that at Chicago's Grant park, where Leroy Shields and his orchestra have Soprano Ruth Lyon as guest artist today, the Chicago Symphony has Baritone Julius Huehn tomorrow and no soloist Tuesday and Wednesday, and Glenn Bainum and his band play Thursday. Plans for Friday have not been announced, and the annual Chicagoland Festival takes the place of a regular series concert on Saturday. This last event, as you know, is devoted to mass singing and band and orchestral performances by school organizations, and this year also features the nationally known Bengal Guards drill team of the Orange, Texas, high school.

This Clipping From
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
JOURNAL
AUG 11 1940

1/2

Music and Musicians

BY JOHN TEBBEL

DARIUS MILHAUD, in an interview last Sunday, acknowledged his debt to American jazz and paid tribute to its influence in the work of other contemporary French composers. That should convince (but probably won't) the diehards who insist that jazz has contributed nothing except noise to musical history. These gentry will doubtless answer that music really stopped with Debussy.

◆ ◆ ◆

Milhaud is another refugee genius and consequently America benefits again from the war. The premiere of his "Cortege Funebre" last week was impressive: Last Friday, in Robin Hood Dell, Philadelphia, a second Milhaud premiere occurred with the performance of his "Fantasie Pastorale." Stell Andersen, for whom the work was written, was piano soloist. Only last year Miss Andersen played it for the first time anywhere—in Paris.

◆ ◆ ◆

Reports seeping down from the fastnesses of Massachusetts indicate that the Berkshire Festival has touched new peaks this year. No sour critical note has been heard. Today, Dr. Kousseyitzky offers two symph~~onies, Beethoven's~~ sixth and Tschaikowsky's fifth. Bach's B mass is scheduled for Thursday night.

◆ ◆ ◆

Hearing Kirsten Flagstad sing recently in Washington was a double pleasure, first in the sheer joy of Madame Flagstad's voice, second in the discovery that Edwin McArthur is a first-rate Wagnerian conductor, despite malicious rumors to the contrary. Mr. McArthur got more sound and tone from the National Symphony Orchestra than we had hitherto believed it possessed.

◆ ◆ ◆

Note to Ambitious Women: You have from now until Nov. 1 to prove that the female is as good a composer as the male. By that time, the Women's Symphony Orchestra of Boston expects to have a number of works, none longer than 10 minutes, from which to pick a winner in its contest. The prize is a performance by the orchestra and subsequent publication. Ladies with musical ideas should write to Mrs. Elizabeth Grant, 74 Marlborough street, Boston, for further information.

◆ ◆ ◆

Welcome news to chamber music fans is the announcement that the Budapest Quartet has been engaged for the Library of Congress concerts formerly played by the Coolidge Quartet. They will be heard from August to October and from next March to May. One hopes the concerts will be broadcast frequently, as in the preceding series.

◆ ◆ ◆

People who expected a slim musical season in New York next winter because of the war should be delighted to learn that bookings are as much as 20 per cent. ahead of last year at this time. Offhand, we presume that the lack of musical markets elsewhere in the world is the reason for Manhattan's prosperity.

This Clipping From DALLAS, TEX.
NEWS
AUG 11 1940

Boston Symphony In Final Concert

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 10.—Final concert in the second series of programs to be presented by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky during the annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival will be given at 3:30 p.m. Sunday in the music shed at Tanglewood, near Lenox, Mass.

Featured on the program will be two complete symphonies: Beethoven's Symphony No. 6 in F Major, Opus 68 (Pastoral) and Tchaikovsky's Symphony No. 5 in E Minor.

THE BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL

Musical Round Trip

Hindemith's "Hin und Zurueck" Heads Evening of Student Opera at Tanglewood

By EDWARD DOWNES

LENOX, Aug. 10—The even symphonic tenor of the Berkshire Festival was interrupted last night with an operatic interlude. Sandwiched in between the formal orchestral concerts of Thursday and Saturday evenings, came an informal evening of opera, presented by the Opera Department of the Berkshire Music Center, that is, by the gifted and enthusiastic students of Dr. Herbert Graf. Across the lawn from the famous Music Shed, where the concerts of the Boston Symphony are given, a small stage has been erected with a small, tent-like auditorium before it. And on this stage, for the past five weeks, a small group of gifted young operatic artists has been rehearsing on schedule, and beyond schedule, singing and miming for time and overtime, tirelessly, excitedly following the dramatic inspiration of Dr. Graf and his able assistant Boris Goldovsky.

Parts of the fruits of this short but intense labor of love: scenes from Weber's "Freischuetz," Verdi's "Don Carlo," Smetana's "Bartered Bride," Tchaikovsky's "Eugen Onegon' and Paul Hindemith's modern operatic comedy, "Hin und Zurueck," were exhibited to fellow students of other departments of the Music Center, to factulty and to such curious Berkshire Festival patrons as cared to come.

Those who came were richly rewarded. The interest of the evening centered, quite naturally, on Hindemith's good natured persiflage in which the composer himself played a part in the orchestra (a four hand piano part with Jesus Maria Sanroma) and Richard Burgin, concert master of the Boston Symphony, conducted the remaining instruments: a flute, a clarinet, an alto saxophone, a trumpet, a bassoon and trombone.

The Hindemith was preceded by the infinitely touching fresh romanticism of the Letter Scene in Tchaikovsky's "Eugene Onegin," sung in English by Marjorie Phelps and Estelle Morris. Though not all of "Eugene Onegin" is on the inspired level of this scene, it is nevertheless an opera which has been too long absent from our theaters.

Though the general level of singing was high, the bass-baritone of Frank Cappelli, who sang the part of the grand inquisitor in the fourth act of "Don Carlo," made a particular impression for its equalized range and brilliance. His acting of the domineering ancient prince of the church had weight and conviction. Ellen Repp in the alto part of the Princess Eboli also showed unusual vocal and dramatic gifts.

The "Don Carlo" excerpt was sung in Italian, and though Mr. Goldovsky had explained the dramatic development of the scene with admirable clarity and brevity, this reporter heard, right in the middle of Eboli's aria, "O don fatale," a hoarse masculine whisper: "What's she so sad about?" Could there be a better demonstration of the need of opera in English? For even knowing the story of the opera, how is one to devine just what stage of the plot the distracted contralto is unfolding?

The Hindemith, fortunately, was presented in English. Musically it is light-weight opera, which is clearly what was intended.

The title "Hin und Zurueck" might be variously translated as "Over and Back," "There and Back" or "Round Trip." It is a chamber opera, an amiable bit of lunacy or, as Hindemith himself calls it, a "sketch with music." The original German text by Marcellus Schiffer, is a parody of movie melodrama and the music, at least in part, is a parody of operatic procedure. The moral of the tale, if there be such, is that in this topy-turvy world, things look just as logical when you stand them on their heads, as they do in their normal sequence—so little sense is there in most human activity. This is a point of even greater timeliness today than when "Hin und Zurueck" had its premiere performance at the Baden-Baden Festival in 1927.

It is illustrated by a dramatic murder told first from beginning to end, and then from end to beginning. Aunty (deaf and dumb character), knitting in the breakfast room, starts the action with a sneeze. Helen enters, says "Good morning," into Aunty's ear-trumpet, and sits down to breakfast, trolling a little arietta about being up bright and early in the morning. She is beginning to warm to her subject with operatic fervor, when her husband Robert enters the room.

"What, back so soon from the office?" she says. Robert has a surprise—a birthday gift. In the midst of Helen's thanks, the maid enters with a letter for her. She tries to hide the letter; Robert accuses, she admits it is from her lover, Robert draws a pistol, shoots her right in the middle of a high note, Helen is carried out on a stretcher and Robert, overcome by remorse, jumps out the window.

At this point a deus ex machina appears to say that the story makes just as much sense when told the other way around—rather more sense, in fact.

So the music goes into reverse. Robert jumps in the window, he is overcome by remorse, Helen is brought in, he shoots her, they quarrel over the letter, Helen gives the letter to the maid who takes it out, she thanks Robert for the birthday present, he goes back to the office, Helen sits down to breakfast and pours the tea from her cup back into the tea-pot, she sings her arietta, "Bright and Early," says "good morning" to Aunty, Aunty shrugs her shoulders, Helen goes back to bed, Aunty sneezes, the orchestra chuckles softly, and all is for the best in the best of possible worlds.

The performance was given in a spirit of superior artistic horseplay and was vastly enjoyed. Robert's birthday present to Helen turned out to be a framed photograph of Koussevitzky, something which Helen declared she had always wanted to have.

The singing, appropriately enough was frequently in parlando or "sprech-stimme" style, and the scenery as well as the stage direction had its waggish, modernistic slant. Both audience and performers enjoyed themselves, the latter ending by hoisting Mr. Hinemith from the orchestra onto the stage to share the generous applause.

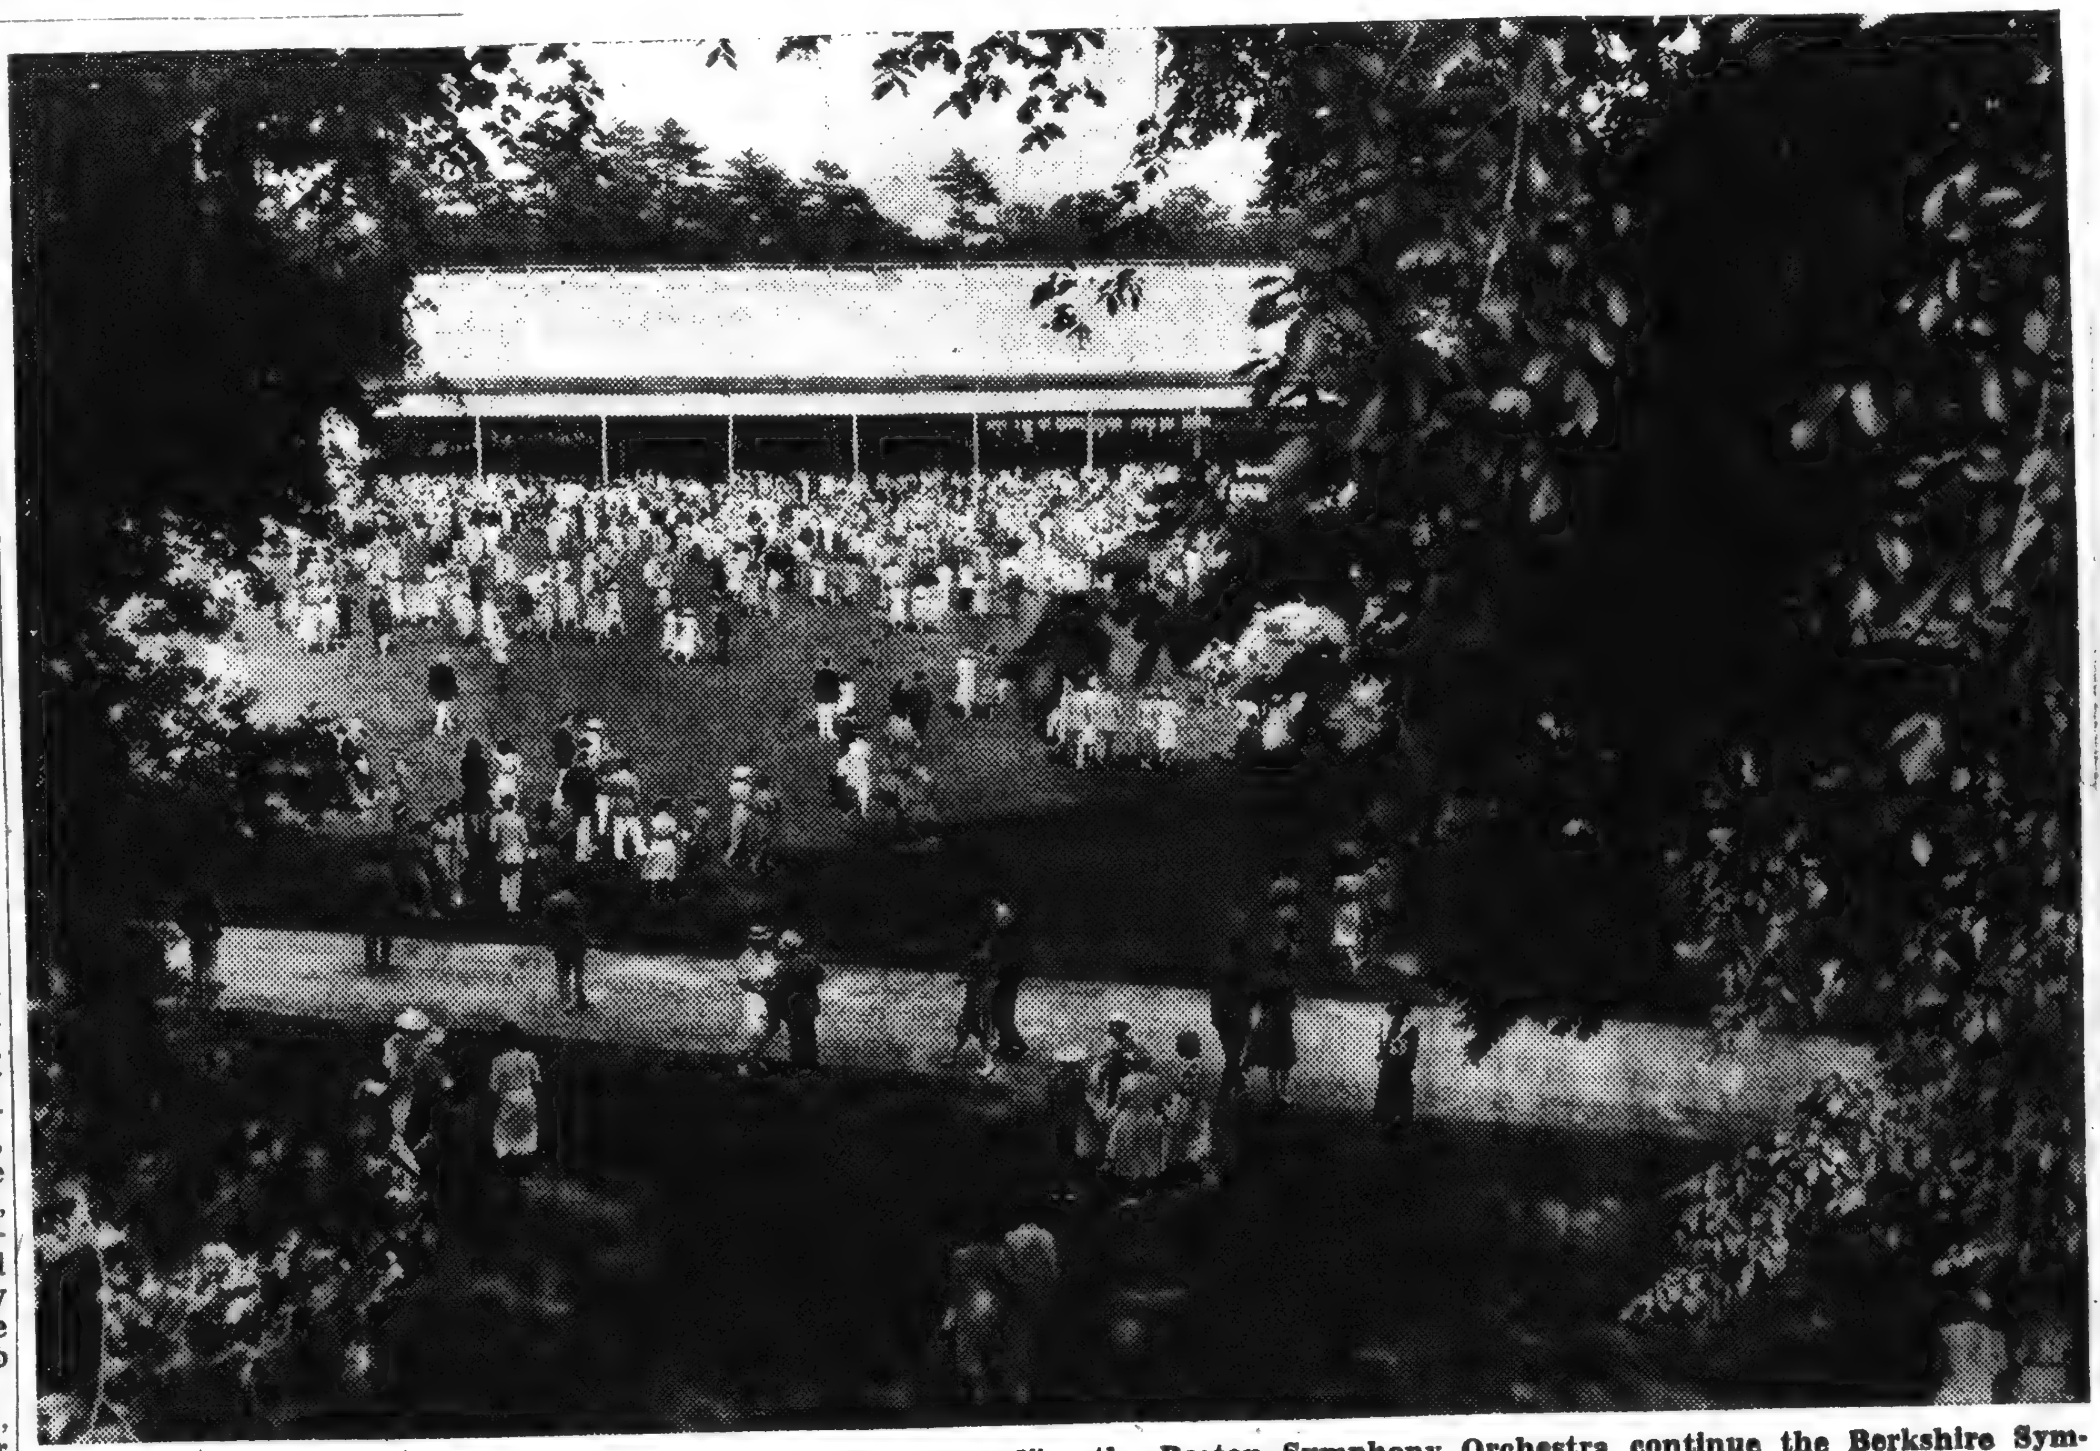
The evening's fun, we hope, will point the way to broader operatic activity at the Berkshire Festival next summer, and by that very token, the Berkshire Festival may come one step nearer the lamented Salzburg Festival.

Why an American Salzburg?

But we must beware of too facile comparisons with Salzburg. And above all, we must beware the temptation to imitate Salzburg. For no more than we expect American men to parade the streets of Lenox and Stockbridge in Lederhosen can we expect Americans to make or take their music the way the Austrians did. If the attempt, after the Anschluss, to establish a sort of Salzburg a few miles away in the Swiss city of Lucerne was a failure, how much more preposterous must seem any such project in this country. Yet there are at least half a dozen summer music centers on this side of the Atlantic which have loudly proclaimed that they are to be the American Salzburg.

The Berkshire Symphonic Festival has done nothing of the sort. On the contrary it has sought, even in its title, to emphasize its difference from the traditional European festivals, including Salzburg. It is, and plans to remain, a primarily "symphonic" festival. The oldest established music festivals, like the "Three Choirs" Festivals in England, are devoted principally to religious choral works. Those of later vintage, like Bayreuth, Munich, Salzburg and Glyndebourne are predominantly operatic. These things correspond to the European taste in music. English church choirs have been famous as far back as written records go On the continent, opera is twenty times as popular as symphony orchestras.

In America alone has the symphony orchestra come to be both the most highly developed and the most popular medium of serious music. With our symphony orchestras we stand head and shoulders above the rest of the musical world. That is why our leading music festival is dedicated first and foremost to symphonic music.



Again gay crowds stream across the lawns of "Tanglewood" toward the famous Music Shed where Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra continue the Berkshire Symphonic Festival tonight, tomorrow and next week-end.

Berkshire Festival Programs

TONIGHT

Symphony No. 6, "Pastoral"	Beethoven
Symphony No. 6, "Pathetique"	Tchaikovsky

SUNDAY AFTERNOON, AUG. 11, at 3.30

Overture, "Coriolanus"	Beethoven
Symphony No. 4	Beethoven
Symphony No. 5	Tchaikovsky

SERIES C

THURSDAY EVENING, AUG. 15, at 7 and 9:30

Mass in B Minor (in two parts)	Bach

Berkshire Festival Chorus—Elisabeth Schumann, soprano; Viola Silva, mezzo-soprano; William Hain, tenor; Alexander Kipnis, bass; Richard Burgin, violin; Louis Speyer and Jean Devergie, Oboi d'Amore; Willem Valkenier, horn; Georges Laurent, flute; E. Power Biggs, organ; Putnam Aldrich, harpsichord.

SPECIAL BENEFIT PROGRAM FOR ALLIED RELIEF
FRIDAY EVENING, AUG. 16, at 6

I. Simultaneous exhibition performances by the Berkshire Music Center in various parts of the grounds: Institute Orchestra; Opera Scenes; Chamber Music; Academy Chorus and Orchestra; Country Dancing.

II. Official Exercises in the Shed: "Alleluia," composed for the Berkshire Music Center by Randall Thompson, performed by Academy Chorus, G. Wallace Woodworth, Conductor. Addresses by His Excellency, Herbert H. Lehman, Miss Dorothy Thompson, Archibald MacLeish, presiding.

(Intermission, with Auction Sale, and Refreshments)

III. Gala Concert:

March, "Pomp and Circumstance" Elgar
Boston Symphony and Institute Orchestras,
Serge Koussevitzky conducting
"Jupiter," from "The Planets" Holst
Boston Symphony and Institute Orchestras,
Stanley Chapple conducting
Rondo Capriccioso (with orchestra) Saint-Saens
Soloist, Albert Spalding, Violin
Violoncello Solo (with orchestra)
Soloist, Gregor Piatigorsky
"Incarnatus," "Crucifixus," "Resurrexit" from the Mass in B minor Bach
"Hallelujah" Chorus from "The Messiah" Handel
Academy Chorus, and Boston Symphony Orchestra,
Serge Koussevitzky conducting
Strauss Waltzes by the Pops Orchestra,
Arthur Fiedler, Conductor

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
PM
AUG 11 1940

. . . as Part of America's Most Important Music Festival

When the Berkshire Symphonic Festival gives its ninth and last concert of the season, a week from this afternoon, it will have had something less than 60,000 auditors.

Attendance at the Lewisohn Stadium will probably be at least five times that number; the Hollywood Bowl has characteristically uncountable thousands; the St. Louis Municipal Opera expects to top three quarters of a million. Even the Newark Stadium had almost 100,000 attendance at its four June concerts, and lord knows what the figures are in Chicago, where they have two symphonic series, one at Ravinia and one at Grant Park. And the Boston Symphony itself gave Pops concerts every night in May and June to sold-out houses, followed by a free series of Esplanade concerts which sometimes attracted as many as 30,000.

Yet the Berkshire Festival remains, without much doubt, the most important of the lot. One reason is that the Boston Symphony is probably at this moment the finest orchestra in the world. Another is that Serge Koussevitzky is the only regular conductor for the festival while most of the others suffer from a series of excellent-to-bad guest conductors, few of whom have sufficient time for adequate rehearsal. A third is that the Berkshire Festival has social prestige.

It is too bad that in a democracy social prestige should give a music festival importance. Still, there's no use in not saying so. Social prestige carries with it financial guarantees and high admission prices. And money can develop a music shed with good acoustics and pay for painstaking rehearsals.

Money can also help develop a music school attached to the festival, a school with so brilliant a faculty and in such beautiful surroundings that a group of the most talented students in the country can be attracted to it. A large percentage of these students are music teachers—teachers with sufficient standing and interest not to need the academic credits offered by university summer schools.

Teachers Carry Torch

These teachers go back to their own communities carrying the torch of only the best in music all over the country. Thus, the Berkshire Festival assumes its position of paramount importance in America's summer musical life.

Critic after critic has called the festival the Salzburg, the Florence of 1940. It isn't that yet, though it may easily become so. Salzburg is only a Greater-Germany affair now; Bayreuth performances are given for Nazi soldiers on leave. Berkshire is slowly taking on their former international coloring.

But its importance probably lies even more in its direct influence on our national musical life through its Institute, Academy and opera school than purely in the superb performances given by the Bostonians.

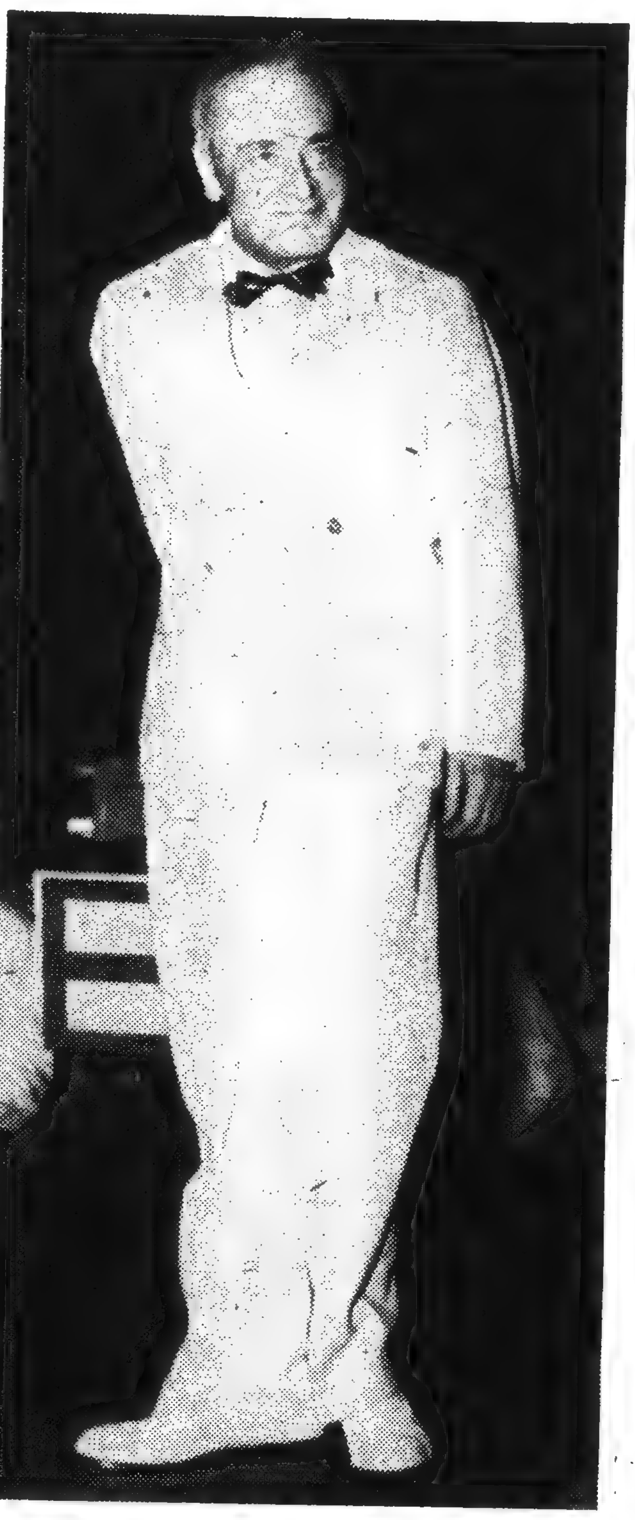
In a democracy, a cultural movement is most important when it comes from the bottom. If the Berkshire Festival gives impetus and standards for smaller festivals, for music indigenous to the community that produces it, it will have fulfilled its best function as a catalyzing agent.

One of Berkshire's most enthusiastic faculty members, Boris Goldovsky, summed up this aspect of the question perfectly.

"What American music needs," he said, "is to develop the bush leagues."—H. W. S.

Festival Adds Benefit

The Berkshire Symphony Festival has added a gala concert for the benefit of the Allied Relief Fund next Friday. Archibald MacLeish will be master of ceremonies and Gov. Lehman and Dorothy Thompson speakers. The elaborate musical fare lists the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the Institute Orchestra, the Academy Chorus and Orchestra, the Festival Chorus, folk dancing, chamber music, scenes from opera, and soloists including Albert Spalding and Gregor Piatigorsky.



Guiding genius of the Berkshire Festival, Serge Koussevitzky conducts the Boston Symphony regularly, the excellent Institute orchestra occasionally. He is 66, genial, exacting.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES
AUG 11 1940

BERKSHIRE MUSIC OFFERS CONTRASTS

6th Symphony of Beethoven, in Hopeful Mood, and Somber Tchaikovsky '6th' Heard

MRS. ROOSEVELT ATTENDS

3,000 at Weekly Rehearsal at Tanglewood—Students Give Opera Excerpts

By HOWARD TAUBMAN
Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 10—Beethoven and Tchaikovsky—the Sixth symphonies of each—were bracketed tonight at the second concert of the second week of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Tanglewood. Another enormous audience invaded the festival grounds early and filled the shed and the lawn.

The attendance tonight exceeded the rosiest expectations of the festival officials. About 3,000 general admissions were sold which, added to the 6,000 seats in the shed, made a new record audience of 9,000. The management ran out of printed tickets for general admissions and sold little scribblings on the backs of envelopes that were honored at the gate.

Among those in the audience was Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt, who herself drove a party of five from her home at Hyde Park. She had purchased a box for the concert. She declined an invitation to sit in the official box of Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, president of the festival association, explaining that she wished to be a private patron of the concert. Mrs. Roosevelt said that she had learned tonight of the Allied Relief Benefit to be held at Tanglewood next Friday night and she indicated that she planned to attend.

The choice of the two Sixths enabled Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra to traverse wide emotional poles. The Beethoven symphony with its "Serene Impressions on Arriving in the Country," its "Scene by the Brookside," its "Jolly Gathering of Country Folk," its "Thunderstorm; Tempest" and its "Gladsome and Thankful Feelings After the Storm" was like a reflection of the calm and beauteous Berkshire countryside, with its thousands of visitors making peaceful holiday.

The Tchaikovsky symphony brought the listeners into another and more somber world, where the composer seems to utter a searing and feverish lamentation for man and his destiny. It reminded those in the audience who were beguiled by Beethoven's pastoral song that elsewhere in the world the countryside was being scorched and laid waste by bombs, shells and tanks and by oppression and famine.

Continuing its model deportment, the weather beamed on the festival today once again. The sun shone warmly and a gentle breeze sprang up during the morning, encouraging late starters in various parts of the country to head for Tanglewood. Conditions were ideal this morning at the weekly rehearsal which is open to members of the festival association. More than 3,000 men, women and children—the 3,000 youngsters were another batch from the schools in the vicinity—listened to the rehearsal and to the explanatory comments of the week-end's programs by Olin Downes.

Last night the opera department of the Berkshire Music Center, which is this year's big development at Tanglewood, presented a program of scenes from five operas. The department, under the direction of Herbert Graf, Metropolitan Opera regisseur, rehearses and puts on its shows on the newly built stage.

Last night a simple black backdrop was used, with a few props and an evocation system of lights. The young singers were in costume and played their scenes in earnest. A large audience of students of the center, friends of the students and of the festival and festival officials attended.

This Clipping From
ALBANY, N. Y.
TIMES UNION
AUG 11 1940

THE SPOTLIGHT

By Edgar S. Van Olinda

NOTES from the Berkshire Symphonic Festival at "Tanglewood." The magnificent view of Lake Mahkeenac (Stockbridge - Bowl) from the spacious lawns surrounding the music shed...The great number of young people who attend the nine concerts of the season... The mayor of West Palm Beach who comes north for the festival, easily recognized by his dinner coats of various colors with berets to match...

The preponderance of bronze-hued, sun-burned necks and shoulders in the audiences . . . The beautifully gowned, bejeweled ladies who sit in the boxes which extend the full width of the shed...The busy refreshment tent near the shed where one may purchase sandwiches, ice cream, bottles of pop and even goats' milk from the Dr. Artur Rodzinski's White Goat farms in Stockbridge.

The attractive cigarette girls who circulate around the grounds offering your favorite brands at the same prices as city shops... The groups of music lovers lying on blankets on the lawns surrounding the shed, gazing at the stars (unless it is raining) and listening to music which might well come from the heavenly bodies, who can hear the music although they can not see the players...The well-named bricks of ice cream, hard on the bridgework, after having been packed in dry ice...Olin Downs, top flight music critic with a constantly changing bevy of beauties plying him with questions and he seeming to enjoy the attention... The democratic atmosphere which pervades the whole propect with millionaires in white dinner jackets sipping a "coke" through a straw just as easily as their chauffeurs do outside the wire fence.

Jesus Marie Sanroma, staff pianist of the Boston Symphony orchestra, beaming on this column when the conductor inquired if his wife had heard him (she is a graduate of Kenwood academy) and vouchsafing the information that his wife was at present in Puerto Rico "sitting on a nest" which must be a Winchellism of the tropics corresponding to "infanticiding."...The giant moths hover around the ceiling lights of the orchestra shell, one resting on the shoulder of the harpist during a particularly difficult solo passage and giving him a few anxious moments until removed by his fellow string plucker ... The many Albanians whom one does not see too frequently on the streets of the city but seem to concentrate in one spot for a friendly greeting...Otto Janda, genial dealer of music and musical instruments and in charge of the festival tickets in Albany, being stung by a bee on the way over to the musical and receiving first aid at the "Pillars" out of a bottle.

Lourence McKinney blocking traffic on the Albany-Pittsfield road trying to get the first 500 miles on his new robin's egg-blue Dodge ... and muttering curses under his breath at the guys who spread oil on the road to Stockbridge, some of which defiled the paint job on his jalopy.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
SUNDAY UNION
& REPUBLICAN
AUG 11 1940

FESTIVAL IS GIVEN GREAT SYMPHONIES FOR FIFTH CONCERT

Beethoven No 6 and Tschaikowsky No 6 Unusual Combination for Boston Orchestra Program

By FRANCIS REGAL

Stockbridge, Aug. 10 — Tonight's program, the fifth of nine in the seventh Berkshire Symphonic festival given by the Boston Symphony orchestra, was unusual in offering but two works, both symphonies and rather long symphonies. It would not be easy to find two great musical works standing in stronger contrast, but the intermission of 25 minutes made it possible to file impressions away in separate compartments. In such a symphonic plethora as this, conventional schemes of program building somehow lose much of their importance, and this year Dr Koussevitzky has used a good deal of freedom, sometimes almost falling back upon numerology, as in bracketing Beethoven No 1, Schumann No 1, and Sibelius No 1 at the first concert. Tonight the lucky number was six, but Beethoven No 6 and Tschaikowsky No 6 are oddly paired.

If music could be measured in dynes or decibels Tschaikowsky's "Pathetic" symphony would stand near the top, and no conductor is better able than Mr Koussevitzky to squeeze out the last drop of its sadness and its emotional excitement. But, as he showed at a revival of the "Pastoral" symphony a few years ago, he is able with equal success to recover the slightly old-fashioned charm of Beethoven's venture among restful bucolic scenes. Modern highbrows have usually been faintly disdainful of the sixth symphony, scoffing at the conventional orchestral "storm" in the scherzo, and jeering at the notes of nightingale, quail and cuckoo as sounded by flute, oboe and clarinet in the slow movement. But in music the change of fashion is a two-way street, and of late the pleasure formalism of the 18th century has been coming back into favor, so that one can again take unconcealed enjoyment from Beethoven in one of his less stormy and tragic moods.

By way of contrast the sophisticated are beginning to tire of the tragedy, the hectic gaiety and the emotional excesses of the great Russian genius whose "Pathetic" symphony is the last word in pessimism. To see in it a premonition of the composer's death a few months later is unwarranted, since he could hardly have foreseen his demise by cholera infection, and in any case sadness on such a scale is too immense to be personal—the symphony might be a threnody for the passing of all Europe and its civilization, with eat-drink-and-be-merry interludes which only deepen the gloom. A great symphony, but one to be presented sparingly, and then only with its maximum emotional intensity which Koussevitzky never fails to achieve. The effect tonight was stupendous.

This Clipping From BALTIMORE, MD.
MORNING SUN
AUG 11 1940

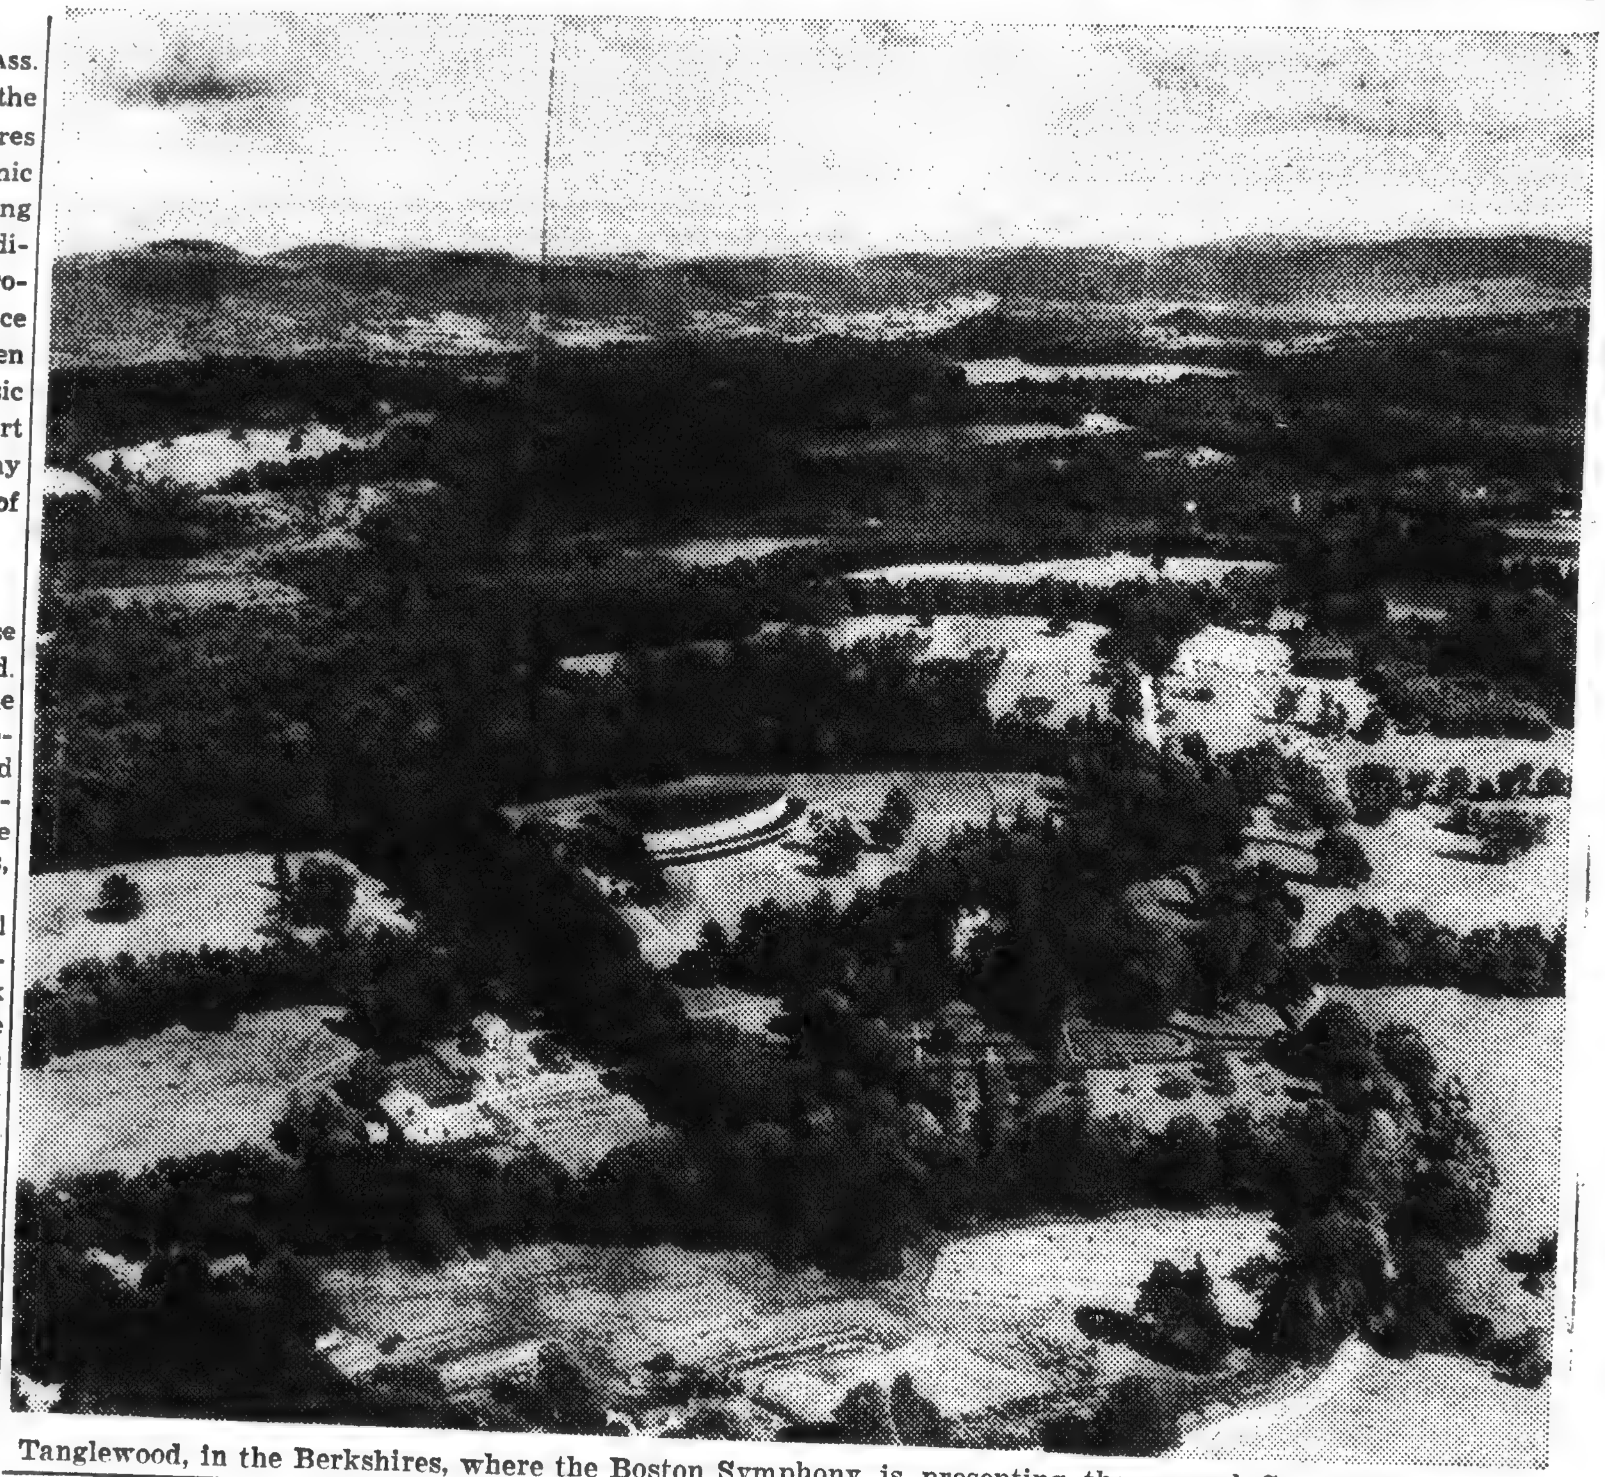
115

Symphonic Festival In The Berkshires

By WELDON WALLACE

LENOX, MASS.

VISITORS from all parts of the world are now in the Berkshires for the seventh Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Tanglewood. The opening concert August 1 attracted an audience of 6,000 and, until the final program August 18, woods that once knew the footfall of William Cullen Bryant will be filled with the music of Beethoven, Sibelius and Mozart performed by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Serge Koussevitsky.



Tanglewood, in the Berkshires, where the Boston Symphony is presenting the annual Symphonic Festival

Sunrise Practice

This year, even the quiet of sunrise on this historic estate is disturbed. Shortly after daybreak, from the gables of the house in which the Tappan family entertained Hawthorne and Emerson, one hears a weird counterpoint, as students of the Berkshire Music Center practice 'cello cadenzas, Verdi arias, Bach Gigues.

The music center is an educational experiment started this year in connection with the concerts. For six weeks, specially picked students—more than 300 in number—are studying with such musicians as Hindemith, Aaron Copland, Abram Chasins, Olin Downes and Dr. Koussevitsky himself.

The popularity of the festival is easy to understand. Not only is the music of rare quality but also the surroundings enrich the effect in a way that would never be possible in a concert hall. Beethoven alone is great enough, but to hear the Pastoral Symphony and, while listening, let the eye traverse vast spaces over the contours of mountains, expanses of lake and lawn and the Gothic-spiring forms of trees, is an experience such as only those who have known it can imagine.

Remain On Lawn

Hundreds of listeners do not buy seats in the great shed where the concerts are presented but prefer to sit or lie outside on the lawn, with the star-patterned New England sky close above them, encircled by hills that seem to hang in the distance like a theatrical backdrop. But inside or out, listeners show the same enthrallment to the music produced by this Russian conductor and his men and after each concert remain for several minutes shouting approval.

Many music lovers attend rehearsals of both the symphony itself and the student orchestra, which gives concerts weekly. These concerts are conducted by the few rigorously selected students of Dr. Koussevitsky, and so greatly is he impressed by their talent that he has promised, "in five years, I will give you five great new conductors."

During the rehearsal of the student orchestra, Dr. Koussevitsky sits at a desk in front of the stage. His entire body reacts to the music, foot tapping the rhythm, head shaking, hand and arm incising the beat. Frequently he turns and nods expansively to his assistant, Stanley Chapple, approving a certain effect gained by the young conductor.

A Sudden Cloud

Again, a sudden cloud will darken his face; he will jump to his feet, shaking his head and reiterating "No, no, no," step forward and consult with the director over a disputed point. He is quick to show satisfaction and to give commendation. But he is a martinet, and his firmly etched mouth becomes set and his eyes gleam when the music does not come out as he wishes.

The other morning, he walked to the stand to rehearse a selection with the student orchestra. His face and body had the tautness of command. The hands were raised; then brought down with an authority like the crack of a whip. His face suddenly grayed with utter and complete bafflement, for instead of the opening chord of the Mozart "Divertimento," the orchestra swung into "Happy Birthday," while players and audience sang and cheered. He spoke a few words, in which he revealed the secret of the vitality and freshness that infuse his interpretations:

"I am sorry to be older, for I have so much to learn; I am only beginning. There is so little time; waste not a moment to learn something or to give something to the world."

Koussevitsky conducting at the Berkshire Music Festival

This Clipping From
HARTFORD, CONN.
COURANT
AUG 11 1940

Romanticism Rampant At Stockbridge

Fine Beethoven Pastoral and Tschaikowsky Pathetique Are in Keeping With Lush Setting

BY T. H. PARKER.

Stockbridge, Mass., Aug. 10.—Seldom in all its seven fat years has the Berkshire Symphonic festival been so double-dyed in the stuff of romanticism as it was by Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston orchestra here at Tanglewood tonight.

On the program were the sixth symphonies of Beethoven and Tschaikowsky, the concert which began with the bucolic Gemuetlichkeit of a Bavarian picnic came to its close in the happiness of a Russian melancholia. By 11 o'clock, closing time, the event was practicaly swash in deep and quivering sensibilities.

This is doubtless as it should be, unhappy as it may be to music purists, the atmosphere of the festival is incurably romantic, the landscape of tamarack and tamarind, the misty lake, the fine chauffered turnout, the well-bred $3 seats, clothed by Brooks and Bergdorf, the general admission fervently enclasped in the shadows, the intermission repeat of ham sandwiches at 25 cents per, the merry note of the Massachusetts state constabulary piping on the traffic—all this is not the setting for the mathematical abstractions of a Reknek, it is the baroque background for Tschaikowsky,

If the Russian's centenary had not come this year, Dr. Koussevitzky might have arbitrarily established as President the new Thanksgiving. If Tschaikowsky had never lived at all, Dr. Koussevitzky might allowably have invited him to put the Berkshire festival to its proper use.

Elegant Interpretation.

Yet, while the noble conductor of the Boston Symphony has long recognized the romantic lure of his setting, no one can accuse him ever of weeping in it. It is one of his rarest virtues that though he never skimps the pulse or heartfulness of his romantic composers he dries their tears, reins in their ecstasies before letting them meet their public. His interpretation of the juicy Beethoven pastoral symphony tonight was a model of well-bred dignity practically French in elegance. A Beacon Hill picnic almost more than one for the Black Forest, clear as crystal, gentle even in its stormy passages, speaking in finely modulated orchestra voice, it was almost too Arcadian throughout its general length and breadth for your reporter. It was a trip to the country such as might have been reported by Lucius Beebe.

If I were allowed to pick but one word to describe the memorial which Dr. Koussevitzky erected to Tschaikowsky out of the "Pathetique" tonight, I should choose "tender." Not that there were not moments of high passion about his exposition of this moody symphony—or that he did not march it to a fiery close, but by and large, it was the tender, devoted, almost reverential treatment he found for it that distinguished it from the more customary interpretation more customary even to the Boston conductor himself.

Tribute Reading.

The word "tribute," the phrase "In Memoriam" were clearly discernible across his reading. This may not be so desirable for the steady thing, but it had special telling intensity tonight.

The record audience of 9000 persons, 2000 general admissions alone, showed almost Slavic fervor in applauding the concert, they continued unabashed and undaunted in their new habit of clapping between movements. Their enthusiasms should rightly have been directed mainly to Dr. Koussevitzky. The orchestra has been heard to play with considerably more precision, polish and accuracy than it did on this occasion.

1/6

This Clipping From BROOKLYN, N.Y.
EAGLE

AUG 11 1940

DOROTHY MAYNOR—The now-famous young Negro soprano will appear in recital in Brooklyn next season under the auspices of the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences. She will also make a sentimental journey next Saturday to the scene of her discovery and first triumph. Miss Maynor will appear as featured soloist with Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony at the Berkshire Music Festival, where her genius was discovered just one year ago. It's a birthday for a silver voice.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
BRIDGEPORT, CONN.
SUNDAY HERALD

AUG 11 1940

THE FLYING BARITONE—Robert Crawford arrives to sing with the Bridgeport Symphony tomorrow

Berkshire Without Breakfast

With only two days, and less alacrity between us than is usually possessed by Stepinfechit in a heat wave, a friend and I went to two concerts and two States last Sunday and Monday. That's news.

Sleeping each day until about 12 is a matter the reader must keep in mind in case he is making a mathematical study of this saga to the Berkshire Festival at Stockbridge.

Seeing Berkshire for the first time, I was in a great state.

It seemed to me that the entire program was taking place in Athens in the golden age. I sat in the second row as Koussevitzky conducted Daphnis and Chloe. This and the Brahms' Second next day were exquisite, as they must be in his hand.

At each performance in the shed were more than 6,000 listening pilgrims.

I heard a Chicago reporter say to G .W. Edman, the publicity chief who is a newspaperman and does this for nothing, "MY GOODNESS! DO YOU MEAN TO TELL ME THERE ISN'T ONE VULGARIAN IN THIS MOB?"

He went on to rave about the perfect attention of the crowd.

They are inside the shed and out on the grass. The pines and the mountains beyond, the comfort and roominess, the fact that the festival is a non-profit event and one of the principal treasures of this country—you have to go back to the Greeks to get a word for it.

Churning the road for an hour and a half to find a room was something else again.

Mrs. Goodell of Great Barrington sighed wearily that it was her very last—at 1:30 A. M.—and as we turned in, she snapped off the light on her sign.

Except for Louis I. Snyder, Jr.—who shuttles between the Berkshire Playhouse box office in Summer to the Metropolitan Opera b. o. in Winter—all Bridgeporters were decorously seated on chairs inside. They included Mary McGuinness, Clare O'Rourke, Helen Harrington, Catherine Russell, Mrs. David Day, Wilbur Thiel, Mrs. Ethel Edwards, Alfred Bishop and Frank Foti.

Gov. and Mrs. Lehman were in the audience Saturday night and Ambassador Bullitt and Lowell Thomas, next day. I saw also Artur Rodzinski of the Cleveland Orchestra and learned that the goat's milk sold at the refreshment stand comes from his farm in Stockbridge . . . . aren't I the one for inside stuff?

This Clipping From
INDIANAPOLIS, IND.
STAR

AUG 11 1940

Maynor's First Year

New York, Aug. 10.

THE BERKSHIRE festival this year at Stockbridge, Mass., marks an important anniversary for Dorothy Maynor, the young Negro soprano, who will make her first extensive concert tour next winter.

Just one year ago Miss Maynor, an unknown young soprano, from Norfolk, Va., went to the festival to listen to music conducted by Serge Koussevitzky, leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and ended up by making music herself for the great conductor.

Her surprise audition for him after one of the orchestra rehearsals has become part of this year's musical history—her singing for an audience of one in the great empty shell which seats 6,000, Koussevitzky's immediate recognition of her fine voice, his invitation to her to sing for members of his orchestra. The next day the humble young singer, who had planned to be a teacher of public school music, sang for a critical audience of musicians an impromptu program which ranged from opera arias to Negro spirituals.

Critics who were present proclaimed her the find of the decade. A sold-out house greeted Miss Maynor's concert debut in New York in November, the result being a triumph which recalled the first appearances in New York of such artists as Tibbett, Pons and Flagstad.

Continues Study.

The year which has followed has indeed been an astonishing one for the young singer, to whom $25 the year before would have seemed impressive. During her first season she was engaged by four of the country's leading symphony orchestras, the New York Philharmonic, the Boston Symphony, the Philadelphia Orchestra and the Chicago Symphony Orchestra. An extensive concert tour was only limited by her desire to continue regular vocal study, yet her first season's concerts took her as far west as Wisconsin, as far south as Richmond and in each concert city delighted audiences agreed with Olin Downes, critic of the New York Times in his verdict that "she has virtually everything needed by a superb artist."

On Aug. 17, she completes an exciting musical year and returns to the scene of her discovery as featured soloist with Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra. With what she terms "her own orchestra" she will sing two great classic works; "Adelaide," by Beethoven, and "Bella mia fiamma, addio," one of Mozart's lesser known concert arias. To Dorothy Maynor it will be not only a musical occasion, but a happy reunion with the orchestra which first publicly discovered her.

Daughter of Minister.

Yet all this acclaim has not upset Miss Maynor's fundamental simplicity in the least, and she is still incredulous about her success. "I hope only to be worthy of the great music I sing," she says.

The daughter of a Norfolk, Va., minister, Dorothy Maynor received her first musical training in the choir of her father's church. She is a graduate of Hampton Institute, which she entered at 14 and where she received her first vocal lessons. A few years later she toured Europe as a member of the institute's famous Negro chorus.

Afterwards, she studied at the Westminster Choir School in Princeton, N.J., until a few friends, who believed in her talents, persuaded her to take some singing lessons in New York. She still studies religiously with her vocal teacher, John Alan Haughton. This year the musical world has been stirred by the beautiful voice and unaffected aristry of this modest young woman who "just likes to sing," and who in 12 months has captured the interest of the whole country.

THIS CLIPPING FROM LINCOLN, NEB.
STATE JOURNAL
Aug 11, 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM NORWICH, CONN.
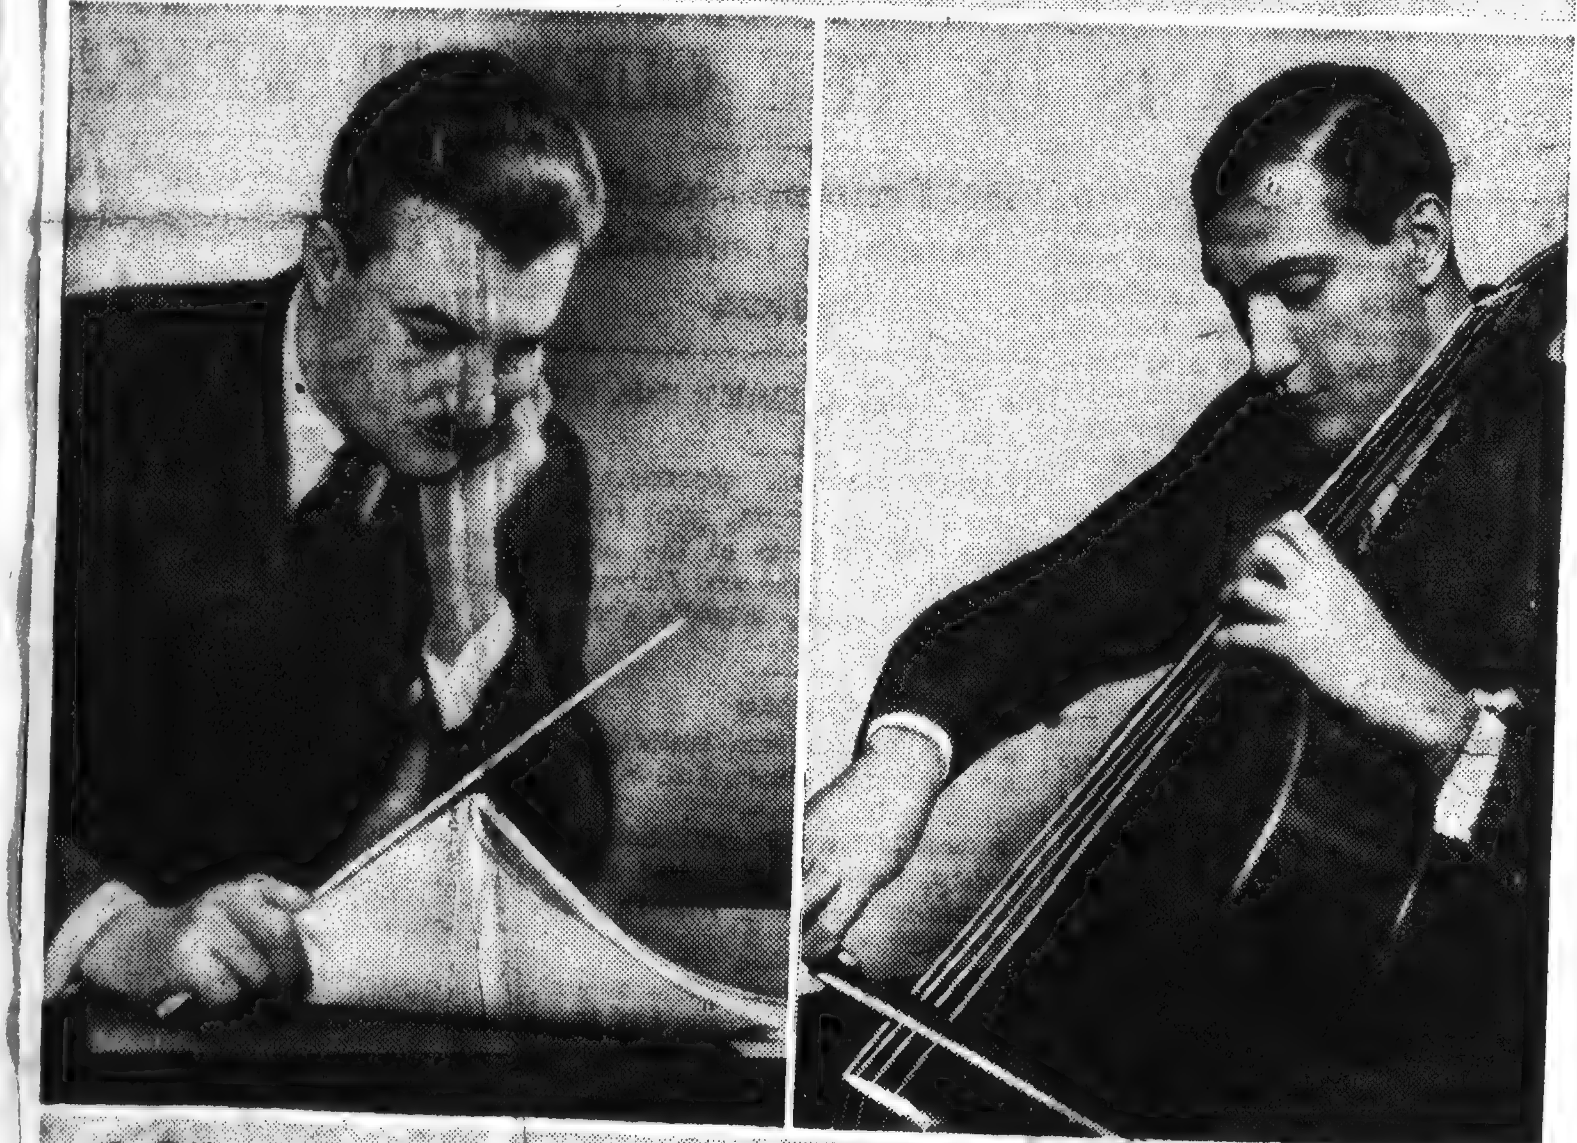
BULLETIN

AUG 12 1940

CLOSING PROGRAMS OF THE BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL

Among the soloists in the Bach B minor Mass, given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra Thursday night, are Elisabeth Schumann, soprano, and Alexander Kipnis, basso.



On Friday night a special gala program for the Allied Relief Fund will be given at Tanglewood. Appearing on the program are Arthur Fiedler, conductor, and Gregor Piatigorsky, 'cellist.

Jas. Abresch, Daguerre and De Bellis

Dorothy Maynor, who won her first wide public notice in the Berkshires last Summer, returns as soloist next Saturday.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES

AUG 11 1940

This Clipping From
WATERBURY, CONN.
REPUBLICAN

AUG 11 1940

B Herald 8/17

Many Bostonians Attending Music Festival in Berkshires

Mr. and Mrs. Henry B. Sawyer of Dartmouth street and Mrs. Charles Sumner Bird of East Walpole were among new boxholders for the second series of concerts by the Boston Symphony orchestra, which ended yesterday afternoon at Tanglewood, Lenox.

With Mr. and Mrs. William Marshall Bullitt (Nora Iasigi) in a box were Mr. and Mrs. Clarence Blair Mitchell of New York. Mr. Mitchell is a brother of Mrs. Anson Phelps Stokes.

Mrs. John Maurice Hastings (Rosemary Crane) of Basing-Stoke, Hants, Eng., was in the box with Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Gilbert Colt, who also had as guests, Mrs. William S. Ginn (Judith Colt), Mrs. A. Henry Mosle and Mr. Howell H. Barnes of New York and Mrs. William Mosle of New Canaan, Ct.

Prof. and Mrs. John H. Williams of Cambridge are with Mr. and Mrs. William Arthur Berridge of Fenmoor, South Egremont.

Mr. and Mrs. John Alden Carpenter of Chicago are motoring over to Pittsfield from Beverly this week to be with Mr. and Mrs. Donald F. McPherson at Court Hill for the big Allied benefit at Tanglewood Friday and the final series of festival concerts.

At Harrod Inn, Stockbridge, for the festival are Mrs. Livingston Davis (Georgia Appleton) of Commonwealth avenue, and Mrs. Rainsford Brigham of Cohasset.

Miss Ellen T. Bullard of Commonwealth avenue is with Mrs. Carlos M. de Heredia at Wheatleigh, Lenox. Mrs. John T. Coolidge has returned to Boston following a visit with Mr. and Mrs. David T. Dana at Birchwood, Lenox.

At Curtis Hotel, Lenox, as guests of Mr. and Mrs. George E. Judd are Mr. and Mrs. John W. Beal of Norwell.

With Mrs. Hayden Channing at Valley Head, Lenox are Mr. and Mrs. W. Farnsworth Loomis (Violet Amory) of Windy Hill, Dover and Mr. Francis C. Lawrance of New York.

Returning to the Lenox Club Thursday for the final series of Tanglewood concerts will be Mr. and Mrs. Thomas N. Metcalf of Beaver place and Mr. and Mrs. Pierre Jay of New York. Mrs. Jay is the former Miss Louisa S. Barlow, daughter of the late Major General and Mrs. Francis C. Barlow, who for many years were summer residents of Lenox.

Mrs. Arthur T. Nelson of Chestnut Hill entertained at a buffet luncheon a group of 30 students who are attending the Music school at Tanglewood. Mr. and Mrs. Nelson are occupying the Drake Cottage, Bald Head, Lenox.

Lenox Garden club council members will have a display of flower arrangements at the Garden Center, Stockbridge, tomorrow afternoon. There will be a talk on "New Flowers in Gardens."

With Mr. and Mrs. John Shepard, Jr., in a Tanglewood box last night were Mrs. Ernest Howes and Miss Jean Cushing of Boston, who are guests of Mr. and Mrs. Shepard at Belvoir Terrace, Lenox.

Recent arrivals at Red Lion Inn, Stockbridge, include Mr. and Mrs. John B. Churchill of Wareham and Miss Florence E. Hathaway of Commonwealth avenue. Mrs. Edward Thaw of Boston entertained at supper at the Red Lion in honor of Mr. and Mrs. Carl Ehlermann and Miss Nancy B. Leighton of 1016 Fifth avenue, New York.

Tschaikowsky And Beethoven Program To Be Continued Today At Berkshire Festival

Record Audience To Hear Concert At Tanglewood; Thursday Night Event Best Of Series

(Special to The Republican)

Stockbridge, Mass., Aug. 10—The second Sunday concert of the Berkshire Symphonic festival at Tanglewood at 3:30 p. m. will continue the all Tschaikowsky-Beethoven program which Dr. Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony orchestra are giving in observance of the 100th anniversary of the birth of Tschaikowsky.

With fair weather promised for the Sunday concert there is every indication that a record audience wili attend. So far this year each concert has brought larger and larger audiences so that now the huge music shed at Tanglewood with its 5,800 seats is always filled to capacity with hundreds sitting on blankets or folding chairs on the lawns at the back of the shed. Thursday night an audience of 7,500, including 1,700 general admission tickets, was on hand—by far the largest gathering of the series. At the rate people continue to come to these concerts from all parts of the country and foreign nations it is obvious that the shed should have been built to seat from 8,000 to 10,000 persons though it is only now in its third season.

That Dr. Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony orchestra are giving excellent performances is an admitted fact and anyone who hears and sees the ovations will be overwhelmed at their warmth and sincerity. Here one hears some of the finest music in the world given with that perfection of performance before appreciative audiences that would warm the heart of any composer. The Sunday concert, the sixth in the series of nine concerts this year and the third in the special Tschaikowsky group, will present Beethoven's "Coriolanus Overture" and his "Symphony No. 4". and Tschaikowsky's "Symphony No. 5."

Spalding Impressive

The program Thursday night was something very special. With the orchestra appeared Albert Spalding, violinist, in as fine a performance of Betthoven's "Concerto for Violin in D" as one could hope to hear anywhere. Mr. Spalding played the difficult virtuoso piece with great dexterity and musicianship albeit with a lack of warmth and deep feeling. Five times he was called back to the platform by an enthusiastic audience which has heard other soloists of note already during this festival. Mr. Spalding's otherwise fine performance given with a decided touch of showmanship was marred by a marked nervousness and great deal of figeting on his part and one false start in the first movement.

When it came to Tchaikovsky's "Symphony No. 4" the orchestra which has given some inspired playing already in previous concerts reached the heights once more. Here was music played so brilliantly that after the first movement and again after the third movement the audience burst into applause although it is the practice here not to applaud until the playing of a whole composition is completed. In the pissicato of the third movement perfection was reached. Seldom has this orchestra which always plays this beautifully reached such sublime heights of playing. It was something to remember for many months. When the program was over there was a thunderous ovation and Dr. Koussevitzky and the orchestra were obliged to take five bows. The audience just would not leave the huge music shed.

Tonight is was the same with the playing of Beethoven's "Pastoral" symphony heard in the most ideal setting and the Tschaikowsky "Pathetique." It was a glorious performance of two of the finest works.

Real Holiday Spirit

Sunday, with weather permitting, there will be a real holiday spirit in the air. In an ideal setting thousands of music lovers will be on hand very early for a real festival of music such as only a Sunday audience here can appreciate. Nowhere else are conditions so glorious for listening to this magnificent orchestra. Where the festival officials will put all of those who are sure to come seeking admission is a problem. But in some way they will handle it. The music lovers here are so glad to get general admission tickets that they willingly sprawl on blankets on the grass or bring along their own folding chairs.

Friday afternoon the South Mountain quartet presented its 6th summer concert at South Mountain in Pittsfield before an audience of 400. The regular quartet was augmented by Sprague Coolidge, violist son of the founder of this quartet and sponsor of these free concerts. The other assisting artist was Harvey Shapiro, cellist. The program included Max Reger's "Sextette in F Major," Arnold Schoenberg's "Sextette in D Minor," and Michael Haydn's "Quintet in C Major." The Haydn selection was by far the most melodic and pleasant to the ear and a decided favorite. Friday, the 16th, at 4 p. m. Harold Bauer will again be the assisting pianist with the quartet.

SAMUEL MEYERS

This Clipping From
HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES
AUG 12 1940

Music:

Tanglewood Now Truly An American Salzburg

By Carl E. Lindstrom

What is a festival anyway—whether at Tanglewood or anywhere else? If it is thought of simply as a string of concerts, the point is missed entirely.

The word has come to evoke such names as Salzburg and Bayreuth, and these have not just been objectives on European tours. They are a good deal less than that now, and have probably seen their best days. But what were they?

There was a reason for Bayreuth. As everyone knows, the festival theater was built there during Wagner's lifetime, so designed as to afford ideal conditions for the realization of the Wagnerian music dramas. The theater itself was intended for no other productions; a special orchestra pit was built for the players in order that a curtain of sound might rise between the singers and the listeners; the mise en scene was contrived to be a criterion. And while, through the years, there may have been peaks and declines in the general excellence, the tradition, they tell us, has not been rivalled by Munich, Covent Garden, nor by the Metropolitan.

Similarly Salzburg has witnessed performances of Mozart's operas and symphonies as well as other works in the standard repertory that have been judged to be as near to perfection as man's handiwork can achieve. Toscanini has labored through countless rehearsals to perfect a Don Giovanni or a Meistersinger because they were to bear the seal of Salzburg and that was to have a special meaning the world over.

* * *

In the early days of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival many writers, including this one, lightly seized upon the phrase "An American Salzburg." But the time had not come for that and at best it represented a bit of wishful thinking.

Now, however, there is every warrant for so designating Tanglewood, partly because the Old World centers have yielded their places by default. It is not the war in itself that is responsible for this situation but more because the spirit of Salzburg and Bayreuth were poisoned several years ago by the ideology of Nazism. The home city of Mozart was purged of non-Aryan artists and Toscanini in protest shook its dust from his heels. At the Festspielhaus Hitler attends private performances of the Ring dramas in what must be something like the gloomy atmosphere that mad King Ludwig saw them in lonely state at Munich.

Had these distressing things not happened at all, there is still reason to think that Tanglewood would have come into its own as an international festival center.

* * *

The concerts there represent Koussevitzky at the zenith of his illustrious career. His programs are fashioned with infinite care, the details of the performances beyond improvement. While he has offered a diversity of material, the heart of his programs has been the classics. The symphonies of Beethoven, Brahms, Mozart and Sibelius have been presented in such a way as to leave indelibly in the memory model performances by which all other performances are to be judged.

It is now impossible to think of the Pastoral Symphony in any others terms than those in which it has been written in Tanglewood. The same may be said Ravel's Daphnis and Chloe Suite, the Brahms First and Second and many others. That is what makes Tanglewood a festival in the true sense of the word. That is why it may now be called an "American Salzburg;" but to do so would be to place a limitation upon a native institution of great achievement and greater promise.

* * *

It was the intention here to report on the Saturday and Sunday concerts at Tanglewood but the not too dependable flesh failed to support a willing spirit and both performances were missed. On Sunday the wayfarer actually got as far as Westfield but was turned back upon the combined advice of two counsellors, one of whom was at the wheel and hence not to be overruled.

Two Beethoven symphonies and two by Tschaikowsky were performed. Of these, the Pastoral was being heard at Tanglewood for the third time and it was a second time each for the Fifth and Sixth of Tschaikowsky. This fact made it no less bearable to forego them. One goes to Tanglewood again and again to hear the familiar symphonies because that is what makes it a festival.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES
AUG 12 1940

BERKSHIRE MUSIC ENJOYED BY 8,500

Record Sunday Audience Hears Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony at Tanglewood

TCHAIKOVSKY IS PLAYED

His Fifth Symphony and the Fourth of Beethoven Are Presented on Program

BY HOWARD TAUBMAN

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 11—The Berkshire Symphonic Festival has a new record to shoot at. For the final concert of the second week today at Tanglewood an audience of about 8,500 turned out to hear Sergei Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra. That made a total of about 25,100 listeners for the three concerts of the long weekend. Each three of the concerts broke the attendance record set last year, with 7,600 visiting Tanglewood last Thursday and 9,000 last night.

This afternoon's program brought to an end the observance of the one hundredth anniversary of Tchaikovsky's birth. His Fifth symphony ended today's concert. The Sixth had been played Saturday and the Fourth on Thursday. On each program of the week there was also Beethoven. Today the concert began with Beethoven's "Coriolanus" overture and Fourth symphony.

Without gracious cooperation of the weather it is doubtful whether the attendance would have been at a consistently record-breaking level. It was another perfect day today, giving the festival two weeks of the exceptional weather thus far.

Throng of Hearers on Lawn

Again it was not only the music but the crowd and the locale that formed part of the story. The holders of general admission, whose province is, roughly, the ten acres of lawn on all sides of the music shed, seemed to choose their spots with the expertness of veterans. The large trees on the fringe of the shed were like oases, with hundreds of listeners sitting under their kindly shade. The sun-worshipers scattered over the sun-covered lawn.

As the festival proceeds, the customers show more resourcefulness in providing themelves with comfort. Some bring folding seats of all descriptions. One could count a score or more of deck chairs in various places on the lawn. Young couples propped themselves back to back. Stacks of cushions served as supports for other persons.

18

The excitement and responsiveness of the audience grew with each performance. At the end of today's concert Mr. Koussevitzky and his orchestra received salvo after salvo of applause. Having listened patiently for two hours, the audience has something to say of its own, and its expression invariably takes the form of tumultuous tributes.

It is hardly necessary to add that these demonstrations were richly merited. Mr. Koussevitzky is a past master of Tchaikovsky's Fifth. The lineaments of his interpretation, while familiar, remain rewarding. He led the score today with a vigor and enthusiasm that one would not believe possible from a man who has conducted the music countless times.

The performance of Beethoven's Fourth was also an act of recreation. Less often played than some of the other Beethoven symphonies, this work has a refreshing and endearing warmth. Mr. Koussevitzky and his men communicated the charm and beauty of the score, limning the enchanting slow movement, for example, with a delicacy of nuance and patrician style. The "Coriolanus" overture was a stirring exordium.

But the high point of the week's music-making, at least to one listener, was the performance of Tchaikovsky's "Pathétique" symphony last night. Mr. Koussevitzky's conception has deepened and ripened, and it is all of one piece. The frenetic third movement is delineated with a feverish intensity that makes it poignant and that gives it a proper place in the scheme of the music Mr. Koussevitzky did not paint the lily in the first and last movements, letting Tchaikovsky's hymning of the end of hope and man's desire speak for itself. One recalled, as one listened to this magnificently restrained and probing interpretation, the lines of Swinburne—"And the weeks that grew green on the graves of the roses now lie dead."

Albert Spalding Speaks

At the end of the first half of today's program, Mr. Koussevitzky introduced Albert Spalding, who urged the audience to come to the Allied Relief Benefit next Friday. He said: "We wish to trumpet to Old England from all New England our comfort, sympathy and help."

It was announced that, besides the funds to be raised from the benefit, a grand auction will be held on Friday to obtain at least $1,800 for an ambulance unit from the Berkshire Festival. Gifts of a young heifer, pedigreed puppies, a silver tray, an old English service, a manuscript by Edna St. Vincent Millay and works of art have been donated for the auction. The auctioneer will be Owen Johnson.

Some patrons of the festival concerts have observed that there is no music by Richard Wagner on any of the programs and have inquired whether this omission had anything to do with the war. George Judd, manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, explained that the absence of Wagner was merely a coincidence. He added that there was certainly no feeling against German music as such and pointed to Mr. Koussevitzky's playing of works by Beethoven, Brahms, Mozart, Schumann, Strauss and Bach.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM
AUG 12 1940

8500 Hear Berkshires Program

Tschaikovsky's Pathetic Ends Second Cycle.

By LOUIS BIANCOLLI.

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 12.—With Tanglewood grounds—shed and lawn included—jammed with 8500 devotees in their Sunday best, the second span of the Berkshire Symphnoic cycle ended on a record-breaking note yesterday afternoon.

Saturday night's attendance was about the same, possibly shy a few, but it had it over the Sunday throng in enthusiasm. Nowhere this side of the late Hippodrome has the writer witnessed a demonstration to equal what followed after the March movement of Tsehaikovsky's Pathetic Symphony.

But then, enthusiasm hereabouts runs in the higher registers anyway. True to form, festival-goers accorded [illegible] Koussevitzky and his stalwart Boston[illegible] ovation after ovation. "Bravos" burst lustily from all sides, and Berkshirites thought nothing of jumping to their feet and bellowing.

* * *

Cycle Completed.

The concerts of Saturday and yesterday completed the three-ply cycle devoted to Beethoven and Tchaikovsky. For the Sunday event Mr. Koussevitzky bracketed the Coriolan Overture and Fourth Symphony with the Fifth of the Russian composer.

Without at all meaning to belittle anything else this writer admits being most bowled over by the Pathetic, which shared a two-part program Saturday with Beethoven's Pastoral.

It is news to nobody that Tschaikovsky is a Koussevitzky favorite. The man believes in him ardently. He avowedly put him on the same programs with Beethoven to show that the Russian can hold his own in the presence of a god.

The Pathetic went sublimely, just that. The movements fused into an organic whole of cumulative power. The anguish, terror and exultation were all there, woven into an inexorable scheme. And the orchestra gave the conductor all he asked. No wonder the audience went wild.

The Fifth followed suit yesterday. What may sound lush, repetitious and banal in other hands was expressive drama and the lyricism in Mr. Koussevitzky's. He made the orchestra ring out with stunning impact and sonority.

As for Beethoven, of course, the Pastoral has come to be regarded as the theme song of the Berkshire Festival. No more fitting surroundings were designed by nature or God for this paean to the outdoors.

The performance on Saturday was a wonder of transparent tone. Details stood out almost with pictorial vividness. The storm section mounted to shattering fortiessimi. There is terror in this music when played so. It was comforting to see a roof overhead.

* * *

Coriolan Overture.

The only other number was the Coriolan overture, which the writer had heard Mr. Koussevitzky with his men rehearse on Friday. It went with the force and hurtling power of gripping narrative.

Of course, one of the secrets of this great orchestra is rehearsals. Watching director and men beveling off rough edges for three whole hours a day in this heat helps one understand, as everyone knows, that Mr. Koussevitzky is a stickler for polish.

The festival grounds outside the shed again looked like a picnic, with hundreds sprawled out on blankets. A sea of parked cars extended far beyond.

Each successive concert seems to bring a new caravan of neophytes to this highland carnival.

Yesterday Albert Spalding urged the audience to organize itself into a "Committee of Six Thousand" to put over the gala concert and "Manifestation" planned for next Friday (6 to 10:30 p. m.) for the Allied Relief Benefit.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE
AUG 12 1940

Koussevitzky Heard Again at Music Festival

2 Symphonies Mark Second Beethoven-Tchaikovsky Concert at Tanglewood

By Robert Lawrence

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 10.—The second Beethoven-Tchaikovsky concert of this week's Berkshire Symphonic Festival was given Saturday night by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Serge Koussevitsky. Two symphonies were played, the "Pastorale" and the "Pathetique."

It was possible Saturday morning at a rehearsal open to members of the festival association to form a broad idea of Dr. Koussevitzky's approach. It did not vary greatly from past performances by the Boston Symphony at Carnegie Hall, save that the Tchaikovsky work seemed to be projected on an even grander scale than heretofore. No little of the mood which dominated Saturday morning's rehearsal was evoked through a masterly and stirring address by Olin Downes, music critic of "The New York Times," who spoke during the intermission.

Friday night it was possible to hear a convincing demonstration of the work being accomplished here by Herbert Graf's class in opera dramatics. On a temporary stage which afforded only the most primitive lighting facilities, a series of operatic excerpts were presented in thoroughly satisfactory style, surmounting all temporary difficulties. The trio from Weber's "Freischuetz," the fourth act of Verdi's "Don Carlos," a duet from "The Bartered Bride" (the comic episode between Kezal and Hans), and the letter scene from Tchaikovsky's "Eugene Onegin," were presented along with Paul Hindemith's capsule opera. "Hin Und Zurueck." Notable singing was accomplished by several of the students, with Rose Dirman winning special honors as the Queen in "Don Carlos."

All these excerpts, except the Hindemith work, were given with Boris Goldovsky presiding at the piano. For "Hin Und Zureuck," a chamber orchestra had been assembled including Mr. Hindemith, J. M. Sanroma and Leo Litwin at the pianos in addition to other distinguished musicians on the harmonium and wind instruments. This ten-minute work—a comedy in which a plot is unfolded and then reverses itself from the point of climax back to the beginning of the action—was given an amusing performance, but it scarcely ranks among the memorable contributions to modern music.

Saturday afternoon it was possible for music lovers to attend a chamber concert at Music Mountain in Falls Village, Conn., a dance demonstration by Ted Shawn and his group at Jacob's Pillow, Mass., or simply to lie on the lawn at Tanglewood and hear a delightful program of chamber music by students of the institute.

All these diversions, aside from the actual programs of the Boston Symphony, are free to the public. This is actually a festival in the best sense of the word; and it has not been tainted by commercialism. Prices are at a normal level in Lenox, Stockbridge, and the surrounding towns.

Music on the Lawn

Boston Transcript — Aug 12, 1940

Tchaikovsky Centenary of Berkshire Festival Draws Record Week-End Crowds to 'Tanglewood'

By EDWARD DOWNES

LENOX, Aug. 11—The Tchaikovsky Centenary week-end of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival achieved a memorable finale this afternoon with a performance by Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra of Tchaikovsky's Fifth Symphony. Each one of the three week-end concerts broke all previous attendance records at the "Tanglewood" Music Shed, and next week-end probably will attract even greater crowds because of the Bach B Minor Mass which is to be performed on Thursday and the Allied Benefit on Friday afternoon, Aug. 16. Any fears which the festival committee may have had last year of about extending the two-weeks season to the present three weeks have happily proven groundless, and in view of the enormous public response to the current programs, one can only regret that next season is not to cover four weeks instead of three.

An heroically sculptured interpretation of Beethoven's "Coriolanus" Overture began the afternoon's concert. Granitic and forbidding were the abrupt opening chords, those monumental portals of the overture, beyond which one already senses the figure of another hero-nature in which Beethoven so delighted, perhaps because it was so akin to himself and to his ideal.

For some reason the orchestra was in better form this afternoon than at yesterday's concert, and it responded with the greatest sensitivity and precision to Koussevitzky's delineation of the tenderer, more lyric side of Coriolanus' nature.

Anything but heroic is the debonair Fourth Symphony of Beethoven, which followed. Koussevitzky, the cunning program builder, had placed it here on the program as an effective foil. Koussevitzky, the artist, made of it one of the most cherishable memories of the entire festival.

Some conductors play the slow introduction to the first movement like a brooding premonition of wild and passionate things to come. When this is done the carefree, naive gaiety of the first movement proper either comes as an anticlimax, or else its lightfooted dance arrives with a thumping Gargantuan tread which Beethoven never meant it to have. This afternoon, the introduction was keyed with perfect intuition to fit the carefree Allegro that followed.

The tender, dreaming Adagio unfolded with exquisite sentiment, irreproachable purity of line and balance of color. The simplest of themes—a slow descending scale—created in Dr. Koussevitzky's hands, a depth and variety of mood which even this great movement does not always achieve. The finale was electric. This was classicism in the most fruitful sense of the word.

On the Lawn

Having heard the Fourth Symphony from our regular seats inside the Music Shed, we decided to listen to the Tchaikovsky from the informal vantage point of the great lawn which stretches behind the last row of benches. At each concert there are some two thousand visitors who prefer their Tchaikovsky with the afternoon sun or their Mozart with the evening star. Sprawled on our back some hundred yards down the field we still heard with incredible clarity. Unquestionably, many of the fine points of the Fourth Symphony must have evaporated at such a distance from the conductor's stand, but the drama and color of the Tchaikovsky Fifth scarcely seemed to suffer at all.

As with Koussevitzky's interpretation of the Symphony "Pathetique" last night, one could only marvel at the breadth of vision, the intensity of feeling and the freshness which made phrases heard a thousand times take on sudden new meanings. Or rather, not new meanings at all, but a significance which had been slumbering in the notes and which, it seemed, had waited this particular moment to reveal itself. To convince eight thousand people that they are hearing the Andante Cantabile for the first time—that requires a truely great conductor and artists of the highest calibre to do his bidding.

This Clipping From
NEW HAVEN, CONN.
REGISTER
AUG 12 1940

Music

BOSTON SYMPHONY THRILLS HEARERS AT TANGLEWOOD

The Beethoven-Tchaikovsky segment of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival concluded yesterday with another brilliant concert. Again the weatherman provided a perfect summer's day and the audience broke all previous records in the history of this festival. The capacity audience of more than 6,000 persons filled the main shed, while hundreds—many of them by preference—spread their blankets on the surrounding lawns and gazed at the stars for the evening concert, or at the rolling panorama of clouds during the afternoon. During the long intermissions visitors explored the vast grounds of Tanglewood, entering the gardens, chatting with the musicians, or patronizing the huge refreshment tent. The weekend added another fine chapter to America's greatest summer festival.

Doctor Koussevitsky selected Beethoven's Sixth (The Pastoral) and Tchaikovsky's Sixth for the Saturday evening program, Beethoven's Overture to Coriolanus Fourth Symphony, and Tchaikovsky's Fifth for the Sunday array; soloists were not even missed. It seems that the Pastoral was written for out-of-door performance since it never has appeared to spring from the surroundings so completely in its impressions of nature, even to the cuckoo call, and the nightingale. The thunderstorm of the third movement caused many to turn uncomfortably in their seats and peer at the sky, but fortunately the weatherman was in on the secret and did not go the whole way in providing his accompaniment. And so the Fourth Symphony on Sunday offered a serene spirit, while both works by the passionate Russian let loose an overwhelming personal emotion which found echo in the hearts of the listeners. To the writer these were rather a let-down after the lofty plan of Beethoven's world.

It is fast becoming the tradition at Tanglewood to cheer the performers, wave handkerchiefs at Doctor Koussevitsky and indulge in some good old-fashioned show of approval socially taboo in the city concert hall. Surely there is reason for cheering, a rather sobering reason, when one considers the implied responsibility of this nation in its ability to offer such a musical festival as this; the privilege becomes a resolve that such things shall continue unabated to enrich men's lives and point the way to lasting values for all mankind.

H. EARLE JOHNSON.

This Clipping From
ALBANY, N.Y.
KNICKERBOCKER NEWS
AUG 12 1940

New Attendance Record At Tanglewood Festival

—By C. R. ROSEBERRY

Tanglewood Estate, with its trim-hedged gardens and tall pines, its storied tradition and Stockbridge Bowl glimmering in the near distance, was again the mecca for music-worshipping thousands over the weekend. Indeed, they were the largest multitudes yet attractd to this new musical center of America, estimated at 8,000 per concert.

The weather has smiled benignly on Serge Koussevitzky and his followers. Not once during the two weeks of the Berkshire Festival now past has there been a drop of rain to dampen the grass or drive the overflow crowd to shelter.

There would have been some poetic justice in a few claps of thunder and at least a tentative gust of rain Saturday night, when the Boston Orchestra played Beethoven's one concession to programmatic description—the "Pastoral" Symphony. Indeed, some photographers' flash bulbs were momentarily mistaken for lightning during the playing of the Beethoven thunderstorm music. But the elements did not gang up on Koussevitzky, as they did that momentous night three summers ago when the heavens cooperated so devastatingly in the "Ride of the Valkyries."

Tschaikowsky Cycle

The Tschaikowsky cycle, celebrating the 100th anniversary of that immortal Russian's birth, was completed over the weekend, with the "Pathetique" Saturday night and the Fifth Symphony yesterday afternoon. Along with them was the Beethoven complement, which had been so tastefully and tactfully arranged by Dr. Koussevitzky. Saturday night there were two Sixth Symphonies. Yesterday the Beethoven music was the dashing "Coriolanus" overture and the less dashing Fourth Symphony.

Wisely, Koussevitzky had not paired the Tschaikowsky master works with any of the mightier Beethoven compositions, which would have overshadowed them or made too emotionally rich a program. Certainly, the quiet "Pastoral" was an ideal offset for the enormously exciting "Pathetique," which never has seemed more of a dramatic orgy and a psychological ordeal than it did under the Koussevitzky baton. True, the orchestra was not at its complete best Saturday night and ragged notes were more than once detectable among the horns, those tricky instruments which have their off moments even in the best of orchestras.

The Sunday afternoon concert was something of an aftermath to this strong climax. The Beethoven Fourth, being one of the least of the Nine, was played lyrically and well, but was not calculated to move a crowd to frenzy. The Tschaikowsky Fifth has been played with greater intensity by this same orchestra, which seemed to have fallen into a slight lethargy from its monumental exertion of the night before.

Larger Audiences

One aspect of these Festival concerts which is more apparent this year than ever before is the broadening base of attendance. No longer are audiences strictly exclusive and highbrow; not that they were ever intended to be so but the Berkshire summer set is not exactly the hoi-polloi. Now however ,the population at large has awakened to the fact something big and enjoyable is going on these August days at Lenox, Mass., and a democratizing influence is discernible, which augurs well for the future of music as a vital force in America.

More and more one observes an infiltration of patrons who are not concert wise. Sometimes they disturb the serenity of the occasion by applauding between movements. Saturday night many thought the "Pathetique" symphony was completed at the end of the flamboyant third movement and arose to leave. The conductor's annoyance at the too-eager applause was noticeable, but yesterday he kept it pretty well under control by holding up his hand for silence and shortening pauses between movements.

The third and final week of the festival will begin Thursday nigh with the singing of Bach's grea B Minor Mass by the Berkshi Festival Chorus, this performan to open at 7 p. m. Doroth Maynor, the Negro contralto w was "discovered" by Koussevitzk in an audition at Lenox a yea ago, makes her triumphant r turn Saturday night as soloist.

This Clipping From
NEW BEDFORD, MASS.
MERCURY
AUG 12 1940

Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra closed the second series of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival in the Music Shed at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., Saturday afternoon at 3:30 with a program including Beethoven's "Coriolanus" overture and fourth symphony and Tchaikovsky's fifth symphony.

Bach's Mass in B minor, the first large-scale choral work to occupy an entire Berkshire Festival program, will be performed Thursday evening, at 7 o'clock. The second part, including the Credo, Sanctus and Benedictus, will begin at 9:30, after an intermission of about one hour and a quarter. The vocal soloists will be Elisabeth Schumann, soprano; Viola Silva, mezzo-soprano; William Hain, tenor, and Alexander Kipnis, of the Metropolitan Opera, bass.

The instrumental soloists and assisting artists in this performance, which is the firt Series C, will be Richard Burgin, concertmaster of the Boston Symphony, violin; Louis Sepeyer and Jean Devergie, oboi d'amore; William Valkenier, horn; Georges Laurent, flute; E. Power Biggs, organ, and Putnam Aldrich, harpsichord. The chorus is composed of members of the Berkshire Music Center who have been studying the B minor Mass for several weeks.

Dorothy Maynor, Negro soprano will be the soloist for the eighth festival program on Saturday night, Aug. 17, at 8:30, singing concert aria, "Bella mia Fiamma, addio," and Beethoven's "Adelaide." The program will open with ProkoFieff's Classical Symphony and Hindemith's symphony, "Mathis der Maler," and close with a suite from Gabriel Faure's "Pelleas et Melisande" music and Respighi's arrangement of Bach's Passacaglia and Fugue in C minor. Miss Maynor's vocal talent first became publicly noted a year ago, when she sang at Tanglewood during an entertainment given by Dr. Koussevitzky for the members of the orchestra.

Next Sunday's closing festival concert, like the first on Aug. 1, will have a program of three symphonies: Haydn's in G minor (B. & H. No. 88); Sibelius's seventh and the first symphony of Brahms

---

This Clipping From
ALBANY, N. Y.
TIMES UNION
AUG 12 1940

8,000 Attend Sunday Berkshire Concert

By EDGAR S. VAN OLINDA

Saturday night's symphonic concert was a four-star show; Beethoven, Tschaikowsky, Koussevitzky and Eleanor Roosevelt, the latter stopping intermission traffic in front of the box where she was the cynosure of all eyes.

Interest reverted to Doctor Koussevitzky, however, when he raised his baton for a glorious performance of the Russian composer's "Pathetique" (pronounced "Pathetic" by Olin Downs during his Saturday morning lecture at the orchestra rehearsal).

Most musicologists stress the morbid quality of the music of this sympathy, but if some torch-bearing conductor had the courage to transpose the third and fourth movements, he would have one of the most cheerful symphonic works in all literature. As it was, the furore which arose after the playing of the third movement established a precedent of having the conductor turn and acknowledge the applause, after having raised his hands in protest at former and later similar breaches of the unwritten law of no applause between the four sections.

It was that kind of performance. The "Pastorale" symphony of Beethoven preceeded the Tschaikowsky symphony, which assumed new beauty in the bucolic setting in which it was heard and in which environment it was conceived.

Sunday afternoon's program again musically arrayed Bethoven and Tschaikowsky against each other, presenting the former's symphony No. 4 and the latter's No. 5 with no loss of prestige to either. As a matter of reportorial accuracy, a decibel recording of the applause after either performance would have declared unanimously and unquestionably in favor of Russia against Germany, as represented by their respective composers.

An estimated audience of 8,000 tossed hats and dignity to the winds with all the enthusiasm attending a home run in a critical period of a World series baseball game. It probably was as inspired a performance by an inspired orchestra as any of the audience ever had been privileged to hear, not excepting those of Symphony hall, the permanent winter home of Doctor Koussevitzky and his men.

The great music of Tschaikowsky is one of the many manifestations of the universal language the Russian conductor understands and speaks fluently through his magnificent group of virtuoso performers. His eloquent face mirrowed the joy of its translation to eager ears.

CATSKILL, N. Y.
MAIL
AUG 12 1940

8,000 Hear Boston Symphony

An estimated audience of 8,000 heard the inspired performance of the Boston Symphony Orchestra led by the baton of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky at the Berkshire Music Festival on Sunday afternoon, among whom were a number of Catskillians, thrilled by the orchestra's magnificent rendition of the Beethoven and Tschaikowsky program. This year's Festival has surpassed any year in the seven year history of the Festival, according to reports from Tanglewood, the festival's music shed.

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN
AUG 12 1940

TSCHAIKOWSKY IS OUTSTANDING AT TANGLEWOOD

Symphony in E Minor, No 5, Benefits From Performance Outdoors — Beethoven Fourth Given, Too

By FRANCIS REGAL

Stockbridge, Aug. 11 — Beethoven and Tschaikowsky, this afternoon, for the third consecutive time made up the program of the Berkshire Symphonic festival, but this time with the odds favoring the Russian composer. Beethoven was represented by his fourth symphony (B flat), a work of great beauty but delicate and not at all in Ercles' vein, whereas the second half of the program was given to the most popular of all the six Tschaikowsky symphonies, the one in E minor, No 5. Orchestral works depend as greatly as paintings on circumstances and settings, and obviously the orchestral pomp of the Russian composer is far more telling than any gentle music can be in a semiopen building and before an audience of 9000 people.

This does not mean that even the most delicate of Beethoven's passages failed to hold interest; the adagio with its exquisite softly reiterated melody instantly won the audience and the scherzo is always welcome. But in a larger auditorium the opening movement seems to gather way rather slowly, and the finale, while charming, lacks a heroic climax.

Even with the romantic and beautiful "Coriolanus" overture to break the ice, Beethoven's contribution was necessarily overshadowed by the tonal magnificence of Tschaikowsky as played by the Boston ~~Symphony~~ orchestra and as conducted by Dr Serge Koussevitzky, who is unsurpassed and hardly unequaled in the interpretation of the Russian composer.

At Its Best in Outdoor Setting

Such music, heavily scored with full use of brass and percussion instruments, is at its best in a setting of this kind. Indoors such sonority would almost churn the air into butter, but the music shed, sensitive even to the lightest sprays of tone, can also stand the heaviest blasts of trumpets, horns, trombones and tubas, and the effect of the successive climaxes was thrilling without crossing the boundary between pleasure and pain.

In the programs thus far the three favorite Tschaikowsky symphonies, No 1, No 6, and now No 5, have been the outstanding features of the festival, except for a marvelous performance of Richard Strauss's "Don Quixote," with Piatigorsky as 'cello soloist, and the appearance og Albert Spalding in the Beethoven violin concerto.

Decades ago Theodore Thomas, in his musical missionary work, found that American audiences responded strongly to Beethoven, but had trouble in finding an alternative symphonist, until he tried the symphonies of Tschaikowsky. Since then, other composers have found acceptance, including Brahms and Sibelius, but it is still true that the "masculine" or "heroic" symphonies of Beethoven, and the three most-favored of Tschaikowsky's symphonies, can be most surely counted upon for stirring a great general audience. But at these festivals due regard is given to music of different types, and this year Beethoven, the mightiest master of them all, happens not to be represented by his mightiest works.

Much could be said of the flawless beauty of the interpretation of the fourth symphony and of the ethereal beauty of the strings and solo winds in its delicate figuration, but it necessarily seemed a little pale after the brass choir of Tschaikowsky began

---

8500 Hear Berkshires Program

Tschaikovsky's Pathetic Ends Second Cycle.

World Telegram-8/12/40

By LOUIS BIANCOLLI.

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 12.—With Tanglewood grounds—shed and lawn included—jammed with 8500 devotees in their Sunday best, the second span of the Berkshire Symphnoic cycle ended on a record-breaking note yesterday afternoon.

Saturday night's attendance was about the same, possibly shy a few, but it had it over the Sunday throng in enthusiasm. Nowhere this side of the late Hippodrome has the writer witnessed a demonstration to equal what followed after the March movement of Tschaikovsky's Pathetic Symphony.

But then, enthusiasm hereabouts runs in the higher registers anyway. True to form, festival-goers accorded Serge Koussevitzky and his stalwart Bostonians ovation after ovation. "Bravos" burst lustily from all sides, and Berkshirites thought nothing of jumping to their feet and bellowing.

* * *

Cycle Completed.

The concerts of Saturday and yesterday completed the three-ply cycle devoted to Beethoven and Tchaikovsky. For the Sunday event Mr. Koussevitzky bracketed the Coriolan Overture and Fourth Symphony with the Fifth of the Russian composer.

Without at all meaning to belittle anything else this writer admits being most bowled over by the Pathetic, which shared a two-part program Saturday with Beethoven's Pastoral.

It is news to nobody that Tschaikovsky is a Koussevitzky favorite. The man believes in him ardently. He avowedly put him on the same programs with Beethoven to show that the Russian can hold his own in the presence of a god.

The Pathetic went sublimely, just that. The movements fused into an organic whole of cumulative power. The anguish, terror and exultation were all there, woven into an inexorable scheme. And the orchestra gave the conductor all he asked. No wonder the audience went wild.

The Fifth followed suit yesterday. What may sound lush, repetitious and banal in other hands was expressive drama and the lyricism in Mr. Koussevitzky's. He made the orchestra ring out with stunning impact and sonority.

As for Beethoven, of course, the Pastoral has come to be regarded as the theme song of the Berkshire Festival. No more fitting surroundings were designed by nature or God for this paean to the outdoors.

The performance on Saturday was a wonder of transparent tone. Details stood out almost with pictorial vividness. The storm section mounted to shattering fortissimi. There is terror in this music when played so. It was comforting to see a roof overhead.

* * *

Coriolan Overture.

The only other number was the Coriolan overture, which the writer had heard Mr. Koussevitzky with his men rehearse on Friday. It went with the force and hurtling power of gripping narrative.

Of course, one of the secrets of this great orchestra is rehearsals. Watching director and men beveling off rough edges for three whole hours a day in this heat helps one understand, as everyone knows, that Mr. Koussevitzky is a stickler for polish.

The festival grounds outside the shed again looked like a picnic, with hundreds sprawled out on blankets. A sea of parked cars extended far beyond.

Each successive concert seems to bring a new caravan of neophytes to this highland carnival.

Yesterday Albert Spalding urged the audience to organize itself into a "Committee of Six Thousand" to put over the gala concert and "Manifestation" planned for next Friday (6 to 10:30 p. m.) for the Allied Relief Benefit.

This Clipping From
WATERBURY, CONN.
AMERICAN
AUG 12 1940

Dilatory Concert Lovers Spoil Delightful Event

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky Directs Beethoven's Symphony No. 6 With Masterful Finesse at Berkshire Musical Festival

Beethoven's Symphony No. 6 in F major, known to music lovers as the "Pastoral," opened the Saturday night concert of the second series of the seventh annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Tanglewood. Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conducting the Boston Symphony orchestra, gave a fine interpretation of the "Pastoral", which is a "study in relaxation and placidity." However the placidity of the piece was lost to the thousands of persons in the audience who had arrived at the shed on time, when those fashionable late-comers rushed to their seats immediately upon the heels of the last notes of the first movement, which sets the mood of the whole symphony.

Beethoven's impressions of the country, "Scene by the Brookside," "Jolly Gathering of Country Folk," "Shepherd's Song" fitted well into the placid scene of the rolling Berkshire hills which surround the lovely estate at Tanglewood.

The audience was appreciative of Dr. Koussevitzky's magnificent interpretation of Tchaikovsky's Symphony No. 6 in B minor, which comprised the second half of the program. Each movement of the "Pathetique" stood out as a rare performance of music, and the thousands of listeners, eager to show their appreciation of such an unusual performance of the Russian's work, gave the conductor tremendous ovation after each movement. The third movement, the most dramatic of the symphony's four, will long be remembered by the audience of Saturday night. Dr. Koussevitzky accented the highlights of the piece, but at the same time, he did not overshadow the details which make that movement outstanding.

The final movement of the "Pathetique" is also worth noting. It ends pianissimo, and Dr. Koussevitzky drew out the last notes so fine that the audience, keen to applaud at all other times, hardly breathed, and it was some minutes after th elast note had completely died away before the thunderous applause began.

Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt and a party of five drove up from Hyde Park to join the 9,000 other music lovers who filled the shed and spread themselves out on the wide lawn when the 6,000 seats were filled.

Audience Breathless.

The record crowd of 9,000 was equalled or bettered at yesterday's concert, when Dr. Koussevitzky conducted Beethoven's Overture, "Coriolanus", and Symphony No. 4 in B flat major, and Tchaikovsky's Symphony No. 5 in E minor.

The "Coriolanus" was a delightful opening number, gay and warm in tone, and was followed by the Beethoven symphony, a rather dull piece of work in comparison with the composer's brilliant fifth or sixth symphonies, but the orchestra's interpretation under the direction of Dr. Koussevitzky was highly interesting.

Tchaikovsky's fifth symphony, the last half of the program, as interpreted by the great conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra, had the audience breathless during the performance, and cheering thunderously afterward as had the performance of the sixth symphony the night before.

There is no doubt that Dr. Koussevitzky is the ablest interpreter of Tchiakowsky's work. He has an understanding of the Russian's meaning, and a feeling of his emotions which he is able to explain and share with his audience by means of his conducting. He has brought to the music lovers an appreciation of Tchiakovsky, whom they scorned a few years ago for his "over-emotionalism."

Breach of Etiquet.

When the program opens with a symphony as it did Saturday night it is annoying to the seated audience, but even more so to the conductor, who has used his talents to establish a mood in his audience, to have a long pause forced upon them before the next movement can begin, as was caused by late comers.

Another breach of etiquet which annoyed Dr. Koussevitzky during the Saturday night performance, was the applause between movements. A symphony is one piece of work consisting of several movements, which are distinguished one from the other by a slight pause, during which time there should be no comment by the audience.

—SYLVIA V. STEVENSON.

This Clipping From
HARTFORD, CONN.
COURANT
AUG 12 1940

Koussevitzky Brings Down Music Shed

9000 Go Wild at Stockbridge as Bostonians Go to Town on Superb Tschaikowsky 5th

BY T. H. PARKER.

Stockbridge, Mass., Aug. 11.—How much of Eliel Saarinen's fine, Finlandic music shed you will find intact if you come up to the Berkshire Symphonic Festival here this week, is definitely a questionable matter at best.

At six o'clock tonight, when your informant was threading his way out of Tanglewood, prospects seemed pretty good that it would be demolished altogether. Dr. Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Orchestra had just completed Tschaikowsky's Fifth Symphony, and 9000 persons were frantically trying to match their wild enthusiasms to the performance. The nearest thing to the demonstration being staged was the yell that goes up when the champ and favorite climbs through the ropes just before the big fight. Indications were that noise would be insufficient and that the enthusiasts would probably end up by totally dismantling the Shed and taking home bits of wood and steel as mementi of a superlative occasion.

It is doubtless purely psychotic to select from among all the works that Dr. Koussevitzky conducts, "the one he does the best." But nevertheless, if you ever have to choose, lay your money fearlessly on the Tschaikowsky Fifth. Seven years ago, at the first Festival, he read it on a moonlight night among the imperial gardens of the Westinghouse estate, and the passion of it was like no other symphony performance ever heard.

In looking forward to today's concert, I wondered how much the moonlight had contributed to that miraculous occasion. Yet under the blaze of sun, on a Sunday afternoon (certainly the least auspicious occasion possible for rearing up this monumental sable work), Dr. Koussevitzky and the orchestra gave a performance which completely matched that of seven years ago.

So it wasn't the moonlight, or the novelty of the Festival. It was the fury of tragedy which Tschaikowsky put into the Fifth Symphony, and which Dr. Koussevitzky and the orchestra so agonizingly bring out of it. The despairs and defiances, the fevers and tortures of the work are, in Dr. Koussevitzky's interpretation, "as terrible as an army with banners."

Is Great Champion.

So great a champion, sans peur et sans reproche, as Dr. Koussevitzyk, Tschaikowsky has nowhere else. There are conductors who inhibit him note by note, make him harsh, make him stern, lest they be deemed victims of Tschaikovian sentimentality. There are those who let his back hair all the way down, to make him "Russian." Dr. Koussevitzky alone lets him despair, rage or sing, yet finds a monumental dimension and Promethean dignity for these despairs, rages and song. No one has done more to restore Tschaikowsky to his pedestal, to beat down the cries that Tschaikowsky is only tear-bedewed, for weepers.

One of the most rewarding moments of the whole event today, was the sight of Dr. Koussevitzky receiving the wild plaudits of the audience. His pretenses of imperiousness melt almost instantly under such obvious audience delight, and he smiles with patent pleasure at their tributes. It is the completely charming moment of the concerts.

The program had opened with a

---

and fail in the House because, whil endorsing the principle, the President has not put the heat on at th
Capitol.

Mistaken Assumption.

Some politicians suppose that al this is just smart politics on th President's part. But the President better than any other man, is acutely aware of the desperate dange of the times ahead. Therefore h must know that while temporizin may appeal to the unawakened i the present brief lull in the worl conflict it will turn out to hav been the worst politics in the wo when the times of danger awa the people at last.

The explanation, surely, is deepe than mere presidential politics
After a year and a half in which he had concentrated all his interest on foreign policy the battle o

120

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN

AUG 12 1940

TSCHAIKOWSKY IS OUTSTANDING AT TANGLEWOOD

Symphony in E Minor, No 5, Benefits From Performance Outdoors — Beethoven Fourth Given, Too

By FRANCIS REGAL

Stockbridge, Aug. 11—Beethoven and Tschaikowsky, this afternoon, for the third consecutive time made up the program of the Berkshire Symphonic festival, but this time with the odds favoring the Russian composer. Beethoven was represented by his fourth symphony (B flat), a work of great beauty but delicate and not at all in Ercles' vein, whereas the second half of the program was given to the most popular of all the six Tschaikowsky symphonies, the one in E minor, No 5. Orchestral works depend as greatly as paintings on circumstances and settings, and obviously the orchestral pomp of the Russian composer is far more telling than any gentle music can be in a semiopen building and before an audience of 9000 people.

This does not mean that even the most delicate of Beethoven's passages failed to hold interest; the adagio with its exquisite softly reiterated melody instantly won the audience and the scherzo is always welcome. But in a larger auditorium the opening movement seems to gather way rather slowly, and the finale, while charming, lacks a heroic climax.

Even with the romantic and beautiful "Coriolanus" overture to break the ice. Beethoven's contribution was necessarily overshadowed by the tonal magnificence of Tschaikowsky as played by the Boston ~~Symphony~~ orchestra and as conducted by Dr Serge Koussevitzky, who is unsurpassed and hardly unequaled in the interpretation of the Russian composer.

At Its Best in Outdoor Setting

Such music, heavily scored with full use of brass and percussion instruments, is at its best in a setting of this kind. Indoors such sonority would almost churn the air into butter, but the music shed, sensitive even to the lightest sprays of tone, can also stand the heaviest blasts of trumpets, horns, trombones and tubas, and the effect of the successive climaxes was thrilling without crossing the boundary between pleasure and pain.

In the programs thus far the three favorite Tschaikowsky symphonies, No 1, No 6, and now No 5, have been the outstanding features of the festival, except for a marvelous performance of Richard Strauss's "Don Quixote," with Piatigorsky as 'cello soloist, and the appearance og Albert Spalding in the Beethoven violin concerto.

Decades ago Theodore Thomas, in his musical missionary work, found that American audiences responded strongly to Beethoven, but had trouble in finding an alternative symphonist, until he tried the symphonies of Tschaikowsky. Since then, other composers have found acceptance, including Brahms and Sibelius, but it is still true that the "masculine" or "heroic" symphonies of Beethoven, and the three most-favored of Tschaikowsky's symphonies, can be most surely counted upon for stirring a great general audience. But at these festivals due regard is given to music of different types, and this year Beethoven, the mightiest master of them all, happens not to be represented by his mightiest works.

Much could be said of the flawless beauty of the interpretation of the fourth symphony and of the ethereal beauty of the strings and solo winds in its delicate figuration, but it necessarily seemed a little pale after the brass choir of Tschaikowsky began to blare. Strangely enough, of all his symphonies this least satisfied the composer, but even if it did not correspond to his intention it achieved a tonal design which successive generations have accepted, and the slow movement with its lovely melody for horn, exquisitely played today, is perhaps the favorite among all Tschaikowsky's works.

---

wood

Concert

uded a huge tureen of piping hot among them Francesca Rospigliosi.

---

an 85 day best,
the span of the Berkshire Symphnoic cycle ended on a record-breaking note yesterday afternoon.

Saturday night's attendance was about the same, possibly shy a few, but it had it over the Sunday throng in enthusiasm. Nowhere this side of the late Hippodrome has the writer witnessed a demonstration to equal what followed after the March movement of Tschaikovsky's Pathetic Symphony.

But then, enthusiasm hereabouts runs in the higher registers anyway. True to form, festival-goers accorded Serge Koussevitzky and his stalwart Bostonians ovation after ovation. "Bravos" burst lustily from all sides, and Berkshirites thought nothing of jumping to their feet and bellowing.

* * *

Cycle Completed.

The concerts of Saturday and yesterday completed the three-ply cycle devoted to Beethoven and Tchaikovsky. For the Sunday event Mr. Koussevitzky bracketed the Coriolan Overture and Fourth Symphony with the Fifth of the Russian composer.

Without at all meaning to belittle anything else this writer admits being most bowled over by the Pathetic, which shared a two-part program Saturday with Beethoven's Pastoral.

It is news to nobody that Tschaikovsky is a Koussevitzky favorite. The man believes in him ardently. He avowedly put him on the same programs with Beethoven to show that the Russian can hold his own in the presence of a god.

The Pathetic went sublimely, just that. The movements fused into an organic whole of cumulative power. The anguish, terror and exultation were all there, woven into an inexorable scheme. And the orchestra gave the conductor all he asked. No wonder the audience went wild.

The Fifth followed suit yesterday. What may sound lush, repetitious and banal in other hands was expressive drama and the lyricism in Mr. Koussevitzky's. He made the orchestra ring out with stunning impact and sonority.

As for Beethoven, of course, the Pastoral has come to be regarded as the theme song of the Berkshire Festival. No more fitting surroundings were designed by nature or God for this paean to the outdoors.

The performance on Saturday was a wonder of transparent tone. Details stood out almost with pictorial vividness. The storm section mounted to shattering fortiessimi. There is terror in this music when played so. It was comforting to see a roof overhead.

* * *

Coriolan Overture.

The only other number was the Coriolan overture, which the writer had heard Mr. Koussevitzky with his men rehearse on Friday. It went with the force and hurtling power of gripping narrative.

Of course, one of the secrets of this great orchestra is rehearsals. Watching director and men beveling off rough edges for three whole hours a day in this heat helps one understand, as everyone knows, that Mr. Koussevitzky is a stickler for polish.

The festival grounds outside the shed again looked like a picnic, with hundreds sprawled out on blankets. A sea of parked cars extended far beyond.

Each successive concert seems to bring a new caravan of neophytes to this highland carnival.

Yesterday Albert Spalding urged the audience to organize itself into a "Committee of Six Thousand" to put over the gala concert and "Manifestation" planned for next Friday (6 to 10:30 p. m.) for the Allied Relief Benefit.

This Clipping From
WATERBURY, CONN.
AMERICAN

AUG 12 1940

Dilatory Concert Lovers Spoil Delightful Event

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky Directs Beethoven's Symphony No. 6 With Masterful Finesse at Berkshire Musical Festival

Beethoven's Symphony No. 6 in F major, known to music lovers as the "Pastoral," opened the Saturday night concert of the second series of the seventh annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Tanglewood. Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conducting the Boston Symphony orchestra, gave a fine interpretation of the "Pastoral", which is a "study in relaxation and placidity." However the placidity of the piece was lost to the thousands of persons in the audience who had arrived at the shed on time, when those fashionable late-comers rushed to their seats immediately upon the heels of the last notes of the first movement, which sets the mood of the whole symphony.

Beethoven's impressions of the country, "Scene by the Brookside," "Jolly Gathering of Country Folk," "Shepherd's Song" fitted well into the placid scene of the rolling Berkshire hills which surround the lovely estate at Tanglewood.

The audience was appreciative of Dr. Koussevitzky's magnificent interpretation of Tchaikovsky's Symphony No. 6 in B minor, which comprised the second half of the program. Each movement of the "Pathetique" stood out as a rare performance of music, and the thousands of listeners, eager to show their appreciation of such an unusual performance of the Russian's work, gave the conductor tremendous ovation after each movement. The third movement, the most dramatic of the symphony's four, will long be remembered by the audience of Saturday night. Dr. Koussevitzky accented the highlights of the piece, but at the same time, he did not overshadow the details which make that movement outstanding.

The final movement of the "Pathetique" is also worth noting. It ends pianissimo, and Dr. Koussevitzky drew out the last notes so fine that the audience, keen to applaud at all other times, hardly breathed, and it was some minutes after th elast note had completely died away before the thunderous applause began.

Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt and a party of five drove up from Hyde Park to join the 9,000 other music lovers who filled the shed and spread themselves out on the wide lawn when the 6,000 seats were filled.

Audience Breathless.

The record crowd of 9,000 was equalled or bettered at yesterday's concert, when Dr. Koussevitzky conducted Beethoven's Overture, "Coriolanus", and Symphony No. 4 in B flat major, and Tchaikovsky's Symphony No. 5 in E minor.

The "Coriolanus" was a delightful opening number, gay and warm in tone, and was followed by the Beethoven symphony, a rather dull piece of work in comparison with the composer's brilliant fifth or sixth symphonies, but the orchestra's interpretation under the direction of Dr. Koussevitzky was highly interesting.

Tchaikovsky's fifth symphony, the last half of the program, as interpreted by the great conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra, had the audience breathless during the performance, and cheering thunderously afterward as had the performance of the sixth symphony the night before.

There is no doubt that Dr. Koussevitzky is the ablest interpreter of Tchiakowsky's work. He has an understanding of the Russian's meaning, and a feeling of his emotions which he is able to explain and share with his audience by means of his conducting. He has brought to the music lovers an appreciation of Tchiakovsky, whom they scorned a few years ago for his "over-emotionalism."

Breach of Etiquet.

When the program opens with a symphony as it did Saturday night it is annoying to the seated audience, but even more so to the conductor, who has used his talents to establish a mood in his audience, to have a long pause forced upon them before the next movement can begin, as was caused by late comers.

Another breach of etiquet which annoyed Dr. Koussevitzky during the Saturday night performance, was the applause between movements. A symphony is one piece of work consisting of several movements, which are distinguished one from the other by a slight pause, during which time there should be no comment by the audience.

—SYLVIA V. STEVENSON.

This Clipping From
HARTFORD, CONN.
COURANT

AUG 12 1940

Koussevitzky Brings Down Music Shed

9000 Go Wild at Stockbridge as Bostonians Go to Town on Superb Tschaikowsky 5th

BY T. H. PARKER.

Stockbridge, Mass., Aug. 11.—How much of Eliel Saarinen's fine, Finlandic music shed you will find intact if you come up to the Berkshire Symphonic Festival here this week, is definitely a questionable matter at best.

At six o'clock tonight, when your informant was threading his way out of Tanglewood, prospects seemed pretty good that it would be demolished altogether. Dr. Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Orchestra had just completed Tschaikowsky's Fifth Symphony, and 9000 persons were frantically trying to match their wild enthusiasms to the performance. The nearest thing to the demonstration being staged was the yell that goes up when the champ and favorite climbs through the ropes just before the big fight. Indications were that noise would be insufficient and that the enthusiasts would probably end up by totally dismantling the Shed and taking home bits of wood and steel as mementi of a superlative occasion.

It is doubtless purely psychotic to select from among all the works that Dr. Koussevitzky conducts, "the one he does the best." But nevertheless, if you ever have to choose, lay your money fearlessly on the Tschaikowsky Fifth. Seven years ago, at the first Festival, he read it on a moonlight night among the imperial gardens of the Westinghouse estate, and the passion of it was like no other symphony performance ever heard.

In looking forward to today's concert, I wondered how much the moonlight had contributed to that miraculous occasion. Yet under the blaze of sun, on a Sunday afternoon (certainly the least auspicious occasion possible for rearing up this monumental sable work), Dr. Koussevitzky and the orchestra gave a performance which completely matched that of seven years ago.

So it wasn't the moonlight, or the novelty of the Festival. It was the fury of tragedy which Tschaikowsky put into the Fifth Symphony, and which Dr. Koussevitzky and the orchestra so agonizingly bring out of it. The despairs and defiances, the fevers and tortures of the work are, in Dr. Koussevitzky's interpretation, "as terrible as an army with banners."

Is Great Champion.

So great a champion, sans peur et sans reproche, as Dr. Koussevitzyk, Tschaikowsky has nowhere else. There are conductors who inhibit him note by note, make him harsh, make him stern, lest they be deemed victims of Tschaikovian sentimentality. There are those who let his back hair all the way down, to make him "Russian." Dr. Koussevitzky alone lets him despair, rage or sing, yet finds a monumental dimension and Promethean dignity for these despairs, rages and song. No one has done more to restore Tschaikowsky to his pedestal, to beat down the cries that Tschaikowsky is only tear-bedewed, for weepers.

One of the most rewarding moments of the whole event today, was the sight of Dr. Koussevitzky receiving the wild plaudits of the audience. His pretenses of imperiousness melt almost instantly under such obvious audience delight, and he smiles with patent pleasure at their tributes. It is the completely charming moment of the concerts.

The program had opened with a ruddy statement of Beethoven's "Coriolanus" Overture, and then proceeded to the same master's Fourth Symphony. Dr. Koussevitzky found every grace for this work often given short shrift by Beethoven-fanciers. As in performing the "Pastorale" last night, he gave it an unusual poise, on the one hand, and a rare transparency on the other. Where Beethoven gives the opportunity, as in the first, second and last movements, Dr. Koussevitzky imparts a fine lyricism, and an easy charm. I cannot claim to have heard Dr. Koussevitzky play an extensive amount of Beethoven, but his interpretations last night and this afternoon entrench me further in the belief that he generally avoids some of the more impatient, impetuous sides of the composers, in order to refine him. The result is a matter of personal taste.

Incandescent Performance.

The orchestra rose to an incandescent performance of the Tschaikowsky Symphony, and brought a crystal shape to the Beethoven Fourth. The playing was decidedly superior to that of Saturday.

In such hordes did the 9000 persons descend on the Festival Saturday night, that neither love nor money could secure lodging for those who failed to reserve it in advance. Scores of people were forced to go 30 and 40 miles outside of Stockbridge and Lenox to get a roof over their heads. At North Adams, 35 miles away, the line-up at the hotel desks was practically like those at the parcel-post windows during the Christmas mailing rush.

121

THIS CLIPPING FROM
ST. CLOUD, MINN.
TIMES-JOURNAL
Aug 16, 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM SANTA MONICA, CAL.
OUTLOOK
AUG 20 1940

This Clipping From FORT WAYNE, IND.
NEWS-SENTINEL
AUG 15 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM TEMPLE, TEX.
TELEGRAM
AUG 17 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM ABILENE, TEX.
Morning Reporter News
AUG 18 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM MOLINE, ILL.
DISPATCH
AUG 19 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM ROCKFORD, ILL.
REGISTER-REPUBLIC
AUG 17 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM AURORA, ILL.
BEACON-NEWS
AUG 19 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM BOULDER, COLO.
CAMERA
AUG 15 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM WARREN, OHIO
Tribune-Chronicle
AUG 15 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM WEBSTER CITY, IA.
FREEMAN - JOURNAL
AUG 21 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM DEADWOOD, S. D.
PIONEER TIMES
AUG 17 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM PINE BLUFF, ARK.
COMMERCIAL
AUG 16 1940

This Clipping From
JERSEY CITY, N. J.
JERSEY JOURNAL
AUG 20 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM PLAINVIEW, TEXAS
HERALD
AUG 20 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM BATTLE CREEK, MICH.
ENQUIRER NEWS
AUG 18 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM BIG SPRING, TEXAS
HERALD
AUG 16 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM BELLEVILLE, ILL.
ADVOCATE
AUG 15 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM SOUTH BEND, IND.
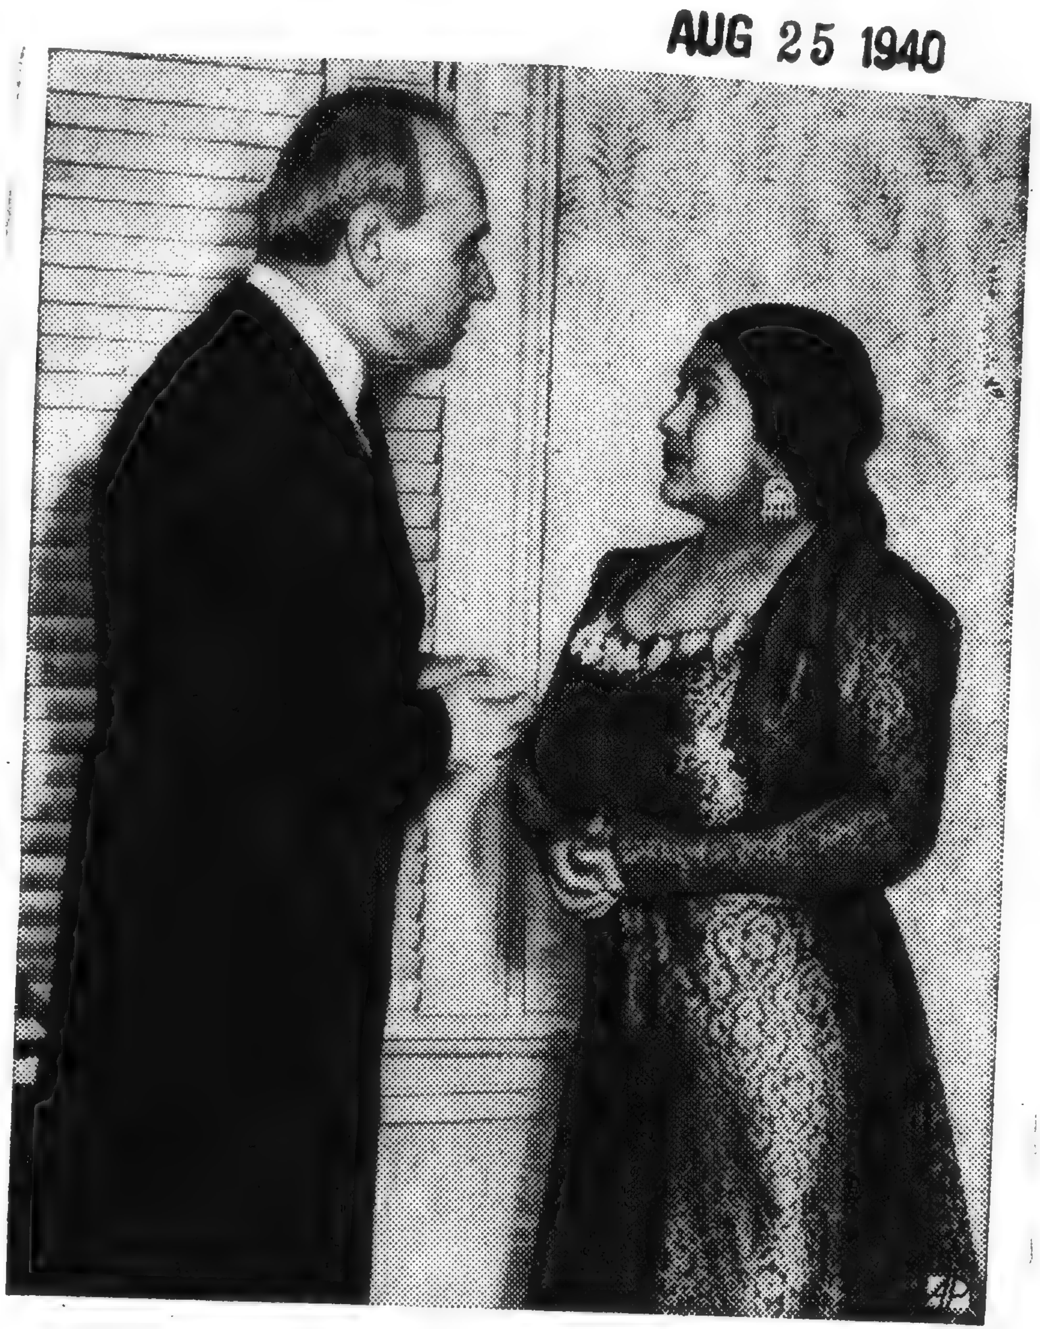
TRIBUNE
AUG 25 1940



FIRST ANNIVERSARY—Dorothy Maynor, Negro soprano acclaimed in August, 1939, chats with Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of Boston symphony orchestra, in August, 1940, as she prepared for ~~her~~ "first anniversary" appearance at the Berkshire music festival in Stockbridge, Mass. Koussevitzky is credited with having discovered and aided the then-unknown singer.

THIS CLIPPING FROM BEATRICE, NEB.
SUN
AUG 19 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM DANVILLE, ILL.
COMMERCIAL NEWS
AUG 15 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM ATTLEBORO, MASS.
SUN
AUG 14 1940

This Clipping From HANOVER, PA.
SUN
AUG 17 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM ROANOKE, VA.
WORLD-NEWS
AUG 15 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM
LAS VEGAS, N. M.
OPTIC
AUG 16 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM FARIBAULT, MINN.
NEWS
AUG 15 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM FREEPORT, ILL.
JOURNAL STANDARD
AUG 15 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM CLINTON, IA.
HERALD
AUG 15 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM SIOUX CITY, IA.
TRIBUNE
AUG 16 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM SPRINGFIELD, MO.
NEWS
AUG 18 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM MARSHALLTOWN, IA.
Times-Republican
AUG 16 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM HANNIBAL, MO.
COURIER-POST
AUG 20 1940

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION
AUG 16 1940

BARTLESVILLE, OKLA.
EXAMINER
AUG 16 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM
TEXARKANA, ARK.
GAZETTE
AUG 17 1940

This Clipping From
BRIDGEPORT, CONN.
POST
AUG 14 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM CORSICANA, TEX.
SUN
AUG 17 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM STERLING, COLO.
ADVOCATE
AUG 15 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM DURANGO, COLO.
HERALD - DEMOCRAT
AUG 20 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM NORWOOD, MASS.
MESSENGER
AUG 22 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM SAN ANGELO, TEX.
Morn. Standard Times
AUG 17 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM SAN ANTONIO, TEX.
NEWS
AUG 17 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM SIOUX, FALLS, S. D.
ARGUS LEADER
AUG 15 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM
WATERTOWN, S. D.
PUBLIC OPINION
AUG 17 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM MARION, O.
STAR
AUG 15 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
UNION-STAR
AUG 14 1940

This Clipping From
TORRINGTON, CONN.
REGISTER
AUG 14 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM McCOMB, ILL.
JOURNAL
AUG 15 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM CHEROKEE, IA.
TIMES
AUG 17 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM KOKOMO, IND.
TRIBUNE
AUG 17 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM MANITOWOC, WIS.
HERALD-TIMES
AUG 16 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM RUTLAND, VT.
HERALD
AUG 15 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM GREENVILLE, TEX.
BANNER
AUG 15 1940

N. Y. C., TIMES
AUGUST 12, 1940

BERKSHIRE MUSIC ENJOYED BY 8,500

Record Sunday Audience Hears Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony at Tanglewood

TCHAIKOVSKY IS PLAYED

His Fifth Symphony and the Fourth of Beethoven Are Presented on Program

BY HOWARD TAUBMAN

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 11—The Berkshire Symphonic Festival has a new ~~record to shoot at. F~~or the final concert of the second week today at Tanglewood an audience of about 8,500 turned out to hear Sergei Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra. That made a total of about 25,100 listeners for the three concerts of the long weekend. Each three of the concerts broke the attendance record set last year, with 7,600 visiting Tanglewood last Thursday and 9,000 last night.

This afternoon's program brought to an end the observance of the one hundredth anniversary of Tchaikovsky's birth. His Fifth symphony ended today's concert. The Sixth had been played Saturday and the Fourth on Thursday. On each program of the week there was also Beethoven. Today the concert began with Beethoven's "Coriolanus" overture and Fourth symphony.

Without gracious cooperation of the weather it is doubtful whether the attendance would have been at a consistently record-breaking level. It was another perfect day today, giving the festival two weeks of the exceptional weather thus far.

Throng of Hearers on Lawn

Again it was not only the music but the crowd and the locale that formed part of the story. The holders of general admission, whose province is, roughly, the ten acres of lawn on all sides of the music shed, seemed to choose their spots with the expertness of veterans. The large trees on the fringe of the shed were like oases, with hundreds of listeners sitting under their kindly shade. The sun-worshipers scattered over the sun-covered lawn.

As the festival proceeds, the customers show more resourcefulness in providing themelves with comfort. Some bring folding seats of all descriptions. One could count a score or more of deck chairs in various places on the lawn. Young couples propped themselves back to back. Stacks of cushions served as supports for other persons.

The excitement and responsiveness of the audience grew with each performance. At the end of today's concert Mr. Koussevitzky and his orchestra received salvo after salvo of applause. Having listened patiently for two hours, the audience has something to say of its own, and its expression invariably takes the form of tumultuous tributes.

It is hardly necessary to add that these demonstrations were richly merited. Mr. Koussevitzky is a past master of Tchaikovsky's Fifth. The lineaments of his interpretation, while familiar, remain rewarding. He led the score today with a vigor and enthusiasm that one would not believe possible from a man who has conducted the music countless times.

The performance of Beethoven's Fourth was also an act of recreation. Less often played than some of the other Beethoven symphonies, this work has a refreshing and endearing warmth. Mr. Koussevitzky and his men communicated the charm and beauty of the score, limning the enchanting slow movement, for example, with a delicacy of nuance and patrician style. The "Coriolanus" overture was a stirring exordium.

But the high point of the week's music-making, at least to one listener, was the performance of Tchaikovsky's "Pathétique" symphony last night. Mr. Koussevitzky's conception has deepened and ripened, and it is all of one piece. The frenetic third movement is delineated with a feverish intensity that makes it poignant and that gives it a proper place in the scheme of the music Mr. Koussevitzky did not paint the lily in the [illegible] and last movements, letting Tchaikovsky's hymning of the end of hope and man's desire speak for itself. One recalled, as one listened to this magnificently restrained and probing interpretation, the lines of Swinburne—"And the weeks that grew green on the graves of the roses now lie dead."

Albert Spalding Speaks

At the end of the first half of today's program, Mr. Koussevitzky introduced Albert Spalding, who urged the audience to come to the Allied Relief Benefit next Friday. [illegible] wish to trumpet to Old England from all New England our comfort, sympathy and help."

It was announced that, besides the funds to be raised from the benefit, a grand auction will be held on Friday to obtain at least $1,800 for an ambulance unit from the Berkshire Festival. Gifts of a young heifer, pedigreed puppies, a silver tray, an old English service, a manuscript by Edna St. Vincent Millay and works of art have been donated for the auction. The auctioneer will be Owen Johnson.

Some patrons of the festival concerts have observed that there is no music by Richard Wagner on any of the programs and have inquired whether this omission had anything to do with the war. George Judd, manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, explained that the absence of Wagner was merely a coincidence. He added that there was certainly no feeling against German music as such and pointed to Mr. Koussevitzky's playing of works by Beethoven, Brahms, Mozart, Schumann, Strauss and Bach.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE
AUG 12 1940

2 Symphonies Mark Concert In Berkshires

Beethoven and Tchaikovsky Works Played by Boston Orchestra at Festival

By Robert Lawrence

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 11.—The second week of Berkshire Symphonic festival ended this afternoon with a concert of exceptional brilliance by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under direction of Serge Koussevitzky. Works of Beethoven were played, the Coriolanus overture and Fourth Symphony, while the remainder of the program was given over to the Fifth Symphony of Tchaikovsky.

It is sometimes necessary to repeat a twice-told tale, and no review of this festival would be complete without citing of the Boston Symphony, the transparency of its tone, the purity of its strings and woodwinds, and its brass section. At its best during the Beethoven work, the orchestra performed this afternoon with precision and beauty of timbre.

Dr. Koussevitzky's reading of this Fourth Symphony has always been a notable one. Today he surpassed himself in combining a grand architectural sweep with the utmost nicety of detail. The mysteriousness of the work, with the haunting measures which ultimately lead to the coruscating first theme; the climax of the first movement's development section, poised upon the ever-growing thrill in the timpani, which Berlioz found such occasion to praise; the long lyric lines of the wonderful slow movement — all of these fundamental aspects of the symphony were treated with as much sensitivity and delicacy of feeling as the miniature trio of the scherzo, which was charmingly projected. This lyricism was in choice contrast to the gusty passion of the Coriolanus overture, with which the concert began.

Cycle Completed

Orchestra and conductor were somewhat less successful with the Fifth Symphony of Tchaikovsky. There were raucous moments for the brasses, and Dr. Koussevitzky dragged some of the tempo inexplicably during the opening allegro. But, aside from these reservations, this was a heroic performance, worthy of completing the Tchaikovsky cycle which has largely occupied the second series of the festival.

The conductor's most notable accomplishment, however, rested in Saturday night's playing of the "Pathetique" Symphony. So inspired was this performance that one departed with a thorough conviction of the work's greatness, of its right to be included among the masterpieces of symphonic literature. Its form is predicated not so much in musical as in philosophic terms, and this Dr. Koussevitzky brought overwhelmingly to his audience. The measures of the symphony were projected on such a fine-grained dynamic level that they seemed to rise from out a cosmic void, flowing unchecked into the remainder of the movement. And at the close of the entire symphony—after the pulsating stroke of the tam-tam has marked the end of all things, and the brasses softly intoned the final chorale of resignation—the conductor led his orchestra back to the very dynamic level with which the work had opened, and the musical fabric seemed to disappear into the void from which it had sprung.

"Pastorale" Symphony Played

The "Pastorale" Symphony of Beethoven was also given on Saturday night, projected with that unabashed lyricism of which Dr. Koussevitzky is master.

The "Am Bach" section, in particular, profited by the orchestra's lucid tone, as well as by the open-air setting at Tanglewood. And the remaining movements of this work, which takes a great performance to make it stir an audience, were set forth with a constant combination of musical and dramatic skill.

This is not to say that Saturday night's concert was technically perfect. The orchestra had rehearsed the same program that morning and played it far more accurately. In the evening there were numerous slips in the horn and trumpet sections. But these are casualties that might happen anywhere; and it is to be hoped that next season the orchestra will not run through the identical program (before a large, invited morning audience) which it is to play that night. Either tension or staleness or both may result at the ensuing concert.

There were almost 9,000 music lovers here on Saturday night, overflowing the shed and spilling onto the lawn, where many of them lay on blankets. The acoustics of the shed, although a bit overbrilliant, are admirably adapted to carrying the most delicate orchestral effects to the farthest reaches of Tanglewood. And this afternoon, during the Tchaikovsky symphony, many of the linteners, who are now departing for the city, delayed outside to hear the music and steal a last glance at that most miraculous of views—Stockbridge Bowl, surrounded by the slopes of the Berkshires.

This Clipping From
LOS ANGELES, CALIF.
NEWS
AUG 12 1940

Success story

The Berkshire festival this month at Stockbridge, Mass., marks an important anniversary for Dorothy Maynor, the young Negro soprano, whom L. E. Behymer will present in her first Los Angeles concert during the coming season.

Just one year ago Miss Maynor, an unknown young soprano from Norfolk, Va., went to the festival to listen to music conducted by Serge Koussevitzky, leader of the Boston Symphony orchestra, and ended up by making music herself for the great conductor.

Her surprise audtion for him after one of the orchestra rehearsals has become part of this year's musical history—her singing for an audience of one, in the great empty shell which seats 6000, Koussevitzky's immediate recognition of her fine voice and his invitation to her to sing for members of his orchestra.

The next day this young singer, who had planned to be a music teacher, sang for a critical audience of musicians an impromptu program which ranged from opera arias to Negro spirituals. Success followed.

THIS CLIPPING FROM READING, PA.
EAGLE
AUG 11 1940

GIRL ABOUT TOWN—Georgie Raft, the dapper screen bad man who used to do the Charleston in Broadway night clubs a dozen years back, is making a personal appearance at the Strand Theatre. Dancing the Charleston is part of his act. He used to do it for a kind word; now he does it for plenty dollars. Norma Shearer is reported heading our way. Is the Raft-Shearer thing still on?

If you insist on the nicest things, go to the Boston Symphony Music Festival up at Stockbridge, Mass. No hint of commonness or vulgarity must creep in. Sandwiches and pop are sold near the shed where the great band plays. "But no hamburgers or hot dogs!" Gertrude Robinson-Smith, president of the affair told me. "Their odor is very unpleasant!"

* * *

Funny weather in a funny summer did funny things to shopping here. After June 1 we had six weeks of comfort, and few bought seasonal hot weather dresses, hats, other things. Bingo, comes July 15, the mercury shoots above 90 and stays there! Suddenly the storekeepers get a break, the shops are filled with men and women buying the thinnest and lightest of everything. Men, too. My spouse was going to fight it out all summer with a light felt hat, but on August 1 he gave in, tottered to a shop and bought a two-ounce straw Kelly.

* * *

Can't beat old George M. Cohan, whose "Over There" was the sensation of the song world in 1917-18. Now Cohan, who was 60 last July 4, has written another—this time a warning to dictators. It is called "This Is Our Side of the Ocean." Are they listening?

What about Harvard's Dr. Zimmerman, who warns the nation that unless most of us have families of four tots we shall sink to second-rate-power level in time? Who's he looking at?

* * *

Four little Luxembourg princesses had their pitchers took in identical dotted white frocks, which may give the sister-clothes market a great big boost—or may not. But they did look mighty nice, I thought. Do you like identical sisters, or a spot of variety?

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN
AUG 12 1940

8500 Cheer Koussevitzky At Tanglewood Festival

Recalled Six Times by Second Largest Audience in Music Shed History—Program Announced for Relief Concert Friday Night

Tanglewood, Aug. 11—An audience of 8500 went into raptures this afternoon over the performance by the Boston Symphony orchestra of Tchaikovsky's fifth symphony. At the conclusion of the fourth movement, which marked the end of the program, Dr Serge Koussevitzky, conductor, received an extrordinary ovation. He was recalled six times by a Berkshire festival assembly which has been exceeded in size only by that of last evening, when, according to the box office, the attendance was 8600.

General admission sales last night, according to the office, totaled 2400, compared with 2200 for this afternoon. All told, the second series attendance was about 25,000, far exceeding all expectations. The weather has been an important factor in the splendid success of the seventh annual festival, now two-thirds ended. It was perfect again today, with hundreds stretched out on the lawn or in camp chairs. Every seat had been sold days in advance.

During the intermission today Albert Spalding, speaking from the platform, urged all to help swell the attendance at the great allied benefit program Friday evening.

300 Will Attend Tea

Dr Koussevitzky tonight issued invitations to a high tea which he will give at his summer home Wednesday from 5 to 7 in compliment to the faculty and students of the summer school and trustees of the Boston orchestra, who are in Lenox for the festival. More than 300 are expected. He has named the place Seranak. The late Miss Kate S. Buckingham of Chicago, former owner, called the estate Bald Head.

Mrs Franklin D. Roosevelt's surprise arrival at Tanglewood just before the concert started last night was the important Berkshire society weekend event. She drove her car from Hyde Park, N. Y. Mrs Roosevelt bought her own box, saying that she preferred to come as a private citizen. She declined Miss Gertrude Robinson-Smith's invitation to occupy official box No 1 as one of her guests.

Mrs Joseph P. Kennedy, wife of the embassador to Great Britain, has accepted a special invitation to attend the gala benefit program at Tanglewood Friday evening. She will be the guest of Mrs Gaspar G. Bacon of Jamaica Plain in her box. Mr Bacon is chairman of the New England committee of the allied relief. Owen Johnson of Stockbridge is to be auctioneer.

Dates Set for 1941

Dates have already been set for the 1941 festival at Tanglewood. It will consist of nine concerts on Thursday evenings, July 31, August 7 and 14; Saturday afternoons, August 2, 9 and 16; and Sunday afternoons, August 3, 10 and 17. A new procedure is the time of the Saturday concerts, which will be switched from evening to afternoon. Each weekend will constitute a separate series. Memberships will be accepted up to November 1, or until 1500 memberships have been accepted for each series.

The Berkshire music center, which completes its first session Sunday, will hold its second session at Tanglewood next July and August.

Allied Relief Program

Archibald MacLeish, librarian of the Library of Congress, will be the master of ceremonies for the gala benefit concert to be given at Tanglewood at 6 Friday evening for the allied relief fund, and both Gov Herbert H. Lehman and Dorothy Thompson will speak.

The program is scheduled to begin with exhibition performances by the Berkshire Music center. These include orchestral and choral music performed by the Institute and Academy chorus, chamber music, opera scenes and folk dances.

The official exercises in the music shed will follow, beginning the performance of Randall Thompson's "Alleluia," composed for the Berkshire Music center, by the Academy chorus under G. Wallace Woodworth's direction. Gov Lehman, Miss Thompson and Mr MacLeish will speak, and the Boston Symphony orchestra will play national anthems. An auction will be held during the ensuing intermission, and refreshment service will be available on the lawn.

The next part of the entertainment will consist of the following concert program:—

March, Pomp and Circumstance.....Elgar
Boston Symphony and Institute Orchestras,
Dr Koussevitzky conducting
Jupiter, from "The Planets"..........Holst
Boston Symphony and Institute Orchestras,
Stanley Chapple conducting
Rondo Capriccioso, for violin and orchestra,
Saint-Saenz
Albert Spalding
Composition for cello with orchestra
Gregor Piatigorsky
Incarnatus, Crucifixus, Res urrexit, from Mass in M minor .... Bach
Hallelujah Chorus from "Messiah"...Handel
Academy Chorus and Boston Symphony,
Dr Koussevitzky conducting

Arthur Fiedler will then conduct the Boston "Pops" orchestra in waltzes by Johann Strauss, and the event will close with drawing for prizes and the display of fireworks. The proceeds will be devoted to aid for Great Britain.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

AUG 12 1940

Attendance Records Fall Over Festival Week End

More Than 17,000 at Last Two Concerts of Series B—Tchaikowsky Programs Bring Tremendous Ovations

By JAY C. ROSENFELD

Before record-breaking audiences of more than 17,000 the Berkshire Symphonic Festival completed two-thirds of its expanded schedule over the week end when the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky played the second and final concerts of the special Tchaikowsky centenary celebration.

The third and last week of concerts will be played this coming week end, starting Thursday evening.

This past week has been one demonstration after another by an audience aroused to almost hysterical excitement by the Tchaikowsky performances. The enthusiasm has run without abatement during the whole Festival, and in some cases has been without discrimination, but the ovations which followed the fifth symphony yesterday afternoon and the "Pathetique," the sixth, on Saturday night, were spectacles in themselves. The record crowds refused to leave the Shed, but rather pressed forward down the aisles to be nearer the famous conductor and the equally famous orchestra. As Dr. Koussevitzky returned from the wings, the orchestra stood to acknowledge the waves of applause, shouting and handkerchief waving.

Performance Reaches Peak

The Tchaikowsky fifth was a stupendous performance. The orchestra drove home climax after climax and the last movement, particularly, mounted to the heights of musical elation. Not to detract from the honor due the artists of the orchestra and the conductor, this composition is one which almost defies mistreatment. In the hands of any reasonably able organization, it is a thrilling work. Tchaikowsky lavished melodies on it and endowed it with the richest orchestration ever devised. The horn solo in the second movement, taken at a tempo to allow the tone to sound forth in all its splendor, was a thing of beauty; the lovely lilt of the third movement and the magnificence of the first and last movements were

---

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE
AUG 11 1940

Soloists This Week With Two Notable Orchestras

Efrem Zimbalist, who will play Wednesday on the last night of the Stadium season

J. Abresch

De Bellis

Singers in the Berkshire Festival: Left, Elisabeth Schumann, soprano, next Thursday evening; right, Dorothy Maynor, soprano, Saturday evening. Upper right, Alec Templeton, pianist, who will play at the Lewisohn Stadium tomorrow

---

This Clipping From
NEW HAVEN, CONN.
REGISTER

BERKSHIRE EVENTS

* * *

SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY and the Boston Symphony Orchestra will close the second series of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival in the Music Shed at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., this afternoon at 3:30 with a program including Beethoven's "Coriolanus" overture and fourth symphony and Tchaikovsky's fifth symphony.

Bach's Mass in B minor, the first large-scale choral work to occupy an entire Berkshire Festival program, will be performed next Thursday evening, Aug. 15, at 7 o'clock. The second part, including the Credo, Sanctus and Benedictus, will begin at 9:30, after an intermission of about one hour and a quarter. The vocal soloists will be Elisabeth Schumann, soprano; Viola Silva, mezzo-soprano; William Hain, tenor, and Alexander [redacted] Metropolitan Opera bass.

The instrumental soloists and assisting artists in this performance, which is the first Series C, will be Richard Burgin, concertmaster of the Boston Symphony, violin; Louis Sepeyer and Jean Devergie, oboi d'amore; William Valkenier, horn; Georges Laurent, flute; E. Power Biggs, organ, and Putnam Aldrich, harpsichord. The chorus is composed of members of the Berkshire Music Center who have been studying the B minor Mass for several weeks.

Dorothy Maynor, Negro soprano, [redacted] for the eighth festival program on Saturday night, Aug. 17, at 8:30, singing Mozart's concert aria, "Bella mia Fiamma, addio," and Beethoven's "Adelaide." The program will open with Prokofieff's Classical Symphony and Hindemith's symphony, "Mathis der Maler," and close with a suite from Gabriel Fauré's "Pélleas et Mélisande" music and Respighi's arrangement of Bach's Passacaglia and Fugue in C minor. Miss Maynor's vocal talent first became publicly noted a year ago, when she sang at Tanglewood during an entertainment given by Dr. Koussevitzky for the members of the orchestra.

Next Sunday's closing festival concert, like the first on Aug. 1, will have a program of three symphonies: Haydn's in G major (B. & H. No. 88); Sibelius's seventh and the first symphony of Brahms.

Benefit Next Friday

Archibald MacLeish, librarian of the Library of Congress, will be the master of ceremonies for the gala benefit concert to be given at Tanglewood next Friday evening, Aug. 16, for the Allied Relief Fund, and both Govern[redacted] Lehman and Dorothy Thompson, special writer for the Herald Tribune, will speak. Owing to its extent and variety, the program is scheduled to begin at 6 o'clock, opening with exhibition performances by the Berkshire Music Center. These include orchestral and choral music performed by the Institute and Academy Chorus, chamber music, opera scenes and folk dances.

The official exercises in the Music Shed will follow, beginning the performance of Randall Thompson's "Alleluia," composed for the Berkshire Music Center, by the Academy Chorus under G. Wallace Woodworth's direction. Governor Lehman, Miss Thompson and Mr. MacLeish will speak, and the Boston Symphony Orchestra will play national anthems. An auction will be held during the ensuing intermission, and refreshment service will be available on the lawn. The next part of the entertainment will consist of the following concert program:

March, Pomp and Circumstance....Elgar
Boston Symphony and Institute Orchestras,
Dr. Koussevitzky conducting
Jupiter from "The Planets"........Holst
Boston Symphony and Institute Orchestras,
Stanley Chapple conducting
Rondo Capriccioso, for violin and orchestra,
Saint-Saens
Albert Spalding
Composition for cello with orchestra
Gregor Piatigorsky
Incarnatus, Crucifixus, Res urrexit, from
Mass in B minor..................Bach
Hallelujah Chorus from "Messiah". Handel
Academy Chorus and Boston Symphony,
Dr. Koussevitzky conducting

Arthur Fiedler will then conduct the [redacted] "Pops" Orchestra in waltzes by Johann Strauss, and the event will close with drawing for prizes and the display of fireworks. The proceeds will be devoted to aid for Great Britain.

Tickets and boxes may be reserved through the Berkshire Symphonic Festival's office in Stockbridge, Mass., or through the New York office of the Allied Relief Fund at 57 William Street.

Plans for 1941

Dates have already been set for the 1941 festival at Tanglewood, which will consist of nine concerts on Thursday evenings, July 31, Aug. 7 and 14; Saturday afternoons, Aug. 2, 9 and 16, and Sunday afternoons, Aug. 3, 10 and 17. As before, each Thursday, Saturday and Sunday concert will constitute a separate series. Memberships will be accepted up to Nov. 1, or until 1,500 memberships have been accepted for each series. The privileges include tickets at lower than the regular prices, preference in seat locations and a Saturday morning rehearsal ticket for the series for which membership has been taken out. The Berkshire Music Center, which completes its first session next Sunday, will hold its second session at Tanglewood next July and August.

The festival's officials will welcome contributions which will permit the carrying out of contemplated additions and improvements in the Music Shed. What is regarded as particularly necessary are roll shutters to protect audiences from sudden storms or cold winds and to close the Shed against winter snows and bad weather. Applications for membership and contributions for the Shed may be sent to the festival office in Stockbridge.

Aug 9

THE BOSTON HERALD,

TANGLEWOOD STUDENTS ENJOY LUNCH in informal picnic style on the lawns of the festival grounds in Lenox. Margaret Burk, daughter of John N. Burk, editor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra program notes, at the extreme right, lunches with four friends. They will be heard on the gala benefit program to aid Britain, Friday, Aug. 16, at Tanglewood. Tickets on sale at 111 Newbury street, Boston.

This Clipping From
WASHINGTON, D. C.
POST
AUG 11 1940

Berkshire Music Festival Draws Many of Service Set

Mrs. Paul Stanley Bond Returns To Home Here After Week at Concerts; Mrs. Graves Spending Summer There

The annual music festival in the Berkshire has drawn a large contingent of service set people from Washington. Many who have just returned from there found it to be almost old home week, and many pleasant reunions took place among old friends.

Mrs. Paul Stanley Bond, wife of Col. Bond, has just returned to her home here after a week spent at the festival at Lenox, Mass., and in visits about the nearby countryside. For the duration of the festival she was the houseguest of Mrs. John Bross Lloyd at the latter's home in Lee, Mass., and from there they went over to the festival, held each year by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood, the home of Nathaniel Hawthorne. For a number of years the festival was held for two weeks of three performances a week, but this year popular demand proved so great that a third week was included in the schedule.

Tangl

400 1

Germ

Volume 49—No. 70

Radio Program on Page 1

Full Report Page 4, Second

Tomorrow—Showers

Tonight—Partly Cloud

123

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

AUG 12 1940

Attendance Records Fall Over Festival Week End

More Than 17,000 at Last Two Concerts of Series B—Tchaikowsky Programs Bring Tremendous Ovations

By JAY C. ROSENFELD

Before record-breaking audiences of more than 17,000 the Berkshire Symphonic Festival completed two-thirds of its expanded schedule over the week end when the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky played the second and final concerts of the special Tchaikowsky centenary celebration.

The third and last week of concerts will be played this coming week end, starting Thursday evening.

This past week has been one demonstration after another by an audience aroused to almost hysterical excitement by the Tchaikowsky performances. The enthusiasm has run without abatement during the whole Festival, and in some cases has been without discrimination, but the ovations which followed the fifth symphony yesterday afternoon and the "Pathetique," the sixth, on Saturday night, were spectacles in themselves. The record crowds refused to leave the Shed, but rather pressed forward down the aisles to be nearer the famous conductor and the equally famous orchestra. As Dr. Koussevitzky returned from the wings, the orchestra stood to acknowledge the waves of applause, shouting and handkerchief waving.

Performance Reaches Peak

The Tchaikowsky fifth was a stupendous performance. The orchestra drove home climax after climax and the last movement, particularly, mounted to the heights of musical elation. Not to detract from the honor due the artists of the orchestra and the conductor, this composition is one which almost defies mistreatment. In the hands of any reasonably able organization, it is a thrilling work. Tchaikowsky lavished melodies on it and endowed it with the richest orchestration ever devised. The horn solo in the second movement, taken at a tempo to allow the tone to sound forth in all its splendor, was a thing of beauty; the lovely lilt of the third movement and the magnificence of the first and last movements were

---

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE

BERKSHIRE EVENTS

* * *

RGE KOUSSEVITZKY and the Boston Symphony Orchestra will lose the second series of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival in the Music Shed at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., this afternoon at 3:30 a program including Beethoven's "Coriolanus" overture and fourth hony and Tchaikovsky's fifth symphony.

h's Mass in B minor, the first scale choral work to occupy an Berkshire Festival program, e performed next Thursday eve- Aug. 15, at 7 o'clock. The second including the Credo, Sanctus Benedictus, will begin at 9:30, an intermission of about one and a quarter The vocal sts will be Elisabeth Schumann, ano; Viola Silva, mezzo-soprano; iam Hain, tenor, and Alexander [redacted] Metropolitan Opera ne instrumental soloists and as- ng artists in this performance, ch is the first Series C, will be hard Burgin, concertmaster of Boston Symphony, violin; Louis eyer and Jean Devergie, oboi nore; William Valkenier, horn; rges Laurent, flute; E. Power gs, organ, and Putnam Aldrich, psichord. The chorus is composed members of the Berkshire Music nter who have been studying the minor Mass for several weeks.

Dorothy Maynor, Negro soprano, [redacted]t for the eighth stival program on Saturday night, ig. 17, at 8:30, singing Mozart's ncert aria, "Bella mia Fiamma, dio," and Beethoven's "Adelaide." ne program will open with Proko- ff's Classical Symphony and Hin- mith's symphony, "Mathis der aler," and close with a suite from abriel Fauré's "Pélleas et Méli- ande" music and Respighi's ar- angement of Bach's Passacaglia nd Fugue in C minor. Miss May- or's vocal talent first became ublicly noted a year ago, when she ang at Tanglewood during an en- ertainment given by Dr. Kousse- itzky for the members of the rchestra.

Next Sunday's closing festival concert, like the first on Aug. 1, will have a program of three symphonies: Haydn's in G major (B. & H. No. 88); Sibelius's seventh and the first symphony of Brahms.

Benefit Next Friday

Archibald MacLeish, librarian of the Library of Congress, will be the master of ceremonies for the gala benefit concert to be given at Tanglewood next Friday evening, Aug. 16, for the Allied Relief Fund, and both Govern[redacted] Lehman and Dorothy Thompson, special writer for the Herald Tribune, will speak. Owing to its extent and variety, the program is scheduled to begin at 6 o'clock, opening with exhibition performances by the Berkshire Music Center. These include orchestral and choral music performed by the Institute and Academy Chorus, chamber music, opera scenes and folk dances.

The official exercises in the Music Shed will follow, beginning the performance of Randall Thompson's "Alleluia," composed for the Berkshire Music Center, by the Academy Chorus under G. Wallace Woodworth's direction. Governor Lehman, Miss Thompson and Mr. MacLeish will speak, and the Boston Symphony Orchestra will play national anthems. An auction will be held during the ensuing intermission, and refreshment service will be available on the lawn. The next part of the entertainment will consist of the following concert program:

March, Pomp and Circumstance....Elgar
Boston Symphony and Institute Orchestras,
Dr. Koussevitzky conducting
Jupiter from "The Planets".......Holst
Boston Symphony and Institute Orchestras,
Stanley Chapple conducting
Rondo Capriccioso, for violin and orchestra,
Saint-Saens
Albert Spalding
Composition for cello with orchestra
Gregor Piatigorsky
Incarnatus, Crucifixus, Res urrexit, from
Mass in B minor................Bach
Hallelujah Chorus from "Messiah".Handel
Academy Chorus and Boston Symphony,
Dr. Koussevitzky conducting

Arthur Fiedler will then conduct the [redacted] "Pops" Orchestra in waltzes by Johann Strauss, and the event will close with drawing for prizes and the display of fireworks. The proceeds will be devoted to aid for Great Britain.

Tickets and boxes may be reserved through the Berkshire Symphonic Festival's office in Stockbridge, Mass., or through the New York office of the Allied Relief Fund at 57 William Street.

Plans for 1941

Dates have already been set for the 1941 festival at Tanglewood, which will consist of nine concerts on Thursday evenings, July 31, Aug. 7 and 14; Saturday afternoons, Aug. 2, 9 and 16, and Sunday afternoons, Aug. 3, 10 and 17. As before, each Thursday, Saturday and Sunday concert will constitute a separate series. Memberships will be accepted up to Nov. 1, or until 1,500 memberships have been accepted for each series. The privileges include tickets at lower than the regular prices, preference in seat locations and a Saturday morning rehearsal ticket for the series for which membership has been taken out. The Berkshire Music Center, which completes its first session next Sunday, will hold its second session at Tanglewood next July and August.

The festival's officials will welcome contributions which will permit the carrying out of contemplated additions and improvements in the Music Shed. What is regarded as particularly necessary are roll shutters to protect audiences from sudden storms or cold winds and to close the Shed against winter snows and bad weather. Applications for membership and contributions for the Shed may be sent to the festival office in Stockbridge.

This Clipping From
NEW HAVEN, CONN.
REGISTER

AUG 11 1940

BERKSHIRE GROUP GIVES RECITAL ON SOUTH MOUNTAIN

Attention of the Berkshire's large musical public shifted Friday afternoon to the little old church on South Mountain where the Berkshire Quartet played its weekly recital. Fuller than most churches, aout 700 persons occupied all available space and sat on the lawn surrounding where a clear view of the distant ranges could be had. On the platform Willem Willeke directed the players in three works by Reger, Schoenberg, and Michael Haydn, all of them splendidly performed.

It is the custom at these weekly assemblies to include one work by a contemporary, and no more significant item could be chosen than the "Verklaerte Nacht" sextet by the Austrian ex-patriot, new resident of this country. The tender whisperings of a beloved pair in the silence of a glorious night inspired this musical poem, so suggestive in program to the second act of Tristan and so like Wagner in idiom. For granting Schoenberg all of his unique position in 20th century music he is strikingly like Wagner in sound, and that is what counts with the listeners not the underlying theory directing its composition. The Max Reger sextet is a vigorous and full-blooded work leaving no particular impression of inner significance, but it is a rare work on program nowadays and a pleasure to hear.

After so much intricacy, the charmingly simple quintet by Josef Haydn's brother seemed amusing by contrast; it was like riding a bicycle after operating a locomotive, simple but requiring its own kind of skill. The audience found these naive humours a welcome release after the rhapsodical contours of the previous works. Added to the South Mountain Quartet, so well-known to New Haven music lovers, were Sprague Coolidge and Harvey Shapiro as viola-player and violoncellist. Next Friday afternoon Harold Bauer joins the ensemble. Last night attention returned to Tanglewood and the Boston Symphony Orchestra for another program of Beethoven and Tchaikovsky.

H. E. J.

Aug 9

THE BOSTON HERALD,

TANGLEWOOD STUDENTS ENJOY LUNCH in informal picnic style on the lawns of the festival grounds in Lenox. Margaret Burk, daughter of John N. Burk, editor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra program notes, at the extreme right, lunches with four friends. They will be heard on the gala benefit program to aid Britain, Friday, Aug. 16, at Tanglewood. Tickets on sale at 111 Newbury street, Boston.

This Clipping From
WASHINGTON, D. C.
POST

AUG 11 1940

Berkshire Music Festival Draws Many of Service Set

Mrs. Paul Stanley Bond Returns To Home Here After Week at Concerts; Mrs. Graves Spending Summer There

The annual music festival in the Berkshire has drawn a large contingent of service set people from Washington. Many who have just returned from there found it to be almost old home week, and many pleasant reunions took place among old friends.

Mrs. Paul Stanley Bond, wife of Col. Bond, has just returned to her home here after a week spent at the festival at Lenox, Mass., and in visits about the nearby countryside. For the duration of the festival she was the house-guest of Mrs. John Bross Lloyd at the latter's home in Lee, Mass., and from there they went over to the festival, held each year by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood, the home of Nathaniel Hawthorne. For a number of years the festival was held for two weeks of three performances a week, but this year popular demand proved so great that a third week was included in the schedule.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE

BERKSHIRE EVENTS

* * *

RGE KOUSSEVITZKY and the Boston Symphony Orchestra will lose the second series of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival in the Music Shed at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., this afternoon at 3:30 a program including Beethoven's "Coriolanus" overture and fourth hony and Tchaikovsky's fifth symphony.

h's Mass in B minor, the first scale choral work to occupy an Berkshire Festival program, e performed next Thursday eve- Aug. 15, at 7 o'clock. The second including the Credo, Sanctus Benedictus, will begin at 9:30, an intermission of about one and a quarter The vocal sts will be Elisabeth Schumann, ano; Viola Silva, mezzo-soprano; iam Hain, tenor, and Alexander [redacted] Metropolitan Opera e instrumental soloists and as- ng artists in this performance, ch is the first Series C, will be hard Burgin, concertmaster of Boston Symphony, violin; Louis eyer and Jean Devergie, oboi more; William Valkenier, horn; orges Laurent, flute; E. Power gs, organ, and Putnam Aldrich, psichord. The chorus is composed members of the Berkshire Music nter who have been studying the minor Mass for several weeks.

Dorothy Maynor, Negro soprano, ~~will be the soloist~~ for the eighth stival program on Saturday night, ıg. 17, at 8:30, singing Mozart's ncert aria, "Bella mia Fiamma, dio," and Beethoven's "Adelaide." e program will open with Prokoeff's Classical Symphony and Hinemith's symphony, "Mathis der aler," and close with a suite from abriel Fauré's "Pélleas et Mélinde" music and Respighi's arangement of Bach's Passacaglia nd Fugue in C minor. Miss Mayor's vocal talent first became ublicly noted a year ago, when she ang at Tanglewood during an enertainment given by Dr. Kousseitzky for the members of the rchestra.

Next Sunday's closing festival concert, like the first on Aug. 1, will ave a program of three symphonies: Haydn's in G major (B. & H. No. 88); Sibelius's seventh and the first symphony of Brahms.

Benefit Next Friday

Archibald MacLeish, librarian of the Library of Congress, will be the master of ceremonies for the gala benefit concert to be given at Tanglewood next Friday evening, Aug. 16, for the Allied Relief Fund, and both Govern~~or Herbert H.~~ Lehman and Dorothy Thompson, special writer for the Herald Tribune, will speak. Owing to its extent and variety, the program is scheduled to begin at 6 o'clock, opening with exhibition performances by the Berkshire Music Center. These include orchestral and choral music performed by the Institute and Academy Chorus, chamber music, opera scenes and folk dances.

The official exercises in the Music Shed will follow, beginning the performance of Randall Thompson's "Alleluia," composed for the Berkshire Music Center, by the Academy Chorus under G. Wallace Woodworth's direction. Governor Lehman, Miss Thompson and Mr. MacLeish will speak, and the Boston Symphony Orchestra will play national anthems. An auction will be held during the ensuing intermission, and refreshment service will be available on the lawn. The next part of the entertainment will consist of the following concert program:

March, Pomp and Circumstance....Elgar
Boston Symphony and Institute Orchestras,
Dr. Koussevitzky conducting
Jupiter from "The Planets"........Holst
Boston Symphony and Institute Orchestras,
Stanley Chapple conducting
Rondo Capriccioso, for violin and orchestra,
Saint-Saens
Albert Spalding
Composition for cello with orchestra
Gregor Piatigorsky
Incarnatus, Crucifixus, Res urrexit, from
Mass in B minor.................Bach
Hallelujah Chorus from "Messiah". Handel
Academy Chorus and Boston Symphony,
Dr. Koussevitzky conducting

Arthur Fiedler will then conduct the ~~Boston~~ "Pops" Orchestra in waltzes by Johann Strauss, and the event will close with drawing for prizes and the display of fireworks. The proceeds will be devoted to aid for Great Britain.

Tickets and boxes may be reserved through the Berkshire Symphonic Festival's office in Stockbridge, Mass., or through the New York office of the Allied Relief Fund at 57 William Street.

Plans for 1941

Dates have already been set for the 1941 festival at Tanglewood, which will consist of nine concerts on Thursday evenings, July 31, Aug. 7 and 14; Saturday afternoons, Aug. 2, 9 and 16, and Sunday afternoons, Aug. 3, 10 and 17. As before, each Thursday, Saturday and Sunday concert will constitute a separate series. Memberships will be accepted up to Nov. 1, or until 1,500 memberships have been accepted for each series. The privileges include tickets at lower than the regular prices, preference in seat locations and a Saturday morning rehearsal ticket for the series for which membership has been taken out. The Berkshire Music Center, which completes its first session next Sunday, will hold its second session at Tanglewood next July and August.

The festival's officials will welcome contributions which will permit the carrying out of contemplated additions and improvements in the Music Shed. What is regarded as particularly necessary are roll shutters to protect audiences from sudden storms or cold winds and to close the Shed against winter snows and bad weather. Applications for membership and contributions for the Shed may be sent to the festival office in Stockbridge.

This Clipping From
NEW HAVEN, CONN.
REGISTER

AUG 11 1940

BERKSHIRE GROUP GIVES RECITAL ON SOUTH MOUNTAIN

Attention of the Berkshire's large musical public shifted Friday afternoon to the little old church on South Mountain where the Berkshire Quartet played its weekly recital. Fuller than most churches, aout 700 persons occupied all available space and sat on the lawn surrounding where a clear view of the distant ranges could be had. On the platform Willem Willeke directed the players in three works by Reger, Schoenberg, and Michael Haydn, all of them splendidly performed.

It is the custom at these weekly assemblies to include one work by a contemporary, and no more significant item could be chosen than the "Verklaerte Nacht" sextet by the Austrian ex-patriot, new resident of this country. The tender whisperings of a beloved pair in the silence of a glorious night inspired this musical poem, so suggestive in program to the second act of Tristan and so like Wagner in idiom. For granting Schoenberg all of his unique position in 20th century music he is strikingly like Wagner in sound, and that is what counts with the listeners not the underlying theory directing its composition. The Max Reger sextet is a vigorous and full-blooded work leaving no particular impression of inner significance, but it is a rare work on program nowadays and a pleasure to hear.

After so much intricacy, the charmingly simple quintet by Josef Haydn's brother seemed amusing by contrast; it was like riding a bicycle after operating a locomotive, simple but requiring its own kind of skill. The audience found these naive humours a welcome release after the rhapsodical contours of the previous works. Added to the South Mountain Quartet, so well-known to New Haven music lovers, were Sprague Coolidge and Harvey Shapiro as viola-player and violoncellist. Next Friday afternoon Harold Bauer joins the ensemble. Last night attention returned to Tanglewood and the Boston ~~Symphony~~ Orchestra for another program of Beethoven and Tchaikovsky.

H. E. J.

Aug 9

THE BOSTON HERALD,

TANGLEWOOD STUDENTS ENJOY LUNCH in informal picnic style on the lawns of the festival grounds in Lenox. Margaret Burk, daughter of John N. Burk, editor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra program notes, at the extreme right, lunches with four friends. They will be heard on the gala benefit program to aid Britain, Friday, Aug. 16, at Tanglewood. Tickets on sale at 111 Newbury street, Boston.

This Clipping From
WASHINGTON, D. C.
POST

AUG 11 1940

Berkshire Music Festival Draws Many of Service Set

Mrs. Paul Stanley Bond Returns To Home Here After Week at Concerts; Mrs. Graves Spending Summer There

The annual music festival in the Berkshire has drawn a large contingent of service set people from Washington. Many who have just returned from there found it to be almost old home week, and many pleasant reunions took place among old friends.

Mrs. Paul Stanley Bond, wife of Col. Bond, has just returned to her home here after a week spent at the festival at Lenox, Mass., and in visits about the nearby countryside. For the duration of the festival she was the houseguest of Mrs. John Bross Lloyd at the latter's home in Lee, Mass., and from there they went over to the festival, held each year by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood, the home of Nathaniel Hawthorne. For a number of years the festival was held for two weeks of three performances a week, but this year popular demand proved so great that a third week was included in the schedule.

INFORMATION OBSCURED

—Partly Cloud
rrow—Showers
Page 1, Second on Page

tain its eagerness to rict discipline, and ches after indivi- were paradox- the cold shoulder ky did not turn. ike served to in- mood he established end of the final movement of "Pathetique," so that the long, out, doleful B minor chord diminished beyond audition, quiet had prevailed for min- it seemed, before anyone break the spell, we hope.

e title "Pathetique" as applied chaikowsky's last symphony is exactly accurate, for while are moments of deep pathos, are important sections where contrary spirit is more in evi- Dr. Koussevitzky restrained men a bit too much in the ning introduction, so that the tained notes of the basses were audible below the soft-blown soons, with the result that we sed the resolution of the first chords. But the orchestra er showed itself to better ad- tage than in the graceful sec- movement. The charm of the sual five-beat rhythm, which es Huneker called a perverted tz "but one that could not be nced to, unless you own three ," was executed with inimitable y, and later, in its place, deli- t, proceeded with a rhythmic . The march, after a muddied t, which, had it ended the sym- ony, would probably have used an ovation which would have ended at all. As it was, er the more sombre final note the last movement, Dr. Kous- vitzky was recalled and the men re bid to rise more times than stayed to record.

We are told that metropolitan papers set up in type the two pos- ble issues of a prizefight, or of an ection, so as not to delay the de- livery of the papers on the street, once the decision is reached. In ce the music department of this paper, and of every paper represented at this internationally-famous festival, stands a font of type stating that the weather prevented, delayed, impeded, or competed with the music at a certain concert. But so far that stick stands unused. For six consecutive concerts on two week ends, the air, the sun on afternoons and the moon evenings, have been all that could be desired. With record-breaking attendance figures, and performances which will remain vivid in the minds and hearts of all the thousands who have been at Tanglewood these past two weeks, the third and final week to come promises still further experiences to be remembered.

Festival

Continued From First Page

performances which will endure for a long time.

The first half of the program had been devoted to Beethoven; the "Cariolanus" overture and the fourth symphony. The symphony is one of the most placid of Beethoven's nine, and with the "Pastorale," which had been played on the preceding evening, constitute the two most ingratiating of all his symphonies. On these programs the overture has the restless strength and spirit of conflict which one usually ascribes to Beethoven. The control which Dr. Koussevitzky has over the orchestra, or possibly the instant musical obedience the men show their leader, results in effects which are the zenith of musical expression, especially when chosen with such good taste. The sudden pianos in Beethoven come off so perfectly that one wonders why other comparatively monotone performances were tolerable.

Just before intermission, Dr. Koussevitzky returned in response to the acclaim which followed the Beethoven, bringing Albert Spalding who had an announcement to make. He wished to speak of the Allied Relief benefit which is planned for the evening of Friday the 16th at Tanglewood. He stated that it would be "an event of special significance, in which New England would show Old England, in her hour of need,' material testimony of their affection.

Two Great Works

On the preceding evening, on the occasion of the fifth concert, the program was devoted to two great works, the sixth symphonies of Beethoven and Tschaikowsky. They are alike in one important respect, in that each is an integral drama, and in each composer's case is the only one, with the exception of Beethoven's "Eroica," which is not absolute music. To be fair, though, Beethoven must be quoted regarding his intentions, for he stated that he wished this (the [illegible] that year's series. But neither work becomes just another repetition in the hands of the Boston Orchestra and Dr. Koussevitzky. It is a fresh creation each time, and reepetition does not dull the ear, nor wear the implement. Multiple hearings permit focusing magnifying [illegible] day evening's concert.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PITTSFIELD, MASS.

---

Defense Workers' Homes Ordered

WASHINGTON, (AP). — Th United States Housing Authorit announced today that Presiden Roosevelt had approved loans an allocations of $13,773,000 to buil 3601 homes for families of defens workers in eight vital defense cen ters.

The loans totaling $6,548,00 were to four local housing author ties to construct, 1876 homes fo families attached to three nava stations and one army post. In ad dition, allocations totaling $7,225 000 were made to the War an Navy Departments for constru tion of 1725 homes at three othe naval stations and an army pos

The loans to local housing au thorities included: Newport, R $1,105,000 for 262 dwellings the Newport naval station

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM

AUG 12 1940

Society to Attend Tanglewood Benefit

Mr., Mrs. Rockefeller Motoring Up from Their Summer Home—Newport Tennis Week Promises To Be Most Brilliant in Decade.

By PATRICIA COFFIN.

Mr. and Mrs. John D. Rockefeller 3rd will motor to Tanglewood this Friday from their summer home in the Pocantico Hills by the Hudson to attend the Allied Relief Fund concert of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival Society's response to the benefit has been such that all 80 boxes under the vast music "shed" are sold out and additional ones are being constructed. The Winthrop Aldriches, Mr. and Mrs. Pierpont Morgan Hamilton and the George Hopper Pitches are among the many going to Tanglewood this week end, evidence that the festival has assumed world leadership musically and socially, with Salzburg hushed for the duration of the European discord.

Last week end was the second of three week-end programs which constitute the seventh annual Symphonic Festival under the leadership of Serge Koussevitzky of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt attended and although most of the audience in the roped-off armchairs called "boxes" were in evening clothes she wore a hyacinth suit and carried her white hat. She was escorted to her seat by Gordon Crane who sported a red, white and blue Willkie button on the lapel of his white linen jacket. It did not put the President's wife out of humor.

Salzburg of America.

Miss Mabel Choate, an imposing figure intellectually and socially here and in the Berkshire sector, was accompanied by her house guest, the Swamee B. H. Bon of India, author and philosopher. Fully a head shorter than his hostess, the Oriental intellectual added color to the scene with his robes and towering turban of palest honey-colored silk. Miss Choate, associated with Stockbridge for more than two score years, is particularly proud of the Chinese garden, with pagodas and streams on her estate, Naumkeag, on Prospect Hill.

* * *

Intermission Permits Visiting.

One lengthy intermission (25 minutes) between programs permits society to visit in each other's boxes. Mrs. Arthur F. Schermerhorn requested "no smoking" in hers, although "the shed" is open and cigarets were being lighted on all sides. In the audience were Owen Johnson, the playwright, and Mrs. Johnson. The former Mrs. Hugh Mackay, mother of Mrs. Goodhue Livingston, Jr., is Mr. Johnson's fifth wife. John Shepard, former Mayor of Palm Beach and popular Lenox figure, wore a sky-blue dinner jacket, a beige beret and neatly waxed white mustache. Norman P. Davis, head of the Red Cross, and Paul Felix Warburg, new gift chairman for the U. S. Committee for the Care of European Children, were present. Mrs. Ramsey Hoguet entertained in her box for six house guests, and blond Princess Diane Eristavi, in a gown of white eyelet embroidery, chatted with friends about her recent visit at Wisteria Lodge, the Newport villa of Mr. and Mrs. F. Bartholomay Jelke.

* * *

THIS CLIPPING FROM GRAND RAPIDS, MICH.
HERALD

AUG 11 1940

News Comes from Two Artists Who Will Appear Here

News of two well-known artists who will appear here this fall and winter on the East Church Artist course has come to The Herald this week. Dorothy Maynor, young Negro soprano who was the outstanding success of the past season in New York city, is returning to the Berkshire Music Festival in Massachusetts the coming week to sing under the baton of Serge Koussevitsky, conductor of the Boston symphony who a year ago this month started her on the road to success when he consented to hear her sing at the close of an orchestra rehearsal for the festival.

Her voice made such an impression upon the great conductor that he invited her to sing next day for members of his orchestra. The next day the humble young singer, who had planned to be a teacher of public school music, gave a critical audience of musicians an impromptu program which ranged from operatic arias to spirituals. Critics who were present declared Miss Maynor's voice to be the find of a decade. Her concert debut followed in November in New York. It was such a triumph as recalled the first appearances in New York of singers like Tibbett, Pons and Flagstad.

Since then Miss Maynor has had quite an extensive concert tour including appearances with the New York Philharmonic, Boston, Philadelphia and Cicago symphony orchestras. She proved the favorite soloist at the May festival in Ann Arbor last spring.

She will open the East Church Artist course here, appearing in the civic auditorium Oct. 28.

Yehudi Menuhin, famous young American violinist who will appear on the course Jan. 15, and his wife and small daughter have been staying on the Nicholas sheep ranch in Australia. Menuhin and his sister Hepzibah, a talented pianist in her own right, are married to a sister and brother of the Nicholas family. The past week Yehudi and Hepzibah made musical history in Melbourne by appearing in their first joint sonata recital since the marriage of the two musicians. Date of the recital, Aug. 7, was chosen to honor their parents' twenty-sixth wedding anniversary. Australian music lovers bought all seats and standing room for the joint recital the day it was announced.

THIS CLIPPING FROM AURORA, ILL.
BEACON-NEWS

AUG 11 1940

Music Notes

By ROBERT BARCLAY

While people in many parts of the world, because of the ambitions and animosities of a few of their leaders, are staying under cover much of the time and not daring to show a glimmer of light after dark, we Americans, a lucky people, are having the time of our lives listening to free or inexpensive music from some of the finest performers the world offers. All over our country summer festivals and concerts are in full swing and the only thing that makes us run for cover is the possibility of a sudden thunder storm.

Chicago finished a six weeks orchestra festival at Ravinia just a few days ago, followed by a week of string quartet concerts. Reports are that the season was highly successful, with good crowds and warmly received soloists and guest conductors. Meanwhile, on the edge of Chicago's loop, huge crowds are gathering nightly for the free concerts at Grant park that are now in their second month of the 101 performance season. Concerts are heard nightly at 8 and on Sundays and holidays, at 3 and 8. The final performance is scheduled for September 2.

Some of the nation's most outstanding soloists have been or will be heard in Grant park. Kirsten Flagstad was one of the most recent ones who summoned overflow audiences to the park, but the record for the season is said to be held by Paul Robeson, who on July 28 drew an estimated 160,000 listeners.

The Washington, D. C., natives and visitors have been enjoying two concerts each week at the Watergate, where the National Symphony orchestra plays from a huge barge to the listeners seated on the terraced river bank. The concerts are heard on Wednesday and Sunday evenings during July and August. Hans Kindler, regular Washington conductor, directed the first three concerts of this year's series and the San Carlo Opera company took over the fourth evening. Frank Black and Rudolph Ganz have been heard as guest conductors and the new All-American Youth orchestra, under Leopold Stokowski, was scheduled for one performance but got rained out.

Other summer music affairs under way in the nation include the Lewisohn Stadium concerts in New York, the Robinhood Dell concerts in Philadelphia, a series of concerts by the San Francisco Symphony orchestra at the Internaional Exposition, and the Berkshire Festival, near Pittsfield, Mass., where the Boston Symphony orchestra and Serge Koussevitzky are holding forth. If you have read June Provines' "Front Views and Profiles" in the Chicago Tribune for the past few days, you've had an interesting story of one of the most important gatherings of musicians anyone might hope for.

* * *

Miss Helen Campbell, formerly music supervisor in the west side schools, was an Aurora visitor the other day, stopping in with her sister, Miss Florence Campbell. The former Aurora teacher gave up her teaching seven years ago when she left here and now makes her home in Iowa.

* * *

According to my music dictionary, a "lu-lu" is the Chinese official collection of treatises on the art of music.

The same source says that a "long spiel" is an ancient Icelandic stringed instrument, long and narrow, and played upon with a bow.

It seems, too, that the Greeks had words for things. For instance, "proslambanomenos" was the one they thought up for the lowest note in their musical system, equivalent to our "A" in the first space of the bass staff.

ROCKLAND, ME
COURIER
8/13/40

Knowing that Mr. and Mrs. Vladimir Sokoloff who are Summering at Rockport have been attending the Berkshire Festival, it is of interest to note that the Berkshire Festival opened its seventh season on Aug. 1st "with less fuss than usually attends the daily opening of a movie theatre," as one reviewer commented. The first-night audience numbered close to 6,000 persons. Although the festival association would never make such a claim, it is probable that the nine concerts which comprise this season constitute the highest level which Summer symphonic music has yet reached in this country. With the famous Boston Symphony Orchestra serving this festival, it is not strange that there are those who insist that the activity is the logical successor to the old Salzburg festival in war-torn Europe's Austrian Tyrol.

It is said that the first-night audience had attendants from every corner of America and from most European countries as well. As always at the festival, the orchestra was precisely the one that plays through the Winter in Boston's Symphony Hall. Koussevitzky has steadfastly refused to lower performance standards for his Summer audience, and as a result the audience has grown beyond the wildest hopes of the original sponsors.

Another unique venture is on at the Berkshire Festival, too, in that more than 300 students are studying and living with music through the months of July and August.

I wonder if another Dorothy Maynor will come forth this year. You will recall it was at the Berkshire Festival last year that Koussevitzky presented this find.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE

AUG 13 1940

Mrs. William Gibbs Is Berkshire Guest Of Koussevitskys

Dinner Party Given for Her; Tea Planned Tomorrow for Orchestra

Special to the Herald Tribune

BERKSHIRE HILLS, Mass., Aug. 12.—Dr. and Mrs. Serge Koussevitzky have invited trustees and musicians of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the faculty and students of Tanglewood Summer Institute of Music to be their guests at tea Wednesday at Seranak on Bald Head, Lenox, overlooking Lake Mahkeenac. At the tea tables will be Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, Mrs. Gorham Brooks, Mrs. George E. Judd, Miss Leslie Marsh and Miss Richard Burgin.

Mrs. William Francis Gibbs was guest of honor at a dinner given tonight by Dr. and Mrs. Koussevitzky. Others present included Mr. and Mrs. Ernest B. Dane jr., Mr. and Mrs. Artur Rodzinski and Mr. Carleton Smith.

RANSCRIPT, THURSDAY, AUGUST 8, 1940 B

Second Berkshire Festival Series

LENOX, Aug. 8—Almost every seat in the Tanglewood Shed has been sold for the second series of Berkshire Symphonic Festival concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Serge Koussevitzky. However, no one will be turned away, according to festival trustees, who say they have an unlimited number of general admission tickets.

The program for the series will be commemoration of the 100th anniversary of the birth of Tchaikovsky and will include works of this composer and Beethoven. Albert Spalding will be the soloist tomorrow night when the orchestra plays Beethoven's Concerto for Violin in D.

Among the distinguished guests tomorrow night will be Governor Leverett Saltonstall as well as Empress Zita and her family, now living in Royalston.

The second concert of the series will be heard Saturday evening and the third Sunday afternoon.

Benefit Details

Further details have been announced of the Berkshire Festival program to be held on Friday evening, Aug. 16, for the benefit of the Allied Relief Fund. The official exercises will be opened with a performance of Randall Thompson's "Allelujah," which was composed especially for the Berkshire Music Center. It will be sung by the Academy Chorus under the direction of G. Wallace Woodworth.

The concert itself will be opened by both the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Institute Orchestra playing Elgar's March, "Pomp and Circumstance" with Serge Koussevitzky conducting. Stanley Chapple will then direct the two orchestras in "Jupiter" from Holst's "The Planets." Albert Spalding will play Saint-Saens' Rondo Capriccioso and Gregor Piatigorsky will perform a cello solo with orchestra. Dr. Koussevitzky will then direct the Academy Chorus and the Boston Symphony in three choruses from Bach's B Minor Mass: the "Incarnatus," "Crucifixus," and "Resurrexit,' and the "Hallelujah" chorus from Handel's "Messiah."

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM
AUG 12 1940

Society to Attend Tanglewood Benefit

Mr., Mrs. Rockefeller Motoring Up from Their Summer Home— Newport Tennis Week Promises To Be Most Brilliant in Decade.

By PATRICIA COFFIN.

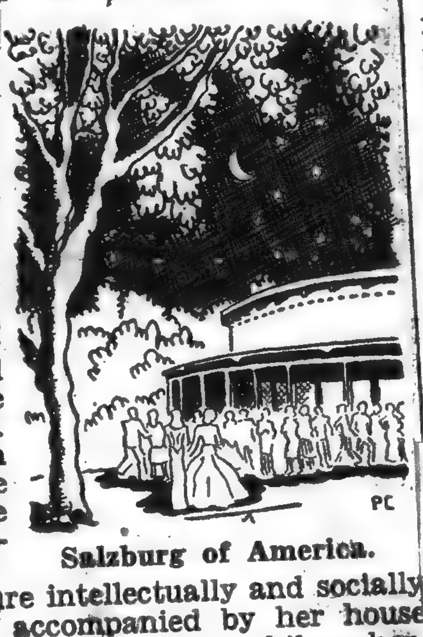
Mr. and Mrs. John D. Rockefeller 3rd will motor to Tanglewood this Friday from their summer home in the Pocantico Hills by the Hudson to attend the Allied Relief Fund concert of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival Society's response to the benefit has been such that all 80 boxes under the vast music "shed" are sold out and additional ones are being constructed. The Winthrop Aldriches, Mr. and Mrs. Pierpont Morgan Hamilton and the George Hopper Pitches are among the many going to Tanglewood this week end, evidence that the festival has assumed world leadership musically and socially, with Salzburg hushed for the duration of the European discord.

Last week end was the second of three week-end programs which constitute the seventh annual Symphonic Festival under the leadership of Serge Koussevitzky of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt attended and although most of the audience in the roped-off armchairs called "boxes" were in evening clothes she wore a hyacinth suit and carried her white hat. She was escorted to her seat by Gordon Crane who sported a red, white and blue Willkie button on the lapel of his white linen jacket. It did not put the President's wife out of humor.



Salzburg of America.

Miss Mabel Choate, an imposing figure intellectually and socially here and in the Berkshire sector, was accompanied by her house guest, the Swamee B. H. Bon of India, author and philosopher. Fully a head shorter than his hostess, the Oriental intellectual added color to the scene with his robes and towering turban of palest honey-colored silk. Miss Choate, associated with Stockbridge for more than two score years, is particularly proud of the Chinese garden, with pagodas and streams on her estate, Naumkeag, on Prospect Hill.

* * *

Intermission Permits Visiting.

One lengthy intermission (25 minutes) between programs permits society to visit in each other's boxes. Mrs. Arthur F. Schermerhorn requested "no smoking" in hers, although "the shed" is open and cigarets were being lighted on all sides. In the audience were Owen Johnson, the playwright, and Mrs. Johnson. The former Mrs. Hugh Mackay, mother of Mrs. Goodhue Livingston, Jr., is Mr. Johnson's fifth wife. John Shepard, former Mayor of Palm Beach and popular Lenox figure, wore a sky-blue dinner jacket, a beige beret and neatly waxed white mustache. Norman P. Davis, head of the Red Cross, and Paul Felix Warburg, new gift chairman for the U. S. Committee for the Care of European Children, were present. Mrs. Ramsey Hoguet entertained in her box for six house guests, and blond Princess Diane Eristavi, in a gown of white eyelet embroidery, chatted with friends about her recent visit at Wisteria Lodge, the Newport villa of Mr. and Mrs. F. Bartholomay Jelke.

* * *

THIS CLIPPING FROM GRAND RAPIDS, MICH.
HERALD
AUG 11 1940

News Comes from Two Artists Who Will Appear Here

News of two well-known artists who will appear here this fall and winter on the East Church Artist course has come to The Herald this week. Dorothy Maynor, young Negro soprano who was the outstanding success of the past season in New York city, is returning to the Berkshire Music Festival in Massachusetts the coming week to sing under the baton of Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston symphony who a year ago this month started her on the road to success when he consented to hear her sing at the close of an orchestra rehearsal for the festival.

Her voice made such an impression upon the great conductor that he invited her to sing next day for members of his orchestra. The next day the humble young singer, who had planned to be a teacher of public school music, gave a critical audience of musicians an impromptu program which ranged from operatic arias to spirituals. Critics who were present declared Miss Maynor's voice to be the find of a decade. Her concert debut followed in November in New York. It was such a triumph as recalled the first appearances in New York of singers like Tibbett, Pons and Flagstad.

Since then Miss Maynor has had quite an extensive concert tour including appearances with the New York Philharmonic, Boston, Philadelphia and Cicago symphony orchestras. She proved the favorite soloist at the May festival in Ann Arbor last spring.

She will open the East Church Artist course here, appearing in the civic auditorium Oct. 28.

Yehudi Menuhin, famous young American violinist who will appear on the course Jan. 15, and his wife and small daughter have been staying on the Nicholas sheep ranch in Australia. Menuhin and his sister Hepzibah, a talented pianist in her own right, are married to a sister and brother of the Nicholas family. The past week Yehudi and Hepzibah made musical history in Melbourne by appearing in their first joint sonata recital since the marriage of the two musicians. Date of the recital, Aug. 7, was chosen to honor their parents' twenty-sixth wedding anniversary. Australian music lovers bought all seats and standing room for the joint recital the day it was announced.

THIS CLIPPING FROM AURORA, ILL.
BEACON-NEWS
AUG 11 1940

Music Notes

By ROBERT BARCLAY

While people in many parts of the world, because of the ambitions and animosities of a few of their leaders, are staying under cover much of the time and not daring to show a glimmer of light after dark, we Americans, a lucky people, are having the time of our lives listening to free or inexpensive music from some of the finest performers the world offers. All over our country summer festivals and concerts are in full swing and the only thing that makes us run for cover is the possibility of a sudden thunder storm.

Chicago finished a six weeks orchestra festival at Ravinia just a few days ago, followed by a week of string quartet concerts. Reports are that the season was highly successful, with good crowds and warmly received soloists and guest conductors. Meanwhile, on the edge of Chicago's loop, huge crowds are gathering nightly for the free concerts at Grant park that are now in their second month of the 101 performance season. Concerts are heard nightly at 8 and on Sundays and holidays, at 3 and 8. The final performance is scheduled for September 2.

Some of the nation's most outstanding soloists have been or will be heard in Grant park. Kirsten Flagstad was one of the most recent ones who summoned overflow audiences to the park, but the record for the season is said to be held by Paul Robeson, who on July 28 drew an estimated 160,000 listeners.

The Washington, D. C., natives and visitors have been enjoying two concerts each week at the Watergate, where the National Symphony orchestra plays from a huge barge to the listeners seated on the terraced river bank. The concerts are heard on Wednesday and Sunday evenings during July and August. Hans Kindler, regular Washington conductor, directed the first three concerts of this year's series and the San Carlo Opera company took over the fourth evening. Frank Black and Rudolph Ganz have been heard as guest conductors and the new All-American Youth orchestra, under Leopold Stokowski, was scheduled for one performance but got rained out.

Other summer music affairs under way in the nation include the Lewisohn Stadium concerts in New York, the Robinhood Dell concerts in Philadelphia, a series of concerts by the San Francisco Symphony orchestra at the Internaional Exposition, and the Berkshire Festival, near Pittsfield, Mass., where the Boston Symphony orchestra and Serge Koussevitzky are holding forth. If you have read June Provines' "Front Views and Profiles" in the Chicago Tribune for the past few days, you've had an interesting story of one of the most important gatherings of musicians anyone might hope for.

* * *

Miss Helen Campbell, formerly music supervisor in the west side schools, was an Aurora visitor the other day, stopping in with her sister, Miss Florence Campbell. The former Aurora teacher gave up her teaching seven years ago when she left here and now makes her home in Iowa.

* * *

According to my music dictionary, a "lu-lu" is the Chinese official collection of treatises on the art of music.

The same source says that a "long spiel" is an ancient Icelandic stringed instrument, long and narrow, and played upon with a bow.

It seems, too, that the Greeks had words for things. For instance, "proslambanomenos" was the one they thought up for the lowest note in their musical system, equivalent to our "A" in the first space of the bass staff.

ROCKLAND, ME
COURIER
8/13/40

Knowing that Mr. and Mrs. Vladimir Sokoloff who are Summering at Rockport have been attending the Berkshire Festival, it is of interest to note that the Berkshire Festival opened its seventh season on Aug. 1st "with less fuss than usually attends the daily opening of a movie theatre," as one reviewer commented. The first-night audience numbered close to 6,000 persons. Although the festival association would never make such a claim, it is probable that the nine concerts which comprise this season constitute the highest level which Summer symphonic music has yet reached in this country. With the famous Boston Symphony Orchestra serving this festival, it is not strange that there are those who insist that the activity is the logical successor to the old Salzburg festival in war-torn Europe's Austrian Tyrol.

It is said that the first-night audience had attendants from every corner of America and from most European countries as well. As always at the festival, the orchestra was precisely the one that plays through the Winter in Boston's Symphony Hall. Koussevitzky has steadfastly refused to lower performance standards for his Summer audience, and as a result the audience has grown beyond the wildest hopes of the original sponsors.

Another unique venture is on at the Berkshire Festival, too, in that more than 300 students are studying and living with music through the months of July and August.

I wonder if another Dorothy Maynor will come forth this year. You will recall it was at the Berkshire Festival last year that Koussevitzky presented this find.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE
AUG 13 1940

Mrs. William Gibbs Is Berkshire Guest Of Koussevitskys

Dinner Party Given for Her; Tea Planned Tomorrow for Orchestra

Special to the Herald Tribune

BERKSHIRE HILLS, Mass., Aug. 12.—Dr. and Mrs. Serge Koussevitzky have invited trustees and musicians of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the faculty and students of Tanglewood Summer Institute of Music to be their guests at tea Wednesday at Seranak on Bald Head, Lenox, overlooking Lake Mahkeenac. At the tea tables will be Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, Mrs. Gorham Brooks, Mrs. George E. Judd, Miss Leslie Marsh and Miss Richard Burgin.

Mrs. William Francis Gibbs was guest of honor at a dinner given tonight by Dr. and Mrs. Koussevitzky. Others present included Mr. and Mrs. Ernest B. Dane jr., Mr. and Mrs. Artur Rodzinski and Mr. Carleton Smith.

TRANSCRIPT, THURSDAY, AUGUST 8, 1940 B

Second Berkshire Festival Series

LENOX, Aug. 8—Almost every seat in the Tanglewood Shed has been sold for the second series of Berkshire Symphonic Festival concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Serge Koussevitzky. However, no one will be turned away, according to festival trustees, who say they have an unlimited number of general admission tickets.

The program for the series will be commemoration of the 100th anniversary of the birth of Tchaikovsky and will include works of this composer and Beethoven. Albert Spalding will be the soloist tomorrow night when the orchestra plays Beethoven's Concerto for Violin in D.

Among the distinguished guests tomorrow night will be Governor Leverett Saltonstall as well as Empress Zita and her family, now living in Royalston.

The second concert of the series will be heard Saturday evening and the third Sunday afternoon.

Benefit Details

Further details have been announced of the Berkshire Festival program to be held on Friday evening, Aug. 16, for the benefit of the Allied Relief Fund. The official exercises will be opened with a performance of Randall Thompson's "Allelujah," which was composed especially for the Berkshire Music Center. It will be sung by the Academy Chorus under the direction of G. Wallace Woodworth.

The concert itself will be opened by both the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Institute Orchestra playing Elgar's March, "Pomp and Circumstance" with Serge Koussevitzky conducting. Stanley Chapple will then direct the two orchestras in "Jupiter" from Holst's "The Planets." Albert Spalding will play Saint-Saens' Rondo Capriccioso and Gregor Piatigorsky will perform a cello solo with orchestra. Dr. Koussevitzky will then direct the Academy Chorus and the Boston Symphony in three choruses from Bach's B Minor Mass: the "Incarnatus," "Crucifixus," and "Resurrexit,' and the "Hallelujah" chorus from Handel's "Messiah."

125

This Clipping From
DAYTON, OHIO
JOURNAL
AUG 14 1940

Virginia Balinger Writes Of Berkshire Festival

From Virginia Balinger, of Grosse Pointe, Mich., who with her mother, Mrs. Ralph A. Herbruck of Ridgeway road, is attending the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, comes the following interesting account of a day at Tanglewood:

"You hear Serge Koussevitsky called 'Kousey' around Tanglewood, this delightful place near Lenox, Mass., which is the permanent home of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival. The very air of informality pervades the place. You feel it the minute you drive onto the shady New England country road leading to Tanglewood and enter the grounds through a colonade of the tallest pine trees. Emerging into the clearing—one is on the spacious lawn—and just a few hundred feet across the way, stands the newly-completed 'Shed.' The famous Shed—which is now the summer home of the Boston Symphony orchestra, was given its unique fan-shaped design by Eliel Saarinen. It is open on three sides of the fan and the stage for the orchestra at the point.

"The beauty of Thursday morning, August 8, was casting its spell over the Shed and the grounds. One began to feel the meaning of Dr. Koussevitsky's words, 'a dream come true.' A symphony of nature setting the stage for a symphony of music—a setting of magnificent trees everywhere—formal gardens—the sloping lawn down to the little mountain lake, Mahkeenac—with the Berkshires everywhere in the distance covered by the ever-present blue haze.

Orchestra Rehearsal

"Men were sauntering one by one toward the Shed, taking their places on the stage and tuning their instruments. It was rehearsal time for the Boston Symphony. Presently Dr. Serge Koussevitsky appeared in company with Albert Spalding and they, too, headed for the Shed. A bench under a large oak tree made a perfect spot from which to hear the rehearsal of the Beethoven 'Violin Concerto' and the Tschaikowsky 'Fourth Symphony'—the program for the evening's concert. Dr. Koussevitsky was giving it the last minute touches..

"After lunch, Dr. Herbert Graf of the Metropolitan Opera company, was gathereing together, over in one section of the formal gardens, his group of 20 singers whom he has accepted for operatic training this summer. Dr. Graf very graciously left his work to talk about the group and his work with them. He is stressing particularly the importance of interpretative work in opera and the group was to spend the afternoon in pantomime of Handel's "Acis and Galatea" which they will present soon for one of the opera programs at the Little Theater on the grounds.

"Back to the Shed—and strains of the Tschaikowsky 'Romeo and Juliet' which were irresistible. This time it was the institute orchestra composed of the advanced musicians of the school. A youthful but extremely proficient orchestra of .60 was being conducted by a young man who was one of the five chosen by Dr. Koussevitsky for very special conducting work under his personal direction. This chap, Lucas Foss, only 17, is a French refugee. Dr. Koussevitsky sat in the front row along with members of the Boston Symphony. He interrupted occasionally to give a word of advice.

Mrs. Roosevelt Attends

"The stir of a day at Tanglewood had hardly subsided when the trek of cars from every state in the union begins carrying in the audience for the evening's program by the Boston Symphony. Some are famous—a great many are not. But all are there for one reason—a love of music. Walking through the dress circle one is always certain to find celebrities from every walk of life. Just a few evenings ago Lucretia Bori and Mrs. Cole Porter were seen there—as was Toscanini who came for a visit with Dr. Graf and others. Thursday evening Detroit was well represented in the boxes by Mrs. John Newberry, Mrs. Henry Joy, Sr., and Mrs. Benjamin Warren. On Saturday evening we had the pleasure of greeting Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt who was a guest in the Lester Robert's box. Norman Davis was nearby with Owen Johnson. Ted Shawn was there with a party from his summer School of the Dance which is nearby at Lee, Mass. And Miriam Winslow who has delighted Detroit audiences with her dance programs was most gracious.

"In the Berkshire Festival country one wishes to be a multiplicity of persons—there is so much to do and see and hear. It is most delightful at the Berkshire Playhouse which stands just outside of Stockbridge. William Miles, the director, is very gracious. He tells you all about their extensive drama workshop in connection with the playhouse which of course presents a professional company with a guest star each week. Ethel Barrymore opened the week of August 12 in "School for Scandal."

"Back to the Symphonic Festival again for a moment. Dr. Koussevitsky, we find, does not like to have Tanglewood called the 'American Salzburg'—so beware! He feels that it is a venture so individual that it should not be compared to another. It is a realization of greatness in music and achievement through simplicity—and that, he feels, gives Tanglewood its individualism."

This Clipping From
SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
GAZETTE
AUG 14 1940

Final Series At Tanglewood Set This Week

STOCKBRIDGE, Aug. 13—Tanglewood, home of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, is ready to handle its biggest crowd in history for the final week of activity. Already it is estimated that 45,000 persons have attended the six concerts and two rehearsals given by the Boston Symphony orchestra.

An outstanding feature this week will be the Bach B Minor Mass Thursday night. At this concert the Berkshire Music Center forces will join with the orchestra. The festival chorus of 200 voices which has been rehearsing diligently since the center opened July 8 under the direction of Prof. G. Wallace Woodworth of Harvard university will perform with the following soloists: Elizabeth Schumann, Viola Silva, William Hain and Alexander Kipnis. Regular festival patrons as well as Bach enthusiasts from a wide radius will be in attendance for this concert.

The Bach program will open at the earlier hour because of the necessity of dividing the program in two parts. Tickets for the performance, of course, include the complete program. There will be an intermission of an hour starting at 8:30 to permit the audience to enjoy supper on the grounds.

On Friday starting at 6 p.m. comes the gala benefit program being presented for allied relief by the orchestra with the co-operation of the festival. Tickets for this event may be obtained from local chairmen, from the festival office at Stockbridge, at Tanglewood or at allied relief offices in New York and Boston.

Dorothy Maynor, negro soprano, whose star has soared since her appearance last summer at Dr. Koussevitzky's Tanglewood picnic, will be heard by the festival audience Saturday evening at 8:30 o'clock.

The festival will close Sunday afternoon at 3:30 o'clock with a program of Haydn, Sibelius and Brahms.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE
AUG 14 1940

CHORAL CONDUCTING is one subject, singing another at the Berkshire Music Center sponsored by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood. Here a student conductor commands attention equal to that accorded the professional staff. Other subjects: Composition, opera dramatics, orchestra work.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE
AUG 14 1940

Chorus to Open Last Berkshire Concert Series

Koussevitzky to Give Bach B-Minor Mass Tomorrow at Lenox, Mass., Festival

The third and last series of the seventh annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival will begin tomorrow night in the Music Shed at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., with a performance of Bach's Mass in B minor. The Festival Chorus of 200 singers, which has been rehearsing at the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood since July 8, will sing with the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky's direction. The vocal soloists will be Elisabeth Schumann, soprano; Viola Silva, contralto; William Hain, tenor, and Alexander Kipnis, barytone.

Because of the length of the mass, the performance will begin at 7 o'clock. If Dr. Koussevitzky's tempi for the Kyrie and the Gloria are substantially the same as those of a previous performance under his direction, the intermission may be expected at about 8:10. The second half of the concert, including the Credo, Sanctus and Agnus Dei, will begin at 9:30, and the program will close at 10:45 or 10:50.

The second regular concert of this series will be held Saturday night, Aug. 17, at 8:30, when Dorothy Maynor, Negro soprano, will sing works of Mozart and Beethoven.

An unusual benefit program to be given at Tanglewood for the work of the Allied Relief Fund in aid of Great Britain will begin on Friday evening at 6 o'clock with demonstrations of the various activities of the Berkshire Music Center. Formal exercises in the Music Shed will follow with speeches by Governor Herbert H. Lehman and Dorothy Thompson, columnist for the New York Herald Tribune, who will be introduced by Archibald MacLeish, Librarian of Congress. The Berkshire Academy Chorus will sing Randall Thompson's "Alleluia" and the Boston Symphony Orchestra will play national anthems.

During the intermission, an auction will be held of items contributed by prominent residents of the neighborhood. The Boston Symphony, Institute Orchestra and Academy Chorus will then present a concert program under the direction of Dr. Koussevitzky and Stanley Chapple, with Albert Spalding, violinist, and Gregor Piatigorsky, cellist as soloists. The Boston "Pops" Orchestra, under Arthur Fiedler, will play Johann Strauss waltzes as a closing feature.

The Berkshire Symphonic Festival office at Stockbridge, Mass., advises persons who plan to spend one or more nights in that region during the series to communicate with its accommodations bureau if they have not yet made arrangements for lodgings. Tickets for the concerts may be obtained at the festival office. Its telephone number is Stockbridge 400.

THIS CLIPP
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS
AUG 13 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM
HOLYOKE, MASS.
Transcript Telegram
AUG 13 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM GLOUCESTER, MASS.
TIMES
AUG 13 1940

MUSIC IN THE BERKSHIRES

The Germans are great dwellers on kultur, but we wonder how greatly culture is flourishing in Germany today. Over and over the detractions and degeneration of war, the Nazis have banished or killed a sizeable portion of their greatest scientists, writers and musicians because of the childish and cruelly inane emphasis on racial strain. Yet what is their loss in many cases is our gain. Our American position in science, letters and music is strengthened today because of the men in such lines who have sought refuge among us. Germany, no matter how great her European conquests, will have to wait a long time before she is as strong again in those lines as she recently was, and our preeminence in them now is more or less obvious. In the last analysis the Nazis have sold the gold for dross.

There is no question that before their insane aggressions began to occupy their attention the Germans were about the most music loving of peoples. Now they have little opportunity for it. Our own development in musical appreciation of recent years has been steady, if gradual. The radio has had a real hand in it. Program makers and sponsors have been surprised to find how great has been the response to genuinely good music. The success of such events as the Esplanade concerts perhaps was made possible through listeners educated by the radio ones. So far from distracting support from good music, the radio has increased interest in that field many fold.

The Esplanade concerts, popular as they have proven to be, however, are not quite the serious undertaking that is the Berkshire Music Festival. In a few short years the prestige of that now annual festival quickly has grown until today it is not too much to say that it is the greatest event of its kind still going in this upheaved world. The Boston Symphony Orchestra is a great orchestra, and its leader, Serge Koussevitzky is a great leader. Both have risen to their best, and added to their reputations, in the summer Berkshire Festival.

Serious as is the world situation, this festival again is taking place at Lenox as we write. The greatest of annual music treats, you understand, has its locale right here in our own state, in a setting of natural beauty. Each concert is attended to capacity, real music appreciators going to long lengths and distances to hear it. If we are of those privileged to attend and hear we are fortunate indeed. An uncommon opportunity at least is offered us in that we live so near.

Such developments of the happier, sounder ways of civilization must be made to endure! As we are stirred to full appreciation of our fortunateness, let us also be steeled to a determination to preserve the true cultures, to resist and defeat any encroachments of self-seeking and cruel dictators!

N.Y.C. HERALD-TRIBUNE
AUGUST 14, 1940

Chorus to Open Last Berkshire Concert Series

Koussevitzky to Give Bach B-Minor Mass Tomorrow at Lenox, Mass., Festival

The third and last series of the seventh annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival will begin tomorrow night in the Music Shed at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., with a performance of Bach's Mass in B minor. The Festival Chorus of 200 singers, which has been rehearsing at the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood since July 8, will sing with the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky's direction. The vocal soloists will be Elisabeth Schumann, soprano; Viola Silva, contralto; William Hain, tenor, and Alexander Kipnis, barytone.

This Clipping From
BRIDGEPORT, CONN.
POST

AUG 14 1940

Emotions at Tanglewood

The orchestral concerts at Tanglewood in the Berkshires this season are setting a new record for attendance and enthusiasm. Already there is talk, of New England's having established in effect, a new Salzburg, to take the place of fading musical centers in the old world.

However we were not quite prepared for the enthusiasm exhibited by the headline writer and music critic of the Hartford Courant who "covered" Sunday's concert. The headline writer said:

"Koussevitsky Brings Down Music Shed: Nine Thousand Go Wild at Stockbridge as Bostonians Go to Town on Superb Tschaikovsky Fifth."

This business of 'going to town' on Tschaikovsky sounds more like Duke Ellington than Koussevitsky.

However the opening of the review by T. H. Parker carried out the sporting atmosphere of the headline. It sounded like the introduction to a prize fight—which was just what Mr. Parker had in mind.

"Dr. Serge Koussevitsky and the Boston orchestra had just completed Tschaikovsky's Fifth Symphony," he wrote, "and 9,000 persons were frantically trying to match their wild enthusiasm to the performance. The nearest thing to the demonstration being staged was the yell that goes up when the champ and favorite climbs through the ropes just before the big fight. Indications were that the noise would be insufficient and that the enthusiasts would probably end up by totally dismantling the music shed and taking home bits of wood and steel as momentoes of a superlative occasion."

All this excitement, sounding almost like a jitterbug convention was inspired, it should be noted, not by the latest composition of Irving Berlin but by that grand old war horse of the concert halls, Tschaikovsky's Fifth Symphony.

The non-musical ought at least to begin to inquire what it is that aroused the crowd at Stockbridge to such wild enthusiasm and what it is that they (the non-musical) are missing in life.

For the thrill that came to those people so realistically described by the Courant's critic, isn't a thrill that is reserved only for a favored few, it comes to all who take music into their life and give it some intelligent thought and attention.

It is quite evident from the Courant's account that to some 9,000 people at Stockbridge the Tschaikovsky Symphony was the climax of a thrilling experience. The concert and the emotions it evoked will form unforgettable milestones in memory.

What a different world it would be if more of the human race found its emotional outlets in listening to such music instead of finding emotional relief in sinking the other fellow's ships and wrecking the other fellow's cities.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES

AUG 13 1940

PARTY TO BE GIVEN BY KOUSSEVITZKYS

Entertain in Lenox Tomorrow for Faculty and Students of Tanglewood Institute

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 12—Dr. Serge Koussevitzky and Mrs. Koussevitzky will entertain at tea Wednesday for trustees and musicians of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, faculty and students of the Tanglewood Summer Institute Symphony Orchestra and faculty and students of the Tanglewood Summer Institute of Music. The tea will be given at their Summer home, Seranak, on Bald Head, Lenox.

Among others invited are Mr. and Mrs. Albert Spalding, Miss Ethel Barrymore and Mr. and Mrs. Gregor Piatigorsky. Presiding at the tea tables will be Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, Mrs. Gorham Brooks, Mrs. George E. Judd, Miss Leslie Marsh and Mrs. Richard Burgin.

Dr. and Mrs. Koussevitzky gave a dinner tonight at Seranak in compliment to Mrs. William Francis Gibbs of New York. The other guests included Carleton Smith, Mr. and Mrs. Ernest B. Dane Jr. and Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Rodzinski.

This Clipping From
BRIDGEPORT, CONN.
POST

AUG 14 1940

Berkshire Festival Will End on Sunday

The 1940 Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Tanglewood, Stockbridge, Mass., by the Boston Symphony orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky conducting, and a brilliant array of guest artists, will come to a close this week-end.

The Berkshire Festival chorus will be heard tomorrow evening in a Bach mass. Saturday Dorothy Maynor, the sensational Negro soprano, will be the soloist with the orchestra. The final concert will be presented Sunday afternoon. The program follows:

THURSDAY EVENING at 7 o'clock and 9:30 o'clock

BACH .... MASS in B MINOR
(in two parts)
Berkshire Festival Chorus

Elisabeth Schumann, soprano; William Hain, tenor; Viola Silva, mezzo-soprano; Alexander Kipnis, bass; Richard Burgin, violin; Louis Speyer and Jean Devergie, Oboi d'Amore; William Valkenier, horn; Georges Laurent, flute; E. Power Biggs, organ; Erwin Bodky, harpsichord.

SATURDAY EVENING, at 8:30 o'clock

Prokofieff .. "Classical" Symphony, Op. 25
I. Allegro
II. Larghetto
III. Gavotte
IV. Finale
Hindemith . Symphony, "Mathis der Maler" (Matthias the Painter")
I. Angelic Concert
II. Entombment
III. Temptation of Saint Anthony

INTERMISSION OF TWENTY-FIVE MINUTES

Mozart .... Concerto Aria
Beethoven .... "Adelaide"
Soloist: DOROTHY MAYNOR
Faure .... "Pelleas et Melisande," Suite from the Stage Music to Maeterlinck's Tragedy, Op. 80
I. Prelude: Quasi adagio
II. "Fileuse": Andantino quasi allegretto
III. Molto adagio
Respighi .... Symphonic Poem, "The Pines of Rome"
I. The Pines of the Villa Borghese
II. The Pines near a Catacomb
III. The Pines of the Janiculum
IV. The Pines of the Appian Way

SUNDAY AFTERNOON, at 3:30 o'clock

Haydn .. Symphony in G-major, No. 88
I. Adagio; Allegro
II. Largo
III. Minuet (Trio)
IV. Finale: Allegro con spirito
Sibelius .. Symphony No. 7 (in one movement) Op. 105

INTERMISSION OF TWENTY-FIVE MINUTES

Brahms .. Symphony No. 1 in C-minor, Op. 68
I. Un poco sostenuto; Allegro
II. Andante sostenuto
III. Un poco allegretto e grazioso
IV. Adagio; Allegro non troppo, ma con brio

THIS CLIPPING FROM
LOWELL, MASS.
COURIER-CITIZEN

AUG 14 1940

Tanglewood Ideal Setting for Festival of Music

Berkshire Symphonic Festival Attracts Nearly 8500 — Fiedler to Conduct War Benefit Concert Friday

BY SIDNEY R. FLEET.

If a superb scenic setting will contribute anything toward the creation of an American Salzburg, then Tanglewood, site of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, has what it takes, so far as natural beauty is concerned.

That was the impression after a glorious week-end at the festival in the company of Julius Woessner, conductor of our Philharmonic orchestra.

For Tanglewood, affording a magnificent panorama of the Berkshire Hills, with the verdant valleys and the glistening lake below, is indeed beautiful for situation.

This, it will be agreed, was fit setting for the performance of the Beethoven Pastoral Symphony which Dr. Koussevitzky had happily chosen for the first half of the program by the Boston Symphony Orchestra on Saturday evening. No classic could have been more appropriate, as seated comfortably in the vast shed we had glimpses of the hills and the lake bathed in the light of the young moon. When later Dr. Koussevitky turned to the more colorful and sophisticated Sixth Symphony of Tschaikowsky, as part of the recognition of the centenary of the birth of the composer, there was opportunity to judge of the amazingly fine acoustic properties of the shed. Nothing of the brilliance of the orchestral timbres was lost and instrumental whispers and murmurings came softly but clearly. Several of the members of the orchestra agreed with me that, if anything, the tonal blend is superior to that to which we are accustomed in Symphony Hall.

Saturday night we beheld Tanglewood depicted in pastel tints, in the impressionist style. On Sunday afternoon we saw it in bolder relief and all the glorious color of a summer day. The first strains of the Beethoven Coriolanus Overture were the signal for an choral obbligato by the feathered songsters in the beautiful trees that dot or border the estate. And when it came to the celebrated Andante Cantabile in the Fifth Symphony of Tschaikowsky, the hauntingly beautiful melody might have come from an elfin horn. The performance of this symphony, by the way, under Dr. Koussevitzky's impassioned guidance, aroused the vast audience to enthusiastic and prolonged applause.

8500 Attend Concert.

At the two concerts which were fortunate enough to hear the attendance broke all previous records. The shed seats 6000, but it was estimated that 8500 were admitted on Saturday night and there must have been even more on Sunday. For those who cannot get seats in the shed bring their camp chairs along and set them near its confines. Many others seat themselves on the grass nearby or stretch themselves upon it, some on their backs and others on their tummies. And it was evident that the strains of the music reached them.

It was reported that just before the concert on Saturday night, the First Lady of the Land, Mrs. Roosevelt, arrived and occupied a box for which she preferred to pay rather than to be a guest of Miss Robinson Smith, the president of the festival association, as she wanted to contribute toward the financing of the festival. She must have gone practically unnoticed to her box. Certainly there was no demonstration. And we did not learn of her presence until afterwards.

Julius Woessner ran across one of his first teachers during a promenade before the concert. There was a chance for a few words with E. Power Biggs, whose recitals on the old Music Hall organ in Serlo Hall, Methuen, a summer or so ago many Lowell musicians enjoyed. At Tanglewood tomorrow evening he will have his opportunity at the organ console during the performance of the famous B minor Mass of Bach, in which the chorus will be composed largely of singers assembled at the Music Centre. We had several glimpses of Albert Spalding, the violinist, whose playing was one of the artistic highlights of one of our late lamented Community Concerts. He has a summer home in Great Barrington in the Berkshires. And Sunday afternoon he made an appeal from the platform for interest in the special program for the benefit of the Allied Relief Fund for British Aid, which has been set for Friday.

Benefit Concert Friday.

This special program, by the way, will introduce all the musicians and talent of the Music Centre, now in its first year. Arthur Fiedler will conduct the Esplanade Orchestra in the new open air theatre. The institute orchestra of students will have a place in the program. A gala concert will be given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Festival Chorus, with Albert Spalding, Gregor Piatigorsky, 'cellist, and Alexander Kipnis, bass, as soloists. By report, special Pullman cars will bring a large party of notables from Boston for the occasion. The cars will be parked on a nearby railroad siding for the night and will serve as hotel quarters for the special guests. Many rare articles, including a porcelain tete-a-tete coffee set of Viennese manufacture that was once the property of Napoleon the First, will be auctioned off by Owen Johnson to the highest bidders, $50 being set as the minimum offer. The fund from the auction will be used to provide a "Berkshire" mobile surgical unit to be sent to England. A fireworks display will climax the evening.

There was a cordial invitation from Manager Judd of the Symphony Orchestra to linger at Tanglewood over Monday in order to see the Music Centre classes in session. But that pleasure had to be reserved for some other time. Some of the classes are held in the rooms of the Tappan house, which is administration headquarters of the centre. Others are conducted in the remodeled barn and in the garage. The theatre mentioned previously, designed for small ensemble activities, is the only new building on the grounds, with the exception of the Music Shed itself. And it consists merely of the stage. The seats are benches in the open, protected by an awning.

Take our word for it, whether you enjoy great music or not, a trip to Tanglewood will be well worth while. Certainly there is no more beautiful spot in which to learn to appreciate the harmonies of Nature or of the musical art.

Ivar Sjostrom's Program.

Ivar Sjostrom continues the summer series of recitals in Skinner Organ hall, Methuen, tomorrow evening at 8. His organ numbers will include the First Movement of the Handel Concerto No. 2; The Old Refrain, Kreisler; Romanza and Minuet, Mozart; excerpts from the Scheherezade Suite, Rimsky-Korsakoff; The Swan, Saint-Saens; Finale to First Symphony, Vierne.

Immediately before and after the intermission, Miss Nancy Mauceri, soprano, of Lawrence, will sing songs and arias by Handel, Grieg, Friml, Puccini, Strauss and Herbert.

A Welcome Visit.

Mrs. Mary Beckford Welton, teacher of voice, who maintains her home studio at 2 Wellington Square, has just had a delightful visit from her former teacher, the widely known Roger Deming, with whom she studied in New York. Mr. Deming, who now lives in Pasadena, Calif., was on his way to Peterboro, N. H. At short notice Mrs. Welton arranged for Robert Heap, local tenor and one of her pupils, to sing for him. Mr. Heap had enjoyed the benefit of coaching by Mr. Deming during a previous summer stay in New Hampshire. Introduced also to the visitor was William Hoyle, pianist and organist of the First Church of Christ, Scientist, here. Mr. Deming played a number of his recent compositions, both instrumental and vocal.

Sharing One's Own With Others

Schenectady N.Y. Union-Star
Aug. 14, 1940

WITH CULTURE so nearly in total eclipse in Europe, and with artists so much in disfavor in totalitarian states, music — among other forms of art—is taking refuge in the United States where in many centers thousands of people have opportunity to take advantage of the situation.

Among these music centers, the Berkshire Symphonic Festival near Stockbridge, Massachusetts, is hardly excelled. This festival is now in its seventh season, and is attracting larger and larger throngs for the concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Music critics tell us that, artistically, there is not much more to seek, all things considered, than can be found in the Tanglewood setting which has gained such wide public favor. There would be much to say, if the complete story were told, how the Berkshire Festival came to be started, and who the original sponsors were whose confidence in the large undertaking is now being repaid in the enjoyment which is shared by so many thousand people each Summer. How could a beautiful Berkshire estate contribute better to the pleasure of the public than this?

Incidentally, the spirit of unselfish service finds here other expressions than music. During this week, for example, a benefit performance for British relief will be given, with Governor Lehman for one of the speakers.

THIS CLIPPING FROM BRISTOL, CONN.
PRESS

AUG 14 1940

127

Music for Bristol

By William J. Murphy

With the second lap over and an impressive third approaching, committee members of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival are now assuring each other that this year shows signs of being the greatest of all seven. Over 25,000 music lovers have attended the concert at the present writing and another 13,000 are expected by next Sunday afternoon.

Last Saturday night 9,000 persons listened in and about the great Tanglewood music shed; and Sunday afternoon nearly 8,500 turned out to hear Serge Koussevitsky conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The concerts on both nights were devoted to great symphonic works by Tchaikowsky and Beethoven.

Saturday night the audience was figuratively bowled over by a superb performance of the great "Pathetique." Of course, it is no longer a secret that Dr. Koussevitsky holds the music of his countryman in high esteem and, we feel sure, did not hesitate to place him on the same program with the deified Beethoven. For most listeners the Sixth symphony was the high point of the week-end, and well it might have been because of the deep and philosophical manner in which Dr. Koussevitsky approached the work. All of the poignant anguish, resignation, and exultation Tchaikowsky wrote into this work was carefully woven into a perfect pattern by the able Serge. The orchestra responded nobly. It is small wonder that the audience cheered at the end of the performance.

The Fifth was played on Sunday afternoon, and again it was a "tour de force" for Dr. Koussevitsky. He led the orchestra with a verve and force that is amazing for a man who has conducted the work so many, many times. Bracketed with the Sixth on Saturday evening was the Beethoven "Pastoral." This might well be the theme song of the festival because no other setting contrived by God or man could fit in more perfectly with this magnificent paean to the outdoors. Sunday afternoon the Beethoven Fourth Symphony and "Coriolanus" Overture were played. The symphony, not so familiar as his others, was a refreshing feature for some people. And for others it proved to be a first, and altogether delightful first hearing.

Interesting indeed, for us, was the opportunity to attend the Saturday morning rehearsal in the shed. For three hours we sat quietly and learned how a great orchestra polishes off the rough edges and prepares for the actual performance. Koussevitsky proved to be a meticulous taskmaster, carefully coaching the various sections in a most exacting manner. About three thousand persons attend these rehearsals on every Saturday morning during the festival. Olin Downs, music critic for the New York Times, is the intermission commentator.

Tomorrow night the festival will present Johann Sebastian Bach's "Mass in B Minor." The performance will feature the Berkshire Festival chorus; Elizabeth Schumann, soprano; William Hain, tenor; Alexander Kipnis, bass; Richard Burgin, violin; Louis Speyer and Jean Devergis, oboi d'amore; William Valkenier, horn; Georges Laurient, flute; E. Power Biggs, organ; and Edwin Bodky, harpsichord. Saturday evening features Dorothy Maynor, newly "arrived" Negro soprano as soloist. The program will consist of Prokofieff's "Classical" Symphony; Symphony "Mathis der Maler" by Hindemith; Mozart's concert aria, "Bella mia Fiamma"; and Respighi's arrangement of Bach's Passacaglia and Fugue in C minor for organ. On Sunday afternoon three great symphonies will be played. Haydn's Symphony in G, No. 88, Symphony No. 7, Opus 105 by Sibelius; and the Brahms First.

On Friday evening there is to be a special, gala, concert for the Allied Relief Fund. During the Sunday afternoon intermission Albert Spaulding urged all those present to try and attend. He said: "We wish to trumpet to Old England from all New England our comfort, sympathy and help." It was also announced that a grand auction will be held that evening to obtain $1,800 for an ambulance unit from the Berkshire Festival. Gifts to be auctioned include a young heifer, pedigreed puppies, an Edna St. Vincent Millay manuscript, a silver service set, and numerous "objets d'art". Owen Johnson will be the auctioneer. The program promises something for everybody. Albert Spaulding will play, Alexander Kipnis will sing, Dorothy Thompson and Governor Lehmann of New York will speak. The program isn't settled definitly but we do know that it will include Arthur Fiedler conducting the Boston "Pops" Orchestra in waltzes by Strauss and will undoubtedly feature outstanding English works.

This Clipping From
WATERBURY, CONN.
AMERICAN

AUG 15 1940

Music Festival In Final Series

Presentation of the Bach B Minor Mass will mark the climax of this summer's Berkshire Symphonic festival at Stockbridge, Massachusetts. The Mass will begin this evening at 7 o'clock in the huge music shed at Tanglewood, with Dr. Serge Koussevitsky and the Boston Symphony orchestra, assisted by the Berkshire Festival chorus and soloists. On Friday evening at 6 o'clock there will be a special benefit program for Allied Relief. On Saturday Miss Dorothy Maynor, soprano, will be soloist.

This Clipping From
BUFFALO, N.Y.
COURIER-EXPRESS
AUG 14 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM READING, PA.
EAGLE

AUG 14 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM ROANOKE, VA.
WORLD-NEWS

AUG 14 1940

This Clipping From
DAYTON, O.
NEWS

AUG 14 1940

This Clipping From
AKRON, O.
BEACON-JOURNAL
AUG 14 1940

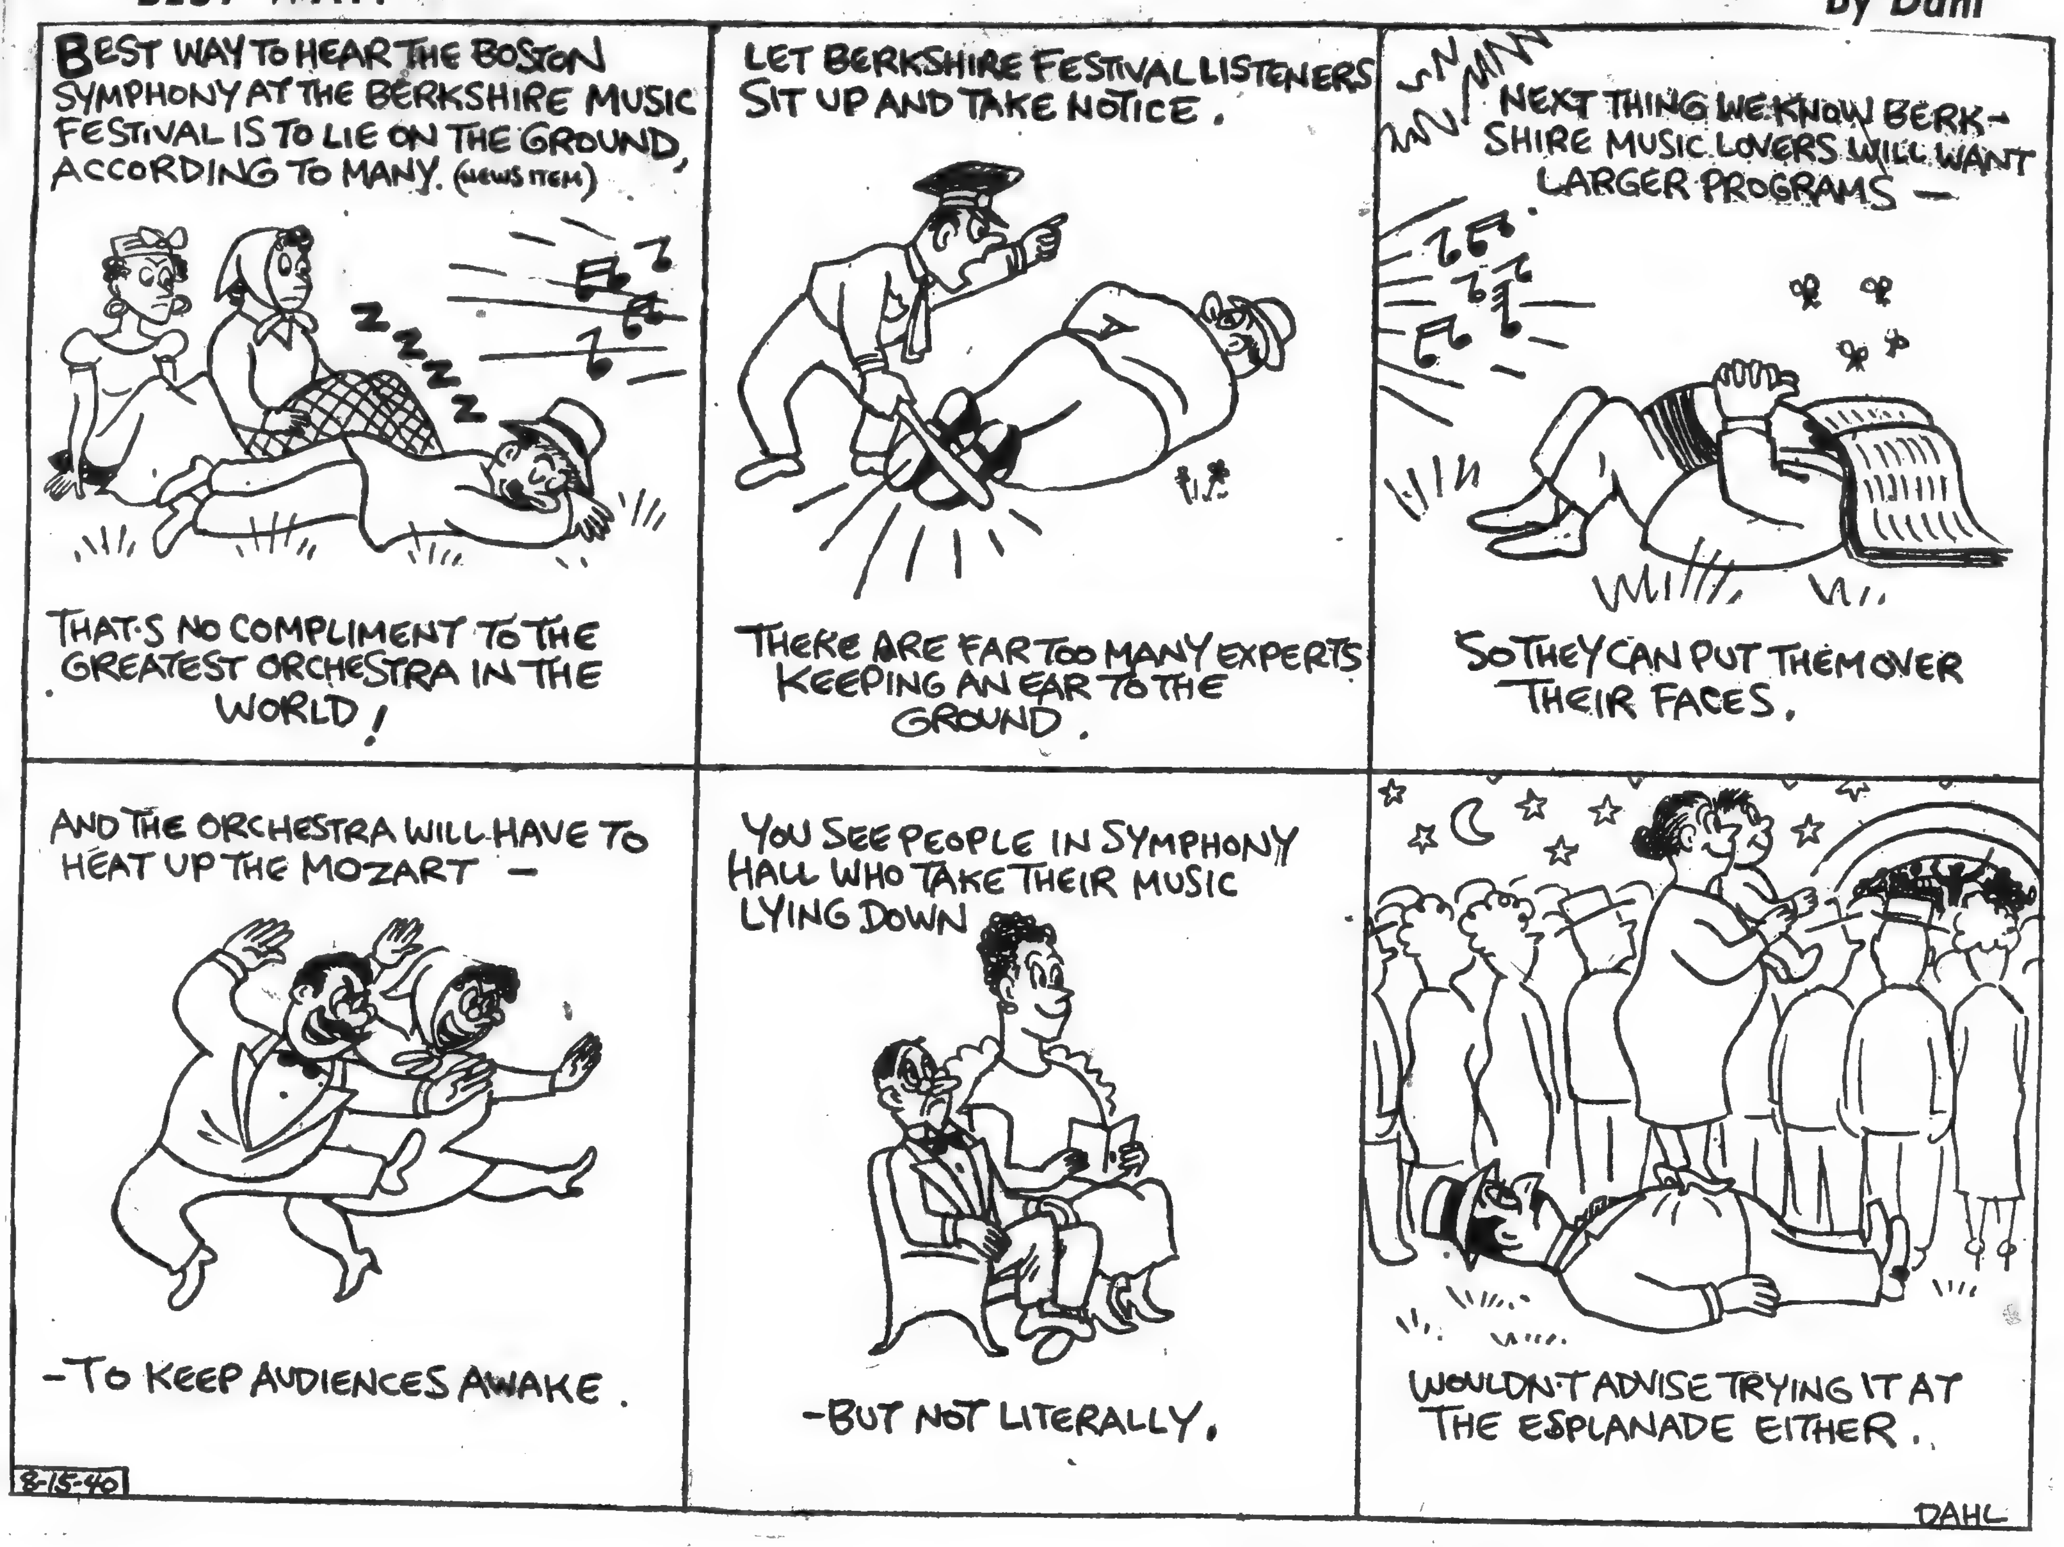
This Clipping From
INDIANAPOLIS, IND.
STAR

AUG 14 1940

Speaking of the Boston Symphony music, it's wondrous what flying things can do to a concert out of doors. One night, up there, an enormous tree moth flew into the music shed and whirled around Conductor Koussevitzky's head, to the consternation of the front rows. "Koussy" didn't miss a beat, but the audience was appalled by the plasphemy of this mere moth. The Great Man's head must have acted as a flame, non?

BEST WAY?

By Dahl



BEST WAY TO HEAR THE BOSTON SYMPHONY AT THE BERKSHIRE MUSIC FESTIVAL IS TO LIE ON THE GROUND, ACCORDING TO MANY. (NEWS ITEM)
THAT'S NO COMPLIMENT TO THE GREATEST ORCHESTRA IN THE WORLD!
LET BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL LISTENERS SIT UP AND TAKE NOTICE.
THERE ARE FAR TOO MANY EXPERTS KEEPING AN EAR TO THE GROUND.
NEXT THING WE KNOW BERKSHIRE MUSIC LOVERS WILL WANT LARGER PROGRAMS — SO THEY CAN PUT THEM OVER THEIR FACES.
AND THE ORCHESTRA WILL HAVE TO HEAT UP THE MOZART —
—TO KEEP AUDIENCES AWAKE.
YOU SEE PEOPLE IN SYMPHONY HALL WHO TAKE THEIR MUSIC LYING DOWN
—BUT NOT LITERALLY.
WOULDN'T ADVISE TRYING IT AT THE ESPLANADE EITHER.
8-15-40
DAHL

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN
AUG 15 1940

Dr and Mrs Koussevitzky Entertain for Music Center

Housewarming and Farewell Tea Held for Faculty and Students Who Leave Tanglewood Monday—Ethel Barrymore Among Guests

Special Dispatch to The Republican

Berkshire Hills, Aug. 14—Dr and Mrs Serge Koussevitzky gave a housewarming this afternoon at their summer home, Seranak, Bald Head, Lenox, and a farewell tea to the faculty and students of Berkshire Music center who are leaving Tanglewood Monday. A portion of the Center Institute orchestra gave the conductor and Mrs Koussevitzky a drum serenade. Among the 400 guests were Miss Ethel Barrymore who drove over to Seranak following the Berkshire Playhouse matinee at Stockbridge, Miss Alice Clapp with Mme Blanca Renard and Mary Craig, her guests at Curtis hotel; Mr and Mrs Lester Roberts, Carleton Smith, Mr and Mrs Albert Spalding and Mr and Mrs Gregor Piatigorsky. Mme Piatigorsky is the daughter of Mr and Mrs Edouard de Rothschild of the Paris branch of the international family of bankers, who arrived recently at New York on a flying Clipper with $1,000,000 worth of jewels.

Speak Briefly

Tea was served on the loggia overlooking Lake Mahkeenac and Dr Koussevitzky and Miss Barrymore spoke briefly to the group.

Mrs Samuel Reber is giving a tea tomorrow in the studio at her Tyringham summer home in compliment to the Tyringham artists who are opening a three-day exhibition as a Red Cross benefit. Mrs Walter W. Palmer and her sister, Miss Rosamond deK. Gilder, who has just returned from Hollywood, are to pour. Showing landscapes, portraits, sculpture and sketches will be Mrs Edward N. Perkins, Miss Polly Perkins, Mrs John Stewart McLennan, Mrs Robert Lamont, Sir Henry Hudson Kitson, Richard G. Burlingame, Walter deK. Palmer, John Skier Rudd, Paul Westcott, Alison Farmer Wescott, Robies Osborn.

Gov William H. Vanderbilt, who has accepted an invitation to the Allied benefit at Tanglewood Friday night, Mrs Vanderbilt, and their daughters, are expected for the weekend at Cricket Creek farm, South Williamstown.

Paying Return Visit

With Mr and Mrs John Shepard, Jr., at Belvoir terrace, Lenox, for a return visit, are Archduke Franz Josef and the archduchess, formerly of Vienna; also Mrs Albert Sidney of Newport and Mrs Charles E. Deland of Palm Beach.

Mrs Henry Hollister Pease has as guests at The Orchard, Lenox, for the weekend festivities, Mr and Mrs Gorham Brooks and daughters, Mrs Curtis Prout and Miss Violet Brooks of Boston.

Mr and Mrs Elwyn G. Preston of Boston are to be with Mrs Preston's brother and sister-in-law, Prof and Mrs Philip Marshall Brown, at Brownfields, South Williamstown.

It was learned today that Dr Koussevitzky expects to produce an opera at the Tanglewood Music festival next season and he hopes for a four-weeks' festival in August, 1942.

Among those who have registered recently at Red Lion inn, Stockbridge, are Mr and Mrs Mason Lawrence of Longmeadow, Miss Mabel E. Kronwall of East Longmeadow, Mr and Mrs E. Wesley Wilson, Mrs W. H. Griggs of Springfield.

THIS CLIPPING FROM MUNCIE, IND.
STAR

AUG 14 1940

This Clipping From
CHARLOTTE, N. C.
NEWS
AUG 14 1940

This Clipping From
FORT WORTH, TEX.
MORNING STAR-TELEGRAM

AUG 15 1940

CHATHAM, N.Y
COURIER
8/15/40

KOUSSEVITZKY CHOOSES BEETHOVEN, TCHAIKOVSKY FOR ANNIVERSARY AT TANGLEWOOD OVER LAST WEEK-END

Last week-end's music at Tanglewood was devoted entirely to the symphonies of Beethoven and Tchaikovsky. It appeared that, from the standpoint of both interpretation and audience enthusiasm, the Sixth Symphony of Tchaikovsky was the outstanding work. The third movement, arousing the Tanglewood audience as it has seldom been aroused before.

The evening's programme opened with the Sixth Symphony of Beethovan performed with easiness and charm typifying the country-life pictured in this work. The second movement seemed to drag a bit, but the third movement, beginning with the merry tune first introduced in the strings and continued by the woodwinds was delightful in its description of the country dance interrupted by the summer shower.

The only other work performed Saturday evening was the Symphonie Pathetique of Tchaikovsky, in tribute to the hundredth anniversary of the Russian composer. It was apparent from the first few bars that Dr. Koussevitzky was once again offering one of those Tchaikovsky interpretations which we only expect to find at Tanglewood played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. From the sonorous notes of the first movement and the restrained waltz in the second, through the triumphant third and returning melancholy of the fourth movement, one was continually aware of the freshness and vitality Dr. Koussevitzky always gives in his Tchaikovsky. An unusual effect on the kettle-drums was noticed especially during the third movement beating in a rather tom-tom rhythm, which was, apparently Dr. Koussevitzky's own interpretation.

Sunday afternoon's concert consisted of the Overture to "Coriolanus" which showed the strings to splendid advantage especially in the opening dialogue with the full orchestra. The fourth symphony of Beethoven followed with its sprightly lyrical themes and charming minuet in the third movement.

The Second series of this summer's Festival concluded with the Fifth Symphony of Tchaikovsky, the third and fourth movements of which work were cause for a tremendous ovation from the enthusiastic audience. It seemed that never before had one heard the theme's and counter-themes in the third movement so clearly defined. The audience never stopped applauding and greeted Dr. Koussevitsky with waving gloves, hats and programmes each time he returned to the stage.

It is interesting, indeed, that Dr. Koussevitzky saw fit to play both Beethoven and Tchaikovsky in this anniversary tribute, inasmuch as these two composers require such widely diverse interpretations and understanding on the part of the conductor. However, Dr. Koussevitzky has done so successfuly, being equally exciting in his reading of the vibrant and flowing themes of Beethoven and the martial and emotional music of Tchaikovsky.

—H. E. A.

Koussevitzky Passes Along a Great Tradition

Boston Transcript Aug 15, 1940

128

Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony and head of the Berkshire Music Center, shows a few tricks of the trade to a student in his class in orchestral conducting. The students and orchestras of the Music Center, as well as the Boston Symphony, will take part in the benefit concert at "Tanglewood" Friday evening, Aug. 16 for the Allied Relief Fund.

This Clipping From
WILMINGTON, DEL.
JOURNAL EVERY EVENING
AUG 15 1940

Dorothy Maynor

THE Berkshire Festival at Stockbridge, Mass., marks an important anniversary for Dorothy Maynor, the young Negro soprano who will be heard in Wilmington this fall.

Just one year ago, Miss Maynor, an unknown young soprano, from Norfolk, Va., went to the festival to listen to music conducted by Serge Koussevitzky, leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and ended up by making music herself for the great conductor.

Her surprise audition for him after one of the orchestra rehearsals has become part of this year's musical history—her singing for an audience of one, in the great empty shell which seats 6,000, Koussevitzky's immediate recognition of her fine voice, his invitation to her to sing for members of his orchestra.

The next day, the humble young singer who had planned to be a teacher of public school music sang for a critical audience of musicians an impromptu program which ranged from opera arias to Negro spirituals. Crittics who were present proclaimed her the find of the decade. A sold-out house greeted Miss Maynor's concert debut in New York in November, the result being a triumph which recalled the first appearances in New York of such artists as Tibbett, Pons and Flagstad.

Yet all this acclaim has not upset Miss Maynor's fundamental simplicity in the least, and she is still incredulous about her success.

"I hope only to be worthy of the great music I sing," she says.

The daughter of a Norfolk, Va., minister, Dorothy Maynor received her first musical training in the choir of her father's church. She is a graduate of Hampton Institute, which she entered at 14 and where she received her first vocal lessons. A few years later she toured Europe as a member of the institute's famous Negro chorus. Afterwards, she studied at the Westminster Choir School in Princeton, N. J., until a few friends, who believed in her talents, persuaded her to take some singing lessons in New York.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE
AUG 15 1940

Koussevitzkys Hosts At a Tea in Berkshires

Give Farewell Party for 400 at Lenox

Special to the Herald Tribune

BERKSHIRE HILLS, Mass., Aug. 14.—Dr. and Mrs. Serge Kouseevitzky had 400 guests this afternoon at a farewell tea at Seranak, Bald Head, Lenox, for the faculty and students of the Berkshire Music Center, which Dr. Koussevitzky founded at Tanglewood and which is closing Sunday.

Mrs. Walter W. Palmer and her sister, Miss Rosamond de K. Gilder, who is back from Hollywood, Calif., will assist tomorrow at a tea to be given by Mrs. Samuel Reber at her Tyringham studio in connection with the opening of a three-day exhibition of Tyringham Valley artists for the benefit of the Red Cross. Landscapes, portraits, sketches, sculpture will be shown by Sir Henry Hudson Kitson, Paul Westcott, Alison Farmer Wescott, Richard G. Burlingame, Mrs. Edward N. Perkins, Mrs. John Stewart McLennan, Mrs. Robert Lamont, Miss Polly Perkins, Mr. Robies Osborn, Mr. Walter de K. Palmer and Mr. John Skier Judd.

Archduke and Archduchess Franz Josef of Austria are with Mr. and Mrs. John Shepard jr., at Belvoir Terrace, Lenox. They also have as guests Mrs. Albert Sidney, of Newport, R. I., and Mrs. Charles E. Deland, of Palm Beach. Fla.

Professor Philip Marshall Brown and Mrs. Brown have with them at Brownfields, South Williamstown, his brother-in-law and sister, Mr. and Mrs. Elwyn G. Preston, of Boston.

Governor William H. Vanderbilt, Mrs. Vanderbilt and their daughters are expected at Cricket Creek Farm, South Williamstown, for the allied relief benefit at Tanglewood Friday night and for the week end.

Mr. and Mrs. Gorham Brooks and daughters, Mrs. Curtis Prout and Miss Violet Brooks, of Boston, motored to Lenox today from Dublin, N. H., and are with Mrs. Henry Hollister Pease.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES
AUG 15 1940

RECEPTION IN HILLS BY KOUSSEVITZKYS

They Entertain at Lenox With Housewarming and a Tea for Music Center Group

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 14—Dr. and Mrs. Serge Koussevitzky gave a housewarming here this afternoon at their Summer home, Seranak, Bald Head, and a farewell tea to the faculty and students of the Berkshire Music Center, who will leave Tanglewood on Monday. Part of the Center Institute's orchestra gave the conductor and Mrs. Koussevitzky a drum serenade. Among the 400 guests were Miss Ethel Barrymore, who drove over to Seranak after the Berkshire Playhouse matinee at Stockbridge; Miss Alice Clapp, who had Mme. Blanca Renard and Miss Mary Craig as her guests at the Curtis Hotel; Mr. and Mrs. Lester Roberts, Mr. and Mrs. Albert Spalding and Carleton Smith.

Tea was served on the loggia overlooking Lake Mahkeenac, and Dr. Koussevitzky and Miss Barrymore spoke briefly to the group.

Mrs. Samuel Reber will give a tea tomorrow in the studio at her Tyringham Summer home in compliment to the Tyringham artists who will open a three-day exhibition as a Red Cross benefit. Mrs. Walter W. Palmer and her sister, Miss Rosamond DeK. Gilder, who has just returned from Hollywood, will preside at the tea tables. Landscapes, portraits, sculpture and sketches will be shown by Mrs. Edward M. Perkins, Miss Polly Perkins, Mrs. John Stewart McLennan, Mrs. Robert Lamont, Sir Henry Hudson Kitson, Richard G. Burlingame, Walter DeK. Palmer, John Skier Rudd, Paul Westcott, Alison Farmer Wescott and Robies Osborn.

Governor William H. Vanderbilt of Rhode Island, who has accepted an invitation to the allied benefit at Tanglewood Friday night, Mrs. Vanderbilt and their daughters are expected for the week-end at Cricket Creek Farm, South Williamstown.

With Mr. and Mrs. John Shepard Jr., at Belvoir Terrace, Lenox, for a return visit are Archduke Franz Josef and the Archduchess, formerly of Vienna; also Mrs. Albert Sidney of Newport and Mrs. Charles E. Deland of Palm Beach.

Mrs. Henry Hollister Pease has as guests at the Orchard, Lenox, for the week-end festivities Mr. and Mrs. Gorham Brooks and daughters, Mrs. Curtis Prout and Miss Violet Brooks of Boston.

Mr. and Mrs. Elwyn G. Preston of Boston are to be with Mrs. Preston's brother and sister-in-law, Professor and Mrs. Philip Marshall Brown, at Brownfields, South Williamstown.

THIS CLIPP
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS
AUG 15 1940

Dr and Mrs Koussevitzky Entertain for Music Center

Dr and Mrs Serge Koussevitzky gave a housewarming yesterday afternoon at their summer home, Seranak, Bald Head, Lenox, and a farewell tea to the faculty and students of Berkshire Music center who are leaving Tanglewood Monday. A portion of the Center Institute orchestra gave the conductor and Mrs Koussevitzky a drum serenade. Among the 400 guests were Miss Ethel Barrymore who drove over to Seranak following the Berkshire Playhouse matinee at Stockbridge. Miss Alice Clapp with Mme Blanca Renard and Mary Craig, her guests at Curtis hotel; Mr and Mrs Lester Roberts, Carleton Smith, Mr and Mrs Albert Spalding and Mr and Mrs Gregor Piatigorsky. Mme Piatigorsky is the daughter of Mr and Mrs Edouard de Rothschild of the Paris branch of the international family of bankers, who arrived recently at New York on a flying Clipper with $1,000,000 worth of jewels.

Speak Briefly

Tea was served on the loggia overlooking Lake Mahkeenac and Dr Koussevitzky and Miss Barrymore spoke briefly to the group.

Mrs Samuel Reber is giving a tea today in the studio at her Tyringham summer home in compliment to the Tyringham artists who are opening a three-day exhibition as a Red Cross benefit. Mrs Walter W. Palmer and her sister, Miss Rosamond deK. Gilder, who has just returned from Hollywood, are to pour. Showing landscapes, portraits, sculpture and sketches will be Mrs Edward N. Perkins, Miss Polly Perkins, Mrs John Stewart McLennan, Mrs Robert Lamont, Sir Henry Hudson Kitson, Richard G. Burlingame, Walter deK. Palmer, John Skier Rudd, Paul Westcott, Alison Farmer Wescott, Robies Osborn.

Gov William H. Vanderbilt, who has accepted an invitation to the Allied benefit at Tanglewood tomorrow night, Mrs Vanderbilt, and their daughters, are expected for the weekend at Cricket Creek farm, South Williamstown.

Paying Return Visit

With Mr and Mrs John Shepard, Jr., at Belvoir terrace, Lenox, for a return visit, are Archduke Franz Josef and the archduchess, formerly of Vienna; also Mrs Albert Sidney of Newport and Mrs Charles E. Deland of Palm Beach.

Mrs Henry Hollister Pease has as guests at The Orchard, Lenox, for the weekend festivities, Mr and Mrs Gorham Brooks and daughters, Mrs Curtis Prout and Miss Violet Brooks of Boston.

Mr and Mrs Elwyn G. Preston of Boston are to be with Mrs Preston's brother and sister-in-law, Prof and Mrs Philip Marshall Brown, at Brownfields, South Williamstown.

It was learned today that Dr Koussevitzky expects to produce an opera at the Tanglewood Music festival next season and he hopes for a four-weeks' festival in August, 1942.

Among those who have registered recently at Red Lion inn, Stockbridge, are Mr and Mrs Mason Lawrence of Longmeadow, Miss Mabel E. Kronwall of East Longmeadow, Mr and Mrs E. Wesley Wilson, Mrs W. H. Griggs of Springfield.

Eugene Scott of Windemere street has gone to Thousands Islands, N. Y., where he jointed Mrs Scott and their son, David, who have been visiting for a month with Mrs Scott's parents.

* * *

Mrs Alberta H. McIntire of Rogers avenue, West Springfield, accompanied by Miss Helen F. Moulton, is among recent arrivals at the Waldorf-Astoria, New York city.

This Clipping From DALLAS, TEX.
NEWS
AUG 15 1940

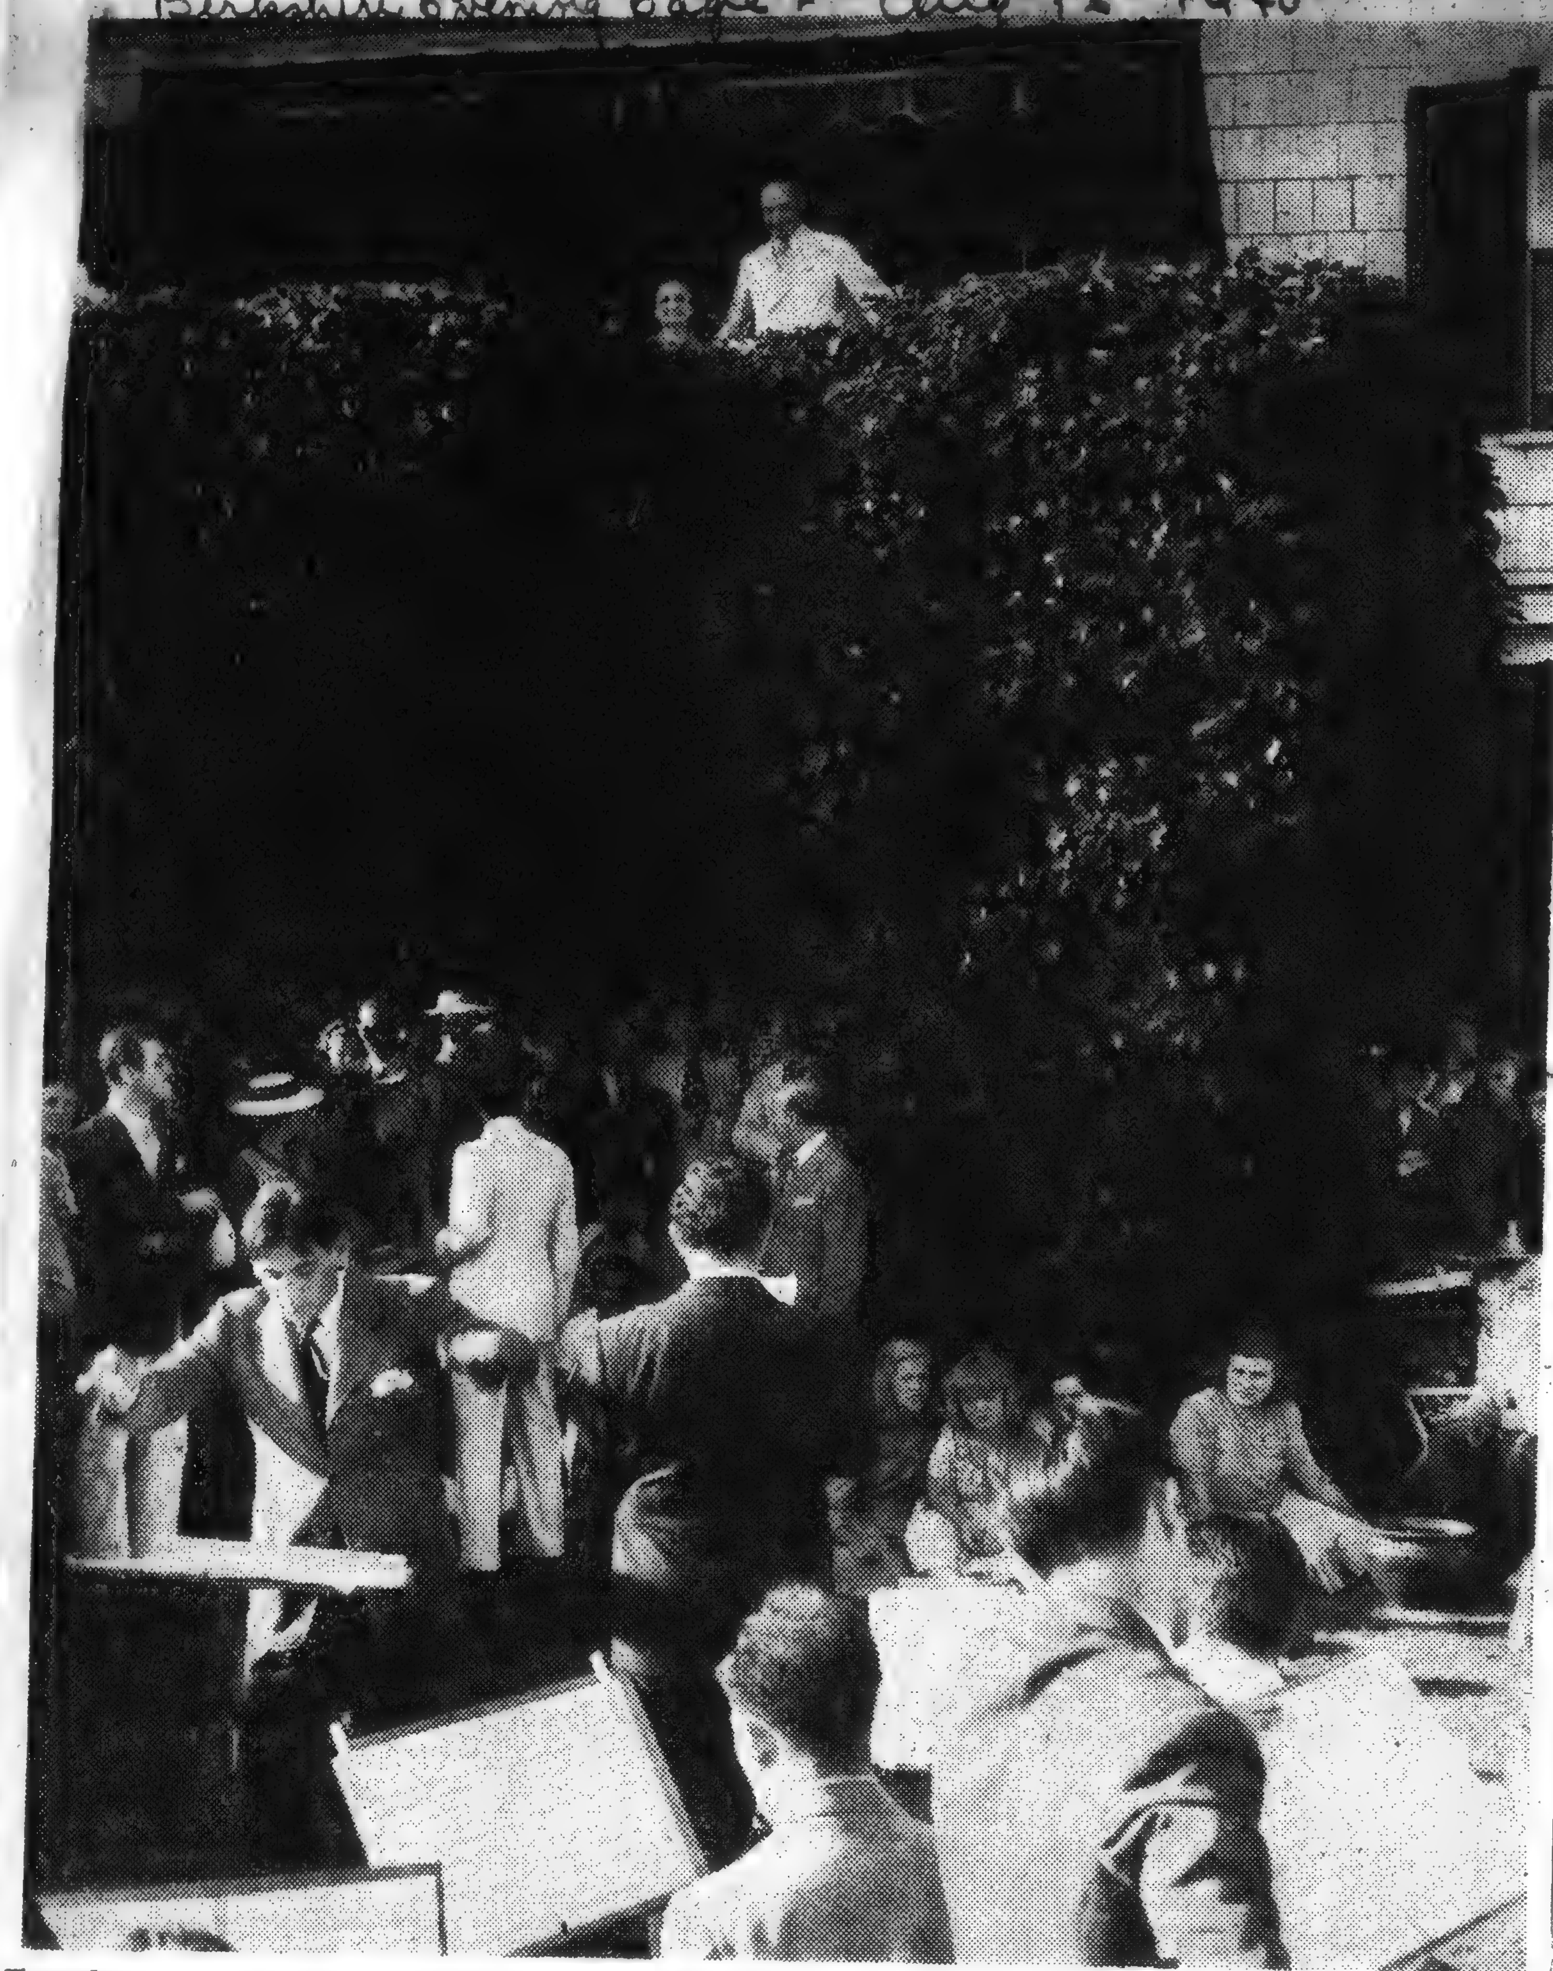
Boston Symphony To Conclude Series

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 14.—Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra will open the final series of concerts to be presented during the Berkshire Symphonic Festival Thursday evening with a performance of Bach's great Mass in B Minor. The concert will be held in the music shed at Tanglewood, near Lenox, Mass.

Elisabeth Schumann, Viola Silva, William Hain and Alexander Kipnis will appear as soloists with the Berkshire Festival Chorus.

"Fair Play" Is Turnabout at Musical Tea

Berkshire Evening Eagle - Aug 15 1940



Turnabout was fair play and vice versa yesterday afternoon at the tea Dr. and Mrs. Serge Koussevitzky gave the students and faculty of the Brkshire Music Center, as several of the students under the leadership of Leonard Bernstein played an amusing piece au Stravinsky in compliment to the maestro and his wife. Appearing with Dr. Koussevitzky on the balcony of their home on Bald Head, Lenox, is Mrs. Koussevitzky, who due to a prolonged illness, has of necessity been in the background during the 1940 Festival season.

500 at Tea Given by Koussevitzkys

LENOX — About 500 Berkshire Music Center students, members of the faculty, the Boston Symphony Orchestra and friends attended the tea given yesterday afternoon by Dr. and Mrs. Serge Koussevitzky at their home, Seranak on Bald Head, yesterday afternoon.

Dr. Koussevitzky made the occasion an informal farewell for all the Tanglewood personnel, urging upon students to remember what he had said at the formal opening of the Center: "To be modest in your conception but not in your aspirations."

Mrs. Koussevitzky, who is much improved from her recent serious illness, appeared on the second floor porch overlooking the terrace, with Dr. Koussevitzky, to acknowledge the cheers of the guests.

For the occasion, Leonard Bernstein, student conductor, had written the words to music by Stravinsky for "Histoire du Soldat," changing the title to "Histoire d'un Eleve." The narrator was Roland Partridge, a Berkshire Music Center faculty member and instructor of diction at Dartmouth and Juilliard. Mr. Bernstein conducted the orchestra in the presentation and in the orchestra were Rafael Silverman, violin; David Glazer, clarinet; Fowler Friedlander, bassoon; Earl Leavitt, trombone; Robert Weatherly and Harry Herforth, trumpets; Filmore Gilbert, percussion.

Following the performance by the orchestra, the Berkshire Festival Chorus, under the direction of Prof. G. Wallace Woodworth, sang the Bach chorale, "Now All the Woods Are Sleeping"; Gibbons' "The Silver Swan"; Randall Thompson's "Alleluia."

At the tea tables were wives of members of the orchestra: Mrs. Richard Burgin, Mrs. Jean Bedetti, Mrs. Fernand Gillet, Mrs. Jean LeFranc, Mrs. Victor Polatschek, Mrs. Georges Laurent, Mrs. Bernard Zighera, Mrs. Georges Mager and Mrs. Georges Moleux. Assisting were the Misses Violet Brooks, Faith Kidder and Leslie Marsh.

Many of the guests wandered about the wooded slopes of Seranak and admired the magnificent view across Lake Mahkeenac to the distant hills. Plainly visible, framed in the trees, could be seen the Festival's Shed at Tanglewood.

This Clipping From
WATERBURY, CONN.
REPUBLICAN
AUG 15 1940

Final Series Of Berkshire Festival To Start Tonight

The final series of the Berkshire Symphonic festival at Stockbridge, Mass., will begin at 7 o'clock this evening in the huge music shed at Tanglewood with the presentation of Bach's "Mass in B Minor" by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony orchestra, assisted by the Berkshire Festival chorus and soloist. The special benefit performance for Allied Relief will be given Friday evening, beginning at 6 o'clock, and will include a varied program of special attractions.

At the Saturday night performance Dorothy Maynor, Negro singer who created such a stir when she was heard last summer and in New York during the winter, will be soloist in Beethoven's "Adelaide" and Mozart's "Concerto Aria, Bellamia fiama, adido." The organ installed in the music shed at Tanglewood during the early summer will be heard in the playing of Bach's "Passacaglia for Organ in C Minor." The final concert of the nine concerts of the seventh annual festival will be heard on Sunday afternoon when the orchestra will play music by Haydn, Sibelius, and Brahms.

The most unusual part of this year's festival, however, will be the presentation on Friday night of the special benefit performance. Archibald MacLeish, librarian of the library of Congress, will be master of ceremonies. Gov. Herbert H. Lehman of New York and Dorothy Thompson will be speakers. Albert Spalding and Gregor Piatigorsky will appear as soloists with the Boston Symphony orchestra. The festivities will be held in the music shed, the theater, the expanse of lawn between them, and in other buildings of the new school of music being held here this summer.

An auction will be held with the proceeds to go for the purchase of an ambulance for England. The Boston Pops orchestra will play Strauss waltzes for dancing. In fact there will be something doing every minute from 6 o'clock until late at night. The advance sale of tickets has been excellent and a record attendance is expected to result in a substantial contribution to the Allied Relief Fund.

THIS CLIPPING FROM

GREAT BARRINGTON, MASS
BERKSHIRE COURIER
8/15/40

Festival Audiences Make New Records

Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt Among Those at Concerts

Estimated That 45,000 Have Attended for First Six Concerts.—Berkshire Inns and Hotels Crowded During Week-end. — Final Series Opens Tonight, Bach B Minor Mass.

An estimated total of 45,000 people is said to have attended the first six of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival concerts and two rehearsals at Tanglewood this season, and preparations are now being made for the biggest crowd in the festival history for the final week. Last week's program of Beethoven and Tchaikowsky found the audience entranced with the masterly effects achieved by the Boston ~~Symphony~~ orchestra under the direction of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor.

All attendance records were broken when more than 8600 persons assembled for Saturday night's concert and 8500 were there to cheer at the close of Sunday afternoon's concert when Dr. Koussevitsky and the orchestra received an ovation at the close of the presentation of Tachaikowsky's fifth symphony. The conductor was recalled six times. The box-office reported that general admission sales totalled 2400 for Saturday and 2200 for Sunday.

Most famous guest of the second series was Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt, who drove her car from Hyde Park to attend Saturday's concert. She bought her own box, preferring to attend as a private citizen rather than accept Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith's invitation to occupy official box number one as one of her guests. Many other notables and titled guests were present. On Thursday evening Governor and Mrs. Leverett Saltonstall were honored guests.

A tremendous ovation was also given to Albert Spalding, violinist, who played on Thursday evening in Beethoven's Concerto for Violin in D, opus 61. The crowd cheered and clapped to recall the artist many times.

An outstanding feature this week will be the Bach B Minor Mass, on Thursday evening at 7:00 o'clock. At this concert the Berkshire Music Center forces will join with the orchestra. The Festival Chorus of 200 voices which has been rehearsing diligently since the Center opened July 8 under the direction of Prof. G. Wallace Woodworth of Harvard University, will perform with the following soloists: Elizabeth Schumann, Viola Silva, William Hain and Alexander Kipnis. Regular Festival patrons as well as Bach enthusiasts from a wide radius will be in attendance for this concert.

The Bach program will open at the earlier hour because of the necessity of dividing the program in two parts. Tickets for the performance of course include the complete program. There will be an intermission of an hour starting at 8:30 to permit the audience to enjoy supper on the grounds.

On Friday, starting at 6:00 p. m., comes the gala benefit program being presented for Allied relief by the orchestra with the co-operation of the Festival. Tickets for this event may be obtained from local chairmen, from the Festival office at Stockbridge, at Tanglewood, or at Allied Relief offices in New York and Boston.

Dorothy Maynor, Negro soprano, whose star has soared since her appearance last summer at Dr. Koussevitzky's Tanglewood picnic, will be heard by the Festival audience Saturday evening at 8:30.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
PM
AUG 16 1940

Berkshire Festival Gives the B Minor Mass

Under the music shed and outside it, Tanglewood audiences have an almost ideal spot for listening to great music as only Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony play it. Photo by George Daniell

MUSIC

Stockbridge Audience Moved by Bach Mass

Staff Correspondence

STOCKBRIDGE, Aug. 15.—The performance of the Bach B Minor Mass this evening in the Tanglewood music shed lived up musically to the extraordinarily high standard set by the orchestral programs of the last two weeks. There is probably no higher compliment that could be paid to the Berkshire Festival Chorus, which took part in the program for the first time.

A great deal of the credit must go to Wallace Woodworth, who has been training the chorus for this occasion ever since July 8. The men and women who sang, many of whom looked as if they must recently have sung under him at Harvard and Radcliffe, recognized this fact by applauding and stamping enthusiastically.

They applauded just as enthusiastically—as did the audience of almost 7500—for Dr. Koussevitzky, who led the vigorous and deeply moving performance of perhaps the greatest single piece of music ever written.

A note of informality was introduced at the beginning when Reginald Foster tried out an amplifying system for possible use in tomorrow's benefit gala. The consensus was that the music shed needed no amplifiers.

Of the four good soloists, Elisabeth Schumann easily stood out for dignified breadth of style. But the level of the entire performance was so high that a huge audience of intelligent music lovers left Tanglewood shaken as only the greatest music can shake one.

—H. W. S.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
WATERBURY, CONN.
DEMOCRAT
AUG 15 1940

MUSIC FESTIVAL NEARING FINALE

Closing Numbers Tomorrow Evening at Stockbridge

Concerts this evening, tomorrow and Saturday and on Sunday afternoon, will complete the series of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Stockbridge, Mass., for this season. The Boston Symphony orchestra, under the baton of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky will present Bach's "Mass in B. Minor", with the assistance of the Berkshire Festival chorus and soloists. The program will start at 7 o'clock tonight.

Tomorrow evening a special benefit performance for Allied Relief will be given, with Archibald MacLeish, at present the librarian of the Library of Congress, acting as master of ceremonies. A number of celebrities will take part, including Governor Herbert H. Lehman of New York, and the omnipresent Dorothy Thompson. Albert Spalding and Gregor Pitaigorsky will be featured as soloists with the Boston Symphony orchestra.

There will also be an auction, the proceeds of which will go towards the purchase of an ambulance for England. A concert of Strauss waltzes, for dancing, will be played by the Boston Pops orchestra. The various festivities of the evening expected to draw a record crowd.

Saturday evening the program will feature Dorothy Maynor, the recently-discovered Negro singer, as soloists in Beethoven's "Adelaide". Bach's "Passacaglia for Organ in C Minor" and Mozart's 'Concerto Aria, Bellamia fiama, dido", will also be heard.

Music by Haydn, Sibelius, and Brahms will be heard on Sunday afternoon, in the last concert of this seventh annual festival at Stockbridge.

THIS CLIPPING FROM

CHICOPEE, MASS
HERALD
8/15/40

TANGLEWOOD IN FINAL WEEK OF ACTIVITY STARTING TONIGHT

Tanglewood, home of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, is ready to handle its biggest crowd in history for the final week of activity. Already it is estimated that 45,000 persons have attended the six concerts and two rehearsals given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

An outstanding feature this week will be the Bach B Minor Mass tonight at 7 P. M. At this concert the Berkshire Music Center forces will join with the orchestra. The Festival Chorus of 200 voices which has been rehearsing diligently since the Center opened July 8 under the direction of Prof. G. Wallace Woodworth of Harvard University will perform with the following soloists: Elisabeth Schumann, Viola Silva, William Hain and Alexander Kipnis. Regular Festival patrons as well as Bach enthusiasts from a wide radius will be in attendance for this concert.

The Bach program will open at the earlier hour because of the necessity of dividing the program in two parts. Tickets for the performance of course include the complete program. There will be an intermission of an hour starting at 8:30 to permit the audience to enjoy supper on the grounds.

Tomorrow starting at 6 P. M. comes the gala benefit program being presented for Allied Relief by the orchestra with the cooperation of the Festival. Tickets for this event may be obtained from local chairmen, from the Festival office at Stockbridge, at Tanglewood or at Allied Relief offices in New York and Boston.

Dorothy Maynor, Negro soprano whose star has soared since her appearance last summer at Dr. Koussevitzky's Tanglewood picnic, will be heard by the great Festival audience Saturday evening at 8:30.

The Festival will close Sunday afternoon at 3:30 with a program of Haydn, Sibelius and Brahms.

Persons from a distance planning to attend the final series of concerts are urged to communicate with the Festival Accommodations Bureau at Stockbridge as soon as possible if they have not yet made arrangements for rooms. Tickets for the concerts may be obtained at the Stockbridge office of the Festival or by telephoning Stockbridge 400.

This Clipping From WILMINGTON, DEL.
NEWS
AUG 16 1940

Dorothy Maynor To Sing at Festival

DOROTHY MAYNOR, who will give a recital here Sept. 30, will mark the first anniversary of her spectacular rise to prominence as a soprano by appearing as soloist this Saturday evening with the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Berkshire Festival at Stockbridge, Mass.

It was only a year ago that Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the orchestra, listened to Miss Maynor at an impromptu audition after a rehearsal at the festival and quickly recognized the possibilities of a great concert artist.

Miss Maynor had gone to the festival last August to listen to the music and at the suggestion of friends, Koussevitzky consented to hear her sing. He was so pleased with her voice that he asked her to sing with the orchestra and the next day she gave a program ranging from arias to Negro spirituals before a critical audience of musicians.

Her sensational rise followed and demands became too great for her to fill with all. She sang with four of the country's leading symphony orchestras, faced a sold-out house for her debut in New York last November, and make tours which took her to many of the larger cities of the East and Middle West.

The Wilmington Community Concert Association, in preparing its list of artists for the coming season, was flooded with requests to include Miss Maynor. The committee secured her last open date and arranged for her to give a recital at the Playhouse on Monday evening, Sept. 30.

Miss Maynor, the daughter of a Norfolk, Va., minister, received her first vocal lessons at Hampton Institute. She later studied at the Westminster Choir School in Princeton, N. J., until some friends encouraged her to take singing lessons in New York. Despite her fame, she still studies religiously with her vocal teacher, John Alan Haughton.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
HOLYOKE, MASS.
Transcript Telegram
AUG 16 1940

Music By The People

In one way the concert of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival last night was the most significant of the superb concerts which Serge Koussevitzky has given to the Festival so far.

It was from the people of the community. Young men and women, choir singers, students in the high school, music students generally, but purely local gave a magnificent rendering of the Bach Mass in B Minor.

To hire a great orchestra and glory in its noble program is one thing for the Berkshire Hills. To develop a chorus under the leadership of the orchestra and to sing with it is an other thing. It is a very great spur to music in the United States that Serge Koussevitzky, than whom there is no superior orchestra master in the world, should go to any neighborhood and there dig out a chorus of 300 local people to sing one of the great chorus compositions of all religious music. They have been doing such things in Europe for a long, long time. We have been working out great choruses in the urban musical centers. But this chorus was raised from the Berkshire Hills country and it was a great one—singing this great Bach Mass for the first time.

131

Boston Globe

Aug 16, 1940

Thousands Attend Music Festival

The distinguished conducting of Serge Koussevitsky, a chorus of over 100 voices and the late dusk which colored the trees along either side of the Tanglewood Shed contributed to a memorable performance of Bach's B-minor Mass last evening.

It was an early performance and by 7 o'clock thousands of music lovers filled the comfortable seats inside the Shed and were seated for a hundred yards back on the green grass. During the intermission people walked about the beautiful grounds of the Brooks estate which now forms America's most famous outdoor music festival grounds.

Three of last evening's stirring choruses will be repeated tomorrow evening for the Allied relief fund benefit which promises to be an outstanding occasion.

Practically a Symphony audience of Bostonians were at Tanglewood to hear the soaring choruses of Bach's immortal mass in this setting of beauty. Mrs. Gorham Brooks, distinguished in a saffron print; Mrs. Daniel DeMenocal, a silver fox cape over her suave gray silk; postdebutante Diana Bird, whose fetching print was of soft rose and black, her smart necklace fashioned of beads covered with the same print as her dress; Anne Knowles, sharing her box, her slim print of pale blue and navy, flowers tucked in her brown hair; Mr. and Mrs. Wallace McIlvaine Scudder, the former Betty Cram, decorative as usual in a simple white dress with crimson flannel jacket; Ruth and Beatrice Talbot, both blonde heads bare above navy dresses; Miriam Winslow and Foster Fitzsimmons, her dark hair caught back in a snood above her white tweed evening wrap; Anne Blake, who wore a deep-wine cardigan over her becoming white dress as she and a group of friends listened to concert from the grounds outside the Shed; Mr. and Mrs. Carl Dreyfus, a sable cape over her gown of French gray;

Sang in Chorus

(Photo by Bachrach)

Pretty post-deb Louise Sargent, who was among the Bostonians singing with the Berkshire Festival Chorus in last night's impressive Bach B Minor Mass.

Mr. and Mrs. George Judd and their son, William, sharing a box, attractive Mrs. Judd with the patriotic red, white and blue of the American Friends of France pinned to her nice dinner gown of purple; Miss Elizabeth Hutchinson, who wore brown tweeds against the evening's cool wind; Mr. and Mrs. Edward Taft and many many more.

Music students came from all over the country to sing under Dr. Koussevitzky's baton, and many of the Harvard and Radcliffe graduates and undergraduates came to Lenox for this week to rehearse under G. Wallace Woodworth for the performance. Mrs. Woodworth was there to share the tremendous ovation given Mr. Woodworth for his part in the mass. She wore a gown of white and a jacket of palest blue embroidered with silver.

Violinist Albert Spalding, who is co-chairman with Dr. Koussevitzky for tonight's unusual program, was also in last night's audience, and tonight's will include Si Louis and Lady Beale, Ethel Barrymore, who will be Mrs. Paul Moore's and Mrs. John Alden Carpenter's guest, and Mrs. Joseph Kennedy, wife of the United States' Ambassador, who will be Mr. and Mrs. Gaspar Bacon's guest, with her daughter, Miss Eunice Kennedy.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE
AUG 16 1940

Berkshires Open Gay Week End With Last Music Series

Many Fail to Get Seats at Tanglewood; Mrs. Pierpont Hamilton in the Crowd

Special to the Herald Tribune

BERKSHIRE HILLS, Mass., Aug. 15.—Berkshire started upon its gayest mid-summer week end tonight with the first concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the final music festival series at Tanglewood. All boxes had been sold weeks in advance and hundreds sat under the stars, unable to obtain seats in the music shed, which has a seating capacity of 5,000.

Attending a festival concert for first time tonight were Mrs. Pierpont Morgan Hamilton, of New York, and her mother-in-law, Mrs. Morgan Hamilton, of Sterlington, N. Y. They are guests of Rev. Dr. Anson Phelps Stokes at Brook Farm, Lenox. Mrs. Morgan Hamilton is a sister of Mr. J. Pierpont Morgan.

In a box with Mrs. Charles Robinson Smith and daughter, Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, president of the festival corporation, were Mr. and Mrs. George Collins, Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Rodzinski, Count Robert de Calry, Mr. Malcolm Vaughan and Mr. Stewart Montgomery.

With Mr. and Mrs. Ernest B. Dane in their box were Mr. and Mrs. Gregor Piatiagorsky, Miss Olga Naumoff and Mr. Carlton Smith, all of whom are guests of Dr. and Mrs. Serge Koussevitzky at Seranak.

In advance of the concert Mr. and Mrs. Donald F. McPherson gave a cocktail party at Court Hill, Pittsfield, for Mr. and Mrs. John Alden Carpenter, of Chicago. Other guests were Miss Mabel Choate and Mr. and Mrs. John W. Garrett, who were in her box; Mr. Carleton Smith, Sir Robert Mayer, of London, England, founder of the English Children's Symphony; Mr. and Mrs. Lawrence K. Miller, Mr. and Mrs. Artur Rodzinski and their guest, Miss Dorothy Mayner, singer.

Koussevitzkys Hosts At House Warming

Dr. and Mrs. Serge Koussevitzky gave a house warming Wednesday afternoon at their summer home, "Seranak Bald Head," Lenox, and a farewell tea to the faculty and students of the Berkshire Music Center, who are leaving Tanglewood Monday. A portion of the Center Institute Orchestra gave the conductor and Mrs. Koussevitzky a drum serenade. Tea was served on the loggia overlooking Lake Mahkeenac by Mrs. Gorham Brooks, Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, Mrs. George E. Judd, Miss Leslie Marsh and Mrs. Richard Burgin.

Among the guests were Miss Ethel Barrymore, who notored over from the Berkshire Playhouse at Stockbridge following the matinee; Mr. and Mrs. Albert Spalding, Mr. and Mrs. Gregor Piatigorsky, Mr. and Mrs. Lester Roberts, Mr. Carleton Smith, Miss Alice Clapp of Washington with her guests at the Curtis Hotel, Mme. Blanca Renard and Miss Mary Craig.

Mr. and Mrs. Henry Bigelow Jackson of Belmont are with Mr. and Mrs. H. George Wilde at "Highlawn Farm," Lenox.

Gov. William H. Vanderbilt, who has accepted an invitation to the allied benefit at Tanglewood this evening, Mrs. Vanderbilt and their daughters are expected for the weekend at "Cricket Creek Farm," South Williamstown.

Mr. and Mrs. Elwyn G. Preston of Boston are to be with Mrs. Preston's brother and sister-in-law, Prof. and Mrs. Philip Marshall Brown at "Brownsfields," South Williamstown.

This Clipping From CLEVELAND, OHIO
NEWS
AUG 17 1940

Coda:

Cleveland Institute of Music moves to its new home, 3411 Euclid Avenue, Tuesday . . . Vincent H. Percy, well known Cleveland organist and his son, Robert Percy, baritone, won excellent reviews at recent recitals in Chillicothe . . . the Cleveland Women's Orchestra, Hyman Schandler, director, gives a concert at Lakeside, Saturday evening, August 24 at 8 . . . Berkshire Boston Symphony program tonight includes the Hindemith "Mathis der Maler" Symphony, Prokofieff's "Classical" Symphony, the Bach Passacaglia and Fugue in C Minor, and Dorothy Maynor singing Mozart and Beethoven music . . . the final concert tomorrow includes the Haydn Symphony in G Major No. 88, the Sibelius Seventh and the Brahms First.

This Clipping From LOUISVILLE, KY.
COURIER-JOURNAL
AUG 17 1940

MUSIC IN THE BERKSHIRE HILLS

While Europe flames with war, American musicians recreate at home the charm of old-world festivals

By DWIGHT ANDERSON.

Lenox, Mass.

UNTIL a few months ago all the world looked to Europe for the summer festivals of music that sent stimulus into every center of musical interest. But even before bombs had thundered down on the Mozart Festival at Glyndebourne and thrown up insurmountable walls between us and the festivals of Salzburg and Bayreuth, Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra were ready to take over the responsibility of providing, here in America, a music center worthy to maintain and extend the European traditions. So magnificently have they risen to the emergency created by world tragedy that the listener must be conscious not only that he is hearing great music greatly performed, but that here and now, as never before in our generation, the arts are being summoned to a vital place in the war we are waging against the enemies of the Spirit.

While England battles for her life—and for ours—while we rearm and redouble attack on subversive influences—thousands of world citizens gather in a shed to listen to music. Beethoven of Germany, Sibelius of Finland, Debussy of France, Harris of America stand side by side on the programs and are heard by the most cosmopolitan audiences ever assembled on a large scale in this country. Race, religion, color, class and party are leveled and welded together by music.

For generations the Berkshire Hills have drawn artists to them; writers, painters, sculptors, dancers, actors, musicians. But the artists have always come singly or in small groups. Lately that has changed.

•

ON AUGUST 1, in Tanglewood Shed on the edge of Lenox, the first concert of the 1940 Berkshire Symphonic Festival was heard by an audience of more than 6,000. The costumes of the audience were as varied as their motor licenses; sweatshirts or dinner-jackets, sweaters or silver fox. The programs of the nine concerts include orchestral music from Bach to Harris. Neither the erudite nor the man-in-the-street can feel neglected. Distinguished soloists are appearing, though, with the exception of two Americans, none occupies the spotlight. The two Americans are the young Negro soprano, Dorothy Maynor, who made such a fine impression in Louisville last spring, and the violinist, Albert Spalding.

The Berkshire Music Center, of which Dr. Koussevitzky is the director, is in its first season and has brought together 350 students from all parts of this country. The Center is divided into the Institute, which includes 140 professional musicians and advanced students, and the Academy, which is "for those of less specific qualifications."

Orchestral conducting, naturally, is the principal purpose of the Institute. Daily classes are held in the technique of conducting, in the analysis of orchestral scores and in mime, and practical experience is gained through conducting the Institute Orchestra. Daily classes in opera dramatics are being held for experienced singers. There are seminars in harmony, counterpoint and composition. Private lessons in orchestral instruments are given by members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Study and rehearsals of chamber music are provided for those specially equipped.

•

BEING new, the Music Center has presented many problems that have been difficult for the organizers to solve. Most difficult has been the fact that many of the students have not had sufficient preparation. Less frequent, but no less difficult, is the presence of certain professionals who are too advanced to merge successfully with the others.

The Music Center opened a month before the Festival. During those weeks Dr. Koussevitzky gave constant personal attention to all departments and is still giving a limited amount of time to the Center, but, since the Festival Concerts got under way, he has, of necessity, been primarily occupied with rehearsals and performances of his orchestra. Stanley Chapple, as Koussevitzky's first assistant, is bearing the brunt of the conducting classes. Paul Hindemith and Aaron Copland share the work in theory. Olin Downes and Abram Chasins are among the many other lecturers and Herbert Graf, stage director of the Metropolitan Opera Company, is in charge of the work in opera.

"INCOMPARABLY MORE ENCHANTING"

IT is inevitable to compare the Tanglewood project with the Festivals at Salzburg prior to 1938 and, in many respects, our effort is superior to Austria's. Whereas the Salzburg hills are at least as beautiful as the Berkshires, the immediate surroundings of Tanglewood Shed are incomparably more enchanting. Perhaps it is unfair to draw that comparison since the Salzburg hall is on a city street with only artificially lighted foyers in which to promenade, while here the gardens and lawns of Tanglewood (which Mrs. Gorham Brooks gave to the Boston Symphony Orchestra) are not only beautiful, but are extensive enough to permit an audience of nearly 7,000 to stroll comfortably before the concerts and during the intermissions. Certainly the Boston Symphony Orchestra is vastly superior to the Vienna Philharmonic which supplied the orchestral background for most of the music that was heard at Salzburg. In fact, I am one of the many who consider it to be the most highly sensitized orchestra in the world.

•

FROM my observation of teaching done at the Music Center and that done at the Mozarteum (the Salzburg music school) I should say that what is done here is completer and that, as it becomes better organized, it will be considerably superior. The co-operation of two such men as Toscanini and Bruno Walter at Salzburg undeniably gave Salzburg the conducting edge on Tanglewood and, of course, the magnificent operatic productions at Salzburg are, for the present, entirely lacking here. Still, the developments that are possible—and reasonable to expect—in Tanglewood are unlimited and it is my belief that, within a few years, America will have a summer music festival here that will surpass any similar effort that has been made in Europe.

For the opening concert Koussevitzky chose to play the first symphonies of Beethoven, Schumann and Sibelius. The second concert brought forth the Symphony No. 3 by Roy Harris, the only American composer listed for performance in the current Festival and one of only six living composers to be heard at Tanglewood this summer. The Harris Symphony is a glowing piece that Koussevitzky obviously admires, and it was magnificently played. Strauss' "Don Quixote" introduced Piatigorsky and Lefranc in the cello and viola solos. The high point of virtuosity was reached in Ravel's Second Suite from "Daphnis et Chloe," a work that Koussevitzky conducts better than almost anyone else. The third concert presented Jesus Maria Sanroma in Stravinsky's entertaining Capriccio for orchestra with piano solo. Mr. Sanroma, a Puerto Rican and an excellent pianist, is on the permanent staff of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Brahms' Second Symphony closed the program and was played with a pervading warmth.

•

THE past week-end was given over to Beethoven and Tchaikovsky. Koussevitzky's admiration of Tchaikovsky is well known and his conducting of the Russian is unsurpassed while, at the same time, Tchaikovsky fares better than any other composer in the hands of Koussevitzky.

Chamber music had prospered for many years in the Berkshires, but the Symphonic Festival throngs have so greatly increased attendance that the little halls in which chamber music is given are strained and the overflow sits or lies outside on the grass. The pioneer summer chamber music group is the South Mountain Quartet, founded and maintained by Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge. Its weekly concerts are held on South Mountain, just outside of Pittsfield. At Cummington there have been weekly programs of trios interspersed with lectures and solo recitals. Just over the Connecticut line, at Music Mountain, the Gordon Quartet plays two or, sometimes, three concerts each week.

This Clipping From
CUE
NEW YORK, N.Y.
AUG 17 1940

CRITIQUES

BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL

AUG. 1—Opening the seventh festival. Three "firsts"—Beethoven, C major, Opus 21; Schumann, B flat, Opus 38; Sibelius, E minor, Opus 39. Beethoven comfortable, correct, neutral; Schumann plethoric, sometimes noisy; Sibelius rousing, electric, superb in every detail.

AUG. 3—Strauss "Don Quixote"; Harris 3rd Symphony; Debussy "L'Apres Midi"; Ravel second "Daphnis et Chloe" suite. Strauss incomparable; Harris score, well-made and compact if reminiscent, had another exemplary reading; Debussy and Ravel past all criticism. Plaudits to Messrs. Piatigorsky and Lefranc, 'cello and viola in Strauss work.

AUG. 4—Dr. Koussevitzky can own no more than a nodding acquaintance with Brahms, even the autumnal Brahms of the second symphony. But the Mozart E-flat, one of the three great symphonies to emerge from that distressful Summer of [illegible], came forth nobly. Stravinsky Capriccio, Jesus Maria Sanroma as pianist, brittle, glib, and glittering.

AUG. 8—Beethoven—Tchaikowsky. Spalding superb in Beethoven violin concerto. Tchaikowsky fourth drew cheers from a packed house. "Egmont" overture heavy, [illegible]

AUG. 10—Beethoven "Pastoral"; Tchaikowsky "Pathetique". "Pastoral" lacked some of those vernal murmurs and rustlings desired by Ludwig. Andante is not a Russian dance. "Pathetique" uneven, though Boston strings in these moods are incomparable. Breakneck pace of third movement made articulation impossible, chords often ignored. Finale superlative.

THIS CLIPPING FROM SACRAMENTO, CALIF.
BEE

AUG 7 1940

Negro Soprano Celebrates Anniversary At Festival

The Berkshire Festival this month, at Stockbridge, Mass., marks an important anniversary for Dorothy Maynor, the young Negro soprano who will be heard in recital in Sacramento March 29th. Just one year ago, Miss Maynor, an unknown young soprano, from Norfolk, Va., went to the festival to listen to music conducted by Serge Koussevitzky, leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and ended by making music herself for the great conductor.

Her surprise audition for him after one of the orchestra rehearsals has become part of this year's musical history—her singing for an audience of one, in the great empty shell which seats 6,000, Koussevitzky's immediate recognition of her fine voice, his invitation to her to sing for members of his orchestra. The next day, the humble young singer who had planned to be a teacher of public school music sang for a critical audience of musicians an impromptu program which ranged from opera arias to Negro spirituals.

A sold out house greeted Miss Maynor's concert debut in New York in November, the result being a triumph which recalled the first appearances in New York of such artists as Tibbett, Pons and Flagstad.

The year which has followed has indeed been an astonishing one for the young singer, to whom $25 the year before would have seemed impressive. During her first season she was engaged by four of the country's leading symphony orchestras, the New York Philharmonic, the Boston Symphony, the Philadelphia Orchestra and the Chicago Symphony Orchestra. An extensive concert tour was limited only by her desire to continue regular vocal study, yet her first season's concert took her as far west as Wisconsin, as far south as Richmond, Va., and in each concert city delighted audiences agreed with Olin Downes, critic of the New York Times, in his verdict that "she has virtually everything needed by a superb artist."

Tonight she completes an exciting musical year and returns to the scene of her discovery as the featured soloist with Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

With what she terms "her own orchestra" she will sing two great classic works: Adelaide by Beethoven, and Bella mai Fiamma, Addio, one of Mozart's lesser known concert arias.

Miss Maynor is still incredulous about her success.

"I hope only to be worthy of the great music I sing," she says.

The daughter of a Norfolk, Va., minister, Dorothy Maynor received her first musical training in the choir of her father's church. She is a graduate of Hampton Institute, which she entered at 14 and where she received her first vocal lessons. A few years later she toured Europe as a member of the institute's famous Negro chorus. Afterwards, she studied at the Westminster Choir School in Princeton, N. J., until a few friends, who believed in her talents, persuaded her to take some singing lessons in New York. She still studies with her vocal teacher, John Alan Haughton.

THIS CLIPPING FROM JOLIET, ILL.
HERALD-NEWS

AUG 14 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM
N. ATTLEBORO, MASS.
EVE. CHRONICLE

AUG 20 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM

SAN ANTONIO, TEX
LIGHT RETAILER
8/23/40

THIS CLIPPING FROM CORPUS CHRISTI, TEXAS
CALLER

AUG 17 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM GLOUCESTER, MASS.
TIMES

AUG 16 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM OIL CITY, PA.
BLIZZARD

AUG 13 1940

Famed Conductor Realizes Dream

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 24. (INS)—A dream of three decades was fulfilled by Dr. Serge Koussevitzy, famed conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra.

Back in pre-war Russia. Dr. Koussevitsky wanted a school of music in Moscow. But the Red revolution forced the postponement of this idea and Dr. Koussevitzky came to America.

The stock market crash of 1929, wiped out the second attempt started in White Plains, N. Y.

Now, three decades later—in another war year—Dr. Koussevitzky has his dream school, located in the Berkshire hills.

Chiefly, the music centre is unusual because of its teaching plan and the calibre of its teachers.

Here, 340 students have as their general director Serge Koussevitzky, director of the Boston symphony, called the finest orchestra the world has ever known.

Dr. Koussevitzky believed his school should be divided to give intensive training to musicians of first grade intending to make a life work of it. About a third of the studen body is in that class. So he tailorec the course of study to fit.

Five of the advanced students h has accepted for personal coachin in the art of conducting. Dr. Herbert Graf has a small theater his own in which some 20-odd pupils are coached in the art of operatic interpretation. Aaron Coplan and Paul Hindemith head a clas in the study of composition. C Wallace Woodworth teaches a clas in choral conducting.

Other classes: advance orchestra chorus of 200 voices; lectures chamber of music classes—eve dancing.

THIS CLIPPING FROM RIDGEWAY, PA.
RECORD

AUG 17 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM
DEFIANCE, OHIO
CRESCENT NEWS

AUG 31 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM CIRCLEVILLE, O.
HERALD

AUG 26 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM GREENSBURG, IND.
NEWS

AUG 28 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM KANKAKEE, ILL.
REPUBLICAN-NEWS

AUG 28 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM VANDERGRIFT, PA.
NEWS

AUG 16 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM RICHMOND, IND.
PALLADIUM

AUG 15 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM
ST. MARYS, O.
EVENING LEADER

AUG 20 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM
MT. PLEASANT, TEXAS
TIMES

AUG 21 1940

WEST WARWICK, R. I.
Pawtuxet Valley Times

AUG 24 1940

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE

AUG 18 1940

Last Tanglewood Program

The ninth and last concert of the seventh annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival will be given this afternoon at 3:30 in the Music Shed at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. Serge Koussevitzky will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in three works—Haydn's symphony in G major, No. 88, formerly known as No. 13; Sibelius's seventh symphony, and the first symphony of Brahms.

This Clipping From
CLEVELAND, OHIO
PLAIN DEALER
AUG 18 1940

Berkshire Festival Stirs Memories of Salzburg in an East Alive With Music

By Herbert Elwell

HERBERT ELWELL

BENNINGTON, Vt., Aug. 17—The amount of music to be heard here in the east is astonishing. Without running up much mileage it would be possible, I believe, to spend almost the entire summer going from one festival to another; that is, if one had an insatiable appetite for music, which the average reviewer has not, particularly after the close of the regular music season at home. But the change of surroundings does something for one's listening powers and the summer festival atmosphere, so different from the concert hall in winter, awakens a new and special kind of interest in music-making.

There seems to be a stronger creative spirit behind these festivals. They cater to a more selective public, and each has its special character, influenced in no small degree by the traditions of the place and by the landscape.

Obviously outstanding is the Berkshire festival of the Boston Orchestra at Tanglewood, located about half way between Stockbridge and Lenox, Mass. Tanglewood is a large triangular, park-like property. From its spacious lawns and neatly groomed gardens one has a magnificent view of the surrounding Berkshire hills and a small lake to the south. The scene would make a perfect natural backdrop for out-of-doors opera, and plans are being made to utilize it as such.

The orchestra performs in what is called the music shed, which seats about 6,000 and is frequently full. As it is entirely open at the sides and back, the overflow crowd can be accommodated and can hear quite well sitting on the grass outside the shed. The orchestra has its full quota of regular members with Richard Zurgin, concertmaster, and is conducted as during the winter season by the famed Dr. Serge Koussevitzky.

Informality Reigns

An informal atmosphere prevails, although fashionable New England society turns out with an impressive display of elegance. Many notables of the music world are in evidence, and the place hums with a busy, quiet excitement. There is, in fact, a spirit very similar to what one used to sense at the Salzburg festivals in Austria, and some of the same people who worked there are now interested in the development of this center. It has, indeed, the potentialities of usurping the prestige that once belonged to Salzburg.

There is extraordinary enthusiasm at each concert and a large part of the audience crowds down toward the stage at the end of the program to cheer the orchestra and its magnetic leader, "Koussy," as he is affectionately called. Some of the elite go to the Green Room at the right of the stage to pay him their personal homage, after which he glides off in an enormous limousine to his mansion which dominates the valley, much as his dynamic, genial personality pervades the entire music center.

The series of concerts at Tanglewood this year had special significance because of the inauguration of the Berkshire Music Center in connection with them. This school opened three weeks in advance of the concert series which began Aug. 1 and it closes with the festival today. The school includes orchestra, opera and composition departments. Paul Hindemith and Aaron Copland teach composition. Boris Goldovsky heads the opera department, and orchestral students are taught by members of the Boston Orchestra. The students' orchestra rehearses in a barn by the lake and in a garage on the premises. Classes are held in a house on the grounds, and a small stage has been erected with a tent to cover the audience for opera productions. The Cleveland scenic architect, Richard Rychtarik, is on hand to design stage sets. And Herbert Graf of the Metropolitan is stage director.

This Clevelander was surprised at the large number of friends from the home town found either in the audience or actively engaged in the center. Dr. and Mrs. Rodzinski drove over from their near-by goat farm for the opening concert. During a very pleasant visit to their beautiful estate, I found Dr. Rodzinski leading the simple life in preparation for the coming season of the Cleveland Orchestra with its strenuous duties. One of his problems seemed to be to escape the noise of the bleating goats on his farm. He told me he took refuge one day by wandering over to Tanglewood only to find himself in the middle of a rehearsal of Strauss' "Don Quixote," and just at the part which so raucously depicts the bleating of sheep. A more serious frustration both for him and for us all, however, was the labor union difficulty which prevented him from appearing as guest conductor in the festival, as had been planned. The Boston Orchestra is a non-union organization.

Clevelanders Perform

Goldovsky brought with him a number of Cleveland singers, some of whom appeared in operatic excerpts given before an audience of about 3,000 on Aug. 9. Marjorie Phelps scored at Tatjiana in a scene from "Eugene Onegin." James Meena won favor in an excerpt from "Don Carlos," and Mary Van Kirk appeared in a presentation of Hindemith's one-act opera, "Hin und Zuruck." Other Clevelanders participating in the operatic performances were, Margaret Martin, soprano, Fred Popper, accompanist, Carabella Johnson, in charge of make-up, and Maurice Goldman, helping with the choral work. Stanley Harris and David Wulliger were members of the student orchestra. Present as listeners were Nevada Van der Veer, Ruth Edwards, Mrs. Rychtarik and Mrs. Goldovsky. The final opera performance was to have been "Acis and Galatea." Vocal students of the school also made up the chorus for the presentation of Bach's B Minor Mass last Thursday.

Of the earlier concerts in the series, an outstanding success was the performance of the Third Symphony of Roy Harris, who was present to acknowledge a vociferous round of applause, and who lectured at the school the morning of the concert. The programs contained an engaging mixture of old and new, and were done with that exciting elan and finish typical of everything Koussevitzky puts his hand to. Numerous soloists such as Piatigorsky, San Roma, Spalding and the new colored soprano, Dorothy Maynor, helped give interest and distinction to the series.

As indicated above, one cannot travel far in New England without bumping into another festival. On the way up to Pittsfield at South Mountain is the music colony established by Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge in 1918. I recalled attending the first festival there, where the Gordon String Quartet now gives regular concerts. Some 50 miles north one runs into Bennington College, where there was a lot more to hear and see this last week.

Rivals Tanglewood's View

The Bennington School of the Arts, situated in the Green Mountains just outside the town of North Bennington, has a view that rivals Tanglewood. In fact there could be serious competition between the two festivals so close together, were their content less varied. But the Bennington festival is embellished by drama and dance performances as well as music, and the productions represent collaboration of the three schools in the college. Otto Leuning is in charge of the music, Francis Ferguson directs the drama and Martha Hill heads the dance department.

The summer school up here began, I am told, with the annual visits of Doris Humphrey and Charles Weidman, Martha Graham, Hanya Holms and other prominent persons in modern dance. Now it is a thriving center musically, also, and about 20 composers living here have open workshop performances where their works are tried out. Some of the best of them were on the festival program which opened Aug. 10 with the presentation of a melodramatic farce from "Huckleberry Finn" called "The King and the Duke," which contained some lively character dancing and some ingeniously appropriate incidental music by Gregory Tucker.

Perhaps the most pleasing program of this festival, which I was permitted to preview, was that of 17th and 18th century music directed by Ralph Kirkpatrick, an expert harpsichord player and splendid musician. Two Psalms by De Mondonville, which he found in the Library of Congress, were given what was suppposedly their first American performance here, beautifully sung by the coloratura soprano, Ethel Leuning, who incidentally is a sister to Mrs. Boris Goldovsky. Also outstanding on this program were excerpts from Purcell's "Fairy Queen," which had been presented in its entirety with incidental dances before I arrived.

Cleveland Well Represented

The contemporary music program Sunday afternoon opened with the first movement of the Third String Quartet of Quincy Porter, former Clevelander who is now dean at the New England Conservatory of Music. Two other Clevelanders were represented, Lionel Nowak, pianist, who performed his own suite for flute and piano with Luening, and Ann McDougle, who had four interesting songs sung by Reba Marcus. Nowak, who is music director for the Humphrey-Weidman dance group, obviously is making steady strides in composition, for which he has marked talent. Another Clevelander, William Newman, was to have taken part in the fastival but unfortunately was put out of circulation by a broken leg.

Ruth Ives, who has an excellent mezzo, sang Barber's "Dover Beach." There were songs by Charles Ives, Ernst Bacon, Theodore Chanler and others, as well as three charming inventions for piano by Luening, played superbly well by Nowak. The program ended with a lively jazz throwback, "Wise Apple Five," for clarinet and string quartet by Robert McBride.

Martha Graham and her group appeared in three dance compositions, "The Penitent," "Every Soul Is a Circus" and "Letter to the World." The latter, which is a line from a poem of Emily Dickinson, is said to be built on the "tradition" of her life, and it struck me as curiously romantic for what one usually expects from the modern dancers. It even contained steps which were suspiciously similar to those of the classic ballet. The music, following the usual modern dance vein, and confined almost exclusively to 7ths, 9ths and 2ds, was by a talented young resident composer, Hunter Johnson. Music for the first number was by Louis Horst, Miss Graham's own musical director, and that of the second by Paul Nordoff.

All in all the festival programs, which were repeated here throughout the week, reflected healthy, stimulated and progressive creativeness, talent of a high order, and excellent training. The festival draws a loyal admiring audience, not numerous, but large enough to make lodgings here difficult to find during festival week. And each performance I attended was followed by stamping, whistling and shouting such as might well loosen the beams of the prettily constructed early American architecture. Which makes this one of the most attractive campuses in the country.

This Clipping From
CUE
NEW YORK, N.Y.
AUG 17 1940

CRITIQUES

BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL

AUG. 1—Opening the seventh festival. Three "firsts"—Beethoven, C major, Opus 21; Schumann, B flat, Opus 38; Sibelius, E minor, Opus 39. Beethoven comfortable, correct, neutral; Schumann plethoric, sometimes noisy; Sibelius rousing, electric, superb in every detail.

AUG. 3—Strauss "Don Quixote"; Harris 3rd Symphony; Debussy "L'Apres Midi"; Ravel second "Daphnis et Chloe" suite. Strauss incomparable; Harris score, well-made and compact if reminiscent, had another exemplary reading; Debussy and Ravel past all criticism. Plaudits to Messrs. Piatigorsky and Lefranc, 'cello and viola in Strauss work.

AUG. 4—Dr. Koussevitzky can own no more than a nodding acquaintance with Brahms, even the autumnal Brahms of the second symphony. But the Mozart E-flat, one of the three great symphonies to emerge from that distressful Summer of 1788, came forth nobly. Stravinsky Capriccio, Jesus Maria Sanroma as pianist, brittle, glib, and glittering.

AUG. 8—Beethoven—Tchaikowsky. Spalding superb in Beethoven violin concerto. Tchaikowsky fourth drew cheers from a packed house. "Egmont" overture heavy, routine.

AUG. 10—Beethoven "Pastoral"; Tchaikowsky "Pathetique". "Pastoral" lacked some of those vernal murmurs and rustlings decreed by Ludwig. Andante is not a Russian dance. "Pathetique" uneven, though Boston strings in these moods are incomparable. Breakneck pace of third movement made articulation impossible, retards often ignored. Finale superlative.

THIS CLIPPING FROM SACRAMENTO, CALIF.
BEE
AUG 17 1940

Negro Soprano Celebrates Anniversary At Festival

The Berkshire Festival this month, at Stockbridge, Mass., marks an important anniversary for Dorothy Maynor, the young Negro soprano who will be heard in recital in Sacramento March 29th. Just one year ago, Miss Maynor, an unknown young soprano, from Norfolk, Va., went to the festival to listen to music conducted by Serge Koussevitzky, leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and ended by making music herself for the great conductor.

Her surprise audition for him after one of the orchestra rehearsals has become part of this year's musical history—her singing for an audience of one, in the great empty shell which seats 6,000, Koussevitzky's immediate recognition of her fine voice, his invitation to her to sing for members of his orchestra. The next day, the humble young singer who had planned to be a teacher of public school music sang for a critical audience of musicians an impromptu program which ranged from opera arias to Negro spirituals.

A sold out house greeted Miss Maynor's concert debut in New York in November, the result being a triumph which recalled the first appearances in New York of such artists as Tibbett, Pons and Flagstad.

The year which has followed has indeed been an astonishing one for the young singer, to whom $25 the year before would have seemed impressive. During her first season she was engaged by four of the country's leading symphony orchestras, the New York Philharmonic, the Boston Symphony, the Philadelphia Orchestra and the Chicago Symphony Orchestra. An extensive concert tour was limited only by her desire to continue regular vocal study, yet her first season's concert took her as far west as Wisconsin, as far south as Richmond, Va., and in each concert city delighted audiences agreed with Olin Downes, critic of the New York Times, in his verdict that "she has virtually everything needed by a superb artist."

Tonight she completes an exciting musical year and returns to the scene of her discovery as the featured soloist with Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

With what she terms "her own orchestra" she will sing two great classic works: Adelaide by Beethoven, and Bella mai Fiamma, Addio, one of Mozart's lesser known concert arias.

Miss Maynor is still incredulous about her success.

"I hope only to be worthy of the great music I sing," she says.

The daughter of a Norfolk, Va., minister, Dorothy Maynor received her first musical training in the choir of her father's church. She is a graduate of Hampton Institute, which she entered at 14 and where she received her first vocal lessons. A few years later she toured Europe as a member of the institute's famous Negro chorus. Afterwards, she studied at the Westminster Choir School in Princeton, N. J., until a few friends, who believed in her talents, persuaded her to take some singing lessons in New York. She still studies with her vocal teacher, John Alan Haughton.

THIS CLIPPING FROM JOLIET, ILL.
HERALD-NEWS
AUG 14 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM CORPUS CHRISTI, TEXAS
CALLER
AUG 17 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM
N. ATTLEBORO, MASS.
EVE. CHRONICLE
AUG 20 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM GLOUCESTER, MASS.
TIMES
AUG 16 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SAN ANTONIO, TEX
LIGHT RETAILER
8/23/40

THIS CLIPPING FROM OIL CITY, PA.
BLIZZARD
AUG 13 1940

Famed Conductor Realizes Dream

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 24. (INS)—A dream of three decades was fulfilled by Dr. Serge Koussevitsy, famed conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra.

Back in pre-war Russia, Dr. Koussevitsky wanted a school of music in Moscow. But the Red revolution forced the postponement of this idea and Dr. Koussevitzky came to America.

The stock market crash of 1929, wiped out the second attempt started in White Plains, N. Y.

Now, three decades later—in another war year—Dr. Koussevitzky has his dream school, located in the Berkshire hills.

Chiefly, the music centre is unusual because of its teaching plan and the calibre of its teachers.

Here, 340 students have as their general director Serge Koussevitsky, director of the Boston symphony, called the finest orchestra the world has ever known.

Dr. Koussevitzky believed his school should be divided to give intensive training to musicians of first grade intending to make a life work of it. About a third of the student body is in that class. So he tailored the course of study to fit.

Five of the advanced students he has accepted for personal coaching in the art of conducting. Dr. Herbert Graf has a small theater of his own in which some 20-odd pupils are coached in the art of operatic interpretation. Aaron Copland and Paul Hindemith head a class in the study of composition. C. Wallace Woodworth teaches a class in choral conducting.

Other classes: advance orchestra, chorus of 200 voices, lectures, chamber of music classes—even dancing.

THIS CLIPPING FROM RIDGEWAY, PA.
RECORD
AUG 17 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM
DEFIANCE, OHIO
CRESCENT NEWS
AUG 31 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM CIRCLEVILLE, O.
HERALD
AUG 26 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM GREENSBURG, IND.
NEWS
AUG 28 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM KANKAKEE, ILL.
REPUBLICAN-NEWS
AUG 28 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM
MT. PLEASANT, TEXAS
TIMES
AUG 21 1940

WEST WARWICK, R. I.
Pawtuxet Valley Times
AUG 24 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM VANDERGRIFT, PA.
NEWS
AUG 16 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM RICHMOND, IND.
PALLADIUM
AUG 15 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM
ST. MARYS, O.
EVENING LEADER
AUG 20 1940

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE
AUG 18 1940

Last Tanglewood Program

The ninth and last concert of the seventh annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival will be given this afternoon at 3:30 in the Music Shed at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. Serge Koussevitzky will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in three works—Haydn's symphony in G major, No. 88, formerly known as No. 13; Sibelius's seventh symphony, and the first symphony of Brahms.

This Clipping From
CLEVELAND, OHIO
PLAIN DEALER
AUG 18 1940

Berkshire Festival Stirs Memories of Salzburg in an East Alive With Music

By Herbert Elwell

BENNINGTON, Vt., Aug. 17—The amount of music to be heard here in the east is astonishing. Without running up much mileage it would be possible, I believe, to spend almost the entire summer going from one festival to another; that is, if one had an insatiable appetite for music, which the average reviewer has not, particularly after the close of the regular music season at home. But the change of surroundings does something for one's listening powers and the summer festival atmosphere, so different from the concert hall in winter, awakens a new and special kind of interest in music-making.

HERBERT ELWELL

There seems to be a stronger creative spirit behind these festivals. They cater to a more selective public, and each has its special character, influenced in no small degree by the traditions of the place and by the landscape.

Obviously outstanding is the Berkshire festival of the Boston Orchestra at Tanglewood, located about half way between Stockbridge and Lenox, Mass. Tanglewood is a large triangular, park-like property. From its spacious lawns and neatly groomed gardens one has a magnificent view of the surrounding Berkshire hills and a small lake to the south. The scene would make a perfect natural backdrop for out-of-doors opera, and plans are being made to utilize it as such.

The orchestra performs in what is called the music shed, which seats about 6,000 and is frequently full. As it is entirely open at the sides and back, the overflow crowd can be accommodated and can hear quite well sitting on the grass outside the shed. The orchestra has its full quota of regular members with Richard Zurgin, concertmaster, and is conducted as during the winter season by the famed Dr. Serge Koussevitzky.

Informality Reigns

An informal atmosphere prevails, although fashionable New England society turns out with an impressive display of elegance. Many notables of the music world are in evidence, and the place hums with a busy, quiet excitement. There is, in fact, a spirit very similar to what one used to sense at the Salzburg festivals in Austria, and some of the same people who worked there are now interested in the development of this center. It has, indeed, the potentialities of usurping the prestige that once belonged to Salzburg.

There is extraordinary enthusiasm at each concert and a large part of the audience crowds down toward the stage at the end of the program to cheer the orchestra and its magnetic leader, "Koussy," as he is affectionately called. Some of the elite go to the Green Room at the right of the stage to pay him their personal homage, after which he glides off in an enormous limousine to his mansion which dominates the valley, much as his dynamic, genial personality pervades the entire music center.

The series of concerts at Tanglewood this year had special significance because of the inauguration of the Berkshire Music Center in connection with them. This school opened three weeks in advance of the concert series which began Aug. 1 and it closes with the festival today. The school includes orchestra, opera and composition departments. Paul Hindemith and Aaron Copland teach composition. Boris Goldovsky heads the opera department, and orchestral students are taught by members of the Boston Orchestra. The students' orchestra rehearses in a barn by the lake and in a garage on the premises. Classes are held in a house on the grounds, and a small stage has been erected with a tent to cover the audience for opera productions. The Cleveland scenic architect, Richard Rychtarik, is on hand to design stage sets. And Herbert Graf of the Metropolitan is stage director.

This Clevelander was surprised at the large number of friends from the home town found either in the audience or actively engaged in the center. Dr. and Mrs. Rodzinski drove over from their near-by goat farm for the opening concert. During a very pleasant visit to their beautiful estate, I found Dr. Rodzinski leading the simple life in preparation for the coming season of the Cleveland Orchestra with its strenuous duties. One of his problems seemed to be to escape the noise of the bleating goats on his farm. He told me he took refuge one day by wandering over to Tanglewood only to find himself in the middle of a rehearsal of Strauss' "Don Quixote," and just at the part which so raucously depicts the bleating of sheep. A more serious frustration both for him and for us all, however, was the labor union difficulty which prevented him from appearing as guest conductor in the festival, as had been planned. The Boston Orchestra is a non-union organization.

Clevelanders Perform

Goldovsky brought with him a number of Cleveland singers, some of whom appeared in operatic excerpts given before an audience of about 3,000 on Aug. 9. Marjorie Phelps scored at Tatjiana in a scene from "Eugene Onegin." James Meena won favor in an excerpt from "Don Carlos," and Mary Van Kirk appeared in a presentation of Hindemith's one-act opera, "Hin und Zuruck." Other Clevelanders participating in the operatic performances were, Margaret Martin, soprano, Fred Popper, accompanist, Carabella Johnson, in charge of make-up, and Maurice Goldman, helping with the choral work. Stanley Harris and David Wulliger were members of the student orchestra. Present as listeners were Nevada Van der Veer, Ruth Edwards, Mrs. Rychtarik and Mrs. Goldovsky. The final opera performance was to have been "Acis and Galatea." Vocal students of the school also made up the chorus for the presentation of Bach's B Minor Mass last Thursday.

Of the earlier concerts in the series, an outstanding success was the performance of the Third Symphony of Roy Harris, who was present to acknowledge a vociferous round of applause, and who lectured at the school the morning of the concert. The programs contained an engaging mixture of old and new, and were done with that exciting elan and finish typical of everything Koussevitzky puts his hand to. Numerous soloists such as Piatigorsky, San Roma, Spalding and the new colored soprano, Dorothy Maynor, helped give interest and distinction to the series.

As indicated above, one cannot travel far in New England without bumping into another festival. On the way up to Pittsfield at South Mountain is the music colony established by Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge in 1918. I recalled attending the first festival there, where the Gordon String Quartet now gives regular concerts. Some 50 miles north one runs into Bennington College, where there was a lot more to hear and see this last week.

Rivals Tanglewood's View

The Bennington School of the Arts, situated in the Green Mountains just outside the town of North Bennington, has a view that rivals Tanglewood. In fact there could be serious competition between the two festivals so close together, were their content less varied. But the Bennington festival is embellished by drama and dance performances as well as music, and the productions represent collaboration of the three schools in the college. Otto Leuning is in charge of the music, Francis Ferguson directs the drama and Martha Hill heads the dance department.

The summer school up here began, I am told, with the annual visits of Doris Humphrey and Charles Weidman, Martha Graham, Hanya Holms and other prominent persons in modern dance. Now it is a thriving center musically, also, and about 20 composers living here have open workshop performances where their works are tried out. Some of the best of them were on the festival program which opened Aug. [illegible] with the presentation of a melodramatic farce from "Huckleberry Finn" called "The King and the Duke," which contained some lively character dancing and some ingeniously appropriate incidental music by Gregory Tucker.

Perhaps the most pleasing program of this festival, which I was permitted to preview, was that of [illegible] and 18th century music directed by Ralph Kirkpatrick, an expert harpsichord player and splendid musician. Two Psalms by De Mondonville, which he found in the Library of Congress, were given what was suppposedly their first American performance here, beautifully sung by the coloratura soprano, Ethel Leuning, who incidentally is a sister to Mrs. Boris Goldovsky. Also outstanding on this program were excerpts from Purcell's "Fairy Queen," which had been presented in its entirety with incidental dances before I arrived.

Cleveland Well Represented

The contemporary music program Sunday afternoon opened with the first movement of the Third String Quartet of Quincy Porter, former Clevelander who is now dean at the New England Conservatory of Music. Two other Clevelanders were represented, Lionel Nowak, pianist, who performed his own suite for flute and piano with Luening, and Ann McDougle, who had four interesting songs sung by Reba Marcus. Nowak, who is music director for the Humphrey-Weidman dance group, obviously is making steady strides in composition, for which he has marked talent. Another Clevelander, William Newman, was to have taken part in the fastival but unfortunately was put out of circulation by a broken leg.

Ruth Ives, who has an excellent mezzo, sang Barber's "Dover Beach." There were songs by Charles Ives, Ernst Bacon, Theodore Chanler and others, as well as three charming inventions for piano by Luening, played superbly well by Nowak. The program ended with a lively jazz throwback, "Wise Apple Five," for clarinet and string quartet by Robert McBride.

Martha Graham and her group appeared in three dance compositions, "The Penitent," "Every Soul is a Circus" and "Letter to the World." The latter, which is a line from a poem of Emily Dickinson, is said to be built on the "tradition" of her life, and it struck me as curiously romantic for what one usually expects from the modern dancers. It even contained steps which were suspiciously similar to those of the classic ballet. The music, following the usual modern dance vein, and confined almost exclusively to 7ths, 9ths and 2ds, was by a talented young resident composer, Hunter Johnson. Music for the first number was by Louis Horst, Miss Graham's own musical director, and that of the second by Paul Nordoff.

All in all the festival programs, which were repeated here throughout the week, reflected healthy, stimulated and progressive creativeness, talent of a high order, and excellent training. The festival draws a loyal admiring audience, not numerous, but large enough to make lodgings here difficult to find during festival week. And each performance I attended was followed by stamping, whistling and shouting such as might well loosen the beams of the prettily constructed early American architecture. Which makes this one of the most attractive campuses in the country.

133

This Clipping From
WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM
AUG 18 1940

Dorothy Maynor Applauded In 'Homecoming' Concert

Soprano, Who Won Koussevitzky's Praise Last Year, Sings With Boston Symphony At Berkshire Music Festival

By JOHN SELBY
Associated Press Arts Editor

STOCKBRIDGE, Aug. 17.—Tonight was a homecoming for one of America's finest young artists, the soprano Dorothy Maynor.

Exactly a year ago Miss Maynor was a gifted young Negro student with a few devoted believers, among them Miss Harriet Curtin of Boston. She came to Tanglewood to hear the Boston Symphony in the now famous "Music Shed," which houses its Berkshire Symphonic Festival.

Through a set of odd circumstances, she was asked to sing at the picnic Serge Koussevitzky gives each year for his players—and her career was born right there.

Dr. Koussevitzky and all who heard here were delighted. Since then Miss Maynor has become a household word in musical America, and also a kind of symbol for modesty and devotion to an art. She has been called the hardest worker among singers, and certainly she is the only one on record who makes a point of rising at 6 a. m. to start her day of study.

Tonight Miss Maynor sang twice with the orchestra on this next to last program of the current festival, offering the Mozart concert aria, "Bella Mia Fiama, Addio" and Beethoven's moving "Adelaide." She earned the tumult of applause she received and acknowledged it with the curious gesture now a habit with her, which seems to say, "Don't thank me, thank the composer."

Dr. Koussevitzky chose music of widely differing styles, including one work by Paul Hindemith, the former German composer who has taught this Summer in Koussevitzky's Berkshire music center here. This was Hindemith's so-called symphony, "Mathis der Maler."

The audience alseo heard Prokofieff's "Classical" Symphony, the suite from Faure's incidental music to "Pelleas et Melisande" and the late Ottorino Respighi's arrangement for orchestra of Bach's organ Passacaglia in C Minor.

Tomorrow the seventh festival closes with music of Haydn, Sibelius and Brahms.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
SUNDAY UNION & REPUBLICAN
AUG 18 1940

The concert Thursday evening was one of the best of the season, to our way of thinking, with a program of Beethoven and Tschaikowsky that was delightful. The evening was perfect and those who sat on the spacious lawns of Tanglewood heard music drift enchantingly from across the greensward and blend with night sounds as darkness settled over the hills. This evening the Berkshire festival chorus with soloists will give us Bach's "Mass in B Minor," to which we are looking forward with keen anticipation, and then on Sunday will come the closing concert with a program of Haydn, Sibelius and Brahms.

The impressive thing about this great music festival is not alone the remarkable level upon which the artists have maintained their efforts, but is due in part also to the receptive enthusiasm of the audience, and as one prominent guest remarked to us recently, it is doubtful if any event of any sort in this country has ever before attracted such a long list of distinguished personages. And through it all there has been a democracy of interests that has been amazing, with the privileged and the less privileged visiting and chatting on an equality that, to quote a remark we overheard Gov Saltonstall make on Thursday, "is only possible here in America." The Berkshire symphonic festival, under the inspiring leadership of Conductor Serge Koussevitzky, has completed another successful season, but its great contribution is not that it has rendered beautiful music, but that it has made beautiful music available to all lovers of the art. The music loving public owe a tremendous debt of gratitude to Miss Robinson Smith, president of the Berkshire symphonic festival, and to Joseph Franz, chairman of the Tanglewood committee, and to a score of other Berkshire residents who, through a generous contribution of both time and interest, have provided every detail that could add to the enjoyment of the audience.

This Clipping From
ALBANY, N. Y.
TIMES UNION
AUG 18 1940

Miss Dorothy Maynor, star of last night's Boston Symphony orchestra concert at "Tanglewood" will appear as one of the attractions of the Albany Civic Music association during the coming season.

The Berkshire Festival this year, at Stockbridge, Mass., marks an important anniversary for Dorothy Maynor, the young Negro soprano, who will make her first extensive concert tour next winter. Just one year ago, Miss Maynor, an unknown young soprano, from Norfolk, Va., went to the Festival to listen to music conducted by Serge Koussevitzky, leader of the Boston Symphony orchestra, and ended up by making music herself for the great conductor. Her surprise audition for him after one of the orchestra rehearsals has become part of this year's musical history—her singing for an audience of one, in the great empty shell which seats 6,000, Koussevitzky's immediate recognition of her fine voice, his invitation to her to sing for members of his orchestra. The next day, the humble young singer who had planned to be a teacher of public school music sang for a critical audience of musicians an impromptu program which ranged from opera arias to Negro spirituals. Critics who were present proclaimed her the find of the decade. A sold-out house greeted Miss Maynor's concert debut in New York in November, the result being a triumph which recalled the first appearances in New York of such artists as Tibbett, Pons and Flagstad.

The year which has followed has indeed been an astonishing one for the young singer, to whom $25 the year before would have seemed impressive. During her first season she was engaged by four of the country's leading symphony orchestras, the N. Y. Philharmonic, the Boston Symphony, the Philadelphia orchestra and the Chicago Symphony orchestra. An extensive concert tour was only limited by her desire to continue regular vocal study, yet her first season's concerts took her as far west as Wisconsin, as far south as Richmond, and in each concert city delighted audiences agreed with Olin Downes, critic of the N. Y. Times in his verdict that "she has virtually everything needed by a superb artist." On August 17th, she completes an exciting musical year and returns to the scene of her discovery as featured soloist with Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony orchestra. With what she terms "her own orchestra" she will sing two great classic works: "Adelaide" by Beethoven, and "Bella mia fiamma, addio," one of Mozart's lesser known concert arias. To Dorothy Maynor it will be not only a musical occasion, but a happy reunion with the orchestra which first publicly discovered her.

Yet all this acclaim has not upset Miss Maynor's fundamental simplicity in the least, and she is still incredulous about her success. "I hope only to be worthy of the great music I sing," she says. The daughter of a Norfolk, Va., minister, Dorothy Maynor received her first musical training in the choir of her father's church. She is a graduate of Hampton Institute, which she entered at 14 and where she received her first vocal lessons. A few years later she toured Europe as a member of the Institute's famous Negro chorus. Afterwards, she studied at the Westminster Choir school in Princeton, N. J., until a few friends, who believed in her talents, persuaded her to take some singing lessons in New York. She still studies religiously with her vocal teacher, John Alan Haughton. This year the musical world has been stirred by the beautiful voice and unaffected artistry of this modest young woman who "just likes to sing," and who in 12 months has captured the interest of the whole country.

This Clipping From MILWAUKEE, WIS.
JOURNAL
AUG 18 1940

Fame in a Year to Negro Soprano Dorothy Maynor

THE Berkshire festival this year, at Stockbridge, Mass., marks an important anniversary for Dorothy Maynor, the young Negro soprano who will make her first extensive concert tour next winter. Just one year ago Miss Maynor, an unknown young soprano, from Norfolk, Va., went to the festival to listen to music conducted by Serge Koussevitzky, leader of the Boston symphony orchestra, and ended up by making music herself for the great conductor. Her surprise audition for him after one of the orchestra rehearsals has become part of this year's musical history—her singing for an audience of one, in the great empty shell which seats 6,000, Koussevitzky's immediate recognition of her fine voice, his invitation to her to sing for members of his orchestra. The next day the humble young singer who had planned to be a teacher of public school music sang for a critical audience of musicians an impromptu program which ranged from opera arias to Negro spirituals. A sold-out house greeted Miss Maynor's concert debut in New York in November.

The year which has followed has indeed been an astonishing one for the young singer. During her first season she was engaged by four of the country's leading symphony orchestras, the New York Philharmonic, the Boston Symphony, the Philadelphia Orchestra and the Chicago Symphony orchestra. Her first season's concerts took her as far west as Wisconsin, as far south as Richmond.

Saturday she returned to the scene of her discovery as featured soloist with Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony orchestra.

The daughter of a Norfolk (Va.) minister, Dorothy Maynor received her first musical training in the choir of her father's church. She is a graduate of Hampton institute, which she entered at 14 and where she received her first vocal lessons. A few years later she toured Europe as a member of the institute's famous Negro chorus. Afterward she studied at the Westminster Choir school in Princeton, N. J.

This Clipping From
AKRON, O.
BEACON-JOURNAL
AUG 18 1940

Mary Van Kirk At Berkshire

ACTIVE at the Berkshire festival at Stockbridge, Mass., this summer, Mary Van Kirk of Akron has had an opportunity to reveal her rich contralto voice in two scenes from "Lohengrin."

In a letter to her parents, Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Van Kirk, 703 Thayer st., the talented young singer wrote that Herbert Graf of the Metropolitan announced there was an encore request for her to sing in the Wagnerian opera. So Miss Van Kirk was one of the featured singers on the program Friday night for allied relief, along with other artists.

She sang the second scene from the second act of "Lohengrin." Serge Koussevitzky, noted conductor who is directing the festival, and his Boston symphony orchestra also were on the program. Earlier in the season at Stockbridge, Miss Van Kirk did the first scene of the second act of "Lohengrin," and scored such a triumph that the request came for her to continue.

Without a doubt, Miss Van Kirk is well along the road toward her goal, an opera career, particularly in Wagnerian opera. She has been coaching with Graf this summer at Stockbridge. A week ago her teacher, Mme. Nevada Van der Veer of Cleveland, was in Stockbridge to hear Miss Van Kirk sing.

This Clipping From
WATERBURY, CONN.
REPUBLICAN
AUG 18 1940

Symphonic Festival Will Conclude This Afternoon

(Special to The Republican)

Stockbridge, Mass., Aug. 17—The final concert of the seventh annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Tanglewood will be given Sunday afternoon with the presentation of the ninth concert under the direction of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky. The concert will begin at 3:30 o'clock and will present symphonies by Haydn, Sibelius and Brahms.

This concert will bring to a gala conclusion this year's festival which has been the largest yet in number of concerts and attendance. Record-breaking audiences have heard the large number of soloists who were with the orchestra this year. An additional concert was given Friday evening for the benefit of the Allied Relief Fund with more than 6,500 persons on the grounds for the many features.

Sunday Concerts Outstanding

Sunday concerts this year have been outstanding with large crowds making a real festival on the beautiful grounds that are part of Tanglewood. Friday night with a full moon shining over the huge music shed, one of the most outstanding musical programs of the year was given with soloists, the Boston Symphony orchestra, an auction with proceeds going for the purchase of a mobile ambulance for Great Britain. There were many other added attractions with speakers including Gov. Herbert Lehman, Dorothy Thompson and Sir Louis Beale.

The Saturday night concert presented music of Prokofieff, Hindemith, Mozart, Beethoven, Faure, and Bach. Dorothy Maynor appeared as soloist with the orchestra. It was she who created such a stir in music circles last year when she was presented at Tanglewood at a picnic given by Dr. Koussevitzky. SAMUEL MEYERS.

REDUCTION

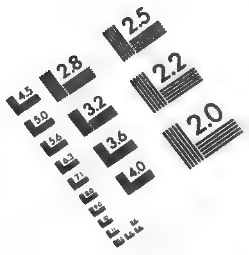
RATIO

19x

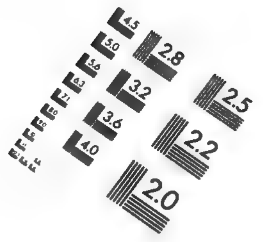
2.5 mm
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

2.0 mm
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

1.5 mm
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

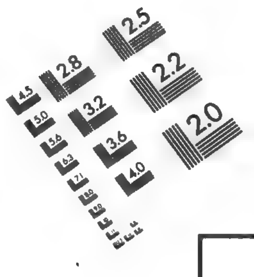


2.5
2.8
2.2
3.2
2.0
3.6
4.0
4.5
5.0

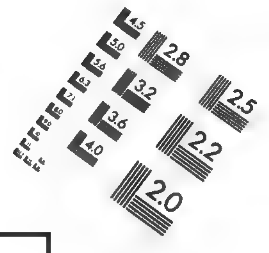


2.8
2.5
3.2
2.2
3.6
2.0
4.0
4.5
5.0

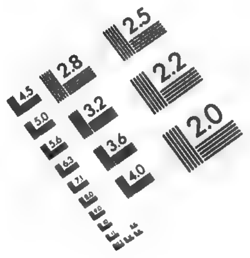
PM-MGP 13"x18"
METRIC GENERAL PURPOSE TARGET
PHOTOGRAPHIC



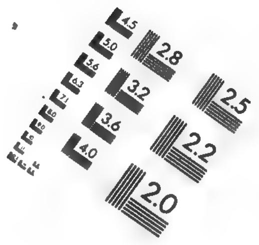
2.5
2.8
2.2
3.2
2.0
3.6
4.0
4.5
5.0



2.8
2.5
3.2
2.2
3.6
2.0
4.0
4.5
5.0



2.5
2.8
2.2
3.2
2.0
3.6
4.0
4.5
5.0

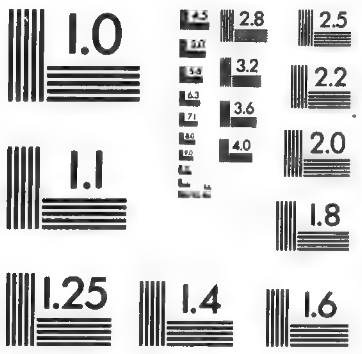


2.8
2.5
3.2
2.2
3.6
2.0
4.0
4.5
5.0

200 mm

150 mm

100 mm



1.0
2.8
2.5
3.2
2.2
3.6
2.0
4.0
1.1
1.8
1.25
1.4
1.6

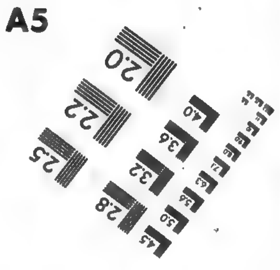
1.0 mm
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

1.5 mm
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

2.0 mm
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

2.5 mm
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

A5

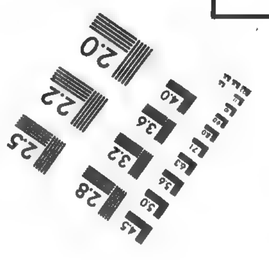


2.0
2.2
4.0
3.6
2.5
3.2
2.8

2.0
3.6
4.0
2.2
3.2
2.8
2.5

A4

A3



2.0
2.2
4.0
3.6
2.5
3.2
2.8

PRECISION℠ RESOLUTION TARGETS

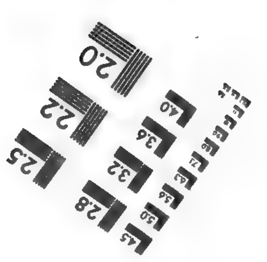
Century

A&P

1303 Geneva Avenue
St. Paul, MN 55119

2.0
4.0
3.6
2.2
3.2
2.8
2.5

4.5 mm
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890



2.0
2.2
4.0
3.6
2.5
3.2
2.8

4.0
3.6
2.0
3.2
2.2
2.8
2.5

3.5 mm
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

3.0 mm
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES
AUG 18 1940

The Berkshire Music Center takes time off to lunch, which is brought to them in a vehicle which used to be a bus. Shown here are Herbert Graf, head of the Opera-Dramatics Section; Lester Roberts, Lenox, Mass., hotel man, who arranged for the lunch bus; Ruth Posselt, violinist; Richard Burgin, concertmaster of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and a student of the Center.

TANGLEWOOD TALE

This afternoon at Tanglewood ends the eighth season of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, and the first of its Institute for advanced and its Academy for amateur students of music. Instead, as once, of dwindling to a trickle in August, music in America is swelling to a torrent, and of this Summer freshet the Berkshire Music Center is now in main stream. But spectacular as are the multitudes who pour in annual pilgrimage to its concerts, already it begins to look as though this new school might be the more enduring force. It has doubled Tanglewood's voltage.

The grounds are peopled with eager young talent: a rehearsal of "Acis and Galatea" will be sounding music of 18th century opera over a formal garden, lawns, hedges and splashing fountains, where it is to be performed in a setting true to its period; the old Barn, painted a fresh coat of Stockbridge red, looks receptive to a load of hay, instead of which comes pealing out of its open double doors a rehearsal of Bach's concerto for three pianofortes and orchestra; the theatre is a wooden stage facing bench seats under a tent roof, and here a concert of chamber music distills its subtile essence on Summer air; while across acres of lawn in the huge Music Shed may be a full orchestra rehearsal, unless the new organ is storming out a toccata and fugue of Bach; yet so adroitly have all these been contrived that no two sets of acoustics collide. And you would have a long search to find three hundred and more people happier than these young students.

*
* *

Their talent has surprised the faculty. That faculty, being members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, plus composers, conductors, choirmasters and operatic coaches, would be exacting in any case, yet judicious though the effort was to pick promising talent, the talent picked seems to have been a pick of the pick. These youngsters perform like veterans—no need to sit on the edge of your seat to help them play. The advanced student orchestra of the Institute gives one concert a week; no audience was expected save the school itself, though they were free to invite their friends. The number of their friends was astounding. Two thousand people turned up regularly for these concerts, which were up to a performance level equal to that of many an established symphony orchestra, and when Dr. Koussevitzky put them through the Fantastic Symphony of Berlioz, they surpassed even that level, surprising everybody including themselves. The company of young singers, likewise, who gave an evening of operatic scenes—von Weber, Verdi, Tschaikowsky—in costume and stage settings, were discovering their abilities to impersonate as well as to sing; which is the special function of this school—not to teach instrument or voice but to instruct in performance.

As might have been, and probably was expected, performing talent has exceeded composing talent, the second being a slower growing and later blooming variety, though it is being carefully cultivated under the tendance of several mature composers; but of orchestral conductors more came to the party than could be seated at table. Places of one sort or another, however, were made for all who wished to stay, and two of the most promising student conductors are still under voting age.

*
* *

The concert crowds at Tanglewood are models of manners. An example is set by the management: once inside the grounds and separated from your motor horn, no signs tell you not to do this or not to step there. It is go anywhere you like and sit anywhere you please, except on Festival concert days when you sit where your ticket entitles. Saturday night the lawn audience under the stars was 2400, a large one for Symphony Hall itself, and this all outside the Shed which held more than 6000. Scenically the lawn-sitters had the better of it, arranging themselves neatly in the shade-patterns of great trees of a sunny afternoon, and evenings, dreaming under the pensive starshine while a golden half-moon stole behind the fir-spires of the winding avenue drive. Fireflies sparkled like violins playing spiccato, but Berkshire mosquitos seem allergic to the orchestral symphony and have organized a boycott. Those who like fine landscape with great music can have it for once: the scenery is an idyl of high Summer, the lake a silver shield laid on green velours, mountains swelling ridge beyond ridge in graduated tones of haze-blue, and overhead majestic cloud-Alps afloat on oceans of sky. Amid this symphonic poem of hills and water anyone can walk freely into the grounds on any but Festival days, no questions asked, and soak up hundreds of dollars worth of music which is floating about in air whose artistic content per fluid ounce must exceed in percentage of intoxicant all but the very choicest vintage of the grape, and maybe that too.

*
* *

Tanglewood has become doubly a landmark. Here music in 20th century America stands much as in the 19th with Nathaniel Hawthorne on these same acres stood the art of American prose fiction. Musical composition is our youngest art, and we are the youngest people to take it up. What is more awkward, we take it up when that art is full-fledged, and perhaps when it has lived full cycle. Normally the process of growth in art, as in life, is from simplicity through complexity to a higher simplicity; but we in America come to music when it has attained forms excessively complex.

In literatures of the spoken and written word poetry flowers before prose; prose, in the forms of oral saga, then of written history, and finally of fiction, flowers before criticism, self-consciousness comes last. As illustration one has only to remember that grammar and syntax were unknown in the Great Age of Greek literature; they were formulated two centuries later at Alexandria when that literature had grown self-conscious. It is of course easier, as it is more natural, to move from the simple to the complex, as music in Europe did, than to move from the complex to the simple, as music in America apparently must do before it can become its true self—which may be what ails our composers, for either they attempt greater complexities, or else they assume a forced simplicity, which is worse than none.

Self-consciousness is the blight of modern music. "As there is no more sure sign of a fine nature than the absence of self-consciousness, so there is no more sure sign of greatness than simplicity." But unself-conscious our composers seem unable, or perhaps afraid to be. The great creative epoch of music (circa 1720 to 1920) was one in which form was elaborated, whereas the performances of it were often if not generally crude. That epoch has now been succeeded by one in which performance is elaborated. (Imagine Shakespeare at a modern performance of "Hamlet.") The great composers of the 18th and 19th centuries would be thunderstruck by the splendor of their works as performed today, but it is more than probable that were they to hear the works of modern composers they would be thunderstruck in a different sense.

So the Tanglewood Tale of 20th century American music is yet to be told. Like Hawthorne's originals, it should be intelligible to youth. (Why be old before our time?) It should, if possible, be simple and it must be unself-conscious, a tale of and for a people still young in spirit.

This Clipping From DETROIT, MICH.
FREE PRESS
AUG 18 1940

Modern Tanglewood Tale

BY VIRGINIA BALINGER

YOU hear Serge Koussevitzky called "Kousey" around Tanglewood, that delightful place near Lenox, Mass., which is the permanent home of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival. That very air of informality pervades the place. You feel it the minute you drive on to the shady New England country road leading to Tanglewood and enter the grounds through a colonnade of the tallest pine trees.

Emerging into the clearing, one is on the spacious lawn and just a few hundred feet across the way stands the newly-completed Shed. That famous Shed, the summer home of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, was given its unique fan-shaped design by Eliel Sarrinen, of Cranbrook. It is open on the three sides of the fan and the stage for the orchestra is in the point.

The beauty of a typical August morning cast its spell over the Shed and the grounds. One began to feel the meaning of Dr. Koussevitzky's words, "a dream come true." A symphony of nature setting the stage for a symphony of music, composed of magnificent trees everywhere, formal gardens, the sloping lawn down to the little mountain lake Mahkeenac, with the Berkshires everywhere in the distance, covered by the ever-present blue haze.

MUSIC

Men were sauntering one by one toward the Shed, taking their places on the stage and tuning their instruments. It was rehearsal time for the Boston Symphony. Presently Dr. Serge Koussevitzky appeared with Albert Spalding, likewise headed for the Shed.

A bench under a large oak tree just outside made a perfect spot from which to hear the rehearsal of the Beethoven Violin Concerto and the Tchaikowsky Fourth Symphony, the program for that evening's concert. Dr. Koussevitzky was giving it last-minute touches.

ALL of Tanglewood seemed to be astir with activity. This stir was the new Berkshire Music Center, established by Dr. Koussevitzky, and right in the midst of its first season. It seems to have appropriated every part of the orchestra's magnificent estate from the front entrance, where students arrive by cars and bus, bicycles or on foot right down to the lake where from the pier through the trees the splash of swimmers is heard in the hotter hours of the day.

When asked as to the purpose of the Center, Dr. Koussevitzky focuses those dynamic eyes directly on you and says: "We have chosen a practical method, so that students may draw from us some of the essence of the knowledge and experience we have acquired in our years of work."

And there you have it. All about these several hundred students were living and working in music. Strains of a Beethoven piano and violin sonata came from one direction, a Mozart quintet was being rehearsed in another.

Down the hill toward the lake was an interesting-looking barn, and from the sounds in it, one knew it wasn't merely a barn. The sounds were suggestive of the opening Kyrie of Bach's B Minor Mass, for the festival chorus was deep in rehearsal of the work which was their grand objective for the festival performance with the Boston Symphony on Aug. 16. G. Wallace Woodworth, their conductor, was goading the five-part choir into a fine, rounded unity. But on this occasion there was no audience except a herd of cows grazing on the slope.

TIME out for lunch: A bus was appearing, equipped as a cafeteria. It pulled up to the barn, and Bach was deserted temporarily for trays of hot and cold dishes. These were carried to various spots on the shady lawn for an hour of relaxation. The bus moved on then to the next group of students.

About 1:30 p. m. Dr. Herbert Graf, of the Metropolitan Opera Co., was gathering together over in one section of the formal gardens his group of 20 singers whom he has accepted for operatic training this summer. Dr. Graf very graciously left his work to talk about the group and his work with them. He is stressing particularly the importance of interpretive work in opera—and the group was to spend the afternoon in pantomime of Handel's "Acis and Galatea," which they will present for an opera program in the little theater on the grounds.

Back to the Shed and strains of the Tchaikowsky "Romeo and Juliet," which were irresistable. This time it was the Institute Orchestra—composed of the advanced musicians of the school. A youthful but extremely proficient orchestra of 60 was being conducted by a young man, one of the five chosen by Dr. Koussevitzky for special conducting work under his personal direction. This chap, Lucas Foss, only 17 years old, is a French refugee.

Dr. Koussevitzky sat in the front row, along with members of the Boston Symphony. He interrupted occasionally to give a word of advice. Two of the others in this special group of five young conductors turned out to be middle-westerners, and one Michigan's own Thor Johnson, of Ann Arbor. The other was Gaylord Brown, of Evansville, Ind. Mr. Johnson told how the five of them had as their assignment the great privilege of conducting the Boston Symphony in Beethoven's First Symphony and "Til Eulenspiegel."

WHILE talking with Mr. Johnson and Mr. Brown, Paul Hindemith passed by. His opera, "Hin und Zuruck," was to be staged the following evening by a group of Dr. Graf's students.

And so the activity of a day at Tanglewood goes. The stir has hardly subsided when the trek of cars from every state in the Union begins carrying the audience for the evening's program of the Boston Symphony. Some are famous, a great many are not. But all are there for one reason, a love of music.

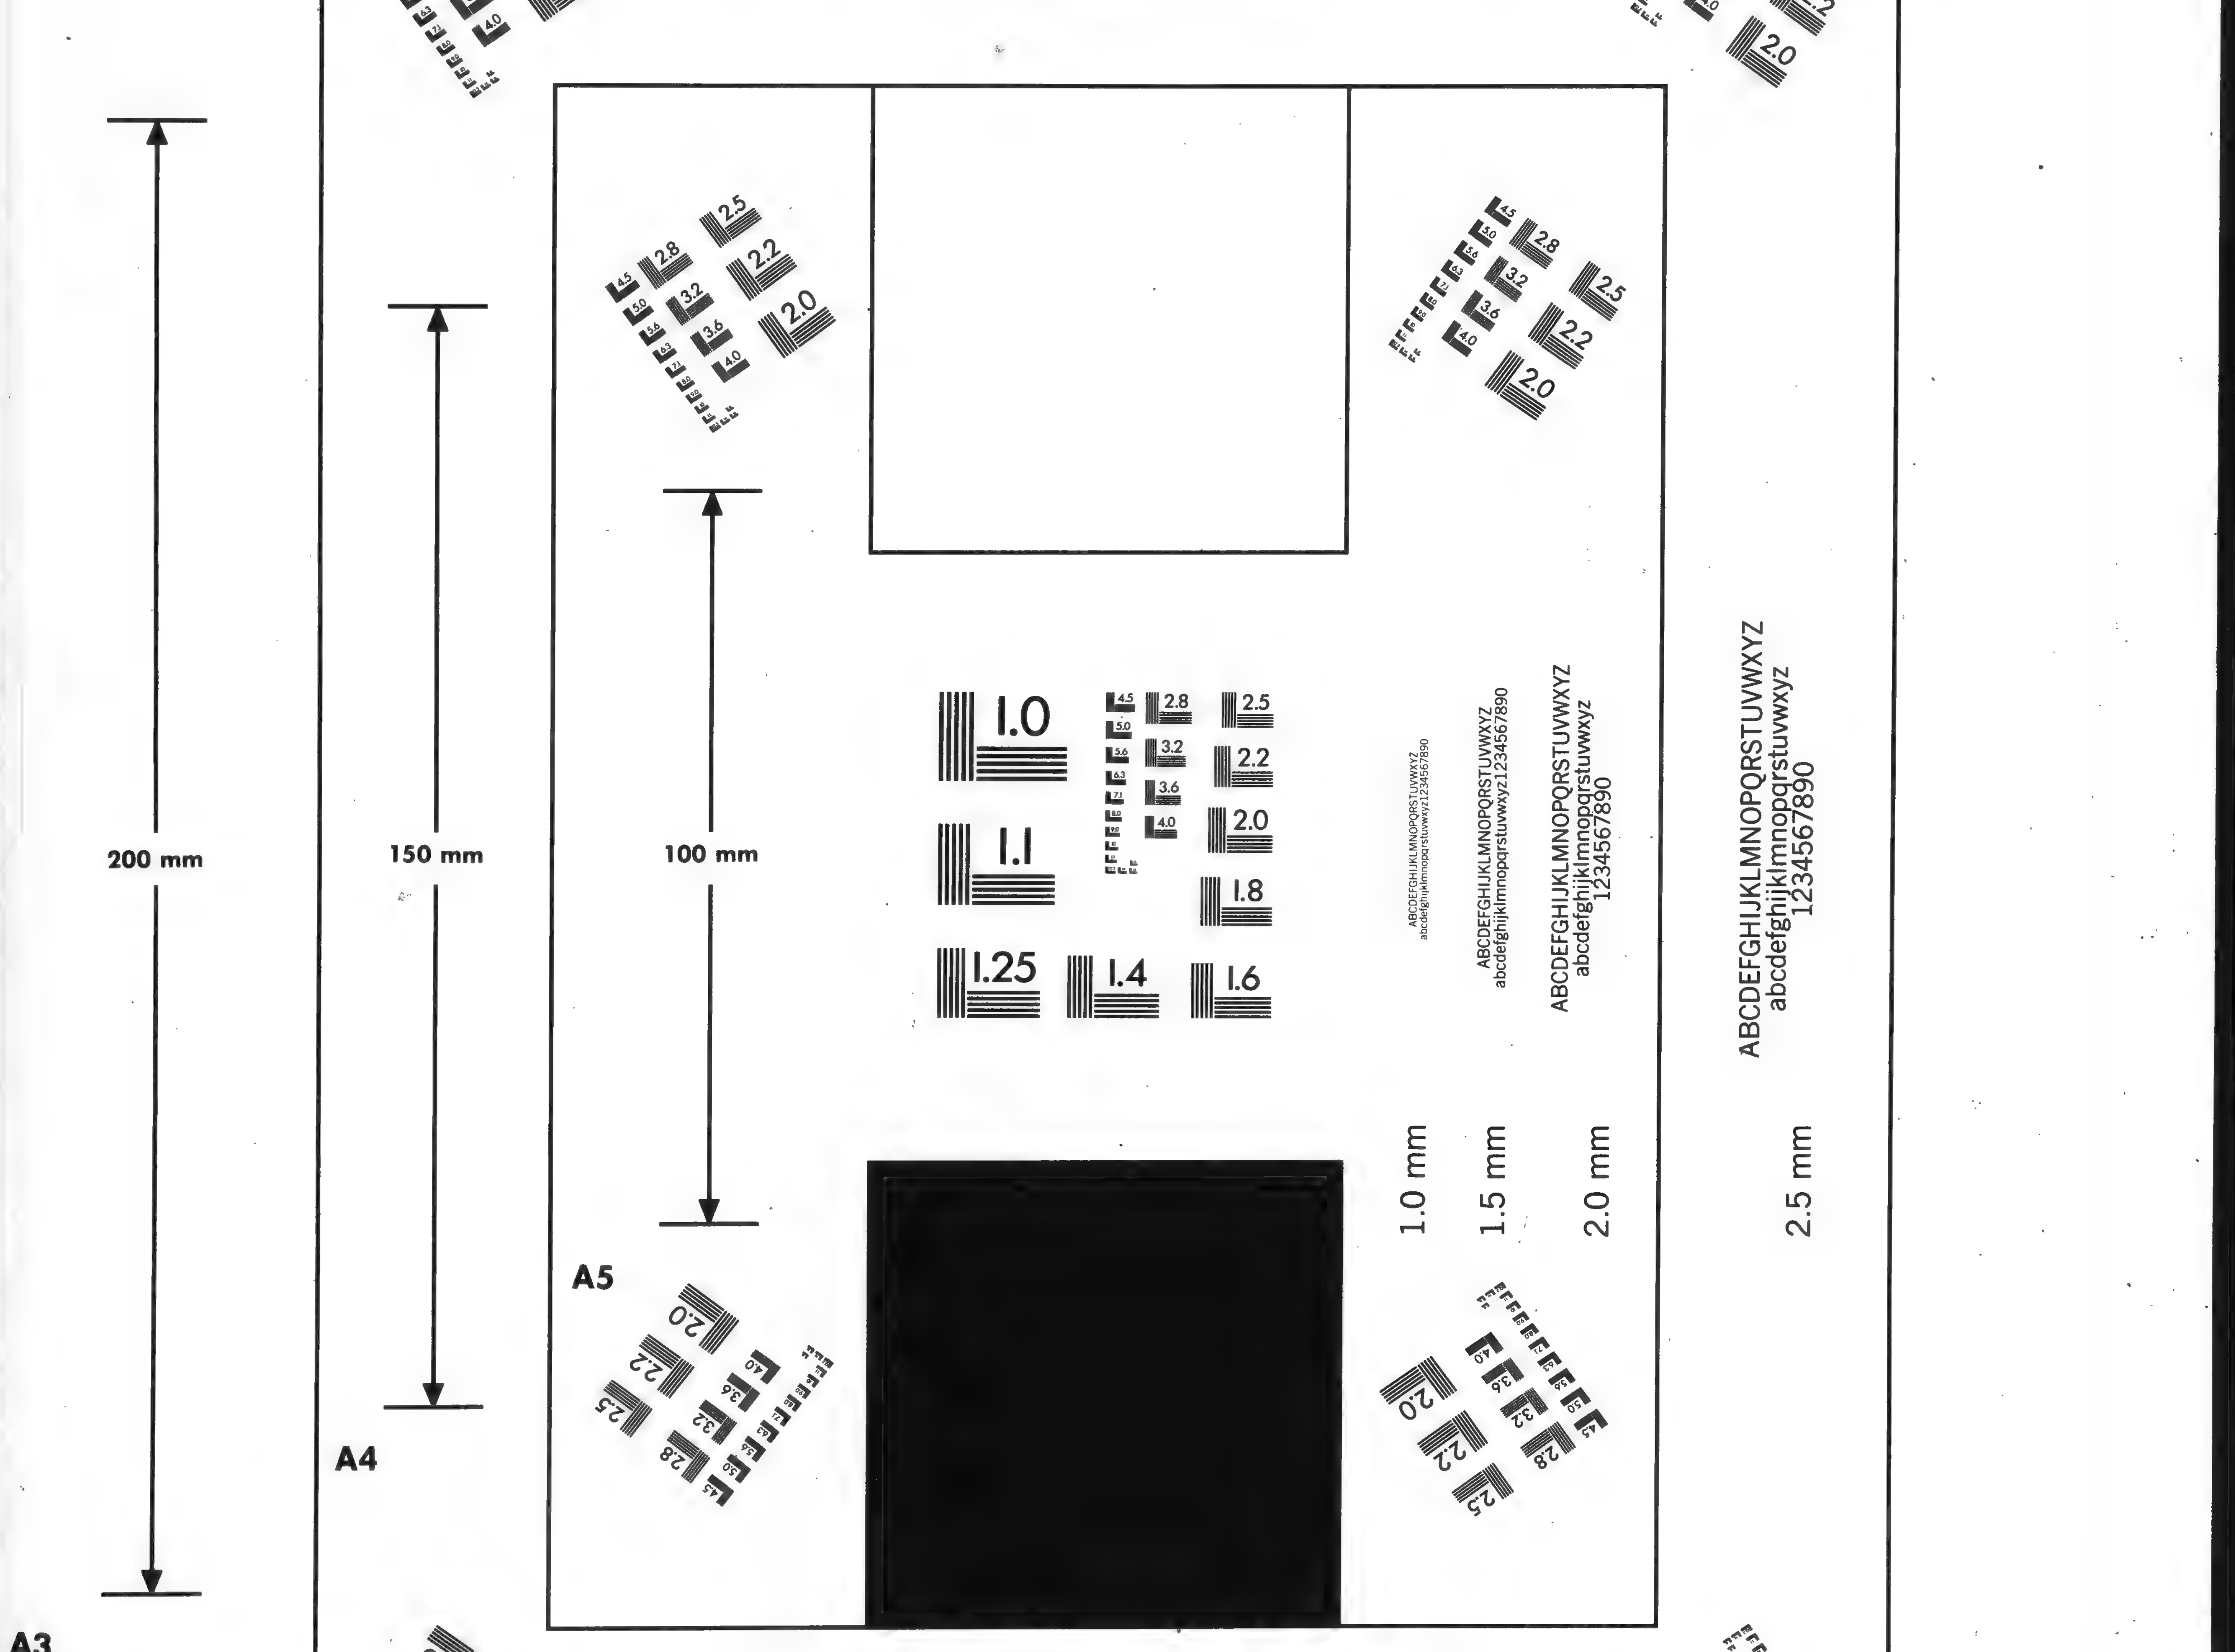
Walking through the dress circle one is always certain to find celebrities from every walk of life. Just a few evenings ago Lucretia Bori and Mrs. Cole Porter were seen there, as was Toscanini, who came for a visit with Dr. Graf and others. Detroit is well represented in the boxes.

One Saturday evening Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt was a guest in the Lester Robert's box. Norman Davis was nearby, with Owen Johnson. Ted Shawn was there with a party from his summer school of the dance, nearby at Lee, Mass. And Miriam Winslow, who has delighted Detroit audiences with her dance programs, attended a Saturday night's program with a group of friends. She is teaching this summer at Ted Shawn's.

Dr. Koussevitzky, we find, does not like to have Tanglewood called the "American Salzburg." So beware! He feels that it is a venture so individual that it should not be compared to another. It is a realization of greatness in music and achievement through simplicity, and that he feels gives Tanglewood its individualism.

REDUCTION
RATIO
14x

PM-MGP 13″x18″
METRIC GENERAL PURPOSE TARGET
PHOTOGRAPHIC



200 mm
150 mm
100 mm
A3
A4
A5
1.0
1.1
1.25
1.4
1.6
1.8
2.0
2.2
2.5
2.8
3.2
3.6
4.0
4.5
5.0
5.6
6.3
7.1
8.0
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890
1.0 mm
1.5 mm
2.0 mm
2.5 mm

PRECISION℠ RESOLUTION TARGETS

Century

A&P

1303 Geneva Avenue
St. Paul, MN 55119

1347

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES
AUG 18 1940

The Berkshire Music Center takes time off to lunch, which is brought to them in a vehicle which used to be a bus. Shown here are Herbert Graf, head of the Opera-Dramatics Section; Lester Roberts, Lenox, Mass., hotel man, who arranged for the lunch bus; Ruth Posselt, violinist; Richard Burgin, concertmaster of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and a student of the Center.

This Clipping From DETROIT, MICH.
FREE PRESS
AUG 18 1940

Modern Tanglewood Tale

BY VIRGINIA BALINGER

YOU hear Serge Koussevitzky called "Kousey" around Tanglewood, that delightful place near Lenox, Mass., which is the permanent home of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival. That very air of informality pervades the place. You feel it the minute you drive on to the shady New England country road leading to Tanglewood and enter the grounds through a colonnade of the tallest pine trees.

Emerging into the clearing, one is on the spacious lawn and just a few hundred feet across the way stands the newly-completed Shed. That famous Shed, the summer home of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, was given its unique fan-shaped design by Eliel Sarrinen, of Cranbrook. It is open on the three sides of the fan and the stage for the orchestra is in the point.

The beauty of a typical August morning cast its spell over the Shed and the grounds. One began to feel the meaning of Dr. Koussevitzky's words, "a dream come true." A symphony of nature setting the stage for a symphony of music, composed of magnificent trees everywhere, formal gardens, the sloping lawn down to the little mountain lake Mahkeenac, with the Berkshires everywhere in the distance, covered by the ever-present blue haze.

MUSIC

Men were sauntering one by one toward the Shed, taking their places on the stage and tuning their instruments. It was rehearsal time for the Boston Symphony. Presently Dr. Serge Koussevitzky appeared with Albert Spalding, likewise headed for the Shed.

A bench under a large oak tree just outside made a perfect spot from which to hear the rehearsal of the Beethoven Violin Concerto and the Tchaikowsky Fourth Symphony, the program for that evening's concert. Dr. Koussevitzky was giving it last-minute touches.

ALL of Tanglewood seemed to be astir with activity. This stir was the new Berkshire Music Center, established by Dr. Koussevitzky, and right in the midst of its first season. It seems to have appropriated every part of the orchestra's magnificent estate from the front entrance, where students arrive by cars and bus, bicycles or on foot, right down to the lake where from the pier through the trees the splash of swimmers is heard in the hotter hours of the day.

When asked as to the purpose of the Center, Dr. Koussevitzky focuses those dynamic eyes directly on you and says: "We have chosen a practical method, so that students may draw from us some of the essence of the knowledge and experience we have acquired in our years of work."

And there you have it. All about these several hundred students were living and working in music. Strains of a Beethoven piano and violin sonata came from one direction, a Mozart quintet was being rehearsed in another.

Down the hill toward the lake was an interesting-looking barn, and from the sounds in it, one knew it wasn't merely a barn. The sounds were suggestive of the opening Kyrie of Bach's B Minor Mass, for the festival chorus was deep in rehearsal of the work which was their grand objective for the festival performance with the Boston Symphony on Aug. 16. G. Wallace Woodworth, their conductor, was goading the five-part choir into a fine, rounded unity. But on this occasion there was no audience except a herd of cows grazing on the slope.

TIME out for lunch: A bus was appearing, equipped as a cafeteria. It pulled up to the barn, and Bach was deserted temporarily for trays of hot and cold dishes. These were carried to various spots on the shady lawn for an hour of relaxation. The bus moved on then to the next group of students.

About 1:30 p. m. Dr. Herbert Graf, of the Metropolitan Opera Co., was gathering together over in one section of the formal gardens his group of 20 singers whom he has accepted for operatic training this summer. Dr. Graf very graciously left his work to talk about the group and his work with them. He is stressing particularly the importance of interpretive work in opera—and the group was to spend the afternoon in pantomime of Handel's "Acis and Galatea," which they will present for an opera program in the little theater on the grounds.

Back to the Shed and strains of the Tchaikowsky "Romeo and Juliet," which were irresistable. This time it was the Institute Orchestra—composed of the advanced musicians of the school. A youthful but extremely proficient orchestra of 60 was being conducted by a young man, one of the five chosen by Dr. Koussevitzky for special conducting work under his personal direction. This chap, Lucas Foss, only 17 years old, is a French refugee.

Dr. Koussevitzky sat in the front row, along with members of the Boston Symphony. He interrupted occasionally to give a word of advice. Two of the others in this special group of five young conductors turned out to be middle-westerners, and one Michigan's own Thor Johnson, of Ann Arbor. The other was Gaylord Brown, of Evansville, Ind. Mr. Johnson told how the five of them had as their assignment the great privilege of conducting the Boston Symphony in Beethoven's First Symphony and "Til Eulenspiegel."

WHILE talking with Mr. Johnson and Mr. Brown, Paul Hindemith passed by. His opera, "Hin und Zuruck," was to be staged the following evening by a group of Dr. Graf's students.

And so the activity of a day at Tanglewood goes. The stir has hardly subsided when the trek of cars from every state in the Union begins carrying the audience for the evening's program of the Boston Symphony. Some are famous, a great many are not. But all are there for one reason, a love of music.

Walking through the dress circle one is always certain to find celebrities from every walk of life. Just a few evenings ago Lucretia Bori and Mrs. Cole Porter were seen there, as was Toscanini, who came for a visit with Dr. Graf and others. Detroit is well represented in the boxes.

One Saturday evening Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt was a guest in the Lester Robert's box. Norman Davis was nearby, with Owen Johnson. Ted Shawn was there with a party from his summer school of the dance, nearby at Lee, Mass. And Miriam Winslow, who has delighted Detroit audiences with her dance programs, attended a Saturday night's program with a group of friends. She is teaching this summer at Ted Shawn's.

Dr. Koussevitzky, we find, does not like to have Tanglewood called the "American Salzburg." So beware! He feels that it is a venture so individual that it should not be compared to another. It is a realization of greatness in music and achievement through simplicity, and that he feels gives Tanglewood its individualism.

TANGLEWOOD TALE

This afternoon at Tanglewood ends the eighth season of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, and the first of its Institute for advanced and its Academy for amateur students of music. Instead, as once, of dwindling to a trickle in August, music in America is swelling to a torrent, and of this Summer freshet the Berkshire Music Center is now in main stream. But spectacular as are the multitudes who pour in annual pilgrimage to its concerts, already it begins to look as though this new school might be the more enduring force. It has doubled Tanglewood's voltage.

The grounds are peopled with eager young talent: a rehearsal of "Acis and Galatea" will be sounding music of 18th century opera over a formal garden, lawns, hedges and splashing fountains, where it is to be performed in a setting true to its period; the old Barn, painted a fresh coat of Stockbridge red, looks receptive to a load of hay, instead of which comes pealing out of its open double doors a rehearsal of Bach's concerto for three pianofortes and orchestra; the theatre is a wooden stage facing bench seats under a tent roof, and here a concert of chamber music distills its subtile essence on Summer air; while across acres of lawn in the huge Music Shed may be a full orchestra rehearsal, unless the new organ is storming out a toccata and fugue of Bach; yet so adroitly have all these been contrived that no two sets of acoustics collide. And you would have a long search to find three hundred and more people happier than these young students.

* * *

Their talent has surprised the faculty. That faculty, being members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, plus composers, conductors, choirmasters and operatic coaches, would be exacting in any case, yet judicious though the effort was to pick promising talent, the talent picked seems to have been a pick of the pick. These youngsters perform like veterans—no need to sit on the edge of your seat to help them play. The advanced student orchestra of the Institute gives one concert a week; no audience was expected save the school itself, though they were free to invite their friends. The number of their friends was astounding. Two thousand people turned up regularly for these concerts, which were up to a performance level equal to that of many an established symphony orchestra, and when Dr. Koussevitzky put them through the Fantastic Symphony of Berlioz, they surpassed even that level, surprising everybody including themselves. The company of young singers, likewise, who gave an evening of operatic scenes—von Weber, Verdi, Tschaikowsky—in costume and stage settings, were discovering their abilities to impersonate as well as to sing; which is the special function of this school—not to teach instrument or voice but to instruct in performance.

As might have been, and probably was expected, performing talent has exceeded composing talent, the second being a slower growing and later blooming variety, though it is being carefully cultivated under the tendance of several mature composers; but of orchestral conductors more came to the party than could be seated at table. Places of one sort or another, however, were made for all who wished to stay, and two of the most promising student conductors are still under voting age.

* * *

The concert crowds at Tanglewood are models of manners. An example is set by the management: once inside the grounds and separated from your motor horn, no signs tell you not to do this or not to step there. It is go anywhere you like and sit anywhere you please, except on Festival concert days when you sit where your ticket entitles. Saturday night the lawn audience under the stars was 2400, a large one for Symphony Hall itself, and this all outside the Shed which held more than 6000. Scenically the lawn-sitters had the better of it, arranging themselves neatly in the shade-patterns of great trees of a sunny afternoon, and evenings, dreaming under the pensive starshine while a golden half-moon stole behind the fir-spires of the winding avenue drive. Fireflies sparkled like violins playing spiccato, but Berkshire mosquitos seem allergic to the orchestral symphony and have organized a boycott. Those who like fine landscape with great music can have it for once: the scenery is an idyl of high Summer, the lake a silver shield laid on green velours, mountains swelling ridge beyond ridge in graduated tones of haze-blue, and overhead majestic cloud-Alps afloat on oceans of sky. Amid this symphonic poem of hills and water anyone can walk freely into the grounds on any but Festival days, no questions asked, and soak up hundreds of dollars worth of music which is floating about in air whose artistic content per fluid ounce must exceed in percentage of intoxicant all but the very choicest vintage of the grape, and maybe that too.

* * *

Tanglewood has become doubly a landmark. Here music in 20th century America stands much as in the 19th with Nathaniel Hawthorne on these same acres stood the art of American prose fiction. Musical Tanglewood and enter the grounds through a colonnade of the tallest pine trees.

Emerging into the clearing, one is on the spacious lawn and just a few hundred feet across the way stands the newly-completed Shed. That famous Shed, the summer home of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, was given its unique fan-shaped design by Eliel Sarrinen, of Cranbrook. It is open on the three sides of the fan and the stage for the orchestra is in the point.

The beauty of a typical August morning cast its spell over the Shed and the grounds. One began to feel the meaning of Dr. Koussevitzky's words, "a dream come true." A symphony of nature setting the stage for a symphony of music, composed of magnificent trees everywhere, formal gardens, the sloping lawn down to the little mountain lake Mahkeenac, with the Berkshires everywhere in the distance, covered by the ever-present blue haze.

MUSIC

Men were sauntering one by one toward the Shed, taking their places on the stage and tuning their instruments. It was rehearsal time for the Boston Symphony. Presently Dr. Serge Koussevitzky appeared with Albert Spalding, likewise headed for the Shed.

A bench under a large oak tree just outside made a perfect spot from which to hear the rehearsal of the Beethoven Violin Concerto and the Tchaikowsky Fourth Symphony, the program for that evening's concert. Dr. Koussevitzky was giving it last-minute touches.

ALL of Tanglewood seemed to be astir with activity. This stir was the new Berkshire Music Center, established by Dr. Koussevitzky, and right in the midst of its first season. It seems to have appropriated every part of the orchestra's magnificent estate from the front entrance, where students arrive by cars and bus, bicycles or on foot, right down to in our years of work."

And there you have it. All about these several hundred students were living and working in music. Strains of a Beethoven piano and violin sonata came from one direction, a Mozart quintet was being rehearsed in another.

Down the hill toward the lake was an interesting-looking barn, and from the sounds in it, one knew it wasn't merely a barn. The sounds were suggestive of the opening Kyrie of Bach's B Minor Mass, for the festival chorus was deep in rehearsal of the work which was their grand objective for the festival performance with the Boston Symphony on Aug. 16. G. Wallace Woodworth, their conductor, was goading the five-part choir into a fine, rounded unity. But on this occasion there was no audience except a herd of cows grazing on the slope.

TIME out for lunch: A bus was appearing, equipped as a cafeteria. It pulled up to the barn, and Bach was deserted temporarily for trays of hot and cold dishes. These were carried to various spots on the shady lawn for an hour of relaxation. The bus moved on then to the next group of students.

About 1:30 p. m. Dr. Herbert Graf, of the Metropolitan Opera Co., was gathering together over in one section of the formal gardens his group of 20 singers whom he has accepted for operatic training this summer. Dr. Graf very graciously left his work to talk about the group and his Orchestra—composed of the advanced musicians of the school. A youthful but extremely proficient orchestra of 60 was being conducted by a young man, one of the five chosen by Dr. Koussevitzky for special conducting work under his personal direction. This chap, Lucas Foss, only 17 years old, is a French refugee.

Dr. Koussevitzky sat in the front row, along with members of the Boston Symphony. He interrupted occasionally to give a word of advice. Two of the others in this special group of five young conductors turned out to be middle-westerners, and one Michigan's own Thor Johnson, of Ann Arbor. The other was Gaylord Brown, of Evansville, Ind. Mr. Johnson told how the five of them had as their assignment the great privilege of conducting the Boston Symphony in Beethoven's First Symphony and "Til Eulenspiegel."

WHILE talking with Mr. Johnson and Mr. Brown, Paul Hindemith passed by. His opera, "Hin und Zuruck," was to be staged the following evening by a group of Dr. Graf's students.

And so the activity of a day at Tanglewood goes. The stir has hardly subsided when the trek of cars from every state in the Union begins carrying the audience for the evening's program of the Boston Symphony. Some are famous, a great many are not. But all are there for one reason, a love of music.

Walking through the dress circle one is always certain to find celebwith a party from his summer school of the dance, nearby at Lee, Mass. And Miriam Winslow, who has delighted Detroit audiences with her dance programs, attended a Saturday night's program with a group of friends. She is teaching this summer at Ted Shawn's.

Dr. Koussevitzky, we find, does not like to have Tanglewood called the "American Salzburg." So beware! He feels that it is a venture so individual that it should not be compared to another. It is a realization of greatness in music and achievement through simplicity, and that he feels gives Tanglewood its individualism.

---

thousand people turned up regularly for these concerts, which were up to a performance level equal to that of many an established symphony orchestra, and when Dr. Koussevitzky put them through the Fantastic Symphony of Berlioz, they surpassed even that level, surprising everybody including themselves. The company of young singers, likewise, who gave an evening of operatic scenes—von Weber, Verdi, Tschaikowsky—in costume and stage settings, were discovering their abilities to impersonate as well as to sing; which is the special function of this school—not to teach instrument or voice but to instruct in performance.

As might have been, and probably was expected, performing talent has exceeded composing talent, the second being a slower growing and later blooming variety, though it is being carefully cultivated under the tendance of several mature composers; but of orchestral conductors more came to the party than could be seated at table. Places of one sort or another, however, were made for all who wished to stay, and two of the most promising student conductors are still under voting age.

*
* *

The concert crowds at Tanglewood are models of manners. An example is set by the management: once inside the grounds and separated from your motor horn, no signs tell you not to do this or not to step there. It is go anywhere you like and sit anywhere you please, except on Festival concert days when you sit where your ticket entitles. Saturday night the lawn audience under the stars was 2400, a large one for Symphony Hall itself, and this all outside the Shed which held more than 6000. Scenically the lawn-sitters had the better of it, arranging themselves neatly in the shade-patterns of great trees of a sunny afternoon, and evenings, dreaming under the pensive starshine while a golden half-moon stole behind the fir-spires of the winding avenue drive. Fireflies sparkled like violins playing spiccato, but Berkshire mosquitos seem allergic to the orchestral symphony and have organized a boycott. Those who like fine landscape with great music can have it for once: the scenery is an idyl of high Summer, the lake a silver shield laid on green velours, mountains swelling ridge beyond ridge in graduated tones of haze-blue, and overhead majestic cloud-Alps afloat on oceans of sky. Amid this symphonic poem of hills and water anyone can walk freely into the grounds on any but Festival days, no questions asked, and soak up hundreds of dollars worth of music which is floating about in air whose artistic content per fluid ounce must exceed in percentage of intoxicant all but the very choicest vintage of the grape, and maybe that too.

*
* *

Tanglewood has become doubly a landmark. Here music in 20th century America stands much as in the 19th with Nathaniel Hawthorne on these same acres stood the art of American prose fiction. Musical composition is our youngest art, and we are the youngest people to take it up. What is more awkward, we take it up when that art is full-fledged, and perhaps when it has lived full cycle. Normally the process of growth in art, as in life, is from simplicity through complexity to a higher simplicity; but we in America come to music when it has attained forms excessively complex.

In literatures of the spoken and written word poetry flowers before prose; prose, in the forms of oral saga, then of written history, and finally of fiction, flowers before criticism, self-consciousness comes last. As illustration one has only to remember that grammar and syntax were unknown in the Great Age of Greek literature; they were formulated two centuries later at Alexandria when that literature had grown self-conscious. It is of course easier, as it is more natural, to move from the simple to the complex, as music in Europe did, than to move from the complex to the simple, as music in America apparently must do before it can become its true self—which may be what ails our composers, for either they attempt greater complexities, or else they assume a forced simplicity, which is worse than none.

Self-consciousness is the blight of modern music. "As there is no more sure sign of a fine nature than the absence of self-consciousness, so there is no more sure sign of greatness than simplicity." But unself-conscious our composers seem unable, or perhaps afraid to be. The great creative epoch of music (circa 1720 to 1920) was one in which form was elaborated, whereas the performances of it were often if not generally crude. That epoch has now been succeeded by one in which performance is elaborated. (Imagine Shakespeare at a modern performance of "Hamlet.") The great composers of the 18th and 19th centuries would be thunderstruck by the splendor of their works as performed today, but it is more than probable that were they to hear the works of modern composers they would be thunderstruck in a different sense.

So the Tanglewood Tale of 20th century American music is yet to be told. Like Hawthorne's originals, it should be intelligible to youth. (Why be old before our time?) It should, if possible, be simple and it must be unself-conscious, a tale of and for a people still young in spirit.

This Clipping From PHILADELPHIA, PA.
BULLETIN
AUG 19 1940

Summer Music Backstage

Keep Your Eye on Stockbridge

Famed Berkshire Festival May Become American Salzburg

By HENRY PLEASANTS

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 19.—With Salzburg out of the way, for the time being at least, as the world's summer music capital, Stockbridge, Mass., is the place to watch.

It is the home of the Berkshire Festival, which has for the past five seasons presented the Boston Symphony Orchestra and its distinguished director, Serge Koussevitzky, in a series of concerts.

The Berkshire Festival is as yet relatively small scaled, at least in the number of concerts, but there is nothing small scaled about the audiences or quality of the concerts. Certainly there is nothing small scaled about the potentiality of this festival.

It has a great orchestra, a great conductor and an incomparable setting. Concerts are given at Tanglewood, a private estate a few miles out of Stockbridge, where Hawthorne wrote "The House of Seven Gables." To the natural setting has been added a magnificent fan-shaped metal "music shed" seating and protecting 6,038 listeners.

During the Festival which came to an end last week nine concerts were given in three weeks. It began without guarantors and ended without a deficit, as has been the case for the past five years.

Always Solvent

Of all the major serious music festivals, the Berkshire Festival is in the most consistently solvent financial condition. It is more than self-sustaining so far as running expenses are concerned. About $100,000 had been put into the shed through private contributions and Tanglewood has been presented to the Boston Sympathy Orchestra as a permanent summer home.

Audiences average upward of 8,000. Those who cannot get reserved seats find places about the spacious lawn, and their lot is not a bad one save in case of rain. Shell and shed have astounding acoustical properties.

A significant feature is the increase of transient music lovers in the audience. Last year it was reckoned at 38 per cent. This year it has been closer to 50 per cent. The growth of the Festival, in size at least, will depend to some extent on the growth of transient business.

There is no official connection between the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Berkshire Festival. The latter is a non-profit corporation which engages the Boston Symphony each season. But the fact that Tanglewood now is the property of the Boston orchestra makes the link between the two organizations very strong.

The Festival corporation owns the shed and the orchestra owns the grounds, but the directors of the Festival are firm in the conviction that the Boston Orchestra is the best of all possible orchestras and the orchestra is presumably convinced that this is the best of all possible festivals.

It is hardly fair to compare this festival with the regular summer seasons in Philadelphia, Chicago and Cincinnati. It has had luck in the matter of location and in the really unique auditorium. And the continuous employment of an orchestra over a period of weeks is not its concern. The orchestra has the "pop" and esplanade concerts in Boston to tide it over the summer weeks and a long season at Stockbridge is not as important to it as the seasons at Ravinia Park and Robin Hood Dell are to the Chicago and Philadelphia Orchestras.

The need for guarantors has been obviated by a plan through which subscribers get tickets at a lower rate and become members of the association by getting their order in before November 1.

After November 1, tickets at regular subscription rates are available until June 30. After that seats are available only at the regular box office rate. The price range is wide, running from 83 cents for a single concert at a membership rate to $5 for a box seat at the concert time box office price.

Eighty-two per cent. of the subscriptions for the shed came from people living within 50 miles of Stockbridge and 40 per cent. came from the board of trustees.

If the transient group increases at the rate established in the past two seasons, there is no telling to what extent the festival can be enlarged in scope.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
UNION-STAR
AUG 19 1940

Tanglewood Attendance At New Record

8,000 at Final Concert, 70,000 During Season

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 19—The majestic song of Johannes Brahm's First Symphony, pealed forth with irresistible splendor by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky, brought the seventh annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival to a close at Tanglewood here Sunday afternoon.

It was a magnificent peroration for the longest and most successful festival season of the seven. Brahm's sublime hymn was almost like a voicing of hopes for future years. Only the dark shadow of events seemed to threaten the further advance of this annual festivity of music amid the trees and the hills.

This year's festival broke all records. The total attendance for the nine concerts of the three long week-ends was estimated at 70,000. Although the weather Sunday was uncooperative for the first time this festival season, an audience of about 8,000 attended. The total for the final week was 25,000; the first week had attracted 18,000 listeners and the second brought the record, 27,000.

The sky threatened all morning, and an hour before concert time there was a slight shower. Thereafter light showers alternated with minutes of sunshine. The holders of general admission tickets changed their location with the clouds.

The intermittent showers seemed to be merely an added excitement for the listeners, at the end of the concert they thronged forward to bid Mr. Koussevitzky and his musicians a thundering "au revoir," and there were repeated bursts of cheers. The applause was undiminished. Men and women waved handkerchiefs, magazines, newspapers; pages were torn to shreds and thrown about.

Mr. Koussevitzky and his orchestra deserved well of the public. Sunday afternoon's concert was another exhibition of ensemble work of the highest order, plus unexampled creative fire. The program embraced three symphonies each a masterwork of its epoch: Haydn's symphony in G, No. 88; Sibelius's Seventh and the Brahm's, C. Minor. Each work had an interpretation worthy of its mettle; each was done with a comprehension of its period and style.

Festival officials confirmed the report that this year's sessions had produced a substantial surplus. It was the fifth surplus in a row, since the Boston Symphony joined hands with the Berkshire Festival Association.

Miss Thompson Says Hitler Wars With Each of Us

Globe 8/17

Gov. Lehman Also Warns U. S. at Lenox Allied Relief Benefit

By JANET JONES

LENOX, Aug. 16—Miss Dorothy Thompson, Globe columnist, tonight told 9000 persons at the gala Allied Relief Benefit at the Berkshire festival, that the reason "we are today engaged in a great civil war is because we have not yet learned the lesson that we are all citizens of a great planet, that no individual or nation or earth is independent."

Miss Thompson, guest speaker with New York's Gov. Herbert H. Lehman, Archibald MacLeish and Sir Louis Beale, K. C. M. G., was introduced by MacLeish as "the one American who has most clearly seen the crisis in this time, who has most eloquently said what she has seen and courageously continued to say it. She is a woman of whom this country is very proud."

As Miss Thompson, looking stunning in a long dinner gown and matching coat of gray polka dot, accented with a soft pink flower at her bosom, arrived at the stage entrance of the music shed where the speaking was held prior to the concert, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky kissed her hand.

Miss Thompson's Address

Pointing out that Britain is fighting today "against the most ruthless tyranny of centuries," Miss Thompson said that "this generation of men and women of this whole planet has a rendezvous with destiny.

"Great Britain is having it now, fighting alone 'the battle of western civilization.'

"Men forget freedom in prosperity and rediscover it in anguish. We, who live in the most anguished of human centuries, will rediscover it.

"This war is between Hitlerism and each of us. It will be won or lost, eventually, in human minds and human souls. We shall win against the darkness in the end. But if England falls, we shall have to fight much longer."

Gov. Lehman's Warning

Gov. Lehman told the audience that "if Great Britain falls we cannot hope to keep the war from our shores."

MacLeish said that "our failure to evacuate refugees from Europe on Red Cross ships is a shame on our country that history will not gloss over."

At the auction, presided over by author Owen Johnson, $2185 was cleared, which will be spent for a complete medical unit to be set up immediately in England. Mrs. A. A. Berle, wife of the Under-Secretary of State, bid $150 for a Grand Pyrennes male puppy. Mrs. Walter Scott, who has a Summer home at Rockport, purchased a solid silver tray said to have belonged to George III for $375.

Three Greater Boston women won prizes in tonight's draw. They were: Mrs. G. A. Davis, Brookline, who received four candlesticks; Mrs. G. Davenport, Marblehead, phonograph records of Schumann's Spring symphony, and Miss Andree Bruelle, Wellesley, a Dalmatian puppy. Miss Thompson drew the names, taking the place of Lucrezia Bori, unable to attend. This section of the benefit netted $2370.

This Clipping From
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
BULLETIN
AUG 19 1940

BERKSHIRE MUSIC FESTIVAL GROWS

All Records Broken This Summer with Attendance of 70,000.

Stockbridge, Mass., Aug. 19.—This summer's Berkshire Symphonic Festival has broken all records of previous seasons, figures issued yesterday by Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, president, and George W. Edman, clerk, indicate.

The nine concerts this summer were attended by 70,000 persons. In addition, three special rehearsals for the festival members and school children from the neighborhood drew 10,000 persons to Tanglewood, the festival's home, and the benefit for British relief Friday night drew 8000, who left $25,000 for the fund before they went home.

Last summer there were six concerts, and 36,000 persons heard them. The first six concerts this summer drew 45,000.

A sizeable surplus will be returned to the project in the form of improvements on the grounds, since the venture is strictly a non-profit and co-operative affair.

Yesterday's music included three great symphonies, one of them modern. These were the Haydn G Major Symphony (No. 88); Sibelius' Sturdy Seventh, and to conclude the concert as well as the festival, the monumental First Symphony of Brahms.

Festival luck held so far as weather went—there was a misty rain at intervals yesterday afternoon, and perfect weather for the other eight concerts. This year Serge Koussevitzky "doubled in brass." He not only conducted his noble Boston Symphony in all the music of the festival, but was director of the Berkshire Music Centre, a school of music for professionals and non-professionals, which closed yesterday after a six-week session on the Tanglewood estate.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE
AUG 19 1940

The Note Book

By J. H.

Tanglewood Tales—Festival Finish

A man and two women walked down the colonade. The woman in the center dropped her white silk wrap. A man arose from his seat, followed the trio, called. They turned. Said the owner:

"I dropped that?"

"You did."

"You picked it up?"

"I did."

"You returned it to me?"

"I did."

"That is the most Christian thing I ever heard of."

A suggestion that the Saturday concerts should be in the afternoon rather than at night did not meet with favor. The present plan will continue . . . George E. Judd happy over everything—said he was delighted with the public response and attitude . . . Mr. and Mrs. George W. Edman to whom so much credit is due for the grand achievement. Nothing succeeds like success . . . Mrs. Winthrop Murray Crane Sr. . . . Mr. and Mrs. M. L. Eisner, Mrs. Eisner's sister, husband, niece . . . Mr. and Mrs. A. W. Patten . . . Mr. and Mrs. N. A. Campbell. Mrs. Campbell was on the committee when it was decided to provide a tent. That seemed like a departure—and it was. Next came the shed . . . Lawrence W. Bump, one of the most courtly of the ushers . . . E. Roy Humphrey came to the rescue that auction night just to make it entirely legal . . . Mrs. Curtin, Mrs. Langmaid . . . Mrs. E. A. Jones, Mrs. S. Ralph Jones . . . An average of 8000 persons, an average of 4100 cars, grand total of guests more than 70,000. The boys estimated Saturday night's crowd at 10,000, the cars at 5000 . . . Miss Maynor made $50,000 last year, is in a fair way to make $150,000 this . . . Her father, who was a minister, is gone. Her mother and many children are living. Her teacher is among those who attend . . . Clarence Hollister, organist, formerly of Pittsfield, with E. S. Van Olinda . . . After leaving here Mr. Hollister was in Boston, now is in Albany . . . Lost articles include many pairs of glasses and a lorgnette. One guest dropped keys . . . Earl Brundage and niece, daughter of his sister. . . . Bernhard Hoffmann with (UP) man, home from war zone.

Miss Garbarino and her Program Pals contributed a courteous, gracious and colorful bit.

* * *

H. B. Jones recently ill . . . The axe was laid to what was thought to be the root of a tree in an excavation. Flash. It was an underground cable. Repairs . . . George Fisher went to his old home in Vermont. A touch trip. Two excavations on Route 7. Took him two hours to make the last 14 miles up and it was equally bad on the way back . . . She received $15 for the accommodations one night, $25 on another occasion. Come a man to apply. Asked what he was willing to pay he said a dollar and a half. He could not strike a bargain at that price . . . Past two girls flashed an empty car. The brake had not been applied. It struck several machines and damaged them before it came to a stop.

New York Times picture: The Berkshire Music Center takes time off to lunch, which is brought to them in a vehicle which used to be a bus. Shown here are Herbert Graf, head of the Opera-Dramatics Section; Lester Roberts, Lenox, (Mass.) hotel man, who arranged for the lunch bus; Ruth Posselt, violinist; Richard Burgin, concert-master of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and a student of the Center...Counted 31 Willkie buttons. Two women were among those who had them...Player mentioned as taking the ride to Lenox in the night has been with the orchestra 21 years...Chief Burke with a hat that is decidedly this year's—right in the mode... It is the band that counts—and the orchestra!

Will you ever forget the parasol under which a young couple blissfully walked on the green during the shower? There were so many colors in it, several thought it was a rainbow.

One of the most popular features of the Festival was the souvenir edition of this newspaper. Here at home we take such good things more or less for granted. Persons from away, including George Judd described this number as one of the finest things of the kind they ever had seen. They were preserved, tucked away in traveling bags, taken home. Of the issue 8000 were printed. They were placed in hotels all the way from Bennington, Vt., to Winsted and Salisbury, Conn. Frank R. Munn, circulation manager, was on the Festival grounds with his newspaper boys when the high point of circulation was reached. That was the second week end when 1800 copies were taken by the people. The average for the nine concerts was around 500.

MUSIC

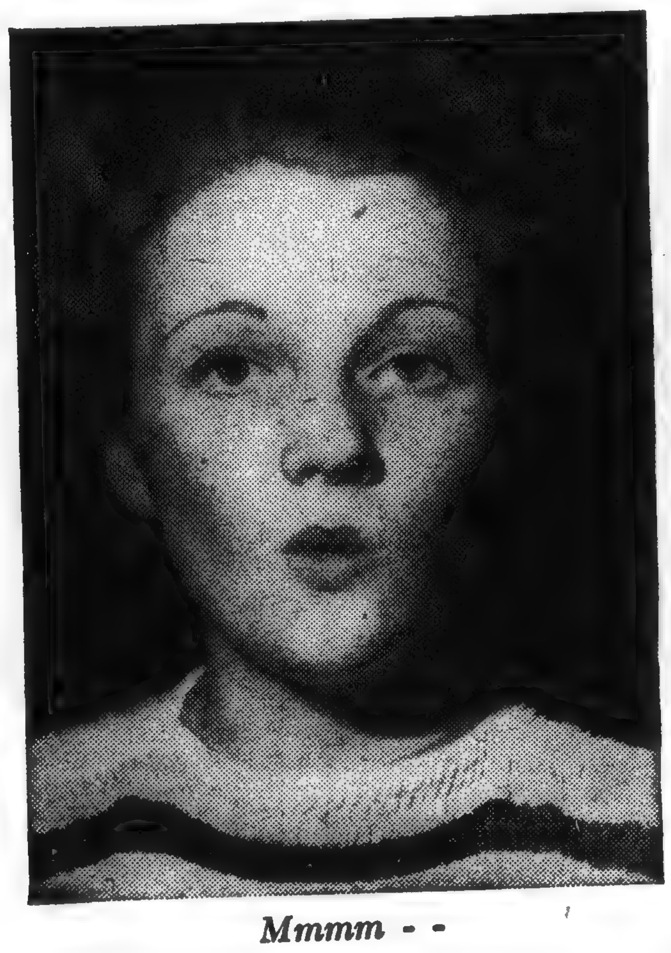
Opera Starlets Learn 'Acting' in the Berkshires...

HENRY W. SIMON

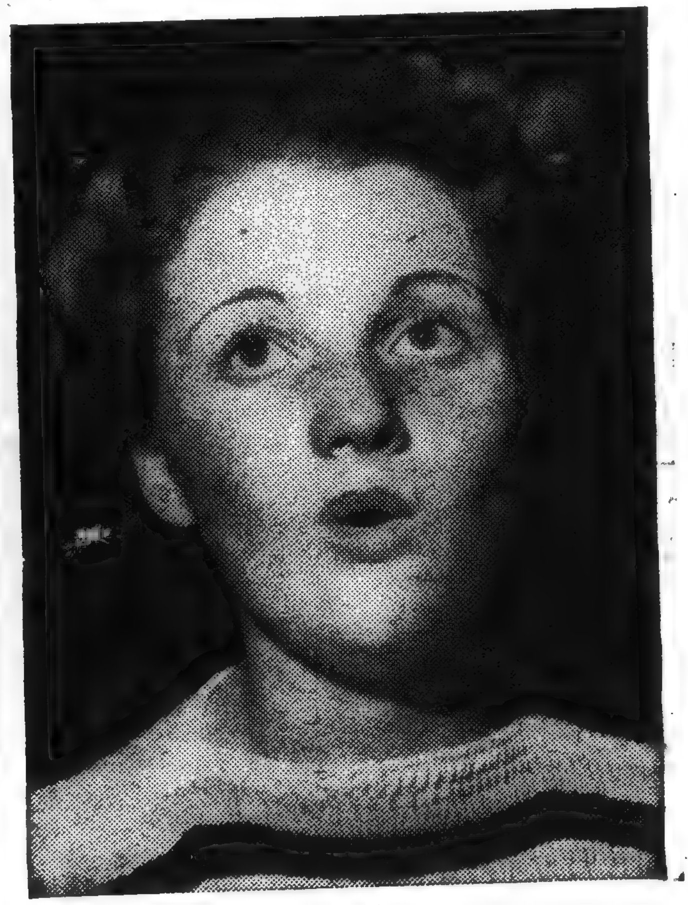
Staff-photographer William Rhodes spent a day with the 20 opera students at the Berkshire Music Center, shot four dozen negatives and couldn't remember which opera they were rehearsing when he took this one. Checking with the opera school's director, Dr. Herbert Graf of the Metropolitan, we discovered they weren't rehearsing at all—just mugging. Mr. Rhodes, who is a pretty bright fellow, never realized it. Look below for the reason.

This one happens to be a serious rehearsal. The opera—Handel's Acis and Galatea to be given next Friday. Frank Capelli is the faun in white ducks who frightens nymphs Ellen Repp and Marjorie Williamson.

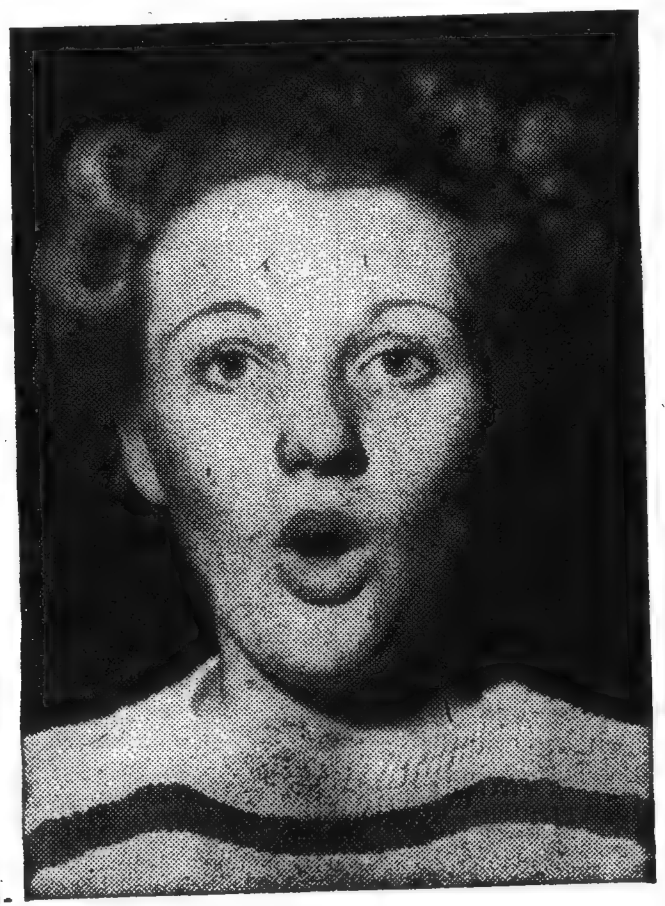
Dr. Graf shows Miss Williamson the sort of face you have to make to produce a certain tone. It takes an unusually plastic face on a singer not to look ridiculous in opera. Miss Williamson has it. See below.



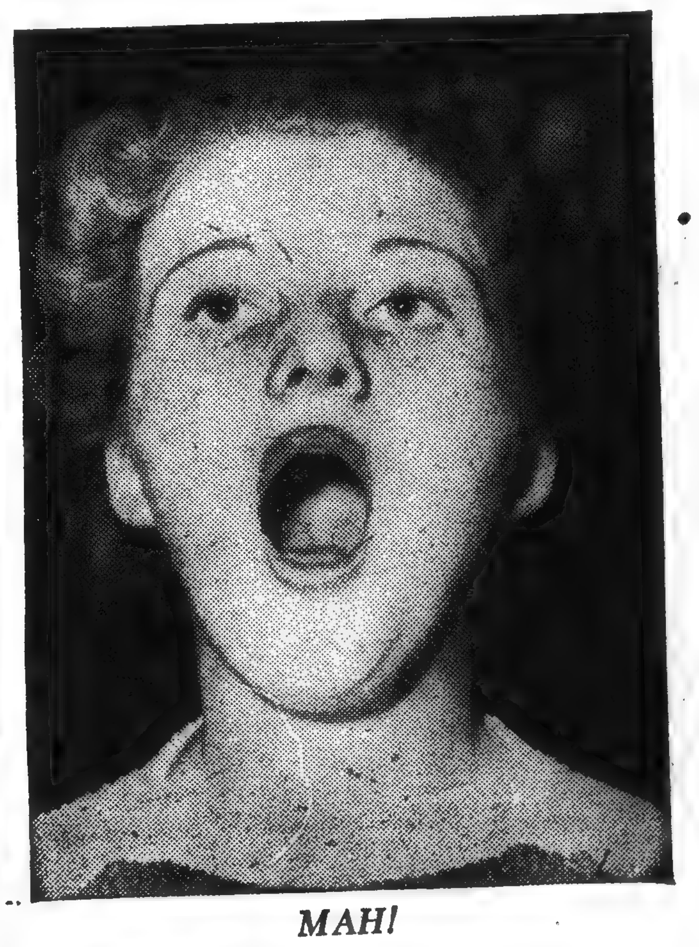
Mmmm - -



Müh



Moh



MAH!

137

This Clipping From
WATERBURY, CONN.
REPUBLICAN

AUG 19 1940

Berkshire Concerts Witnessed By 88,000

(Special To The Republican)

Stockbridge, Mass., Aug. 18 — The seventh annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival came to a triumphant close in the giant music shed at Tanglewood this afternoon after presenting 10 concerts before an official total of 88,000 music lovers from all parts of the United States and more than 30 foreign countries.

The final concert of this most unusual festival series, which included nine regular concerts and a special benefit performance which raised $25,000 for the Allied Relief Fund, was attended by more than 8,000 persons despite a slight drizzle which was the first bit of bad weather throughout the three week-ends of concerts.

The nine regular concerts of the festival were heard by more than 70,000 persons. An additional 8,000 persons attended the Allied Relief Fund benefit on Friday night when Gov. Herbert Lehman of New York, Dorothy Thompson, Sir Louis Beale, and Archibald MacLeish were speakers on a gala program that lasted from 6 o'clock until midnight. Officials estimated another 10,000 persons attended the three Saturday morning rehearsals of the Boston Symphony orchestra under the direction of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky.

Programs Widely Varied

The series this year was outstanding for the large number of soloists it presented and the great variety of its programs. For the first time members of the newly-organized school for musicians at Tanglewood participated in some of the programs, taking an active part in the presentation of the Bach "Mass in B Minor," the relief benefit program when students of the orchestra played under the conductorship of young musicians studying under Dr. Koussevitzky, and in other ways assisted. The concerts this year marked the first performances on the newly installed organ and presented such outstanding soloists as Albert Spalding, George Piatigorsky, Dorothy Maynor, Alexander Kipnis, Elizabeth Schumann, Viola Silva, and William Hain.

Throughout the festival the quality of performance by the Boston Symphony orchestra and its soloists has been of the best.

Continued From Page

Music lovers have marveled at the high quality of the individual concerts and particularly of the entire series. Applause has been loud and enthusiasm high. At more than one point musical performance has come as close to perfection as one could hope to find anywhere in the world. This festival leaves no doubt that the Boston Symphony orchestra, under its distinguished conductor, Serge Koussevitzky, is one of the best in the world and that now that such famous musical centers as Bayreuth and Salzburg have been destroyed by the sinister influences of war the Berkshire Symphonic Festival is the outstanding musical festival in the troubled world today.

Week-End Audience 25,000

The entire second week-end of the festival was devoted to the observance of the 100th anniversary of the birth of the Russian composer, Tchaikovsky. Dr. Koussevitzky chose to divide each program of that series in a Tchaikovsky and a Beethoven part. It was the most largely-attended series, drawing more than 27,000 persons.

The last series brought 25,000 persons with a new record high for an individual concert of 9,300 persons last evening for the Saturday performance of Dorothy Maynor, Negro soloist. Miss Maynor scored a decided success, singing two difficult selections with great ease in a rich voice that proves the recent glowing accounts of her voice correct. She sang without the many mannerisms that so often annoy in a singer considered to have more stage-presence. From the first moment that she opened her mouth to sing, beautiful music came forth as though it were just flowing with ease. The audience was loud in its applause and called her back to the platform seven times. Dr. Koussevitzky was more than pleased with the performance and with the reception given his protege.

Bach Number Outstanding

The Saturday performance consisted of the most varied program of the entire festival with more composers represented than on any other single program. The performance of Prokofieff's "Classical Symphony" was delightful and performed with a fluidity that was most pleasing. The Hindemith symphony, "Matthias the Painter," was good with some very interesting orchestration in the third movement. It was of this piece that the most varied comments were heard. Many expressed the opinion that they would prefer to hear it a few more times before passing judgment. This, however, did not in any way dampen the warm ovation given to the composer when he appeared upon the platform after the completion of the playing. He was the second composer to be presented this year. Roy Harris appeared Saturday night.

The performance of the Bach "Passacaglia for Organ in C minor" which closed the Saturday concert was in the opinion of many the crowning performance of the entire festival. It was a magnificant performance though we still feel that the new organ, which here should have proved itself, leaves something to be desired in an organ performance.

Brahms' Symphony Thrilling

The concert today opened with Haydn's "Symphony in G-major" with a glorious performance by the orchestra. It was followed by the Sibelius "Symphony No. 7" with its lovely, interesting music which Dr. Koussevitzky directs so effectively.

Following the intermission, which brought rain upon the thousands who stopped at the refreshment tent or sat upon blankets on the grass, the orchestra gave a thrilling performance of Brahms' "Symphony No. 1." When the last notes of the final adagio movement were over the audience arose to give conductor and orchestra an ovation for the glorious performance of not only this concert but for the many hours of pleasure in the magnificent performances of the whole festival. For many minutes the thousands remained to applaud the man and the orchestra who brought some of the world's finest music to them in as triumphant performances as one could hope to find this side of heaven.

But before the first car had started to leave the festival grounds, officials in charge announced that plans are under way already for nine concerts to be given at Tanglewood next year, beginning July 31.

George W. Edman, clerk of the festival board, announced that for the fifth consecutive year since

---

This Clipping From
NEW BEDFORD, MASS.
MERCURY

AUG 19 1940

Mr. Koussevitzky made it an evening of largely unfamiliar music by programing Faure's "Pelleas et Melisande" suite, which is much less renowned than the Debussy setting for the Maeterlinck play, but which is nevertheless an imaginative and evocative score. The program ended with Respighi's sonorous transcription of Bach's great Organ Passacaglia in C minor.

As the festival swung into its final programs—the thoughts of officials and patrons were turned to next year. The festival, it has been announced, again will be three weeks long. The Berkshire Music Center, which was founded this Summer, will continue. Festival and center have been pronounced successes this year, and the management looks to a period of consolidation of both enterprises in the Summer of 1941, although all eyes are turned anxiously to the news from Europe at the very moment that plans are being formulated.

The addition of a third week to the festival proper this year, which was opposed in some quarters, has been heartily approved by the public. The concerts have drawn better than in the past. Though the budget was higher than in any previous season, it is calculated that it will be balanced by receipts and that there may be some funds left for further improvements of the festival grounds.

This year's budget is close to $70,000 for the festival proper. The sale of subscriptions and single seats, and especially the record-breaking demands for general admissions, have rocketed the intake. But further improvements are essential, and the festival authorities continue their appeal for contributions. It is hoped to install roll shutters to protect the shed, which is now open at the sides, against rains in the Summer and snows in the Winter. Other improvements on the grounds are projected.

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN
AUG 19 1940

80,000 at Music Festival For 10 Symphony Concerts

8400 Attend Final Program, Which Has Only Rain of Three-Week Series — Surplus to Be Used for Tanglewood Maintenance

Tanglewood, Aug. 18—It was estimated tonight that the total attendance at the nine concerts of the Berkshire music festival and the special allied relief program Friday night was 80,000. This is an average of 8000 persons at each performance, and is as accurate as could be determined by officials tonight.

According to the box office, this afternoon's attendance was 8400, of which 2136 were general admissions. The Boston Symphony orchestra management fortunately had replaced the benches under the collonade in anticipation of showers, which started soon after the performance began and came down more vigorously during intermission. This is the first rain that appeared during the entire three-weeks' series, a remarkable spell of weather for this season of the year.

All Records Broken

The festival attendance broke even last year's record. Then there were six instead of nine concerts, and 36,000 persons attended. The first six concerts this summer drew 45,000.

A sizable surplus will be left this summer, it was announced by Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, president, and George W. Edman, clerk of the festival. But none of this is profit—everything will go into maintenance of the 210-acre Tanglewood estate given to the Boston symphony by Mrs Gorham Brooks of Brookline.

Dr Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the orchestra, is to remain for several weeks at his summer home on Bald Head and rest up after the strenuous work of the festival and summer school. He may later go to Maine. Ernest B. Dane, president of the Boston Symphony organization, and Mrs Dane of Boston, who have been guests of Dr and Mrs Koussevitzky, are leaving Wednesday on their yacht for Seal Harbor, Me.

Carlton Smith of New York, another guest, is leaving tomorrow to join Mr and Mrs William Francis Gibbs at Locust Valley, L. I.

Great Barrington, for Miss Dorothy Thompson and Hudson Strode.

Mr and Mrs Herbert Thorn King of Tuxedo Park, N. Y., were the honored guests at a luncheon for 35 given by Mrs Thomas Frederick Davies at Edgecombe, Lenox.

Mrs Aubrey T. Barnes was a luncheon hostess at Greystones, North Egremont, for Mrs Walter Forbes of Rockford, Ill., and Miss Clara Harmer of Philadelphia.

Arrivals at Red Lion inn, Stockbridge, include Mrs William Averill Harriman, Mrs Elihu Root and Mrs Henry Hadley, widow of the composer, who was accompanied by Miss Louise Dietrich and Mrs Charles Blandy of New York.

Gov and Mrs William H. Vanderbilt went to Newport from Cricket Creek farm, South Williamstown, and Mr and Mrs Everett Colby left the farm for New York.

At Terrace inn, North Egremont, Mrs Robert Bainbridge and Miss Sarah S. Homans gave a tea in compliment to Mrs Robert Ramsay of New York, who is at Heaton hall, Stockbridge.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
WORCESTER, MASS.
GAZETTE
AUG 19 1940

70,000 Persons Attended Concerts at Tanglewood

By JOHN SELBY

STOCKBRIDGE, Aug. 19 (AP)—This Summer's Berkshire Symphonic Festival has broken all records of previous seasons, figures issued yesterday by Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, president, and George W. Edman, clerk, indicate. The nine concerts this Summer were attended by seventy thousand persons.

In addition, three special rehearsals for the festival members and school children from the neighborhood drew ten thousand persons to Tanglewood, the festival's home, and the benefit for British relief Friday night drew eight thousand, who left twenty-five thousand dollars for the fund before they went home. Last Summer there were six concerts, and thirty-six thousand persons heard them. The first six concerts this Summer drew forty-five thousand.

A sizeable surplus will be returned to the project in the form of impovements on the grounds, since the venture is strictly a non-profit and cooperative affair.

Yesterday's music included three great symphonies, one of them modern. These were the Haydn G Major Symphony (No. 88); Sibelius' Sturdy Seventh, and to conclude the concert as well as the festival, the monumental First Symphony of Brahms.

Festival luck held so far as weather went—there was a misty rain at intervals yesterday afternoon, and perfect weather for the other eight concerts. This year Serge Koussevitzky "doubled in brass." He not only conducted his Boston Symphony in all the music of the festival, but was director of the Berkshire Music Center, a school of music for professionals and non-professionals which closed yesterday after a six-week session yesterday Tanglewood estate.

This Clipping From
CHICAGO, ILL.
HERALD-AMERICAN
AUG 19 1940

Inconvenience

WHEN KOUSSEVITZKY conducts the B minor Mass at the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, he has to begin at 7 p. m. because the Mass takes four hours—a state of things very upsetting to the socialites who attend because it doesn't allow them time to get dressed, have cocktails and dinner beforehand. The Koussevitzkys, who bought from our Art Institute the mountain home of the late Miss Kate Buckingham, have changed its name from Bald Head to Seranak—Ser for Serge, Koussevitzky's first name; A for Alexander, his middle name; Na for Natalie, his wife's name, and K for both of them. But they've kept the house exactly as it was in Miss Buckingham's time, even to the fans and rocking chairs in the loggia.

▲ ▲ ▲

This Clipping From
NEW BEDFORD, MASS.
MERCURY

AUG 19 1940

BERKSHIRE CONCERTS DREW 70,000 PERSONS

STOCKBRIDGE, Aug. 18 (AP)—Seventy thousand persons and two barn swallows heard the nine concerts of the seventh annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival, which closed this afternoon before an audience of 8,000 persons.

The 70,000 sat with great decorum on the new iron chairs of the music shed; the barn swallows occupied a girder at the rear, and chirped along with the Boston Symphony. Moreover, they observed crescendos and decrescendos with the greatest care, and broke into no pauses whatever.

In addition to 70,000 visitors for the nine regular concerts, Tanglewood has entertained 10,000 more at the three special rehearsals conducted by Serge Koussevitzky for festival members and school children from the neighborhood.

Friday night's benefit for the British relief drew 8,000 more visitors, who contributed a total of $25,000 to the cause—in one way or another.

The festival attendance broke even last year's record. Then there were six instead of nine concerts, and 36,000 persons attended. The first six concerts this Summer drew 45,000.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

AUG 19 1940

Tanglewood 1940

There used to be a time when the civic sensitivities of Lenox and Stockbridge were alternatively enraged and cheered depending on whether the metropolitan press designated in their news stories whether the locale of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival was in Stockbridge or Lenox. The extremely tactful board of directors with careful equivocation took a position neatly astride town lines. The date lines of their publicity stories set up the mythical post office of "Tanglewood." When pressed to be more specific the Festival publicity releases still rather indeterminately placed Tanglewood "between Lenox and Stockbridge."

Now that the Berkshire Festival has so gloriously arrived it is doubtful if civic chauvinism could again be enkindled. The Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood no longer is a local endeavor. In a sense, it has even lost its regional emphasis, although it can not be denied that the natural charm of the Berkshires are writ high in its asset sheet.

In the future musical encyclopaedias and in the current vocabularies of musical America it no longer needs geographic emphasis. The Berkshire Festival is held at Tanglewood and Tanglewood is where the Berkshire Festival is held.

Likewise, there used to be a time when the publicity-conscious trustees actively tried to pull strings that at least a few notables (and they weren't even averse to politicians) attended the concerts. That helped to make a good press. Now the great in the world of public affairs and the arts are a dime a dozen at Tanglewood and ofttimes the Festival officials are hard put to find seats and accommodations for celebrities who drive up, unheralded and unannounced, to the crowded gates. This in spite of the fumings of a pompous lady who arrived in her limousine Thursday night and was displeased with the parking arrangements in seeking to have her car parked near the Shed. Her protestations being of no avail to the courteous but firm Legionnaire, she turned to her husband and said, "Gerald, will you tell the man we come from New York!"

Musically, of course, the Festival under its distinguished director, Dr. Koussevitzky, has insisted on a standard of excellence where its eminence is unassailable. It has remained for time to do the rest. And the inevitable has happened.

Berkshire is proud and humble at the conclusion of this great manifestation to have shared in its upbuilding and its apotheosis.

NEW YORK TIMES, MONDAY, AUGUST 19,

FESTIVAL IS ENDED BY KOUSSEVITZKY

Brahms First Symphony Heard at Last Concert of Seventh Season at Tanglewood

TOTAL ATTENDANCE 70,000

3-Week Series of Programs by the Boston Orchestra Sets Record in Berkshires

By HOWARD TAUBMAN
Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 18—The majestic song of Johannes Brahms's First Symphony, pealed forth with irresistible splendor by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky, brought the seventh annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival to a close at Tanglewood here this afternoon.

It was a magnificent peroration for the longest and most successful festival season of the seven. Brahms's sublime hymn was almost like a voicing of hopes for future years. Only the dark shadow of events seemed to threaten the further advance of this annual festivity of music amid the trees and the hills.

This year's festival broke all records. The total attendance for the concerts of the three long week-ends was estimated at 70,000. Although the weather today was uncooperative for the first time this festival season, an audience of about 8,000 attended. The total for the final week was 25,000; the first week had attracted 18,000 listeners and the second brought the record, 27,000.

Showers During Concert

The sky threatened all morning, and an hour before concert time there was a slight shower. Thereafter light showers alternated with minutes of sunshine. The holders of general admission changed their location with the clouds.

The intermittent showers seemed to be merely an added excitement for the listeners, at the end of the concert they thronged forward to bid Mr. Koussevitzky and his musicians a thundering "au revoir," and there were repeated bursts of cheers. The applause was undiminished. Men and women waved handkerchiefs, magazines, newspapers; pages were torn to shreds and thrown about.

Mr. Koussevitzky and his orchestra deserved well of the public. This afternoon's concert was another exhibition of ensemble work of the highest order, plus unexampled creative fire. The program embraced three symphonies each a masterwork of its epoch: Haydn's symphony in G, No. 88; Sibelius's Seventh and the Brahms, C Minor. Each work had an interpretation worthy of its mettle; each was done with a comprehension of its period and style.

Mr. Koussevitzky made it clear that Haydn is no superficial songster in this symphony. He emphasized the virility and passion of the music, and his orchestra sang the searching, lovely song of the slow movement with infinite tenderness. The Sibelius symphony was realized in its dark, northern colors; the gaunt, somber outlines of the score, which is a model of concision, were etched with a true grasp of the large, brooding poetry.

Brahms Symphony Stirring

The Boston Symphony's interpretation of the Brahms symphony is familiar, but none the less stirring in its loftiness and spaciousness. Despite a muggy day, the strings sang with fullness of tone. A horn went off twice, but that was a minor flaw in an otherwise superb performance.

There was an univited and not unpleasant soloist throughout the symphony—a song sparrow. The soaring music of Brahms seemed to spur the bird on. He sang his song many times over; like Browning's thrush, he managed to recapture the "first fine careless rapture."

Before writing finis to this festival, let us revert for several paragraphs to last night's remarkable concert. Dorothy Maynor returning to the scene of her first triumph, conquered once again, though her contributions were not too well chosen. The Mozart concert aria, "Bella Mia Fiama, Addio," was an unsatisfactory start, but she sang with opulence of tone. Her quality as an artist was better revealed in Beethoven's "Adelaide," where she sang with a delicacy and lyricism that were deeply moving. The audience recalled her repeatedly, and there was considerable grumbling that she was not granted an encore.

Prokofieff Work Played

The orchestra played last night with breath-taking precision and impact, excelling even its own standards. Prokofieff's "Classical" symphony had the requisite clarity [illegible] Hindemith's stunningly dramatic. The work grows with rehearing. With his score for the St. Francis ballet, it is one of his finest symphonic creations. It has lift and spaciousness and concentrations of mood. The audience greeted it with unstinted approval, recalling the composer for many bows. Once again there was occasion to admire the sympathetic responsiveness of this audience and its willingness to listen to unfamiliar works without prejudice.

Fauré's "Pélleas et Mélisande" suite was wrought poetically, and Respighi's arrangement of Bach's Passacaglia in C Minor was a climax to the evening. It seemed, however, that Mr. Koussevitzky tended to take the Passacaglia too broadly. But taste in tempi, of course, is personal.

Festival officials confirmed the report that this year's sessions had produced a substantial surplus. It was the fifth surplus in a row, since the Boston Symphony joined hands with the Berkshire Festival Association. One can only wish both organizations further surpluses. The festival's success insures steady growth. This festival may not be Salzburg or Bayreuth, but it has a greater logic and significance for America.

This Clipping From
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
BULLETIN
AUG 20 1940

BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL

When the Boston Symphony wound up the seventh annual Berkshire Festival Sunday at Lenox, Massachusetts, the huge crowd went a little crazy. It yelled—or should we say, shouted? the day being Sunday and the place being Tanglewood—it advanced on the platform waving its arms, it tore papers into shreds and threw them into the air just for fun.

All of which compares so favorably with the welcome which we used to give channel swimmers and other heroes in the great days of American hero worship, that we can't help thinking that musical affairs are nearing the zenith.

And this even before we come to the figures about this season's festival. They topped all others in a magnificent crescendo of 70,000 paying guests. This is the fifth consecutive season in which the Association has turned over a surplus to the management.

By uniting inspiring and sound musical education with recreation on a better than pay-as-you-go basis this festival is developing in the true American manner. As Howard Taubman says in his review of the last concert, "this festival may not be Salzburg or Bayreuth, but it has a greater logic and significance for America."

---

erkshire Symphonic Festival Attended by 70,000 This Year

38

Aug 19 1940

By John Selby
Associated Press Arts Editor

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass. — This summer's Berkshire Symphonic Festival has broken all records of previous seasons, figures issued by Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, president, and George W. Edman, clerk, indicate.

The nine concerts this summer were attended by 70,000 persons. In addition, three special rehearsals for the festival members and school children from the neighborhood drew 10,000 persons to Tanglewood, the festival's home, and the benefit for British relief Friday night drew 8,000, who left $25,000 for the fund before they went home.

Last summer there were six concerts, and 36,000 persons heard them. The first six concerts this summer drew 45,000.

A sizeable surplus will be returned to the project in the form of improvements on the grounds, since the venture is strictly a non-profit and cooperative affair.

Yesterday's music included three great symphonies, one of them modern. These were the Haydn G Major symphony (No. 88); Sibelius' Sturdy Seventh, and to conclude the concert as well as the festival, the monumental First Symphony of Brahms.

By Charlotte Michaud,
Journal Staff Writer

Music lovers who fail to visit Tanglewood, the Lenox (Mass.) estate where the above-mentioned festivals are held, are missing an unusual opportunity. Even rehearsal times are interesting. The writer was there this past Saturday forenoon, when the Boston Symphony was rehearsing in the shed, and an operatic group was rehearsing in the theater, and everywhere the talk was of music, and in several languages.

The beauty of Tanglewood is that of nature mostly. Little money has gone into construction, but the grounds are beautiful and the work going on in several departments of music is well worth the trip, a fairly considerable one from this section. It was accomplished by this writer by way of Bennington, Vt., where another festival was taking place, and so the trip took us by route 1 as far as Wells, then along route 9 to Bennington, which means crossing both New Hampshire and Vermont from east to west.

From the town of Bennington, one takes route 7 which is along the Mohawk trail, taking the traveler from Vermont into Massachusetts, about 45 miles to Lenox where prominently displayed signs lead the way to Tanglewood, a 200-acre estate given four years ago to the Boston Symphony by Mrs. Gorham Brooks of Boston.

John N. Burke who is program annotator for the Boston Symphony and serves on the administrative staff of the Berkshire festival graciously gave us the facts herein recorded. The festival, as noted above, was the most successfully held so far. It lasted three weeks, opening Aug. 1 and closing Sunday. The concerts were given by the Boston Symphony and soloists were Albert Spalding, violinist; Dorothy Maynor, soprano; Gregor Piatigorsky, 'cellist; Jesu Maria Sanroma, pianist. With the chorus, there appeared as soloists Elisabeth Schumann, Alexander Kipnis, Viola Silva and William Hain.

This year, an unique organ was inaugurated by E. Power Biggs, an organist who has played in Lewiston more than once, and the organ was made possible by a grant from the Carnegie Foundation. There are no borrowed pipes in the instrument, made by G. Donald Harrison, and every stop is voiced to blend with the other.

Inaugurate Schools, Too

For the first time, this year, a school has been established at Tanglewood. It had a six-week session, the last of which coincided with the festival. Serge Koussevitsky, director of the Boston Sympony, headed the school and 30 members of the symphony composed the faculty, with other musical celebrities. Composition was taught by Aaron Copland and Paul Hindemith; and Herbert Graf of the Metropolitan Opera instructed in opera-dramatics, which is the interpretation of opera.

Over 300 students attended this first session, coming from all over the country, including the far west and south. The symphony itself was in residence the last three weeks to rehearse and perform, giving students unusual opportunity for contact with leading musicians in various fields of music.

There are two departments to the school, one being the academy which is for amateur musicians; the other, the institute which is for skilled students. The music center, which is the name given to both, does not instruct in technique, but rather teaches interpretation of music, and provides opportunity for experience thru performance.

The plan has justified itself in all departments, so it will be continued next year. Both academy and institute provide opportunity for study in orchestra, opera and chorus, and the allied war relief concert referred to in the Associated Press story is one that presented exhibition performances by all three departments, these being given simultaneously.

Festival Association

In addition to the school, there is the festival association which is a non-profit community organization that takes care of the business arrangements for the three-week festival. Citizens of Lenox, Stockbridge and Pittsfield, Mass., form the organization, and it is this group that engages the Boston Symphony to play at the festival. The festival association, as mentioned above, has for president Gertrude Robinson Smith of Lenox.

It was the festival association that built the shed where the symphony orchestra gives the festival concerts. This is a fan-shaped structure, open on three sides, and notable for its perfect acoustics. It is of plain white wood, and the hard-packed ground serves as flooring. The house that was on the grounds when the estate was given to the Boston Symphony serves as administrative center, and there is nothing pretentious about it.

The barn in the meadow down the hill and by a lake serves as general assembly room for the chorus; the garage serves for orchestra rehearsals, and the theater, so-called, built this year, is nothing but an unpainted wooden structure housing stage only, while the audience sits on long benches out of doors. A tent roof serves overhead, but the green grass is the only flooring.

A large tent in the center of the grounds is a popular gathering place at all times, for there lunches may be obtained, and folks eat them anywhere on the spacious grounds. It is all the more appreciated in that students live in cities nearby and thus save a lot of time by not having to leave the grounds to eat. Four large buses ferry the students from Tanglewood to Lenox.

The great need at present is for rehearsal halls, says Mr. Burke. "We're giving private lessons behind trees, just now", he adds, but the festival association wisely puts its money to the more pressing needs of music, rather than to housing. The grounds and trees give the beauty. The shed, largest assembly place on the grounds is beautiful in its simplicity and sweeping lines, and musicians there this year have been the best in the world.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

AUG 20 1940

Mrs. Koussevitzky Attends

Ill during most of the 1940 Festival, Mrs. Koussevitzky saw her husband conduct the Boston Symphony yesterday afternoon for the first time. Here she chats with a friend during intermission.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

AUG 20 1940

Tanglewood Program Will Be of Same Pattern in 1941

Trustees Expect Increase in Students For Center but Number of Concerts Will Probably Remain Same

The Berkshire Music Center faculty and several members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra board of trustees met at Tanglewood yesterday afternoon and decided that the pattern for the Center next year will not vary much from that of this year. There may be more students, bringing the total to nearly 400.

The school sessions will be for six weeks, starting the first part of July and coinciding with the Festival which is expected to be for three weeks, as this year.

According to members of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival board of trustees as well as members of the orchestra's board, there has been no official action on the duration of the 1941 Festival but it is likely to be the same period as this year with concerts Thursday and Saturday evenings and Sunday afternoons. At the annual meeting of the Festival board action will be taken on the opening date of the Festival which it is said is likely to be July 31.

1941 Memberships

In the programs for the 1940 Festival were blanks urging members and patrons to subscribe for next year's concerts and it was pointed out that memberships will be limited to 1500 per series. Applications must be in by Nov. 1, and payments in full made by Feb. 1.

A departure for 1941 is noted in the provision permitting memberships in the rear section covering just one person rather than having the membership cover two persons.

Because of the enthusiasm for the Allied relief benefit program, there is some talk among orchestra trustees of having a program of a similar pattern next year to give the public first hand knowledge of the work being accomplished at the Berkshire Music Center.

THIS CLIPPING FROM FALL RIVER, MASS.
HERALD-NEWS

AUG 20 1940

Music Festival Success.

Lovers of music in New England will undoubtedly be gratified at the success attending the seventh annual Berkshire Symphony Festival. The more so, indeed, because this music event is apparently destined to become a permanent institution. The event, which closed last weekend, drew 70,000 patrons to the nine concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky, besides 10,000 at special rehearsals arranged by the conductor.

The possession of a Music Court and estate of 210 acres at Stockbridge, Mass., has led to the establishment of an institute for the training of musicians, professional and amateur, which promises to be an important contribution to the rendering and appreciation of music throughout the country.

An incidental feature of this season's Festival was a concert for the relief of British war sufferers, at which 8,000 visitors contributed about $25,000 to the funds. Students in the various classes swelled the total attendance materially, so that the figures were impressive of the value of the institution as a music center.

Through it, New England maintains its high position of leadership in the development of symphonic art, demonstrated beyond question by the eminence of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, one of the best in the world.

This Clipping From DETROIT, MICH.
NEWS

AUG 22 1940

Finally Misses Berkshire Festival

ILLNESS caused Mme. Serge Koussevitsky to be absent for the first time, when her noted conductor husband directed at the Berkshires symphonic festival. She remained in the white house they had bought near the New England summer music capital.

The conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra was quite upset over his wife's absence, for she has had an important role in his rise. The Koussevitskys' romance began when he played at a St. Petersburg salon, his wife, then a small girl, loitering near the steps of the platform. Her family objected to the marriage, but today Koussevitsky is supporting them.

Gregor Piatogorsky, noted cellist and friend of the Koussevitskys, had a similar turn to his marriage. His wife's people, who were Rothschilds, opposed the marriage, but only recently he signed an affidavit that he would be responsible for them, enabling them to enter the United States.

THIS CLIPPING FROM Women's Wear Daily
NEW YORK, N. Y.

AUG 20 1940

Printed "Sportsy" Evening Dress Scores at Berkshire Concerts

Cloth Coats and Shawls Prove Suitable as Wraps at Informal Outdoor Event Attended by Many

Reprinted from Yesterday's Late Edition

The event that has caused most stir in the East this summer is the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, held at Tanglewood inthe Berkshires. Three weekend series of concerts in August, with performances by the Boston Symphony, Serge Koussevitsky conductor, receive its greatest patronage from nearby Lenox, Stockbridge and Great Barrington, but this year crowds came from all parts of the country, and you saw cars from practically every State in the union. Though this musical event has been an annual summer feature for several years, this year's attendance and enthusiastic recognition have made its prestige of greater social significance, and everybody looks to its becoming the Salzburg of America.

Because each concert draws audiences of from 6,000 to 10,000 people, even though Tanglewood is fairly inaccessible except to those in the surrounding places (everybody you talk to seems to have driven at least 30 miles just to get to the concert), and these audiences represent "substantial America," it is worth while to study what they wear for an event that has become so important, and which is expected to be even greater next year.

Informal Atmosphere.

The fact that the whole character of the event is "intelligent recreation," with the charm of an outdoor setting, governs the type of clothes worn. It should be added that the atmosphere is generally informal, and though both young and old are patrons, there are enough of the former to offset a certain stodgy element who are also summer music-lovers.

The concert is held in a huge shell, the covered top making it perfectly secure from rain, though all sides are open, so that evenings it is coolish, if not cold when the wind is blowing that way. Thus a wrap is essential. An observation which may give the keynote to the general fashion approach here, is that this reporter counted fewer fur evening jackets than at any other similar, "dressed" event.

Summer cloth coats and jackets look right and feel right, and shawls which have not been numerous at other events this summer, were another kind of wrap that looked right, and smart too because a number of the younger, collegiate type of girl was wearing them. Printed peasant "wool" type shawls, or long scarfs of chiffon or organdie, some ruffle edged, were favored. In coats and jackets, we saw many pastel 25-inch-length box "coats," and, of course, a great many wear the white or natural or pastel summer tweeds, full-length, that they wear in the daytime. (Often you use your coat for "comfort-cushioning" against an evening of hard-bench sitting).

Daytime Clothes Preferred.

Because so many people drive great distances to make the concert, daytime clothes are the most obvious preference. But still you see a great many in evening dress, because dinner parties are planned in conjunction with the musical evening. Measuring fashion according to the setting, we should say that those wearing prints, cottons and rayon jersey look most appropriately dressed, and these did outnumber everything else, though a number of girls wore white or pastel organdies. (These last don't fare too well in view of the long trek across fields compulsory because of outlying parking locations, distances between the concert-shell and the car-parking locations.)

Sportsy Evening Styles (Shirtwaist or Dirndl.)

Printed cottons, like striped and bright-flower piques, and chintzes were most numerous. Bright red, often with bright green, was much in favor, both in floral prints and in stripes, including rayon jersey.

In the daytime, at the Sunday afternoon concert, one is impressed again with the great hold of color this summer, greatly outnumbering whites, which for so many years represented the decision for Sunday wear at resorts. A great deal of yellow and light green, not only in pale tealeaf, but newer, in light nile and palest pistachio, these in monotone silk crepes and fine sheer linen.

BRISTOL, CONN.
PRESS

AUG 20 1940

Berkshire Music Festival A Huge Success This Year

70,000 Persons Attended 9 Concerts—Weather Helped A Great Deal

By JOHN SELBY
(Associated Press Arts Editor)

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 20—This summer's Berkshire Symphonic Festival has broken all records of previous seasons, figures issued yesterday by Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, president, and George W. Edman, clerk, indicate.

The nine concerts this summer were attended by 70,000 persons. In addition, three special rehearsals for the festival members and school children from the neighborhood drew 10,000 persons to Tanglewood, the festival's home, and the benefit for British relief Friday night drew 8,000, who left $25,000 for the fund before they went home.

Last summer there were six concerts, and 36,000 persons heard them. The first six concerts this summer drew 45,000.

A sizeable surplus will be returned to the project in the form of improvements on the grounds, since the venture is strictly a non-profit and cooperative affair.

Sunday's music included three great symphonies, one of them modern. These were Theese G major symphony (No. 88); Sibelius' sturdy seventh, and to conclude the concert as well as the festival, the monumental First symphony of Brahms.

Festival luck held so far as weather went—there was a misty rain at intervals Sunday afternoon, and perfect weather for the other eight concerts. This year Serge Koussevitzky "doubled in brass." He not only conducted his noble Boston Symphony in all the music of the festival, but was director of the Berkshire Music Center, a school of music for professionals and non-professionals which closed Sunday after a six-week session on the Tanglewood estate.

NEPERA PARK, N.Y
NEWS
8/23/40

President candidate.

BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL HAS ITS BEST YEAR

The Annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Stockbridge, Mass, has broken all attendance records with Serge Koussevitsky and the Boston Symphony.

DOBBS FERRY, N.Y
SENTINEL
8/23/40

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

AUG 20 1940

139

Mrs. Koussevitzky Attends

Ill during most of the 1940 Festival, Mrs. Koussevitzky saw her husband conduct the Boston Symphony yesterday afternoon for the first time. Here she chats with a friend during intermission.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

AUG 20 1940

Tanglewood Program Will Be of Same Pattern in 1941

Trustees Expect Increase in Students For Center but Number of Concerts Will Probably Remain Same

The Berkshire Music Center faculty and several members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra board of trustees met at Tanglewood yesterday afternoon and decided that the pattern for the Center next year will not vary much from that of this year. There may be more students, bringing the total to nearly 400.

The school sessions will be for six weeks, starting the first part of July and coinciding with the Festival which is expected to be for three weeks, as this year.

According to members of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival board of trustees as well as members of the orchestra's board, there has been no official action on the duration of the 1941 Festival but it is likely to be the same period as this year with concerts Thursday and Saturday evenings and Sunday afternoons. At the annual meeting of the Festival board action will be taken on the opening date of the Festival which it is said is likely to be July 31.

1941 Memberships

In the programs for the 1940 Festival were blanks urging members and patrons to subscribe for next year's concerts and it was pointed out that memberships will be limited to 1500 per series. Applications must be in by Nov. 1, and payments in full made by Feb. 1.

A departure for 1941 is noted in the provision permitting memberships in the rear section covering just one person rather than having the membership cover two persons.

Because of the enthusiasm for the Allied relief benefit program, there is some talk among orchestra trustees of having a program of a similar pattern next year to give the public first hand knowledge of the work being accomplished at the Berkshire Music Center.

THIS CLIPPING FROM FALL RIVER, MASS.
HERALD-NEWS

AUG 20 1940

Music Festival Success.

Lovers of music in New England will undoubtedly be gratified at the success attending the seventh annual Berkshire Symphony Festival. The more so, indeed, because this music event is apparently destined to become a permanent institution. The event, which closed last weekend, drew 70,000 patrons to the nine concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky, besides 10,000 at special rehearsals arranged by the conductor.

The possession of a Music Court and estate of 210 acres at Stockbridge, Mass., has led to the establishment of an institute for the training of musicians, professional and amateur, which promises to be an important contribution to the rendering and appreciation of music throughout the country.

An incidental feature of this season's Festival was a concert for the relief of British war sufferers, at which 8,000 visitors contributed about $25,000 to the funds. Students in the various classes swelled the total attendance materially, so that the figures were impressive of the value of the institution as a music center.

Through it, New England maintains its high position of leadership in the development of symphonic art, demonstrated beyond question by the eminence of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, one of the best in the world.

This Clipping From DETROIT, MICH.
NEWS

AUG 22 1940

Finally Misses Berkshire Festival

ILLNESS caused Mme. Serge Koussevitsky to be absent for the first time, when her noted conductor husband directed at the Berkshires symphonic festival. She remained in the white house they had bought near the New England summer music capital.

The conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra was quite upset over his wife's absence, for she has had an important role in his rise. The Koussevitskys' romance began when he played at a St. Petersburg salon, his wife, then a small girl, loitering near the steps of the platform. Her family objected to the marriage, but today Koussevitsky is supporting them.

Gregor Piatogorsky, noted cellist and friend of the Koussevitskys, had a similar turn to his marriage. His wife's people, who were Rothschilds, opposed the marriage, but only recently he signed an affidavit that he would be responsible for them, enabling them to enter the United States.

BRISTOL, CONN.
PRESS

AUG 20 1940

Berkshire Music Festival A Huge Success This Year

70,000 Persons Attended 9 Concerts—Weather Helped A Great Deal

By JOHN SELBY
(Associated Press Arts Editor)

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 20—This summer's Berkshire Symphonic Festival has broken all records of previous seasons. figures issued yesterday by Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, president, and George W. Edman, clerk, indicate.

The nine concerts this summer were attended by 70,000 persons. In addition, three special rehearsals for the festival members and school children from the neighborhood drew 10,000 persons to Tanglewood, the festival's home, and the benefit for British relief Friday night drew 8,000, who left $25,000 for the fund before they went home.

Last summer there were six concerts, and 36,000 persons heard them. The first six concerts this summer drew 45,000.

A sizeable surplus will be returned to the project in the form of improvements on the grounds, since the venture is strictly a non-profit and cooperative affair.

Sunday's music included three great symphonies, one of them modern. These were Theese G major symphony (No. 88); Sibelius' sturdy seventh, and to conclude the concert as well as the festival, the monumental First symphony of Brahms.

Festival luck held so far as weather went—there was a misty rain at intervals Sunday afternoon, and perfect weather for the other eight concerts. This year Serge Koussevitzky "doubled in brass." He not only conducted his noble Boston Symphony in all the music of the festival, but was director of the Berkshire Music Center, a school of music for professionals and non-professionals which closed Sunday after a six-week session on the Tanglewood estate.

THIS CLIPPING FROM Women's Wear Daily
NEW YORK, N. Y.

AUG 20 1940

Printed "Sportsy" Evening Dress Scores at Berkshire Concerts

Cloth Coats and Shawls Prove Suitable as Wraps at Informal Outdoor Event Attended by Many

Reprinted from Yesterday's Late Edition

The event that has caused most stir in the East this summer is the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, held at Tanglewood inthe Berkshires. Three weekend series of concerts in August, with performances by the Boston Symphony, Serge Koussevitsky conductor, receive its greatest patronage from nearby Lenox, Stockbridge and Great Barrington, but this year crowds came from all parts of the country, and you saw cars from practically every State in the union. Though this musical event has been an annual summer feature for several years, this year's attendance and enthusiastic recognition have made its prestige of greater social significance, and everybody looks to its becoming the Salzburg of America.

Because each concert draws audiences of from 6,000 to 10,000 people, even though Tanglewood is fairly inaccessible except to those in the surrounding places (everybody you talk to seems to have driven at least 30 miles just to get to the concert), and these audiences represent "substantial America," it is worth while to study what they wear for an event that has become so important, and which is expected to be even greater next year.

Informal Atmosphere.

The fact that the whole character of the event is "intelligent recreation," with the charm of an outdoor setting, governs the type of clothes worn. It should be added that the atmosphere is generally informal, and though both young and old are patrons, there are enough of the former to offset a certain stodgy element who are also summer music-lovers.

The concert is held in a huge shell, the covered top making it perfectly secure from rain, though all sides are open, so that evenings it is coolish, if not cold when the wind is blowing that way. Thus a wrap is essential. An observation which may give the keynote to the general fashion approach here, is that this reporter counted fewer fur evening jackets than at any other similar, "dressed" event.

Summer cloth coats and jackets look right and feel right, and shawls which have not been numerous at other events this summer, were another kind of wrap that looked right, and smart too because a number of the younger, collegiate type of girl was wearing them. Printed peasant "wool" type shawls, or long scarfs of chiffon or organdie, some ruffle edged, were favored. In coats and jackets, we saw many pastel 25-inch-length box "coats," and, of course, a great many wear the white or natural or pastel summer tweeds, full-length, that they wear in the daytime. (Often you use your coat for "comfort-cushioning" against an evening of hard-bench sitting).

Daytime Clothes Preferred.

Because so many people drive great distances to make the concert, daytime clothes are the most obvious preference. But still you see a great many in evening dress, because dinner parties are planned in conjunction with the musical evening. Measuring fashion according to the setting, we should say that those wearing prints, cottons and rayon jersey look most appropriately dressed, and these did outnumber everything else, though a number of girls wore white or pastel organdies. (These last don't fare too well in view of the long trek across fields compulsory because of outlying parking locations, distances between the concert-shell and the car-parking locations.)

Sportsy Evening Styles (Shirtwaist or Dirndl.)

Printed cottons, like striped and bright-flower piques, and chintzes were most numerous. Bright red, often with bright green, was much in favor, both in floral prints and in stripes, including rayon jersey.

In the daytime, at the Sunday afternoon concert, one is impressed again with the great hold of color this summer, greatly outnumbering whites, which for so many years represented the decision for Sunday wear at resorts. A great deal of yellow and light green, not only in pale tealeaf, but newer, in light nile and palest pistachio, these in monotone silk crepes and fine sheer linen.

NEPERA PARK, N.Y
NEWS
8/23/40

candidate.

BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL HAS ITS BEST YEAR

The Annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Stockbridge. Mass, has broken all attendance records with Serge Koussevitsky and the Boston Symphony.

DOBBS FERRY, N.Y
SENTINEL
8/23/40

THIS CLIPPING FROM PEEKSKILL, N. Y.
EVENING STAR
AUG 20 1940

New Berkshire Music Center At 'Tanglewood' Has Fine Start

By IDA SHULMAN

In the heart of the Berkshires at "Tanglewood," overlooking the famous Stockbridge Bowl, there came into existence this seventh year of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, the Berkshire Music Center.

This Center, a long cherished dream of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, the conductor of the world renowned Boston Symphony Orchestra, has been one of the most unique experiments in American musical history. It has proven to be a breathtaking success!

Musicians of outstanding reputation have made the Berkshire Music Center their home for the past six weeks. They have given their advice and encouragement freely to those enrolled at the center and have made "Tanglewood" a Mecca for all lovers of music.

For the past seven Summers, Dr. Kousselitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra have come to the Berkshires to present their festival concerts. Musicians and music lovers have travelled from all over the world to hear beautiful music in most enchanting surroundings.

Many Attend Concerts

These festival concerts have been given to ever growing audiences since 1937 when "Tanglewood," an extensive estate, was presented by Mrs. Gorham Brooks to the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Generous contributions enabled the Berkshire Symphonic Festival to build for the comfort and protection of the audience the present Music Shed. The Shed seats six thousand and many others buy general admission tickets, bring their own blankets or rent cushions and sit out under the stars to listen.

At the Tschaikovsky festival program this season during the weekend of August 8th, there was an estimated audience of 9,000 each evening.

"Tanglewood" holds artistic associations as well as natural beauty. Emerson, Holmes, Melville, Hawthorne were frequent guests of the Tappan family, the former owners, when the Berkshires were the Autumn meeting place of eminent American writers. The estate was given its name because it was in the little red house (on the site now marked by a tablet) that Nathaniel Hawthorne first told his "Tanglewood Tales" and wrote "The House of The Seven Gables."

Inspiring Setting

In this inspiring setting and under the guidance of Dr. Koussevitzky and a faculty of many other renowned musicians, the Berkshire Music Center opened its "doors" on July 8th.

On the faculty are 30 members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Aaron Copland, composer and author, Olin Downes, music editor of the New York Times, Herbert Graf, stage director of the Metropolitan Opera Company in New York, Paul Hindemith, composer, G. Wallace Woodworth, chairman of the Department of Music, Harvard University, and Jesus Maria Sanroma, prominent soloist and pianist for the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The assistants and special lecturers include such prominent musicians as Stanley Chapple, Boris Goldovsky, Malcolm Holmes, Abram Chasins, Archibalt T. Davison, Randall Thompson and Augustus D. Kanzig.

These men, who give of their experience and talent so unstintingly, have made this Summer at the Center an inspirational experience for its members. Students feel free to ask questions of these experts at any time and are always met with consideration.

On Saturday evening, when the Boston Symphony played Paul Hindemith's Symphony "Mathis der Maler" and Dr. Koussevitzky called him to the platform, the thunderous applause and "bravos" of the capacity audience gave his students and friends at the Center a tremendous thrill.

The feeling of informality and friendliness which pervades every corner of Tanglewood assures the visitor of fine music making in every sense—that of the composer, conductor and interpreter.

300 Students Enrolled

The 300 students at the Center are enrolled in either the Institute or the Academy. The Institute students are those who intend to make music a profession and are perfecting techniques in orchestral conducting, orchestral playing, opera dramatics or advanced composition. All these students are carefully selected on the basis of examinations.

The Academy or general school has no formal entrance requirement. It work is carried on in general sessions, open to all, for singing, playing, lectures and concerts.

There are no examinations during the Summer, no marks for completed courses and no academic credit given. Students attend orchestra, chorus, lectures and chamber music because they are interested in performing or listening to music.

Everybody can either play or sing or do both well and music of every style and degree of difficulty is read at sight.

For the opening of the school, Randall Thompson, director of the Curtis Institute of Music and a special lecturer at the Center wrote "Allelula," a choral work which was completed at the last moment and rushed up to the Center just before the "opening bell." The music was given to this newly assembled chorus and sung beautifully at sight.

Unique Environment

In every nook and cranny, instrumentalists and vocalists of varied description may be found practising. It is an interesting sensation to stand in the midst of the Tanglewood grounds and to be conscious of the Boston Symphony rehearsing in the Shed, the opera group in the Theatre, the chorus in te Barn, the Institute Orchestra in the garage and a few odd 'cellists and flutists in the "Tanglewood House."

On Friday afternoon, August 16, the opera students presented Handel's "Acis and Galatea" in the Tanglewood Gardens with the Berkshire Hills and Mahkeenac Lake as a setting.

After this idyllic performance, the Tanglewood forces headed by Dr. Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra gave an Allied Relief Fund Benefit for British Aid.

The program consisted of simultaneous performances by the Institute Orchestra, Chorus and Opera Department at 6 o'clock. After speeches by Governor Lehman, Dorothy Thompson and Sir Louis Beale, the Boston Symphony gave a gala concert with Albert Spalding, Gregor Piatigorsky and Alexander Kipnis as soloists.

The chorus of the Center, on Thursday evening, presented the Bach B Minor Mass with the Boston Symphony Orchestra as one of the Symphonic Festival concerts.

Conductor Holds Tea

One of the most memorable occasions of the entire Summer for the members was the tea given by Dr. and Msr. Koussevitzky at their beautiful home "Seranak," high in the Berkshire Hills. Every guest will long remember the charm and friendliness of his distinguished hosts.

Should a visitor come to "Tanglewood" for a day and stay from 9:30 A. M., to 10:30 P. M., he could attend an opera class, a chorus rehearsal with the Boston Symphony, an Institute Orchestra rehearsal, a lecture by Olin Downes, a performance of a Beethoven Trio, a class in Solfege and a concert by the Institute Ochestra. This program is one chosen at random from the invariably interesting daily schedules at the Center.

On Sunday afternoon, as the final chords of Brahms' C Minor Symphony ended the Symphonic Festival Series of 1940 and the experimental season of the Berkshire Music Center came to a close, musitions all over the world might well vision "Tanglewood" as the future "Salzburg" of America.

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN
AUG 21 1940

BOARD SOON TO DECIDE PLAN OF 1941 FESTIVAL

Trustees Thought Unlikely to Lengthen Season, at Meeting Next Month

Pittsfield, Aug. 20—When the trusvember 1 and paid for in full by festival have their annual meeting next month it will be known definitely what the pattern of the 1941 festival will follow as well as the opening date.

Members of the board stated today that there was little likelihood of the season being extended beyond the three-week season and they were of the opinion that the season may open July 31. Memberships, limited to 1500 per series are now being received. Applications must be received by the festival office at Stockbridge by November 1 and paid for in full by February 1. Under the membership plan it is possible to hear the Boston symphony at Tanglewood for 83 1-3 cents per program.

Members of the faculty of the Berkshire Music center and members of the Boston Symphony orchestra's board of trustees met at Tangelwood yesterday to discuss their plans for 1941. It was indicated that the pattern of the school will not vary much but there may be an increase in enrolment to nearly 400.

According to one of the trustees, that because of the enthusiasm for the Allied Relief Fund benefit a similar program [illegible] be arranged next year so that the public may be acquainted with accomplishments at the Center.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT
AUG 21 1940

FESTIVAL PATTERN TO BE KNOWN SOON

Trustees of Berkshire Symphonic Event Meet

MEMBERSHIPS OPEN

Possibility Given That 1941 Series of Tanglewood Concerts May Open July 31.

It will be known definitely what pattern the 1941 Berkshire Symphonic Festival will follow and what the opening date will be after the trustees of the Festival hold their annual meeting next month.

Members of the board stated yesterday that there was little likelihood of the season being extended beyond the three-week season and they were of the opinion that the season may open July 31. Memberships, limited to 1500 per series are now being received. Applications must be received by the festival office at Stockbridge by November 1 and paid for in full by February 1. Under the membership plan it is possible to hear the Boston symphony at Tanglewood for 83 1-3 cents per program.

Members of the faculty of the Berkshire Music center and members of the Boston Symphony orchestra's board of trustees met at Tanglewood Monday to discuss their plans for 1941. It was indicated that the pattern of the school will not vary much but there may be an increase in enrollment to nearly 400.

According to one of the trustees, because of the enthusiasm for the Allied Relief fund benefit a similar program may be arranged next year so that the public may be acquainted with accomplishments at the Center.

THIS CLIPPING FROM GREAT BARRINGTON, MASS
BERKSHIRE COURIER
8/22/40

MUSIC SEASON ENDS

Symphonic Festival Completes Program Amid Great Applause.

Four concerts before thousands of people on four successive days beginning last Thursday wound up the 1940 Berkshire Symphonic Festival in a blaze of glory last week-end. The Boston Symphony orchestra and its conductor, Serge Koussevitzky received high praise from wildly enthusiastic audiences and from metropolitan daily music critics for their fine presentations while thousands flocked to hear the final performances of the great orchestra.

Attracting the largest number was the special gala program for the benefit of the Allies held on Friday night when even more notables than for the regular concerts came to hear the special concert and speeches. Prolonged applause met the Pro-Ally statements of Dorothy Thompson Governor Herbert H. Lehman, and Sir Louis Beale chairman of the British Purchasing committee, all of whom addressed the group in the shed. Archibald MacLeish, librarian of the Library of Congress presided. Approval and pro-British feeling was the stirring response to the speeches. Later in the evening an auction, drawing and splendid concert with guest artists entertained. One of the best displays of fireworks seen in some time ended the evening against a background of fleecy grey clouds and moon.

Miss Dorothy Maynor the soprano, who was introduced at the close of last season's series was recalled many times Saturday night after her singing program. Paul Hindemuth, professor at the Music Center was also enthusiastically applauded after the playing of his composition Saturday.

On Monday the festival office announced that a total of 70,000 persons had attended the nine concerts, 18,000 at the first series, 27,000 at the second, and 25000 at the third. Ten thousand were present at Saturday morning rehearsals, and the Allied Relief Fund benefit attracted 8000, making a grand total of 88,000.

Already plans are being made for the 1941 festival when the concerts will be presented on much the same schedule as this year, with nine programs. The interest aroused by the presentations of the summer school at the benefit Friday evening has induced the festival management to consider the inclusion of a similar program next year so that the public may be given an opportunity to see the work of the students.

The fesival was the largest single factor in bringing summer visitors to the county. Traffic was greatly increased, accommodations in Southern Berkshire county for the past three week-ends have been entirely taken, and eating places have done a large business.

This Clipping From
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
JOURNAL
AUG 25 1940

Speaking of festivals, the one just concluded last Sunday in the Berkshires by the Boston Symphony was an immense success and a great tribute to the international, non-political character of music. The Berkshire Festival will probably replace Salzburg, which is not likely ever to regain its former top place.

This Clipping From
HARTFORD, CONN.
COURANT
AUG 25 1940

The Tanglewood Musical Festival has finished its current activities, and with a flourish. It has been a striking success in point of attendance; and in many respects artistically—the Boston Symphony is the world's greatest orchestra, Conductor Koussevitzky is an eminent leader, with a large following, and the soloists have been of the "distinguished" order.

If all goes well, Tanglewood may become the foremost of our summertime music festivals. Incidentally, now is the time for all United States festivals to make plans to supply what Europe cannot be expected to do . . . for a long time.

Among Us Girls

Bristol Conn - Herald

By Lydia

Aug 22, 1940

Some people call it the American Salzburg....to many of us, whohave never been to Salzburg, it is appropriately enough named the Berkshire Festival....through it, in a musical way, for several years there has been a real reflowering of New England on the very spot that used to attract such literary highlights as Hawthorne, Lowell and their intimates....

* * *

One afternoon last week we wrapped ourselves in a cultural mood, filled up the car with gas, and set out for Stockbridge to enjoy a midsummer's night dream in the Koussevitsky way....

* * *

Most distinctive feature of the occasion was the audience, some seven thousand strong....quite different from a baseball crowd, a circus crowd, or the gathering of hopeful politicos at Elwood, Indiana, for the average age was well past the middle mark of life, indicating that there is truth in the statement that music is more necessary and more appreciated by the old than by the young....

* * *

Outstanding were the numerous austere dowagers, who looked like fine* old ocean liners, luxurious, expensive, but a little dated....with hats worn at Queen Mary angles....ancient sable tippets protected their necks from drafts....you could picture them riding around in well-kept, ancient Rolls-Royces or Packards, driven by cross chauffeurs....

* * *

There were courtly old men, too, with flowers in their buttonholes, neat moustaches, and trimmed beards....also a gleam in their eye as if their Bach or Beethoven meant almost as much to them as clipping bonds....

* * *

Musicians and genuine music lovers were everything apparent ....you could tell them by their look of rapt attention, the way in which they settled back in their seats contentedly as the opening strains of "Pomp and Circumstance" were played....

* * *

In the offing could be noted a number of wheel chairs....there were many persons dependent on canes or crutches....it seems that music offers real sanctuary to those who have been caught short in life by some physical handicap....

* * *

Always accompanying great music and deep feeling is dignity, but the atmosphere was at the same time delightfully informal ....far removed from the glitter of a Bushnell winter night....there was, for instance, a democratic individuality in dress, no place more in evidence than on the platform....presiding officer, Archibald MacLeish, wore an almost Yale blue shirt (lucky for his reputation that it wasn't red).... Governor Lehman and the British representative were conventional in black tuxedos with stiff collars ....later, while listening to the orchestra, the Governor relaxed behind a pipe....Dorothy Thompson was intense in a long gown and had a life-begins-at-fortyish-look....Koussevitsky himself was brisk in a white coat with black trousers....

* * *

The theme of the evening, was Great Britain and America's need for a British victory....and there was no denying the audience sympathy as speaker after speaker stressed the urgency of the present European situation....it was interesting to see how these outstanding figures in music, in literature, and in affairs, went straight to the point without equivocation....imaginative, sensitive, still they are able to see no glory in the world if England loses....

* * *

Such persons as these have always been the prophets to whom the rest of us, a little less perceptive, a little less far-sighted, have in the long run had to listen.....

* * *

After the speech-making was done, there was a pause for refreshment....those who had not already stopped by a Berkshire wayside to wallow knee-deep in broiled chicken and sandwiches, opened their picnic boxes in the shed, and unashamedly poured forth the contents of thermos bottles for the benefit of those in their party....others moved to the lawn to eat under a rising moon, or to chase up a New England supper in one of the tents, where the line formed at the right....

* * *

Meanwhile Author Owen Johnson engineered an auction, the proceeds of which were to provide a surgical unit for Britain ....the bidding started at fifty dollars which left us out in the cold from the start....still it was fascinating to hear the things go.... an autographed copy of Edna St. Vincent Millay's "There are no Islands," annoted with notes for musical adaption, for $225.... choice of twin registered heifers, with pedigrees worthy of Burke's peerage, for $100....a 1765 Georgian tray for $375....and so on, until $1200 was raised in a little over one half hour.

* * *

Meanwhile the rest of us had taken chances on a fabulous list of prizes....a case of champagne ....a dozen Nylon stockings....a dozen French plates....tickets to next year's festival....many others besides later the lucky numbers were drawn from a barrel by Dorothy Thompson,....and since we never expected to win, we didn't have to go away disappointed....

* * *

By now the moon was riding high....swiftly making its way through beautiful scattered clouds ....from the theatre in the distance came the strains of a Strauss waltz....people lingered to drink soda pop, orangeade, and watch the magnificent fireworks that went off with the full force of a blitzkreig....

* * *

And if we had not had a dreary two hour drive ahead, we never would have dragged ourselves away from a festival that lived up to the term in every sense of the word....with the Great Britain and the great Koussevitsky, dividing the honors as the evening's hero....

THIS CLIPPING FROM NEW YORK CITY, N. Y.
VILLAGER
AUG 22 1940

141

This Changing World

By Frank Parker Stockbridge

Most every night for the past three weeks I've had to draw up a second blanket before morning. The most delightful part of a Berkshire summer begins around the first of August and lasts until after the leaves have painted the hills with brilliant red and yellow and brown and then begun to fall after the second or third frost, along in October. Throughout that period we have bright, pleasant days except for the equinoxial rains in September, and cool nights, when the thermometer drops twenty or more degrees between sundown and sunrise and nothing seems so comfortable as to stay in bed and get that long rest that the doctor ordered.

But there have been half a dozen nights lately in which my early sleep has been broken by the unending procession of motor cars going past our house, northward from 7 to 8 o'clock, then back again between 11 and one o'clock in the morning. For we live on the principal highway leading to Tanglewood. And Tanglewood is the mecca to which literally tens of thousands of music-lovers from every part of America have been making their pilgrimage for the three series of concerts which comprise the Berkshire Symphonic Festival. Which accounts for the traffic past my bedroom window on three successive week-ends.

If you are a real music-lover you've been reading in the papers about the Festival at Tanglewood. If you're not, you don't care. But enough people in the United States have been interested, in what those who are competent to judge, call the finest music produced in America, so that there have been some 90 newspaper correspondents and music critics parked in and around Stockbridge since the beginning of the Festival, and the telegraph companies have had to set up special quarters for them to work in, with goodness knows how many extra wires and special press operators.

When All Roads Lead To Tanglewood

Whether you know just where Tanglewood is depends upon what daily paper you read. If you read the New York Times you can easily place it in Lenox. If you read the Herald-Tribune you find it located in Stockbridge. The Times correspondent had his hotel room in Lenox; the Herald-Tribune's musical staff were quartered in Stockbridge. The three hundred acres or so which comprise the old estate known for a century and more as Tanglewood lie chiefly in the town of Stockbridge. Five or six acres at the northeast corner, where the entrance gates of the Festival are located, are in Lenox. The two towns buried their jealousies and united, with the rest of the county, in calling the affair the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, though it was started in Stockbridge, by Stockbridge people, and for the first two or three years the concerts were given in the heart of Stockbridge town.

The attitude of Stockbridge folk toward Lenox was expressed in a famous quip by Owen Johnson, the author, a Stockbridge resident. "In Stockbridge," said Johnson, "we bury our dead!" To be sure, there are not a few relics of ancient grandeur still lingering around Stockbridge, but there are more in Lenox whose family heritage and tradition date back to the proud days when Lenox was the "shire town" and the center of political power as well as of wealth for all Western Massachusetts. But Pittsfield has been the county seat since 1868, and now the New Haven railroad is considering abandoning the Lenox station, so few passengers use it.

I don't know how old one has to be to profess familiarity with the writings of Nathaniel Hawthorne. Probably many who have read his "Scarlet Letter" have forgotten, if they ever knew, that one of his collections of charming short stories was called "Tanglewood Tales." Hawthorne was a good deal of a rover, seldom content to live long in one place. He moved from Salem to Concord and back again I don't know how many times, with intervals of life in England and Italy, and in 1850 he bought or leased, I am not sure which, the old Tanglewood estate, which was quite a place, with a good-sized manor house and a complete outfit of tenant houses for the workers. I think it was about the same time that Longfellow (who had told Hawthorne, his Bowdoin College classmate, that he never would learn to write) bought "Oxbow Farm" in the southern part of Stockbridge, where he lived for some time. At any rate, Tanglewood gained whatever fame it had before the Symphonic Festival started, because of Hawthorne's association with it.

The Festival started with an idea born in the brain of an energetic woman, which is the sort of place where many great achievements start. She is Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, whose summer home in Stockbridge is one of the most charming estates in a town of lovely homes. Miss Smith lives in New York in Winter. One monument to her energy and organizing ability in the city is the American Women's Association in West 57th St. She was the driving spirit who put that daring venture across.

In the Spring of 1934, Miss Smith thought that it was about time America had a center of musical interest comparable to the Austrian Salzburg. She had spent some time at Salzburg, and I have a shrewd guess that she realized that Austria was on the way out. Hitler had been in power for a year and was beginning to show his fangs. Where to have it? There was one great estate in the heart of the town which was unoccupied, the Dan Hanna place. Dan Hanna, son of the famous Mark, had built a great house surrounded with enormous barns and stables. It was to be a breeding farm for fine horses. But Dan Hanna was dead and his heirs were willing to let an out-door musical affair be staged on the ample grounds.

Symphonic Festival Success From Start

Miss Robinson Smith got a few men and women together and formed a committee to try to put the idea over. The late Henry Hadley, famous orchestra leader, was called in, and agreed that the idea was feasible. He would assemble an orchestra capable of putting on a program of the finest music. Then sub-committees were appointed to try to enlist local support and sell season tickets for a three-day series of concerts. I know what a job they had convincing merchants and local people that it would be worth while or do any good for the town, for my wife was chairman of the West Stockbridge committee. She knows music, I don't. My musical appreciation begins with Yankee Doodle and ends with Alexander's Ragtime Band.

Anyhow, the 1934 concerts were pulled off, everybody in the open air except the musicians under a wooden shell. It was a great success. The next year, thousands more people came to Stockbridge for the concerts. They were a greater success. By this time bankers, business men, hotel keepers and tradesmen of all sorts were beginning to see that people would come from a long way and spend a lot of money in town for the sake of hearing great music.

Henry Hadley, the original conductor died. "Why not have the best possible music?" some asked. Result, Serge Koussevitsky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra were engaged for the 1937 season. The problem of a permanent site was solved when Mrs. Gorham Brooks of Boston, owner of Tanglewood, gave the estate to the orchestra. The Symphonic Festival now spreads over three weeks, with a different series of concerts each week. I don't know how many people came this year, but the Berkshire Eagle reported that there weren't a dozen vacant rooms in the county. Late comers drove down our street ringing every doorbell in the hope of finding a place to sleep; some slept on open porches. Several hundred advanced music students spent the whole Summer here, because of the school started in connection with the Festival.

Not to be sordid about a matter of art, the ticket sales for this year's festival ran close to $80,000 and you can figure more than treble that for lodgings and food spent by the visitors, besides their other purchases in Pittsfield, Great Barrington, Lenox, Stockbridge and other towns. Berkshire merchants are beaming, shop attendants are worn ragged, and Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith's dream of an American Salzburg has come true.

THIS CLIPPING FROM

ARDMORE, PA
CHRONICLE
8/23/40

Metropolitan Music

A Review of Outstanding Contributions by Florence Leonard

Director of Main Line School of Music, Ardmore

The history of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival is only a brief one, but it is, for several reasons, a distinguished one. It began in 1934, when the late Henry Hadley, who had already become an important figure among American composers and conductors, suggested to a group of residents of Berkshire County the idea of an orchestral festival.

This region of western Massachusetts had been for some years one of the principal centers of American summer concerts of chamber music, because of the festivals and concerts presented by Mrs. Elizabeth Sprauge Coolidge on South Mountain.

In the first season of the Symphonic Festival, 1934, three concerts were given by members of the New York Philharmonic Orchestra, under Dr. Hadley's leadership. The auditorium was the horse show ring of a farm near Stockbridge. There was no shelter from any kind of inclement weather, whether rain or sun. But the audiences ranged in number from 1,500 to 2,000 persons.

In the second season, three concerts were given, with the shelter of a large rented tent, and the addition of numerous benches, and the gross attendance rose to the number of 7,500.

In September, 1935, when Dr. Hadley was unable to continue as conductor because of other engagements, the trustees arranged for the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under its regular conductor, Serge Koussevitsky, to become the permanent orchestra for the future concerts.

A new location, the Tanglewood estate offered by Mrs. Gorham Brooks, became the new summer home of the orchestra. A permanent festival building, an increase in the number of concerts, the installation of an organ, and the realization, this season, of Dr. Koussevitsky's plans for an Academy at Tanglewood, are now matters of history, not of anticipation.

To quote Mr. Perkins, this festival "has become the major summer musical event of the eastern United States, outside of the large cities, and has gained this standing entirely on its own account, without trying to borrow glamor by representing itself as the American counterpart of a European series.

The historic thunderstorm of 1937, which operated in rivalry with Dr. Koussevitsky during a Wagner concert, will remain long in the memories of the audience. Dr. Koussevitsky valiantly carried out the program, but the tonal effects were not those designated by the composer.

The programs of the present season have already been outlined in these columns. One of the unusual features of them has been that works of Beethoven and Tschaikowsky have been placed on the same programs. While reviewers have been impressed with the grandeur of the interpretations of the Tschaikowsky symphonies, one at least, Mr. Lawrence, found the F minor to be "breath-taking in its emotional surge and dynamic brilliance—a convincing refutation to those who would deny the genius of Tschaikowsky."

The same writer asked Dr. Koussevitsky, the following morning, if he had any artistic reason for placing the works of these composers side by side on three programs of the festival.

"Yes," replied the conductor feelingly. "I am devoted to the music of Tschaikowsky and I am hoping to prove that he can stand together with Beethoven in the same evening without suffering from comparison. I can say, and thousands of people with me, that with Tschaikowsky it is only a matter of performance."

THIS CLIPPING FROM
WORCESTER, MASS.
GAZETTE
AUG 23 1940

In the Clear at Tanglewood

It is evident now that at Tanglewood in the Berkshires America has the makings of the greatest Summer music festival on this side of the Atlantic, and perhaps the greatest enterprise of its kind the world has yet seen, Salzburg and Bayreuth notwithstanding.

The Berkshire Festival is still young. Yet in the season lately closed, some 70,000 persons attended nine concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and an extra concert for British relief yielded $25,000. The Festival produced a substantial financial surplus, which will, of course, be devoted to improvement and maintenance of the facilities for future Festivals.

Artistically, success was pronounced; there is critical agreement on that point. By performing the first symphonies of several of the greatest masters as well as several works of the modern school, Dr. Koussevitzky provided a feast for those who, so to speak, take their music as a meat course; he performed also a rich listing of works to delight those for whom music is chiefly a pleasant dessert. It was a true festival program.

This year, for the first time, the Berkshire Music Center, offering six weeks of assorted music study, with orchestral and choral units, made its appearance. The Music Center, too, was a success. In short, Tanglewood has now all the ingredients for becoming the capital of Summer music in the country. It has everything but the ivy of tradition, if anything featuring the splendid Boston Symphony can be said to lack tradition.

A standout fact, moreover, is that apparently this great Festival will be able to make its own way, and offer fine opportunities for musical study from the resources acquired through the annual concerts. It is a tribute to the Symphony, to Dr. Koussevitzky and all others concerned to observe that the Berkshire Festival, having acquired its Music Shed and other facilities, is now able to operate without having to pass the hat.

This Clipping From CLEVELAND, OHIO
NEWS
AUG 24 1940

Berkshire

With the Cleveland Institute of Music moving into its new home, Clevelanders returning from the Berkshire Festival and Cain Park Theater staging its final community sing tomorrow night, we are experiencing the well known lull before the fall music storm breaks.

Numerous Clevelanders enjoyed the Boston Symphony's festival this summer at its Berkshire home. Dr. Artur Rodzinski, director of the Cleveltand Orchestra, and Mrs. Rodzinski attended several of the concerts and entertained a number of Cleveland festival visitors at their nearby Massachusetts farm.

Boris Goldovsky headed the opera department at the Berkshire Music Center, with Maurice Goldman also a member of the staff. Carabella Johnson was a member of the opera production staff.

This Clipping From
ALBANY, N.Y.
KNICKERBOCKER NEWS
AUG 24 1940

The Melting Pot

—By LAURENCE M'KINNEY

Note: In order to ascertain the influence of great music on other than the music lover Slugger Mac was sent over one evening to the Berkshire Festival to hear the Boston Symphony Orchestra. His write-up wasn't published at the time; but now that Dr. Koussevitzky and Mr. Roseberry have both left this vicinity it might as well be read. It will save me writing a column, anyway.—Laurence McKinney.

Koussevitzky Drops Tchaikovsky in Third (Blow by blow account by Slugger Mac Coy)

"Want to see Koussevitzky play Tchaikovsky," says Tip, handing me a couple of blue tickets.

"In what"? I says.

"In Lenox," he replies. So I say, sure, and pushes off.

I got there in the intermission before the main bout. It is marked Symphony No. 6 so I guess I miss five of the prelims. The stadium is full, about seven thousand customers, looking toward the ring at one end. A guy with a white tux and a gray goatee sits next to me. He is probably the Marquis of Queensbury and he is reading a little book with lines on it.

"What's that"? I ask.

"It's the score," he says.

"Well, what is it"? I ask.

He looks at me again and says, "It's the score." So I know he's nuts. Just then one of the fighters come in.

"Who's that"? I ask the Marquis.

"Serge Koussevitzky," he says.

"Who's he tackling"? I ask.

"Tchaikovsky,—Peter Ilitsch Tchaikovsky."

A couple of Russian scrappers, I says to myself. This guy gets on a soap box, looks over the bunch of plumbers and carpenters in front of him, and lets them have it with both fists. There is one hell of a noise.

"He got Red Pete right on the horn. Go it Blue Serge," I yell. The Marquis pulls me down and I watch more quiet-like. Serge is working hard. No sooner does he slap down a bunch of Gut-Strokers on his left than a gang of junk dealers in the back let out a lot of Bronx cheers and he has to give them a poke. He gets one of them on the snozzle.

"Who's that"? I says.

"Oboy," says the Marquis, and I can see he's gettting human.

That's the end of the round. Blue Serge is still on his feet wiping his face with a towel. He looks pretty fresh, but Red Pete still has some wind left. In a minute they are at it again. They start slow this round. I can see Pete is saving his strength. He gets knocked down.

"What's the count"? I ask the Marquis.

"Five-four," he says , glumly. That adds up to nine, I figure, and pretty close to a knock-out. No wonder he's sparring for time. Blue Serge isn't working so hard either but he's got Pete petrified. Some of the guys on the side are standing up and hiding behind their Noise Crates. They are scarred stiff. It is a dull round.

But, Boy, that third round! Both Pete and Serge come out fighting and begin mixing it up from the start. Pete knows he has to show something so he pulls out all the stops. But Serge takes it. Three fellows in the back keep pushing things at him, and Serge knocks them down their throats. Then a fellow in the corner grabs a pair of mallets and begins pounding all the furniture in front of him. Then the Gut Strokers begin picking in him, and a battery of anti-aircraft stick up their barrels and let fly with pot shots. Blue Serge is swinging hard now, both arms pumping. He's up, he's down, he's up again. He takes a crack at the basson who blows up. He's got the piccolo squealing, and the tuba grunting. Then all of a sudden they all get together and rush him. But no use, they're winded. Right, left, right, left, and he takes Red Pete just as the round ends. The customers cheer.

And then Serge does a cute thing. Just to rub it in he plays a funeral march. No one but a card like Serge would think of that after the Kayo. Poor old Pete, he got what was coming to him. The customers kept on cheering and Serge comes back and takes a flock of bows.

I turn to the Marquis of Queensbury.

"What do you think of this guy Tchaikovsky"? I crow.

"Pathetic"? he murmurs.

"You said it, Feller," I shout.

This Clipping From
BUFFALO, N.Y.
NEWS
AUG 24 1940

143

Enchanting Readings Resound in the Berkshires

By THEODOLINDA C. BORIS

VERILY there is magic in the number seven! Both in enthusiasm and attendance, this reputed numerical magic was overwhelmingly evident at the seventh annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival given by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. The Festival sponsored nine concerts, the last three of which this observer was privileged to hear.

According to the box office, enthusiasm and attendance at the Festival had grown to record-breaking proportions, a total of nearly 70,000 persons having heard the concerts, while the unique new music school, instituted and directed by Dr. Koussevitzky, attracted more than 300 students, eager to learn and enjoy what the director had called "a Summer of living and working in music."

The real magic of the festival, however, lay in the remarkable interpretations of the music selected for re-creation. It was a magic that made oft-heard masterpieces exciting with a new radiance. It was a magic that so illumined contemporary masterworks as almost to make the hearer powerless to judge whether it was context or interpretation that made the readings so significant.

Moments of Grandeur

Admittedly, the climax, both for the Festival and the Music Center, was the performance of the Bach B minor Mass on Aug. 15. A 200-voiced chorus, the orchestra, four soloists—Elisabeth Schumann, soprano; Viola Silva, mezzo-soprano; William Hain, tenor, and Alexander Kipnis, bass—and Dr. Koussevitzky, combined to give a performance in which there were moments when the grandeur, entreaty and consecration of Bach's music seemed as closely met in the interpretation as human effort and expressiveness could make possible.

Most memorable of the choral singing were the choruses "Qui tollis" and "Cum sanctu spiritu" from the Gloria, and the "Et incarnatus est" and "Crucifixus" from the Credo. An outstanding solo was Miss Silva's "Agnus Dei," which she sang with fine feeling. Highly commendable was the singing of Miss Schumann and Mr. Hain, while the magnificent voice and musicianship of Mr. Kipnis seemed less happily at home in the oratorio style.

The instrumental soloists were of inestimable assistance to the sum total. They included Richard Burgin, violin; Willen Valkenier, horn; Georges Laurent, flute; Louis Speyer and Jean Devergie, oboes d'amore, and Putnam Aldrich, harpsichord.

New Discovery

Two prolonged and enthusiastic ovations marked the Saturday evening (Aug. 17) concert. The first was for Dorothy Maynor, Negro soprano who was "discovered" at a Festival picnic last Summer. The second was for Paul Hindemith, noted composer, whose symphonic work, "Mathis der Maler," was given a remarkably effective interpretation by Dr. Koussevitzky and his men.

Miss Maynor has a beautiful voice, limpid and velvety in quality, and, what is more important, she is gifted with a musical sensibility of a high order. Thus her interpretations of Mozart's concert aria, "Bella mia fiamma, addio," and Beethoven's "Adelaide," were of an exquisite expressiveness, the former dramatic and poignant, and the latter moving with its delicate sustained pianissimi. The soprano's tones were clear and even, suffering only from a slight distortion when high notes were unduly pushed.

Called by one commentator "the artistic credo of a great musician," the Hindemith work impressed for its very individual and personal message, not always easily assimilated, perhaps, but unmistakably strong and significant.

Distinguished Readings

The wit of Prokofieff's Classical Symphony; the subtle poetry of Faure's unfamiliar "Pelleas et Melisande" suite, and the impressiveness of Respighi's orchestral transcription of the Bach Passacaglia in C minor were set forth by the orchestra with its customary elan, clarity and high musical standard.

Readings to be treasured in the aural memory were those of the Haydn G major Symphony, No. 88; the Sibelius Seventh and the Brahms First Symphonies, which made up the program for the final Festival concert on Sunday afternoon (Aug. 18). They were readings distinguished by virtue of their complete understanding of three strongly contrasted works and by their powerful evocation of mood and message.

This, in barest outline, is the story of the last three concerts of the 1940 Berkshire Symphonic Festial. There is so much more that could be written—the unusual incidents of the week-end, the famous faces seen in the Music Shed, the Saturday morning rehearsal of the orchestra, exceptions to some of Dr. Koussevitzky's tempi, more about the soloists, more about the Bach B minor Mass, the new organ, the weather, the chamber music by the South Mountain String Quartet and Harold Bauer on Friday afternoon.

Suffice it to say that the Berkshire Festival is unique and treasurable and is by way of becoming one of the most worthy and significant American traditions!

This Clipping From
EVANSVILLE, IND.
COURIER

AUG 25 1940

Hears Boston Symphony In Two Concerts

TWO concerts and two rehearsals devoted entirely to the music of Tschaikowsky and Beethoven played by the celebrated Boston Symphony Orchestra under direction of Sergei Koussevitzky were heard recently at the Berkshire Music Festival by Hugh Hazelrigg of Evansville.

Mr. Hazelrigg was a guest of Professor Gaylord Browne, conductor of the Evansville Philharmonic Orchestra, who is attending the Berkshire Music Institute and who was one of five of the country's outstanding musicians selected to be active conductors at the festival, studying under personal tutelage of Koussevitzky.

During the three-week festival on beautiful Tanglewood grounds near Lenox, Mass., the orchestra presents three concerts weekly. Chamber music and opera are also on the programs Orchestra concerts are given in a mammoth steel and wooden shed, roofed but open on the sides. The shed has a seating capacity of 7000 persons, and at each concert the shell is crammed with music devotees.

* * *

REHEARSALS found particularly interesting by Mr. Hazelrigg, are held in a large barn. Small concerts and operatic presentations are given in an outdoor theater. Orchestra subscribers are permitted to attend public rehearsals.

During Mr. Hazelrigg's stay, he heard the Beethoven violin concerto played by Albert Spalding, violin virtuoso, accompanied by the symphony.

Especially interesting, according to Mr. Hazelrigg, was the high quality of chamber music played by institute students who had been together only a few weeks.

He also witnessed performance of the opera, "Hin und Zureck," by the modern composer, Hindemith, a burlesque on opera.

The composer and Jesus Maria Sanroma, concert pianist, played the piano accompaniment for the opera. Other accompaniment included an harmonium and eight woodwind and brass instruments. Richard Burgin, concertmaster of the Boston Symphony, conducted.

The festival closed last week. Professor Browne will return to Evansville early in September.

This Clipping From
NEW ORLEANS, LA.
ITEM

AUG 28 1940

This Clipping From
BUFFALO, N.Y.
COURIER-EXPRESS
AUG 26 1940

SPOUSE ABOUT TOWN—Winding up the musical season in the Berkshires with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the duches and I had need of a night's lodging so we went to the house of little Mrs. Henry, a mile from Stockbridge. We were given a big clean and comfortable room with bath adjerning, and when the next noon came we said we wanted to pay the bill and how much? "Two dollars" said Mrs. Henry, and I fainted dead away. Two bobs for practically the bridal suite! When will those dear old Yankees learn to h'ist the prices for city slickers? Never, I hope! . . . . One night was a big gala affair for British relief, with Dorothy Thompson making an eloquent plea and the band playing, but the treat was to see the Boston swells, in diamonds and old lace, lined up cafeteria style to buy a good New England dinner for 50 cents and lug it away on a tray. What a democracy! . . . . Arthur Rodzinski, conductor of the Cleveland Symphony, has a place near Stockbridge [illegible] he calls White Goat Farm. While resting from shaking the stick at his fiddlers, he and his missus raise these nanny and billy goats, and sell their milk and cheese to all comers. Feeling for a pound of goat cheese, I went over, and Mme. Rodzinski herself cut the pound from the loaf, on a priceless mahogany table, using a beautiful silver knife and a right hand a'drip with diamond rings. She took my 35 cents, thanked me kindly, and said call again. That's what I call real old-time dirt soil farming. . . . For solid joy, I recommend lying on the back on a blanket on the grass outside the music shed at Tanglewood on a fine August night—looking up at the quiet stars and listening to Koussevitsky's Boston Melody Boys give out Mozart. That's a spiritual topper! . . . . Favorite book title at my lending library—Twilight Cheats, by Grace Perkins.

I saw a little old pappy fellow at one of the Berkshire festival nights wearing an evening outfit that has Beau Brummel tossing in his tomb. It consisted of black pants, white boiled shirt with batwing collar and black tie, and a sky blue dinner jacket—the whole topped by a snappy beret of the same color. If I had known it was a masquerade party, I'd have come as Tarzan myself, but the little man's outfit was good for a quick, loud, vulgar laugh.

This Clipping From
INDIANAPOLIS, IND.
STAR
AUG 26 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM MUNCIE, IND.
STAR

AUG 26 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM OAKLAND, CAL.
POST-INQUIRER
AUG 29 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM MANKATO, MINN.
FREE PRESS

AUG 26 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM
UNION CITY, N. J.
HUDSON DISPATCH

AUG 26 1940

This Clipping From
AKRON, O.
BEACON-JOURNAL
AUG 26 1940

This Clipping From SPRINGFIELD, O.
NEWS

AUG 30 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM OKLAHOMA CITY, OKLA.
TIMES
AUG 26 1940

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
SUNDAY UNION
& REPUBLICAN

AUG 25 1940

Summer Music Centers

The immense success of the seventh Berkshire Symphonic festival and of the summer school and music center established this year in connection with the festival has freshly called attention to the growing importance of summer music and summer schools of music. Dr Koussevitzky's happy idea of making the festivals the foundation of such an educational enterprise has proved to be even more fruitful than could have been predicted.

When this summer school was first projected not so large a proportion of American students of music were settled abroad as had formerly been the case, for the old belief that first-rate instruction could not be had in the United States was waning. But, on the other hand, the number of students and professional musicians going abroad during the long summer vacation for intensive study under Europe's most famous master was rapidly increasing, and in Europe many summer classes were being formed, some of them in pleasant summer resorts, to meet this growing demand.

All this has, of course, been changed by the war. Europe is closed to cultural pilgrims, and an unprecedented number of Europe's most famous musicians have found a haven in the United States. Some of them have found congenial posts in American universities as teachers of composition, musical theory or musical history. Others practice their profession or give private lessons. Opportunities for first-rate instruction have never been greater, but they need organizing, and in particular provision has to be made for the growing army of music students, music teachers and professional musicians who desire to make a summer of study as richly profitable as possible.

This need the Tanglewood school and music center are well designed to meet, and the exhibition of the work of students in conducting, orchestral playing and operatic singing, for which a place was made during the festival, was but a sample of a cultural work which is capable of great extension.

Tanglewood is almost uniquely qualified as a summer music center of this kind, first of all by the presence of a famous conductor and a famous orchestra in which unsurpassed virtuosi are included, but also by an ideal environment. Not even in Berkshire can the weather be guaranteed to be as nearly 100 per cent perfect as was the case this year, but Berkshire's virtues as a summer resort have long been celebrated, the hills are better than valley or seashore for summer music, and scenic beauty adds to the attractiveness of Tanglewood to music lovers.

This Clipping From
BUFFALO, N.Y.
NEWS
AUG 24 1940

143

Enchanting Readings Resound in the Berkshires

By THEODOLINDA C. BORIS

VERILY there is magic in the number seven! Both in enthusiasm and attendance, this reputed numerical magic was overwhelmingly evident at the seventh annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival given by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. The Festival sponsored nine concerts, the last three of which this observer was privileged to hear.

According to the box office, enthusiasm and attendance at the Festival had grown to record-breaking proportions, a total of nearly 70,000 persons having heard the concerts, while the unique new music school, instituted and directed by Dr. Koussevitzky, attracted more than 300 students, eager to learn and enjoy what the director had called "a Summer of living and working in music."

The real magic of the festival, however, lay in the remarkable interpretations of the music selected for re-creation. It was a magic that made oft-heard masterpieces exciting with a new radiance. It was a magic that so illumined contemporary masterworks as almost to make the hearer powerless to judge whether it was context or interpretation that made the readings so significant.

Moments of Grandeur

Admittedly, the climax, both for the Festival and the Music Center, was the performance of the Bach B minor Mass on Aug. 15. A 200-voiced chorus, the orchestra, four soloists—Elisabeth Schumann, soprano; Viola Silva, mezzo-soprano; William Hain, tenor, and Alexander Kipnis, bass—and Dr. Koussevitzky, combined to give a performance in which there were moments when the grandeur, entreaty and consecration of Bach's music seemed as closely met in the interpretation as human effort and expressiveness could make possible.

Most memorable of the choral singing were the choruses "Qui tollis" and "Cum sanctu spiritu" from the Gloria, and the "Et incarnatus est" and "Crucifixus" from the Credo. An outstanding solo was Miss Silva's "Agnus Dei," which she sang with fine feeling. Highly commendable was the singing of Miss Schumann and Mr. Hain, while the magnificent voice and musicianship of Mr. Kipnis seemed less happily at home in the oratorio style.

The instrumental soloists were of inestimable assistance to the sum total. They included Richard Burgin, violin; Willen Valkenier, horn; Georges Laurent, flute; Louis Speyer and Jean Devergie, oboes d'amore, and Putnam Aldrich, harpsichord.

New Discovery

Two prolonged and enthusiastic ovations marked the Saturday evening (Aug. 17) concert. The first was for Dorothy Maynor, Negro soprano who was "discovered" at a Festival picnic last Summer. The second was for Paul Hindemith, noted composer, whose symphonic work, "Mathis der Maler," was given a remarkably effective interpretation by Dr. Koussevitzky and his men.

Miss Maynor has a beautiful voice, limpid and velvety in quality, and, what is more important, she is gifted with a musical sensibility of a high order. Thus her interpretations of Mozart's concert aria, "Bella mia fiamma, addio," and Beethoven's "Adelaide," were of an exquisite expressiveness, the former dramatic and poignant, and the latter moving with its delicate sustained pianissimi. The soprano's tones were clear and even, suffering only from a slight distortion when high notes were unduly pushed.

Called by one commentator "the artistic credo of a great musician," the Hindemith work impressed for its very individual and personal message, not always easily assimilated, perhaps, but unmistakably strong and significant.

Distinguished Readings

The wit of Prokofieff's Classical Symphony; the subtle poetry of Faure's unfamiliar "Pelleas et Melisande" suite, and the impressiveness of Respighi's orchestral transcription of the Bach Passacaglia in C minor were set forth by the orchestra with its customary elan, clarity and high musical standard.

Readings to be treasured in the aural memory were those of the Haydn G major Symphony, No. 88; the Sibelius Seventh and the Brahms First Symphonies, which made up the program for the final Festival concert on Sunday afternoon (Aug. 18). They were readings distinguished by virtue of their complete understanding of three strongly contrasted works and by their powerful evocation of mood and message.

This, in barest outline, is the story of the last three concerts of the 1940 Berkshire Symphonic Festial. There is so much more that could be written—the unusual incidents of the week-end, the famous faces seen in the Music Shed, the Saturday morning rehearsal of the orchestra, exceptions to some of Dr. Koussevitzky's tempi, more about the soloists, more about the Bach B minor Mass, the new organ, the weather, the chamber music by the South Mountain String Quartet and Harold Bauer on Friday afternoon.

Suffice it to say that the Berkshire Festival is unique and treasurable and is by way of becoming one of the most worthy and significant American traditions!

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
SUNDAY UNION
& REPUBLICAN
AUG 25 1940

Summer Music Centers

The immense success of the seventh Berkshire Symphonic festival and of the summer school and music center established this year in connection with the festival has freshly called attention to the growing importance of summer music and summer schools of music. Dr Koussevitzky's happy idea of making the festivals the foundation of such an educational enterprise has proved to be even more fruitful than could have been predicted.

When this summer school was first projected not so large a proportion of American students of music were settled abroad as had formerly been the case, for the old belief that first-rate instruction could not be had in the United States was waning. But, on the other hand, the number of students and professional musicians going abroad during the long summer vacation for intensive study under Europe's most famous master was rapidly increasing, and in Europe many summer classes were being formed, some of them in pleasant summer resorts, to meet this growing demand.

All this has, of course, been changed by the war. Europe is closed to cultural pilgrims, and an unprecedented number of Europe's most famous musicians have found a haven in the United States. Some of them have found congenial posts in American universities as teachers of composition, musical theory or musical history. Others practice their profession or give private lessons. Opportunities for first-rate instruction have never been greater, but they need organizing, and in particular provision has to be made for the growing army of music students, music teachers and professional musicians who desire to make a summer of study as richly profitable as possible.

This need the Tanglewood school and music center are well designed to meet, and the exhibition of the work of students in conducting, orchestral playing and operatic singing, for which a place was made during the festival, was but a sample of a cultural work which is capable of great extension.

Tanglewood is almost uniquely qualified as a summer music center of this kind, first of all by the presence of a famous conductor and a famous orchestra in which unsurpassed virtuosi are included, but also by an ideal environment. Not even in Berkshire can the weather be guaranteed to be as nearly 100 per cent perfect as was the case this year, but Berkshire's virtues as a summer resort have long been celebrated, the hills are better than valley or seashore for summer music, and scenic beauty adds to the attractiveness of Tanglewood to music lovers.

This Clipping From
EVANSVILLE, IND.
COURIER
AUG 25 1940

Hears Boston Symphony In Two Concerts

TWO concerts and two rehearsals devoted entirely to the music of Tschaikowsky and Beethoven played by the celebrated Boston Symphony Orchestra under direction of Sergei Koussevitzky were heard recently at the Berkshire Music Festival by Hugh Hazelrigg of Evansville.

Mr. Hazelrigg was a guest of Professor Gaylord Browne, conductor of the Evansville Philharmonic Orchestra, who is attending the Berkshire Music Institute and who was one of five of the country's outstanding musicians selected to be active conductors at the festival, studying under personal tutelage of Koussevitzky.

During the three-week festival on beautiful Tanglewood grounds near Lenox, Mass., the orchestra presents three concerts weekly. Chamber music and opera are also on the programs.

Orchestra concerts are given in a mammoth steel and wooden shed, roofed but open on the sides. The shed has a seating capacity of 7000 persons, and at each concert the shell is crammed with music devotees.

* * *

REHEARSALS found particularly interesting by Mr. Hazelrigg, are held in a large barn. Small concerts and operatic presentations are given in an outdoor theater. Orchestra subscribers are permitted to attend public rehearsals.

During Mr. Hazelrigg's stay, he heard the Beethoven violin concerto played by Albert Spalding, violin virtuoso, accompanied by the symphony.

Especially interesting, according to Mr. Hazelrigg, was the high quality of chamber music played by institute students who had been together only a few weeks.

He also witnessed performance of the opera, "Hin und Zureck," by the modern composer, Hindemith, a burlesque on opera.

The composer and Jesus Maria Sanroma, concert pianist, played the piano accompaniment for the opera. Other accompaniment included an harmonium and eight woodwind and brass instruments. Richard Burgin, concertmaster of the Boston Symphony, conducted.

The festival closed last week. Professor Browne will return to Evansville early in September.

This Clipping From
NEW ORLEANS, LA.
ITEM
AUG 28 1940

This Clipping From
BUFFALO, N.Y.
COURIER-EXPRESS
AUG 26 1940

SPOUSE ABOUT TOWN—Winding up the musical season in the Berkshires with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the duches and I had need of a night's lodging so we went to the house of little Mrs. Henry, a mile from Stockbridge. We were given a big clean and comfortable room with bath adjerning, and when the next noon came we said we wanted to pay the bill and how much? "Two dollars" said Mrs. Henry, and I fainted dead away. Two bobs for practically the bridal suite! When will those dear old Yankees learn to h'ist the prices for city slickers? Never, I hope! . . . . One night was a big gala affair for British relief, with Dorothy Thompson making an eloquent plea and the band playing, but the treat was to see the Boston swells, in diamonds and old lace, lined up cafeteria style to buy a good New England dinner for 50 cents and lug it away on a tray. What a democracy! . . . . Arthur Rodzinski, conductor of the Cleveland Symphony, has a place near Stockbridge he calls White Goat Farm. While resting from shaking the stick at his fiddlers, he and his missus raise these nanny and billy goats, and sell their milk and cheese to all comers. Feeling for a pound of goat cheese, I went over, and Mme. Rodzinski herself cut the pound from the loaf, on a priceless mahogany table, using a beautiful silver knife and a right hand a'drip with diamond rings. She took my 35 cents, thanked me kindly, and said call again. That's what I call real old-time dirt soil farming. . . . For solid joy, I recommend lying on the back on a blanket on the grass outside the music shed at Tanglewood on a fine August night—looking up at the quiet stars and listening to Koussevitzky's Boston Melody Boys give out Mozart. That's a spiritual topper! . . . . Favorite book title at my lending library—Twilight Cheats, by Grace Perkins.

I saw a little old pappy fellow at one of the Berkshire festival nights wearing an evening outfit that has Beau Brummel tossing in his tomb. It consisted of black pants, white boiled shirt with batwing collar and black tie, and a sky blue dinner jacket—the whole topped by a snappy beret of the same color. If I had known it was a masquerade party, I'd have come as Tarzan myself, but the little man's outfit was good for a quick, loud, vulgar laugh.

This Clipping From
INDIANAPOLIS, IND.
STAR
AUG 26 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM MUNCIE, IND.
STAR
AUG 26 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM OAKLAND, CAL.
POST-INQUIRER
AUG 29 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM MANKATO, MINN.
FREE PRESS
AUG 26 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM
UNION CITY, N. J.
HUDSON DISPATCH
AUG 26 1940

This Clipping From
AKRON, O.
BEACON-JOURNAL
AUG 26 1940

This Clipping From SPRINGFIELD, O.
NEWS
AUG 30 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM OKLAHOMA CITY, OKLA.
TIMES
AUG 26 1940

This Clipping From LOUISVILLE, KY.
COURIER-JOURNAL
AUG 24 1940

ARTISTS HAVE A STAKE IN WAR

Mr. Anderson writes another attractive piece about the arts, the war, and music in the Berkshire hills

By DWIGHT ANDERSON.

Lenox, Mass.

THE climax of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival was not listed on the original program. It took place at Tanglewood a week ago in the form of a monster Allied Relief Fund Benefit for British Aid before an audience of more than 7,000 with more than $20,000 raised for Britain's help.

Accounts of the event have reached Kentucky through local and national papers but little mention probably has been made of the musical side. Addresses were given by Archibald MacLeish, Dorothy Thompson, Governor Herbert H. Lehman, and Sir Louis Beale, the latter representing Lord Lothian.

Mr. MacLeish, Librarian of Congress, in his brief and moving speech said: "In other wars, at other times of need, artists and particularly musicians have given their services often in public cause. But never in modern times until this war have artists and musicians been themselves involved in war in their capacity as artists and musicians. Never until now was there a war in which the artists of all countries, the musicians, the poets, the writers, the scholars, were of necessity, and because they were artists and writers and scholars and musicians, enlisted by their love and their lives upon one side against the other."

•

BEFORE the addresses there was music by the Institute Orchestra in the Shed, the Academy Orchestra in the Barn, and the Opera Department in the Theater.

The formal concert, later in the evening, was given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra combined with the Institute Orchestra and conducted by Dr. Koussevitzky and Stanley Chapple, Koussevitzky's assistant at the Center, who made an auspicious debut. Albert Spalding, Alexander Kipnis, and Gregor Piatigorsky appeared as soloists, and the Festival Chorus sang three excerpts from the Bach Mass plus Handel's "Hallelujah Chorus." The evening closed with Strauss Waltzes played by the Boston Pops Orchestra, conducted by Arthur Fiedler, to the—sometimes—disconcerting accompaniment of fireworks.

Dorothy Maynor, American Negro soprano, after her superb singing of a Mozart aria and Beethoven's "Adelaide" in the eighth concert, was called back to the stage nine times, receiving the greatest demonstration accorded any soloist in the Festival. Robert S. Whitney, conductor of the Louisville Civic Orchestra, distinguished himself last Tuesday when he conducted the Institute Orchestra in the Shed.

Due to the presence of Paul Hindemith, as teacher of composition at the Center, his music has been widely performed in the Berkshires this summer. Edwin Ideler and Gunnar Johansen played his second sonata for violin and piano at one of the concerts of the South Mountain Quartet. The Opera Department of the Institute gave an hilarious performance of "Hin Und Zurich" with the composer and Sanroma at the piano. At a girls' camp near Hinsdale the charming operetta, "Let's Build a Town," was played and, finally, excerpts from Hindemith's opera, "Mathis der Maler," were magnificently presented by the B.S.O. in the eighth concert of the Festival.

•

AT Bennington, Vt., the Bennington School of the Arts has just concluded a Festival that contained twelve concerts. One of them, of Seventeenth and Eighteenth Century music, was directed by Ralph Kirkpatrick who will open the 1940-41 series of concerts of the University of Louisville Chamber Music Society. Mr. Kirkpatrick, the leading American harpsichordist, was at the harpsichord throughout the program that featured the first American performance of Two Psalms by de Mondonville for soprano and harpsichord.

Another program was devoted to contemporary music and still another one was given by Martha Graham and her dance group. A melodramatic farce, "The King and the Duke," based on "Huckleberry Finn," utilized all the departments of the Bennington School—drama, dance, and music. The play was devised and directed by Francis Fergusson, the dances by Martha Hill and the music by Gregory Tucker. The result was a provocative performance in which the greatest success was achieved in the dances and the music.

This account of music in the Berkshires, as well as the one last week, has been reportorial rather than critical. Still, a few words about Koussevitzky as a conductor might be of interest to those Kentuckians who are unfamiliar with him. Most of his concerts have begun impassively and ended in a frenzy. There is a great deal of the spell-binder about him that is magnificently effective in the theatricalisms of Tchaikovsky, Sibelius and Ravel. In the less frenetic pages of greater composers, like Bach and Beethoven, he is not so successful. In conducting he shows an economy of gesture which, while more pleasant to watch than angular movements, does not make for performances of precision but the warmth of his personality pervades all that he does and sweeps his audiences with him.

THIS CLIPPING FROM

ARDMORE, PA
CHRONICLE
8/30/40

The Berkshire symphonic festival takes place in a region where favorable weather may be expected, and shelter from storms is provided in the new building. The reports show that this festival of nine concerts has broken all previous records.

The last concert was given for an audience of 8000 persons, and 70,000 visitors heard the nine regular concerts. There were three special rehearsals, in addition, conducted by Koussevitsky for festival members and school children from the neighborhood.

The sizeable surplus, announced by the president and the clerk of the festival will be applied to the maintenance of the Tanglewood estate of 210 acres which was given to the Boston Symphony for these festivals.

This Clipping From MIAMI, FLA.
HERALD

AUG 24 1940

Pianists Have Their Fling Beneath New York Moon

Alice Finds Open Air Concert In Gotham Stadium Beautiful Interlude In Midst of Labors, Frets

By ALICE HUGHES
Special Dispatch To The Herald

NEW YORK, Aug. 23.—These have been great nights up on the hill above Manhattan, where music is played by our Philharmonic and beauty can be soaked up under the stars.

Recently the pianists have been having their fling as soloists, and on two succeeding nights there were interesting examples of the piano-forty art.

One night a 12-year-old girl named Teresa Stern marched up to the keyboard and gallantly attacked the very tough and tricky Concerto in B Flat Minor by Tschaikovsky. That's a show piece for mature artists with "strong and sinewy hands," but the kid gave it a good fight, and only lost by one grace note.

She's Lovely Woman

The very next evening, Ania Dorfman, probably the best lady piano player in active practice here, an artiste of remarkable talent, took the same long trail. But observe. Instead of choosing a stunt piece to startle the neighbors on Friday afternoon, Ania chose the first concerto written by the mighty Beethoven, the "easy" one in C Major.

The young artist hurled herself at a job fit to baffle her elders and betters; the mature one picked a beautiful one requiring infinite artistry, and made superb music. There's a lesson here for all baby wonders at the keyboard or the fiddle.

Ania is also a very lovely woman—a little mite of a thing rassling that Steinway grand around—and she has scores of devoted friends here. A lot of us gathered at the tables close under the band shell, Tobe Davis and Margaret DeMille and many more. Overhead was a midsummer moon bigger than a ripe cantaloupe, and noisy airplanes that insist on roaring over the stadium and winning many a decision over Beethoven, Mozart and Brahms.

It's a lovely exeperience, the stadium on a perfect summer night. Moon, stars, melodic beauty in a breathing space between the labors and frets that beset our days in these times.

Girl About Town

In fact, we're in for quite a spell of music, and culture will rage unchecked. My sisters Ada and Frances, and I, have taken a cottage at Stockbridge, Mass., for the duration of the music festival played there each summer by the great Boston Symphony. A beautiful place and an exciting experience. Since Ada's husband, Pierre Mayer, fiddles in the Boston band, we can sneak into morning rehearsals and watch Conductor Koussevitzky's alarming didoes.

Alleged helpmate Hall dreads the union of us three girls, goes around muttering "The three fates!" and then Shakespeare's little tidbit from the "Macbeth" three witches scene—Double, double, toil and trouble! Fire burn and cauldron bubble!" This is because the trio is always trying to keep him from being bad, I suppose. Hopeless job.

Zorina Was There

After Ania Dorfman's stadium concert, Mrs. Morgan Hamilton gave a beautiful party for her in the Hamilton garden overlooking the East river. It has trees, even! Nice crowd, elegant wine and grub, but the evening was made when the superb spectacle Zorina, clad in flowing white, made an entrance and actually sat down at our table.

Hall turned pale under his night-club tan, and his jaw dropped into a glass of campagne. I had to fish it out for him. Odd how many men found it necessary to come up to our table and say howdy. Their mouths wagged at me, but their eyes bugged at the dancer, who looked illegally beautiful in the moonlight. The infatuated dolt, my old Hall, didn't even hear the grunt of East river tugs as they hauled scows of rubbish to the open Atlantic. What a dope.

Dagger Watch, Is 'Time-Killer'

A REAL "time-killer" is the new dagger watch to decorate your lapel. The unusual and moderately priced timepiece is a copy of an early eighteenth century piece once in possession of King Francis I of France, an authority on timepieces and no mean hand with a dagger.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES
AUG 25 1940

FESTIVAL SUMMING UP

Immense Success of Berkshire Meeting And Its Democratic Roots

By OLIN DOWNES

THE results of the seventh Berkshire Symphonic Festival held at Stockbridge, Mass., are very significant as a sign of musical trends in this country and the continuous development of public taste and appreciation of symphonic literature.

For the first time in the history of this festival a season of nine concerts, three weeks in length, was given. (A tenth concert, very successful for the benefit of the British cause, is omitted from this enumeration.) There had been misgivings in conservative quarters of Berkshire as to whether a week added to the length of the earlier festivals would be successful in point of attendance and financial returns. The answer is provided by the fact that the 1940 festival had the biggest attendance in the institution's history. The smallest audience was equal almost to the largest of last season, numbering between 6,500 and 7,000. There were two audiences of 9,000 each on the two last Saturday nights of the season.

On one of these nights there was no soloist, only two symphonies, each the sixth, by Beethoven ("Pastoral") and Tchaikovsky ("Pathétique"). On the last Saturday night Dorothy Maynor, the negro soprano who was the "find" of the Berkshire Festival of last year, sang two solos by Mozart and Beethoven with the orchestra. The program contained works of a highly advanced character, and Hindemith's symphony, "Mathis der Mahler," one of the most intellectual of modern scores, received a remarkable welcome, which the composer acknowledged with Dr. Koussevitzky from the stage. Perhaps the most important point of all is this: the audience which thus listened, and responded, numbering 9,000, came from apparently every class of society capable of owning a Ford or up—came, in many cases, as a special pilgrimage, from long distances as well as the New England vicinity, to hear the programs and the performances.

* * *

THE evidence accumulates that this Festival is destined to become in the years immediately before us the most important Summer festival of music in the world. This does not mean that its programs at the present time approximate the completeness and importance, in more than one field of musical composition, offered the visitor in happier days in such places as Munich and Salzburg. In those places there were given operatic performances as well as symphonic, with many noted conductors and numbers of world-famous artists. But there was a reverse side to this glamorous exterior. These festivals were, in a sense, speculative, especially Salzburg. And they were snobbish. They were designed to attract, as a principal consideration, large numbers of the tourist rich, and the fashionable element. They did so, and with such effect that as long as Toscanini was present, with other famous conductors and artists flanking him, the Salzburg Festivals are said to have brought in a sum equal to Austria's annual taxation.

Fortunately, the Berkshire Symphonic Festival is entirely another thing. It does not depend upon fashion, or snobbery, or sensational publicity. Nor do the programs depend for their success upon eminent singers or virtuosos. Sometimes these appear, as ornaments and additions to the occasion. But the orchestra, its conductor and its literature remain the supreme attractions, and the whole community supports the undertaking. From this center of art and community activity there radiates to the four corners of the continent the attraction of a supreme musical event, which ministers to people plain and otherwise, in all the walks of life, and regardless entirely of social glamour, wealth or precedence.

* * *

THE Boston Symphony and the Berkshire Festival Association are, of course, exceptionally fortunate in the site of this festival. The selfless gift of Mrs. Gorham Brooks of Tanglewood Estate to the orchestra for festival purposes provides an environment and "atmosphere" which in themselves would be almost sufficient to impose artistic character. Then there are the remarkably fine acoustics of the Music Shed. It is a pity that for purposes of economy it was built with steel supports and braces in the ceiling, inconspicuous from outside, but suggestive from certain angles within of, say, a steamship dock or warehouse rather than a nobly created music auditorium to stand as a monument to its purpose. But where practical and purely musical conditions are concerned the Shed offers wonderful conditions for sheltered listening, in the open air, to symphonic music. And then there is the spaciousness of the grounds upon which thousands of people, comfortably ensconced on the grass or under trees, may listen. In fact, the extent of those beautiful grounds is absolutely essential, in view of this year's attendance, for the accommodation of the audience. Thanks to the sonorous conditions established by the Shed, the orchestra is heard clearly and well for a long distance. There are owners of estates who prefer to bring camp chairs and rugs and listen at ease outside the auditorium to inhabiting boxes or seats under its roof. Nor is there lack of dignity or comfort in these arrangements.

* * *

IN this latter respect the attractions of Tanglewood are not without parallel. At Hollywood Bowl, for example, even greater audiences can assemble, and the California climate is unequaled anywhere for pleasantness. But it is not merely a pleasurable environment which gives the Berkshire Symphonic Festival its special place among the existing institutions of its kind. The reason for its superiority and exceptional attractiveness to the public is simply the unique quality of the performances, enhanced by the fact that they sound with the completeness and sensitiveness in expression which are customarily expected only of performances that take place indoors in the wintertime. These performances withstand the most critical examination. They require neither explanations nor excuses of any kind for their standards. And that is what the American public of today, even the public of the summertime, wants, and for which it is glad to pay.

* * *

THAT is a matter for music managers, orchestral boards, festival associations to ponder. The day is passing for mere quantity, in place of quality, of music, even in the allegedly "silly season." It is true that music festivals and Summer series of opera or symphony are now institutional in a hundred different places in the country. Such series range from the performances of symphonies already mentioned, on the Western Coast, popular and serious opera at Forest Park in St. Louis, or orchestral music at Grant Park in Chicago, where 30,000 often listen to free open-air performances, to the justly famous annual symphonic season at the Lewisohn Stadium, or opera at the Cincinnati Zoo, or free open air concerts on the Charles River Esplanade in Boston. These various festivals and series of performances are everywhere multiplying. It is shown that the public will not relinquish good music to the ministrations of the Winter season and forget it through the most beautiful months that we have. In fact, there are many whom the activities of the Winter keep away from concerts, who find opportunities on Summer evenings or during vacation time to hear more good music at first hand than they can enjoy at any other time of the year.

* * *

BUT this public has every year a more discriminating taste. It comes now to the Berkshire Festival from both the Americas and the West Indies, because it is well aware that the artistic conditions at that festival are such as to guarantee more than mere Summer entertainment. The patrons know they are going to hear one of the finest orchestras perform with the finish, exactitude and eloquence that other orchestras reserve only for the city subscribers. Nothing, indeed, could exceed the thoroughness with which those performances are prepared. For the programs of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival Dr. Koussevitzky selects what he believes to be the most attractive works and interpretations of his Winter repertory, in which he has already exhaustively prepared the orchestra. Then these compositions are re-rehearsed as though they had not been played at all, immediately before and during the Berkshire Festival. Even the semi-public rehearsals on Saturday morning, to which Festival subscribers are invited guests, are real rehearsals—in some instances rather a final going-over of passages already worked out than a breaking of any new ground; in others, arduous and scrupulous restudy intended to bestow the final unification upon the performance. Moreover, three concerts are given a week—no more! Between the Thursday and Saturday night concert is a day and a half upon which two rehearsals, and long ones, are held. The first three days of the week are available and are used for preparation of the Thursday concert.

* * *

REGULAR concert prices, which obtain for Winter subscription series, are asked for these performances and are cheerfully given. Admission is $1.50. The price of thousands of seats is equivalent to the prices at Carnegie Hall, and there are special prices for the box seats. A big proportion of the ticket sale is of admissions and of the cheaper seats. We have nowhere seen an audience which listens more intently and, by all available evidence, more intelligently and appreciatively than this one.

The lesson of this is that American orchestras and music festivals should not regard the Winter as the only time for great performances. And it is a pity that more of our musical institutions cannot take a leaf from the Boston Symphony's book in giving fewer performances with more time for preparation of their offerings. At Tanglewood one does not hear an orchestra exhausted by the number of concerts it gives, with too few rehearsals, between other engagements accepted by the players for the profit involved. That profits in serious music are seldom excessive may be granted, as also the propriety of making them. The inevitable result, however, of profit first and art afterward is second-class performance, or worse, which is not welcomed by the public.

Nor is this profitable. The inexperienced or unsophisticated listener may not know just what the faults are of a performance. He may excuse them by laying his indifference to his ignorance of the musical art. But in most cases his musical instinct, if he loves the art at all, leads him aright. The American public of today, earnestly desiring the best, responds almost infallibly when the best is given. It remains, usually, good-natured, but seldom fully responsive when quantity of music is substituted for quality, or when alleged interpretation becomes lifeless and undistinguished routine.

It is because the Berkshire Symphonic Festival responds to the highest need of this time in the musical art and because of the vision, the unconquerable devotion to an uncompromising purpose of its directing and creative spirit, who is Serge Koussevitzky, that it has reached, so quickly, its present firm eminence. Its example should have a profound influence upon standards of performance and the cultivation of the musical art in this land.

William Hacker will conduct newly organized Lake George Symphony next Sunday.

THIS CLIPPING FROM

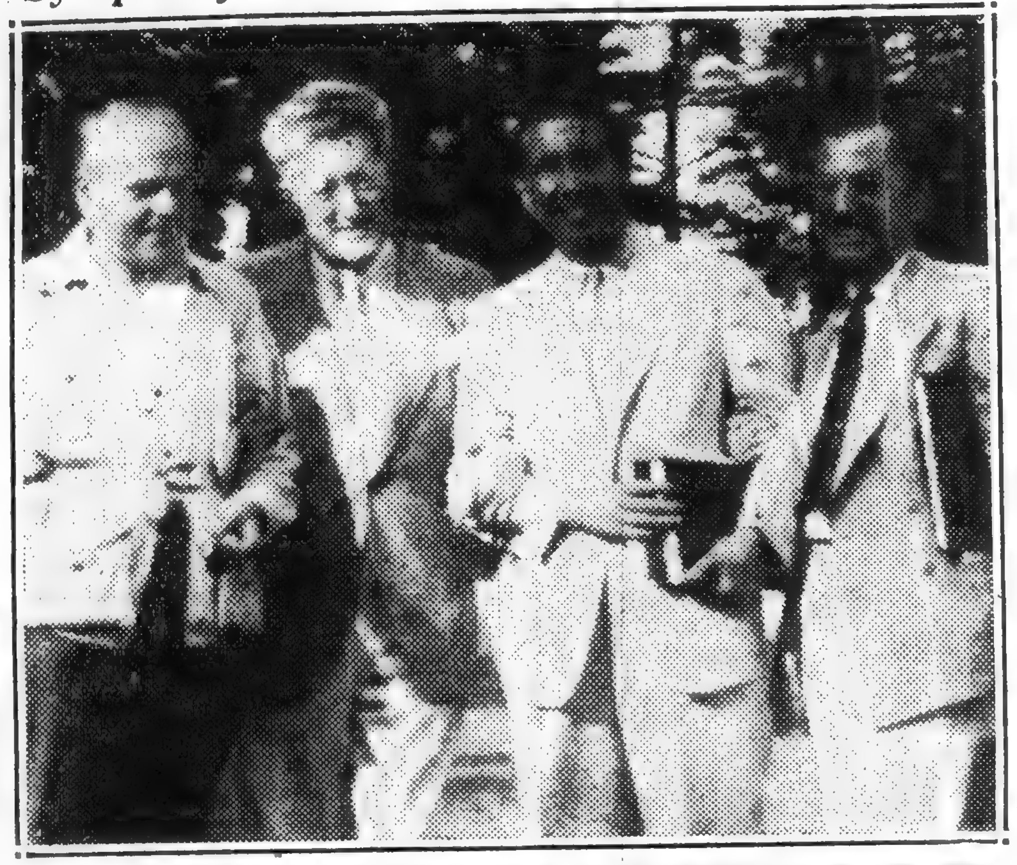
BLOOMINGTON, IND
STAR
8/30/40

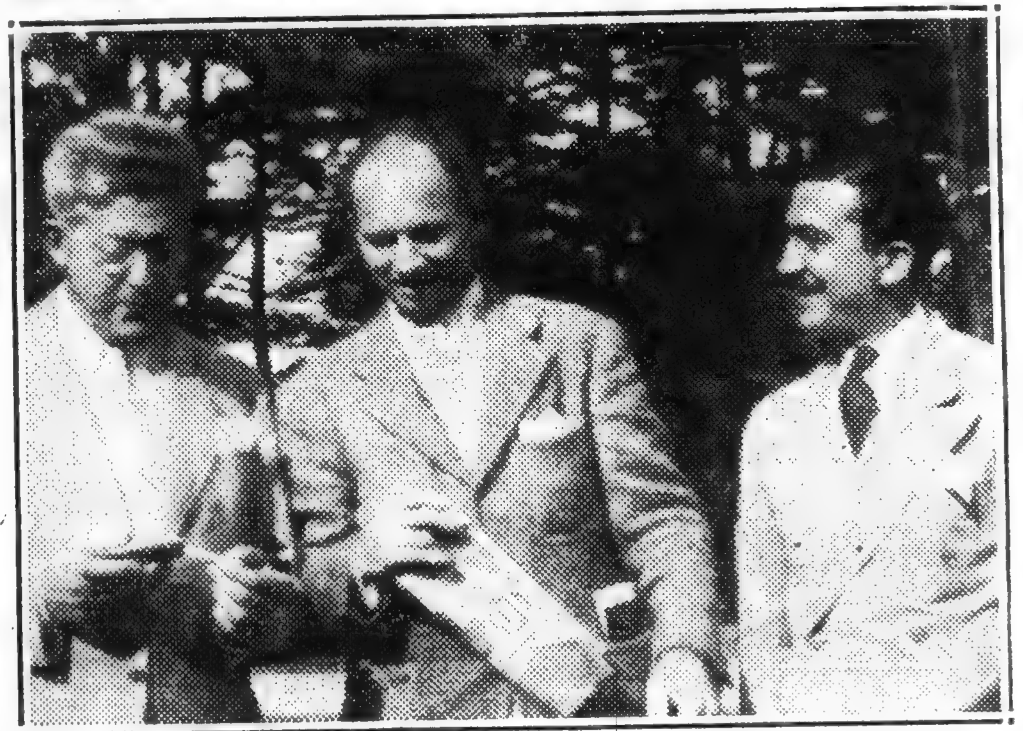
SATURDAY evening back to Tanglewood. Prokofieff's week-end vacation from modernism, his clipped, concise, and intriguing, more or less "Classic Symphony."—Paul Hindemith's "Mathis der Maler," labeled a symphony, but really a tone poem, a triptych inspired by the paintings of Matthias Grueneberg on the Isenheim altarpiece now in the museum at Colmar, Alsace. The titles taken over by the composer are: Angelic Concert; Entombment of Jesus; Temptations of St. Anthony. The third movement is the longest and most significant for the whole. It depicts the struggles of the painter, for Grueneberg is the painter Mathis of Hindemith's title, torn between the old and the reformed faith.—Hindemith, a refugee, was on the faculty of the Center this summer. He was present at this performance and took curtain call after curtain call.—Dorothy Maynor, the Negro singer discovered by Koussevitzky, opened the second part of the program with Mozart's "Bella mia Fiamma, addio" and Beethoven's "Adelaide" (five syllables, please), next to the Bach Mass, was what particularly attracted me to Tanglewood this week-end. Beethoven took Matthison's cameo elegy and made of it a large canvas full of color and passion. This unique song-composition, which I admire and wonder at, I have heard sung only twice, both times by Negro singers and both times in a memorable rendition; the first time was by Roland Hayes in his Bloomington recital.—A storm of applause greeted Miss Maynor when she had finished; it seemed unending; finally Dr. Koussevitzky appeared with her and shortly mounting the conductor's stand gave pragmatical notice that this salvo would have to be the last.—Suite from Faure's "Pelleas et Melisande," which antedates Debussy's setting of the Maeterlink drama by a few years. (This is the two-syllable Faure, not the one-syllable Faure of "The Palms.")—Then after so much which was modern that one would like to check up on it with Krenek's book on the subject, a grand swing to classical foundations with Bach's Passacaglia and Fugue in C minor in the "interpretazione orchestrale" of Ottorino Respighi—classic and modern meeting upon common ground.

This Clipping From
YOUNGSTOWN, O.
VINDICATOR

AUG 25 1940

Symphony Directors Attend 'Summer School'





Conductors Michael and Carmine Ficocelli of the Youngstown Symphony Orchestra are home from the Berkshire Music Center where they have been taking special work for conductors under auspices of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The upper picture shows, left to right: Richard Rychtarik, scenic director of the Metropolitan Opera Co.; Dr. Arthur Rodzinski, director of the Cleveland Symphony Orchestra; Dr. Herber Graf, executive of the Metropolitan, and Carmine Ficocelli. In the lower pictures are Dr. Rodzinski, George Edman of the Metropolitan and Michael Ficocelli.

Ficocellis Get Training At Berkshires Festival

Carmine and Michael Ficocelli, conductors of the Youngstown Symphony Orchestra, home from the Berkshires Symphonic Festival where they took intensive training with "the best musicians in the country," were so busy they didn't get time to get sunburned.

The conductors said they were glad to get home and get a rest. Their day started at 9 a. m. when, as members of the institute orchestra, they rehearsed under conductors of national reputation, ran right through lunch which was grabbed on the fly, and continued through a conducting class in the afternoon. They studied music by the "score," on through to dinner time, which again was devoured as rapidly as possible so as not to miss any of the evening concert or class.

They came home convinced that the country is swinging toward better music, partially through the intensive education campaigns going on all over the country, partially because music lovers are learning more each year about music and demanding the best.

Meet Prominent Musicians

At "Tanglewood," the estate given the Boston Symphony Orchestra where Conductor Serge Koussevitzky conducts, the Youngstown men met informally Richard Burgin, assistant conductor of the Boston Symphony; Ruth Posselt, violinist; Kathleen Parlow, quartet director; Harold Bauer, pianist; Toscanini, Rodzinski, Graf, director of the Metropolitan Orchestra; Albert Spalding, twice guest artist with the Youngstown Symphony; Elizabeth Schumann, soprano soloist; Stanley Chappelle, the great English conductor, and many more.

When they weren't in class they were talking shop. They found out that musicians generally had heard of the Youngstown Symphony Orchestra and its growth from a few enthusiasts to a concert course with guest artists of national reputation.

In addition to the work in the Berkshires, Carmine Ficocelli took a special course under Jacques Gordon at Falls Village, Conn., in conducting and on the violin.

"We tried to learn how it was done," both conductors said when they returned home. One of the special classes was led by Manhattan's ballet master, Erick Hawkins, partner of famed U. S. dancer Martha Graham, who taught his pupils podium gestures.

"He teaches you to relax," said Conductors Ficocelli who do not expect to pirouette before the orchestra but who do expect to become more graceful in their gestures, one of the things that Serge Koussevitzky demands.

The high light of the festival, the Ficocellis believe, was the performance of Bach's mass in B Minor.

Nine Concerts Given

Some 70,000 persons attended the nine concerts given during the festival. Only 6,000 could find seats in the music shed.

The Youngstown Symphony Orchestra's conductors were picked from among the best in the country to attend the seventh season of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, already established as the foremost in the country and with Europe's significant artistic gatherings almost all dead.

"We've got a lot of ideas and learned a lot," directors Ficocelli say, "and we'll be able to put many of these in effect this winter. It can't all be done at once but the public soon will be able to detect it and the orchestra, along with the audience will get the benefit of what we have learned."

THIS CLIPPING FROM TIME MAGAZINE
CHICAGO, ILL.

AUG 26 1940

M

Summer Festivals

More & more U. S. concertgoers are discovering a new and painless way to enjoy music in the summer. They lie on the ground wrapped in blankets, gaze at the stars, spoon a bit, doze off, take their symphonies between nods. This detached, easygoing way of listening can be indulged on the outskirts of many of the outdoor music festivals that dot the U. S.

At some of these festivals, which are designed to soothe rather than to stimulate, the musicians loll through the program like their audience. Not so the musicians of the impeccable Boston Symphony, who, under the fastidious baton of Serge Koussevitzky, delicately perform each year a carefully chosen sheaf of symphonies for visitors and tourists at Stockbridge in Massachusetts' Berkshire Hills. In & around an acoustically perfect, wedge-shaped $80.000 pavilion (called with New England sobriety a "Music Shed"), which rises on the greensward at Tanglewood, where Nathaniel Hawthorne once wrote, visiting Boston Brahmins and socialites, whether lying down or sitting up, take their summer music as critically as their winter.

AT STOCKBRIDGE'S "SHED"
The music was painless.

Last week the Bostonians ended their third and most extensive summer (nine concerts) in the Shed. Though these nine concerts were small potatoes beside the 52 at Manhattan's Lewisohn Stadium, the 24 at California's Hollywood Bowl, the Berkshire Festival, because of the polished perfection of its performances, still held its place as the No. 1 U. S. summer musical event. Its most ambitious undertaking this year: a performance of Bach's mighty B Minor Mass (with four top-notch soloists and a local chorus trained by Harvard's G. Wallace Woodworth) that would have made musical history anywhere.

THIS CLIPPING FROM OKLAHOMA CITY, OKLA.
TIMES

AUG 31 1940

This Clipping From
INDIANAPOLIS, IND.
STAR

AUG 31 1940

This Clipping From
DAYTON, O.
NEWS

AUG 31 1940

This Clipping From
BUFFALO, N.Y.
COURIER-EXPRESS

AUG 31 1940

This Clipping From
CHARLOTTE, N. C.
NEWS

AUG 31 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM MANKATO, MINN.
FREE PRESS

AUG 31 1940

Girl About Town.—I still get a chuckle when I think of my brother-in-law Albert, at the last Saturday night concert of the Boston Symphony at Stockbridge, Mass. We had stretched a blanket on the lawn outside the Music Shed, where the music came soft and sweet, and Al, who doesn't react favorably to the tune masters, went sound asleep. In the soft second movement of a piece by Faure, he let off a snore like a cross-cut saw, and a score of nearby symphony worshippers fainted from shock at this blasphemy. We were set down as boors save by one old lady, who complained that Koussevitzky must be playing fly specks again—there was no note like that in Faure's score.

This Clipping From
FORT WORTH, TEX.
MORNING STAR-TELEGRAM

AUG 31 1940

This Clipping From
ROANOKE, VA.
WORLD-NEWS

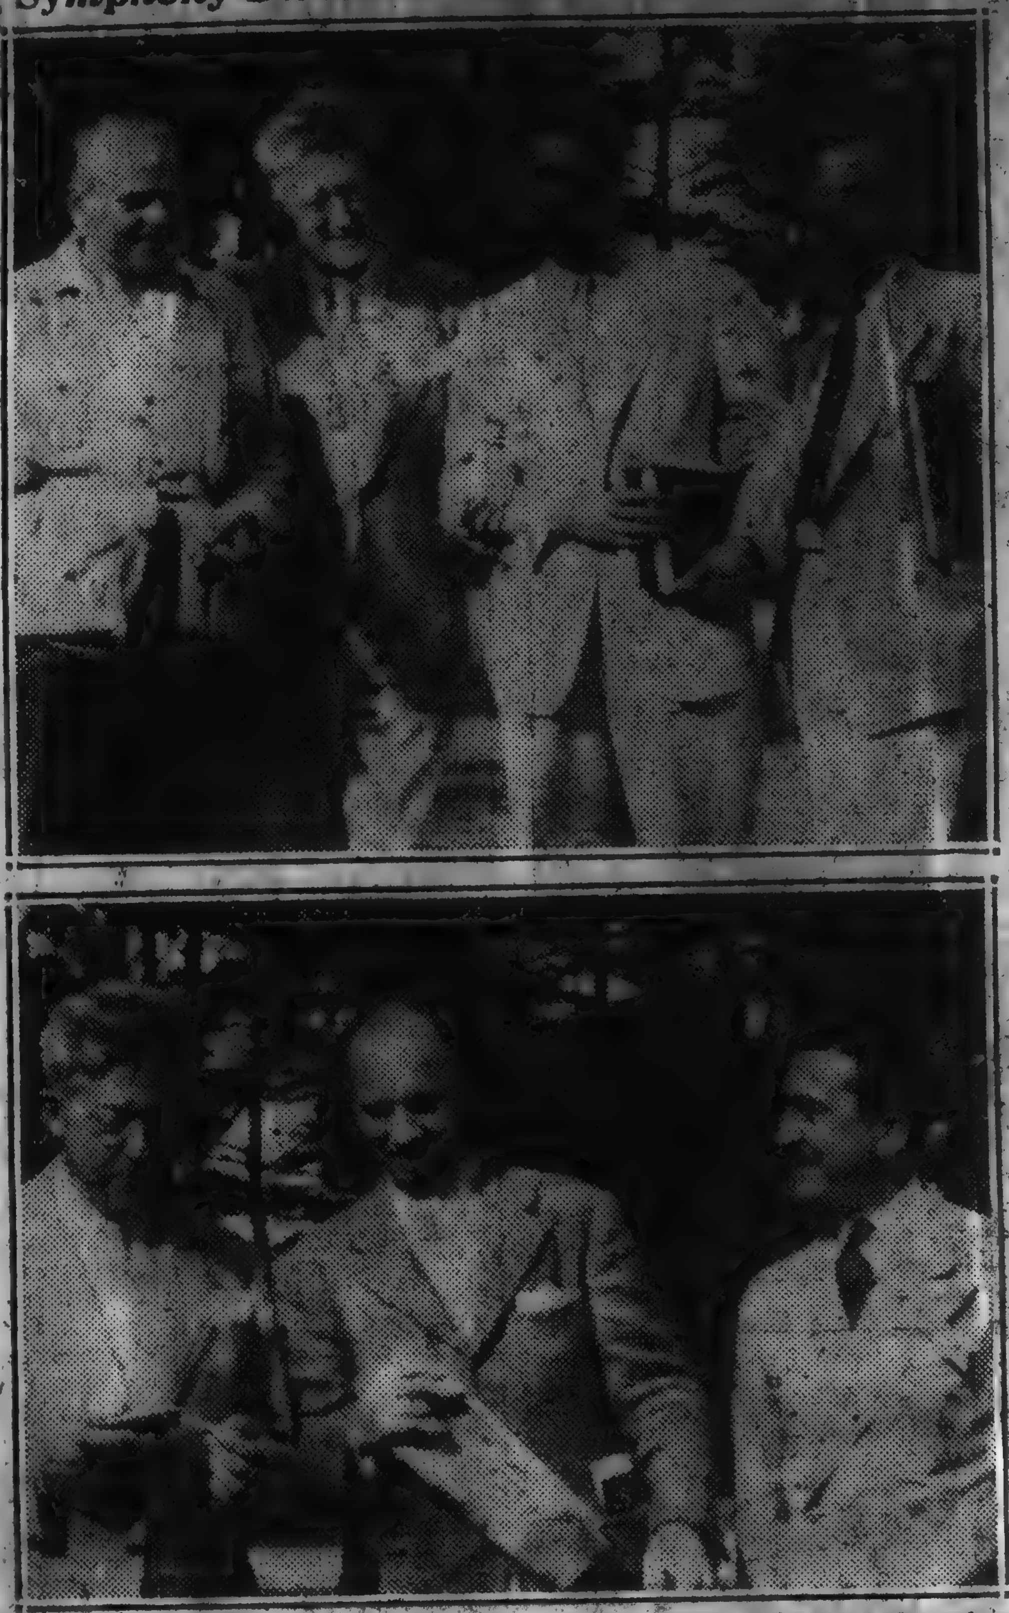
AUG 31 1940

146

This Clipping From
YOUNGSTOWN, O.
VINDICATOR

AUG 25 1940

Symphony Directors Attend 'Summer School'



Conductors Michael and Carmine Ficocelli of the Youngstown Symphony Orchestra are home from the Berkshire Music Center where they have been taking special work for conductors under auspices of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The upper picture shows, left to right: Richard Rychtarik, scenic director of the Metropolitan Opera Co.; Dr. Arthur Rodzinski, director of the Cleveland Symphony Orchestra; Dr. Herber Graf, executive of the Metropolitan, and Carmine Ficocelli. In the lower pictures are Dr. Rodzinski, George Edman of the Metropolitan and Michael Ficocelli.

Ficocellis Get Training At Berkshires Festival

Carmine and Michael Ficocelli, conductors of the Youngstown Symphony Orchestra, home from the Berkshires Symphonic Festival where they took intensive training with "the best musicians in the country," were so busy they didn't get time to get sunburned.

The conductors said they were glad to get home and get a rest. Their day started at 9 a. m. when, as members of the institute orchestra, they rehearsed under conductors of national reputation, ran right through lunch which was grabbed on the fly, and continued through a conducting class in the afternoon. They studied music by the "score," on through to dinner time, which again was devoured as rapidly as possible so as not to miss any of the evening concert or class.

They came home convinced that the country is swinging toward better music, partially through the intensive education campaigns going on all over the country, partially because music lovers are learning more each year about music and demanding the best.

Meet Prominent Musicians

At "Tanglewood," the estate given the Boston Symphony Orchestra where Conductor Serge Koussevitzky conducts, the Youngstown men met informally Richard Burgin, assistant conductor of the Boston Symphony; Ruth Posselt, violinist; Kathleen Parlow, quartet director; Harold Bauer, pianist; Toscanini, Rodzinski, Graf, director of the Metropolitan Orchestra; Albert Spalding, twice guest artist with the Youngstown Symphony; Elizabeth Schumann, soprano soloist; Stanley Chappelle, the great English conductor, and many more.

When they weren't in class they were talking shop. They found out that musicians generally had heard of the Youngstown Symphony Orchestra and its growth from a few enthusiasts to a concert course with guest artists of national reputation.

In addition to the work in the Berkshires, Carmine Ficocelli took a special course under Jacques Gordon at Falls Village, Conn., in conducting and on the violin.

"We tried to learn how it was done," both conductors said when they returned home. One of the special classes was led by Manhattan's ballet master, Erick Hawkins, partner of famed U. S. dancer Martha Graham, who taught his pupils podium gestures.

"He teaches you to relax," said Conductors Ficocelli who do not expect to pirouette before the orchestra but who do expect to become more graceful in their gestures, one of the things that Serge Koussevitzky demands.

The high light of the festival, the Ficocellis believe, was the performance of Bach's mass in B Minor.

Nine Concerts Given

Some 70,000 persons attended the nine concerts given during the festival. Only 6,000 could find seats in the music shed.

The Youngstown Symphony Orchestra's conductors were picked from among the best in the country to attend the seventh season of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, already established as the foremost in the country and with Europe's significant artistic gatherings almost all dead.

"We've got a lot of ideas and learned a lot," directors Ficocelli say, "and we'll be able to put many of these in effect this winter. It can't all be done at once but the public soon will be able to detect it and the orchestra, along with the audience will get the benefit of what we have learned."

THIS CLIPPING FROM TIME MAGAZINE
CHICAGO, ILL.

AUG 26 1940

M

Summer Festivals

More & more U. S. concertgoers are discovering a new and painless way to enjoy music in the summer. They lie on the ground wrapped in blankets, gaze at the stars, spoon a bit, doze off, take their symphonies between nods. This detached, easygoing way of listening can be indulged on the outskirts of many of the outdoor music festivals that dot the U. S.

At some of these festivals, which are designed to soothe rather than to stimulate, the musicians loll through the program like their audience. Not so the musicians of the impeccable Boston Symphony, who, under the fastidious baton of Serge Koussevitzky, delicately perform each year a carefully chosen sheaf of symphonies for visitors and tourists at Stockbridge in Massachusetts' Berkshire Hills. In & around an acoustically perfect, wedge-shaped $80,000 pavilion (called with New England sobriety a "Music Shed"), which rises on the greensward at Tanglewood, where Nathaniel Hawthorne once wrote, visiting Boston Brahmins and socialites, whether lying down or sitting up, take their summer music as critically as their winter.

AT STOCKBRIDGE'S "SHED"
The music was painless.

Last week the Bostonians ended their third and most extensive summer (nine concerts) in the Shed. Though these nine concerts were small potatoes beside the 52 at Manhattan's Lewisohn Stadium, the 24 at California's Hollywood Bowl, the Berkshire Festival, because of the polished perfection of its performances, still held its place as the No. 1 U. S. summer musical event. Its most ambitious undertaking this year: a performance of Bach's mighty B Minor Mass (with four top-notch soloists and a local chorus trained by Harvard's G. Wallace Woodworth) that would have made musical history anywhere.

THIS CLIPPING FROM OKLAHOMA CITY, OKLA.
TIMES

AUG 31 1940

This Clipping From
INDIANAPOLIS, IND.
STAR

AUG 31 1940

This Clipping From
DAYTON, O.
NEWS

AUG 31 1940

This Clipping From
BUFFALO, N.Y.
COURIER-EXPRESS

AUG 31 1940

This Clipping From
CHARLOTTE, N. C.
NEWS

AUG 31 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM MANKATO, MINN.
FREE PRESS

AUG 31 1940

Girl About Town.—I still get a chuckle when I think of my brother-in-law Albert, at the last Saturday night concert of the Boston Symphony at Stockbridge, Mass. We had stretched a blanket on the lawn outside the Music Shed, where the music came soft and sweet, and Al, who doesn't react favorably to the tune masters, went sound asleep. In the soft second movement of a piece by Faure, he let off a snore like a cross-cut saw, and a score of nearby symphony worshippers fainted from shock at this blasphemy. We were set down as boors save by one old lady, who complained that Koussevitzky must be playing fly specks again—there was no note like that in Faure's score.

This Clipping From
FORT WORTH, TEX.
MORNING STAR-TELEGRAM

AUG 31 1940

This Clipping From
ROANOKE, VA.
WORLD-NEWS

AUG 31 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM DAYTON, O.
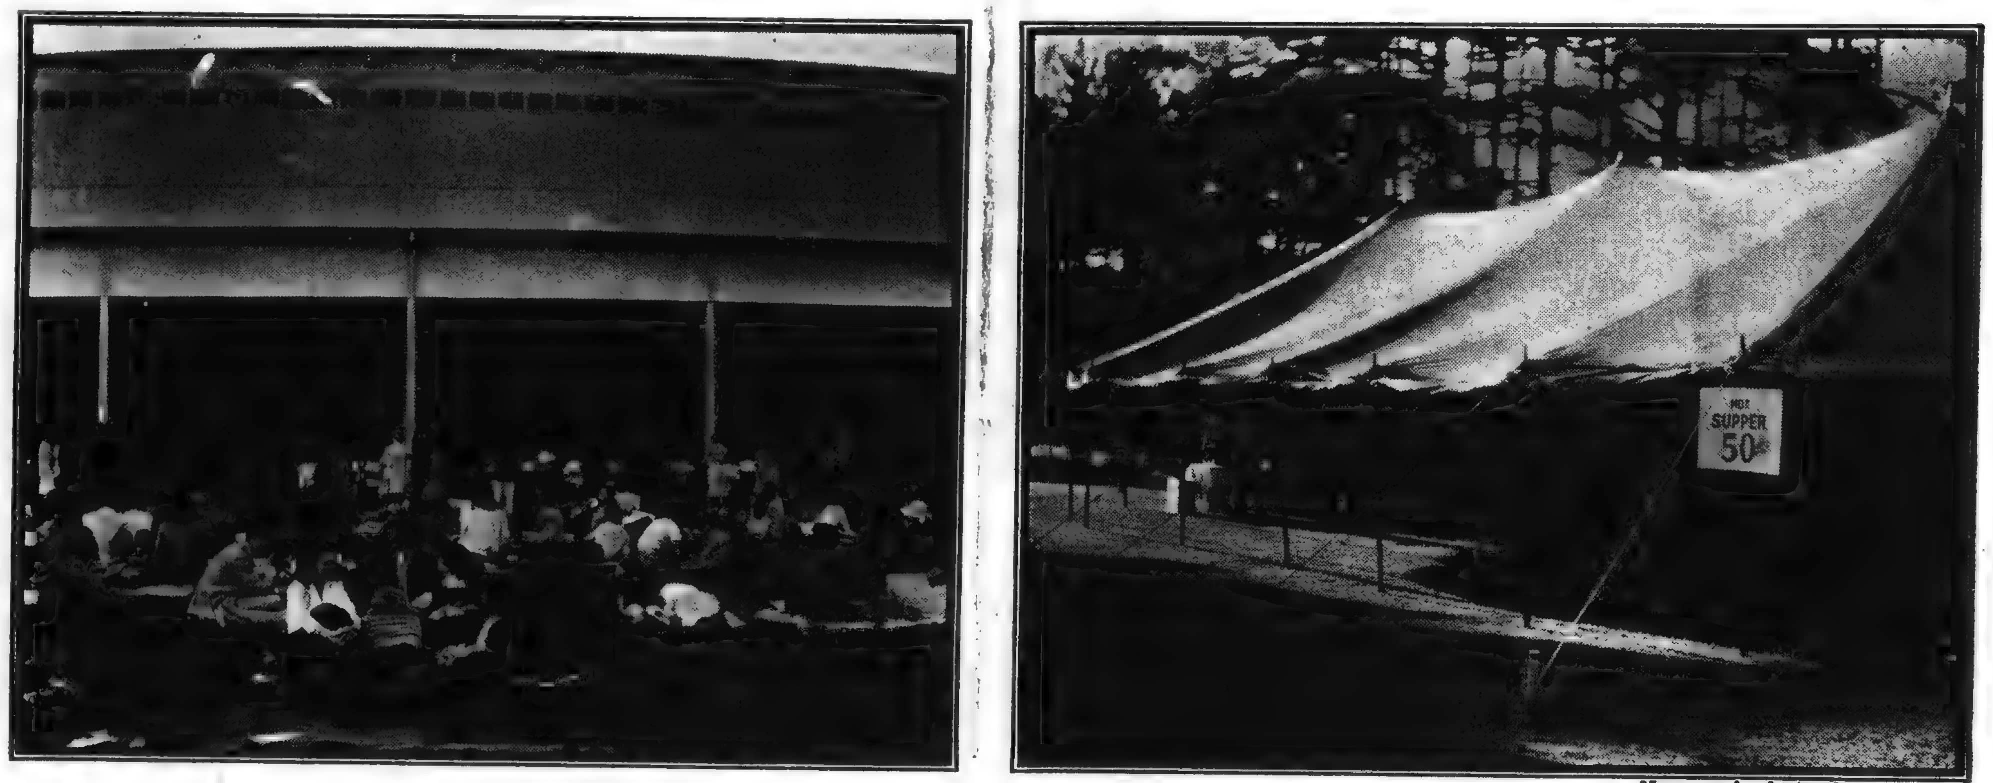
NEWS WEEK
AUG 26 1940

Berkshire Festival: Koussevitzky was serenaded at garden party, and performed before 7,000 . . .



Newsweek photos by Pat Terry

. . . who sat in the huge shed, overflowed onto the grass outside, and bought supper next to nature with the piano selection by a single person, or by the other member of a duet. The little cabinet contains fourteen radio vacuum tubes and houses a range of tone from the shrillest piccolo to the surliest growl of a bass fiddle. The attachment is intended for domestic, not concert use.

Among those who see "endless possibilities" in the new instrument is Fritz Reiner, Pittsburgh Symphony conductor. He believes Hammond's invention "will kindle the imagination of every pianist . . . may revitalize the present style of writing for the piano."

Double Feast of Culture

Last week saw the windup of the nation's leading summer dance festival at Bennington, Vt., and the nation's leading summer music festival at Stockbridge, Mass. Any visitor who motored 46 miles through the blue Berkshire Hills from a recital by Martha Graham and company to the Bach B minor mass, as performed by Sergei Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra with chorus, could take in a fair cross-section of these two phases of American culture.

¶ This year's close of the Bennington Festival included a farce to music based by Francis Fergusson on Mark Twain's "Huckleberry Finn," a program of seventeenth- and eighteenth-century music, and a hot afternoon of contemporary music which saw a new star rise higher in the sky: Robert McBride, 29, an Arizona-born one-man band (he plays the clarinet, piano, organ, sax, oboe, and English horn) whose "Wise Apple Five, for Clarinet and String Quartet" was the popular hit of the festival. In addition to "Every Soul Is a Circus," Martha Graham presented the world première of two works—one a "Letter to the World," inspired by the split personality of that New England spinster and repressed poet of the Victorian era, Emily Dickinson. The other, "El Penitente" (The Penitent), is a dance adaptation of Mexican religious rites to music by Louis Horst.

¶ The frail but vigorous little Boston Symphony Orchestra leader beamed recently: "Zeese are the happiest weeks of my life." And well they might be. The Berkshire Music Center, a six-week course of study for 325 students of all ages and both sexes —of which Sergei Koussevitzky had dreamed since 1917—has become a reality (NEWSWEEK, July 22), and the Berkshire Festival never shone more brilliantly than last week when, before an audience of 7,000, Koussevitzky conducted a chorus recruited from the school, the Boston Symphony, and four soloists in a spellbinding four-hour performance of a great masterpiece of choral music: Bach's B minor mass. And the next day, most of the same artists, along with violinist Albert Spalding, participated in a mammoth Allied Relief Fund benefit—a good-will gesture to old England from New England.

THIS CLIPPING FROM CARAVAN
NEW YORK, N.Y
AUGUST, 1940

MUSIC and the BERKSHIRES. Music lovers will undoubtedly be very pleased to know that the concerts given during the Music Festival at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has been extended to three weeks this year—Series A, B, and C, beginning with Series A, on August 1st and ending with the last concert of Series C, on August 18th. This offers a delightful vacation to those who enjoy enchanting music and magnificent scenery for the Berkshires and the Festival provide both.

This Clipping From
BRIDGEPORT, CONN.
POST

AUG 2 8 1940

Last Year's Soprano 'Discovery' Faces Difficult Test as a Star orothy Maynor, New Sensational Negro Soprano, Sings Here Nov. 14 in What Many Believe to Be Her Crucial Season.

A lot of folks in Norfolk, Va., are keeping their fingers rossed these days for they believe that the coming musical ason will be the crucial point in the career of Dorothy May- r, chubby little Negro soprano with the big voice who left city half a decade ago to become the sensation of the mus- ical world in 1939 and 1940.

Miss Maynor, in the brief span of one year, has jumped from semi-obscurity to a place with Paul Robeson and Marian Anderson as the outstanding singers of their race and the peer of great singers of any race.

Two years ago the Wednesday Afternoon Musical club could have engaged Miss Maynor to sing here for $150 an evening, and while musical groups do not usually discuss publicly their financial arrangements with their artists, one could add another cipher to that figure today and come fairly close to the sum which she will receive in her concert at the Klein Memorial auditorium here on Nov. 14.

1939 Festival "Made" Her

The most spectacular surge upward in this meteoric career came during the 1939 Berkshire Symphonic Festivals at Tanglewood. This was in August, only two months after she had made her début at Carnegie Hall before an audience of about 35 persons. Small as the audience was, the concert had created a considerable stir and when Miss Maynor went up to Stockbridge to attend the festivals in August her friends were able to persuade Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony and director of the festival, to take a few minutes off from rehearsals to listen to her.

Koussevitzky and the whole Boston Symphony became charter members of the plump soprano's public before she had sung a dozen notes. "An American Flagstad" was one of the terms Koussevitzky used to describe her later. Before the year was over she was singing to sell-out audiences in Town Hall and in the 1940 Berkshire Festival a few weeks ago she appeared, not as a shy unknown, too modest to ask for an audition without the prodding of her friends, but as a star.

Sang in Father's Church

Of course, the foundation for this suddenly expanding career was not built so easily or so quickly. The singer was born Sept. 3, 1910, in Norfolk, Va., the daughter of the Rev. John J. Mainor, a colored preacher. (She changed the spelling of her name for professional reasons). She sang in the choir of her father's church as a child, and at 14 she was a member of the famous choir of Hampton Institute.

She sang alto in that choir until one day, when one of the choir's leading sopranos resigned on the eve of a concert in Carnegie Hall, she was permitted to try out as a soprano. At the conclusion of the following concert an anonymous donor gave the institute $25 and asked that it go toward cultivating the young soprano's voice. A few months later she entered the Westminister Choir school in Princeton, N. J., and in 1936 a woman who had become interested in her career sent her to New York to complete her study.

Her capacity for study and hard work amazed her tutors, but not her friends, who recalled the willingness she had shown at her job in the school laundry at Hampton Institute, and the tireless physical energy she had displayed as a hockey player and captain of the institute tennis team.

Now that she is a success, they believe her willingness to study will carry her over the crucial period of the second season, usually the most difficult season for a last year's "discovery." Audiences will expect more of her and be more critical in their appraisal of her singing than they were a year ago when she first flashed into their awareness. They will have that "show me" attitude which they did not have last year. And Miss Maynor's friends are confident that she will "show them" in her Klein Memorial appearance and in her other concerts throughout the season.

MISS DOROTHY MAYNOR

THIS CLIPPING FROM LAYMAN'S MAGAZINE
OF THE LIVING CHURCH
MILWAUKEE, WIS
AUGUST, 1940

NEW YORK HIGHLIGHTS

By E. Sinclair Hertel

THE summer lull reaches its climax this month. But New Yorkers and others who can go to the Berkshire Hills, between Stockbridge and Lenox, Mass., will hear some fine music at the seventh annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival.

There are three series of concerts, one series being heard in each of the three weeks of the month. They are always on Thursday and Saturday evening and Sunday afternoon. The dates are: August 1st, 3d, and 4th for the first series; August 8th, 10th, and 11th for the second; and August 15th, 17th, and 18th for the third. The Thursday and Saturday evening performances begin at 8:30; the Sunday afternoon performances at 3:30. The sole exception is the presentation of the Bach Mass in B Minor on Thursday the 15th, which begins at 7 P.M.

The singing of the Bach mass is naturally one of the highlights of this season's offerings; the Berkshire Festival Chorus assists the Boston Symphony Orchestra, led by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, which gives the nine concerts. The second series (August 8th, 10th, and 11th) consist of works of Beethoven and Tchaikovsky, the latter commemorating the centennial of Tchaikovsky's birth. The first concert of this series includes his Symphony No. 6; the second the Symphony No. 4; and the third the Symphony No. 5. All, of course, are magnificent.

This annual music festival is rather unusual. The concerts are given at "Tanglewood," on motor route 183, between Stockbridge and Lenox, where the music shed accommodates 6,000 listeners. This stands on a 200 acre estate overlooking a beautiful lake, and the scene is one of great beauty. There is also historical interest connected with it, for it was on this same estate that Hawthorne lived and wrote The House of the Seven Gables and other books.

There are excellent hotels in Stockbridge and Lenox, and both towns have attractive Episcopal churches. Many music lovers find a week-end at the Berkshire Symphonic Festival a wonderfully pleasant way to combine the enjoyment of good music with a rural holiday in a lovely countryside.

[18]

THIS CLIPPING FROM

CORONET
CHICAGO, ILL
AUGUST, 1940

A REPORT—FROM A NEUTRAL CORNER—ON THE LIVELIER ARTS . . . BY CARLETON SMITH

GRACE NOTES AND OVERTONES

CORONETS:

To the Sibelius Society for Album No. 6, including En Saga, In Memoriam, The Bard, Suite from Pelleas and Melisande.

To Toscanini's latest protégé, Jarmila Novotna (who, however, has more musicianship and charm than voice).

To juggler Massimiliano Truzzi for his 12-minute solo spot under Ringling Bros. Barnum & Bailey tent; he has a personality like a dish of flashlight powder.

To Serge Koussevitzky for his scheduled Tschaikowsky contribution to the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, Lenox, Mass., Aug. 1-18.

This Clipping From
BRIDGEPORT, CONN.
POST

AUG 28 1940

Last Year's Soprano 'Discovery' Faces Difficult Test as a Star

Dorothy Maynor, New Sensational Negro Soprano, Sings Here Nov. 14 in What Many Believe to Be Her Crucial Season.

A lot of folks in Norfolk, Va., are keeping their fingers rossed these days for they believe that the coming musical ason will be the crucial point in the career of Dorothy May- r, chubby little Negro soprano with the big voice who left r city half a decade ago to become the sensation of the musical world in 1939 and 1940.

Miss Maynor, in the brief span of one year, has jumped from semi-obscurity to a place with Paul Robeson and Marian Anderson as the outstanding singers of their race and the peer of great singers of any race.

Two years ago the Wednesday Afternoon Musical club could have engaged Miss Maynor to sing here for $150 an evening, and while musical groups do not usually discuss publicly their financial arrangements with their artists, one could add another cipher to that figure today and come fairly close to the sum which she will receive in her concert at the Klein Memorial auditorium here on Nov. 14.

1939 Festival "Made" Her

The most spectacular surge upward in this meteoric career came during the 1939 Berkshire Symphonic Festivals at Tanglewood. This was in August, only two months after she had made her debut at Carnegie Hall before an audience of about 35 persons. Small as the audience was, the concert had created a considerable stir and when Miss Maynor went up to Stockbridge to attend the festivals in August her friends were able to persuade Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony and director of the festival, to take a few minutes off from rehearsals to listen to her.

Koussevitzky and the whole Boston Symphony became charter members of the plump soprano's public before she had sung a dozen notes. "An American Flagstad" was one of the terms Koussevitzky used to describe her la[illegible] Before the year was over she was singing to sell-out audiences in Town Hall and in the 1940 Berkshire Festival a few weeks ago she appeared, not as a shy unknown, too modest to ask for an audition without the prodding of her friends, but as a star.

Sang in Father's Church

Of course, the foundation for this suddenly expanding career was not built so easily or so quickly. The singer was born Sept. 3, 1910, in Norfolk, Va., the daughter of the Rev. John J. Mainor, a colored preacher. (She changed the spelling of her name for professional reasons). She sang in the choir of her father's church as a child, and at 14 she was a member of the famous choir of Hampton Institute.

She sang alto in that choir until one day, when one of the choir's leading sopranos resigned on the eve of a concert in Carnegie Hall, she was permitted to try out as a soprano. At the conclusion of the following concert an anonymous donor gave the institute $25 and asked [illegible] it go toward cultivating the young soprano's voice. A few months later she entered the Westminister Choir school in Princeton, N. J., and in 1936 a woman who had become interested in her career sent her to New York to complete her study.

MISS DOROTHY MAYNOR

Her capacity for study and hard work amazed her tutors, but not her friends, who recalled the willingness she had shown at her job in the school laundry at Hampton Institute, and the tireless physical energy she had displayed as a hockey player and captain of the institute tennis team.

Now that she is a success, they believe her willingness to study will carry her over the crucial period of the second season, usually the most difficult season for a last year's "discovery." Audiences will expect more of her and be more critical in their appraisal of her singing than they were a year ago when she first flashed into their awareness. They will have that "show me" attitude which they did not have last year. And Miss Maynor's friends are confident that she will "show them" in her Klein Memorial appearance and in her other concerts throughout the season.

THIS CLIPPING FROM LAYMAN'S MAGAZINE
OF THE LIVING CHURCH
MILWAUKEE, WIS
AUGUST, 1940

NEW YORK HIGHLIGHTS

By E. Sinclair Hertel

THE summer lull reaches its climax this month. But New Yorkers and others who can go to the Berkshire Hills, between Stockbridge and Lenox, Mass., will hear some fine music at the seventh annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival.

There are three series of concerts, one series being heard in each of the three weeks of the month. They are always on Thursday and Saturday evening and Sunday afternoon. The dates are: August 1st, 3d, and 4th for the first series; August 8th, 10th, and 11th for the second; and August 15th, 17th, and 18th for the third. The Thursday and Saturday evening performances begin at 8:30; the Sunday afternoon performances at 3:30. The sole exception is the presentation of the Bach Mass in B Minor on Thursday the 15th, which begins at 7 P.M.

The singing of the Bach mass is naturally one of the highlights of this season's offerings; the Berkshire Festival Chorus assists the Boston Symphony Orchestra led by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, which gives the nine concerts. The second series (August 8th, 10th, and 11th) consist of works of Beethoven and Tchaikovsky, the latter commemorating the centennial of Tchaikovsky's birth. The first concert of this series includes his Symphony No. 6; the second the Symphony No. 4; and the third the Symphony No. 5. All, of course, are magnificent.

This annual music festival is rather unusual. The concerts are given at "Tanglewood," on motor route 183, between Stockbridge and Lenox, where the music shed accommodates 6,000 listeners. This stands on a 200 acre estate overlooking a beautiful lake, and the scene is one of great beauty. There is also historical interest connected with it, for it was on this same estate that Hawthorne lived and wrote The House of the Seven Gables and other books.

There are excellent hotels in Stockbridge and Lenox, and both towns have attractive Episcopal churches. Many music lovers find a week-end at the Berkshire Symphonic Festival a wonderfully pleasant way to combine the enjoyment of good music with a rural holiday in a lovely countryside.

THIS CLIPPING FROM

CORONET
CHICAGO, ILL
AUGUST, 1940

A REPORT—FROM A NEUTRAL CORNER—ON THE LIVELIER ARTS . . . BY CARLETON SMITH

GRACE NOTES AND OVERTONES

CORONETS:

To the Sibelius Society for Album No. 6, including En Saga, In Memoriam, The Bard, Suite from Pelleas and Melisande.

To Toscanini's latest protégé, Jarmila Novotna (who, however, has more musicianship and charm than voice).

To juggler Massimiliano Truzzi for his 12-minute solo spot under Ringling Bros. Barnum & Bailey tent; he has a personality like a dish of flashlight powder.

To Serge Koussevitzky for his scheduled Tschaikowsky contribution to the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, Lenox, Mass., Aug. 1-18.

Play WHERE AMERICA WAS BORN IN MASSACHUSETTS

THERE is good reason for the old saying that no American knows his country until he has seen Massachusetts. The Commonwealth's stirring and magnificent past has been preserved and is to be seen—even felt—on every hand, side by side with the amazing variety of playgrounds provided by Nature and maintained by a people who cherish their outdoors as they do their traditions. And no hospitality is more genuine and heartwarming than the unassuming courtesy that is common heritage in the old Bay State.

Massachusetts is venerable, in years. A century and a half old when the Republic was born, its Pilgrims and Puritans hewed their homes out of the dark forest that grew down to meet the tides and were often obliged to "stande to armes and shote a cupple of mosketts" to frighten "ye wolfepack and Indeans." They were resolute people, however, and they founded a new civilization from which so much that is now America has stemmed.

During three centuries the Commonwealth has participated in many flaming episodes of American history, and its other contributions are as well known. Massachusetts is proud of its past, and in the matter of modern ideas it likes to call attention to what is perhaps the most complete network of fine highways in the United States. Once within its borders, it is easy to reach any of the famed historic and scenic places, or simply to find a restful spot in mountains, countryside or along a thousand miles of seashore.

You can play, where America was born, and inexpensively, too. In one and the same day, for instance, you can golf over ground in the Berkshires where Ethan Allen recruited his Green Mountain Boys, have lunch in beautiful old Northampton in Pioneer Valley, dine within shadow of Faneuil Hall in Boston, and go to bed to the wash of tides on the wharf at Provincetown, haven for artists, on Cape Cod.

There are really two Bostons, both worth seeing. One is the Boston Town of the past, where history moved at terrific pace and literature and the arts and sciences flowered as they have nowhere else on the Continent. The other Boston is the city of fine hotels, exquisite buildings, gorgeous parks, libraries and museums, and scores of noted schools and colleges.

To see Boston you can start almost anywhere and work in any direction. In the heart of town is Boston Common, where Puritans pastured their cows and Redcoats camped in preparation for Bunker Hill, in nearby Charlestown. The Common is shaded by elms of colonial age, and the ghosts of great Americans are said to stroll here, their presence invisible, yet felt alike by native and visitor. Ben Franklin often walked the Common, and so did Hancock, the Adamses, Garrison, Beecher, Edward Everett Hale, and many others you'll find in books. A short stroll brings one to the site of Griffins Wharf, where the Tea Party was held; to Old South Meetinghouse, with its many relics; to Kings Chapel and its ancient burying ground; to the Old State House, where Patriots fulminated; and to Faneuil Hall, the Cradle of Liberty. Near the Hall is Paul Revere's House, and the Old North Church where the lanterns were hung. Old Ironsides is moored at the Navy Yard. Lexington and Concord are but a short drive, as is Waltham, where Gore Place House attracts.

All about, in Boston and in nearby Cambridge and Concord, are the homes and haunts of the Titans of American letters—Emerson, Thoreau, Hawthorne, Longfellow, Alcott—and of Alcott's daughter, Louisa. Boston's famous library, with its Sargent murals, and Harvard and M. I. T., offer much to see. The Boston Museum of Fine Arts is rated a visit by the most hurried tourist. For the sports minded are Boston's two major league ball parks, golf and tennis, and canoeing and sailing on the Covered bridge at Charlmont, Massachusetts on the famous Mohawk Trail, route of the pioneers generations ago, and traveled now by thousands of summer visitors to the old Bay State.

149

Charles and in the Bay. East Boston has Suffolk Downs horse racing, and at Revere the dogs run.

At Cape Cod Canal begins the bared and bended arm of Massachusetts, the shoulder at aristocratic Buzzards Bay, the elbow at old Chatham, the wrist at quaint Truro, and the hand at picturesque Provincetown. This is The Cape, 65 miles of rugged headlands, sun-drenched sand, lighthouses, and the originals of an architecture that is truly American—the Cape Cod Salt Box, the historic land of the Pilgrims.

Yet the Cape has "new" things, too. Ribbons of level highway reach the remotest hamlet, and take you to golf courses, to antique shops, summer theatres, colonies of artists and writers, and an array of accommodations that includes swank hotels, overnight cabins and tourist homes in private residences. There are bridle trails for exploring the singing sand dunes, miles of matchless bathing beaches, and offshore is superb fishing. Sailing is taken for granted. At night the surf rumbles a deep romantic accompaniment to the dance bands.

Today's landlords on the Cape will serve you classic blueberry dumplings, quahaug chowder, and bluefish, cooked only as Codders know how. And you will be agreeably surprised at the modest cost of such royal fare.

All the primeval magic of islands abounds on Nantucket and Martha's Vineyard, which are reached by steamer from New Bedford, with stops at Woods Hole, and by plane from Boston.

From Boston to the Cape Cod Canal runs the history crammed South Shore, a drive through superb scenery and trim villages where Mayflower passengers founded "Plimouth Plantation" and where many of America's great were born or have lived.

Locally, the South Shore is celebrated for its sea-food, which is saying a good deal in the Bay State. Cohasset is especially noted for its clams. Picnic grounds, beaches and eating places are everywhere along the South Shore. Nantasket Beach is an exciting summer resort, with unusually warm bathing beaches, an amusement park, and many hotels and overnight cabins Inland a few miles are Brockton, the great shoe city; Attleboro, jewelry making center, and historic Taunton.

Anywhere on the South Shore you can play where America was born.

Long celebrated as an aristocratic playground, the North Shore nevertheless offers a warm welcome to the visitor and a permanent mood of vacation-time. The combination of wild shore-line and forest is responsible—a natural setting in which Nature counts for most and plays no favorites. Public beaches, like those at Lynn, Revere, Swampscott, Salem, and Salisbury offer dashing surf and quiet sandy coves for bathing. Sailing and fishing are bred in the North Shore's bone. Regattas here are national events. Tuna fishing is good.

Beautiful Marblehead, of winding streets and ancient houses, including the home of Moll Pitcher, is lively in summer with thousands who come for the yacht races. Visitors often are surprised to find here the original painting of "The Spirit of '76," known to every schoolchild.

One of the most beautiful as well as historic buildings in America is the Old State House in Boston. Built under the English kings, and scene of the pre-Revolution Boston Massacre, the building now houses a wealth of old furniture, paintings, ship models and other souvenirs of early America.

Salem has many attractions, but most visitors ask to see the House of the Seven Gables, Pioneer Village, Old Witch Jail, and Peabody Museum. Gloucester's artist colony shares importance with its fishermen, who have been going down to the sea since 1623.

Flowing unhurried through the State from top to bottom is the long river that spans New England from Canada to the sea; the broad Connecticut that beautifies Massachusetts' Pioneer Valley. Here is an inland playground of hills and countryside, fine trout streams, lakes, golf courses and bridle paths galore. Here are cool, shaded villages and attractive farm houses becoming popular for summer homes.

In this 1800-mile vacation-land you can see some well known colleges and schools; Smith College at Northampton, Mount Holyoke at South Hadley, and the famous Northfield Schools at Northfield, Deerfield Academy, Massachusetts State College at Amherst, and others. There are sixty fine hotels and inns.

The Berkshires of western Massachusetts are rugged mountain country, where the resounding voice of Colonel Ethan Allen shouted for hardy mountaineers to rally against the British and Yorkers. Broad highways now replace the rockbound paths and lead over the wooded hills and through echoing glens to display the Bay State's high panorama . . . soft green and vivid blue in summer, blazing with bright hues in autumn.

No one who has driven the Mohawk Trail through these scenes ever forgets them, and most visitors are drawn back more than once. You may camp beside mirrored lake or highland peak. Tumbling mountain streams, cold and clear as crystal, beckon the angler. There is canoeing on lakes and rivers. Wooded bridle trails, passing through sunshine and shadow, give the horseman breathtaking glimpses of valleys below.

Each August the Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Stockbridge, with Serge Koussevitzky conducting the Boston Symphony Orchestra, brings music lovers from afar; while Broadway and Hollywood combine talents to shine with the Berkshire Players, also at Stockbridge. At North Adams is Mount Greylock, where the visitor, without leaving his car, can see the Green Mountains of Vermont, the White Mountains of New Hampshire, and farmlands of distant New York. The Berkshires have an annual Laurel Festival, while winter brings thousands to the many fine ski trails.

Williamstown in the Berkshires has the serene and simple dignity of its old and famous college. And there is historic Pittsfield, whose General John Brown warned Congress, long before it became apparent, that Benedict Arnold was no patriot; and the sedate and beautiful old towns of Lee and Lenox, with their huge mansions and great estates. In the Berkshires you can play all year where America was born.

This Clipping From
CUE
NEW YORK, N.Y.
AUG 31 1940

PIX

When Koussevitzky raises his baton over the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Berkshire Festival, he symbolizes a side of life of which Americans may be proud. Long may his baton wave!

YOUR CUE

GROWN UP

THROUGH AN OVERSIGHT I let last week go by without informing you that CUE was in the act of passing another milestone. Perhaps you noticed it. If you have a binder and keep your old copies, you certainly noticed it, and were very properly annoyed.

Albeit tardily, let it be announced that CUE, with the issue of August 24, increased its height by six-sixteenths of an inch and its width by seven-sixteenths of an inch, fractions that brought its dimensions to the conventional Time Magazine size.

As usual, it was not God but Mammon who cracked the whip. About a year ago at Mammon's request CUE jumped its size by a considerable amount in order to be able to run the same advertisements that appear in other magazines—advertisements of column length. It now appears that an even bigger size is desirable to accommodate advertisers who use color. Once again CUE is happy to oblige.

I doubt if any reader will object. In the last three horrid years of depressions, recessions, hurricanes, wars, and blitzkriegs, CUE has struggled steadily up the hard road to success. No 1920 decade of optimism and easy money has helped CUE on its way. One by one, as income increased, the departments you like have been added. Bit by bit, the articles have been improved. And I think that CUE's 65,000 readers will now admit that CUE has earned its right to a permanent place among established magazines on the newsstands and on your library table.

There is a proper time for everything, and it seemed to us at CUE that the moment had come for our fast-growing child to dispense for good and all with that affectionate appellation, "invaluable little magazine".

CUE is now standard size.

OF THE SPIRIT

A LADY writes to me that she is appalled at the indifference of Americans to the present critical condition of Europe. "Americans still think only of money", she says, "and their own pleasure." To her way of thinking, vacations should be given up and every bit of spare time devoted to charity and foreign relief.

Maybe she's right. A fortnight ago on a Saturday evening I sat under that superb shed at Tanglewood, near Lenox in the Berkshires, and listened to Dr. Koussevitzky and his Boston Symphony Orchestra. Afterwards I walked through the formal gardens and let the moon shine on me. Some eight thousand other people did likewise. Perhaps we sinned.

Everything was peaceful and secure. The roads in the Berkshires were full of smooth-running automobiles; the tearooms full of people with money in their pockets. Everywhere, from Riverdale to Danbury, to Pittsfield, to Manchester, north to Murray Bay, and beyond, the countryside was dotted with Americans enjoying themselves.

Should this be so? I doubt if Socrates himself could say with confidence exactly how much pleasure the American nation is justified in taking at this time. We know that it doesn't do to fiddle while Rome burns. But are we supposed to rush to the opposite pole and throw the entire six states of New England into bankruptcy by skipping our vacations?

You answer it.

This much I do know—one of the things America would be fighting for, if it were to fight, would be the privilege of perpetuating such an institution as the Berkshire Symphonic Festival. When festivals go, and all the world takes jobs in munitions factories, something vital will be gone. If the British prevail over the Germans, it will be to some extent because the British recognize this spiritual fact, and because the Germans don't.

This year the Festival ran for three weeks, with a greater crowd on hand for the third weekend than for the first. Next year, Hitler permitting, it may run four weekends—and at present writing no limit is in sight to the number of people who can be attracted to this superb musical feast.

Dr. Koussevitzky has taken a house near the scene of the Festival, and hopes to make his Summer season as important musically as his Winter series in Boston. His orchestra is undoubtedly as fine as any in the world. And the conditions under which it plays, the outdoor setting in the luscious Berkshires, make an evening in Tanglewood a pleasure long to remember.

For my part, I hope the Berkshire Symphonic Festival thrives mightily, come what may. And that a way will be found whereby this continent can equip itself to hold its own in a most hateful wicked world without destroying the aesthetic elements of life.

It is to preserve these aesthetic elements that I would most readily fight.

—FILLMORE HYDE

151

This Clipping From
STAMFORD, CONN.
ADVOCATE

AUG 16 1940

This Clipping From
WATERBURY, CONN.
AMERICAN

AUG 16 1940

This Clipping From
WATERBURY, CONN.
AMERICAN

AUG 16 1940

This Clipping From
BRIDGEPORT, CONN.
POST

AUG 16 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM MERIDEN, CONN.
JOURNAL

AUG 16 1940

7,000 PERSONS AT STOCKBRIDGE MUSIC FESTIVAL

Stockbridge, Mas.. Aug. 16 (AP)—No audience of 7,000 ever took the Bach B Minor Mass more easily in its stride than the one which heard the gigantic work last night at Tanglewood. The mass opened the concluding third of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival in the now famous "music shed" perched on the rim of the Stockbridge bowl.

Because of the length of the work, Serge Goussevitzky elected to begin at 7 o'clock, and declare an hour's intermission at 8:30.

And because of the many who drove long distances to hear the first performance of the mass by such distinguished forces in the Berekshires were unable to eat dinner at home, the intermission became one gigantic picnic.

Hundreds lined up in a cafeteria tent where chicken, baked beans and such were sold; even more besieged the larger tent in which the Thursday Morning Club of Great Barrington served sandwiches and drinks. Then for a while the spacious Tanglewood grounds seemed paved with eating and chattering people, somewhat oddly for so noble a setting. But it was fun.

The performance was more than that—it came close to being a miracle. There have been finer choruses than the 200-voice group heard last night, but probably these have not prepared so monumental a work in six weeks. as this one has. Its members are from Dr. Koussevitzky's unique Berkshire music center, the school which provides a summer of study for professionals and non-professionals alike, giving no scholastic credit and attempting to make no money. It has been prepared by Prof. G. Wallace Woodworth of Harvard University in a series of daily sessions which began last July.

The orchestra was the Boston Symphony, and no more need be said of that. Abetting these forces were the new so-called "Bach organ" installed this summer with Carnegie Foundation money and played last night by E. Power Biggs; the harpsichord in charge of Putnam Aldrich, and five soloists from the orchestra: Richard Burgin, violin; Willem Valkenier, horn; Georges Laurent, flute and Louis Speyer and Jean DeVergie, oboi d'amore.

The solo voices were adequate if not startling: Elizabeth Schumann, soprano; Viola Silva, contraltor; William Hain, tenor; and Alexander Kipnis, bass-baritone.

The welding and impelling force was, of course, Dr. Koussevitzky.

The last notes of the concluding "donanobis pacem" had hardly faded away when a large force took over the grounds to put them in shape for tonight's benefit for British war relief at which all the Music Center organiaztions will be heard, the Boston Symphony will play, Albert Spalding and Gregor Piatigorsky will appear as soloists, and talks will be made by Archibald MacLeish, Gov. Herbert H. Lehman, Sir Louis Beale, and Dorothy Thompson.

THIS CLIPPING FROM ANSONIA, CONN.
SENTINEL
AUG 16 1940

This Clipping From
TORRINGTON, CONN.
REGISTER

AUG 16 1940

This Clipping From
WILMINGTON, DEL.
JOURNAL EVERY EVENING
AUG 16 1940

This Clipping From
NEW HAVEN, CONN.
REGISTER

AUG 16 1940

This Clipping From
WATERBURY, CONN.
REPUBLICAN

AUG 16 1940

Bach's B Minor Mass Heard By 6,500 At Music Festival

BY JOHN SELBY

Stockbridge, Mass., Aug. 15—(AP)—An audience of about 6,500 persons sat down tonight in the famed music shed of the Berkshire Symphonic festival to one more demonstration of the international quality of great music.

They heard the music of a German, Johann Sebastian Bach, at a time when the ambitions of another German of a different culture make headline news.

The music was played by an American orchestra, the Boston ton symphony, which since 1936 has made the former estate of Mrs. Gorham Brooks a summer mecca for music lovers for all lands. Among the musicians of the orchestra are men from most of the European countries, as well as America.

And Serge Koussevitzky was, of course, the director—he is Russian born and a cosmopolitan.

The music was B Minor Mass, perhaps the highest peak of all religious music, and tonight it was given a performance so moving that the audience seemed not to notice the fact that it ran something over three hours. It was one of the largest audiences ever to hear the work in America, and although there were many Bach fans in the shed who would be expected to sit in awe, the more casual hearers seemed quite as interested.

As a final distinction, the chorus involved was that of the Berkshire music center, under G. Wallace Woodworth, and it is representative of many sections of America, and all social strata. The chorus is the chief activity of the non-professional section of Dr. Koussevitzky's highly successful school at Tanglewood, and has been rehearsing since July 8 for this occasion.

Tonight's soloists were: Elisabeth Schuman, soprano, Viola Silva, contralto, William Hain, tenor, and Alexander Kipnis, bass baritone, and for the most part they matched the other features of the performance.

For the first time an extra event has been added to the festival program. It is to be a gigantic benefit tomorrow night for British relief in which the Boston symphony, and the chorus and two orchestras from the music center will take part. Archibald MacLeish will be master of ceremonies, and there will be talks by Sir Louis Beale, representing Lord Lothian, Gov. Herbert H. Lehman of New York and Miss Dorothy Thompson.

THIS CLIPPING FROM LEWISTON, ME.
SUN

AUG 16 1940

PLAY GERMAN MUSIC AT BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 15 -AP-An audience of about 6,500 persons sat down tonight in the famed music shed of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival to one more demonstration of the international quality of great music.

They heard the music of a German, Johann Sebastian Bach, at a time when the ambitions of another German of a different culture make headline news.

The music was played by an American orchestra, the Boston Symphony. Serge Koussevitzky was the director.

This Clipping From BIRMINGHAM, ALA.
SUNDAY NEWS-AGE-HERALD
AUG 18 1940

* * *

BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL, which has drawn thousands of music lovers from all parts of America to Tanglewood in Massachusetts this month, closes this Sunday afternoon with the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Serge Koussevitzky, conductor, playing the Brahms First Symphony as a climax to a series of festival programs that has included concerts by Albert Spalding, violinist; the festival chorus of 200 students at the orchestra's Berkshire Music Center in the Bach B Minor Mass; the dedication of the new organ, and Dorothy Maynor, the newly "discovered" Negro soprano, as guest soloist.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SYRACUSE, N. Y.
HERALD JOURNAL
AUG 14 1940

Tanglewood Has Throngs for Festival

Berkshire Music Center to Assist In Singing Bach

Tanglewood, home of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, near Stockbridge, Mass., is ready to handle its biggest crowd in history for the final week of activity. Already it is estimated that 45,000 persons have attended the six concerts and two rehearsals given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

An outstanding feature this week will be the Bach B Minor Mass tomorrow night at 7 o'clock. At this concert the Berkshire Music Center forces will join with the orchestra. The Festival Chorus of 200 voices which has been rehearsing diligently since the Center opened July 8 under the direction of Prof. G. Wallace Woodworth of Harvard University, widely known here, will perform with these soloists: Elisabeth Schumann, Viola Silva, William Hain and Alexander Kipnis. Regular Festival patrons as well as Bach enthusiasts from a wide radius will be in attendance for this concert.

The Bach program will open at the earlier hour because of the necessity of dividing the program in two parts. Tickets for the performance of course include the complete program. There will be an intermission of an hour starting at 8:30 to permit the audience to enjoy supper on the grounds.

On Friday starting at 6 o'clock comes the gala benefit program being presented for Allied Relief by the orchestra with the cooperation of the Festival. Tickets for this event may be obtained from local chairmen, from the Festival office at Stockbridge, at Tanglewood or at Allied Relief offices in New York and Boston.

Dorothy Maynor, Negro soprano whose star has soared since her appearance last summer at Dr. Koussevitzky's Tanglewood picnic, will be heard by the great Festival audience Saturday night at 8:30 o'clock.

The Festival will close Sunday afternoon at 3:30 o'clock with a program of Haydn, Sibelius and Brahms.

Persons from a distance planning to attend the final series of concerts are urged to communicate with the Festival Accommodations Bureau at Stockbridge as soon as possible if they have not yet made arrangements for rooms. Tickets for the concerts may be obtained at the Stockbridge office of the Festival or by telephoning Stockbridge 400.

The complete musical programs for the week follow:

Thursday—7:00 P. M.
Mass in B Minor......................Bach
Berkshire Festival Chorus: Elisabeth Schumann, soprano; Viola Silva, mezzo-soprano; William Hain, tenor; Alexander Kipnis, bass.
Friday—6:00 P.M. (Allied Relief Benefit)
March—"Pompt and Circumstance"..Elgar
Combined Boston Symphony and Institute Orchestras. Serge Koussevitzky, conducting.
Jupiter from "The Planets"..........Holst
Combined Boston Symphony and Institute Orchestras. Stanley Chapple, conducting.
Rondo Capriccioso (with orchestra) Saint-Saens
Soloist—Albert Spalding, Violin
Violincello Solo, With Orchestra
Soloist—Gregor Piatigorsky
Choruses From the Mass in B Minor..Bach
Academy Chorus and Boston Symphony Orchestra. Serge Koussevitzky conducting.
Hallelujah Chorus From "The Messiah" ....Handel
Academy Chours and Boston Symphony Orchestra. Serge Koussevtzky conducting.
Strauss Waltzes by the Pops Orchestra.
Arthur Fiedler, Conductor
Saturday—8:30 P. M.
Soloist—Dorothy Maynor, Soprano
Classical Symphony, Op. 25......Prokofieff
Symphony, "Mathis der Maler"..Hindemith
Concert aria "Bella mia Fiamma"...Mozart
Adelaide ....Beethoven
Pelleas et Melisande, Op 80..........Faure
Passacaglia and Fugue in C Minor for Organ ....Bach-Respighi
Sunday—3:30 P. M.
Symphony in G, No. 88............Haydn
Symphony No. 7, Op. 105..........Sibelius
Symphony No. 1 in C Minor, Op. 68.Brahms

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE
AUG 16 1940

Bach Mass Opens Last Series

Festival Chorus Joins Orchestra In Concert

By JAY C. ROSENFELD

Last night at Tanglewood the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitsky conducting, with the assistance of the Berkshire Festival Chorus, gave the B minor mass of Johann Sebastian Bach as the seventh concert of the current Berkshire Symphonic Festival and the opening of the third and final trio of scheduled programs. The chorus was supplied by the students of the Berkshire Music Center, the school newly organized in conjunction with the orchestral concerts, and had been trained by G. Wallace Woodworth of Harvard University.

There are a rare few masterpieces in the literature of music whose proportions and dimensions not necessarily in chronological measurment, but in those eternal elements whose grandeur and magnificence are recognized and revered by all, which stand out hors concours. Such a piece is the Bach mass. It does happen to be a massive work in size as well, much too long to fit into the scheme of ordered religious rituals. The performance last night began at 7 and proceeded until the Kyrie and the Gloria had been completed, when there was an hour's intermission, after which the remaining Credo, Sanctus and Agnus Dei were sung.

Two Centuries Old

The mass dates from a bit over two centuries ago, and yet its primitive sublimity is timeless. Its infinite qualities are not marred by transient favor. Its theme is that of the ageless aspiration of man for that which we all recognize as paramount and the affinity of Bach's music with the text is the superlative effort. It is not the type of exciting music which was played during the Tchaikovsky celebration last week. Dr. Koussevitzky did build up a few of the endings of several choruses to achieve telling, broad climaxes, but the mass, in the main, does not make the immediate impact on a listener that something of a more secular nature might effect. Its cumulative impression, however, is profound and lasting. As the evening progressed this was sensed quite distinctly, possibly due, in some degree, to the increasing steadiness of the performance, especially after the intermission.

Fritz Volbach says that "it need not surprise us that a Protestant, like Bach, composed a mass. Luther had not abolished the mass, but merely taken from it the character of sacrifice by the rejection of the sacrificial act."

200 Voices

The chorus included more than 200 voices, of which the male sections were more satisfactory. The female voices were largely those of young women, lacking in vocal maturity, resulting in a timbre less than the music demanded. The training, which had been done under the skilled hand of Mr. Woodworth, showed careful preparation. The singers gave alert attention to the conductor, and executed his meager demands beyond precision with eager fidelity, although it was not until the chorus in the Gloria, "We give thanks to thee for thy great glory" that they were asked to give of that which they showed themselves amply capable. Again later in this same section, "Thou that takest away the sins of the world," was probably the big moment in this shorter half of the whole mass, with the greatest display of trenchant zest coming in the final chorus of the Gloria, "With the Holy Ghost in the glory of God the Father."

During the long intermission, the whole audience left their chairs to secure refreshment at the booths or the less expensive variety which was inhalable through one's nostrils anywhere on the great parade upon which the full moon, dimmed ever so slightly by a haze, brilliantly. Those who ghted and took suffi-eir seats for pro-later invading of all who t warmth of ld persist.
came the

. . . as Part of America's Most Importa

When the Berkshire Symphonic Festival gives its ninth and last concert of the season, a week from this afternoon, it will have had something less than 60,000 auditors.

Attendance at the Lewisohn Stadium will probably be at least five times that number; the Hollywood Bowl has characteristically uncountable thousands; the St. Louis Municipal Opera expects to top three quarters of a million. Even the Newark Stadium had almost 100,000 attendance at its four June concerts, and lord knows what the figures are in Chicago, where they have two symphonic series, one at Ravinia and one at Grant Park. And the Boston Symphony itself gave Pops concerts every night in May and June to sold-out houses, followed by a free series of Esplanade concerts which sometimes attracted as many as 30,000.

Yet the Berkshire Festival remains, without much doubt, the most important of the lot. One reason is that the Boston Symphony is probably at this moment the finest orchestra in the world. Another is that Serge Koussevitzky is the only regular conductor for the festival while most of the others suffer from a series of excellent-to-bad guest conductors, few of whom have sufficient time for adequate rehearsal. A third is that the Berkshire Festival has social prestige.

Festival Adds Benefit

The Berkshire Symphony Festival has added a gala concert for the benefit of the Allied Relief Fund next Friday. Archibald MacLeish will be master of ceremonies and Gov. Lehman and Dorothy Thompson speakers. The elaborate musical fare lists the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the Institute Orchestra, the Academy Chorus and Orchestra, the Festival Chorus, folk dancing, chamber music, scenes from opera, and soloists including Albert Spalding and Gregor Piatigorsky.

It is too bad that in a democracy social prestige should give a music festival importance. Still, there's no use in not saying so. Social prestige carries with it financial guarantees and high admission prices. And money can develop a music shed with good acoustics and pay for painstaking rehearsals.

Money can also help develop a music school attached to the festival, a school with so brilliant a faculty and in such beautiful surroundings that a group of the most talented students in the country can be attracted to it. A large percentage of these students are music teachers—teachers with sufficient standing and interest not to need the academic credits offered by university summer schools.

Teachers Carry Torch

These teachers go back to their own communities carrying the torch of only the best in music all over the country. Thus, the Berkshire Festival assumes its position of paramount importance in America's summer musical life.

Critic after critic has called the festival the Salzburg, the Florence of 1940. It isn't that yet, though it may easily become so. Salzburg is only a Greater-Germany affair now; Bayreuth performances are given for Nazi soldiers on leave. Berkshire is slowly taking on their former international coloring.

But its importance probably lies even more in its direct influence on our national musical life through its Institute, Academy and opera school than purely in the superb performances given by the Bostonians.

In a democracy, a cultural movement is most important when it comes from the bottom. If the Berkshire Festival gives impetus and standards for smaller festivals, for music indigenous to the community that produces it, it will have fulfilled its best function as a catalyzing agent.

One of Berkshire's most enthusiastic faculty members, Boris Goldovsky, summed up this aspect of the question perfectly.

"What American music needs," he said, "is to develop the bush leagues."—H. W. S.

Guiding genius of the Berkshire Festival, Serge Koussevitzky conducts the Boston Symphony regularly, the excellent Institute orchestra occasionally. He is 66, genial, exacting.

THIS CLIPPING FROM TIME MAGAZINE
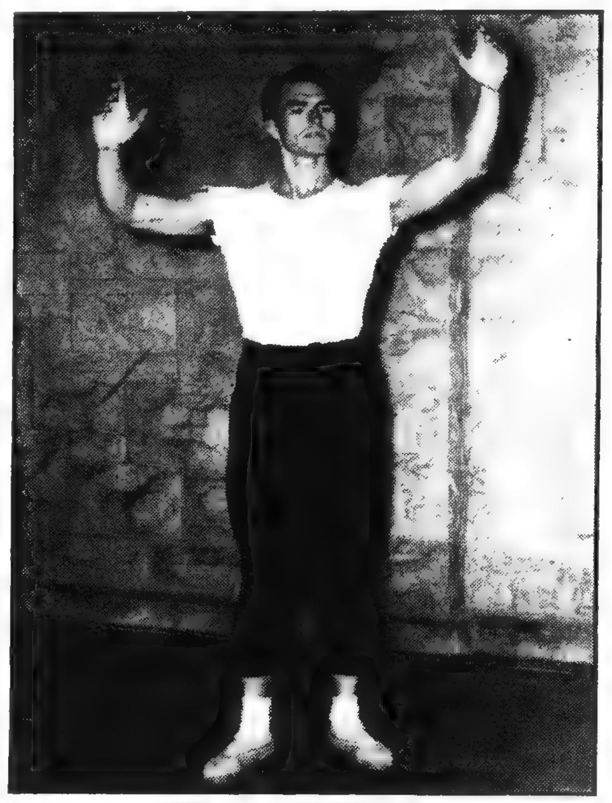
CHICAGO, ILL.
AUG 12 1940

Serge's Dream

For six years pilgrims have gone to the No. 1 U. S. summer music shrine, the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, to admire the precision of the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the benevolent tyranny of its greying conductor, Serge Koussevitzky. This year, besides the festival, Tanglewood houses a new project also dear to Koussevitzky, the Berkshire Music Center, intended to be a top-flight summer school for musicians.



John J. McCann

BALLET MASTER HAWKINS
How to conduct an orchestra?

To Tanglewood he brought Composers Aaron Copland and Paul Hindemith to teach composition; G. Wallace Woodworth, Chairman of Harvard University's Department of Music, for choral instruction; Herbert Graf, Metropolitan Opera Stage Director, to teach opera dramatics; New York Times Music Editor Olin Downes, Composer Roy Harris, and many another to lecture. By last week the month-old centre, with its 300-odd students, had worked its creator up into a well-turned ecstasy. Said Koussevitzky: "How can I speak of something part of myself, so much of my heart, a cherished ideal? It's like my child."

Most notable feature of the school: a special class for conductors from which the Director hopes to turn out five top-rank maestros in five years. Long convinced that a conductor should handle himself as featly as his orchestra, Koussevitzky hired Manhattan Ballet Master Erick Hawkins, partner of famed U. S. Dancer Martha Graham, to teach his pupils podium gestures. Soon Teacher Hawkins had the pupil conductors pirouetting and posturing, trying to become as expressive as dancers. Some of them took it seriously, some were embarrassed. Grumbled one: "Makes a fellow feel self-conscious."

BLOOMINGTON, IND
STAR
8/23/40

THE high points of the Tanglewood concert Thursday evening were the offering, the formal debut of the Berkshire Festival Chorus with the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, and the dedication of the Carnegie organ, with E. Power Biggs at the console.

The offering was Bach's Mass in B minor, which Sir Hubert Parry called "the mightiest choral work ever written." (That superlative is not mine; and here, if ever, "praise from Sir Hubert is praise indeed.") —Bach, the Protestant Palestrina, composed the Mass in B minor, not as a liteurgical but as an art form. For one thing, it is much too long to serve as an incident to the church service. But the scope that Bach gave it is inherent in the form that the long, tradition of Roman Catholic worship had given the sacred office.—And so on this evening the noble work rose nobly, bridging for the novice the great Schism.—Statistically (but not statically!), the soloists were Elisabeth Schumann, soprano, Viola Silva, mezzo-soprano, William Han, tenor, and Alexander Kipnis, bass, and the following members of the orchestra: Richard Burgin, violin, Willem Valkenier, horn, Georges Laurent, flute, Louis Speyer and Jean Devergie, oboi d'amore, E. Power Biggs, organ, and Putnam Aldrich, harpsichord.

The chorus was under the direction of G. Wallace Woodworth, chairman of the department of Music of Harvard University, director of the chorus of Radcliffe College, and member of the faculty of the Berkshire Music Center, the new summer school of interpretation at Tanglewood. Nearly all the registrants at the Center were in the chorus. They were reinforced by Harvard boys and Radcliffe girls who had worked on the Bach Mass through the winter and had sung in the chorus when the Mass was given in the series of home concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Small wonder that the chorus Thursday evening performed like veterans to the greater glory of the Berkshire Music Festival.

This Clipping From
WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM
AUG 16 1940

6500 Hear Bach Program At Berkshire Festival

By JOHN SELBY
Associated Press Arts Editor

STOCKBRIDGE, Aug. 15.—An audience of about 6500 persons sat down tonight in the famed music shed of the Berkshire symphonic festival to one more demonstration of the international quality of great music.

They heard the music of a German, Johann Sebastian Bach, at a time when the ambitions of another German of a different culture make headline news.

The music was played by an American orchestra, the Boston Symphony, which since 1936 has made the former estate of Mrs. Gorham Brooks a Summer mecca for music lovers for all lands. Among the musicians of the orchestra are men from most of the European countries, as well as America.

And Serge Koussevitzky was of course the director—he is a Russian born and a cosmopolitan.

Chorus Outstanding

The music was B Minor Mass, perhaps the highest peak of all religious music, and tonight it was given a performance so moving that the audience seemed not to notice the fact that it ran something over three hours. It was one of the largest audiences which ever heard the work in America, and although there were many Bach fans in the shed who would be expected to sit in awe, the more casual hearers seemed quite as interested.

As a final distinction, the chorus involved was that of the Berkshire music center, under G. Wallace Woodworth, and it is representative of many sections of America, and all social strata. The chorus is the chief activity of the non-professional section of Dr. Koussevitzky's highly successful school at Tanglewood, and has been rehearsing since July 8 for this occasion.

Good Vocal Material

Although preparing the Mass in six weeks is a musical accomplishment of first rank, haste was not necessary, because the singers were able to meet Mr. Woodworth daily. And the vocal material is unusually good.

Tonight's soloists were Elisabeth Schumann, soprano; Viola Silva, contralto; William Hain, tenor; and Alexander Kipnis, bass baritone; and for the most part they matched the other features of the performance.

For the first time an extra event has been added to the festival program. It is to be a gigantic benefit tomorrow night for British relief in which the Boston Symphony, and the chorus and two orchestras from the music center will take part. Archibald MacLeish will be master of ceremonies, and there will be talks by Sir Louis Beale, representing Lord Lothian; Gov. Herbert H. Lehman of New York, and Miss Dorothy Thompson.

PM's WEEKLY, AUGUST 11, 1940 • NEWS OF MUSIC

. . . as Part of America's Most Importar

When the Berkshire Symphonic Festival gives its ninth and last concert of the season, a week from this afternoon, it will have had something less than 60,000 auditors.

Attendance at the Lewisohn Stadium will probably be at least five times that number; the Hollywood Bowl has characteristically uncountable thousands; the St. Louis Municipal Opera expects to top three quarters of a million. Even the Newark Stadium had almost 100,000 attendance at its four June concerts, and lord knows what the figures are in Chicago, where they have two symphonic series, one at Ravinia and one at Grant Park. And the Boston Symphony itself gave Pops concerts every night in May and June to sold-out houses, followed by a free series of Esplanade concerts which sometimes attracted as many as 30,000.

Yet the Berkshire Festival remains, without much doubt, the most important of the lot. One reason is that the Boston Symphony is probably at this moment the finest orchestra in the world. Another is that Serge Koussevitzky is the only regular conductor for the festival while most of the others suffer from a series of excellent-to-bad guest conductors, few of whom have sufficient time for adequate rehearsal. A third is that the Berkshire Festival has social prestige.

It is too bad that in a democracy social prestige should give a music festival importance. Still, there's no use in not saying so. Social prestige carries with it financial guarantees and high admission prices. And money can develop a music shed with good acoustics and pay for painstaking rehearsals.

Money can also help develop a music school attached to the festival, a school with so brilliant a faculty and in such beautiful surroundings that a group of the most talented students in the country can be attracted to it. A large percentage of these students are music teachers—teachers with sufficient standing and interest not to need the academic credits offered by university summer schools.

Teachers Carry Torch

These teachers go back to their own communities carrying the torch of only the best in music all over the country. Thus, the Berkshire Festival assumes its position of paramount-importance in America's summer musical life.

Critic after critic has called the festival the Salzburg, the Florence of 1940. It isn't that yet, though it may easily become so. Salzburg is only a Greater-Germany affair now; Bayreuth performances are given for Nazi soldiers on leave. Berkshire is slowly taking on their former international coloring.

But its importance probably lies even more in its direct influence on our national musical life through its Institute, Academy and opera school than purely in the superb performances given by the Bostonians.

In a democracy, a cultural movement is most important when it comes from the bottom. If the Berkshire Festival gives impetus and standards for smaller festivals, for music indigenous to the community that produces it, it will have fulfilled its best function as a catalyzing agent.

One of Berkshire's most enthusiastic faculty members, Boris Goldovsky, summed up this aspect of the question perfectly,

"What American music needs," he said, "is to develop the bush leagues."—H. W. S.

Festival Adds Benefit

The Berkshire Symphony Festival has added a gala concert for the benefit of the Allied Relief Fund next Friday. Archibald MacLeish will be master of ceremonies and Gov. Lehman and Dorothy Thompson speakers. The elaborate musical fare lists the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the Institute Orchestra, the Academy Chorus and Orchestra, the Festival Chorus, folk dancing, chamber music, scenes from opera, and soloists including Albert Spalding and Gregor Piatigorsky.

Guiding genius of the Berkshire Festival, Serge Koussevitzky conducts the Boston Symphony regularly, the excellent Institute orchestra occasionally. He is 66, genial, exacting.

THIS CLIPPING FROM TIME MAGAZINE
CHICAGO, ILL.
AUG 12 1940

Serge's Dream

For six years pilgrims have gone to the No. 1 U. S. summer music shrine, the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, to admire the precision of the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the benevolent tyranny of its greying conductor, Serge Koussevitzky. This year, besides the festival, Tanglewood houses a new project also dear to Koussevitzky, the Berkshire Music Center, intended to be a top-flight summer school for musicians.

John J. McCann

BALLET MASTER HAWKINS
How to conduct an orchestra?

To Tanglewood he brought Composers Aaron Copland and Paul Hindemith to teach composition; G. Wallace Woodworth, Chairman of Harvard University's Department of Music, for choral instruction; Herbert Graf, Metropolitan Opera Stage Director, to teach opera dramatics; New York Times Music Editor Olin Downes, Composer Roy Harris, and many another to lecture. By last week the month-old centre, with its 300-odd students, had worked its creator up into a well-turned ecstasy. Said Koussevitzky: "How can I speak of something part of myself, so much of my heart, a cherished ideal? It's like my child."

Most notable feature of the school: a special class for conductors from which the Director hopes to turn out five top-rank maestros in five years. Long convinced that a conductor should handle himself as featly as his orchestra, Koussevitzky hired Manhattan Ballet Master Erick Hawkins, partner of famed U. S. Dancer Martha Graham, to teach his pupils podium gestures. Soon Teacher Hawkins had the pupil conductors pirouetting and posturing, trying to become as expressive as dancers. Some of them took it seriously, some were embarrassed. Grumbled one: "Makes a fellow feel self-conscious."

BLOOMINGTON, IND
STAR
8/23/40

THE high points of the Tanglewood concert Thursday evening were the offering, the formal debut of the Berkshire Festival Chorus with the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, and the dedication of the Carnegie organ, with E. Power Biggs at the console.

The offering was Bach's Mass in B minor, which Sir Hubert Parry called "the mightiest choral work ever written." (That superlative is not mine; and here, if ever, "praise from Sir Hubert is praise indeed.") —Bach, the Protestant Palestrina, composed the Mass in B minor, not as a liteurgical but as an art form. For one thing, it is much too long to serve as an incident to the church service. But the scope that Bach gave it is inherent in the form that the long, tradition of Roman Catholic worship had given the sacred office.—And so on this evening the noble work rose nobly, bridging for the novice the great Schism.—Statistically (but not statically!), the soloists were Elisabeth Schumann, soprano, Viola Silva, mezzo-soprano, William Han, tenor, and Alexander Kipnis, bass, and the following members of the orchestra: Richard Burgin, violin, Willem Valkenier, horn, Georges Laurent, flute, Louis Speyer and Jean Devergie, oboi d'amore, E. Power Biggs, organ, and Putnam Aldrich, harpsichord.

The chorus was under the direction of G. Wallace Woodworth, chairman of the department of Music of Harvard University, director of the chorus of Radcliffe College, and member of the faculty of the Berkshire Music Center, the new summer school of interpretation at Tanglewood. Nearly all the registrants at the Center were in the chorus. They were reinforced by Harvard boys and Radcliffe girls who had worked on the Bach Mass through the winter and had sung in the chorus when the Mass was given in the series of home concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Small wonder that the chorus Thursday evening performed like veterans to the greater glory of the Berkshire Music Festival.

This Clipping From
WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM
AUG 16 1940

6500 Hear Bach Program At Berkshire Festival

By JOHN SELBY
Associated Press Arts Editor

STOCKBRIDGE, Aug. 15.—An audience of about 6500 persons sat down tonight in the famed music shed of the Berkshire symphonic festival to one more demonstration of the international quality of great music.

They heard the music of a German, Johann Sebastian Bach, at a time when the ambitions of another German of a different culture make headline news.

The music was played by an American orchestra, the Boston Symphony, which since 1936 has made the former estate of Mrs. Gorham Brooks a Summer mecca for music lovers for all lands. Among the musicians of the orchestra are men from most of the European countries, as well as America.

And Serge Koussevitzky was of course the director—he is a Russian born and a cosmopolitan.

Chorus Outstanding

The music was B Minor Mass, perhaps the highest peak of all religious music, and tonight it was given a performance so moving that the audience seemed not to notice the fact that it ran something over three hours. It was one of the largest audiences which ever heard the work in America, and although there were many Bach fans in the shed who would be expected to sit in awe, the more casual hearers seemed quite as interested.

As a final distinction, the chorus involved was that of the Berkshire music center, under G. Wallace Woodworth, and it is representative of many sections of America, and all social strata. The chorus is the chief activity of the non-professional section of Dr. Koussevitzky's highly successful school at Tanglewood, and has been rehearsing since July 8 for this occasion.

Good Vocal Material

Although preparing the Mass in six weeks is a musical accomplishment of first rank, haste was not necessary, because the singers were able to meet Mr. Woodworth daily. And the vocal material is unusually good.

Tonight's soloists were Elisabeth Schumann, soprano; Viola Silva, contralto; William Hain, tenor; and Alexander Kipnis, bass baritone; and for the most part they matched the other features of the performance.

For the first time an extra event has been added to the festival program. It is to be a gigantic benefit tomorrow night for British relief in which the Boston Symphony, and the chorus and two orchestras from the music center will take part. Archibald MacLeish will be master of ceremonies, and there will be talks by Sir Louis Beale, representing Lord Lothian; Gov. Herbert H. Lehman of New York, and Miss Dorothy Thompson.

153

THIS CLIPPING FROM
N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT

AUG 15 1940

Bach Mass To Open Final Tanglewood Series Tonight

Boston Symphony Orchestra With Serge Koussevitzky as Conductor Will Play Composer's B-Minor Work at Single Concert Starting at 7 O'clock With Chorus of 200 and Soloists—Gala Benefit Program Tomorrow Evening—Dorothy Maynor to Sing Saturday—Three Symphonies Scheduled for Sunday.

Departing from the customary symphonic concert proceedure, the Boston Symphony orchestra under the direction of Conductor Serge Koussevitzky will play the B-minor mass by Bach in one concert tonight, starting at 7 o'clock instead of the usual hour of 8:30 o'clock due to the length of the work which is ordinarily divided between two successive evenings. Supplementing the orchestra will be the Festival chorus of 200 voices and Elisabeth Schumann, soprano, Viola Silva, contralto, William Hain, tenor, and Alexander Kipnis, bass, as soloists as the Berkshire Symphonic Festival presents the first concert in the third and final series of the 1940 season.

A large crowd is expected to be on hand tonight for the exceptional concert, although it is not likely that the attendance record set last week-end will be shattered. There will be an intermission of one hour at 8.30 o'clock this evening to allow the audience to enjoy a supper on the grounds of the Tanglewood estate.

Benefit Plans Complete

Tomorrow night the gala Allied Relief benefit program will be presented starting at 6 o'clock with many features including a concert by the Symphony orchestra, Strauss waltzes by the Boston Pops orchestra, an auction, a speaking program and supper on the grounds.

A large attendance is seen for this week-end at the final concerts of the final series. Crowds even surpassing the all-time record set last week-end are expected. It is estimated that 46,000 people have heard the six concerts to date. The program for the Saturday night concert which will start at the usual hour of 8.30 o'clock will open with a performance of Prokofieff's Classical symphony, Opus 25. This will be followed by the "Mathis der Maler" symphony of Paul Hindemith, who is a member of the Music Center faculty, with Mozart's concerto aria, "Bella mia fiama, addio," following for contrast.

Miss Maynor to Sing

Dorothy Maynor, "discovered" by Dr. Koussevitzky last season when she sang at a party he gave for his musicians at Tanglewood, will sing with the orchestra in a performance of Beethoven's "Adelaide," and the program will conclude with Faure's "Pelleas et Melisande" suite and Ottorino Raspighi's orchestral arrangement of Bach's Passacaglia for organ in C minor.

The Sunday afternoon program will consist of Haydn's G-major symphony, Sibelius' Seventh symphony, written as a single movement, and Braham's C minor symphony, his first.

Koussevitzkys Are Hosts

Dr. and Mrs. Koussevitzky gave a housewarming yesterday afternoon at their summer home, Seranak, Bald Head, Lenox, and a farewell tea to the faculty and students of Berkshire Music center who are leaving Tanglewood Mond[illegible]tion of the Center Institute [illegible]tra gave the conductor and Mrs. Koussevitzky a drum serenade. Among the 400 guests were Miss Ethel Barrymore who drove over to Seranak following the Berkshire Playhouse matinee at Stockbridge. Miss Alice Clapp with Mme Blanca Renard and Mary Craig, her guests at Curtis hotel; Mr. and Mrs. Lester Roberts, Carleton Smith, Mr. and Mrs. Albert Spalding and Mr. and Mrs. Gregor Piatigorsky. Mme. Piatiforsky is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Edouard de Rothschild of the Paris branch of the international family of bankers, who arrived recently at New York on a flying Clipper with $1,000.000 worth of jewels.

Tea was served on the loggia overlooking Lake Mahkeenac and Dr. Koussevitzky and Miss Barrymore spoke briefly to the group.

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN

AUG 16 1940

R. I. GOVERNOR'S PARTY ATTENDS MUSIC FESTIVAL

Vanderbilts Motor Down — Bach Mass in B Minor Heard by 7300 — Interest Keen in Festival Chorus

Tanglewood, Aug. 15—An audience which, according to the boxoffice totaled 7300 persons tonight, heard the Bach Mass in B Minor played and sung by the Boston Symphony orchestra and the Berkshire Festival chorus with Dr Serge Koussevitzky conducting.

Gov William H. Vanderbilt of Rhode Island, Mrs Vanderbilt, Misses Elsie and Anne Vanderbilt were surprise visitors. They motored down from Cricket Creek farm, South Williamstown, and occupied blue ticket seats in the front right section.

Interest was keen in the fine performance of the Berkshire Festival chorus, which has been trained by Prof G. Wallace Woodworth of Harvard and head of the Tanglewood academy under Dr Koussevitzky. Starting at 7 p. m. ~~the first half~~ of the mass was concluded at 8.30. Later comers were given a chance to proceed to their seats during two brief intermissions after the performance opened. The regular intermission lasted one hour.

This was another perfect midsummer night and the 1200 who had bought general admission tickets at $1.50 each were parked in camp chairs and on blankets "under the moon." The Great Barrington Thursday Morning club, which has the refreshment tent concession, did an enormous business.

George W. Edman, clerk of Berkshire Symphonic festival, said that only a few seats are left for the Saturday night and Sunday afternoon concerts and indications point to sellouts for both performances.

This Clipping From
HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES

AUG 16 1940

Koussevitzky Conducts Bach Mass In B Minor at Tanglewood Festival

By CARL E. LINDSTROM

It was many months ago that the spirits behind the Berkshire Symphonic Festival promised that this 1940 series was to reach its culmination in Bach's B minor Mass.

It was to seal the weeks of work at the new Music Center where members of the festival chorus have been studying the great score and rehearsing under the direction of G .Wallace Woolworth, the massed vocal and instrumental forces having been latterly shepherded by Dr. Koussevitzky in intensive conditioning.

And Thursday was the great night. As ever before the great auditorium was filled to the last seat and how many foregathered outside it was impossible to see because attendants roped off the aisles at starting time and no one was seated during the entire first half of the performance which lasted from 7 o'clock until 8:15. It was a new atmosphere entirely for Tanglewood with no interruptions of applause after solos, no reclame and none of the frenzied enthusiasm which all that happens at the Festival seems to engender. At times cigarettes were lighted here and there as if habit forgot this was a performance of sacred music. A handclap or two after the Gloria were quickly silenced.

Baffles Approach

What is to be done with the B minor Mass? A magnificent work without peer, it has always been something for musicians to talk about in whispers, but finding an approach to it has always proved baffling.

Created under circumstances that will never be duplicated and at that time hedged about by limitations that need no longer trouble music makers, it remains in the realm of the ideal and eludes complete realization. Dr. Koussevitzky with imagination and conscience consulted tradition to the extent of providing instrumental resources in harmony with the composition's origins. The concertino, or small orchestra, was grouped about the podium; a harpsichord was under the persuasions of Putnam Aldrich, the antiquated oboi d'amore played by Louis Speyer and Jean Devergie as well as the new organ, of which it can be said that the tone was most compatible with the requirements of Bach's score.

Difference in Quality

There was yet a difference between the quality of this performance and the symphonic music we have been hearing. It could not be otherwise. The Boston Orchestra, a cohesive unit of perfect technical finish functioning under a leader whose every beck and nod they are accustomed to, is one thing and a corps of singers working together for a comparatively brief period quite another. They were not routined to Koussevitzky nor he to them. And the soloists, Elisabeth Schumann, Viola Silva, William Hain and Alexander Kipnis, were under like handicaps. All were good friends of Bach but not sufficiently acquainted with each other.

Through the Kyrie and Gloria were to be heard passages of tentative choral singing with entrances blurred and untidy polyphony. These were not in themselves conspicuous but militated covertly against a feeling of cohesive mobility.

Lightness and transparency came with the choruses "Et resurrexit" and "Confiteor in unum baptisma," the latter acquiring real brilliance as well. The Sanctus was attacked with a confident power and finished with a broadly taken allargando.

Crucifixus Highlight

There were ever so many young voices and young, almost seraphic, faces. The timbre of these voices had a vibrant, penetrating beauty that was especially appealing in the soprano section.

"Dona nobis pacem" gave the Mass a soaring, expressive conclusion but the summit of the performance was reached in the Crucifixus whose ecstatic sorrow was crowned with that unforgettable modulation into G major which is the most miraculous of all cadences.

The soloists were of an artistic reputation such as to have insured a superlative result but that can scarcely be reported. Miss Schumann has in the past given much better accounts of herself as a Bach singer and Mr. Kipnis, while superb in other styles, had not the flexibility that his solos required. Mr. Hain did well with the Benedictus, but easily outstanding was the final solo of Miss Silva, the Angus Dei, which had a flowing expressiveness seldom heard in Bach singing.

During the long intermission hundreds made a picnic ground of the lawn in front of the auditorium. Seven o'clock was an early hour for Tanglewood and doubtless curtailed many a normal dinner hour. Box holders, too, opened hampers for sandwich and vacuum bottle refreshment.

There was a spirit new to Tanglewood rather different from the glamour of some of the heaven storming symphonic concerts. And it was a wholesome one, for this super-successful festival which must not be permitted to burn itself out in its own brilliance like a headlong meteor.

This Clipping From
ALBANY, N. Y.
TIMES UNION

AUG 17 1940

Masterful

Mass in B Minor Outdoors

Chorus of 250 And Orchestra At Festival

By EDGAR S. VAN OLINDA

Bach's Mass in B minor, one one of the greatest works in the whole history of sacred music, Thursday night, engaged the largest musical group yet to be heard at the Berkshire Symphonic festival. A mixed chorus of 250 voices and the Boston Symphony orchestra of some 90 men combined to occupy every inch of the enlarged stage in the music shed, but resulted in the most elaborate concert of the present season.

The concert, which began at 7 o'clock, had the appropriate setting of nature's cathedral. The golden sun, through the great trees surrounding the music shed, cast multi-colored rays over the audience not unlike those to be seen in some old world place of worship. The effect of the choir and orchestra on the stage might have been set in the chancel of that same edifice.

Too long and entirely too elaborately constructed for actual performance as a part of the church service, it rather belongs in the realm of oratorio, while following strictly the rubrics of the mass. The mastery of contraptunal writing the beauty and grace of the solos and duets, the dignity and grandeur of the choruses and richness of instrumental coloring combine to make this one of the most sublime expressions of musical genius. The four soloists were more than adequate for the music assigned them, while giving many of the first desk men in the orchestra an unusually fine chance to be heard in solo obligati.

The chorus, composed of members of the new Berkshire Music Center, was distinguished for the beautiful, fresh quality of voices and intimate acquaintance with the difficult writing. Over this great assembly, like the great Bach himself, was the firm directorial hand and mind of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky. The co-ordination of the contributing choirs of the orchestra and chorus and the spiritual atmosphere engendered by the homegeneous realization of the musical climax of Bach's prolific life in music, was an experience which comes only when that master's crowning achievement is presented.

An audience of 8,000 sat silent throughout its performance until the final chorus, when the pent-up emotions of the great audience broke out in a paen of praise for the conductor, the orchestra and the chorus.

A due regard by each integral section of performers for the work of the others disclosed mutual admiration in which the performers and audience joined in deafening applause.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES
AUG 16 1940

BACH COMPOSITION PEAK OF FESTIVAL

B Minor Mass Is Seen as the Greatest Event in History of Berkshire Concerts

7,000 IN THE AUDIENCE

Forces Koussevitzky Directed Largest Ever on Program Given at Tanglewood

By HOWARD TAUBMAN
Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 15—For sheer musical grandeur the peak of the seventh annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival was reached at Tanglewood here tonight. There was only one work on the program, but it was one of the towering masterpieces of music—Bach's Mass in B minor. It was the most ambitious and significant undertaking of the festival's history.

The forces marshaled under Serge Koussevitzky's direction tonight were the largest to appear on a festival program here. There was the Boston Symphony Orchestra to begin with. There were vocal soloists: Elizabeth Schumann, soprano; Viola Silva, mezzo-soprano; William Hain, tenor, and Alexander Kipnis, bass. There was a group of instrumental soloists: Richard Burgin, violin; Willem Valkenier, horn; Georges Laurent, flute; Louis Speyer and Jean Devergie, oboes d'amore; E. Power Biggs, organ, and Putnam Aldrich, harpsichord. There was the Berkshire Festival Chorus, which had been trained by G. Wallace Woodworth.

The appearance of the chorus was the first amalgamation of a group from this season's newly created Berkshire Music Center with the Boston Symphony in a formal festival program. In choosing the Bach Mass for the public introduction of the chorus, Mr. Koussevitzky made it clear that he had a high opinion of its capacities.

Tonight's performance, since it was the longest program undertaken by the festival, began at 7 o'clock. The first half, devoted to the Kyrie and Gloria in Excelsis, lasted well over an hour. Then there was an intermission of an hour, with the second part, consisting of the Credo, Sanctus and Agnus Dei, running until almost 11.

Many Arrive in Afternoon

The audience of about 7,000 began arriving in midafternoon. More picnic suppers were eaten on the festival grounds than at any previous concert. Most people ate theirs during the intermission, although some had part of their supper before the program began and then finished during the interval.

The good graces that look after this year's Berkshire festival hovered over tonight's proceedings. The weather was again perfection, and there were thousands on hand to watch the sun set over the formal gardens and to admire the twilight glow over Lake Makheenac and Monument Mountain in the distance.

The mass was projected with nobility of line and exaltation of spirit under Mr. Koussevitzky's illuminating and incandescent leadership. Evidently he had poured many hours of work into whipping the large company of performers into an integrated unit, and his labors had their reward. For there was no suggestion of tentativeness in this interpretation. Considering that the chorus was relatively an infant as an ensemble, it was a tremendous accomplishment.

On the chorus, more than on any other participant except the conductor, falls the burden of this crowning achievement of Bach. The cantor of Leipzig made his choir the heart and center of his conception, allotting to it music of majestic spaciousness and transcendent beauty. If the 200 young singers in the chorus did not match Bach at every turn, they did not let him down often. There were passages when their singing had the impact and passion of a professional unit of long experience. And there was a freshness in the sound of the voices that compensated for any shortcomings at other moments.

The singing by the chorus of the Qui Tollis, which is music of transfiguring pathos, was traversed with penetrating feeling. The closing chorus of the Gloria—Cum sancto spiritu—which is Bach of the vast and sublime architecture, went with a fullness of tone and expression. Mr. Woodworth may take credit for a fine job of training the chorus.

Fine Singing by Soloists

The vocalists were a well-met foursome. Although their background and experience in the B Minor mass may stem from different sources, their efforts were of a piece. Each had a command of the style. Miss Silva, who has more to do in the mass than the others, sang with opulence of voice. Miss Schumann used her limited tones with exquisite effect. Mr. Hain has developed into a splendid oratorio singer. And Mr. Kipnis has always been a master of the grand vocal line.

The orchestra played with rare finesse. Too often in performances of this work the instrumental ensemble is a makeshift group, brought together for the one performance. Tonight the members of the Boston Symphony gave the reading an underpinning of subtle and enchanting tone. The instrumental soloists were particularly rewarding.

It should be noted that one instrument had its maiden appearance tonight. The organ, which was built with funds granted by the Carnegie Foundation, was played in public for the first time. Its tone was mellow and it sounded well in the music shed.

Bravos Are Given

The audience responded to tonight's brilliant performance with intent and silent attention, saving its tributes of applause and bravos for the end of each half. Then conductor, soloists, chorus and orchestra shared in the plaudits.

To those who came from afar to hear this interpretation of a unique and abiding masterwork, it seemed a pity that it should be folded up and put away after one performance. The hope was expressed that—since it could not be repeated this year—it would be returned to the festival programs next season. It is recreations like these that give a festival its most cogent excuse for being.

It was announced that tomorrow's elaborate manifestation in behalf of the British cause would have an additional speaker. He will be Sir Louis Beale, Commissioner General for Britain at the World's Fair. He will bring a message from Lord Lothian, British Ambassador to the United States. The other speakers will be Governor Herbert H. Lehman of New York and Miss Dorothy Thompson, with Archibald Macleish presiding.

The large numbers of volunteers who have striven valiantly to make tomorrow's benefit for the Allied relief fund a smashing success prayed for only one more kindness, and that was the continuing smiles of the weather man.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM
AUG 16 1940

Bach's Mass in B Minor Played at Tanglewood

By PITTS SANBORN.

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 16.—Opening the final series of concerts of this summer's Berkshire Symphonic Festival last evening Bach's Mass in B Minor gave further proof of its growth in popular favor. Not many years ago an exceeding rarity in our concert rooms and known only to a chosen few, this mighty work has now become almost daily bread. And this performance, half in the open air in the Tanglewood shed, like the performances we have in New York and Newark, was unabridged.

Besides the Boston Symphonic Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky conducting, the participants included the Berkshire Chorus, of which G. Wallace Woodworth is the regular conductor, and as vocal soloist, Elizabeth Schuman, soprano; Viola Silva, contralto; William Hain, tenor, and Alexander Kipnis, bass.

The Mass was given in two parts, the first at 7, the second at 9:30, with a generous intermission between. Unfortunately after darkness had fallen there was no artificial light in the part of the shed where the great audience was seated, and consequently one could not follow the text of the Mass, let alone a score. This was an important obstacle to enjoyment.

The performance was earnest and dignified throughout and in parts impressive. The chorus, though it has good material, lacks experience as a unified body, managed very beautifully the diminuendo of the Sepultus Est, and the ensuing Et Resurrexit had due dramatic impact. Here the orchestral performance possessed unusual solidity and force.

Of the soloists Mr. Hain carried off first honors in spite of some uneveness of vocal production. The clearness of his enunciation and his admirable treatment of both vowels and consonants stood mightily in his favor.

Miss Silva displayed an uncommonly good voice and Mme. Schumann is an artist of great experience. Although Mr. Kipnis sang with great care and lofty expression, his voice is unsuited to the Tessitura of his part.

Among the featured instrumentalists Putnam Aldrich, at the harpsichord, and Richard Burgin, concert master of the orchestra, and solo violinist, deserve especially cordial praise.

At the conclusion of the Mass the audience gave the performance ovation after ovation, bestowing the most tremendous one of all on Messrs. Koussevitzky and Woodworth when they appeared together to take bows.

The Goldman Band.

Conductor, Edwin Franko Goldman.
Tonight at 8:30.
The Mall, Central Park.

Grand March in F	Fletcher
Overture, Halka	Moniuszko
Russian Folksong Suite	Liadov
Elsa Entering the Cathedral	Wagner
Waltz, Liebeslieder	Strauss
Trio, Echo Waltz (Messrs. Smith, Elsass and Mahoney)	Goldman
Handel in the Strand	Grainger
Christmas March	Goldman
Grand March, University	Goldman

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
SUN
AUG 16 1940

BACH'S B MINOR BY KOUSSEVITZKY

Performance at Berkshire Festival Is Memorable.

By IRVING KOLODIN.
Special Dispatch to THE SUN.

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 16.—The Berkshire festival reached a new height of musical accomplishment here last night with the first performance in its history of Bach's B Minor Mass, under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky. This is the kind of performance on which great traditions of fine festivals are built, and if the management can see its way to establishing this as an annual, or biennial event, there will be further reason for pleading the cause of this enterprise.

The pleading, incidentally, will be done not only by Bachians. The least of Mr. Koussevitzky's accomplishments was the demonstration that there is more music in this work than is dreamed of by those earnest souls. With the Boston Symphony Orchestra as a basis, and such vocalists as Elisabeth Schumann, soprano, Viola Silva, alto, William Hain, tenor, and Alexander Kipnis, bass, added to the Berkshire festival chorus, this became an experience in pure musical joy, whether one is a partisan for the Mass or not. Phrases were shaped and strengthened, instrumental details explored, dynamics mated and contrasted as one has not heard them in recent metropolitan performances of this score.

Perfection Not Reached.

This is not to imply that Mr. Koussevitzky said the last word in the projection of the work, for a great reading of so vast a score is not perfected in, so to speak, one sitting. The chorus (an offshoot of the music center) had never sung the work before, and there were some sections (especially the "Cum Sanctu Spiritu") which would have benefited from more thrust and assurance. Moreover, the smoothening that comes to an ensemble after the first rough contact with an audience was not permitted to this one.

But the endless creativeness of Mr. Koussevitzky's conducting, the fastidious phrasing of all the instrumental soloists, the general excellence of chorus and vocal quartet, were ample to uplift not only the spirit of this listener, but of the other 7,300 who listened with absorbed attentiveness.

It was a particular pleasure to hear the art of Mme. Schumann so extensively explored as her part in this performance permitted. Her singing in the "Christie Eleison" was neither as easy nor as accurate as one expected. But her voice developed in responsiveness as the evening progressed, to the end of splendid results in the "Domine Deus" and "Et In Unum Dominum."

Kipnis Solo Brilliant.

As for Mr. Kipnis, one has rarely heard the two bass solos delivered with comparable sonority, richness and warmth. The "Et In Spiritum Sanctum" was both a brilliant feat of virtuosity, and a touching act of faith.

Miss Silva's dependable artistry has been frequently commended in the past, and deserved fresh acknowledgment again last night. Her "Qui Sedes" was finely sober and, save for some difficulty with the embellishments, firmly vocalized. As for Mr. Hain, he is a veteran of this work, from whom a thoroughly musical performance may always be expected. He did not disappoint.

Considering the length of the performance (it began at 7:15, with an hour's intermission at 8:30), the conduct of the audience was no small element in the success of the evening. All but a negligible fraction was in its seats when the performance began, and it preserved model silence to the end of each half; then its applause was as eloquent as its attention had been. It even supported an inexplicable shortage of sandwiches in the commissary with a minimum of grumbling.

This Clipping From SALT LAKE CITY, UTAH
TRIBUNE
AUG 25 1940

Coop Enjoys Bach Mass At Festival

More than 6000 persons heard the performance of Bach's Mass in B minor offered at the Tanglewood estate near Lenox, Mass., as a feature of the Berkshire Symphonic festival's third week, under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky, according to press reports. A festival chorus collaborated with the Boston Symphony orchestra, with such solo artists as Elisabeth Schumann, soprano; Viola Silva, contralto; William Hain, tenor, and Alexander Kipnis, basso of the Metropolitan.

The exceptional nature of the event was marked by the fact many among this vast audience attending came from considerable distance. Among these was Squire Coop, Salt Lake City's own noted choral conductor. A Lenox writer noted that "The management reported that one Bach enthusiast had come from Salt Lake City in order to hear this immortal masterpiece of religious music," whose performance, according to this critic, had "the general artistic standard and expressive content . . . worthy of such a work," with "fluctuations of tonal merit," noted.

This B minor Mass is the Bach number that the Salt Lake Oratorio society will prepare this coming season for presentation at some future date. Mr. Coop returned late this week to Salt Lake, and will hold auditions for those wishing to try out for solo parts in the annual production of "The Messiah" by the oratorio society.

This Clipping From
NEW BEDFORD, MASS.
STANDARD TIMES
AUG 18 1940

MUSIC FESTIVAL HEARS SOPRANA

Dorothy Maynor Is Soloist With Symphony

STOCKBRIDGE, Aug. 17 (AP)—Tonight was a homecoming for one of America's finest young artists, the soprano Dorothy Maynor.

Exactly a year ago Miss Maynor came to Tanglewood to hear the Boston Symphony in the now famous "Music Shed," which houses its Berkshire Symphonic Festival.

Through a set of odd circumstances, she was asked to sing at the picnic Serge Koussevitzky gives each year for his players—and her career began there.

Tonight Miss Maynor sang twice with the orchestra on this next to last program of the current festival, offering the Mozart concert aria "Bella Mia Fiama, Addio" and Beethoven's "Adelaide,"

Dr. Koussevitzky chose music of widely differing styles, including one work by Paul Hindemith, the former German composer who has taught this Summer in Koussevitzky's Berkshire Music Center here. This was Hindemith's so-called symphony, "Mathis der Maler."

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE
AUG 31 1940

Festival Membership Lists For 1941 Concerts More Than Two-Thirds Filled

Berkshire Symphonic Festival trustees today announced that the membership lists for the 1941 concerts at Tanglewood by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky, conductor, were more than two-thirds filled. Never before have memberships been in such demand, the trustees said.

Since the limit on the number of memberships has been set at 1500 for each of the three series and 4500 for a total, the indications points to the limit's being reached before the deadline of Nov. 1, according to the trustees. In announcing the membership plan for 1941, they stipulated that if the limit should be reached before Nov. 1, the lists would be closed.

The memberships received to date are evenly divided among the three series. More than 1000 have been received for each of the three.

Under the membership plan, persons obtain tickets at a reduced rate, have the privilege of keeping seat locations held this year and of attending a rehearsal of the orchestra during the Festival period. When the membership limit has been reached subscriptions will be accepted.

There is just as much activity among the patrons, about 90 boxes having been taken for next year. Boxes are being taken for the most part for all three series.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES
AUG 16 1940

BACH COMPOSITION PEAK OF FESTIVAL

B Minor Mass Is Seen as the Greatest Event in History of Berkshire Concerts

7,000 IN THE AUDIENCE

Forces Koussevitzky Directed Largest Ever on Program Given at Tanglewood

By HOWARD TAUBMAN

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 15—For sheer musical grandeur the peak of the seventh annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival was reached at Tanglewood here tonight. There was only one work on the program, but it was one of the towering masterpieces of music—Bach's Mass in B minor. It was the most ambitious and significant undertaking of the festival's history.

The forces marshaled under Serge Koussevitzky's direction tonight were the largest to appear on a festival program here. There was the Boston Symphony Orchestra to begin with. There were vocal soloists: Elizabeth Schumann, soprano; Viola Silva, mezzo-soprano; William Hain, tenor, and Alexander Kipnis, bass. There was a group of instrumental soloists: Richard Burgin, violin; Willem Valkenier, horn; Georges Laurent, flute; Louis Speyer and Jean Devergie, oboes d'amore; E. Power Biggs, organ, and Putnam Aldrich, harpsichord. There was the Berkshire Festival Chorus, which had been trained by G. Wallace Woodworth.

The appearance of the chorus was the first amalgamation of a group from this season's newly created Berkshire Music Center with the Boston Symphony in a formal festival program. In choosing the Bach Mass for the public introduction of the chorus, Mr. Koussevitzky made it clear that he had a high opinion of its capacities.

Tonight's performance, since it was the longest program undertaken by the festival, began at 7 o'clock. The first half, devoted to the Kyrie and Gloria in Excelsis, lasted well over an hour. Then there was an intermission of an hour, with the second part, consisting of the Credo, Sanctus and Agnus Dei, running until almost 11.

Many Arrive in Afternoon

The audience of about 7,000 began arriving in midafternoon. More picnic suppers were eaten on the festival grounds than at any previous concert. Most people ate theirs during the intermission, although some had part of their supper before the program began and then finished during the interval.

The good graces that look after this year's Berkshire festival hovered over tonight's proceedings. The weather was again perfection, and there were thousands on hand to watch the sun set over the formal gardens and to admire the twilight glow over Lake Makheenac and Monument Mountain in the distance.

The mass was projected with nobility of line and exaltation of spirit under Mr. Koussevitzky's illuminating and incandescent leadership. Evidently he had poured many hours of work into whipping the large company of performers into an integrated unit, and his labors had their reward. For there was no suggestion of tentativeness in this interpretation. Considering that the chorus was relatively an infant as an ensemble, it was a tremendous accomplishment.

On the chorus, more than on any other participant except the conductor, falls the burden of this crowning achievement of Bach. The cantor of Leipzig made his choir the heart and center of his conception, allotting to it music of majestic spaciousness and transcendent beauty. If the 200 young singers in the chorus did not match Bach at every turn, they did not let him down often. There were passages when their singing had the impact and passion of a professional unit of long experience. And there was a freshness in the sound of the voices that compensated for any shortcomings at other moments.

The singing by the chorus of the Qui Tollis, which is music of transfiguring pathos, was traversed with penetrating feeling. The closing chorus of the Gloria—Cum sancto spiritu—which is Bach of the vast and sublime architecture, went with a fullness of tone and expression. Mr. Woodworth may take credit for a fine job of training the chorus.

Fine Singing by Soloists

The vocalists were a well-met foursome. Although their background and experience in the B Minor mass may stem from different sources, their efforts were of a piece. Each had a command of the style. Miss Silva, who has more to do in the mass than the others, sang with opulence of voice. Miss Schumann used her limited tones with exquisite effect. Mr. Hain has developed into a splendid oratorio singer. And Mr. Kipnis has always been a master of the grand vocal line.

The orchestra played with rare finesse. Too often in performances of this work the instrumental ensemble is a makeshift group, brought together for the one performance. Tonight the members of the Boston Symphony gave the reading an underpinning of subtle and enchanting tone. The instrumental soloists were particularly rewarding.

It should be noted that one instrument had its maiden appearance tonight. The organ, which was built with funds granted by the Carnegie Foundation, was played in public for the first time. Its tone was mellow and it sounded well in the music shed.

Bravos Are Given

The audience responded to tonight's brilliant performance with intent and silent attention, saving its tributes of applause and bravos for the end of each half. Then conductor, soloists, chorus and orchestra shared in the plaudits.

To those who came from afar to hear this interpretation of a unique and abiding masterwork, it seemed a pity that it should be folded up and put away after one performance. The hope was expressed that—since it could not be repeated this year—it would be returned to the festival programs next season. It is recreations like these that give a festival its most cogent excuse for being.

It was announced that tomorrow's elaborate manifestation in behalf of the British cause would have an additional speaker. He will be Sir Louis Beale, Commissioner General for Britain at the World's Fair. He will bring a message from Lord Lothian, British Ambassador to the United States. The other speakers will be Governor Herbert H. Lehman of New York and Miss Dorothy Thompson, with Archibald Macleish presiding.

The large numbers of volunteers who have striven valiantly to make tomorrow's benefit for the Allied relief fund a smashing success prayed for only one more kindness, and that was the continuing smiles of the weather man.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM
AUG 16 1940

Bach's Mass in B Minor Played at Tanglewood

By PITTS SANBORN.

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 16.—Opening the final series of concerts of this summer's Berkshire Symphonic Festival last evening Bach's Mass in B Minor gave further proof of its growth in popular favor. Not many years ago an exceeding rarity in our concert rooms and known only to a chosen few, this mighty work has now become almost daily bread. And this performance, half in the open air in the Tanglewood shed, like the performances we have in New York and Newark, was unabridged.

Besides the Boston Symphonic Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky conducting, the participants included the Berkshire Chorus, of which G. Wallace Woodworth is the regular conductor, and as vocal soloist, Elizabeth Schuman, soprano; Viola Silva, contralto; William Hain, tenor, and Alexander Kipnis, bass.

The Mass was given in two parts, the first at 7, the second at 9:30, with a generous intermission between. Unfortunately after darkness had fallen there was no artificial light in the part of the shed where the great audience was seated, and consequently one could not follow the text of the Mass, let alone a score. This was an important obstacle to enjoyment.

The performance was earnest and dignified throughout and in parts impressive. The chorus, though it has good material, lacks experience as a unified body, managed very beautifully the diminuendo of the Sepultus Est, and the ensuing Et Resurrexit had due dramatic impact. Here the orchestral performance possessed unusual solidity and force.

Of the soloists Mr. Hain carried off first honors in spite of some uneveness of vocal production. The clearness of his enunciation and his admirable treatment of both vowels and consonants stood mightily in his favor.

Miss Silva displayed an uncommonly good voice and Mme. Schumann is an artist of great experience. Although Mr. Kipnis sang with great care and lofty expression, his voice is unsuited to the Tessitura of his part.

Among the featured instrumentalists Putnam Aldrich, at the harpsichord, and Richard Burgin, concert master of the orchestra, and solo violinist, deserve especially cordial praise.

At the conclusion of the Mass the audience gave the performance ovation after ovation, bestowing the most tremendous one of all on Messrs. Koussevitzky and Woodworth when they appeared together to take bows.

The Goldman Band.
Conductor, Edwin Franko Goldman.
Tonight at 8:30.
The Mall, Central Park.

Grand March in F	Fletcher
Overture, Halka	Moniuszko
Russian Folksong Suite	Liadov
Elsa Entering the Cathedral	Wagner
Waltz, Liebeslieder	Strauss
Trio, Echo Waltz (Messrs. Smith, Elsass and Mahoney)	Goldman
Handel in the Strand	Grainger
Christmas March	Goldman
Grand March, University	Goldman

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
SUN
AUG 16 1940

BACH'S B MINOR BY KOUSSEVITZKY

Performance at Berkshire Festival Is Memorable.

By IRVING KOLODIN.

Special Dispatch to THE SUN.

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 16.—The Berkshire festival reached a new height of musical accomplishment here last night with the first performance in its history of Bach's B Minor Mass, under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky. This is the kind of performance on which great traditions of fine festivals are built, and if the management can see its way to establishing this as an annual, or biennial event, there will be further reason for pleading the cause of this enterprise.

The pleading, incidentally, will be done not only by Bachians. The least of Mr. Koussevitzky's accomplishments was the demonstration that there is more music in this work than is dreamed of by those earnest souls. With the Boston Symphony Orchestra as a basis, and such vocalists as Elisabeth Schumann, soprano, Viola Silva, alto, William Hain, tenor, and Alexander Kipnis, bass, added to the Berkshire festival chorus, this became an experience in pure musical joy, whether one is a partisan for the Mass or not. Phrases were shaped and strengthened, instrumental details explored, dynamics mated and contrasted as one has not heard them in recent metropolitan performances of this score.

Perfection Not Reached.

This is not to imply that Mr. Koussevitzky said the last word in the projection of the work, for a great reading of so vast a score is not perfected in, so to speak, one sitting. The chorus (an offshoot of the music center) had never sung the work before, and there were some sections (especially the "Cum Sanctu Spiritu") which would have benefited from more thrust and assurance. Moreover, the smoothening that comes to an ensemble after the first rough contact with an audience was not permitted to this one.

But the endless creativeness of Mr. Koussevitzky's conducting, the fastidious phrasing of all the instrumental soloists, the general excellence of chorus and vocal quartet, were ample to uplift not only the spirit of this listener, but of the other 7,300 who listened with absorbed attentiveness.

It was a particular pleasure to hear the art of Mme. Schumann so extensively explored as her part in this performance permitted. Her singing in the "Christie Eleison" was neither as easy nor as accurate as one expected. But her voice developed in responsiveness as the evening progressed, to the end of splendid results in the "Domine Deus" and "Et In Unum Dominum."

Kipnis Solo Brilliant.

As for Mr. Kipnis, one has rarely heard the two bass solos delivered with comparable sonority, richness and warmth. The "Et In Spiritum Sanctum" was both a brilliant feat of virtuosity, and a touching act of faith.

Miss Silva's dependable artistry has been frequently commended in the past, and deserved fresh acknowledgment again last night. Her "Qui Sedes" was finely sober and, save for some difficulty with the embellishments, firmly vocalized. As for Mr. Hain, he is a veteran of this work, from whom a thoroughly musical performance may always be expected. He did not disappoint.

Considering the length of the performance (it began at 7:15, with an hour's intermission at 8:30), the conduct of the audience was no small element in the success of the evening. All but a negligible fraction was in its seats when the performance began, and it preserved model silence to the end of each half; then its applause was as eloquent as its attention had been. It even supported an inexplicable shortage of sandwiches in the commissary with a minimum of grumbling.

This Clipping From
SALT LAKE CITY, UTAH
TRIBUNE
AUG 25 1940

Coop Enjoys Bach Mass At Festival

More than 6000 persons heard the performance of Bach's Mass in B minor offered at the Tanglewood estate near Lenox, Mass., as a feature of the Berkshire Symphonic festival's third week, under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky, according to press reports. A festival chorus collaborated with the Boston Symphony orchestra, with such solo artists as Elisabeth Schumann, soprano; Viola Silva, contralto; William Hain, tenor, and Alexander Kipnis, basso of the Metropolitan.

The exceptional nature of the event was marked by the fact many among this vast audience attending came from considerable distance. Among these was Squire Coop, Salt Lake City's own noted choral conductor. A Lenox writer noted that "The management reported that one Bach enthusiast had come from Salt Lake City in order to hear this immortal masterpiece of religious music," whose performance, according to this critic, had "the general artistic standard and expressive content . . . worthy of such a work," with "fluctuations of tonal merit," noted.

This B minor Mass is the Bach number that the Salt Lake Oratorio society will prepare this coming season for presentation at some future date. Mr. Coop returned late this week to Salt Lake, and will hold auditions for those wishing to try out for solo parts in the annual production of "The Messiah" by the oratorio society.

This Clipping From
NEW BEDFORD, MASS.
STANDARD TIMES
AUG 18 1940

MUSIC FESTIVAL HEARS SOPRANA

Dorothy Maynor Is Soloist With Symphony

STOCKBRIDGE, Aug. 17 (AP)—Tonight was a homecoming for one of America's finest young artists, the soprano Dorothy Maynor.

Exactly a year ago Miss Maynor came to Tanglewood to hear the Boston Symphony in the now famous "Music Shed," which houses its Berkshire Symphonic Festival.

Through a set of odd circumstances, she was asked to sing at the picnic Serge Koussevitzky gives each year for his players—and her career began there.

Tonight Miss Maynor sang twice with the orchestra on this next to last program of the current festival, offering the Mozart concert aria "Bella Mia Fiama, Addio" and Beethoven's "Adelaide,"

Dr. Koussevitzky chose music of widely differing styles, including one work by Paul Hindemith, the former German composer who has taught this Summer in Koussevitzky's Berkshire Music Center here. This was Hindemith's so-called symphony, "Mathis der Maler."

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE
AUG 31 1940

Festival Membership Lists For 1941 Concerts More Than Two-Thirds Filled

Berkshire Symphonic Festival trustees today announced that the membership lists for the 1941 concerts at Tanglewood by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky, conductor, were more than two-thirds filled. Never before have memberships been in such demand, the trustees said.

Since the limit on the number of memberships has been set at 1500 for each of the three series and 4500 for a total, the indications points to the limit's being reached before the deadline of Nov. 1, according to the trustees. In announcing the membership plan for 1941, they stipulated that if the limit should be reached before Nov. 1, the lists would be closed.

The memberships received to date are evenly divided among the three series. More than 1000 have been received for each of the three.

Under the membership plan, persons obtain tickets at a reduced rate, have the privilege of keeping seat locations held this year and of attending a rehearsal of the orchestra during the Festival period. When the membership limit has been reached subscriptions will be accepted.

There is just as much activity among the patrons, about 90 boxes having been taken for next year. Boxes are being taken for the most part for all three series.

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
EVENING UNION
AUG 16 1940

B MINOR MASS BY BACH GIVEN IN TANGLEWOOD

Monumental Work Heard by Huge Audience; School Chorus Presented

By Willard M. Clark

STOCKBRIDGE, Aug. 15— Impressive and convincing was the performance of the monumental B Minor Mass by Bach which opened the third series of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival in Tanglewood. Another huge audience was present and manifested its pleasure in no uncertain terms.

School Chorus Presented

The performance served to introduce for the first time the music school chorus which had been trained by G. Wallace Woodworth. It was a chorus of some 300 young people with voices fresh and vibrant and what was lacking in sheer brilliance and punch was made up in enthusiasm and perfect understanding of what they were singing.

The soloists were Elisabeth Schumann and Viola Silva, sopranos; William Hain, tenor, and Alexander Kipnis, bass. Instrumental soloists were Richard Burgin, violinist; Willem Valkenier, horn; Georges Laurent, flute; Louis Speyer and Jean Devergie, oboi d'amore; E. Power Biggs, organist, and Putnam Aldrich at the harpsichord.

There were moments of real power in the choral singing but it seemed that Dr. Serge Koussevitzky realized the limitations of the young voices and he held the orchestra down, except for certain passages, and this increased their drama. The chorus was well balanced. The sopranos were able to negotiate the trying tessitura. There was solidity in the bass section.

One need only hear this great work to disabuse oneself of any idea that Bach was cold and academic. The opening Kyrie with its stupendous cry is as dramatic as the despairing "Help Lord," of Mendelssohn's "Elijah," and identical in its significance. Mmes. Schumann and Silver sang charmingly the duet "Christe Eleison," the voices blending well.

Sings Effectively

The "gloria" stands in brilliant apposition to the Kyrie, the eight movements beginning and ending in a blaze of jubilation. It is music which breathes freshness and joy. This mood is carried into the solo "Laudamus Te," which Miss Silver sang effectively. The violin obligato by Burgin was exquisite, and one will not soon forget the blaze of trumpets in the final chorus "Cum Saboto Spiritu." The duet, "Domine Deus," sung by Mme. Schumann and Mr. Hain, was more than the vocal exercise it might become in less skilled hands. Again in the solo "Qui Sedes" with oboi d'amore solo, Miss Silver revealed her command of style, but it was in the final "Agnus Dei" that she accomplished her finest singing.

All but two movements of the credo are choruses, but it includes the magnificent bass solo "Et in spiritum," and Mr. Kipnis gave to it as strongly an individualized reading as he did to the "Quoniam tu solus sanctus." There was more than a touch of the theater in his interpretations.

The "sanctus" stands alone in its nobility, a movement of overwhelming sublimity. The only tenor aria, "Benedictus qui venit," was finely sung by Mr. Hain, who with Miss Silver seemed far more at home in the work than either Mme. Schumann or Mr. Kipnis.

The last division of the mass consists of two numbers, the first movement of the "Agnus Dei" is the solo and the final movement is the chorus "Dona nobis pacem." Bach does not use fresh music for these words but repeats the "Gratias agimus." Thus a prayer for peace is converted into an act of fervent and restrained thanksgiving.

It would seem that Bach never intended this mass to be sung in surroundings which demand ritual observance and its great length and some of the text prohibit it ever being sung in a Catholic church. Two reasons appear for his writing of this mass. First, it appears to be an expression of his Christian idealism, neither Catholic nor Protestant, and secondly, it may have been the result of his desire to create a clearly pictured design or a desire to express himself in an art form which he had studied in others.

The new Bach organ was used in this performance. Most of the time it could not be heard and when it was audible, its pitch was inaccurate. The virtuosi of the Boston Symphony Orchestra played magnificently and especially notable was the solo of the flautist, Georges Laurent, before the duet, "Domine Deus." Dr. Koussevitsky's tempi provided for a swift moving performance. Nor should one overlook the expert achievement of horn playing by Willem Valkenier in the taxing solo, the "Quoniam," with its wide leaps and trills.

It was recently reported in the press that next season the Saturday concerts would be given in the afternoon. Officials of the festival say flatly that no such decision has been made and that members of both boards would be against giving up the Saturday night concerts, as they have proven very popular. Nine concerts will be given next season.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM
AUG 19 1940

Dorothy Maynor Is Soloist as Berkshire Festival Ends

By PITTS SANBORN.

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 19.—For the last two concerts of this summer's Berkshire Symphonic Festival there was a return to traditional symphonic procedure. The Saturday evening program provided four orchestral numbers—Prokofieff's Classical Symphony. The symphony derived from Hindemith's Opera, Mathis Der Maler, the suite, made up of three excerpts from the incidental music composed by Gabriel Faure for Maeterlinck's drama, Pelleas et Melisande, and Respighi's orchestral arrangement of the Bach Passacaglia for organ. There was also a soloist, the much discussed Negro soprano Dorothy Maynor, who was brought into prominence at last year's Berkshire Festival.

Midway in the concert she was heard in Mozart's Concert Aria Bella Mia Fiamma, Addio and Beethoven's song Adelaide.

The little Prokofieff Symphony has long been a specialty of Mr. Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony. On this occasion it was played with all the imaginable proficiency and esprit. Then there was a superb performance of Hindemith's music, to which the composer accorded his personal recognition by coming out after it to congratulate conductor and orchestra and to bow many times.

• • •

Pattern Stands Out.

The symphony itself—the three movements are respectively Angelic Concert, Entombment and Temptation of Saint Anthony, depicting panels of the Isenheim altar piece at Colmar—frowns on the listener with repetition. The pattern of the music stands out more and more clearly, as well as its thematic character, and the instrumental coloring discloses further richness and splendor. Admirers of Hindemith's St. Francis ballet are sure to find satisfaction in Mathis Der Maler.

No need exists for comparing Faure's Pelleas music with Debussy's. The Faure score, which antedates Debussy's, is delicate and atmospheric as it ought to be, and nobody should object to the compliment paid Wagner. The Boston forces did complete justice to it. In conclusion they made the welkin ring with the Bach-Respighi sonorities.

Miss Maynor sang the Mozart Aria carefully but without by any means exhausting its possibilities. She seemed bent on giving forth her beautiful voice only in its softer brackets. This was still more apparent in Adelaide, which she turned for the most part into a crooner's delight. The enormous audience recalled her many times and some of its members seemed bound she should sing Spirituals. She stuck to the rules of the game, however, adding nothing to her printed list.

At yesterday's concluding concert, in the afternoon, three Symphonies constituted the program—Haydn's in G Minor, No. 88; the Seventh of Sibelius and the first of Brahms. The arrangement was shrewd. After the Eighteenth-Century clearness and order of Haydn came the fascinating and still problematic work by Sibelius. No more fitting choice could have been made for a grand finale for the entire Festival than the First of Brahms.

• • •

Fluent Reading.

The Haydn Symphony exhibited well the vivacity and polish of which the Bostonians are capable. One could scarcely imagine a more fluent and finely articulated setting forth. Yet, in spite of this super-excellent performance and the technical splendor of the Brahms, the high point of the afternoon was reserved for Sibelius.

His Seventh Symphony, in one movement, he thought first of calling a Fantasia Sinfonica, and many of his admirers, among them Ernest Newman, agree with the composer's intention by regarding it as rather a symphonic poem than a symphony in the true sense. On the other hand, that Prophet-In-Chief of Sibelius, Cecil Gray, insists on its authentically symphonic character.

The total attendance at the nine concerts constituting the Festival, plus the audiences that heard the three partly public rehearsals and the Allied Relief Benefit, was approximately 88,000.

THIS CLIPPING FROM UTICA, N. Y.
PRESS
AUG 19 1940

Koussevitzky's Pre-War Dream Realized in Berkshire Center

By JOHN SELBY

Stockbridge, Mass.—(AP)—There never has been a music school quite like the one functioning now under the tall trees of Tanglewood, the Boston Symphony Orchestra's handsome estate between Stockbridge and Lenox.

For one thing, 340 students have as their general director Serge Koussevitsky, who spends his winters directing the Boston Symphony, which has been called the finest orchestra the world has known. Dr. Koussevitsky no less than another famous conductor, Arturo Toscanini, is a perfectionist. If anything can be improved, Dr. Koussevitsky won't present it until it has been improved.

A Dream Come True

The Berkshire Music Center is a dream walking.

It began back in opulent pre-war Russia, when Dr. Koussevitsky had money to do things in the grand style of the period. He wanted a school of music for Moscow, wherein all teachers should be as careful as he was, and all students the cream of the crop. But the war killed it, the revolution took much of the money, and Dr. Koussevitsky came to America.

The second attempt also was under a depressing and malignant star — in 1929 and in White Plains, N. Y. Money ran out once more.

Half Turned Away

Now, in still another war year, Dr. Koussevitsky has exactly what he dreamed of for three decades, here in the Berkshire Hills. It turned out to be exactly what hundreds of the best student material wanted, also. So many applied that only half could be accepted.

Chiefly, the music center is unusual because of its teaching plan and the caliber of its teachers.

Dr. Koussevitsky believed his school should be divided so that it could give intensive training to musicians of first grade, who intended to make a life work of it. About a third of the student body is in that class.

Again He Was Right

But he felt also that schools ignored many persons of intelligence and musical experience who had no thought of making a living out of music, but who would like to re-establish contact with it for a summer, live in the midst of music, and practice the art to the limit of their ability. Again he was right; two thirds of the music center's students are in that class.

So he tailored the course of study to fit.

Five of the advanced students he has accepted for personal coaching in the art of conducting — a privilege dozens of American youths would have given their upper teeth for. Dr. Herbert Graf has a small theater of his own in which he coaches 80-odd pupils in operatic interpretation. Aaron Copland and Paul Hindemith have accepted a few pupils to study composition. G. Wallace Woodworth has a small class in choral conducting.

60 in Advanced Orchestra

There is an advanced orchestra of 60 players.

A chorus of about 200 voices for less advanced students, a less advanced orchestra, a welter of lectures and chamber music performances — even dancing for those who want it.

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
EVENING UNION
AUG 1 6 1940

B MINOR MASS BY BACH GIVEN IN TANGLEWOOD

Monumental Work Heard by Huge Audience; School Chorus Presented

By Willard M. Clark

STOCKBRIDGE, Aug. 15— Impressive and convincing was the performance of the monumental B Minor Mass by Bach which opened the third series of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival in Tanglewood. Another huge audience was present and manifested its pleasure in no uncertain terms.

School Chorus Presented

The performance served to introduce for the first time the music school chorus which had been trained by G. Wallace Woodworth. It was a chorus of some 300 young people with voices fresh and vibrant and what was lacking in sheer brilliance and punch was made up in enthusiasm and perfect understanding of what they were singing.

The soloists were Elisabeth Schumann and Viola Silva, sopranos; William Hain, tenor, and Alexander Kipnis, bass. Instrumental soloists were Richard Burgin, violinist; Willem Valkenier, horn; Georges Laurent, flute; Louis Speyer and Jean Devergie, oboi d'amore; E. Power Biggs, organist, and Putnam Aldrich at the harpsichord.

There were moments of real power in the choral singing but it seemed that Dr. Serge Koussevitzky realized the limitations of the young voices and he held the orchestra down, except for certain passages, and this increased their drama. The chorus was well balanced. The sopranos were able to negotiate the trying tessitura. There was solidity in the bass section.

One need only hear this great work to disabuse oneself of any idea that Bach was cold and academic. The opening Kyrie with its stupendous cry is as dramatic as the despairing "Help Lord," of Mendelssohn's "Elijah," and identical in its significance. Mmes. Schumann and Silver sang charmingly the duet "Christe Eleison," the voices blending well.

Sings Effectively

The "gloria" stands in brilliant apposition to the Kyrie, the eight movements beginning and ending in a blaze of jubilation. It is music which breathes freshness and joy. This mood is carried into the solo "Laudamus Te," which Miss Silver sang effectively. The violin obligato by Burgin was exquisite, and one will not soon forget the blaze of trumpets in the final chorus "Cum Saboto Spiritu." The duet, "Domine Deus," sung by Mme. Schumann and Mr. Hain, was more than the vocal exercise it might become in less skilled hands. Again in the solo "Qui Sedes" with oboi d'amore solo, Miss Silver revealed her command of style, but it was in the final "Agnus Dei" that she accomplished her finest singing.

All but two movements of the credo are choruses, but it includes the magnificent bass solo "Et in spiritum," and Mr. Kipnis gave to it as strongly an individualized reading as he did to the "Quoniam tu solus sanctus." There was more than a touch of the theater in his interpretations.

The "sanctus" stands alone in its nobility, a movement of overwhelming sublimity. The only tenor aria, "Benedictus qui venit," was finely sung by Mr. Hain, who with Miss Silver seemed far more at home in the work than either Mme. Schumann or Mr. Kipnis.

The last division of the mass consists of two numbers, the first movement of the "Agnus Dei" is the solo and the final movement is the chorus "Dona nobis pacem." Bach does not use fresh music for these words but repeats the "Gratias agimus." Thus a prayer for peace is converted into an act of fervent and restrained thanksgiving.

It would seem that Bach never intended this mass to be sung in surroundings which demand ritual observance and its great length and some of the text prohibit it ever being sung in a Catholic church. Two reasons appear for his writing of this mass. First, it appears to be an expression of his Christian idealism, neither Catholic nor Protestant, and secondly, it may have been the result of his desire to create a clearly pictured design or a desire to express himself in an art form which he had studied in others.

The new Bach organ was used in this performance. Most of the time it could not be heard and when it was audible, its pitch was inaccurate. The virtuosi of the Boston Symphony Orchestra played magnificently and especially notable was the solo of the flautist, Georges Laurent, before the duet, "Domine Deus." Dr. Koussevitsky's tempi provided for a swift moving performance. Nor should one overlook the expert achievement of horn playing by Willem Valkenier in the taxing solo, the "Quoniam," with its wide leaps and trills.

It was recently reported in the press that next season the Saturday concerts would be given in the afternoon. Officials of the festival say flatly that no such decision has been made and that members of both boards would be against giving up the Saturday night concerts, as they have proven very popular. Nine concerts will be given next season.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM
AUG 1 9 1940

Dorothy Maynor Is Soloist as Berkshire Festival Ends

By PITTS SANBORN.

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 19.—For the last two concerts of this summer's Berkshire Symphonic Festival there was a return to traditional symphonic procedure. The Saturday evening program provided four orchestral numbers—Prokofieff's Classical Symphony. The symphony derived from Hindemith's Opera, Mathis Der Maler, the suite, made up of three excerpts from the incidental music composed by Gabriel Faure for Maeterlinck's drama, Pelleas et Melisande, and Respighi's orchestral arrangement of the Bach Passacaglia for organ. There was also a soloist, the much discussed Negro soprano Dorothy Maynor, who was brought into prominence at last year's Berkshire Festival.

Midway in the concert she was heard in Mozart's Concert Aria Bella Mia Fiamma, Addio and Beethoven's song Adelaide.

The little Prokofieff Symphony has long been a specialty of Mr. Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony. On this occasion it was played with all the imaginable proficiency and esprit. Then there was a superb performance of Hindemith's music, to which the composer accorded his personal recognition by coming out after it to congratulate conductor and orchestra and to bow many times.

* * *

Pattern Stands Out.

The symphony itself—the three movements are respectively Angelic Concert, Entombment and Temptation of Saint Anthony, depicting panels of the Isenheim altar piece at Colmar—frowns on the listener with repetition. The pattern of the music stands out more and more clearly, as well as its thematic character, and the instrumental coloring discloses further richness and splendor. Admirers of Hindemith's St. Francis ballet are sure to find satisfaction in Mathis Der Maler.

No need exists for comparing Faure's Pelleas music with Debussy's. The Faure score, which antedates Debussy's, is delicate and atmospheric as it ought to be, and nobody should object to the compliment paid Wagner. The Boston forces did complete justice to it. In conclusion they made the welkin ring with the Bach-Respighi sonorities.

Miss Maynor sang the Mozart Aria carefully but without by any means exhausting its possibilities. She seemed bent on giving forth her beautiful voice only in its softer brackets. This was still more apparent in Adelaide, which she turned for the most part into a crooner's delight. The enormous audience recalled her many times and some of its members seemed bound she should sing Spirituals. She stuck to the rules of the game, however, adding nothing to her printed list.

At yesterday's concluding concert, in the afternoon, three Symphonies constituted the program—Haydn's in G Minor, No. 88; the Seventh of Sibelius and the first of Brahms. The arrangement was shrewd. After the Eighteenth-Century clearness and order of Haydn came the fascinating and still problematic work by Sibelius. No more fitting choice could have been made for a grand finale for the entire Festival than the First of Brahms.

* * *

Fluent Reading.

The Haydn Symphony exhibited well the vivacity and polish of which the Bostonians are capable. One could scarcely imagine a more fluent and finely articulated setting forth. Yet, in spite of this super-excellent performance and the technical splendor of the Brahms, the high point of the afternoon was reserved for Sibelius.

His Seventh Symphony, in one movement, he thought first of calling a Fantasia Sinfonica, and many of his admirers, among them Ernest Newman, agree with the composer's intention by regarding it as rather a symphonic poem than a symphony in the true sense. On the other hand, that Prophet-In-Chief of Sibelius, Cecil Gray, insists on its authentically symphonic character.

The total attendance at the nine concerts constituting the Festival, plus the audiences that heard the three partly public rehearsals and the Allied Relief Benefit, was approximately 88,000.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
UTICA, N. Y.
PRESS
AUG 1 9 1940

Koussevitzky's Pre-War Dream Realized in Berkshire Center

By JOHN SELBY

Stockbridge, Mass.—(AP)—There never has been a music school quite like the one functioning now under the tall trees of Tanglewood, the Boston Symphony Orchestra's handsome estate between Stockbridge and Lenox.

For one thing, 340 students have as their general director Serge Koussevitsky, who spends his winters directing the Boston Symphony, which has been called the finest orchestra the world has known. Dr. Koussevitsky no less than another famous conductor, Arturo Toscanini, is a perfectionist. If anything can be improved, Dr. Koussevitsky won't present it until it has been improved.

A Dream Come True

The Berkshire Music Center is a dream walking.

It began back in opulent pre-war Russia, when Dr. Koussevitsky had money to do things in the grand style of the period. He wanted a school of music for Moscow, wherein all teachers should be as careful as he was, and all students the cream of the crop. But the war killed it, the revolution took much of the money, and Dr. Koussevitsky came to America.

The second attempt also was under a depressing and malignant star — in 1929 and in White Plains, N. Y. Money ran out once more.

Half Turned Away

Now, in still another war year, Dr. Koussevitsky has exactly what he dreamed of for three decades, here in the Berkshire Hills. It turned out to be exactly what hundreds of the best student material wanted, also. So many applied that only half could be accepted.

Chiefly, the music center is unusual because of its teaching plan and the caliber of its teachers.

Dr. Koussevitsky believed his school should be divided so that it could give intensive training to musicians of first grade, who intended to make a life work of it. About a third of the student body is in that class.

Again He Was Right

But he felt also that schools ignored many persons of intelligence and musical experience who had no thought of making a living out of music, but who would like to re-establish contact with it for a summer, live in the midst of music, and practice the art to the limit of their ability. Again he was right; two thirds of the music center's students are in that class.

So he tailored the course of study to fit.

Five of the advanced students he has accepted for personal coaching in the art of conducting — a privilege dozens of American youths would have given their upper teeth for. Dr. Herbert Graf has a small theater of his own in which he coaches 20-odd pupils in operatic interpretation. Aaron Copland and Paul Hindemith have accepted a few pupils to study composition. G. Wallace Woodworth has a small class in choral conducting.

60 in Advanced Orchestra

There is an advanced orchestra of 60 players.

A chorus of about 200 voices for less advanced students, a less advanced orchestra, a welter of lectures and chamber music performances — even dancing for those who want it.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE
AUG 16 1940

MUSIC

By FRANCIS D. PERKINS

Music in the Hills

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 15.—The seventh annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival resumed its auspicious course in the music shed on the Tanglewood estate here tonight when more than 7,000 persons listened to the performance of Bach's Mass in B minor under Serge Koussevitzky's direction. The festival chorus which collaborated with the Boston Symphony Orchestra was composed of members of the Berkshire Music Center, who had been rehearsing for several weeks under the guidance of G. Wallace Woodworth, of Harvard University. The vocal soloists, all well known to New York audiences, were Elisabeth Schumann, soprano; Viola Silva, contralto; William Hain, tenor, and Alexander Kipnis, Metropolitan Opera basso.

This was not the first time a chorus had sung with the Boston Symphony at Tanglewood, but it was the first Berkshire festival program entirely devoted to a major work for chorus and orchestra. The occasion also marked the first participation of a unit of the Berkshire Music Center in a formal public performance. The exceptional nature of this event aroused widespread advance interest, and in addition to subscribers to the complete festival or to this week's three concerts the audience included many who had traveled here especially for this concert. Some had come from considerable distances. The management reported that one Bach enthusiast had come to Lenox from Salt Lake City in order to hear this immortal masterpiece of religious music.

The Boston Symphony musicians who played instrumental solos were Richard Burgin, concertmaster of the orchestra, violin; William Valkenier, horn; George Laurent, flute, and Louis Speyer and Jean Devergie, oboes. Putnam Aldrich played the harpsichord and E. Power Biggs was the assistant organist.

* * *

The remarkable luck with weather which the festival enjoyed during its first fortnight continued this evening with cloudless skies and comfortably low temperatures. Owing to the length of the mass, the performance was scheduled to begin at 7 p. m., and most of the members of the audience were in their seats by that time, although Dr. Koussevitzky waited a few minutes for possible late comers before projecting the overwhelmingly poignant appeal of the Kyrie. Those who chose to listen outside the shed could observe the long, level rays of the late afternoon sun at the beginning of the concert, and the full moon illuminated the grounds when the memorable performance reached its close. There was an intermission of an hour before the Credo, which gave those who had missed their dinners a chance to obtain an informal meal.

Comment on the performance can concern itself here only with the Kyrie and the Gloria. In them the general artistic standard and expressive content of the interpretation could be hailed as worthy of such a work as this, which is to bestow high praise. The chorus of 200 did not give a complete revelation of its ability until after the opening section of the Kyrie. Here there had been a slight impression of tentativeness in the quality of tone. But afterward the quality was prevalently clear, the balance between the various component groups generally just. At times, up to the "cum sancto spiritu," one missed a sense of brilliance and sonorous impact in some of the more proclamative measures of the score.

But there was much artistic gain in the style of the interpretation, which sought a wide variety and fine graduation of dynamic and emotional shadings rather than emphasizing pronounced contrasts. This gave the performance a frequent and characteristic beauty of its own, even if there were a few fluctuations of tonal merit. The closing section of the Gloria had no lack of volume or vigor.

The soloists, all experienced musicians, sang expressively if not without varying degrees of tonal merit. Mme. Schumann's voice, while not large, was to be commended for general clarity and style. Miss Silva's tones were not always fully focused, although her interpretation told of understanding and authority. Mr. Hain, if not at his best in the first solo, again revealed his well known musicianship. Mr. Kipnis was at home in the Quoniam after its opening measures.

More can be said tomorrow about the admirable playing of the orchestra and the work of its skillful soloists. Dr. Koussevitzky followed mainly orthodox tempi except for a faster than customary pace in the opening Kyrie, which somewhat detracted from its expressive effect, but elsewhere the impression was generally one of eloquence and understanding.

Details have already been announced for the Allied Relief Fund benefit program which will be held at Tanglewood for about five hours tomorrow evening, with the Boston Symphony and groups of the Berkshire Music Center and prominent soloists and speakers taking part. Dorothy Maynor, Negro soprano, will sing in the eighth festival concert Saturday evening, and on Sunday afternoon Dr. Koussevitzky and the orchestra will end the series with symphonies of Haydn, Sibelius and Brahms.

Alexander Kipnis

Basso soloist in the Berkshire Symphonic Festival

THIS CLIPPING FROM NEW BEDFORD, MASS.
MERCURY
AUG 21 1940

For the last two concerts of this Summer's Berkshire Symphonic Festival there was a return to traditional symphonic procedure, writes Pitts Sanborn in the New York, World-Telegram. The Saturday evening program provided four orchestral numbers — Prokofieff's Classical Symphony. The symphony derived from Hindemith's Opera, Mathis Der Maler, the suite, made up of three excerpts from the incidental music composed by Gabriel Faure for Maeterlinck's drama, Pelleas et Melisande, and Respigh's orchestral arrangement of the Bach Passacaklia for organ. There was also a soloist, the much discussed Negro soprano Dorothy Maynor, who was brought into prominence at last year's Berkshire Festival.

Midway in the concert she was heard in Mozart's Concert Aria Bella Mia Fiamma, Addio and Beethoven's song Adelaide.

The little Prokofieff Symphony has long been a specialty of Mr. Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony. On this occasion it was played with all the imaginable proficiency and esprit. Then there was a superb performance of Hindemith's music, to which the composer accorded his personal recognition by coming out after it to congratulate conductor and orchestra and to bow many times.

The symphony itself—the three movements are respectively Angelic Concert, Entombment and Temptation of Saint Anthony, depicting panels of the Isenheim altar piece at Colmar—frowns on the listener with repetition. The pattern of the music stands out more and more clearly, as well as its thematic character, and the instrumental coloring discloses further richness and splendor. Admirers of Hindemith's St. Francis ballet are sure to find satisfaction in Mathis Der Maler.

No need exists for comparing Faure's Pelleas music with Debussy's. The Faure score, which antedates Debussy's, is delicate and atmospheric as it ought to be, and nobody should object to the compliment paid Wagner. The Boston forces did complete justice to it. In conclusion they made the welkin ring with the Bach-Respighi sonorities.

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN
AUG 19 1940

Noted Negro Soprano Appears On Berkshire Festival Program

(Gravelle Picture Service)

Dorothy Maynor, famous Negro soprano, receives the congratulations of Dr Serge Koussevitzky, director of the Boston Symphony orchestra, after her recital at the Berkshire Music festival at Tanglewood Saturday night.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
SUNDAY UNION
& REPUBLICAN
AUG 18 1940

Dorothy Maynor Gives 'Homecoming' Recital

By JOHN SELBY
Associated Press Arts Editor

Stockbridge, Aug. 17—Tonight was a homecoming for one of America's finest young artists, the soprano Dorothy Maynor.

Exactly a year ago Miss Maynor was a gifted young Negro student with a few devoted believers, among them Miss Harriet Curtin of Boston. She came to Tanglewood to hear the Boston symphony in the now famous "music shed," which houses its Berkshire symphonic festival.

Through a set of odd circumstances, she was asked to sing at the picnic Serge Koussevitzky gives each year for his players—and her career was born right there.

Dr Koussevitzky and all who heard her were delighted. Since then Miss Maynor has become a household word in musical America, and also a kind of symbol of modesty and devotion to an art. She has been called the hardest worker among singers, and certainly she is the only one on record who makes a point of rising at 6 a. m. to start her day of study.

Tonight Miss Maynor sang twice with the orchestra on this next to last program of the current festival, offering the Mozart concert aria "Bella mia fiama, addio" and Beethoven's moving "Adelaide." She earned the tumult of applause she received, and acknowledged it with the curious gesture now a habit with her, which seems to say, "Don't thank me, thank the composer."

THIS CLIPPI
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS
AUG 16 1940

Bach B Minor Mass Is Given At Berkshire Music Festival

Stockbridge, Aug. 16—The forces of the Boston Symphony orchestra and the Berkshire Music center combined last night at Tanglewood in the presentation of Bach's "Mass in B Minor," under the direction of Dr Serge Koussevitzky and with four outstanding soloists assisting. It was a monumental undertaking, for the Berkshire Music festival, now in its seventh season, and crowned with considerable success. The 7300 persons present joined in tumultuous tribute to the participants at the intermission and at the end.

It was a happy, if unforeseen, coincidence that the mass, the only one of Bach's works written for the Catholic service, should have been presented on a holyday. There were, liturgically speaking, a great number of persons "late for mass." Musically speaking, they missed a great deal, too, for the "Kyrie" has some very poignant music. The long and involved mass, so repetitious that it is not liturgically acceptable in the Catholic service, is generally given in two parts whenever it is revived. Composed over a period of years, it has some uneven writing, but some very impressive moments, too.

Last night the performance began at 7 with an hour's intermission at 8.30 and the second half at 9.30 running toward 11. Because of the arrangement, hundreds brought picnic lunches for intermission while thousands, it seemed, headed for the refreshment tent after the "Gloria." Refreshed, they could more happily return to the shed for the second half.

There were some thrilling spots last night, for the fresh young voices of the chorus, numbering more than 200, responded electrically to nearly every demand of the conductor. The orchestral balance was superb and the new organ, gift of the Carnegie foundation, made its helpful debut with E. Power Biggs at the console. Other instrumental soloists included the orchestral virtuosi, Richard Burgin, violin; Willem Valkenier, horn; Georges Laurent, flute; Louis Speyer and Jean Devergie, oboi d'amore; and Putnam Aldrich, harpsichord. G. Wallace Woodworth rehearsed the chorus.

The vocal soloists were Elisabeth Schumann, soprano; Viola Silva, mezzo soprano; William Hain, tenor, and Alexander Kipnis. Miss Silva, with the most to do, revealed an opulent voice of great beauty; Miss Schumann's silvery voice, lighter in texture, floated easily through the intricate coloratura passages. Mr Hain, familiar to Springfield audiences, is properly ranked as one of the best oratorio tenors, while the magnificent organ of Mr Kipnis, a prime Springfield favorite, is as well adapted to the religious feeling of Bach as it is, for example, to secular spirit of Leporello's "Catalog Song." The few duets with instrumental solos accompanying were delightful.

This reviewer roamed outside during the second half in order to discover how the "other half" listened. Reviewers who have the best seats often forget that in an audience of the size which the festival attracts, some people have not press prerogatives. In some respects, listening outside was to be preferred to listening inside. The slightest sound carries hundreds of feet beyond the shell and the music, heard from afar off, seemed more fervent, more churchly than it did from what would ordinarily be considered a vantage point. This word is passed on partly as a fact, and partly to assure those who wonder at the use of visiting the festival with practically all seats engaged. The festival concludes with concerts tomorrow night and Sunday afternoon.

J. D. D.

This Clipping From
BRIDGEPORT, CONN.
POST
AUG 18 1940

Tanglewood Warmly Greets Soprano Dorothy Maynor

Young Singer Returns to Stockbridge Where Career Was Born.

By JOHN SELBY
Associated Press Arts Editor

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 17—Tonight was a homecoming for one of America's finest young artists, the soprano Dorothy Maynor.

Exactly a year ago Miss Maynor was a gifted young Negro student with a few devoted believers, among them Miss Harriet Curtin of Boston. She came to Tanglewood to hear the Boston symphony in the now famous "music shed," which houses its Berkshire symphonic festival.

Through a set of odd circumstances, she was asked to sing at the picnic Serge Koussevitsky gives each year for his players—and her career was born right there.

Dr. Koussevitsky and all who heard her were delighted. Since then Miss Maynor has become a household word in musical America, and also a kind of symbol for modesty and devotion to an art. She has been called the hardest worker among singers, and certainly she is the only one on record who makes a point of rising at 6 a. m. to start her day of study.

Tonight Miss Maynor sang twice with the orchestra on this next to last program of the current festival, offering the Mozart concert aria "Bella Mia Fiama, Addio" and Beethoven's moving "Adelaide." She earned the tumult of applause she received, and acknowledged it with the curious gesture now a habit with her, which seems to say, "Don't thank me, thank the composer."

Dr. Koussevitsky chose music of widely differing styles, including one work by Paul Hindemith, the former German composer who has taught this summer in Koussevitsky's Berkshire music center here. This was Hindemith's so-called sympathy, "Mathis der Maler."

The audience also heard Prokofieff's "Classical" symphony, the suite from Faure's incidental music to "Pelleas et Mélisande" and the late Ottorino Respighi's arrangement for orchestra of Bach's organ Passacaglia in C minor.

Tomorrow the seventh festival closes with music of Haydn, Sibelius and Brahms.

157

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE
AUG 18 1940

MUSIC

By FRANCIS D. PERKINS

Miss Maynor at Tanglewood

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 17.—Dorothy Maynor was the soloist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra tonight in the Tanglewood Music Shed in the eighth concert of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, singing a Mozart concert aria, "Bella Mia Fiamma Addio," and Beethoven's "Adelaide." This was the young Negro soprano's first appearance in a regular event of this series, although her singing had first attracted public notice here a year ago at a party given by Serge Koussevitzky for his instrumentalists. Her participation in this concert was one of the factors causing an exceptionally large demand for tickets; all the reserved seats had been sold before this morning.

Dr. Koussevitzky began his program with two contrasted works by living composers, Serge Prokofieff's Classical Symphony and Paul Hindemith's symphony, "Mathis der Maler." The works following Miss Maynor's songs were the prelude, fileuse and adagio from Gabriel Faure's music for "Pelleas et Melisande" and Ottorino Respighi's orchestral version of Bach's passacaglia and fugue in C minor.

For the third and last of the Saturday morning rehearsals for festival members, Dr. Koussevitzky and the orchestra presented the Hindemith symphony from tonight's program and parts of Haydn's symphony in G, No. 88, and Sibelius's seventh symphony, which will be played in the ninth and last festival concert tomorrow afternoon.

Miss Maynor also sang the Mozart aria, which is No. 528 in the Koechel catalogue and was composed in Prague in November, 1787.

A rehearsal, even a semi-public one with an attendance of 2,000 or more persons, is not traditionally supposed to be an occasion for critical comment, but an admiring mention of the general clarity and volume of the singer's tones should not be out of order. In regard to a slight edge in a few of her highest notes, a mild word of caution might be added, but otherwise she adhered to her best vocal standards consistently.

Prokofieff's symphony might be described as music in which an eighteenth-century idiom is heard through twentieth-century ears. In the Hindemith work the idiom is unmistakably of this generation, although it makes use of a German sixteenth-century hymn and of the Latin hymn "Lauda Sion Salvatorem." The symphony was first played in New York in 1934; the opera from which it is derived, with the sixteenth-century German painter Matthias Gruenewald as its protagonist, did not reach a stage until 1938, when it was produced by the enterprising municipal theater of Zurich. The titles of the three parts of the symphony describe the panels of Matthias's Isenheim triptych.

More can be said about this composition in a later review, but a rehearing in today's rehearsal suggested that it gains by repeated acquaintance, impressing by its scoring and its emotional force as well as by its well wrought structure. Olin Downes suggested in his lecture at the rehearsal that Hindemith, in describing the struggles of Matthias with political and religious figures of his time, might have had in mind the problems which face the creative artist under present conditions.

Dorothy Maynor

Soloist at last night's concert

Dr. Koussevitzky assembled his musicians for the rehearsal less than eleven hours after they had played "The Star Spangled Banner" to end last night's benefit program for the Allied Relief Fund. More than 200 players, including the Boston Symphony and the young men and women of the Berkshire Center's Institute orchestra, had taken part in the benefit's formal concert program in the music shed. This began with Elgar's "Pomp and Circumstance" march, set forth with a fine spring and sonority.

Stanley Chapple, an English conductor, who has not yet been heard in New York, displayed notable technical skill and authority in his interpretation of Jupiter from Gustav Holst's "The Planets." Richard Burgin conducted for the three soloists, Albert Spalding in Saint Saens's "Rondo Capriccioso" for violin and orchestra, Alexander Kipnis in the scene depicting Boris's meditations and stressful visions from Moussorgsky's "Boris Godunoff," and Gregor Piatigorsky in two movements from a Boccherini cello concerto.

In music well suited to his talents, Mr. Kipnis gave an admirable interpretation in quality of tone and projection of the expressive poignance of the scene. Messrs. Spalding and Piatigorsky were in very good form. The festival chorus sang the Incarnatus, Crucifixus and Resurrexit from Bach's B minor mass and brought the program to an imposing and much applauded close with the Hallelujah Chorus from Handel's "Messiah."

The playing of Johann Strauss waltzes by the "Pops" contingent of the Boston Symphony under Arthur Fiedler's direction as the final musical feature also proved very welcome. Several couples danced on the green, and there were persistent calls for more after "The Blue Danube" waltz. It was thought this morning that those who had attended the benefit in full or in part during its five-hour course, numbered 9,000. Receipts were estimated at more than $20,000, including the $2,235 raised by the auction to endow a mobile surgical unit for Great Britain.

This Clipping From
NEW HAVEN, CONN.
REGISTER
AUG 18 1940

MISS MAYNOR ACCLAIMED AT MUSIC FESTIVAL

Young Artist Sings Brilliantly At Stockbridge Event With Boston Symphony

Stockbridge, Mass., Aug. 17.—(AP)—Tonight was a homecoming for one of America's finest young artists, the soprano Dorothy Maynor.

Exactly a year ago Miss Maynor was a gifted young Negro student with a few devoted believers, among them Miss Harriet Curtin of Boston. She came to Tanglewood to hear the Boston Symphony in the now famous "Music Shed," which houses its Berkshire symphonic festival.

Picnic, Her Chance

Through a set of odd circumstances, she was asked to sing at the picnic Serge Koussevitzky gives each year for his players—and her career was born right there.

Doctor Koussevitzky and all who heard her were delighted. Since then Miss Maynor has become a household word in musical America. and also a kind of symbol for modesty and devotion to an art. She has been called the hardest worker among singers, and certainly she is the only one on record who makes a point of rising at 6 A. M. to start her day of study.

Highly Acclaimed

Tonight, Miss Maynor sang twice with the orchestra on this next to last program of the current festival, offering the Mozart concert aria "Bella Mia Fiama, Addio" and Beethoven's moving "Adelaide." She earned the tumult of applause she received, and acknowledged it with the curious gesture now a habit with her, which seems to say, "Don't thank me, thank the composer."

Doctor Koussevitzky chose music of widely differing styles, including one work by Paul Hindemith, the former German composer who has taught this summer in Koussevitzky's Berkshire Music Center here. This was Hindemith's so-called symphony, "Mathis Der Maler."

The audience also heard Prokofieff's "classical" symphony, the suite from Faure's incidental music to "Pelleas Et Melisande" and the late Ottorino Respighi's arrangement for orchestra of Bach's organ Passacaglia in C Minor.

Tomorrow, the seventh festival closes with music of Haydn, Sibelius and Brahms.

This Clipping From
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
JOURNAL
AUG 18 1940

DOROTHY MAYNOR FESTIVAL SOLOIST

Gifted Young Negro Soprano Gets Tumult of Applause at Berkshire Concert.

SERIES TO END TONIGHT

Haydn, Sibelius and Brahms Works Will Be Presented in Final Program at Tanglewood

Stockbridge, Mass., Aug. 17.—Tonight was a homecoming for one of America's finest young artists, the soprano Dorothy Maynor.

Exactly a year ago Miss Maynor was a gifted young Negro student with a few devoted believers, among them Miss Harriet Curtin of Boston. She came to Tanglewood to hear the Boston Symphony in the now famous "Music Shed," which houses its Berkshire Symphonic Festival.

Through a set of odd circumstances, she was asked to sing at the picnic Serge Koussevitzky gives each year for his players—and her career was born right there.

Dr. Koussevitzky and all who heard her were delighted. Since then Miss Maynor has become a household word in musical America, and also a kind of symbol for modesty and devotion to an art. She has been called the hardest worker among singers, and certainly she is the only one on record who makes a point of rising at 6 a. m. to start her day of study.

Tonight Miss Maynor sang twice with the orchestra on this next to last program of the current festival, offering the Mozart concert aria "Bella Mia Fiama, Addio" and Beethoven's moving "Adelaide." She earned the tumult of applause she received, and acknowledged it with the curious gesture now a habit with her, which seems to say, "Don't thank me, thank the composer."

Dr. Koussevitzky chose music of widely differing styles, including one work by Paul Hindemith, the former German composer who has taught this summer in Koussezitzky's Berkshire music centre here. This was Hindemith's so-called symphony, "Mathis Der Maler."

The audience also heard Prokofieff's "classical" symphony, the suite from Faure's incidental music to "Pelleas et Melisande" and the late Ottorino Respighi's arrangement for orchestra of Bach's organ Passacaglia in C-minor.

Tomorrow the seventh festival closes with music by Haydn, Siebelius and Brahms.

This Clipping From NEWARK, N. J.
NEWS
AUG 19 1940

Festival Ends

Music in Berkshires Draws Record Crowd of 70,000

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass. (AP)—This Summer's Berkshire Symphonic Festival has broken all records, figures issued yesterday by Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, president, and George W. Edman, clerk, show.

The nine concerts this Summer were attended by 70,000 persons. In addition, three special rehearsals for Festival members and school children from the neighbohood drew 10,000 persons to Tanglewood, the festival's home, and the benefit for British relief Friday night drew 8,000, who contributed $25,000 to the fund.

Last Summer 36,000 persons heard six concerts.

Yesterday's music included three great symphonies, one of them modern. These were the Haydn G Major Symphony (No. 88); Sibelius's sturdy Seventh, and to conclude the concert as well as the festival, the monumental First Symphony of Brahms.

Festival luck held so far as weather went—there was a misty rain at intervals yesterday afternoon, and perfect weather for the other eight concerts. This year Serge Koussevitzky not only conducted his Boston Symphony in all the music of the festival, but was director of the Berkshire Music Center, a school of music for professionals and non-professionals which closed yesterday after a six-week session on the Tanglewood estate.

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION
AUG 19 1940

GREAT OVATION IS ACCORDED TO KOUSSEVITZKY

Highly Successful Season Is Brought to a Close at Tanglewood

By Willard M. Clark

STOCKBRIDGE, Aug. 17—The final triumphant chords of the "C minor symphony" of Brahms sounded the close of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival this afternoon, and before they had died away, 8000 persons were standing applauding and cheering Dr. Serge Koussevitzky and the players of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. It was an ovation which lasted for minutes. Every available bit of space in the huge shed was taken, for the first rain in the entire series caused those who usually occupy the outside benches to take shelter under the roof.

Stupendous Season

This has been a stupendous season, far, far, more successful than the most optimistic backers believed. It is said that between 70,000 and 75,000 persons were present during the nine concerts and Willard Sistare, in charge of the ushers, estimates the average attendance at each concert at 8000.

That the season has been a success artistically no one will question and undoubtedly it has been a financial success. This means that very possibly the music shed will have its folding sides next season and that the little theater will be completed. Only the stage has been erected thus far, but it is known that Dr. Koussevitzky wants to make opera an integral part of future festivals.

Dr. Koussevitzy has provided some inspired interpretations, notably in performances of the Bach "B minor Mass," the first symphony of Sibelius, the fourth symphony of Beethoven and Tschaikowsky's fifth symphony. Contemporary composers were represented by Roy Harris and his third symphony, the Classical Symphony of Prokofieff and Hindemith's symphony "Mathis der Maler." Albert Spalding, violinist; Igor Piatagorsky, cellist, and Dorothy Maynor, soprano, were among the soloists who reaped acclaim.

Opens With Haydn

This afternoon the program consisted of "Symphony in G-major, No. 88" by Haydn; "Symphony No. 7," Sibelius and the first symphony of Brahms. Dr. Koussevitzky's readings of these works have been thrice told. The Haydn symphony was wonderfully vitalized and the lovely adagio lament will not soon be forgotten. A foremost interpreter of the works of Sibelius, Dr. Koussevitzky brought to the massive seventh symphony all his magic, stressing its lofty grandeur, and revealing anew its expressive beauty and Olympian serenity and repose.

No more inspired performance than that given Brahms' first symphony this afternoon could be imagined. The glowing and sonorous tones, moving with ever growing might to the climax and the sad and lovely melody which presages the end of the first movement were conveyed with astounding skill by the virtuosi of the Boston Symphony orchestra. Dr. Koussevitzky had only to ask, and it and more was given. It is doubtful if any other performance during the entire series has given more solid satisfaction; no wonder bravos resounded after its completion.

Already plans are under way for next season. There will be nine concerts as there were this season, for even those most opposed to the added three concerts this year, know now that they were too conservative. The music school will enter its second year and already new applications have come in. Directors and trustees will continue to move slowly as they have in the past with such remarkable results.

Attendance Is 70,000 For Nine Concerts

STOCKBRIDGE, Aug. 18 (AP) — Seventy thousand persons heard the nine concerts of the seventh annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival, which closed this afternoon before an audience of 8000 persons.

In addition to 70,000 visitors for the nine regular concerts, Tanglewood has entertained 10,000 more at the three special rehearsals conducted by Serge Koussevitzky for festival members and school children from the neighborhood.

Sizable Surplus

A sizable surplus will be left this summer, it was announced by Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, president, and George W. Edman, clerk of the festival. But none of this is profit—everything will go into maintenance of the 210-acre Tanglewood estate given to the Boston Symphony by Mrs. Gorham Brooks, of Brookline, Mass.

In addition to its musical accomplishment—probably the highest of all similar summer music adventures of the day—the festival has made violent converts of thousands of local residents. The historic old inns of the Berkshires are crammed and hundreds of private homes are opened to the visitors. The number of visitors has also been increased by the 300 students of Dr. Koussevitzky's Berkshire Music Center, which closed today after six weeks' intensive work.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
PM
AUG 19 1940

MUSIC

Festival Closes At Stockbridge

HENRY W. SIMON

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 19.—What with an added miscellany of attractions at Friday's benefit gala, Dorothy Maynor as soloist on Saturday and a superb set of press notices, attendance at the final weekend of the Berkshire Festival took a considerable spurt.

Local statisticians figured 70,000 as the total attendance at the nine subscription concerts, with another 10,000 coming to Saturday morning rehearsals and 8000 at the benefit.

The quality of the performances well merits this record. Saturday evening, which drew the largest single attendance in the history of the festival, presented a beautifully balanced program beautifully performed. The wry but endearing wit of Prokofieff's Classical Symphony is just the sort of thing Dr. Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony can do as well as any group playing. It was followed by Hindemith's Mathis der Maler Symphony, in which the final Temptation of St. Anthony movement stirred the audience to recall conductor and composer repeatedly.

Then Dorothy Maynor, who was literally discovered at this festival last year, sang Bella mia fiama, addio by Mozart and Beethoven's Adelaide to the tremendous approval of the audience. She seemed rather more at home in the Beethoven than in the more florid Italian aria by Mozart.

The concert closed with a beautifully sensuous performance of Faure's incidental music to Pelleas et Melisande and a sonorous one of the Bach-Respighi Organ Passacaglia in C minor.

The Sunday program listed three symphonies—Haydn's No. 88 in G (not the better known Oxford), the Sibelius Seventh and the Brahms First. The orchestra did its best work with the most modern, the Sibelius. Dr. Koussevitzky is not at his happiest in strictly classical music, and the brasses showed to some disadvantage in the Brahms First, as they had two Sundays before in the same composer's Second.

Friday's benefit netted some $20,000 for the Allied Relief fund. Musically it was a bit like a world's fair on a very high level. From the music shed came strains of Copland and Prokofieff; 200 yards away, operatic students were giving Gluck, Wagner and Verdi; in still another spot the Festival Chorus was singing. Dorothy Thompson, Governor Lehman and Sir Louis Beale, K.C.M.G., spoke, there was an auction, there was folk dancing, and there was a 50-cent hot supper and 15-cent beer. It was easily worth the price of admission.

—SEAVER BUCK—H. W. S.

This Clipping From
ALBANY, N. Y.
TIMES UNION
AUG 19 1940

Berkshire Festival Ends; $25,000 Raised

By EDGAR S. VANOLINDA

Three glorious afternoons of sunshine and six nights under perfect atmospheric conditions, the final one bathed in an ever-enlarging aura of moonlight climaxing Saturday night with the great music shed at "Tanglewood," Stockbridge, and the surrounding trees thrown into brilliant relief by a full moon in a cloudless sky, established a record, not only for attendance for the 1940 series but for performances unmarred by inclement weather. It is estimated that approximately 85,000 music-lovers have attended the 10 musical events of the Berkshire Symphonic festival during the last three weeks.

Friday's program enlisted the sister arts in the promulgation of a gala concert and lawn fete to raise money for the Allied relief, with special emphasis on help for England. Therefore, it was fitting that one of the speakers at the "manifestation" in the great music shed in the afternoon was Sir Louis Beale, representing Lord Lothian, British ambassador to the United States. Governor Lehman, Miss Dorothy Thompson and Archibald MacLeish also were on the speakers' list, the object of the added concert and forum being to raise money to provide an ambulance and hospital unit as a gift from the Berkshire festival to the British army. The proceeds, said to have been in the neighborhood of $25,000 seem to have far exceeded the objective.

Concerts in the great music shed with eminent soloists; opera performances in the theatre and chamber music in the barn gave the music lover wide latitude in the choice of entertainment, while fireworks at the end of the ceremonies, with the Stockbridge bowl for a background, brought a slight realization of what was at that moment occurring in England, and the worthiness of the objective for the colorful event was merely an outward "manifestation."

NEGRO GIRL SENSATION

Saturday night's concert, expertly built by Doctor Koussevitzky to encompass music in the ancient and modern idiums, opened with Prokofieff's "Classical" symphony, a work conceived by its composer in the manner Mozart might have utilized the themes had he been alive today. This was followed by the more revolutionary symphony, "Mathis der Maler," by Paul Hindemith, with the composer appearing from the wing to acknowledge the insistent applause. But the magnet, in all truth, was not the music of the immortals and neo-immortals, but a simple unaffected Negro girl, Dorothy Maynor, who a year ago was practicaly an unknown, until given the entree into the musical society of the elect by the patronage of the same man who was directing the orchestra while she sung Mozart's "Bella Mia Fiama, Addio" and Beethoven's lovely "Adelaide."

Doctor Koussevitzky, hearing Miss Maynor at a garden party on his estate, given by him to the men of his orchestra last summer was so impressed with the great beauty of her voice and evidences of the necessary cultural background that he went all the way, musically and socially, to see that she received her great chance. His faith in her was warranted, as he must have realized when she had finished singing Saturday night. With the possible exception of the applause and wild cheering which greeted Doctor Koussevitzky's superb performance of Tschaikowsky's Fourth symphony the week before, Tanglewood concert-goers never had witnessed a greater ovation than that given to the modest and seemingly unbelieving young Negro soprano. Hers is a voice of the greatest purity throughout its three-octave range.

VOICE MORE THAN ADEQUATE

Even in the larger reaches of the great music shed, unaided by confining and retaining side and back walls, her voice was more than adequate for the auditorium which approximates most of the great concert halls of the present day. It has the directness of the Flagstad organ, the bell-like qualities of the late Melba, with undisputable evidences of the Sembrich mentality. Nature was prodigal in her awards, but the challenge to its recipient seems to have been well issued and placed in very competent and appreciative custody. Albany will hear Miss Maynor during the coming season with the Civic Music association and the preview and audition presupposes one of the great musical treats of the generation. Portions of a suite from Faure's "Pelyleas et Melisande and the great Bach "Passacaglia" brought the concent to a close.

Yesterday afternoon's concert and the final one of the seventh season was devoted to three symphonic works; The Haydon No. 88; the Sibelius Seventh and the Brahms First. One of the largest audiences of the season, overflowing the shed and spreading out to the lawns in the rear and on either side, listened in rapt absorbtion to the work of three contrasting schools of composition. Doctor Koussevitzky has carried the musical torch for the works of modern composers perhaps to a greater extent than any other contemporary conductor, with the possible exception of Artur Rodzinski. As the rank and file of concert goers are not quite to the point of demanding an all-modern program. octor Koussevizky returned to Brahms for the fitting close of a festival, that for scope and variety of its offerings has not a counter-part in the American summer music field. With the majestic and hope-theme of the Brahms First still fresh in its memory, the audience of nearly 9,000 people returned home, satisfied, if not satiated with the great feast of music which has made Tanglewood the social, and cultural summer capital of the nation.

This Clipping From
WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM
AUG 18 1940

Retrospect of Berkshire Festival

THE BERKSHIRE Symphonic Festival, completing the third weekend of its seventh season this afternoon at 3.30 o'clock in the Music shed at Tanglewood, in the beautiful country between Stockbridge and Lenox, brought under its hospitable roof and scattering about its rolling greensward with blankets, cushions and camp chairs, thousands on thousands of lovers of music. The Friday night festivities, a tremendous and overwhelming success not only from its carnival spirit, reminiscent of the famous Salzburg festival, not only brought to the Allied Fund (for Britain) a staggering sum but marked a new high standard musically, for the men under the baton of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky outdid themselves as musicians. The music heard in the acoustically perfect shed, or no less perfectly transmitted to the thousands of listeners on the grounds, was something to remember in the years to come.

In the fortnight since the first weekend of music, which was wholly satisfying from every standpoint, musically and socially (and financially to the Festival officials), there have been many calls for further information, which those first festival goers, your correspondent and the music critic for the Telegram have tried to answer to the best of their ability, refering would be patrons to festival office and those who arranged for accommodations. This and the traffic was handled with ease and smoothness for the 1940 patrons, vast numbers of cars in well spaced rows were moved with expedition and scientific speed. It was a great joy to have a share in the seventh annual festival, and many Worcester and county friends experienced it this year, too, for the first time.

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
EVENING UNION
AUG 19 1940

CITY NEWS

GREAT OVATION IS ACCORDED TO KOUSSEVITZKY

Highly Successful Season Is Brought to a Close at Tanglewood

By Willard M. Clark

STOCKBRIDGE, Aug. 18—The final triumphant chords of the "C minor symphony" of Brahms sounded the close of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival yesterday and before they had died away, 8000 persons were standing applauding and cheering Dr. Serge Koussevitzky and the players of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. It was an ovation which lasted for minutes. Every available bit of space in the huge shed was taken, for the first rain in the entire series caused those who usually occupy the outside benches to take shelter under the roof.

Stupendous Season

This has been a stupendous season, far, far, more successful than the most optimistic backers believed. It is said that between 70,000 and 75,000 persons were present during the nine concerts and Willard Sistare, in charge of the ushers, estimates the average attendance at each concert at 8000.

That the season has been a success artistically no one will question and undoubtedly it has been a financial success. This means that very possibly the music shed will have its folding sides next season and that the little theater will be completed. Only the stage has been erected thus far, but it is known that Dr. Koussevitzky wants to make opera an integral part of future festivals.

Dr. Koussevitzy has provided some inspired interpretations, notably in performances of the Bach "B minor Mass," the first symphony of Sibelius, the fourth symphony of Beethoven and Tschaikowsky's fifth symphony. Contemporary composers were represented by Roy Harris and his third symphony, the Classical Symphony of Prokofieff and Hindemith's symphony "Mathis der Maler." Albert Spalding, violinist; Igor Piatagorsky, cellist, and Dorothy Maynor, soprano, were among the soloists who reaped acclaim.

Opens With Haydn

This afternoon the program consisted of "Symphony in G-major, No. 88" by Haydn; "Symphony No. 7," Sibelius and the first symphony of Brahms. Dr. Koussevitzky's readings of these works have been thrice told. The Haydn symphony was wonderfully vitalized and the lovely adagio lament will not soon be forgotten. A foremost interpreter of the works of Sibelius, Dr. Koussevitzky brought to the massive seventh symphony all his magic, stressing its lofty grandeur, and revealing anew its expressive beauty and Olympian serenity and repose.

No more inspired performance than that given Brahms' first symphony this afternoon could be imagined. The glowing and sonorous tones, moving with ever growing might to the climax and the sad and lovely melody which presages the end of the first movement were conveyed with astounding skill by the virtuosi of the Boston Symphony orchestra. Dr. Koussevitzky had only to ask, and it and more was given. It is doubtful if any other performance during the entire series has given more solid satisfaction; no wonder bravos resounded after its completion.

Already plans are under way for next season. There will be nine concerts as there were this season, for even those most opposed to the added three concerts this year, know now that they were too conservative. The music school will enter its second year and already new applications have come in. Directors and trustees will continue to move slowly as they have in the past with such remarkable results.

This Clipping From
WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM
AUG 19 1940

Attendance Record of 70,000 For Berkshire Music Festival

By JOHN SELBY
Associated Press Arts Editor

STOCKBRIDGE, Aug. 18.—Seventy thousand persons and two barn swallows heard the nine concerts of the seventh annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival, which closed this afternoon before an audience of eight thousand persons.

The seventy thousand sat with great decorum n the new iron chairs of the music shed; the barn swallow occupied a girder at the rear, and chirped along with the Boston Sympohny. Morevore, they observed crescendos and decrescendos with the greatest care, and broke into do pauses whatever.

In addition to seventy thousand visitors for the nine regular concerts, Tanglewood has entertained ten thousand more at the three special rehearsals conducted by Serge Koussevitzky for festival members and school children from the enighborhood.

Friday night's benefit for British relief drew eight thousand more visitors, who contributed a total of $25,000 to the cause— in one way or another.

The festival attendance broke even last year's record. Then there were six instead of nine concerts, and thirty-six thousand persons attended. The first six concerts this Summer drew forty-five thousand.

A sizable surplus wil be left this Summer, it was announced by Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, president, and George W. Edman, clerk of the Festival. But none of this is profit—everything will go into maintenance of the 210-acre Tanglewood estate given to the Boston Symphony by Mrs. Gorham Brooks, of Brooklinee.

In addition to its musical accomplishment—probably the richest of all Summer music adventures of the day—the Festival has made violent converts of thousands of local residents. The historoic old inns of the Bershires are crammed and hundreds of private homes are opened to the visitors. The number of visitors has also been increased by the 300 students of Dr. Koussevitzy's Berkshire Music Center, which closed today after six weeks' intensive work.

The last notes heard this year were the triumphant closing measures of Brahm's First Symphony. The music includes also the G. Major Haydn Symphony, No. 88, and Sibelius" rugged seventh Symphony.

159

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE

AUG 19 1940

MUSIC

By FRANCIS D. PERKINS

Symphonic Festival Closes

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 18.—With the triumphant final proclamation of Brahms's First Symphony, the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under Serge Koussevitzky's direction, brought the seventh annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival to a close this afternoon in the Tanglewood music shed. This was the only one of the nine concerts which was accompanied by a certain amount of rain. A mild drizzle alternated with moments of sunshine during the first half of the program, and a brisk but brief downpour fell just as members of the audience of 8,000 were dispersing for the intermission. Considering the festival as a whole, however, the weather has behaved with remarkable benignity during the last three weeks.

Dr. Koussevitzky prefaced the Brahms symphony with two others: Haydn's symphony in G major, which is the eighty-eighth in the newer Breitkopf and Haertel enumeration of this master's compositions in this form, and the Seventh Symphony of Jean Sibelius. The performance of the familiar and always delectable Haydn work was admirable both for its technical finish and for its prevailing spirit. Sometimes, indeed, the music had a sonority rather weightier than that which one is accustomed to associate with Haydn's music, but this was hardly avoidable with an orchestra of this size in this acoustically sensitive outdoor auditorium.

The last of Sibelius's completed symphonies is played in New York less often than his first or second symphonies and considerably more often than the third or the sixth. It has probably not yet reached the acme of its public appeal. The one-movement form is unusual and can be regarded as a large frame including three or four distinct while interlocking sections which do not detract from the impression of unity given by the entire work. The expressive interpretation by Dr. Koussevitzky's laudable orchestra gave ample revelation of the wide range of color, mood and atmosphere which are presented by this symphony in its twenty-minute course.

The Brahms First Symphony is a good choice for the final offering of a festival; its last movement brings an undeniable sense of completeness, fulfillment and finality. The performance, for the most part, merited the highest praise in execution and interpretative outlook, although for some of the finale the pace was unduly swift, detracting slightly from the dignity of the first theme of the main body of this section. But the momentum of the last pages made them unusually stimulating, and a greatly stirred audience cheered the conductor fervently in repeated recalls.

* * *

Dorothy Maynor, Paul Hindemith and Dr. Koussevitzky shared the ardent manual and vocal applause of Saturday night's huge audience. The Mozart recitative and aria sung by the young Negro soprano, "Bella Mia Fiamma Addio," is not one of Mozart's most inspired contributions to vocal literature, but it served well to domonstrate the remarkable assets of Miss Maynor's voice. This seemed exceptional both in volume and quality; the timbre was exceptionally appealing and maintained a consistent standard of quality except in a few high notes where the tones were not completely focused. A slightly greater degree of vocal brilliance and ability might have been appropriate in the coloratura measures of the aria, but this was a matter of musical style rather than of tone production, which usually gave a sense of evenness and fluency. Her other offering was Beethoven's "Adelaide," presented in Louis Spohr's orchestral arrangement of the accompaniment. Mathison's text for this work is more suitable sung by a man, but Miss Maynor's interpretation gave an impression of expressive sympathy in taste, while also of a certain reserve in this regard. From a vocal point of view it merited praise. The audience hoped for an encore, but the singer, after several recalls, left the stage to the conductor and orchestra for the prelude, "Spinning Music," and the closing adagio from Gabriel Faure's incidental music for Maeterlinck's "Pelleas et Melisande."

Prokofieff's graceful and witty classical symphony was well played by Dr. Koussevitzky's musicians.

Mr. Hindemith's symphony, "Mathis der Maler," which followed, is ceasing to be regarded as a baffling modern work, to judge by the plaudits which followed its performance and the ovation bestowed upon its composer when the conductor brought him to the platform. With increasing acquaintance with the work, matters such as dissonance and polytonality seem no longer particularly prominent in themselves, but are important as one of many features in an integrated style and logical musical structure.

Whether the structure of the work and the course of the composer's musical thought set forth the emotional significance of the score with occasional deviousness is an impression whose confirmation can be left to further hearings. Such an impression occurs infrequently in this remarkable and revelatory score.

The three excerpts from Faure's music for "Pelleas et Melisande" which followed Miss Maynor's songs are melodically ingratiating, but the drama for most of us is so intimately associated with Debussy's music that any other musical interpretation seems ineffective. Respighi's transcription of Bach's C minor Passacaglia and Fugue was set forth with imposing sonority, with perhaps a slight excess of tonal high lights, but its effectiveness was undeniable.

* * *

Saturday's audience of more than 9,000 was estimated to be slightly in excess of the gathering for the previous Saturday, and thus was believed to mark a new record for a Berkshire Festival concert. The total attendance for the nine regular concerts was estimated at 70,000, making an average of about 7,800 for each program as compared with a corresponding figure of 6,000 last year. The grand total, counting the three members' rehearsals and last Friday's Allied Relief Fund benefit, was announced as 88,000.

Serge Koussevitzky

Who concluded this season's Berkshire Symphonic Festival with a concert yesterday at Tanglewood

---

'Living and Working in Music'

W-T. Aug 3, 1940

Koussevitzky's Dream Realized In Berkshires

330 Students Toil for Greater Glory of Cause

By ROBERT BAGAR.

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 3.—It isn't all vacation and music in the Berkshires. The Symphonic Festival is the major attraction, of course, but with the inaugural of the Berkshire Music Center this season the idealistic dreamings of one man have at last found almost full reality. That man is Serge Koussevitzky. And here at the Center some 350 students from all over the country toil unremittingly day after day for the greater glory of the cause of music—both personal and universal.

The Berkshire Music Center really consists of two principal divisions—the institute and the academy. The institute is dedicated to the function of providing advanced teaching to talented pupils. All of those accepted by the board have had to show considerable ability and promise in their special line.

The institute offers courses in conducting — either under Mr. Koussevitzky's personal supervision or under that of principal members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra — composition, opera dramatics and orchestral playing.

* * *

The Academy Courses.

The academy presents a slightly different picture. The courses it offers are open to all "possessing an intelligent interest in music, together with some experience in singing and playing." Its aims are "the constant participation in musical performance by every member of the school."

The Festival chorus, whose membership is drawn from the academy choral students, will sing in the Bach B Minor Mass, the piece de resistance for the last week of the Symphonic Festival.

Strolling through the beautiful grounds of Tanglewood, the 210-acre estate donated by Mrs. Gorham Brooks and Miss Mary Aspinwall Tappan to the Boston Symphony Orchestra, one is struck by the enthusiasm and camaraderie existing among pupils, teachers, functionaries, major and minor, and others.

I had an opportunity to listen to Abram Chasins deliver a lecture on the Bach Mass. Everything about the situation was revealing — the comfortable surroundings, the earnestness of the students. Some of them can be earnest and do their knitting—literally—at the same time.

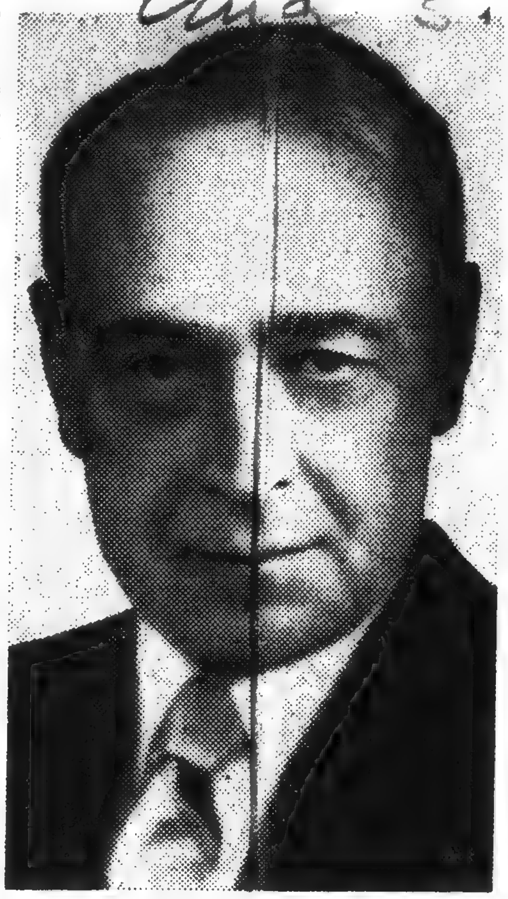
* * *

Truisms Plus Anecdotes.

Mr. Chasins, a glib and entertaining lecturer, punctuated his truisms with many a delightful anecdote. Later Olin Downes, music critic of The New York Times, spoke with much feeling and conviction on the topic of The Integrity of the Critic. He, too, found it not averse to punch a point with a well-chosen mot.

Up to now an utterance of Mr. Koussevitzky's concerning the Center seems well on the way to realization, "Living and Working in Music."

Perhaps it is much too early to make predictions, but somewhere in the scheme of things is the promise that one day the Berkshire Symphonic Festival will have to change its name to the Berkshire Music Festival, offering not only symphonic concerts to its devoted following but also operas, chamber concerts and, possibly, even recitals featuring great artists. All the signs point to it.



Serge Koussevitsky, conductor and guiding genius of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, now in its seventh successive season at Stockbridge, Mass.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
SUN

AUG 24 1940

The Q

Music.

Through the kindness of Col. James E. Leath of Kinderhook, N. Y., the Questers were enabled to attend the closing concerts of the Berkshire Music Festival last Saturday evening and Sunday afternoon. The evening concert was made memorable by the singing of Dorothy Maynor, the Negro soprano, who has the finest voice, the Quester believes, that has been heard in his generation. Dr. and Mrs. Charles Thompson of Hudson, N. Y., were also guests that evening. On Sunday afternoon there was the seventh symphony of Sibelius and in addition the first of Brahms, which of course the Quester, being an incorrigible Brahmsite, thoroughly enjoyed, though he was disposed to quarrel once or twice with the tempi that Dr. Koussevitzky decreed. There were huge audiences at both concerts, representative of all phases of musical culture. At the Sunday afternoon concert Herman Livingston, who, with Mrs. Livingston, was also a guest of Col. Leath, remarked that the audience seemed to be equally divided between the Social Register and Camp Comfy. After each concert there was a stop at the Pyrenees on Lake Queechy, where Jean Ponsell and Mme. Marie ministered to the needs of their guests more than satisfactorily.

* * *

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
SUNDAY UNION
& REPUBLICAN

AUG 18 1940

Final Symphony Concert Today in Berkshire Hills Turns Attention to Fall

Close of Berkshire Musical Period Is Peak of Mid-Summer Season—Real Season Comes in Autumn With Weddings, Sporting Events and Many Week-end Parties — Lenox Dog Show Will Be Held the 31st With Great Barrington Show the Next Day — Memorial Trophy to Be Offered at Lenox Show by Mrs Frederick Sharer Crofts in Cocker Spaniel Class—Ascension Farm School at South Lee Will Have Annual Tea and Field Day the 29th and Annual Bazar for Benefit of School September 14 — Wyantenuck Ball Last Night

Special Dispatch to The Sunday Union and Republican.

BERKSHIRE HILLS, Aug. 17—While the peak of the mid-summer Berkshire musical period is being reached this weekend with the eighth concert tonight by the Boston Symphony orchestra and the final one tomorrow afternoon, the real Berkshire season comes in the autumn with weddings, sporting events and many weekend parties to the fore. On Saturday, the 31st, the Lenox dog show is being held with the Great Barrington Kennel club exhibition the following day. Fully 600 dogs are expected to be entered for each show.

Berkshire Farewell

Aug 19, 1940
Boston Transcript

Brahms, Sibelius and Haydn Symphonies Are Heard in Final Concert of Seventh Festival

By EDWARD DOWNES

LENOX, Aug. 18—There was affection as well as enthusiasm in the cheers with which the last audience of the Berkshire Festival said good-bye to Dr. Koussevitzky and his men in the Music Shed at "Tanglewood" this afternoon. After the noble chorale and the headlong, frantic jubilation that are the crown and end of Brahms' First Symphony, listeners, instead of rushing as one man to the parked cars outside, stayed to stamp, whistle, clap their hands, wave handkerchiefs and shout their thanks for six weeks of great music, greatly interpreted by a great orchestra. Enthusiasm was dampened not at all by a sprinkling of rain which had briefly doused festival fans on their way across the lawn to refreshment tents during the intermission. The sun was out before the music began again and throbbing tympani of the Symphony's opening measures caught the vast audience in the ban of one of Koussevitzky's most famous interpretation.

The Brahms First was an ideal work to close the festival and Koussevitzky—though the combination of nine concerts, their attendant rehearsals, and conducting classes would have been a severe drain on a lesser man's energy—was in good form. The slow movement had a wonderful spaciousness and breadth of utterance. Amid the Berkshire woods and hills the famous horn of the last movement was more than usually reminiscent of the Alpine calls from which Brahms' inspiration for this passage came. The closing Allegro sounded perhaps more briskly than usual, with emphasis on Brahms' own direction: "con brio."

A powerful reading of Jan Sibelius Seventh Symphony and Haydn's more familiar G major Symphony, No. 88, made up the first half of today's program. The crystalline musical patterns in the first three movements of the Haydn, Koussevitzky moulded with magnificent style and the distinction of utter simplicity. The last movement, however, though it was a thrilling feat of precision and delicacy, was more of a presto than an allegro, and by so much, wide of the composer's mark.

Saturday's Concert

The greatest demonstration for any artist of the entire festival was given last night to Dorothy Maynor, the now famous Negro soprano, whose fairy-tale career began here at "Tanglewood" just one year ago, under the protection of Dr. Koussevitzky.

It was at last year's Boston Symphony picnic that Koussevitzky introduced to his men a shy young Negro soprano of velvet voice, sensitive artistic intuition. The orchestra men and a few outside guests shared Dr. Koussevitzky's enthusiasm over her informal picnic recital, and word of a great new discovery spread through the musical world. She sang last fall at a private tea for the Friends of the Boston Symphony, and last winter made her formal New York debut at which she was overwhelmed by avalanches of applause from New York's musical cognoscenti. Her Boston debut last winter at a Boston Symphony Pension Fund Concert confirmed her position as one of the foremost singers of our day.

Last night she sang Beethoven's "Adelaide" and Mozart's great concert aria, "Bell mia fiamma," which was written during the composer's happy days at Prague after the success of "Don Giovanni." In the short space of time since her Boston appearance, Miss Maynor has grown in artistic authority and repose. The recitative to the Mozart had a truly dramatic texture. She understood and conveyed the deep feeling with which Mozart transcended the rococo heroics of the text, and the aria itself, one of Mozart's greatest, amazed with its unconventionality, the depth and poignance of its emotion.

From the vocal point of view, "Adelaide" was the more perfect of Miss Maynor's offerings. For now, as last winter, her sustained pianissimo singing is her most sensational single achievement.

Saturday's program was unusually varied. Aside from the two soprano arias, it brought a particularly sympathetic performance under Koussevitzky of the suite from Faure's diaphonous Stage Music to "Pelleas et Melisande," Respighi's circusy transcription of Bach's great C minor organ Passacaglia and two twentieth century masterpieces: Prokofieff's "Classical" Symphony and Hindemith's Symphony, "Mathis der Maler."

Probably there is no other orchestra and conductor in the world so well suited to communicate the delicate, affectionate persiflage of the "Classical" Symphony. And there are few who could approach the incandescence of yesterday's performance in the Hindemith. These selections from "Mathis der Maler" grow in stature with each hearing.

120

Koussevitzky Is One Busy Man

By LOUIS BIANCOLLI.

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 10.—On every lawn, in every classroom, in the concert shed, on everybody's lips one name recurs—Serge Koussevitzky—Dr. Koussevitzky to Berkshirites.

The name is written large on this music center. In fact, from the lowest foothills to the topmost peak of these lovely highlands Serge Koussevitzky is a synonym for music and musicianship.

He is the busiest man here. Conductor, teacher, supervisor, co-ordinator, guiding spirit, Dr. Koussevitzky is always on the go. The actual concerts are only one small part of his routine.

During the symphonic festival Dr. Koussevitzky is at the shed at 9:30 rehearsing the Boston Symphony. This occurs four times a week—Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday. A special rehearsal on Saturday morning is open to members of the festival. Rehearsals go on usually for three hours.

* * *

Follows Busy Schedule.

Dr. Koussevitzsky gives them everything. All observers agree the keynote is artistic discipline. He expects the best and gets it. He is usually calm and even tempered. After 16 year's association the men are attuned to his ways and few snags develop. No fits of fury, few harsh words—anyway not in this green paradise.

He rests and lunches from 12:30 to 2:30 on his estate three-quarters of a mile up the hills, called Bald Head. The place is heavenly. It overlooks Tanglewood and takes in a rolling vista of lake and hills.

At 2:30 he jumps into his car and returns to headquarters. He commutes between two classrooms, both devoted to conducting.

One is on the ground floor. He enters that first. Thirty conductorial aspirants assemble there and await the master. There are two pianos. Two students sit at them and run through a symphonic score, while a third wields a baton over them.

Dr. Koussevitzky speaks, crisply, to the point. Technic, interpretation, tradition are part of his teaching. Sometimes Paul Hindemith and Aaron Copland of the composition faculty come in to present the composer's point of view.

This is the general class. The instruction is largely in groups. The final personal touch is reserved for room No. 2 on the second floor. That's where Dr. Koussevitzky's five "participating conductors" are admitted to the al secrets.

he room is small, equipped h a baby upright, a phonoph and three large mirrors, movable. The first question ask is, "Why the mirrors? The wer is if more conductors mased their art that way they htn't make such monkeys of nselves on the podium.

* * *

se Held Imperative.

. Koussevitzky believes in poise. Berkshire Music Center hired ymnast" for the purpose and no baton-swinging student is going to leave this place a block of wood or a weeping willow.

Dr. Koussevitzky works individually in this room—that is, he confines himself with one of the chosen five at the time. The student "conducts" a recording. Whatever it is that spells orchestral magic is passed on here. No one else is admitted, not even a New York reporter.

At 4 Dr. Koussevitzky walks across the lawn to the shed for a rehearsal with the Institute Orchestra, which he supervises. These are advanced students working at the Center. All thirty members of the conducting class are there, including the quintet of "participating conductors." Also present are the "professors" of the Boston Symphony Orchestra—the first-desk men. These first-desk men have helped train the members of the student orchestra. What it amounts to is that players are watching players and conductors are watching conductors.

And this is where the five young directors get a crack at the real stuff, with the master viewing them sharply. Beside Dr. Koussevitzky, who keeps his eye on the baton, are concertmaster Richard Burgin, watching the violins; Georges Mager, watching the trumpets; Mr. Raichman, keeping tabs on the trombones, and so on down the line.

Of course, on the day of the concert Dr. Koussevitzky goes straight home after morning rehearsals and there's no seeing him until he strides out for the first number on the program. When he's not on the grounds Dr. Koussevitzky is at home. He never goes anywhere. Mrs. Koussevitzky is ill and has been confined to their beautiful home high above Tanglewood.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM

AUG 24 1940

KOUSSEVITZKY TALKS OF HIS DREAM

Tanglewood Idea Nursed 30 Years

Now He Hopes For New Operas

By LOUIS BIANCOLLI.

Serge Koussevitzky.

Up at Tanglewood one blistering afternoon Serge Koussevitzky laid down his baton after a three-hour rehearsal session with the Boston Symphony and came bac[illegible] talk about his dream of a music center.

"My hope is this," he said. "Now we have the concerts and the school. We have a junior orchestra and orchestra classes for higher studies. We have conducting and opera classes. We have drama classes and composition classes. We have some of the best composers and lecturers.

"I hope to have operas very soon. I hope to create a new tragedy on the principles of ancient Greek tragedy. I hope to bring together in Tanglewood the greatest writers, the greatest musicians, the great painters to work with one another in creating a new tragic form growing out of our life."

He paused to wipe his forehead. He looked tense and eager, like a visionary with a gleam of the future.

* * *

Project Needs Money.

"But that belongs to tomorrow," he went on. "At present we cannot afford to dream too much. We have no money. We must go very slowly, very slowly. Go to hear our operatic program and you will see what is happening. And the conducting classes—I assure you that in five years Tanglewood will give several first-class conductors to America."

Mr. Koussevitzky said he had hugged this dream of a musico-dramatic center for more than 30 years. The idea first came to him in his native Russia and by 1933 things were moving rapidly toward fulfillment.

"Musicians, writers, poets and painters had promised to cooperate with me," he said. "Men like Tanieff, Busoni and Scriabin indicated their willingness to join with me in organizing this new thing.

"Then came the War and the Revolution to put a stop to our plans. I came to America. Soon I realized that America was just the place for such an undertaking. I talked with many people, with the trustees of the Boston Symphony, and then came the gift of Tanglewood.

* * *

Dream Coming True.

"It is the dream of my life coming true. I am convinced that if we have the resources to carry on America will have in Tanglewood a music center and festival second to none in the world."

Mr. Koussevitzky and his men were in the midst of the Beethoven-Tschaikowsky part of the symphonic festival. The conductor had just seen his men through the last movement of Tschaikowsky's Fifth Symphony and the question of putting both composers on the same programs came up.

"My purpose was to show the public, the critics and musicians, that Tschaikowsky loses nothing on the same program with Beethoven. Tschaikowsky was one of the greatest composers, and since we cannot compare the greatness of one genius with that of another, Tschaikowsky was as great in his way as any other.

* * *

Tschaikowsky's Music.

"I am often told that Tschaikowsky sounds better than he really is when my orchestra performs him. This is an exaggeration. I cannot bring more than is in the score. If people play bad Tschaikowsky it is not Tschaikowsky's fault. It is the performers' fault."

Mr. Koussevitzky was reminded that to certain listeners Tschaikowsky's music sounded "hysterical," especially the Pathetic Symphony. That made him bristle.

"Please put this down," he said. "Hysterical are those people who hear hysteria in this music and become themselves hysterical.

"Tschaikowsky is sometimes brutal in his music. But art permits brutality if it is sincere. Take the last movement of the Fourth. It is very brutal. No one will deny that. But it is so sincere that everyone accepts the brutality, is excited by it.

* * *

Art and the Emotions.

"No one has the right to limit art to the noble emotions. There is room for all emotions, however violent.

"Another remark I often hear is that Tschaikowsky's emotionalism is some special kind of Russian emotionalism. That is not true. It is a world emotion, a universal emotion. Believing and practicing the other thing is one reason why some people go mad.

"If Tschaikowsky's emotions were special to him as a Russian, how could we account for the behavior of the audience last night, the great outburst of enthusiasm after the finale? Tschaikowsky's message, like that of any great artist, has universal appeal.

"Of course, Tschaikowsky is a great individualist, as is every creative genius. He is extremely personal. He expresses this universal emotion in his own language."

THIS CLIPPING FROM
N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT

AUG 19 1940

Koussevitzky Acclaimed As 1940 Festival Closes

Enthusiastic Demonstration Ends Most Successful Season—Records Show Aggregate Attendance of 70,000 at Nine Concerts—Surplus to be Used for Tanglewood Improvements — Outstanding Performances Mark Boston Symphony's Last Two Concerts—Dorothy Maynor Scores Triumph as Soloist.

With a superb rendition of Brahms' monumental First symphony, the Boston Symphony orchestra and ~~its conductor, Dr.~~ Serge Koussevitzky, last night rang down the curtain on the seventh, and most successful Berkshire Symphonic festival.

Artistically, this year's festival has in every respect been equal to the high standards set in previous years, and the inauguration this year of the Berkshire Music center has broadened the importance of the Festival in the musical life of America. Financially, the festival this year surpassed the fondest hopes of its sponsors.

Total Attendance 70,000

George W. Edman, clerk, yesterday announced that the total attendance at the nine concerts was about 70,000. He said that 18,000 persons attended the first series, 27,000 the second series and 25,000 the third series. These figures indicate that in some cases attendance at individual concerts was greater than announced previously.

In addition, Mr. Edman said, the three Saturday morning rehearsals open to patrons, members and high school students, attracted 10,000 persons, and the Allied Relief benefit program Friday was attended by 8,000.

Surplus to Enclose Shed

For the fifth consecutive year, Mr. Edman said, the season closed with a surplus, which will probably mean that by next year the huge music shed will be equipped with rolling shutters which will protect it in the winter and will protect the audience during the concerts from heavy showers. Toilet facilities will also be increased and more fence will be erected.

The concert yesterday afternoon was unique in the respect that it was the only one during which rain fell this year. Although in past years at least one concert annually has been somewhat marred by a heavy downpour, weather conditions which could not have been more perfect prevailed for the entire festival this year until yesterday, when slight showers forced all attendants temporarily inside the shed but did not interfere with the music.

Big Crowd Cheers Conductor

Attendance yesterday was 8,000, while the varied program Saturday night attracted approximately 9,000 persons. The scene yesterday was one which has become familiar to thousands of music lovers from all over the country. Because of showers just before the concert started, and during the intermission, the benches ordinarily left outside were placed in the wide promenade along the sides and rear of the shed.

When the concert ended yesterday the audience arose and gave a tremendous ovation to Dr. Koussevitzky and his musicians, in a final expression of the enthusiasm which has been apparent throughout the festival.

Dorothy Maynor Hailed

Adding to the interest of the Saturday night concert was the appearance of Dorothy Maynor, Negro soprano, whose career really started just a year ago at Tanglewood. Invited then to sing at the picnic which Dr. Koussevitzky gave for members of the orchestra, she was immediately acclaimed by the maestro and others prominent in the music world as a "find". Since then she has had phenominal success on the concert stage and is now recognized as one of America's finest artists.

Closing Program Pleases

Yesterday's program was not calculated to provide a climatic finale to the festival, but was, nevertheless, one of the most satisfying of all the selections offered this year.

Opening with one of the most appealing and typical symphonies of Haydn, the G major, No. 88, Dr. Koussevitzky then jumped from the originator of the symphony to the leading modern exponent of this form, Sibelius. Although the Sibelius Seventh, played in one movement, is not yet as familiar to most Americans as his earlier symphonies it contains much of the power and originality which have gained for the Finnish composer in his lifetime a place among the immortal symphonists. An ideal selection to close the festival was the triumphant First symphony of Brahms, which was performed with true inspiration.

Moderns Get Hearing

As is his custom, Dr. Koussevitzky gave his listeners this summer an opportunity to hear some of the modern works which are making their mark in the world, in addition to classics which can never be repeated too often. Among the "novelties" this year were Roy Harris's Symphony No. 3, and Stravinsky's Capriccio, in which the piano part was brilliantly played by Jess Maria Sanroma. The programs also included well-established works of Debussy and Ravel.

In honor of the 100th anniversary of Tchaikovsky's death, three of his symphonies were played during the second series, with lighter works of Beethoven furnishing suitable contrast.

Further variety was provided by the participation of two outstanding instrumental soloists, Albert Spalding, violinist, and Gregor Piatigorsky, 'cellist.

The organization of the Music center, to give students of music both professional and amateur, an opportunity to study and play with leading musicians and musical authorities, made possible the presentation of Bach's B minor Mass, in which the Festival chorus, organized as one of the activities of the center, performed superbly. The soloists were Alexander Kipnis, Elisabeth Schumann, Viola Silva and William Hain.

Plans for 1941 Season

The public was given an opportunity to observe the work of the center during the benefit Friday night, when the students of conducting, orchestral, operatic and choral music all displayed their talents.

Because of the success of the nine concerts this year, the festival will follow the same pattern next year. That the center was also a success is indicated by the fact that applications are already being accepted for next year's session.

This Clipping From
SALT LAKE CITY, UTAH
DESERT NEWS
AUG 24 1940

Visitor

Squire Coop reports on music festival.

Squire Coop Visits S. L.

Squire Coop, director of the Salt Lake Oratorio Society, announced today that it was his "personal desire" that Utah singers be added to the society's roster of soloists.

"Many of the home talent do as well as some of those brought in from the outside," said Mr. Coop as he returned to Slat Lake for a weekend visit en route to Los Angeles after attending the Berkshire Music Festival at Stockridge, Mass. While in the East, he interviewed a number of oratorio singers.

"The best singers of the country do not prepare to sing oratorio well, and it is always difficult to find acceptable soloists and particularly for Salt Lake City, where the public is more difficult to satisfy than anywhere else I know of in the United States," he said. Mr. Coop ventured that the high local standards would produce some exceptional oratorio singers here and he said that Salt Lake should be the "center of oratorio production" in the nation because of its unique religious character and the religious spirit of the people.

Mr. Coop reported that the Berkshire festival had become the most important music festival in the East of late because of the direction of Serge Koussevitzky, maestro of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. He went particularly to observe the production of "the greatest of all choral works," the Bach B minor mass, but was slightly disappointed.

"The choral work, while splendid, did not compare with the Bethlehem, Pa., Bach Choir, which has maturity and body of tone and great religious feeling which the work requires."

The three weeks of concerts by the Boston Symphony was a "revelation of beauty, refinement and Style."

Mr. Coop spent some days in company with Arthur Shepherd, a native Salt Laker who now teaches at Western Reserve University at Cleveland and has become one of the nation's foremost composers of orchestral music.

Up at Tanglewood one blistering afternoon Serge Koussevitzky laid down his baton after a three-hour rehearsal session with the Boston Symphony and came backstage to talk about his dream of a music center, writes Louis Biancolli in the World-Telegram.

"My hope is this," he said. "Now we have the concerts and the school. We have a junior orchestra and orchestra classes for higher studies. We have conducting and opera classes. We have drama classes and composition classes. We have some of the best composers and lecturers.

"I hope to have operas very soon. I hope to create a new tragedy on the principles of ancient Greek tragedy. I hope to bring together in Tanglewood the greatest writers, the greatest musicians, the great painters to work with one another in creating a new tragic form growing out of our life."

He paused to wipe his forehead. He looked tense and eager, like a visionary with a gleam of the future.

"But that belongs to tomorrow," he went on. "At present we cannot afford to dream too much. We have no money. We must go very slowly, very slowly. Go to hear our operatic program and you will see what is happening. And the conducting classes — I assure you that in five years Tanglewood will give several first-class conductors to America."

Mr. Koussevitzky said he had hugged his dream of a musico-dramatic center for more than 30 years. The idea first came to him in his native Russia and by 1933 things were moving rapidly toward fulfillment.

"Musicians, writers, poets and painters had promised to co-operate with me," he said. "Men like Tanieff, Busoni and Scriabin indicated their willingness to join with me in organizing this new thing.

"Then came the War and the Revolution to put a stop to our plans. I came to America. Soon I realized that America was just the place for such an undertaking. I talked with many people, with the trustees of the Boston Symphony, and then came the gift of Tanglewood.

"It is the dream of my life coming true. I am convinced that if we have the resources to carry on America will have in Tanglewood a music center and festival second to none in the world."

Mr. Koussevitzky and his men were in the midst of the Beethoven-Tschaikowsky part of the symphonic festival. The conductor had just seen his men through the last movement of Tschaikowsky's Fifth Symphony and the question of putting moth composers on the same programs came up.

"My purpose was to show the public, the critics and musicians, that Tschaikowsky loses nothing on the same program with Beethoven. Tschaikowsky was one of the greatest composers, and since we cannot compare the greatness of one genius with that of another, Tschaikowsky was as great in his way as any other.

"I am often told that Tschaikowsky sounds better than he really is when my orchestra performs him. This is an exaggeration. I cannot bring more than is in the score. If people play bad Tschaikowsky it is not Tschaikowsky's fault. It is the performer's fault."

Mr. Koussevitzky was reminded that to certain listeners Tschaikowsky's music sounded "hysterical," especially the Pathetic Symphony. That made him bristle.

"Please put this down," he said. "Hysterical are those people who hear hysteria in this music and become themselves hysterical.

"Tschaikowsky is sometimes brutal in his music. But art permits brutality if it is sincere. Take the last movement of the Fourth. It is very brutal. No one will deny that. But it is so sincere that everyone accepts the brutality, is excited by it.

"No one has the right to limit art to the noble emotions. There is room for all emotions, however violent.

"Another remark I often hear is that Tschaikowsky's emotionalism is some special kind of Russian emotionalism. That is not true. It in a world emotion, a universal emotion. Believing and practicing the other thing is one reason why some people go mad.

"If Tschaikowsky's emotions were special to him as a Russian how could we account for the behavior of the audience last night the great outburst of euthusiasm after the finale? Tschaikowsky's message, like that of any great artist, has universal appeal.

"Of course, Tschaikowsky is great individualist, as is every creative genius. He is extremely personal. He expresses this universal emotion in his own language."

THIS CLIPPING FROM
N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT
AUG 19 1940

161

Koussevitzky Acclaimed As 1940 Festival Closes

Enthusiastic Demonstration Ends Most Successful Season—Records Show Aggregate Attendance of 70,000 at Nine Concerts—Surplus to be Used for Tanglewood Improvements — Outstanding Performances Mark Boston Symphony's Last Two Concerts—Dorothy Maynor Scores Triumph as Soloist.

With a superb rendition of Brahms' monumental First symphony, the Boston Symphony orchestra and ~~its conductor, Dr.~~ Serge Koussevitzky, last night rang down the curtain on the seventh, and most successful Berkshire Symphonic festival.

Artistically, this year's festival has in every respect been equal to the high standards set in previous years, and the inauguration this year of the Berkshire Music center has broadened the importance of the Festival in the musical life of America. Financially, the festival this year surpassed the fondest hopes of its sponsors.

Total Attendance 70,000

George W. Edman, clerk, yesterday announced that the total attendance at the nine concerts was about 70,000. He said that 18,000 persons attended the first series, 27,000 the second series and 25,000 the third series. These figures indicate that in some cases attendance at individual concerts was greater than announced previously.

In addition, Mr. Edman said, the three Saturday morning rehearsals open to patrons, members and high school students, attracted 10,000 persons, and the Allied Relief benefit program Friday was attended by 8,000.

Surplus to Enclose Shed

For the fifth consecutive year, Mr. Edman said, the season closed with a surplus, which will probably mean that by next year the huge music shed will be equipped with rolling shutters which will protect it in the winter and will protect the audience during the concerts from heavy showers. Toilet facilities will also be increased and more fence will be erected.

The concert yesterday afternoon was unique in the respect that it was the only one during which rain fell this year. Although in past years at least one concert annually has been somewhat marred by a heavy downpour, weather conditions which could not have been more perfect prevailed for the entire festival this year until yesterday, when slight showers forced all attendants temporarily inside the shed but did not interfere with the music.

Big Crowd Cheers Conductor

Attendance yesterday was 8,000, while the varied program Saturday night attracted approximately 9,000 persons. The scene yesterday was one which has become familiar to thousands of music lovers from all over the country. Because of showers just before the concert started, and during the intermission, the benches ordinarily left outside were placed in the wide promenade along the sides and rear of the shed.

When the concert ended yesterday the audience arose and gave a tremendous ovation to Dr. Koussevitzky and his musicians, in a final expression of the enthusiasm which has been apparent throughout the festival.

Dorothy Maynor Hailed

Adding to the interest of the Saturday night concert was the appearance of Dorothy Maynor, Negro soprano, whose career really started just a year ago at Tanglewood. Invited then to sing at the picnic which Dr. Koussevitzky gave for members of the orchestra, she was immediately acclaimed by the maestro and others prominent in the music world as a "find". Since then she has had phenominal success on the concert stage and is now recognized as one of America's finest artists.

Closing Program Pleases

Yesterday's program was not calculated to provide a climatic finale to the festival, but was, nevertheless, one of the most satisfying of all the selections offered this year.

Opening with one of the most appealing and typical symphonies of Haydn, the G major, No. 88, Dr. Koussevitzky then jumped from the originator of the symphony to the leading modern exponent of this form, Sibelius. Although the Sibelius Seventh, played in one movement, is not yet as familiar to most Americans as his earlier symphonies it contains much of the power and originality which have gained for the Finnish composer in his lifetime a place among the immortal symphonists. An ideal selection to close the festival was the triumphant First symphony of Brahms, which was performed with true inspiration.

Moderns Get Hearing

As is his custom, Dr. Koussevitzky gave his listeners this summer an opportunity to hear some of the modern works which are making their mark in the world, in addition to classics which can never be repeated too often. Among the "novelties" this year were Roy Harris's Symphony No. 3, and Stravinsky's Capriccio, in which the piano part was brilliantly played by Jess Maria Sanroma. The programs also included well-established works of Debussy and Ravel.

In honor of the 100th anniversary of Tchaikovsky's death, three of his symphonies were played during the second series, with lighter works of Beethoven furnishing suitable contrast.

Further variety was provided by the participation of two outstanding instrumental soloists, Albert Spalding, violinist, and Gregor Piatigorsky, 'cellist.

The organization of the Musi center, to give students of music both professional and amateur, ar opportunity to study and play witl leading musicians and musical authorities, made possible the presentation of Bach's B minor Mass, ir which the Festival chorus, organizec as one of the activities of the center, performed superbly. The soloists were Alexander Kipnis, Elisabeth Schumann, Viola Silva anc William Hain.

Plans for 1941 Season

The public was given an opportunity to observe the work of th center during the benefit Frida night, when the students of conducting, orchestral, operatic anc choral music all displayed their talents.

Because of the success of the nin concerts this year, the festival wi follow the same pattern next yea That the center was also a succes is indicated by the fact that applications are already being accepted for next year's session.

This Clipping From
SALT LAKE CITY, UTAH
DESERT NEWS
AUG 24 1940

Visitor

Squire Coop reports on music festival.

Squire Coop Visits S. L.

Squire Coop, director of the Salt Lake Oratorio Society, announced today that it was his "personal desire" that Utah singers be added to the society's roster of soloists.

"Many of the home talent do as well as some of those brought in from the outside," said Mr. Coop as he returned to Slat Lake for a weekend visit en route to Los Angeles after attending the Berkshire Music Festival at Stockridge, Mass. While in the East, he interviewed a number of oratorio singers.

"The best singers of the country do not prepare to sing oratorio well, and it is always difficult to find acceptable soloists and particularly for Salt Lake City, where the public is more difficult to satisfy than anywhere else I know of in the United States," he said. Mr. Coop ventured that the high local standards would produce some exceptional oratorio singers here and he said that Salt Lake should be the "center of oratorio production" in the nation because of its unique religious character and the religious spirit of the people.

Mr. Coop reported that the Berkshire festival had become the most important music festival in the East of late because of the direction of Serge Koussevitzky, maestro of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. He went particularly to observe the production of "the greatest of all choral works," the Bach B minor mass, but was slightly disappointed.

"The choral work, while splendid, did not compare with the Bethlehem, Pa., Bach Choir, which has maturity and body of tone and great religious feeling which the work requires."

The three weeks of concerts by the Boston Symphony was a "revelation of beauty, refinement and Style."

Mr. Coop spent some days in company with Arthur Shepherd, a native Salt Laker who now teaches at Western Reserve University at Cleveland and has become one of the nation's foremost composers of orchestral music.

Up at Tanglewood one blistering afternoon Serge Koussevitzky laid down his baton after a three-hour rehearsal session with the Boston Symphony and came backstage to talk about his dream of a music center, writes Louis Biancolli in the World-Telegram.

"My hope is this," he said. "Now we have the concerts and the school. We have a junior orchestra and orchestra classes for higher studies. We have conducting and opera classes. We have drama classes and composition classes. We have some of the best composers and lecturers.

"I hope to have operas very soon. I hope to create a new tragedy on the principles of ancient Greek tragedy. I hope to bring together in Tanglewood the greatest writers, the greatest musicians, the great painters to work with one another in creating a new tragic form growing out of our life."

He paused to wipe his forehead. He looked tense and eager, like a visionary with a gleam of the future.

"But that belongs to tomorrow," he went on. "At present we cannot afford to dream too much. We have no money. We must go very slowly, very slowly. Go to hear our operatic program and you will see what is happening. And the conducting classes — I assure you that in five years Tanglewood will give several first-class conductors to America."

Mr. Koussevitzky said he had hugged his dream of a musico-dramatic center for more than 30 years. The idea first came to him in his native Russia and by 1933 things were moving rapidly toward fulfillment.

"Musicians, writers, poets and painters had promised to co-operate with me," he said. "Men like Tanieff, Busoni and Scriabin indicated their willingness to join with me in organizing this new thing.

"Then came the War and the Revolution to put a stop to our plans. I came to America. Soon I realized that America was just the place for such an undertaking. I talked with many people, with the trustees of the Boston Symphony, and then came the gift of Tanglewood.

"It is the dream of my life coming true. I am convinced that if we have the resources to carry on America will have in Tanglewood a music center and festival second to none in the world."

Mr. Koussevitzky and his men were in the midst of the Beethoven-Tschaikowsky part of the symphonic festival. The conductor had just seen his men through the last movement of Tschaikowsky's Fifth Symphony and the question of putting moth composers on the same programs came up.

"My purpose was to show the public, the critics and musicians, that Tschaikowsky loses nothing on the same program with Beethoven. Tschaikowsky was one of the greatest composers, and since we cannot compare the greatness of one genius with that of another, Tschaikowsky was as great in his way as any other.

"I am often told that Tschaikowsky sounds better than he really is when my orchestra performs him. This is an exaggeration. I cannot bring more than is in the score. If people play bad Tschaikowsky it is not Tschaikowsky's fault. It is the performer's fault."

Mr. Koussevitzky was reminded that to certain listeners Tschaikowsky's music sounded "hysterical," especially the Pathetic Symphony. That made him bristle.

"Please put this down," he said. "Hysterical are those people who hear hysteria in this music and become themselves hysterical.

"Tschaikowsky is sometimes brutal in his music. But art permits brutality if it is sincere. Take the last movement of the Fourth. It is very brutal. No one will deny that. But it is so sincere that everyone accepts the brutality, is excited by it.

"No one has the right to limit art to the noble emotions. There is room for all emotions, however violent.

"Another remark I often hear is that Tschaikowsky's emotionalism is some special kind of Russian emotionalism. That is not true. It in a world emotion, a universal emotion. Believing and practicing the other thing is one reason why some people go mad.

"If Tschaikowsky's emotions were special to him as a Russian how could we account for the behavior of the audience last night the great outburst of euthusiasn after the finale? Tschaikowsky' message, like that of any great ai tist, has universal appeal.

"Of course, Tschaikowsky is great individualist, as is every cr ative genius. He is extremely pe sonal. He expresses this univers emotion in his own language."

HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES
AUG 1 9 1940

Music:

Seventh Annual Festival Closes At Tanglewood

By Carl E. Lindstrom

No music festival can be all things to all men but the phenomenon of Tanglewood is that the Berkshire Symphonic Festival can successfully be a number of different things to so many.

The seventh annual series which closed Sunday afternoon had seen several peaks in the usual symphonic excitement, a choral presentation of historic proportions in Bach's B minor Mass which engrossed 7,500 listeners, a musical carnival of Lucullan diversity that enlisted the political sympathies of a throng in behalf of the Allied Relief Fund and individual triumphs of a glamorous order for Paul Hindemith and Dorothy Maynor on Saturday night, not to stress the ever present ground tone of applause for the person of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, whose genius energizes the whole proceeding.

The appeal of all these things is diverse but there were no dips and spurts in the graph of the general success. The weather, about which there could be only a single wish, was unblemished for the duration although a cloudy sky yesterday may have prevented the attendance from reaching the record figure of 8,600 a week ago. There was a brief wash of rain during intermission.

All of the numbers on Sunday's program had been heard before in these concerts, Haydn's G major Symphony No. 88, of which Koussevitzky's interpretation is an especially happy one, Sibelius' closely-woven Seventh Symphony and the First of Brahms, a proclamative reading of which sent the crowd away to await another season.

* * *

Dorothy Maynor has come a long way since her discovery by Dr. Koussevitzky a year ago. She has, of course, already reached an imposing artistic stature and there is no need to look for promise; her art is a reality. There are refinements about her execution, however, that were not apparent during the winter.

She sings out of a measureless calm and self-possession and this in conjunction with the perfect control over a stream of very lovely tone makes her a singularly satisfying and restful singer to listen to. She has the detachment of a seeress and an essential religiosity before the nobility of the music. Her attitude toward the Mozart aria, "Bella mia fiamma, addio!" and Beethoven's "Adelaide" was like the profound bow which she made to Koussevitzky himself, as though she were oblivious of the clamoring thousands. The ovation for her swelled beyond anything yet heard at Tanglewood and she was called back repeatedly, each time acknowledging the din with a sweet and humble gravity.

Her voice had purity and sustained power. Initial tones usually were lustrous and buoyant except when attacked with force. A beautiful, pervasive legato informed both of her arias.

The remainder of Saturday's oddly assorted program was devoted to a deft performance of Prokofief's "Classical Symphony," Faure's "Pelleas and Melisande" suite and Respighi's ponderous transcription of Bach's C minor Passacaglia.

* * *

The acclaim for Hindemith after the "Mathis der Maler" triptych was scarcely second to the singer's reception. It was not the courtesy applause always granted a present composer, but seemed to be generated by the warmth and understanding produced by his music in the hearts of the deeply-moved listeners.

Hindemith's magnificent score was recreated with a wealth of tonal resources ingeniously applied. Its dissonances, usually so politely endured, were understood and assimilated as part of the emotional experience. The drama, the eloquence and the sincerity of the work came home with profound effect.

It might have been doubted that an audience whose metabolism was adjusted to such a revelation could be swayed by the relatively conventional fare of Sunday afternoon. Perhaps it was a different audience but that is not likely since weather uncertainties probably drove away any who might have come to Tanglewood because of the enticements as direct and genuine as the Hindemith score.

* * *

Koussevitzky's performance is individual and provocative. He allows himself great freedom in tempos, not hesitating to linger over the ripely lyrical parts as for instance in the slow movement and in long stretches of the first movement. The processional, hymn-like theme of the finale was more quickly taken than is the usual habit and a grand climax found which stirred the audience to a demonstration of suitable heartiness for the conclusion of an extremely successful festival.

The Sibelius symphony was conceived in epical terms. Its coloring was enchantingly managed and the details fashioned con amore but the heroic ground plan was inexorably drawn and the impact of one of the greatest of modern symphonies registered with triumphant effect.

It was a typical Koussevitzky concert, and none of these is complete without such a Haydn symphony as this G major which has been heard at Bushnell. This is the one, you remember, in which Koussevitzky will stand motionless for seconds on end and pridefully watch his peerless orchestra whirl through the bubbling patterns of Haydn as though possessed.

It was a brilliant, evocative concert and it set the seal on

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN
AUG 1 9 1940

CHOICEST MUSIC SAVED FOR LAST AT TANGLEWOOD

Superlative Production of Favorite Symphonies Marks Final Program of 1940 Berkshire Festival

By Francis Regal

Stockbridge Aug. 18—Casual showers did not interfere in the least with the success of the ninth and last concert of the seventh Berkshire Symphonic festival, given this afternoon by the Boston Symphony orchestra conducted by ~~Dr Serge Koussevitzky.~~ Seats for the overflow audience were shifted from the lawn outside to the shelter of the wide promenade, but shelter was hardly needed, and the showers circulating in fantastic patterns over the Berkshire hills so cleared and cooled the air as to make this another perfect day for music. Visitors to Berkshire will leave with glowing memories both of the festival and of its climate.

For the final concert Mr Koussevitzky had saved some of the choicest things, while avoiding the appearance of closing with a bang. All the fireworks were put into the gala performance Friday for the benefit of the allied relief fund, and the fireworks then were quite literal fireworks which disconcertingly got touched off a little before their turn came on the program. The festival otherwise has been musically rather more sober than usual, yet has held the absorbed attention of record-breaking audiences in spite of the increase in the number of concerts from six to nine

Favorite Symphonies

A quiet program marked the opening of the festival on August 1, and the closing concert was equally free from sensationalism except for the thrill given by superlative production of favorite symphonies. The one by Haydn in G-major (No 88), which came first, is one of the most universally known and admired of all his works. As played by the virtuosi of the Boston orchestra every tone was delicious and refreshing; such music does not age.

Of contemporary symphonies the most admired are coming to be those of the Finnish composer Jan Sibelius, and while the seventh, which was played today may not yet be so well known as some of its predecessors, it is fast becoming a prime favorite. "Symphonie fantasia" the composer at first thought of calling it, and it differs from other symphonies sufficiently to have warranted the designation.

Cast in one vast movement and organized on the boldly original lines which Sibelius had been developing in his earlier symphonies and in experimented works, it is logical in structure, varied in interest and powerfully emotional when given as Mr Koussevitzky and his musicians gave it today.

The tremendous forte passages for the brass instruments were as thrilling as the strident outbursts in Hindemith's "Matthias the Painter," the performance of which last night was one of the high spots in the festival and must have delighted the composer, who received an ovation at the close.

Shed Is Excellent

The shed is excellent for all kinds of music but almost uniquely excellent for works containing both delicate passages of ethereal beauty and the titanic force of brass and percussion used to the limit of tolerance. Indoors shatter-proof glass might be needed; the Berkshire festival is sufficiently outdoors for the brass to clash and the drums to bray with magnificent freedom. Yet even through the fanfare the pure golden thread of the violins comes out clear and beautiful.

To close both concert and festival Mr Koussevitzky had wisely reserved the first symphony by Brahms, a work which combines depth and inwardness with grandeur and an exultant power which this diffident and gifted composer sometimes lacked. Each year adds to the host of its admirers and those who come to love it never renounce their allegiance. The sober well-considered fabric of Brahms wears well. This work was a specially fortunate choice for the climax and close of a great festival because of the mighty and inspiring sweep of the majestic lyric theme of the finale; there could hardly have been a more exalted last word than today's audience had to carry away with them.

Purpose Well Served

The fundamental purpose of the festivals, to present, as excellently as possible, a large number of great symphonies, has been well served this year, although the programs have been unusual because of the large space given to Tschaikowsky in commemoration of the 100th year of his birth. Not much has been done with novelties or with "contemporary" music, but the short symphony in one movement by Roy Harris, No 3, was well liked, Stravinsky's capriccio for orchestra with piano solo delighted the audience, partly because of the dazzling performance of the piano part by Jesus Maria Sanroma, and even listeners who thought Hindemith's dramatic scenes from "Matthias the Painter" too modern found themselves yielding to the spell of the orchestra's marvelous performance.

Dorothy Maynor

The nearest approach to the star system which has been the bane of many festivals was the appearance of Dorothy Maynor, but that gifted singer ~~adhered to the~~ high classical level with a Mozart concert aria and Beethoven's great song "Adelaide," the notorious difficulties of which vanished in the flawless and enchanting interpretation. Dorothy Maynor holds a special place in the regard of Berkshire festival goers because it was at a previous festival that her exceptional talent was discovered and made known to the musical world; her rapid success has been gratifying.

The only concerto included in this year's programs has been the great violin concerto by Beethoven, which was finely played by Albert Spalding. The piano part in the Stravinsky capriccio is practically equivalent, however, to the solo part of a concerto, and Mr Sanroma played it with amazing virtuosity.

The famous Russian violoncellist Gregor Piatgorsky, who also contributed the Boecherini concerto to the gala performance, was heard in one of the regular programs in a superb interpretation of the solo part representing the sorrowful knight in the tone poem "Don Quixote" by Richard Strauss. Altogether the musical fare has been varied as well as rich.

Conductor and Protegee in Conference

DR. SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY and Dorothy Maynor, noted soprano whom he started on the road to fame, chat in the green room. Miss Maynor was Saturday evening's soloist at the Berkshire Festival of the Boston Symphony.

This Clipping From
HARTFORD, CONN.
COURANT
AUG 1 9 1940

7th Festival Finishes At Stockbridge

Koussevitzky, Bostonians ~~Give Superb~~ Farewell of Haydn 88, Sibelius 7th and Brahms 1st

BY T. H. PARKER.

Stockbridge, Mass., Aug. 18.—With Dr. Serge Koussevitzky smilingly saluting his tumultuous admirers, and a handsome performance by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the seventh Berkshire Festival closed at Tanglewood here this afternoon.

Roseate with gratification and his labors, surrounded by his orchestra men clutching their instruments, and confronted by an ecstatic audience, the imperial conductor bowed and waved in answer to the swelling chorus of cheers and the din of applause. Each time he sought to escape offstage, the insistent storm of hand-clapping brought him back. Each time he returned, the shouts went up again. It may still be going on, for all this courier can say, having left after the tenth round. It was a great and gaudy leave-taking, and it sprang from love and affection. People don't stand on their chairs, clap their hands over their heads, and shout themselves frothy for music alone. They're pretty tender about their Doctor.

It had been by all odds the most successful season in a gallant Festival history. Nine concerts instead of the recent six, a galaxy of soloists, choral occasions for the first time. Record attendance, with the merry men in the box office ticking off 9000 persons several times and packing the folding money into the till accordingly. Certainly the loudest and longest huzza-ing. And except for a few moments this afternoon right spung in the middle of intermission, no rain. The weepy clouds hung up in the hills all day, but some powerful medicine held them in check. Red letter Festival.

Dr. Koussevitzky offered his final audience of the season one of his marvelously tailored programs, opening with the Haydn Symphony No. 88, going on the Sibelius Symphony No. 7, and closing with the Brahms First.

Sibelius Reception.

There was, according to grapevine report, just one eensy-teensy shadow over the farewelling. Dr. Koussevitzky was disappointed at the moderate reception given the Sibelius, one of my agents reports. The house applauded the work briskly, but stopped soon and as briskly departed.

They departed, the bulk of them, for the refreshment tent, and taking into consideration the heat, perhaps the situation is understandable, if regrettable. Yet Dr. Koussevitzky's disappointment is equally understandable, for to your corerspondent, at least, no other work of the entire series, was as ingratiating, as fascinating or as delicious on the ear and spirit, as this one-movement Sibelius.

The astonishing technical achievement represented by this Seventh Symphony has of course often been remarked. The Boston Symphony's annotator, John N. Burk, on occasion turned to Cecil Grey for a description of it which he admired:

"The resourceful way in which these (thematic motives) are varied, developed, juxtaposed, permuted and combined into a continuous and homogeneous texture is one of the miracles of modern music," Mr. Grey had written. "The Seventh shows Sibelius as the summit of his powers in respect of fecundity of invention and subtlety and intricacy of design. It is a work of great expressive beauty, of a lofty grandeur and dignity, a truly Olympian serenity and repose. . ."

With all of this I enormously concur, except that the word "Olympian" seems to connote a remoteness, and apartness, which is just opposite to how it strikes me. In all the Sibelius literature is there any work so Keatsian, so directly, thoroughly and personally communicative as this? I doubt it. "Olympian" hardly seems to describe the incredibly intimate lyricism of this marvelously beautiful symphony.

Superlative Haydn, Brahms.

There is no longer any need of describing the way in which Dr. Koussevitzky does Haydn or Brahms. His Haydn is absolutely superlative and no other conductor comes within a mile of it, for transparency, for verve, for piquant humors, for humanness. His Brahms has the texture of heavy satin, and a richness that can almost be tasted, and a spirit as Olympian as Cecil Grey could ask for. In both the German scores, Dr. Koussevitzky was at his miracle-working best. I have seldom seen him work so passionately as he did in setting out the Brahms. It was an absolutely incandescent reading, and so luscious, that you could have spread it with a knife.

Perhaps due to the occasion, the orchestra itself played in its grandest style. The virtuosity of the individual sections, the marvelous interweaving of the orchestra as a whole, the palette with which the symphonic pictures were painted, were spell-binding. I shall never forget the work of all the brasses in the Brahms, or the melancholy wonders which the French horn wrought in solo passages. Nor the bite of the strings in the last movement of the same work. Nor the fleetness of the woodwinds in the Sibelius. Nor even the exhilatring beating of the tympani, making your scalp crawl.

It was the consummate and retrieving performance, in a series which did not seem quite so finished, precise, polished, as in the past. It is the performance by which you want to remember the whole Festival.

162

HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES
AUG 19 1940

Music:

Seventh Annual Festival Closes At Tanglewood

By Carl E. Lindstrom

No music festival can be all things to all men but the phenomenon of Tanglewood is that the Berkshire Symphonic Festival can successfully be a number of different things to so many.

The seventh annual series which closed Sunday afternoon had seen several peaks in the usual symphonic excitement, a choral presentation of historic proportions in Bach's B minor Mass which engrossed 7,500 listeners, a musical carnival of Lucullan diversity that enlisted the political sympathies of a throng in behalf of the Allied Relief Fund and individual triumphs of a glamorous order for Paul Hindemith and Dorothy Maynor on Saturday night, not to stress the ever present ground tone of applause for the person of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, whose genius energizes the whole proceeding.

The appeal of all these things is diverse but there were no dips and spurts in the graph of the general success. The weather, about which there could be only a single wish, was unblemished for the duration although a cloudy sky yesterday may have prevented the attendance from reaching the record figure of 8,600 a week ago. There was a brief wash of rain during intermission.

All of the numbers on Sunday's program had been heard before in these concerts, Haydn's G major Symphony No. 88, of which Koussevitzky's interpretation is an especially happy one, Sibelius' closely-woven Seventh Symphony and the First of Brahms, a proclamative reading of which sent the crowd away to await another season.

* * *

Dorothy Maynor has come a long way since her discovery by Dr. Koussevitzky a year ago. She has, of course, already reached an imposing artistic stature and there is no need to look for promise; her art is a reality. There are refinements about her execution, however, that were not apparent during the winter.

She sings out of a measureless calm and self-possession and this in conjunction with the perfect control over a stream of very lovely tone makes her a singularly satisfying and restful singer to listen to. She has the detachment of a seeress and an essential religiosity before the nobility of the music. Her attitude toward the Mozart aria, "Bella mia fiamma, addio!" and Beethoven's "Adelaide" was like the profound bow which she made to Koussevitzky himself, as though she were oblivious of the clamoring thousands. The ovation for her swelled beyond anything yet heard at Tanglewood and she was called back repeatedly, each time acknowledging the din with a sweet and humble gravity.

Her voice had purity and sustained power. Initial tones usually were lustrous and buoyant except when attacked with force. A beautiful, pervasive legato informed both of her arias.

The remainder of Saturday's oddly assorted program was devoted to a deft performance of Prokofief's "Classical Symphony," Faure's "Pelleas and Melisande" suite and Respighi's ponderous transcription of Bach's C minor Passacaglia.

* * *

The acclaim for Hindemith after the "Mathis der Maler" triptych was scarcely second to the singer's reception. It was not the courtesy applause always granted a present composer, but seemed to be generated by the warmth and understanding produced by his music in the hearts of the deeply-moved listeners.

Hindemith's magnificent score was recreated with a wealth of tonal resources ingeniously applied. Its dissonances, usually so politely endured, were understood and assimilated as part of the emotional experience. The drama, the eloquence and the sincerity of the work came home with profound effect.

It might have been doubted that an audience whose metabolism was adjusted to such a revelation could be swayed by the relatively conventional fare of Sunday afternoon. Perhaps it was a different audience but that is not likely since weather uncertainties probably drove away any who might have come to Tanglewood because of the enticements as direct and genuine as the Hindemith score.

* * *

Koussevitzky's performance is individual and provocative. He allows himself great freedom in tempos, not hesitating to linger over the ripely lyrical parts as for instance in the slow movement and in long stretches of the first movement. The processional, hymn-like theme of the finale was more quickly taken than is the usual habit and a grand climax found which stirred the audience to a demonstration of suitable heartiness for the conclusion of an extremely successful festival.

The Sibelius symphony was conceived in epical terms. Its coloring was enchantingly managed and the details fashioned con amore but the heroic ground plan was inexorably drawn and the impact of one of the greatest of modern symphonies registered with triumphant effect.

It was a typical Koussevitzky concert, and none of these is complete without such a Haydn symphony as this G major which has been heard at Bushnell. This is the one, you remember, in which Koussevitzky will stand motionless for seconds on end and pridefully watch his peerless orchestra whirl through the bubbling patterns of Haydn as though possessed.

It was a brilliant, evocative concert and it set the seal

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN
AUG 19 1940

CHOICEST MUSIC SAVED FOR LAST AT TANGLEWOOD

Superlative Production of Favorite Symphonies Marks Final Program of 1940 Berkshire Festival

By Francis Regal

Stockbridge, Aug. 18—Casual showers did not interfere in the least with the success of the ninth and last concert of the seventh Berkshire Symphonic festival, given this afternoon by the Boston Symphony orchestra conducted by Dr Serge Koussevitzky. Seats for the overflow audience were shifted from the lawn outside to the shelter of the wide promenade, but shelter was hardly needed, and the showers circulating in fantastic patterns over the Berkshire hills so cleared and cooled the air as to make this another perfect day for music. Visitors to Berkshire will leave with glowing memories both of the festival and of its climate.

For the final concert Mr Koussevitzky had saved some of the choicest things, while avoiding the appearance of closing with a bang. All the fireworks were put into the gala performance Friday for the benefit of the allied relief fund, and the fireworks then were quite literal fireworks which disconcertingly got touched off a little before their turn came on the program. The festival otherwise has been musically rather more sober than usual, yet has held the absorbed attention of record-breaking audiences in spite of the increase in the number of concerts from six to nine

Favorite Symphonies

A quiet program marked the opening of the festival on August 1, and the closing concert was equally free from sensationalism except for the thrill given by superlative production of favorite symphonies. The one by Haydn in G-major (No 88), which came first, is one of the most universally known and admired of all his works. As played by the virtuosi of the Boston orchestra every tone was delicious and refreshing; such music does not age.

Conductor and Protegee in Conference

DR. SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY and Dorothy Maynor, noted soprano whom he started on the road to fame, chat in the green room. Miss Maynor was Saturday evening's soloist at the Berkshire Festival of the Boston Symphony.

Of contemporary symphonies the most admired are coming to be those of the Finnish composer Jan Sibelius, and while the seventh, which was played today may not yet be so well known as some of its predecessors, it is fast becoming a prime favorite. "Symphonie fantasia" the composer at first thought of calling it, and it differs from other symphonies sufficiently to have warranted the designation.

Cast in one vast movement and organized on the boldly original lines which Sibelius had been developing in his earlier symphonies and in experimented works, it is logical in structure, varied in interest and powerfully emotional when given as Mr Koussevitzky and his musicians gave it today.

The tremendous forte passages for the brass instruments were as thrilling as the strident outbursts in Hindemith's "Matthias the Painter," the performance of which last night was one of the high spots in the festival and must have delighted the composer, who received an ovation at the close.

Shed Is Excellent

The shed is excellent for all kinds of music but almost uniquely excellent for works containing both delicate passages of ethereal beauty and the titanic force of brass and percussion used to the limit of tolerance. Indoors shatter-proof glass might be needed; the Berkshire festival is sufficiently outdoors for the brass to clash and the drums to bray with magnificent freedom. Yet even through the fanfare the pure golden thread of the violins comes out clear and beautiful.

To close both concert and festival Mr Koussevitzky had wisely reserved the first symphony by Brahms, a work which combines depth and inwardness with grandeur and an exultant power which this diffident and gifted composer sometimes lacked. Each year adds to the host of its admirers and those who come to love it never renounce their allegiance. The sober well-considered fabric of Brahms wears well. This work was a specially fortunate choice for the climax and close of a great festival because of the mighty and inspiring sweep of the majestic lyric theme of the finale; there could hardly have been a more exalted last word than today's audience had to carry away with them.

Purpose Well Served

The fundamental purpose of the festivals, to present, as excellently as possible, a large number of great symphonies, has been well served this year, although the programs have been unusual because of the large space given to Tschaikowsky in commemoration of the 100th year of his birth. Not much has been done with novelties or with "contemporary" music, but the short symphony in one movement by Roy Harris, No 3, was well liked, Stravinsky's capriccio for orchestra with piano solo delighted the audience, partly because of the dazzling performance of the piano part by Jesus Maria Sanroma, and even listeners who thought Hindemith's dramatic scenes from "Matthias the Painter" too modern found themselves yielding to the spell of the orchestra's marvelous performance.

Dorothy Maynor

The nearest approach to the star system which has been the bane of many festivals was the appearance of Dorothy Maynor, but that gifted singer adhered to the high classical level with a Mozart concert aria and Beethoven's great song "Adelaide," the notorious difficulties of which vanished in the flawless and enchanting interpretation. Dorothy Maynor holds a special place in the regard of Berkshire festival goers because it was at a previous festival that her exceptional talent was discovered and made known to the musical world; her rapid success has been gratifying.

The only concerto included in this year's programs has been the great violin concerto by Beethoven, which was finely played by Albert Spalding. The piano part in the Stravinsky capriccio is practically equivalent, however, to the solo part of a concerto, and Mr Sanroma played it with amazing virtuosity.

The famous Russian violoncellist Gregor Piatgorsky, who also contributed the Boecherini concerto to the gala performance, was heard in one of the regular programs in a superb interpretation of the solo part representing the sorrowful knight in the tone poem "Don Quixote" by Richard Strauss. Altogether the musical fare has been varied as well as rich.

This Clipping From
HARTFORD, CONN.
COURANT
AUG 19 1940

7th Festival Finishes At Stockbridge

Koussevitzky, Bostonians ~~Give~~ Superb Farewell of Haydn 88, Sibelius 7th and Brahms 1st

BY T. H. PARKER.

Stockbridge, Mass., Aug. 18.—With Dr. Serge Koussevitzky smilingly saluting his tumultuous admirers, and a handsome performance by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the seventh Berkshire Festival closed at Tanglewood here this afternoon.

Roseate with gratification and his labors, surrounded by his orchestra men clutching their instruments, and confronted by an ecstatic audience, the imperial conductor bowed and waved in answer to the swelling chorus of cheers and the din of applause. Each time he sought to escape offstage, the insistent storm of hand-clapping brought him back. Each time he returned, the shouts went up again. It may still be going on, for all this courier can say, having left after the tenth round. It was a great and gaudy leave-taking, and it sprang from love and affection. People don't stand on their chairs, clap their hands over their heads, and shout themselves frothy for music alone. They're pretty tender about their Doctor.

It had been by all odds the most successful season in a gallant Festival history. Nine concerts instead of the recent six, a galaxy of soloists, choral occasions for the first time. Record attendance, with the merry men in the box office ticking off 9000 persons several times and packing the folding money into the till accordingly. Certainly the loudest and longest huzza-ing. And except for a few moments this afternoon right spung in the middle of intermission, no rain. The weepy clouds hung up in the hills all day, but some powerful medicine held them in check. Red letter Festival.

Dr. Koussevitzky offered his final audience of the season one of his marvelously tailored programs, opening with the Haydn Symphony No. 88, going on the Sibelius Symphony No. 7, and closing with the Brahms First.

Sibelius Reception.

There was, according to grapevine report, just one eensy-teensy shadow over the farewelling. Dr. Koussevitzky was disappointed at the moderate reception given the Sibelius, one of my agents reports. The house applauded the work briskly, but stopped soon and as briskly departed.

They departed, the bulk of them, for the refreshment tent, and taking into consideration the heat, perhaps the situation is understandable, if regrettable. Yet Dr. Koussevitzky's disappointment is equally understandable, for to your corerspondent, at least, no other work of the entire series, was as ingratiating, as fascinating or as delicious on the ear and spirit, as this one-movement Sibelius.

The astonishing technical achievement represented by this Seventh Symphony has of course often been remarked. The Boston Symphony's annotator, John N. Burk, on occasion turned to Cecil Grey for a description of it which he admired:

"The resourceful way in which these (thematic motives) are varied, developed, juxtaposed, permuted and combined into a continuous and homogeneous texture is one of the miracles of modern music," Mr. Grey had written. "The Seventh shows Sibelius as the summit of his powers in respect of fecundity of invention and subtlety and intricacy of design. It is a work of great expressive beauty, of a lofty grandeur and dignity, a truly Olympian serenity and repose. . ."

With all of this I enormously concur, except that the word "Olympian" seems to connote a remoteness, and apartness, which is just opposite to how it strikes me. In all the Sibelius literature is there any work so Keatsian, so directly, thoroughly and personally communicative as this? I doubt it. "Olympian" hardly seems to describe the incredibly intimate lyricism of this marvelously beautiful symphony.

Superlative Haydn, Brahms.

There is no longer any need of describing the way in which Dr. Koussevitzky does Haydn or Brahms. His Haydn is absolutely superlative and no other conductor comes within a mile of it, for transparency, for verve, for piquant humors, for humanness. His Brahms has the texture of heavy satin, and a richness that can almost be tasted, and a spirit as Olympian as Cecil Grey could ask for. In both the German scores, Dr. Koussevitzky was at his miracle-working best. I have seldom seen him work so passionately as he did in setting out the Brahms. It was an absolutely incandescent reading, and so luscious, that you could have spread it with a knife.

Perhaps due to the occasion, the orchestra itself played in its grandest style. The virtuosity of the individual sections, the marvelous interweaving of the orchestra as a whole, the palette with which the symphonic pictures were painted, were spell-binding. I shall never forget the work of all the brasses in the Brahms, or the melancholy wonders which the French horn wrought in solo passages. Nor the bite of the strings in the last movement of the same work. Nor the fleetness of the woodwinds in the Sibelius. Nor even the exhilatring beating of the tympani, making your scalp crawl.

It was the consummate and retrieving performance, in a series which did not seem quite so finished, precise, polished, as in the past. It is the performance by which you want to remember the whole Festival.

INFORMATION OBSCURED

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

AUG 19 1940

163

Thundering Ovation Ends 1940 Festival Season

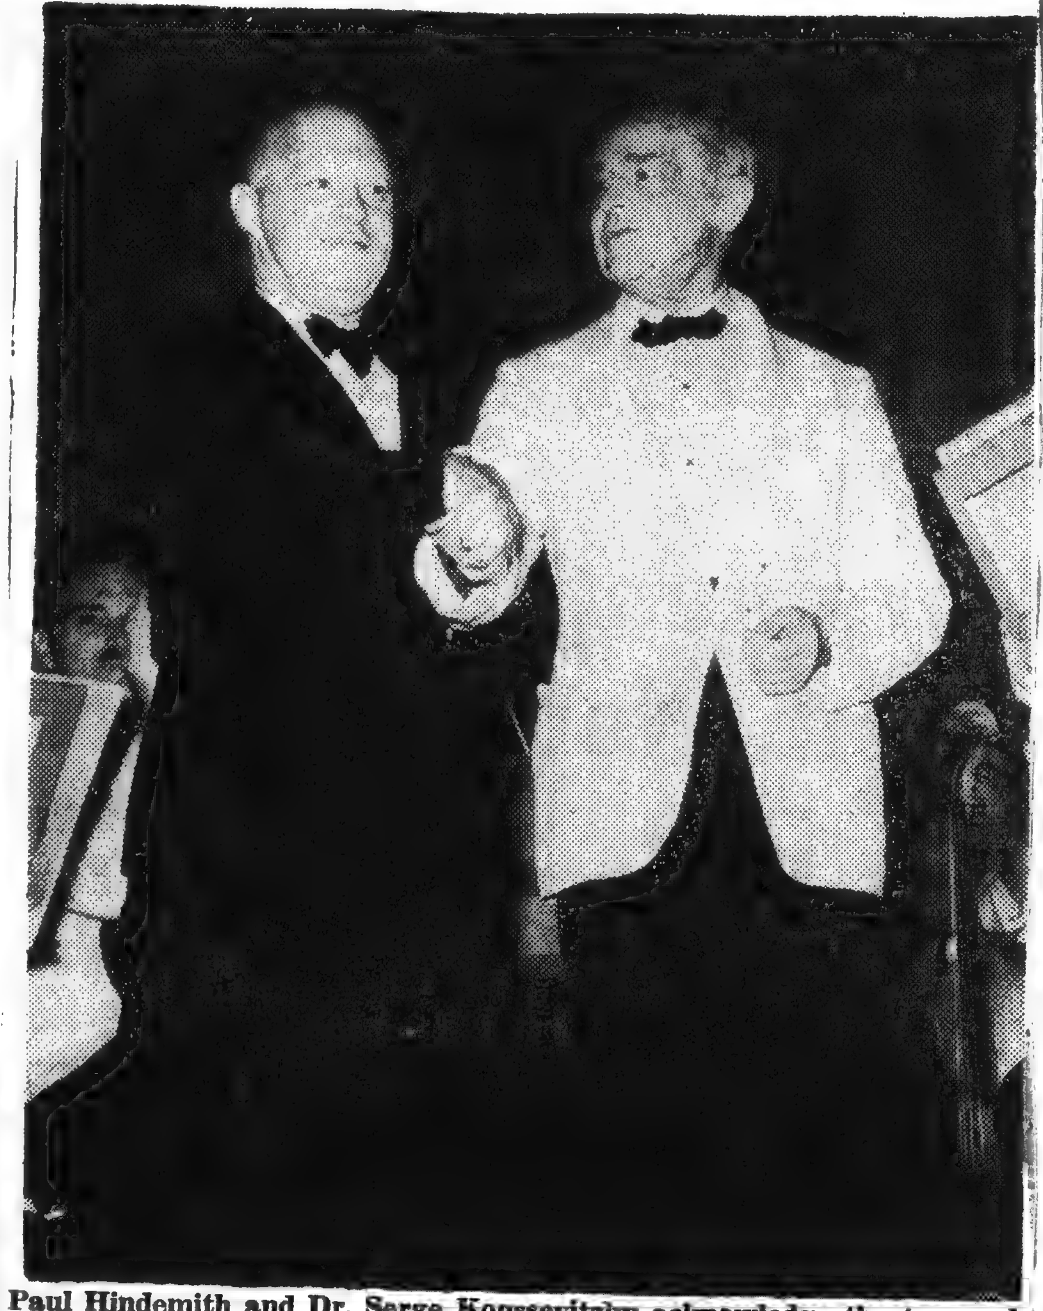
Koussevitzky and Orchestra Wildly Applauded After Performance of Brahms First Brings Ninth Concert To Close

By JAY C. ROSENFELD

The seventh annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival came to a glorious close yesterday afternoon when the Boston Symphony Orchestra played the first Brahms symphony to end the ninth and final concert of a series which was precedent—and record-breaking in every way. The Boston Orchestra under the leadership of its renowned and revered conductor, Serge Koussevitzky, had given of its best in these three week-end series, a feature which would have lent distinction to a more modest and less pretentious event, for in most summer semi-al fresco concerts, there is some concession to circumstances. These concerts have maintained the standards of performance set by the Boston Orchestra in their regular home-grounds concerts, a level which is conceded to be unsurpassed on any concert platform.

Thus the thousands who have attended the individual concerts have heard the results of the best efforts of this remarkable band of musicians in programs which ranged from the witty, sly "Classical Symphony" of Prokofieff, on yesterday's program, to the massive, eternal mass in B minor of Bach, on the past Thursday evening, prepared with all the skill and means at their command and presented to an audience whose musical sophistication was not held lightly.

Composer and Interpreter



Paul Hindemith and Dr. Serge Koussevitzky acknowledge the tremendour applause which surged through the Shed Saturday night after the Boston Symphony Orchestra had played Mr. Hindemith's "Mathias der Maler."

Festival

Continued From First Page

Phenomenal Weather

The whole Festival was favored by weather conditions nothing short of phenomenal. Except for a shower which started to fall after the audience had spread itself over the lawns at intermission time yesterday, but which subsided before the second half of the program began, there was ideal weather at all nine of the scheduled concerts.

One's sense of proportion is apt to waver after witnessing or even after reading of the ovations which took place during this series. In retrospect one might believe that it was a lack of discrimination which made nearly every performance the occasion for an outburst of enthusiasm, and an abandoned expression of approval. We are inclined to believe that the setting and the gala spirit which pervaded the whole event may have given the audiences their initial lift, but it was the actual performances which really evoked the demonstrations. For instance, the interminable recalls which bewildered and weeping Dorothy Maynor returned to acknowledge Saturday night were the deserved recognition of a beautiful voice used with high intelligence.

It was the natural outburst of an audience many of whom were the proud possessors of the vicarious honor they no doubt felt in having been a party, no matter how far removed, to that first encouragement on the same grounds a year ago which launched her with such rocket-like speed into the public notice.

The tribute to Paul Hindemith, whom Dr. Koussevitzky graciously led to the platform after the playing on the same program of his "Mathis der Maler" was probably a mixture of full, honest appreciation with the added endorsement of the many students, associates and friends he has made during his six-week sojourn at Tanglewood in his capacity as professor of composition in the Berkshire Music Center, the new school started this year in conjunction with the Festival.

Superlatives

But whatever the reasons, the thousands of music-lovers who have attended these affairs have left uttering superlatives, and no doubt cherishing the memories of experiences no other musical venture could quite supply. The nub of the whole wheel, of course, has been Dr. Koussevitzky. He has put on a musical show which has run over with vividness and brilliance. Program-making devised with an uncanny eye, or ear, for contrast, and everything contrived for effectiveness. The Saturday night program, the most daring in an otherwise moderately conservative list, was probably the best example of this: It started with glib Prokofieff, writing with his tongue in his cheek, and played in the appropriate miniature style; then the starker Hindemuth. Let us here mention the string sections of that orchestra heard in the unison passages at the beginning of the third movement of that symphony. The tone was wonderful and noteworthy. Its free sonority had a genuine quality about it which did one good to hear. This was the movement which Hindemith closes with the brass sections blowing for all they are worth, and the one in which Koussevitzky actually drained the wind players of their last puff.

Hindemith has a sure hand in his orchestral writing. We are not so convinced his inspiration is deep, but there was no question that his dramatic instinct in that final coda had guided him correctly, with the co-operation of his colleague, the Boston Orchestra director.

On this same program then came Miss Maynor, singing the Mozart concert aria, "Bella mia Flamma, addio," and Beethoven's "Adelaide." The purity, sensitive quality and ease of emission of her voice are exceptional. She used a style of the most elevated taste, and employed her pliant, dulcet voice—of ample power, incidentally—with evidence of the highest standards of judgment and refinement.

The suite of Gabriel Faure's "Pelleas and Melisande" was as exemplary in its restraint as the Hindemith had been in its open-throttle manner. To all intents and purposes this play, now near 50 years old, is a classic which the present generation considers of that past which, because it was established before their time, might as well date from the beginning as from the end of the past century. We thoughtlessly allocate Maeterlinck to history, yet a recent dispatch reports him as alighting from the Clipper, fleeing a residence and a peace he had enjoyed for such a major share of a century. And in the same vein, who listened to Sibelius' last symphony yesterday afternoon, without thoughts of its composer's personal safety and whereabouts?

Suspicion

The Sibelius symphony was placed between the Haydn G major symphony, No. 88, and the Brahms first.

Koussevitzky's motives are suspect to us in his choice of concert closings. Saturday he had chosen the magnificent Bach passacaglia and fugue in C minor, originally for organ, but played in the version orchestrated by Ottorino Respighi, whose "Pines of Rome" have twice in succession appeared in the prospectuses, but have failed to materialize. Both the Bach and the Brahms reach tremendous forceful culminations in their final bars, a vehicle which Koussevitzky rides to a fare-thee-well. As sure as a chemical formula produces a given result, this type of music and this conductor produce an effect on the audience which, given the Tanglewood spirit, is just as predictable. The audience breaks into a frenzy of hand-clapping, shouting and every variety of noise- and stir-making, and will not stop. Reserve and dignity are thrown off in the expressions of their eager, revitalizing reactions to the music.

Plans for next year have been made public. There may have been details which did not please everyone, although we heard of none, but we can testify that, if the artistic standards which have prevailed during these last exciting three weeks are maintained, the Berkshire Symphonic Festival will continue to receive the patro[illegible]nd the favor without fear of [illegible]ition of the musical publi[illegible]m ever widening areas.

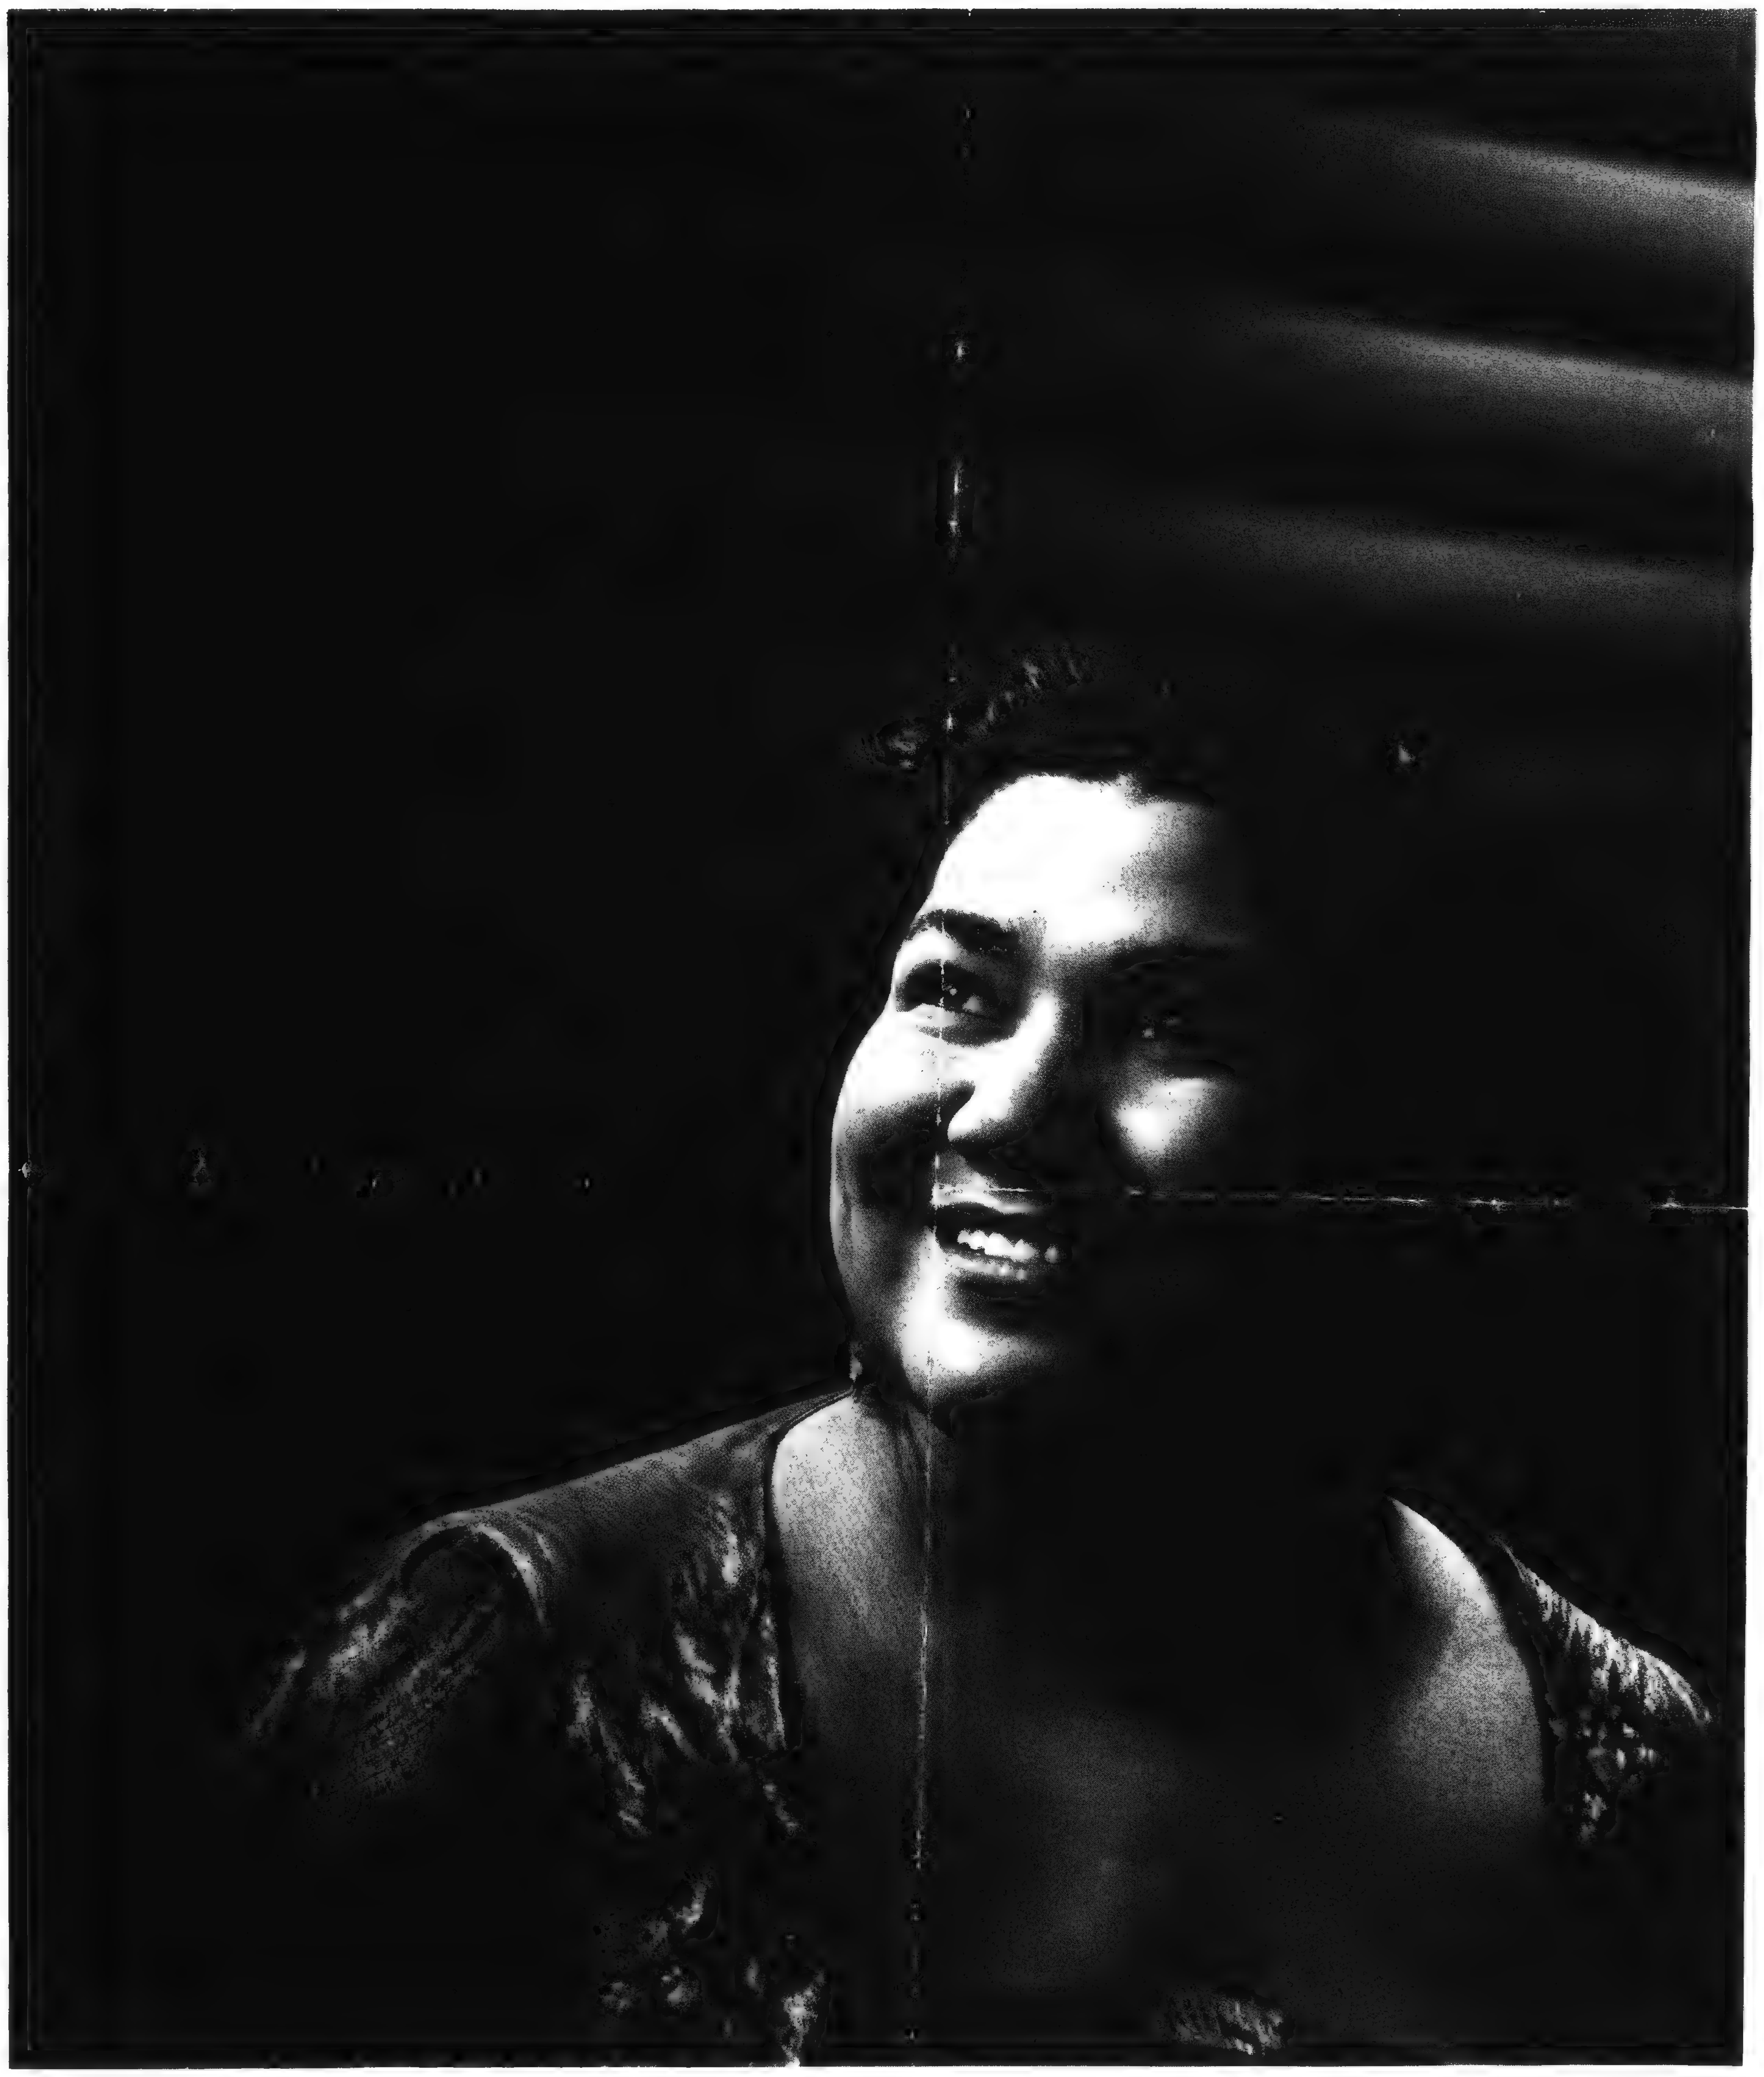
ANTON BRUEHL

Dorothy Maynor

Star of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival

Dorothy Maynor was almost unknown when Koussevitzky asked her to sing at last year's Berkshire Festival—first at a picnic, and then in an unscheduled recital. This year, she is the Festival's star—after a phenomenally successful winter: two concerts at New York's Town Hall; sell-out appearances with the Boston Symphony and with the New York Philharmonic-Symphony; fame for her pure diction, her lovely soprano voice

Je 41K



ANTON BRUEHL

Dorothy Maynor

Star of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival

Dorothy Maynor was almost unknown when Koussevitzky asked her to sing at last year's Berkshire Festival — first at a picnic, and then in an unscheduled recital. This year, she is the Festival's star— after a phenomenally successful winter: two concerts at New York's Town Hall; sell-out appearances with the Boston Symphony and with the New York Philharmonic-Symphony; fame for her pure diction, her lovely soprano voice

THIS CLIPPING FROM
VOGUE
GREENWICH, CONN.
SEP 1 - 1940

New Music School in the Berkshires

The Berkshire Music Center, this summer's important addition to the Berkshire Symphonic Festival

By Abram Chasins

EDITOR'S NOTE: Mr. Chasins, the distinguished American composer-pianist and teacher, held the ASCAP Chair of Pedagogy at the new music school this summer.

EVER since the beginning, in 1936, of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, the temptation has been to keep calling it "the American Salzburg." Every one has mentioned the purity of the Festival's New England setting, its beautiful, damp green lawns, its sober wine-glass elms.

Every one has mentioned the peerless quality of the Boston Symphony Orchestra playing under Serge Koussevitzky, the concerts in the vast, plain, acoustically perfect Music Shed. Every one has mentioned the crowds, the shopkeepers from Pittsfield, the old ladies who drive from Lenox or Boston or Newport in 1919 Rolls-Royces, the young people coming with sandwiches to spend the day, the summer people from Stockbridge and Great Barrington, the farmers from Tyringham.

And now, this summer, there was something new to mention—the Berkshire Festival's permanent, tough core of educational purpose. For Koussevitzky has started a school, the Berkshire Music Center, which will have a continuing effect on American music. The students and musicians who came to Lenox, Pittsfield, and Stockbridge this year—overflowing the five school buildings, jamming the dormitories and all available lodgings for miles around—had an unparalleled opportunity to study the principles of interpretation, to hear superb demonstrations of those principles, and to work with men who are masters in every tonal field—conducting, composition, orchestral playing, chamber-music, opera, choral singing, and educational music.

There were three hundred and twenty-five students from every part of the United States, and from Europe. They each paid a fee of one hundred dollars for a six weeks' course in July and August. Twice as many applied for entrance as could be accepted. The courses were intensive, the entrance requirements extremely high. It was a carefully selected group which finally met on the beautiful grounds of Tanglewood, the home of the Center and the Festival. Many of the students came with established, professional reputations, others with high scholastic attainments.

There were two divisions in the school. There was the Institute for the more advanced and gifted students who came for work in interpretation and style, and in specialized musical subjects. For those of good ability, but less distinguished talents, there was the Academy, where the work was less highly specialized, but no less exacting.

The responsibility of running the complicated mechanism of the Center was handled by George E. Judd, the quiet, astute manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and by Mrs. Margaret Grant, who had the modest title of "Secretary." Whatever the problem—a teacher's scrambled schedule, a student's housing difficulties, a dilemma in diplomacy—Mrs. Grant solved it.

The main house contained Koussevitzky's workroom, other faculty rooms, classrooms, practice rooms, and the executive office. A dozen different instruments played different compositions in a dozen rooms, a solid orchestra or two came from the phonograph rooms—all at once. One day, I wandered into the unconverted kitchen for some water, and was startled to see a young man standing before a phonograph-radio lined up against the kitchen sink, conducting from a printed score reposing on top of the icebox, while the Koussevitzky recording of the piece was blaring from the loud-speaker. The young man's wife was sitting in a squeaky rocking-chair knitting, while he lunged at an imaginary brass section which came in with such speed and precision that he was visibly shaken by surprise.

I poured my glass of water as quietly as possible, and, while I drank it, another student came in, lined up three feet behind the first and also began to conduct. In another minute, while I watched, fascinated, a truck driver who came in to have his delivery signed for stopped dead at the sight which greeted him. He backed away, quite frightened. The two conductors, unaware of anything, kept right on going, the music kept on playing, the disk kept turning.

THIS may give the idea that facilities were inadequate. There was, of course, a need for more buildings, more practice rooms, but it was the magnitude of the project which made this remarkably equipped Center seem too small. There were four orchestras: the Boston Symphony itself, the Institute Orchestra, the Academy Orchestra, and the Chamber Orchestra. There were the classes of Herbert Graf (stage-director of the Metropolitan Opera Association) in dramatic interpretation; classes in choral singing under G. Wallace Woodworth's direction; classes in composition under Paul Hindemith and Aaron Copland; and the regular schedule of teaching and practicing.

This summer, there were continual rehearsals and performances by smaller groups of students, some combined in choral singing, others in orchestral practice with their instructors, first desk men of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Everything was done (Continued on page 102)

VOGUE

NEW MUSIC SCHOOL IN THE BERKSHIRES

(Continued from page 72) under skilled instructors, and there was always a model performance for the student by finished artists in each field. Distinguished artists and educators performed and lectured continually for the students. Answering the Koussevitzky call, they came gladly, postponing vacations, cancelling concerts, begging off from all commitments.

The Choral groups were specifically prepared for a special feature of the Festival: a performance, in August, of the B minor Mass of Bach. The best singers in the Center formed the Chorus to combine with the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Koussevitzky's direction. As Olin Downes said, "Those who study music at the Music Center will also play it. Those who play it will study it, which does not always follow."

The big concerts took place in the Shed. There was a seating capacity of five thousand seven hundred, and accommodations on the open lawn outside the structure for several thousand more. The acoustics were so fine that one could hear perfectly for great distances. Here, four mornings a week, from nine-thirty to twelve-thirty, Koussevitzky taught his conducting students as they conducted the Institute Orchestra, the advanced orchestra of the student group. Koussevitzky sat at a table in the center aisle, placed on a line with row four. On the table was the score, and a button which made a light register on the stand in front of the student conductor. When this light went on, it meant that Koussevitzky had something to say.

REHEARSAL UNDER KOUSSEVITZKY

The mainspring of all the activity, the fervour and spirit, was Koussevitzky. During student orchestra rehearsals, he sat, every nerve in his body strained; his ears seemed to grow bigger, his face reacted to every note, every nuance. But he never sat for long. Every few bars, there was something to correct. Sometimes it was the orchestra as a body, sometimes one of the instrumentalists, more often the conductor. Koussevitzky frequently became so excited that he forgot to press the light-button. He sprang up from the table and started talking, even though the orchestra was still blaring away. One of Koussevitzky's assistants clapped his hands, or pressed the button, or did both—and then Koussevitzky spoke. "Sing, sing, sing! Such a beautiful phrase—how can you?" And he shook his head desperately.

They started again. Two seconds later, Koussevitzky banged his hand on the score. "Don't depend on the conductor to think for you. Depend on the conductor for your inspiration." Hour after hour, morning after morning, the invaluable teaching went on. One never heard Koussevitzky say, "Make the orchestra do it." He said, "Ask them"; and he meant "ask." That is how he gets what he wants musically; and much more in affection and worship than any one man could absorb.

Once, when the Brahms Academic Overture was being rehearsed, just as the syncopation in the strings began, Koussevitzky sprang up. "Put the bow in the string, not only on the string," he advised, and made a vicious jab, like some one driving a stiletto deep into an enemy's groin. The strings sounded just fine after that.

Then rehearsal was over. Three and a half hours of the grind. Players leaned back on their seats, unable to rise. The fledgling conductor looked ill. The auditors felt that they had gone through a battle. But Koussevitzky sprang up, called to half a dozen people, asking one a question, telling another some personal piece of news, requesting a favour of another. He was all smiles, all energy.

Koussevitzky loves to be with young people, is always on the lookout for curious minds and responsive hearts. He has said that what he wants to give the students is constructive advice and practical knowledge, to help them acquire a penetrating and vivid conception of the music they interpret. He wants to stir their imagination to new heights, because imagination evokes in the interpreter the right intuition and the emotions to conceive the inner meaning of the score and to reveal the emotion of the composer. "We want to be modest in our promises, but by no means do we want to be modest in our inspirations."

"TANGLEWOOD IS A DREAM"

When Koussevitzky rehearses his own orchestra, he reveals everything about himself, and little about his conductorial technique. Things happen. When they don't, he stops the men, speaks a few soft words, often quite inaudible, and then the music sounds just fine. When there is a ragged entry (very rare occurrence with the Boston Symphony), he says, "Gentlemen, they will think we have never played together before."

A wrong note gets the gentlest reproof, perhaps because it is the greatest sin of all. Koussevitzky lifts his eyebrows in bewilderment, his nose crinkles as though to protect himself from a bad odour. The culprit colours like a lobster or a sheet, according to his temperament, and that's that. No hysterics, no brutality, no histrionics. Just work. Koussevitzky will often say, simply, "I don't like it." He doesn't explain, and he doesn't hide the fact that sometimes he isn't quite convinced of just why he doesn't like it. But when he finally says, "I like it," it's something to like.

At the very first faculty meeting, Koussevitzky was obviously very much moved and aware of the significance of the occasion. It took place one day before the official opening, and it was his first moment as actual director facing his faculty. His eyes were moist as he rose to address the men he had selected to help carry out the idea which had been stirring within him for more than twenty-five years—which had seen so many setbacks and had met so many obstacles until Tanglewood made it possible. His voice was unsteady for the first few words...after that, it rang with feeling and conviction.

"Gentlemen," he said, "I have never faced a more distinguished gathering, brought together by a common cause, a common ideal. Our path is clear. We must abandon the banal, the superficial, the old-fashioned. We must give the best we have with our life blood."

This Clipping From
HARTFORD, CONN.
COURANT
SEP 10 1940

Albert Spalding Joins Gordon Group Saturday

Albert Spaulding, famous American violinist, will be heard in a special concert with the Gordon String Quartet at Musician Mountain, Falls Villege Saturday at 3:30 p. m.

The program will include the Brahms Quintet, Opus 111, in G Major; the Brahms Sonata, Opus 108,, in D Minor, and Hayden's Quartet, Opus 20, No. 4.

Mr. Spaulding has been heard in special recitals with the Gordon Quartet annually for several seasons. He was also soloist in the Beethoven Violin Concerto in D with the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood, Stockbridge, during the festival just closed. One of the world's greatest virtuosi, he has performed in concert in Hartford on numerous occasions.

Music Mountain is at the intersection of Routes 7, 126 and 43.

THIS CLIPPING FROM OAKLAND, CAL.
POST-INQUIRER
SEP 4 - 1940

This Clipping From
NEW ORLEANS, LA.
ITEM
SEP 2 - 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM MUNCIE, IND.
STAR
SEP 1 - 1940

GIRL ABOUT TOWN.—I still get a chuckle when I think of my brother-in-law Albert, at the last Saturday night concert of the Boston Symphony at Stockbridge, Mass. We had stretched a blanket on the lawn outside the Music Shed, where the music came soft and sweet, and Al, who doesn't react favorably to the tune masters, went sound asleep.

In the soft second movement of a piece by Faure, he let off a snore like a cross-cut saw, and a score of nearby symphony worshippers fainted from shock at this blasphemy. We were set down as boors save by one old lady, who complained that Koussevitzky must be playing fly specks again—there was no note like that in Faure's score.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
TRENTON, N. J.
Sunday Times Advertiser
SEP 1 - 1940

Kuttner Finishes Musical Course

Symphony Concertmaster Studied Six Weeks In Berkshires

Michael Kuttner, concertmaster of the Trenton Symphony Orchestra and musical director of the Trenton Opera Association, has returned to Trenton after spending six weeks at the Berkshire Music Centre at Tanglewood, Mass. While there he was a pupil of Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and concertmaster of the Institute Orchestra of the Berkshire Music Centre. In this capacity he had the opportunity of playing under the direction of Dr. Koussevitsky, Hindemuth, Copeland and several young American conductors. He was also soloist with the orchestra playing the Bach Violin Concerto.

Mr. Kuttner will begin next week with rehearsals for the chorus and minor roles for the operas to be given here the coming season by the Trenton Opera Association. There will be a series of three productions, "LaBoheme," December 17; one yet to be chosen and "Sweethearts," a light opera by Victor Herbert, in the Spring. These will be given in the Memorial Building. Mr. Kuttner will use the Trenton Symphony Orchestra in these performances.

While in the Berkshires, Mr. Kuttner was a member of the opera department of the Music Centre, directed by Herbert Graf, stage manager of the Metropolitan Opera Company. Through lectures and practical experience in production, he gained many ideas which will be utilized in the Trenton opera series.

Mr. Kuttner came to the United States a few years ago from Budapest, where he was for three seasons concertmaster of the Budapest City Opera.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
POUGHKEEPSIE, N. Y.
STAR-ENTERPRISE
SEP 7 - 1940

Berkshire Festival Prepares for Next Year

More than two-thirds of the membership for the Berkshire Symphonic Festival for the 1941 concert series at Tanglewood, Stockbridge, Mass., has been filled, according to an announcement made by the trustees today. The total membership is limited to 4500, and the memberships are evenly distributed for each of the three series which open next year July 31 and continue through three weeks. Thus making more than 1000 members now for each of the three series and the limit for each series is 1500.

The concerts are by the Boston Symphony orchestra, with Serge Koussevitzky as conductor.

This Clipping From
CHICAGO, ILL.
TRIBUNE
SEP 1 - 1940

• • •

On Wednesday evening Anderson hotel guests and a number of invited friends enjoyed an impromptu concert by a fellow guest, Frank Sykora, solo cellist with the Kansas City philharmonic orchestra for the last several years. At the piano for him was Mrs. A. H. Fensholt of Wilmette, a summer resident here. Mr. Sykora joined Mrs. Sykora at the hotel this summer between engagements with the Chicago Symphony orchestra.

The famous Russian trio, Nina Mesirow-Minchin, Hans Meunzer, and Ennio Bolognini, thrilled an audience of music lovers at the home of Dr. and Mrs. J. R. Buchbinder last Sunday evening. The concert was presented by the Peninsula Players. A number of those who were present are artists in their own fields, among them Edward Collins, Chicago pianist, who recently has built a small stone studio on his property south of Fish Creek, and Gaylord Brown, conductor of the Evansville symphony, who has just returned to the summer home of his mother, Mrs. J. Manley Clark, at Sister Bay. Most of his summer was spent at the Berkshire music colony, where he studied conducting under Serge Koussevitsky of the Boston symphony with such success that he was chosen one of five who will serve as guest conductors of the Boston symphony.

Another musical opportunity was made available to members of the Peninsula Arts association and their guests on Thursday evening when Dr. and Mrs. Arthur F. Bifield opened their summer home for a concert by Jacinta Kampmeier, violinist, accompanied on the piano by Beatrice Borg Wilson, both of whom spend their vacations in Ephraim.

This Clipping From LANSING, MICH.
JOURNAL
SEP 1 - 1940

Koussevitzy's Dream Realized in America

Serge Koussevitzy, conductor of the Boston symphony orchestra, born in ~~Russia fou~~nd America the place for his music dreams rather than Russia. This was because Russia was so busy with revolutions that there was no time for the school of music that Koussevitzy planned, now existing in the Berkshire Hills.

This unusual music center has 340 students with the famous conductor in charge. A third of the students expect to make music a life work. Advanced students are personally coached by the director. About 20 pupils are trained in operatic interpretation by Herbert Graf; Aaron Copland and Paul Hindemith head a class in composition. There is work in choral conducting. Originally planned for White Plains, N. Y., the school planned by the Boston conductor had a set-back in 1929 when the depression was deepest and finally emerged in the Berkshire Hills.

This Clipping From
CHICAGO, ILL.
TRIBUNE
166
SEP 1 - 1940

Experiment in Post-Season Festival Urged

By Cecil Smith.

Summer music the nation over has turned into a prodigious enterprise. With 30 concerts at Ravinia and over a hundred in Grant park, Chicago leads the country quantitatively, as it has for several years past. Qualitatively, there can be little question of the supremacy of the Berkshire Symphonic festival, consisting of 10 superbly executed concerts by the Boston Symphonic orchestra at Tanglewood, near Stockbridge, Mass. Also of great value and interest are the programs of opera, ballet, and symphonic music in the Hollywood bowl; the varied fare provided in Lewisohn stadium, New York City, by the Philharmonic-Symphonic orchestra and an eclectic list of assisting artists; the grand opera season at Cincinnati's zoo; the series of operettas and musical comedies in Forest park at St. Louis, and a host of other undertakings too numerous to list.

By now the American public, from coast to coast, has fully developed its taste for outdoor music. Despite hazards of weather which remain a constant threat everywhere except on the west coast, summer music-making has achieved a bulk, if not always an artistic palatability, that in some instances exceeds that of the winter diet.

This Clipping From
SO. NORWALK, CONN.
SENTINEL
SEP 7 - 1940

Berkshire Festival Memberships In Demand

The Berkshire Symphonic Festival trustees today reported an unprecedented response to their membership announcement for the 1941 series of concerts at Tanglewood by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky, conductor.

The total membership is limited to 4,500 and already the list has been more than two-thirds filled. The memberships are evenly distributed for each of the three series which open next year July 31 and continue through three weeks. This means that there are more than 1,000 members now for each of the three series and the limit for each series is 1,500.

A membership means tickets at reduced prices, the privilege of keeping seat locations held this year and attending a rehearsal by the orchestra during the festival period.

There is likewise a demand for boxes, nearly 90 having been taken. Most boxholders are signing up for all three series, according to the festival trustees.

Because of the tremendous demand for memberships it is likely that the lists will have to be closed before November 1. This was the tentative deadline provided the limit of 4,500 was not reached.

Applications for memberships and boxes should be mailed to the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, Inc., at Stockbridge, Mass. When the membership limit has been reached, applications will be received for subscriptions which involve only a slight increase in price but do not carry with them any of the membership privileges.

VOGUE

NEW MUSIC SCHOOL IN THE BERKSHIRES

(Continued from page 72) under skilled instructors, and there was always a model performance for the student by finished artists in each field. Distinguished artists and educators performed and lectured continually for the students. Answering the Koussevitzky call, they came gladly, postponing vacations, cancelling concerts, begging off from all commitments.

The Choral groups were specifically prepared for a special feature of the Festival: a performance, in August, of the B minor Mass of Bach. The best singers in the Center formed the Chorus to combine with the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Koussevitzky's direction. As Olin Downes said, "Those who study music at the Music Center will also play it. Those who play it will study it, which does not always follow."

The big concerts took place in the Shed. There was a seating capacity of five thousand seven hundred, and accommodations on the open lawn outside the structure for several thousand more. The acoustics were so fine that one could hear perfectly for great distances. Here, four mornings a week, from nine-thirty to twelve-thirty, Koussevitzky taught his conducting students as they conducted the Institute Orchestra, the advanced orchestra of the student group. Koussevitzky sat at a table in the center aisle, placed on a line with row four. On the table was the score, and a button which made a light register on the stand in front of the student conductor. When this light went on, it meant that Koussevitzky had something to say.

REHEARSAL UNDER KOUSSEVITZKY

The mainspring of all the activity, the fervour and spirit, was Koussevitzky. During student orchestra rehearsals, he sat, every nerve in his body strained; his ears seemed to grow bigger, his face reacted to every note, every nuance. But he never sat for long. Every few bars, there was something to correct. Sometimes it was the orchestra as a body, sometimes one of the instrumentalists, more often the conductor. Koussevitzky frequently became so excited that he forgot to press the light-button. He sprang up from the table and started talking, even though the orchestra was still blaring away. One of Koussevitzky's assistants clapped his hands, or pressed the button, or did both—and then Koussevitzky spoke. "Sing, sing, sing! Such a beautiful phrase—how can you?" And he shook his head desperately.

They started again. Two seconds later, Koussevitzky banged his hand on the score. "Don't depend on the conductor to think for you. Depend on the conductor for your inspiration." Hour after hour, morning after morning, the invaluable teaching went on. One never heard Koussevitzky say, "Make the orchestra do it." He said, "Ask them"; and he meant "ask." That is how he gets what he wants musically; and much more in affection and worship than any one man could absorb.

Once, when the Brahms Academic Overture was being rehearsed, just as the syncopation in the strings began, Koussevitzky sprang up. "Put the bow in the string, not only on the string," he advised, and made a vicious jab, like some one driving a stiletto deep into an enemy's groin. The strings sounded just fine after that.

Then rehearsal was over. Three and a half hours of the grind. Players leaned back on their seats, unable to rise. The fledgling conductor looked ill. The auditors felt that they had gone through a battle. But Koussevitzky sprang up, called to half a dozen people, asking one a question, telling another some personal piece of news, requesting a favour of another. He was all smiles, all energy.

Koussevitzky loves to be with young people, is always on the lookout for curious minds and responsive hearts. He has said that what he wants to give the students is constructive advice and practical knowledge, to help them acquire a penetrating and vivid conception of the music they interpret. He wants to stir their imagination to new heights, because imagination evokes in the interpreter the right intuition and the emotions to conceive the inner meaning of the score and to reveal the emotion of the composer. "We want to be modest in our promises, but by no means do we want to be modest in our inspirations."

"TANGLEWOOD IS A DREAM"

When Koussevitzky rehearses his own orchestra, he reveals everything about himself, and little about his conductorial technique. Things happen. When they don't, he stops the men, speaks a few soft words, often quite inaudible, and then the music sounds just fine. When there is a ragged entry (very rare occurrence with the Boston Symphony), he says, "Gentlemen, they will think we have never played together before."

A wrong note gets the gentlest reproof, perhaps because it is the greatest sin of all. Koussevitzky lifts his eyebrows in bewilderment, his nose crinkles as though to protect himself from a bad odour. The culprit colours like a lobster or a sheet, according to his temperament, and that's that. No hysterics, no brutality, no histrionics. Just work. Koussevitzky will often say, simply, "I don't like it." He doesn't explain, and he doesn't hide the fact that sometimes he isn't quite convinced of just why he doesn't like it. But when he finally says, "I like it," it's something to like.

At the very first faculty meeting, Koussevitzky was obviously very much moved and aware of the significance of the occasion. It took place one day before the official opening, and it was his first moment as actual director facing his faculty. His eyes were moist as he rose to address the men he had selected to help carry out the idea which had been stirring within him for more than twenty-five years—which had seen so many setbacks and had met so many obstacles until Tanglewood made it possible. His voice was unsteady for the first few words...after that, it rang with feeling and conviction.

"Gentlemen," he said, "I have never faced a more distinguished gathering, brought together by a common cause, a common ideal. Our path is clear. We must abandon the banal, the superficial, the old-fashioned. We must give the best we have with our life blood."

THIS CLIPPING FROM OAKLAND, CAL.
POST-INQUIRER
SEP 4 - 1940

This Clipping From
NEW ORLEANS, LA.
ITEM
SEP 2 - 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM MUNCIE, IND.
STAR
SEP 1 - 1940

GIRL ABOUT TOWN.—I still get a chuckle when I think of my brother-in-law Albert, at the last Saturday night concert of the Boston Symphony at Stockbridge, Mass. We had stretched a blanket on the lawn outside the Music Shed, where the music came soft and sweet, and Al, who doesn't react favorably to the tune masters, went sound asleep.

In the soft second movement of a piece by Faure, he let off a snore like a cross-cut saw, and a score of nearby symphony worshippers fainted from shock at this blasphemy. We were set down as boors save by one old lady, who complained that Koussevitzky must be playing fly specks again—there was no note like that in Faure's score.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
TRENTON, N. J.
Sunday Times Advertiser
SEP 1 - 1940

Kuttner Finishes Musical Course

Symphony Concertmaster Studied Six Weeks In Berkshires

Michael Kuttner, concertmaster of the Trenton Symphony Orchestra and musical director of the Trenton Opera Association, has returned to Trenton after spending six weeks at the Berkshire Music Centre at Tanglewood, Mass. While there he was a pupil of Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and concertmaster of the Institute Orchestra of the Berkshire Music Centre. In this capacity he had the opportunity of playing under the direction of Dr. Koussevitsky, Hindemuth, Copeland and several young American conductors. He was also soloist with the orchestra playing the Bach Violin Concerto.

Mr. Kuttner will begin next week with rehearsals for the chorus and minor roles for the operas to be given here the coming season by the Trenton Opera Association. There will be a series of three productions, "LaBoheme," December 17; one yet to be chosen and "Sweethearts," a light opera by Victor Herbert, in the Spring. These will be given in the Memorial Building. Mr. Kuttner will use the Trenton Symphony Orchestra in these performances.

While in the Berkshires, Mr. Kuttner was a member of the opera department of the Music Centre, directed by Herbert Graf, stage manager of the Metropolitan Opera Company. Through lectures and practical experience in production, he gained many ideas which will be utilized in the Trenton opera series.

Mr. Kuttner came to the United States a few years ago from Budapest, where he was for three seasons concertmaster of the Budapest City Opera.

This Clipping From
CHICAGO, ILL.
TRIBUNE
SEP 1 - 1940

• • •

On Wednesday evening Anderson hotel guests and a number of invited friends enjoyed an impromptu concert by a fellow guest, Frank Sykora, solo cellist with the Kansas City philharmonic orchestra for the last several years. At the piano for him was Mrs. A. H. Fensholt of Wilmette, a summer resident here. Mr. Sykora joined Mrs. Sykora at the hotel this summer between engagements with the Chicago Symphony orchestra.

The famous Russian trio, Nina Mesirow-Minchin, Hans Meunser, and Ennio Bolognini, thrilled an audience of music lovers at the home of Dr. and Mrs. J. R. Buchbinder last Sunday evening. The concert was presented by the Peninsula Players. A number of those who were present are artists in their own fields, among them Edward Collins, Chicago pianist, who recently has built a small stone studio on his property south of Fish Creek, and Gaylord Brown, conductor of the Evansville symphony, who has just returned to the summer home of his mother, Mrs. J. Manley Clark, at Sister Bay. Most of his summer was spent at the Berkshire music colony, where he studied conducting under Serge Koussevitsky of the Boston symphony with such success that he was chosen one of five who will serve as guest conductors of the Boston symphony.

Another musical opportunity was made available to members of the Peninsula Arts association and their guests on Thursday evening when Dr. and Mrs. Arthur F. Bifield opened their summer home for a concert by Jacinta Kampmeier, violinist, accompanied on the piano by Beatrice Borg Wilson, both of whom spend their vacations in Ephraim.

This Clipping From
CHICAGO, ILL.
TRIBUNE
SEP 1 - 1940

Experiment in Post-Season Festival Urged

By Cecil Smith.

Summer music the nation over has turned into a prodigious enterprise. With 30 concerts at Ravinia and over a hundred in Grant park, Chicago leads the country quantitatively, as it has for several years past. Qualitatively, there can be little question of the supremacy of the Berkshire Symphonic festival, consisting of 10 superbly executed concerts by the Boston Symphony orchestra at Tanglewood, near Stockbridge, Mass. Also of great value and interest are the programs of opera, ballet, and symphonic music in the Hollywood bowl; the varied fare provided in Lewisohn stadium, New York City, by the Philharmonic-Symphonic orchestra and an eclectic list of assisting artists; the grand opera season at Cincinnati's zoo; the series of operettas and musical comedies in Forest park at St. Louis, and a host of other undertakings too numerous to list.

By now the American public, from coast to coast, has fully developed its taste for outdoor music. Despite hazards of weather which remain a constant threat everywhere except on the west coast, summer music-making has achieved a bulk, if not always an artistic palatability, that in some instances exceeds that of the winter diet.

This Clipping From
SO. NORWALK, CONN.
SENTINEL
SEP 7 - 1940

Berkshire Festival Memberships In Demand

The Berkshire Symphonic Festival trustees today reported an unprecedented response to their membership announcement for the 1941 series of concerts at Tanglewood by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky, conductor.

The total membership is limited to 4,500 and already the list has been more than two-thirds filled. The memberships are evenly distributed for each of the three series which open next year July 31 and continue through three weeks. This means that there are more than 1,000 members now for each of the three series and the limit for each series is 1,500.

A membership means tickets at reduced prices, the privilege of keeping seat locations held this year and attending a rehearsal by the orchestra during the festival period.

There is likewise a demand for boxes, nearly 90 having been taken. Most boxholders are signing up for all three series, according to the festival trustees.

Because of the tremendous demand for memberships it is likely that the lists will have to be closed before November 1. This was the tentative deadline provided the limit of 4,500 was not reached.

Applications for memberships and boxes should be mailed to the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, Inc., at Stockbridge, Mass. When the membership limit has been reached, applications will be received for subscriptions which involve only a slight increase in price but do not carry with them any of the membership privileges.

This Clipping From
HARTFORD, CONN.
COURANT
SEP 10 1940

Albert Spalding Joins Gordon Group Saturday

Albert Spaulding, famous American violinist, will be heard in a special concert with the Gordon String Quartet at Musician Mountain, Falls Village, Saturday at 3:30 p. m.

The program will include the Brahms Quintet, Opus 111, in G Major; the Brahms Sonata, Opus 108,, in D Minor, and Hayden's Quartet, Opus 20, No. 4.

Mr. Spaulding has been heard in special recitals with the Gordon Quartet annually for several seasons. He was also soloist in the Beethoven Violin Concerto in D with the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood, Stockbridge, during the festival just closed. One of the world's greatest virtuosi, he has performed in concert in Hartford on numerous occasions.

Music Mountain is at the intersection of Routes 7, 126 and 43.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
POUGHKEEPSIE, N. Y.
STAR-ENTERPRISE
SEP 7 - 1940

Berkshire Festival Prepares for Next Year

More than two-thirds of the membership for the Berkshire Symphonic Festival for the 1941 concert series at Tanglewood, Stockbridge, Mass., has been filled, according to an announcement made by the trustees today. The total membership is limited to 4500, and the memberships are evenly distributed for each of the three series which open next year July 31 and continue through three weeks. Thus making more than 1000 members now for each of the three series and the limit for each series is 1500.

The concerts are by the Boston Symphony orchestra, with Serge Koussevitzky as conductor.

This Clipping From LANSING, MICH.
JOURNAL
SEP 1 - 1940

Koussevitzy's Dream Realized in America

Serge Koussevitzy, conducter of the Boston symphony orchestra, born in Russia found America the place for his music dreams rather than Russia. This was because Russia was so busy with revolutions that there was no time for the school of music that Koussevitzy planned, now existing in the Berkshire Hills.

This unusual music center has 340 students with the famous conductor in charge. A third of the students expect to make music a life work. Advanced students are personally coached by the director. About 30 pupils are trained in operatic interpretation by Herbert Graf; Aaron Copland and Paul Hindemith head a class in composition. There is work in choral conducting. Originally planned for White Plains, N. Y., the school planned by the Boston conductor had a set-back in 1929 when the depression was deepest and finally emerged in the Berkshire Hills.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
GRAND RAPIDS, MICH.
HERALD

SEP 5 - 1940

MUSICIAN PRAISES RECORD SALE HERE

Recorded Masterpieces Favored by Thor Johnson

Thor Johnson who will come to Grand Rapids this fall to conduct the Grand Rapids Symphony orchestra sent the following wire this morning to Hugh Macmillan, orchestra manager, from Winston Salem, N. C., where he is conducting the Mozart Festival.

"I am glad that the Grand Rapids Symphony society has found it possible to sponsor this distribution of recorded symphonic masterpieces. The possession of a record library of great music should be desired by all music patrons. It is of exceptional value to student and diletante alike."

Johnson went directly to Winston Salem from his summer in the Berkshires, where he spent a summer as a member of classes conducted by Koussevitzky at Stockbridge.

The national committee for music appreciation which will close distribution of symphonic recordings in Grand Rapids on Sept. 7, credits Thor Johnson for the record symphony record distribution at Ann Arbor last May.

Students from his classes at the University of Michigan, members of the University orchestra and Choral union were the first to line up at distribution headquarters where, during the first week, 500 complete symphonies were distributed each day

---

This Clipping From
ALBANY, N.Y.
KNICKERBOCKER NEWS

SEP 9 - 1940

1941 Festival List Filling Rapidly

The Berkshire Symphonic Festival trustees have reported an unprecedented response to their membership announcement for the 1941 series of concerts at Tanglewood by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky, conductor.

The total membership is limited to 4,500 and already the list has been more than two-thirds filled. The memberships are evenly distributed for each of the three series which open next year July 31 and continue through three weeks. This means that there are more than 1,000 members now for each of the three series and the limit for each series is 1,500.

A membership means tickets at reduced prices, the privilege of keeping seat locations held this year and attending a rehearsal by the orchestra during the festival period.

There is likewise a demand for boxes, nearly 90 having been taken. Most boxholders are signing up for all three series, according to the festival trustees.

Because of the tremendous demand for membership it is likely the lists will have to be closed before Nov. 1. This was the tentative deadline provided the limit of 4,500 was not reached.

Applications for memberships and boxes should be mailed to the Berkshire Symphonic Festival Inc., at Stockbridge, Mass. When the membership limit has been reached, applications will be received for subscriptions which involve only a slight increase in price but do not carry with them any of the membership privileges.

This Clipping From
N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT

SEP 5 - 1940

MEMBERSHIP LIST MAY CLOSE EARLY

More Than Two-Thirds Already Sold

FOR 1941 FESTIVAL

After Membership Quota is Filled Applications Will Still be Received for Subscriptions.

More than two-thirds of the 4500 memberships available for the 1941 Berkshire Symphonic festival have already been sold, trustees announced today. Because of the unprecedented advance demand, it is likely the lists will have to be closed before Nov. 1, the tentative deadline provided the limit of 4,500 was not reached.

The memberships are evenly distributed for each of the three series of concerts at Tanglewood by the Boston Symphony orchestra, directed by Serge Koussevitzky, which will open July 31 and continue for three weeks. Thus there are now available less than 500 memberships for each of the three series. Members receive their tickets at reduced prices, and have the privilege of keeping the seat locations held this year and attending a rehearsal during the festival.

When the membership quota is filled, applications will still be received for subscriptions, which are slightly higher in price and do not carry the membership privileges.

The trustees also announced that nearly 90 boxes have been sold, most of them for all three series.

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS

SEP 5 - 1940

BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL MEMBERSHIPS FOR 1941 ARE MUCH IN DEMAND

Stockbridge, Sept. 5—The Berkshire Symphonic festival trustees today reported an unprecedented response to their membership announcement for the 1941 series of concerts at Tanglewood by the Boston Symphony orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky, conductor.

The total membership is limited to 4500 and already the list has been more than two-thirds filled. The memberships are evenly distributed for each of the three series which open next year July 31 and continue through three weeks. This means that there are more than 1000 members now for each of the three series and the limit for each series is 1500.

A membership means tickets at reduced prices, the privilege of keeping seat locations held this year and attending a rehearsal by the orchestra during the festival period.

There is likewise a demand for boxes, nearly 90 having been taken. Most boxholders are signing up for all three series, according to the festival trustees.

Because of the tremendous demand for memberships it is likely that the lists will have to be closed before November 1. This was the tentative deadline provided the limit of 4500 was not reached.

Applications for memberships and boxes should be mailed to the Berkshire Symphonic festival, inc., at Stockbridge. When the membership limit has been reached, applications will be received for subscriptions which involve only a slight increase in price but do not carry with them any of the membership privileges.

THIS CLIPPING FROM NORWALK, CONN.
HOUR

SEP 6 - 1940

BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL TICKETS IN DEMAND

The Berkshire Symphonic Festival trustees reported today an unprecedented response to their membership announcement for the 1941 series of concerts at Tanglewood at Stockbridge, Mass., by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky, conductor.

The total membership is limited to 4,500 and already the list has been more than two-thirds filled. The memberships are evenly distributed for each of the three series which open next year July 31 and continue through three weeks.

This means that there are more than 1,000 members now for each of the three series and the limit for each series is 1,500.

A membership means tickets at reduced prices, the privilege of keeping seat locations held this year and attending a rehearsal by the orchestra during the festival period.

Because of the demand for memberships it is likely that the lists will have to be closed before Nov. 1.

This Clipping From PORTLAND, OREGON
OREGON JOURNAL

SEP 6 - 1940

Famous Negro Singer to Make Portland Debut

D. Maynor

Dorothy Maynor, young Negro soprano, hailed as the musical discovery of the decade last season, will make her Portland debut this year on the Ellison-White bureau's greater artists series.

This young singer, unknown until a year ago when she sang for Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston symphony. During her first year as a concert singer she was engaged by four of the country's leading symphony orchestras—the New York Philharmonic, the Boston, Philadelphia and Chicago symphonies.

At her recent appearance at the Berkeshire Festival at Stockbridge, Mass., which marked the first anniversary of her career in concert, an audience of 7000 witnessed her triumph.

The greater artists series also includes Lawrence Tibbett, Paul Robeson, Bidu Sayao, Fritz Kreisler, Vladimir Horowitz and Richard Crooks.

This Clipping From LOUISVILLE, KY.
COURIER-JOURNAL

SEP 8 - 1940

Berkshire Festival.

The Berkshire Symphonic Festival proved to be a musical paradise for musicians from all over the United States and Louisville added its quota. Among those who vacationed at Tanglewood were Mr. and Mrs. Robert S. Whitney, Mr. and Mrs. Dwight Anderson, Julia Bachus Horn, Mrs. Alfred Brandeis and Miss Fanny Brandeis.

This year's festival broke all records and it was the longest and most successful season of the seven. Festival officials confirmed the report that this season's sessions had produced a substantial surplus. It was the fifth surplus in a row since the Boston Symphony joined hands with the Berkshire Festival Association. With such an orchestra and Mr. Koussevitzky as its conductor, the [illegible] growth of the festival is assured and, according to the letters written by Dwight Anderson to The Courier-Journal, the Berkshire may be harboring the "Salzburg of

---

THIS CLIPPING FROM AUBURN, N. Y.
Citizen-Advertiser

SEP 7 - 1940

Bershire Symphonic Festival 1941 Memberships in Demand

The Berkshire Symphonic Festival trustees report an unprecedented response to their membership announcement for the 1941 series of concerts at Tanglewood, Mass., by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky, conductor.

The total membership is limited to 4,500 and already the list has been more than two-thirds filled. The memberships are evenly distributed for each of the three series which opens next year July 31 and continue through three weeks. This means that there are more than 1,000 members now for each of the three series and the limit for each series is 1500.

A membership means tickets at reduced prices, the privilege of keeping seat locations held this year and attending a rehearsal by the orchestra during the festival period.

Because of the tremendous demand for membership it is likely that the lists will have to be closed before November 1.

Applications for memberships and boxes should be mailed to the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, Inc., at Stockbridge, Mass. When the membership limit has been reached, applications will be received for subscriptions which involve only a slight increase in price but do not carry with them any of the membership privileges.

This Clipping From
ROCHESTER, N.Y.
DEMOCRAT-CHRONICLE

SEP [illegible] 1940

Berkshire Center Reports Big Demand for 1941

Stockbridge, Mass. — Berkshire Symphonic Festival trustees report an unprecedented response to their membership announcement for the 1941 series of concerts at Tanglewood by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Dr. Serge Koussevitzky. Total membership is limited to 4,500 and already the list is more than two-thirds filled.

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
EVENING UNION

SEP 5 - 1940

Festival Tickets For '41 in Demand

STOCKBRIDGE, Sept. 5—The Berkshire Symphonic Festival trustees today reported an unprecedented response to their membership announcement for the 1941 series of concerts at Tanglewood by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky, conductor.

The total membership is limited to 4500 and already the list has been more than two-thirds filled. The memberships are evenly distributed for each of the three series which open next year July 31 and continue through three weeks. This means that there are more than 1000 members now for each of the three series and the limit for each series is 1500.

A membership means tickets at reduced prices, the privilege of keeping seat locations held this year and attending a rehearsal by the orchestra during the Festival period.

There is likewise a demand for boxes, nearly 90 having been taken. Most boxholders are signing up for all three series, according to the Festival trustees.

Because of the tremendous demand for memberships it is likely that the lists will have to be closed before Nov. 1. This was the tentative deadline provided the limit of 4500 was not reached.

Applications for memberships and boxes should be mailed to the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, Inc., at Stockbridge. When the membership limit has been reached, applications will be received for subscriptions which involve only a slight increase in prices but do not carry with them any of the membership privileges.

This Clipping From SEATTLE, WASH.
TIMES

SEP 4 - 1940

ELLEN REPP WRITES OF EASTERN MUSIC TRAINING

From Miss Ellen Repp, Seattle and Everett contralto, who has been in New York City for several years carving out a musical career, came a letter from "Brookside," Great Barrington, Mass. Miss Repp is a prominent member of Mu Phi Epsilon, national music honorary, and makes her home at the Mu Phi Clubhouse in New York.

Her letter, in part, follows:

This summer I've had a scholarship with Dr. Graf at the Tanglewood School studying operas. Florence (Mrs. William) Wilson and (Miss) Edith Woodcock have been here auditing. When they return, ask them to tell you about this picturesque school—it is great.

Dr. Graf is the main stage director at the Met. Incidentally, it wasn't until Toscanini asked for him in Salzburg that he became in demand here. Of course, I'm more interested in the Tanglewood Opera Department because I feel it meets a very urgent need in this country. Outside of Juilliard and Curtis music schools, it is almost impossible to get opera training. More and more, America must assume this responsibility. Dr. Graf's ideals are much the same as those of our late Myron Jacobson. The more I get around the more I realize what a great man Jacobson was.

Our teaching staff consists of five opera coaches, diction teacher, dancing teacher and Dr. Graf, teaching acting. I wish you could see us dance. There were several Mu Phis who came to get a good laugh. However, by the end of the course, we were giving Martha Graham competition.

During the season I did Amneris in Verdi's "Aida" and Eboli in Verdi's "Don Carlos." During the summer I have done: July 23, a concert in Great Barrington, Mass.; July 25, a concert at Columbia University in New York; July 30, fourth act of "Aida" at Tanglewood; August 6, at Tanglewood, the Institute Orchestra playing Gluck's "Che Faro"; August 7, Verdi Requiem; August 9, fourth act of "Don Carlos" at Tanglewood, and August 16, fourth act of "Aida" to benefit the Allied Relief program. Tanglewood cleared $25,000 for Relief that night. There were more than 70,000 attending the festival. Dr. Koussevitzky is doing great work.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SYRACUSE, N. Y.
AMERICAN

SEP 8 - 1940

Note Response to Berkshire Schedule

The Berkshire Symphonic Festival trustees report an unprecedented response to their membership announcement for the 1941 series of concerts at Tanglewood by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky, conductor.

The total membership is limited to 4,500 and already the list has been more than two-thirds filled. The memberships are evenly distributed for each of the three series which open next year, July 31, and continue through three weeks. This means that there are more than 1,000 members now for each of the three series and the limit for each series is 1,500.

A membership means tickets at reduced prices, the privilege of keeping seat locations held this year and attending a rehearsal by the orchestra during the festival period.

There is likewise a demand for boxes, nearly 90 having been taken. Most boxholders are signing up for all three series, according to the festival trustees.

Because of the tremendous demand for memberships it is likely that the lists will have to be closed before Nov. 1. This was the tentative deadline provided the limit of 4,500 was not reached.

Applications for memberships and boxes should be mailed to the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, Inc., at Stockbridge, Mass. When the membership limit has been reached, applications will be received for subscriptions which involve only a slight increase in price but do not carry with them any of the membership privileges.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
UNION-STAR

SEP 9 - 1940

Symphony Series Interest Is High

An unprecedented response to the membership announcement for the 1941 series of concerts at Tanglewood by the Boston Symphony Orchestra has been reported this Summer. The total membership is limited to 4,500 and already the list has been more than two-thirds filled. There are more than 1,000 members now for each of the three series and the limit for each series is 1,500.

A membership means tickets at reduced prices, the privilege of keeping seat locations held this year and attending a rehearsal by the orchestra during the Festival period. Because of the tremendous demand for memberships it is likely that the lists will have to be closed before November 1. This was the tentative deadline provided the limit of 4500 was not reached.

Applications for memberships or boxes may be mailed to the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, Inc., at Stockbridge, Mass. When the membership limit has been reached, applications will be received for subscriptions which involve only a slight increase in price but which do not carry with them any of the membership privileges.

THIS CLIPPING FROM MONMOUTH, ILL.
REVIEW ATLAS

SEP 4 - 1940

MUSIC AND ART

(By Prof. Thos. H. Hamilton)

The Berkshire Festival, just concluded in New England, with the Boston Symphony Orchestra presenting nine concerts in eighteen days under Serge Koussevitzky, has been a tremendous success, with the smallest audience over 6500, and some of them reaching nine thousand. The critics are unanimous on the superb quality of the performances, which were on as high a level as the regular winter concerts of the orchestra. Olin Downes has given it as his opinion that this is the finest and most important summer festival in the world today, now that the happier days of the Munich and Salzburg festivals are over.

This Clipping From
HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES

SEP 9 - 1940

Berkshire '41 Memberships Two Thirds Sold

Unusual Response For Festival Concerts Next Season

The Berkshire Symphonic Festival trustees report an unprecedented response to their membership announcement for the 1941 series of concerts at Tanglewood by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky conductor.

The total membership is limited to 4,500 and already the list has been more than two-thirds filled. The memberships are evenly distributed for each of the three series, which open next year July 31 and continue through three weeks. This means that there are more than 1,000 members now for each of the three series and the limit for each series is 1,500.

A membership means tickets at reduced prices, the privileges of keeping seat locations held this year and attending a rehearsal by the orchestra during the Festival period. There is likewise a demand for boxes, nearly 90 having been taken. Most boxholders are signing up for all three series.

Because of the tremendous demand for memberships it is likely that the lists will have to be closed before Nov. 1. This was the tentative deadline provided the limit of 4,500 was not reached.

Applications for memberships and boxes should be mailed to the Berkshire Symphonic Festival Inc. at Stockbridge, Mass. When the membership limit has been reached, applications will be received for subscriptions which involve only a slight increase in price but do not carry with them any of the membership privileges.

This Clipping From
SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
GAZETTE

SEP 9 - 1940

* * *

HEAVY RESPONSE

The Berkshire Symphonic Festival trustees have reported an unprecedented response to their membership announcement for the 1941 series of concerts at Tanglewood by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky, conductor. The total membership is limited to 4,500 and already the list has been more than two-thirds filled. The memberships are evenly distributed for each of the three series which open next year July 31 and continue through three weeks. This means that there are more than 1000 members now for each of the three-series and the limit for each series is 1,500.

A membership means tickets at reduced prices, the privilege of keeping seat locations held this year and attending a rehearsal by the orchestra during the Festival period. There is likewise a demand for boxes, nearly 90 having been taken. Most boxholders are signing up for all three series, according to the Festival trustees. Because of the tremendous demand for memberships it is likely that the lists will have to be closed before November 1. This was the tentative deadline provided the limit of 4,500 was not reached.

Applications for memberships and boxes should be mailed to the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, Inc., at Stockbridge, Mass. When the membership limit has been reached, applications will be received for subscriptions which involve only a slight increase in price but do not carry with them any of the membership privileges.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
UNION-STAR

SEP 9 - 1940

Schenectady Music Studios Resume Fall Schedules After Summer Vacation

Members of Conservatory Faculty Return From Widely Divergent Points; Many Took 'Busmans' Holiday

With the opening of school the majority of music studios in the City have resumed a Fall teaching schedule on full time. Members of the faculty of the Schenectady Conservatory of Music have returned from widely divergent points and registration is in process. Joseph Derrick spent the period of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival in Lenox and Stockbridge and attended all the concerts given by the Boston Symphony. Cecil Wright also was a regular attendant at the Tanglewood programs.

1941 Berkshire Festival Demand

Transcript
Sept 8

Trustees of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival report an unprecedented demand for membership in the 1941 series of concerts at Tanglewood by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky.

A membership means tickets at reduced prices, the privilege of keeping seat locations held this year and attending a rehearsal by the orchestra during the festival period. Total membership is limited to 4500, 1500 for each of the three week-ends, and this quota is already more than two thirds filled. Because of the extraordinary rush for memberships it is probable that the lists will have to be closed before Nov. 1, the date originally set.

Applications for memberships and boxes should be mailed to the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, Inc., at Stockbridge, Mass. When the membership limit has been reached, applications will be received for subscriptions which involve only a slight increase in price but do not carry with them any of the membership privileges.

Boston Herald
9-8

1941 Memberships Berkshire Festival

The Berkshire Symphonic Festival trustees report an unprecedented response to their membership announcement for the 1941 series of concerts at Tanglewood by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky, conductor. The total membership is limited to 4500 and already the list has been more than two-thirds filled. The memberships are evenly distributed for each of the three series which open next year July 31 and continue through three weeks. This means that there are more than 1000 members now for each of the three series and the limit for each series is 1500.

A membership means tickets at reduced prices, the privilege of keeping seat locations held this year and attending a rehearsal by the orchestra during the festival period.

Applications for memberships and boxes should be mailed to the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, Inc., at Stockbridge, Mass. When the membership limit has been reached, applications will be received for subscriptions which involve only a slight increase in price but do not carry with them any of the membership privileges.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

SEP 12 1940

Festival Membership Limit Weeks Ahead of Schedule

The Berkshire Symphonic Festival announced today that its membership list for the 1941 series of concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood was closed because 1500 members had enrolled for each of the three series. Thus a total of 4500 members have been enrolled seven week before the deadline which had been set as Nov. 1.

According to the trustees, the response this fall for concerts to be given next year is unprecedented. More than 100 boxes have ben taken.

Subscriptions will now be accepted until 1800 have been received for each of the three series. Subscriptions mean only a slight increase in price compared with memberships but they represent a substantial saving over tickets for single concerts. Inquiries may be directed to the Festival office at Stockbridge.

The annual meeting of the Festival trustees will be held next month.

THIS CLIPPING FROM TUCSON, ARIZ.
STAR

SEP 8 - 1940

The Berkshire Festival continued its steady growth as an outstanding American musical event. Koussevitzky conducted his Boston Symphony men in programs of distinguished music at the Music Shed in Tanglewood, Mass., throughout August. There was a special Beethoven and Tchaikovsky celebration, and the first concert of the festival (August 1) was an interesting program of "firsts"—the first symphonies of Beethoven, Schumann, and Sibelius. Americans once again demonstrated that the "pop" type of pogram is not the only one they favor for summer fare by flocking to the Berkshire Festival in numbers.

LYONS, N.Y
REPUBLICAN
8/22/40

LYONS REPRESENTED AT BRITISH AID BENEFIT AT TANGLEWOOD, MASS.

Robert W. Courneen of Lyons with his brother, William Courneen, and a friend, Frank Gipp, both of Albany, attended the Allied Relief Fund benefit for British Aid at Tanglewood, Mass., on Friday evening. The Berkshire Symphonic Festival, Boston Symphony Orchestra and Dr. Serge Koussevitzky sponsored it and speakers included such notables as Governor Herbert H. Lehman, Dorothy Thompson, Archibald Macleish, Sir Louis Beal. Soloists with the Boston Symphony were Albert Spalding, violinist; Gregor Piatigorsky, cellist; Alexander Kipnis, bass, and the Berkshire Festival Chorus.

1169

This Clipping From
SAN DIEGO, CAL.
UNION

SEP 15 1940

KOUSSEVITZKY REALIZES DREAM IN BERKSHIRE MUSIC CENTER

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Sept. 14 (A.P.)—There never has been a music school quite like the one that functioned this summer under the tall trees of Tanglewood, the Boston Symphony orchestra's handsome estate between Stockbridge and Lenox.

For one thing, the 340 students had as their general director Serge Koussevitzky, who spends his winters directing the Boston Symphony, which has been called the finest orchestra the world has known. Dr. Koussevitzky no less than another famous conductor, Arturo Toscanini, is a perfectionist. If anything can be improved, Dr. Koussevitzky won't present it until it has been improved.

The Berkshire music center was actually a "dream walking."

WAR KILLED PLAN

It began back in opulent pre-war Russia, when Dr. Koussevitzky had money to do things in the grand style of the period. He wanted a school of music for Moscow, wherein all teachers should be as careful as he himself was, and all students the cream of the crop. But the war killed it, the revolution took much of the money, and Dr. Koussevitzky came to America.

The second attempt was also under a depressing and malignant star—in 1929 and at White Plains, N. Y. Money ran out once more.

Now, in still another war year, Dr. Koussevitzky had exactly what he dreamed of for three decades, here in the Berkshire Hills. It turned out to be exactly what hundreds of the best student material wanted, also. So many applied that only half could be accepted.

Chiefly, the music center was unusual because of its teaching plan and the caliber of its teachers.

Dr. Koussevitzky believed his school should be divided so that it could give intensive training to musicians of first grade, who intended to make a life work of it. About a third of the student body is in that class.

But he felt that schools ignored many persons of intelligence and musical experience who had no thought of making a living out of music, but who would like to reestablish contact with it for a summer, live in the midst of music, and practice the art to the limit of their ability. Again he was right; two thirds of the music center's students were in that class.

'TAILORS' STUDY COURSE

So he tailored the course of study to fit.

Five of the advanced students he accepted for personal coaching in the art of conducting—a privilege dozens of American youths would have given their upper teeth for. Dr. Herbert Graf had a small theater of his own in which he coached 20-odd pupils in operatic interpretation. Aaron Copland and Paul Hindemith accepted a few pupils for study of composition. G. Wallace Woodsworth had a small class in choral conducting.

There was an advanced orchestra of 60 players.

A chorus of about 200 voices for less advanced students, a less advanced orchestra, a welter of lectures and chamber music performances—even dancing for those who wanted it.

This Clipping From PORTLAND, OREGON
OREGONIAN

[illegible]

Artist Finally Plain Listener

Earlier this year Igor Strawinsky sat in the audience at Symphony hall in Boston and listened to a performance of his capriccio for piano and orchestra as played by Jesus Maria Sanroma and the Boston Symphony under Serge Koussevitzky.

For 11 years this music had been an intimate part of his life: first during the period of its writing, and then for the ensuing ten years when he was either appearing as soloist or conductor on some musical spot of the globe. But this was the first time he had heard it without taking some physical part in the performance.

He had written the capriccio, he says, so that he could offer the public something beside a piano concerto which he had already played 40 times.

Those who are familiar with the brittle brilliance of the Strawinsky idiom: the contrasts, the sudden and surprising cacaphonies, will know what to expect in the capriccio. It has a fittingly brilliant performance from Sanroma and the Boston symphony on a new set of Victor records.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

SEP 27 1939

1940 Festival Plans Still Undecided

Two or Three Weeks' Season To Be Determined Oct. 17

Whether there will be two weeks of concerts or three by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Berkshire Symphonic Festival next year will not be determined until Oct. 17 at a special meeting of the Festival trustees, according to a vote taken at the annual meeting held yesterday afternoon.

At the special meeting, a representative of the trustees of the orchestra will meet with the Berkshire trustees.

All officers and trustees were re-elected at the meeting as follows: President, Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith of Stockbridge and New York; treasurer, Henry W. Dwight of Stockbridge; clerk, George W. Edman of Pittsfield; trustees, Mrs. Gorham Brooks of Brookline and formerly of Lenox who gave Tanglewood as a permanent home for the Festival; Mr. Dwight, Mrs. John C. Lynch of Stockbridge, Laurence R. Connor of Pittsfield, Mrs. Arthur F. Schermerhorn of Lenox and New York, Mrs. Bruce Crane of Dalton, Joseph Franz of Stockbridge and Mrs. Henry A. Francis of Pittsfield. Edward S. Rogers of Lee was chairman of the nominating committee.

The meeting was held at the home of Mrs. Charles Robinson Smith in Glendale. Reports were submitted by Miss Robinson Smith, Mr. Franz as chairman of the Tanglewood committee; Mr. Edman on publicity and in Mr. Dwight's absence, his report was read by the clerk.

The reports indicated that the 1939 Festival had been an outstanding success with net proceeds greater than a year ago. A substantial amount of the surplus will be needed for many needed improvements at Tanglewood including the erection of a steel fence from the Bullard to the Higginson line extending through the Hawthorne Pines.

The trustees voted to continue the executive committee as it was the past year, namely, Miss Robinson Smith, Mr. Dwight, Mr. Edman, Norval H. Busey Jr., of Lee, Robert K. Wheeler of Great Barrington, Mrs. Carlos M. deHeredia of Lenox and New York and Mr. Franz.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES

SEP 22 1940

CONCERT AND OPERA

Expansion of Tanglewood Facilities, With Lyric Works Next Summer Likely

SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY moves rapidly to put his plans into practice. And he is receiving support from many quarters. Thus he has had in mind the inclusion of opera in the program of the Berkshire Festival. Now it looks as if there will be a theatre, seating 1,200, in time for the next festival. There will also be a hall for chamber music and four new rehearsal and training studios. All these things will be possible as a result of the rallying round Mr. Koussevitzky of men and women and organizations of means.

Take the case of the theatre. Mrs. Mary Louise Curtis Bok, founder of the Curtis Institute, visited Tanglewood in the Berkshires last month and heard about the theatre plans. The day after the festival ended she wrote a letter to Mr. Koussevitzky. It speaks for itself:

> Lenox, Mass.,
> August 19, 1940.
>
> Dear Dr. Koussevitzky:
>
> As I think you must know, I have enthusiastic confidence in your Berkshire Music Center. This should, I believe, be expressed in tangible form. So——
>
> I believe there is under consideration the building of a theatre of about 1,000 seating capacity at or near Tanglewood. If this project evolves into certainty, I will be most happy to contribute ten thousand dollars ($10,000) for the building.
>
> This is a personal contribution, whereas the financing of a group of Curtis Institute outstanding students, to attend the Berkshire Summer School in future Summers, will be a contribution made by the Curtis Institute of Music, Inc., of Philadelphia.
>
> If these offers mean anything of encouragement for you, in your splendid vision and "manifestation" of that vision, I will be very happy.
>
> Sincerely yours,
> MARY BOK.

Mr. Koussevitzky has had contributions from others. He is confident that it will be possible to start building in the Spring and to have the theatre ready in the Summer.

At the close of this year's Berkshire Symphonic Festival the trustees of the festival set Nov. 1 as the deadline for which members could enroll for next year's series of concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood. That date is still six weeks off, but due to the unprecedented demands for memberships the axe has already fallen. The limit of 4,500 members—1,500 members for each of the three series—has been reached. Subscriptions will now be accepted until the limit of 1,800 for each series also has been reached.

Arturo Toscanini and some of the Italian officials have not been on cordial terms for some time—in fact, not since that night in June nine years ago in Bologna when the conductor refused to play the fascist hymn "Giovinezza." The coldness has now received its coup de grâce the name of Toscanini has been dropped from Italy's Who's Who. The maestro's biography survived the three previous editions of the work published between 1928 and 1936, but not the latest, which has just appeared. Il Duce's biography, on the other hand, has been expanded.

Leopold Stokowski and the All-American Youth Orchestra have been to South America and have been "welcomed home." Now that the fanfares have quieted, a new development of the tour emerges. Brazil may send a youth orchestra of its own to tour this country. While in Rio, Mr. Stokowski had a long conference with President Vargas on the subject of a reciprocal tour. Should the President decide to set up a similar orchestra in Brazil, Mr. Stokowski agreed to help him with it.

This department leaves the quoting of verse to the more literary pages of the paper. But this week some lines reached us which we cannot resist. It is from Vol. 1, No. 9 of the Musical Almanach edited by Frederick C. Schang, concert manager, in The Musical Courier. The poem is addressed to a wordbook, presumably by a grateful soprano. We quote it in full:

Blessed booklet, yield your cue,
Lines escape me but for you.
Clasped within my loving palms,
You remove uneasy qualms.
Notwithstanding I don't speak
Russian, German, French or Greek,
With your blithe assisting aid
I can sing them unafraid.
When I often am not sure,
With a downward glance demure,
Brazenly I read the poem
Though I should have learned it home.
If my public don't object,
And my fees I still collect,
Why disturb my mind's repose
With foreign words nobody knows?

The real explanation for Lawrence Tibbett's sudden cancellation of all his engagements for the next four months has been given by his physician, Dr. William F. Mayer-Hermann.

"Mr. Tibbett," the doctor writes, "is suffering from an uncommon form of spasticity of the larnyx muscles. Some of the intrinsic muscles of the larnyx—namely, the lateral cricoarytenoid and the external thyroarytenoid muscles—are in a state of high tension. To cure this condition completely Mr. Tibbett will require a series of physiotherapeutic treatments. After repeated examinations I can state positively that there is no abnormality of the vocal cords either in appearance or in motility."

In other words, Mr. Tibbett has a bad throat. We understand that he can vocalize and sing vowels, but has difficulty with consonants.

Town Hall has been spruced up. The front of the building has been given a steam blasting treatment so that "the original color shines forth again." Much of the interior has been redecorated. New carpets have been laid and the proscenium has a new curtain and a new set of valances.

Alexander Broude of 151 West Fifty-seventh Street reports that he has on exhibition—and on sale—the autograph collection of Josef A. Pasternack, the Polish-American conductor who died last April. The collection includes letters, musical manuscripts and portraits of such men as Johann Strauss Sr., Gustav Mahler, Edvard Grieg, Max Bruch, Robert Franz, Joseph Joachim, Louis Spohr, Donizetti, Offenbach and Carl Czerny.

Hemidemisemiquavers: Word comes from Russia that Serge Prokofieff has written a new opera described as "a folk musical drama." It is called "Semyon Katko" and had its première in Moscow on June 23. . . . David Sackson, New York violinist, will give the first American performance of another new work by another contemporary Russian, Nicolas Miaskovsky. At Town Hall on Jan. 5 he will play the composer's new violin concerto. . . . Jack Pepper, a former member of the Los Angeles Philharmonic Quartet, has joined the Coolidge Quartet as its second violinist. He replaces Nicolai Berezowsky. . . . There is going to be a mass piano recital at the World's Fair on Tuesday afternoon. The publicity director promises that "101 pianos and their nimble-fingered operators will combine in producing the mighty harmony."

THIS CLIPPING FROM
HUDSON, N. Y.
DAILY STAR

SEP 14 1940

BERKSHIRE SYMPHONIC FESTIVAL MEMBERSHIP REACHED WEEKS EARLY

The Berkshire Symphonic Festival trustees have announced that its membership list for the 1941 series of concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood was closed because the limit of 1,500 members had enrolled for each of the three series. Thus a total of 4,500 members have been enrolled seven weeks before the deadline, which had been set as November 1.

According to the trustees, the response this fall for concerts to be given next year is unprecedented. More than 100 boxes have been taken.

Subscriptions will now be accepted until 1,8000 have been received for each of the three series. Subscriptions mean only a slight increase in price compared with memberships, but they represent a substantial saving over tickets for single concerts.

The annual meeting of the Festival trustees will be held next month.

This Clipping From
ROCHESTER, N.Y.
DEMOCRAT-CHRONICLE

SEP [illegible]

Eastman Graduates At Tanglewood

Three Eastman School graduates, Richard Duncan, Richard Bales and Robert Hufstader, and Robert Weiskopf, undergraduate, were included in the small class in conducting under Dr. Serge Koussevitzky at Tanglewood, Berkshire Music Center, in August.

Another group attended as students in ensemble playing and listening auditors, included William Schempf Willis Page, Irving Nathanson, Robert Willoughby, Martin Heylman, Ernest Harrison, Roy Houser, Alexander Courage, John Halliday, John Walsh, Wilda Tinsley, Lodima Legg.

THIS CLIPPING FROM TUCSON, ARIZ.
STAR

SEP 29 1940

The Berkshire Music Festival, known for several seasons now as a stronghold of straight symphonic music, is planning tentatively to include opera in its program next August. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which presents the festival will of course be in charge.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

SEP 23 1940

Koussevitzky To Hear Chorus

The rehearsal of the Berkshire Musical Association's chorus tonight at First Congregational Church will start at 7.30. All members are urged to attend in view of the visit to be made by Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION

SEP 20 1940

Tanglewood Gets Gift of $10,000

Philadelphia Woman Donor; Plan Chamber Music Hall

PITTSFIELD, Sept. 19—A gift of $10,000 to be used for completion of the theater at Tanglewood was announced today by Dr. Serge Kousevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The gift is from Mrs. Mary Louise Curtis Bok of Philadelphia, founder of the Curtis Institute of Music.

The stage of the theater was built this year, and the building itself will be constructed before the coming season. Other funds will be raised to complete it.

Dr. Koussevitzky also announced that a new hall for chamber of music is part of the building project for the coming season. A gift of $1200 has already been earmarked for this. The hall will be used by students at the Music Center, and public concerts will not be given in it.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

SEP 24 1940

BMA Chorus To Sing in 1941 Festival

Koussevitzky Extends Invitation After Hearing Rehearsal

Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, attended the rehearsal of the Berkshire Musical Association at First Congregational Church last night and was enthusiastic over what he heard.

The noted conductor stepped to the front of the chorus, shook hands with Horace Hunt, director, complimented the chorus upon its "fine work," and for having such an excellent leader and then brought things to a climax by asking Mr. Hunt and the chorus to participate in a choral work at the Festival next summer. As he stepped into the rehearsal room Dr. Koussevitzky was greeted with applause which mounted to a crescendo with the invitation to take part in the Tanglewood program. The conductor told the chorus he was impressed by the high quality of work being done by the musical association and pleased that it was to be found in what he called "our section of the country."

Later, as the conductor listened, he remarked:

"They not only sing well, but they have been taught how to sing. It is wonderful to have this activity in the home neighborhood of the Festival. The Festival and the chorus have much in common."

Dr. Koussevitzky and Mr. Hunt will confer this month, before the conductor returns to Boston to open the 60th season at Symphony Hall. They will make a selection of works to be rehearsed by the chorus for the Festival next summer.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
POST

SEP 26 1940

BERKSHIRES MAY BECOME THE AMERICAN SALZBURG

By Samuel Chotzinoff

I see by the papers that there is talk of enlarging the Berkshire Music Festival to include opera. Plans seem to be in the air, and the philanthropic and music-loving Mrs. Mary Bok has sent her check for $10,000 to Dr. Koussevitsky against the time that the theatre is built.

Words and Music

Of course, this brings up the old agitation for an American Salzburg, and a good agitation it is! There are very few musical bases in the Old World at present, and by the time the European nations get through bombing each other it is safe to assume that there will be none left. The Berkshire Festival here is certainly a nucleus for the kind of entertainment that has in the past caused so many Americans to take ship for the Old World.

The Berkshires are no Alps; Mozart wasn't born there; nor did Wagner bless it with his art and residence. All the same the region around Pittsfield is handsome enough ground, the summer customers are plentiful, accommodations for outsiders adequate, and the distance from New York is reasonable.

Hot-Dogs Will Do

The American hot-dog may not sound as romantic as the Viennese "broetchen" and the "wuerstchen," but it will do for intermission refreshment. In fact, at Salzburg's last legitimate season—that is, before the barbarians took that charming spot over—the hot-dog shared a place of honor with Austrian edibles. I remember the Duke and Duchess of Windsor standing up to a couple of hot-dogs and mustard in the "festspielhaus" between the acts of "Fidelio."

A duplication of the native costumes which foreigners in Salzburg don and which contribute so much to the musical "pull' of that city would, I suppose, be difficult to manage in the vicinity of Stockbridge, Mass. Unfortunately, we have no native costumes, unless the picturesque garb of such folk as the Tennessee mountaineers might pass as such. However, a committee of our most ardent music-lovers might assemble and design an appropriate costume for festival time in the Berkshires.

It seems to me that the nearest approach to the Salzburg male peasant attire would be a kind of overalls, the seat of the pants fortified with leather. As for the women, they might consult with Madame Schiaparelli, who is here at the moment, to the end of constructing some garment to approximate the colorful "dirndl."

Great Artistic Value

Serious music-lovers may regard my preoccupation with the externals of the festival as the levity of a music critic in the non-musical month of September, but I can assure them that the matter of dress and food has a serious bearing on any first-class music festival. It certainly had at Salzburg, where the output of cotton and leather during July and August exceeded that of the rest of the year.

About the artistic value of the contemplated symphonic and operatic season in the Berkshires there can be little question. The Boston Symphony and Dr. Koussevitsky have already established the significance of that region in the summer months, and it is assumed that the operatic representations will uphold a like standard. It looks as if the American Salzburg, so far only an American dream, may become a reality before we know it.

170

CONCERT AND OPERA

N Y Times Sept 22

Expansion of Tanglewood Facilities, With Lyric Works Next Summer Likely

SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY moves rapidly to put his plans into practice. And he is receiving support from many quarters. Thus he has had in mind the inclusion of opera in the program of the Berkshire Festival. Now it looks as if there will be a theatre, seating 1,200, in time for the next festival. There will also be a hall for chamber music and four new rehearsal and training studios. All these things will be possible as a result of the rallying round Mr. Koussevitzky of men and women and organizations of means.

Take the case of the theatre. Mrs. Mary Louise Curtis Bok, founder of the Curtis Institute, visited Tanglewood in the Berkshires last month and heard about the theatre plans. The day after the festival ended she wrote a letter to Mr. Koussevitzky. It speaks for itself:

> Lenox, Mass.,
> August 19, 1940.
>
> Dear Dr. Koussevitzky:
>
> As I think you must know, I have enthusiastic confidence in your Berkshire Music Center. This should, I believe, be expressed in tangible form. So——
>
> I believe there is under consideration the building of a theatre of about 1,000 seating capacity at or near Tanglewood. If this project evolves into certainty, I will be most happy to contribute ten thousand dollars ($10,000) for the building.
>
> This is a personal contribution, whereas the financing of a group of Curtis Institute outstanding students, to attend the Berkshire Summer School in future Summers, will be a contribution made by the Curtis Institute of Music, Inc., of Philadelphia.
>
> If these offers mean anything of encouragement for you, in your splendid vision and "manifestation" of that vision, I will be very happy.
>
> Sincerely yours,
> MARY BOK.

Mr. Koussevitzky has had contributions from others. He is confident that it will be possible to start building in the Spring and to have the theatre ready in the Summer.

At the close of this year's Berkshire Symphonic Festival the trustees of the festival set Nov. 1 as the deadline for which members could enroll for next year's series of concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood. That date is still six weeks off, but due to the unprecedented demands for memberships the axe has already fallen. The limit of 4,500 members—1,500 members for each of the three series—has been reached. Subscriptions will now be accepted until the limit of 1,800 for each series also has been reached.

Arturo Toscanini and some of the Italian officials have not been on cordial terms for some time—in fact, not since that night in June nine years ago in Bologna when the conductor refused to play the fascist hymn "Giovinezza." The coldness has now received its coup de grâce the name of Toscanini has been dropped from Italy's Who's Who. The maestro's biography survived the three previous editions of the work published between 1928 and 1936, but not the latest, which has just appeared. Il Duce's biography, on the other hand, has been expanded.

Leopold Stokowski and the All-American Youth Orchestra have been to South America and have been "welcomed home." Now that the fanfares have quieted, a new development of the tour emerges. Brazil may send a youth orchestra of its own to tour this country. While in Rio, Mr. Stokowski had a long conference with President Vargas on the subject of a reciprocal tour. Should the President decide to set up a similar orchestra in Brazil, Mr. Stokowski agreed to help him with it.

This department leaves the quoting of verse to the more literary pages of the paper. But this week some lines reached us which we cannot resist. It is from Vol. 1, No. 9 of the Musical Almanach edited

---

ROCKLAND, ME
COURIER
9/21/40

MRS. BOK'S GIFT

Assurance of a new theatre for Tanglewood to be completed for use by the Berkshire Music Centre next season come Thursday with the announcement of a gift of $10,000 from Mrs. Mary Louise Curtis Bok, founder of the Curtis Institute of Music, Philadelphia. Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and director of the music centre, announced at the same time he expected the rest of the funds needed would be raised shortly.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT

SEP 24 1940

Koussevitzky Listens To Pittsfield Concert

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, famed conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra, turned listener at Pittsfield last evening and heard the 100 members of the Berkshire Music association chorus present a concert in the Congregational parish house under the direction of Horace Hunt of Dalton. Haydn's "Creation," selections from Horatio Parker's "Hora Novissima" and two a cappella numbers were given by the big chorus. Dr. Koussevitzky motored up to Pittsfield for the concert from his Lenox summer home.

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN

SEP 24 1940

KOUSSEVITZKY HEARS RECITAL BY CHORUS

Pittsfield, Sept. 23 — Dr Serge Koussevitzky attended tonight at the First Congregational parish house a recital by 100 members of the Berkshire Music association chorus, who sang selections from Horatio Parker's "Hora Novissima," which was given last April; Hayden's "Creation" and two a cappella numbers. Horace Hunt of Dalton was director and Hans Vigeland of Great Barrington, organist. Dr Koussevitzky gave constructive criticism.

Directors and officers of the Orpheus male chorus, Mr Vigeland conductor, met tonight to consider a major concert early this winter. Paul Auger is president. Orpheus has joined the Federation of Men's Glee Clubs. It was organized by James C. Morton of Pittsfield.

ZANESVILLE, OHIO
TIMES RECORDER

SEP 22 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM HENRYETTA, OKLA.
FREE LANCE

SEP 23 1940

This Clipping From
CHARLESTON, S. C.
NEWS-COURIER

SEP 22 1940

INDIANS PLAYED MUSIC

Boston Symphony Orchestra Uses Aboriginal Site

Pittsfield, Mass., Sept. 27.—(U.P.): Strong evidence has been discovered to show that the first concerts at Tanglewood, today the summer home of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, may have been given several hundred years ago by Indians.

On the north shore of Lake Mahkeenac, where the pine-studed acres of Tanglewood slope down to the water, is a skeleton ring of fire-reddened stones which, it is believed, surrounded the council fire of the chiefs and braces of Indian tribes antedating even Berkshire's famed Mohicans.

Authorities on American Indian lore already know that Indians loved music and their logical conclusion is that Tanglewood grove undoubtedly resounded often to the primitive strains of Indian rhythm.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

SEP 19 1940

171

New Theatre for Tanglewood Assured by Gift of $10,000

Mrs. Mary Louise Curtis Bok of Philadelphia Is Donor—Hall for Chamber Music—Opera in 1942

Assurance of a new theatre for Tanglewood to be completed for use by the Berkshire Music Center next season came today with the announcement of a gift of $10,000 from Mrs. Mary Louise Curtis Bok, founder of the Curtis Institute of Music, Philadelphia.

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and director of the Music Center announced at the same time he expected the rest of the funds needed would be raised shortly. The stage built this summer will remain standing and the new building will go deeper in the woods beyond the stage.

Opera in 1942

It was also announced that the prospect of Tanglewood branching out into opera has developed to the extent it is expected for the summer of 1942. The realization of opera will represent a long cherished hope of Dr. Koussevitzky. Last summer there was a division developed to opera-dramatics under Herbert Graf, stage director of the Metropolitan Opera.

For Chamber Music Concerts

A new hall for chamber music is also a part of the expansion at Tanglewood. Intended to seat 400 persons the hall will be constructed in time for next season. A gift of $1200 already has been earmarked for this project. It was pointed out the chamber music hall is intended for the use of the students and not for public concerts.

Dr. Koussevitzky also revealed that four studios—two for chamber music rehearsals and two for individual instrumental training — will be built in time for next season.

Is Personal Gift

In disclosing Mrs. Bok's offer of $10,000, Dr. Koussevitzky made public a letter that she sent to him shortly after the end of the Festival last month.

"As I think you must know, I have enthusiastic confidence in your Berkshire Music Center. This should, I believe, be expressed in tangible form. So—

"I believe there is under consideration the building of a theatre of about 1000 seating capacity at or near Tanglewood. If this project evolves into certainty, I will be most happy to contribute $10,000 for the building.

"This is a personal contribution, whereas the financing of a group of Curtis Institute outstanding students, to attend the Berkshire Summer School in future summers, will be a contribution made by the Curtis Institute of Music, Inc., of Philadelphia.

"If these offers mean anything of encouragement for you, in your splendid vision and 'manifestation' of that vision I will be very happy."

Other Contributions Received

Dr. Koussevitzky said yesterday that other contributions toward the theatre had been received since Mrs. Bok made her offer last month. He was confident that the required money would be in hand before next spring.

The new developments at Tanglewood will be constructed under the design and direction of Eliel Saarinen, permanent architect for Tanglewood. Mr. Saarinen made the original designs for the Shed where the symphonic concerts are now held, these plans having been modified and executed by Joseph Franz to meet the Berkshire Symphonic Festival budget. Mr. Saarinen has already made designs for a theatre and chamber music hall. He and his son, Eero, were at Tanglewood last Sunday with Dr. Koussevitzky.

A theatre stage was built for last summer, where the opera-dramatic students worked. This stage will be left standing. The new theatre will be built deeper in the woods beyond the stage.

The new hall for chamber music will be placed near the house and the formal English gardens.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT

SEP 19 1940

Tanglewood Given $10,000 Toward Theater For Opera

Founder of Curtis Institute of Music Offers Money to Start Construction of Building in Which Operatic Works May be Presented—Koussevitzky Also Reveals Scheme for Construction of Small Chamber Music Auditorium at Berkshire Symphonic Festival Property in Stockbridge—Plans for Both Buildings Are Drawn.

Another dream of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky—a program of opera in connection with the Berkshire symphonic Festival—may be realized next year, it was revealed today, when the conductor of the Boston symphony orchestra made public the offer of Mrs. Mary Louise Curtis Bok to give $10,000 toward a theater to be built at Tanglewood, the festival grounds between Lenox and Stockbridge.

Mrs. Bok, founder of the Curtis Institute of Music in Philadelphia, also informed Dr. Koussevitzky in a letter that the institute will finance the attendance of some of its outstanding students at the Berkshire Music center, conducted in conjunction with the festival, in future years.

Dr. Koussevitzky said he expected that additional funds toward the theater, which will seat about 1,200 people, will be raised shortly. He also announced that a new hall for chamber music seating about 400, for which a gift of $1,200 has already been received, will be constructed in time for next year's season. Plans for the two buildings have already been prepared by Eliel Saarinen, permanent architect for Tanglewood.

The new theater will be located a little beyond the stage erected last summer for opera-dramatic students who studied at the center under Herbert Graf, stage director of the Metropolitan Opera. The chamber music hall will be built near the manor house and formal gardens.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES

SEP 19 1940

OPERAS PLANNED FOR TANGLEWOOD

Koussevitzky Discloses Gift of $10,000 by Mrs. M. L. Curtis Bok Toward a Theatre

WILL BE BUILT IN SPRING

Others Contribute to Edifice, Which Will Seat 1,200—New Hall for Chamber Music

The prospect that the Berkshire Symphonic Festival will branch out into opera next Summer came closer to reality when it was learned last night that a theatre seating 1,200 would be built at Tanglewood, the festival grounds, next Spring.

The first gift toward the theatre came from Mrs. Mary Louise Curtis Bok, founder of the Curtis Institute of Music in Philadelphia. In making public Mrs. Bok's offer to give $10,000 toward a theatre, Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and director of the Berkshire Music Center, said that he expected that the rest of the funds needed would be raised shortly.

Mr. Koussevitzky has always had in mind the plan to incorporate opera in the festival scheme. The building of the theatre will help to bring the plan to realization. Last Summer at the center there was a division devoted to opera-dramatics under Herbert Graf, stage director of the Metropolitan Opera.

As part of further expansion plans for Tanglewood, Mr. Koussevitsky said, a new hall for chamber music to seat 400 will be constructed in time for next season. A gift of $1,200 toward this edifice has already been made.

Four Studios to Be Erected

Mr. Koussevitzky revealed that four studios—two for chamber music rehearsals and two for individual instrumental training—will be built in time for next season.

In disclosing Mrs. Bok's offer of $10,000, Mr. Koussevitzky made public a letter that she sent to him shortly after the end of the festival last month. Mrs. Bok wrote to Mr. Koussevitzky as follows:

"As I think you must know, I have enthusiastic confidence in your Berkshire Music Center. This should, I believe, be expressed in tangible form. So——

"I believe there is under consideration the building of a theatre of about 1,000 seating capacity at or near Tanglewood. If this project evolves into certainty, I will be most happy to contribute $10,000 for the building.

"This is a personal contribution, whereas the financing of a group of Curtis Institute outstanding students, to attend the Berkshire Summer School in future Summers, will be a contribution made by the Curtis Institute of Music, Inc., of Philadelphia.

"If these offers mean anything of encouragement for you, in your splendid vision and 'manifestation' of that vision I will be very happy."

Other Contributions Received

Mr. Koussevitzky said yesterday that other contributions toward the theatre had been received since Mrs. Bok made her offer last month. He was confident that the required money would be in hand before next Spring. Construction would begin in the Spring, and the theatre would be ready for use in the Summer.

The new developments at Tanglewood will be constructed under the design and direction of Eliel Saarinen, permanent architect for Tanglewood. Mr. Saarinen made the designs for the music shed where the symphonic concerts are now held. He has, in fact, already made designs for a theatre and chamber music hall.

A theatre stage was built for last Summer, where the opera-dramatic students worked. This stage will be left standing. The new theatre will be built deeper in the woods beyond the stage.

The new hall for chamber music will be placed near the old manor house and the formal English gardens at Tanglewood.

This Clipping From
ALBANY, N.Y.
KNICKERBOCKER NEWS

SEP 21 1940

New Theater Assured at Tanglewood

Assurance of a new theater for Tanglewood to be completed for use by the Berkshire Music Center next season came with the announcement of a gift of $10,000 from Mrs. Mary Louise Curtis Bok, founder the Curtis Institute of Music, Philadelphia.

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and director of the Music Center, announced at the same time he expected the rest of the funds needed would be raised shortly, The stage built this summur will remain standing and the new building will go deeper in the woods beyond the stage.

It was also announced the prospect of Tanglewood branching out into opera has developed to the extent it is expected for the summer of 1942. The realization of opera will represent a long cherished hope of Dr. Koussevitzky. Last summer there was a division developed to opera-dramatics under Herbert Graf, stage director of the Metropolitan Opera.

A new hall for chamber music is also a part of the expansion at Tanglewood. Intended to seat 400 persons, the hall will be constructed in time for next season. A gift of $1,200 already has been earmarked for this project. It was pointed out the chamber music hall is intended for the use of the students and not for public concerts.

Dr. Koussevitzky also revealed that four studios—two for chamber music rehearsals and two for individual instrumental training—will be built in time for next season.

This Clipping From DAVENPORT, IA.
DEMOCRAT-LEADER

SEP 29 1940

THE PROSPECT

. . . of operatic presentations at the Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Tanglewood, Mass., came closer to realization last week when the announcement was made that a theater seating about 1,200 persons would be erected there next spring. Mrs. Mary Curtis Bok of Philadelphia has made an offer of $10,000 towards the theater and other funds will be forthcoming. Serge Koussevitsky, director of the festival has had the presentation of opera at Tanglewood in his mind for some time. Further plans for expansion at Tanglewood will be a new hall for chamber music to seat 400 also to be erected in the spring and which will be placed in the formal English garden. The theater will be built deeper in the woods. There will also be four more studios built in time for next season.

This Clipping From PHILADELPHIA, PA.
RECORD

SEP 20 1940

MRS. BOK TO GIVE $10,000 FOR THEATER

A $10,000 grant toward construction of a 1200-seat theater to be used for opera at the Tanglewood (Mass.) site of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival was offered yesterday by Mrs. Mary Louise Curtis Bok.

Serge Koussevitsky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, announced the offer, which was confirmed here by Curtis Institute officials. Koussevitzky expects other donations will permit start of work in the spring.

172

THIS CLIPPING FROM KANSAS CITY, MO.
Weekly Independent

OCT 5 - 1940

Blanche Lederman, devotee of the arts, spent an ideal vacation in the Berkshires this summer. Engaged in writing an article for Time magazine, she attended the seventh annual Berkshire Festival and the new Berkshire Music Center, on the Tanglewood estate, Stockbridge, Massachusetts, where she interviewed notable teachers engaged at the School founded by Serge Koussevitsky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Among the instructors and lecturers were Paul Hindemith, Aaron Copeland, Dr. Herbert Graf of the Metropolitan Opera, Roy Harris, Olin Downes and others. A personal visit to Dr. Koussevitsky's magnificent estate at Lenox, Massachusetts, was particularly delightful. The residents of Stockbridge and Lenox, presented the famed maestro with the beautiful estate although he insisted upon personally applying $17,000 toward the cost. The three weeks Festival, which presented superlative programs by the Boston Symphony with Dr. Koussewitsky conducting, were comparable to the Symphony's Boston concerts. Classes in conducting at the Music Center under the personal supervision of the great director were most stimulating.

* * *

THIS CLIPPING FROM GRAND HAVEN, MICH.
TRIBUNE

OCT 9 - 1940

FIRST SYMPHONY NEXT WEEK IN GRAND RAPIDS

The first concert of the Grand Rapids Symphony orchestra under the baton of the new conductor, Thor Johnson, will be presented at the Civic auditorium on October 18. Harold Bauer, world-famous pianist, will appear as the guest artist.

Succeeding Karl Wecker, who resigned last winter to accept a position in California, Johnson is also head of the music department of the University of Michigan. During the summer he was a scholarship student of Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra, at the Berkshire Music Center.

The highlight of the first concert of the season will be the playing of Mendelsohn's Symphony No. 5 in D minor, better known as the Reformation symphony. This work was recently revived by Toscanni with great success. Bauer will accompany the orchestra in Beethoven's Concerto No. 4 in G Major for piano and orchestra.

The complete program is as follows:

The National Anthem
Symphony No. 5 in D minor, Opus 107 (Reformation) Mendelssohn
1 Andante
2 Allegro vivace
3 Andante
4 Andante con moto
Concerto No. 4 in G major, Opus 58, for piano and orchestra .... Beethoven
Overture—Fantasie, "Romeo and Juliet" .... Tschaikowsky

This Clipping From
SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
GAZETTE
OCT 2 6 1940

Berkshire Festival President Re-elected

Miss Gertrude Robinson-Smith was re-elected president of the Berkshire Symphonic festival, at the recent annual meeting of the board of trustees. Other officers re-elected are Norval H. Busey Jr., vice president; George W. Edman, clerk and Henry W. Dwight, treasurer. Trustees elected to serve on the board for three years are Mrs. Carlos de Heredia, Robert K. Wheeler, Mrs. John B. Lloyd, Edward S. Rogers, Mrs. Elizabeth C. T. Miller, John F. Noxon Jr. and Dr. James P. Baxter 3d. The trustees accepted with regret the resignation of Albert Spaldine from the board.

In her report Miss Robinson Smith noted that the attendance for the 1940 festival amounted to 68,839 persons, a figure which does not include the attendance of 9,000 for the three Saturday morning rehearsals. Series A had an attendance of 18,920; series B, 25,506; series C, 24,413. The largest attendance for a single concert was on Saturday evening, Aug. 10, when there were 8,827 and the second largest was on Saturday evening, Aug. 17, when there were 8,706. Aug. 10 also brought the peak sale of general admission tickets, which amount to 2,415 and for the nine concerts a total of 13,747 general admissions were sold.

Subscriptions totaling more than 1,000 have already been received by the festival for the nine concerts to be given next August by the Bost[illegible]hony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitsky conducting, at Tanglewood, it was announced at the meeting.

Subscription sales will continue until June 30, or until such time prior to that date as 5,400 subscriptions may be received or 1,800 for each series. The festival's membership lists, limited to 4,500 or 1,500 for each series, were closed early in September because of the unprecedented response from all parts of the country for reservations for next summer's concerts.

This Clipping From
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

OCT 2 6 1940

Sibelius Music To Be Rehearsed By Chorus

The music for "Onward Ye People," by Sibelius, has arrived and will be put in rehearsal by the chorus of the Berkshire Musical Association Monday night at 7.30 at First Congregational Church parish house.

There has been much interest in the invitation from Dr. Serge Koussevitzky to the association to participate in next summer's Berkshire Symphonic Festival and many new members have joined the chorus. No more enrollments will be accepted but Horace Hunt, musical director of the association, will hear those enrolled who have not had auditions. Tomorrow afternoon at 3 there will be a sectional rehearsal for sopranos and altos.

This Clipping From
INDIANAPOLIS, IND.
STAR

OCT 2 7 1940

Interest Already Shown In 1941 Berkshire Festival

Stockbridge, Mass., Oct. 26.

SUBSCRIPTIONS totaling more than 1,000 already have been received by the Berkshire symphonic festival for the nine concerts to be given next August by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Kous-sevitzky conducting, at Tanglewood, it was announced at the annual meeting of the festival board of trustees this week.

Subscription sales will continue until June 30, or until such time prior to that date as 5,400 subscriptions may be received, or 1,800 for each series. The festival's membership lists, limited to 4,500, or 1,500 for each series, were closed early in September because of the unprecedented response from all parts of the country for reservations for next summer's concerts.

It was pointed out by Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, president of the festival, that the interest already shown in the 1941 festival would in all probability cause the subscription limit to be reached before June 30. After that date only tickets for single concerts will be sold.

Boxes are still available for all series, although to date 85 patrons have brought 179 boxes. Of this number of patrons 12 are new. The subscription orders have come from points as far distant as Oregon.

The attendance for the 1940 festival amounted to 68,893 persons, a figure which does not include the attendance of 9,000 for the three Saturday morning rehearsals. Series A had an attendance of 18,920, Series B, 25,506; Series C, $24,413. The largest attendance for a single concert was on Saturday evening, Aug. 10, when there was 8,827, and the second largest was on Saturday evening, Aug. 17, when there were 8,706. Aug. 10 also brought the peak sale of general admission tickets, which amounted to 2,415, and for the nine concerts a total of 13,747 general admissions were [illegible]d.

THIS CLIPPING FROM VINCENNES, IND.
POST

NOV 2 2 1940

Conducts Concert

GAYLORD BROWNE

The Evansville philharmonic orchestra opens its 1940-41 season with a concert next Tuesday night at the coliseum in Evansville. Gaylord Browne, head of the music department of Evansville College, again conducts the orchestra of more than 60 members. The program will include the "Oberon Overture," by Von Weber, Brahams' "Festival Overture," Beethoven's "First Piano Concerto," and Kallinikov's "First Symphony."

Miss Louise Bernat, native of Evansville, is the piano soloist on the first program. She has given many concerts in Connecticut and New Jersey, and has appeared at Town Hall in New York with Madame Olga Samaroff.

Mr. Browne returns to the philharmonic as conductor, after a summer of study at the Berkshire Festival under Dr. Kussewisky, conductor of the famous Boston symphony. He was one of four chosen by Dr. Kussewisky from over a hundred conductors, to be permanent conductors of the Festival symphony orchestra and study in a special class under Dr. Kussewisky.

The concert series this year will include three concerts to be given on Nov. 26, Feb. 18, and April 15.

THIS CLIPPING FROM LEWISTON, ME.
SUN

NOV 1 - 1940

Music and The Drama

OPERAS PLANNED FOR TANGLEWOOD

The prospect that the Berkshire Symphonic Festival will branch out into opera next summer came closer to reality when it was learned recently that a theatre seating 1,200 would be built at Tanglewood, the festival grounds, next spring.

The first gift toward the theatre came from Mrs. Mary Louise Curtis Bok, founder of the Curtis Institute of Music in Philadelphia. In making public Mrs. Bok's offer to give $10,000 toward a theatre, Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and director of the Berkshire Music Center, said that he expected that the rest of the funds needed would be raised shortly.

Mr. Koussevitzky has always had in mind the plan to incorporate opera in the festival scheme. The building of the theatre will help to bring the plan to realization. Last summer at the center there was a division devoted to opera-dramatics under Herbert Graf, stage director of the Metropolitan Opera.

As part of further expansion plans for Tanglewood, Mr. Koussevitsky said, a new hall for chamber music to seat 400 will be constructed in time for next season. A gift of $1,200 toward this edifice has already been made.

Mr. Koussevitzky revealed that four studios — two for chamber music rehearsals and two for individual instrumental training—will be built in time for next season.

In disclosing Mrs. Bok's offer of $10,000, Mr. Koussevitzky made public a letter that she sent to him shortly after the end of the festival last month. Mrs. Bok wrote to Mr. Koussevitzky as follows:

"As I think you must know, I have enthusiastic confidence in your Berkshire Music Center. This should, I believe, be expressed in tangible form. So—

"I believe there is under consideration the building of a theatre of about 1,000 seating capacity at or near Tanglewood. If this project evolves into certainty, I will be most happy to contribute $10,000 for the building.

"This is a personal contribution, whereas the financing of a group of Curtis Institute outstanding students, to attend the Berkshire Summer School in future Summers, will be a contribution made by the Curtis Institute of Music, Inc., of Philadelphia.

"If these offers mean anything of encouragement for you, in your splendid vision and 'manifestation' of that vision I will be very happy."

Mr. Koussevitzky said that other contributions toward the theatre had been received since Mrs. Bok made her offer last month. He was confident that the required money would be in hand before next Spring. Construction would begin in the Spring, and the theatre would be ready for use in the summer.

The new developments at Tanglewood will be constructed under the design and direction of Eliel Saarinen, permanent architect for Tanglewood. Mr. Saarinen made the designs for the music shed where the symphonic concerts are now held. He has, in fact, already made designs for a theatre and chamber music hall.

A theatre stage was built for last summer, where the opera-dramatic students worked. This stage will be left standing. The new theatre will be built deeper in the woods beyond the stage.

The new hall for chamber music will be placed near the old manor house and the formal English gardens at Tanglewood.

172

THIS CLIPPING FROM KANSAS CITY, MO.
Weekly Independent

OCT 5 - 1940

Blanche Lederman, devotee of the arts, spent an ideal vacation in the Berkshires this summer. Engaged in writing an article for Time magazine, she attended the seventh annual Berkshire Festival and the new Berkshire Music Center, on the Tanglewood estate, Stockbridge, Massachusetts, where she interviewed notable teachers engaged at the School founded by Serge Koussevitsky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Among the instructors and lecturers were Paul Hindemith, Aaron Copeland, Dr. Herbert Graf of the Metropolitan Opera, Roy Harris, Olin Downes and others. A personal visit to Dr. Koussevitsky's magnificent estate at Lenox, Massachusetts, was particularly delightful. The residents of Stockbridge and Lenox, presented the famed maestro with the beautiful estate although he insisted upon personally applying $17,000 toward the cost. The three weeks Festival, which presented superlative programs by the Boston Symphony with Dr. Koussewitsky conducting, were comparable to the Symphony's Boston concerts. Classes in conducting at the Music Center under the personal supervision of the great director were most stimulating.

* * *

THIS CLIPPING FROM GRAND HAVEN, MICH.
TRIBUNE

OCT 9 - 1940

FIRST SYMPHONY NEXT WEEK IN GRAND RAPIDS

The first concert of the Grand Rapids Symphony orchestra under the baton of the new conductor, Thor Johnson, will be presented at the Civic auditorium on October 18. Harold Bauer, world-famous pianist, will appear as the guest artist.

Succeeding Karl Wecker, who resigned last winter to accept a position in California, Johnson is also head of the music department of the University of Michigan. During the summer he was a scholarship student of Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra, at the Berkshire Music Center.

The highlight of the first concert of the season will be the playing of Mendelsohn's Symphony No. 5 in D minor, better known as the Reformation symphony. This work was recently revived by Toscanni with great success. Bauer will accompany the orchestra in Beethoven's Concerto No. 4 in G Major for piano and orchestra.

The complete program is as follows:

The National Anthem
Symphony No. 5 in D minor, Opus 107 (Reformation) Mendelssohn
1 Andante
2 Allegro vivace
3 Andante
4 Andante con moto
Concerto No. 4 in G major, Opus 58, for piano and orchestra .... Beethoven
Overture—Fantasie, "Romeo and Juliet" .... Tschaikowsky

---

This Clipping From
SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
GAZETTE
OCT 2 6 1940

Berkshire Festival President Re-elected

Miss Gertrude Robinson-Smith was re-elected president of the Berkshire Symphonic festival, at the recent annual meeting of the board of trustees. Other officers re-elected are Norval H. Busey Jr., vice president; George W. Edman, clerk and Henry W. Dwight, treasurer. Trustees elected to serve on the board for three years are Mrs. Carlos de Heredia, Robert K. Wheeler, Mrs. John B. Lloyd, Edward S. Rogers, Mrs. Elizabeth C. T. Miller, John F. Noxon Jr. and Dr. James P. Baxter 3d. The trustees accepted with regret the resignation of Albert Spalding from the board.

In her report Miss Robinson Smith noted that the attendance for the 1940 festival amounted to 68,839 persons, a figure which does not include the attendance of 9,000 for the three Saturday morning rehearsals. Series A had an attendance of 18,920; series B, 25,506; series C, 24,413. The largest attendance for a single concert was on Saturday evening, Aug. 10, when there were 8,827 and the second largest was on Saturday evening, Aug. 17, when there were 8,706. Aug. 10 also brought the peak sale of general admission tickets, which amount to 2,415 and for the nine concerts a total of 13,747 general admissions were sold.

Subscriptions totaling more than 1,000 have already been received by the festival for the nine concerts to be given next August by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky conducting, at Tanglewood, it was announced at the meeting.

Subscription sales will continue until June 30, or until such time prior to that date as 5,400 subscriptions may be received or 1,800 for each series. The festival's membership lists, limited to 4,500 or 1,500 for each series, were closed early in September because of the unprecedented response from all parts of the country for reservations for next summer's concerts.

This Clipping From
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

OCT 2 6 1940

Sibelius Music To Be Rehearsed By Chorus

The music for "Onward Ye People," by Sibelius, has arrived and will be put in rehearsal by the chorus of the Berkshire Musical Association Monday night at 7.30 at First Congregational Church parish house.

There has been much interest in the invitation from Dr. Serge Koussevitzky to the association to participate in next summer's Berkshire Symphonic Festival and many new members have joined the chorus. No more enrollments will be accepted but Horace Hunt, musical director of the association, will hear those enrolled who have not had auditions. Tomorrow afternoon at 3 there will be a sectional rehearsal for sopranos and altos.

This Clipping From
INDIANAPOLIS, IND.
STAR

OCT 2 7 1940

Interest Already Shown In 1941 Berkshire Festival

Stockbridge, Mass., Oct. 26.

SUBSCRIPTIONS totaling more than 1,000 already have been received by the Berkshire symphonic festival for the nine concerts to be given next August by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky conducting, at Tanglewood, it was announced at the annual meeting of the festival board of trustees this week.

Subscription sales will continue until June 30, or until such time prior to that date as 5,400 subscriptions may be received, or 1,800 for each series. The festival's membership lists, limited to 4,500, or 1,500 for each series, were closed early in September because of the unprecedented response from all parts of the country for reservations for next summer's concerts.

It was pointed out by Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, president of the festival, that the interest already shown in the 1941 festival would in all probability cause the subscription limit to be reached before June 30. After that date only tickets for single concerts will be sold.

Boxes are still available for all series, although to date 85 patrons have brought 179 boxes. Of this number of patrons 12 are new. The subscription orders have come from points as far distant as Oregon.

The attendance for the 1940 festival amounted to 68,893 persons, a figure which does not include the attendance of 9,000 for the three Saturday morning rehearsals. Series A had an attendance of 18,920, Series B, 25,506; Series C, $24,413. The largest attendance for a single concert was on Saturday evening, Aug. 10, when there was 8,827, and the second largest was on Saturday evening, Aug. 17, when there were 8,706. Aug. 10 also brought the peak sale of general admission tickets, which amounted to 2,415, and for the nine concerts a total of 18,747 general admissions were sold.

THIS CLIPPING FROM LEWISTON, ME.
SUN

NOV 1 - 1940

Music and The Drama

OPERAS PLANNED FOR TANGLEWOOD

The prospect that the Berkshire Symphonic Festival will branch out into opera next summer came closer to reality when it was learned recently that a theatre seating 1,200 would be built at Tanglewood, the festival grounds, next spring.

The first gift toward the theatre came from Mrs. Mary Louise Curtis Bok, founder of the Curtis Institute of Music in Philadelphia. In making public Mrs. Bok's offer to give $10,000 toward a theatre, Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and director of the Berkshire Music Center, said that he expected that the rest of the funds needed would be raised shortly.

Mr. Koussevitzky has always had in mind the plan to incorporate opera in the festival scheme. The building of the theatre will help to bring the plan to realization. Last summer at the center there was a division devoted to opera-dramatics under Herbert Graf, stage director of the Metropolitan Opera.

As part of further expansion plans for Tanglewood, Mr. Koussevitzky said, a new hall for chamber music to seat 400 will be constructed in time for next season. A gift of $1,200 toward this edifice has already been made.

Mr. Koussevitzky revealed that four studios — two for chamber music rehearsals and two for individual instrumental training—will be built in time for next season.

In disclosing Mrs. Bok's offer of $10,000, Mr. Koussevitzky made public a letter that she sent to him shortly after the end of the festival last month. Mrs. Bok wrote to Mr. Koussevitzky as follows:

"As I think you must know, I have enthusiastic confidence in your Berkshire Music Center. This should, I believe, be expressed in tangible form. So—

"I believe there is under consideration the building of a theatre of about 1,000 seating capacity at or near Tanglewood. If this project evolves into certainty, I will be most happy to contribute $10,000 for the building.

"This is a personal contribution, whereas the financing of a group of Curtis Institute outstanding students, to attend the Berkshire Summer School in future Summers, will be a contribution made by the Curtis Institute of Music, Inc., of Philadelphia.

"If these offers mean anything of encouragement for you, in your splendid vision and 'manifestation' of that vision I will be very happy."

Mr. Koussevitzky said that other contributions toward the theatre had been received since Mrs. Bok made her offer last month. He was confident that the required money would be in hand before next Spring. Construction would begin in the Spring, and the theatre would be ready for use in the summer.

The new developments at Tanglewood will be constructed under the design and direction of Eliel Saarinen, permanent architect for Tanglewood. Mr. Saarinen made the designs for the music shed where the symphonic concerts are now held. He has, in fact, already made designs for a theatre and chamber music hall.

A theatre stage was built for last summer, where the opera-dramatic students worked. This stage will be left standing. The new theatre will be built deeper in the woods beyond the stage.

The new hall for chamber music will be placed near the old manor house and the formal English gardens at Tanglewood.

THIS CLIPPING FROM VINCENNES, IND.
POST

NOV 2 2 1940

Conducts Concert

GAYLORD BROWNE

The Evansville philharmonic orchestra opens its 1940-41 season with a concert next Tuesday night at the coliseum in Evansville. Gaylord Browne, head of the music department of Evansville College, again conducts the orchestra of more than 60 members. The program will include the "Oberon Overture," by Von Weber, Brahams' "Festival Overture," Beethoven's "First Piano Concerto," and Kallinikov's "First Symphony."

Miss Louise Bernat, native of Evansville, is the piano soloist on the first program. She has given many concerts in Connecticut and New Jersey, and has appeared at Town Hall in New York with Madame Olga Samaroff.

Mr. Browne returns to the philharmonic as conductor, after a summer of study at the Berkshire Festival under Dr. Kussewisky, conductor of the famous Boston symphony. He was one of four chosen by Dr. Kussewisky from over a hundred conductors, to be permanent conductors of the Festival symphony orchestra and study in a special class under Dr. Kussewisky.

The concert series this year will include three concerts to be given on Nov. 26, Feb. 18, and April 15.

Completing Plans for New Buildings

Boston Symphony To Erect Structure At Tanglewood

Eliel Saarinen, Bloomfield Hills, (Mich.), architect, who made the original plans for the Berkshire Symphonic Festival's shed at Tanglewood, is now completing plans for two more Tanglewood buildings. These buildings, to be erected by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will be for use of the Berkshire Music Center.

Already the larger of two buildings is assured as the result of a substantial gift from Mrs. Curtis Bok. It will be a structure for the opera department, seating about 1000 to 1200 persons. The other building will seat about 300 and will be for use of chamber music classes and will also include a few practice rooms.

Last night when the Boston Symphony Orchestra gave its concert in the newly-completed Kleinhaus Music Hall, Buffalo, Dr. Koussevitzky was given a tremendous hand when he complimented Buffalo on its "beautiful music hall" and announced that "the eminent architect of the building" was in the hall. Mr. Saarinen was called to the stage by the conductor. The Buffalo building of modern and functional design, contains two auditoriums, one seating 3200 and the other about 500. For last night's concerts both auditoriums were filled and all available standing room sold. At the concert Monday night in Rochester, the Eastman Theatre was sold out. Tonight the orchestra plays at the University of Michigan in Ann Arbor and other concerts this week will be at Toledo, Cleveland and Pittsburgh.

This Clipping From
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

DEC 11 1940

Completing Plans for New Buildings

Boston Symphony To Erect Structure At Tanglewood

Eliel Saarinen, Bloomfield Hills, (Mich.), architect, who made the original plans for the Berkshire Symphonic Festival's shed at Tanglewood, is now completing plans for two more Tanglewood buildings. These buildings, to be erected by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will be for use of the Berkshire Music Center.

Already the larger of two buildings is assured as the result of a substantial gift from Mrs. Curtis Bok. It will be a structure for the opera department, seating about 1000 to 1200 persons. The other building will seat about 300 and will be for use of chamber music classes and will also include a few practice rooms.

Last night when the Boston Symphony Orchestra gave its concert in the newly-completed Kleinhaus Music Hall, Buffalo, Dr. Koussevitzky was given a tremendous hand when he complimented Buffalo on its "beautiful music hall" and announced that "the eminent architect of the building" was in the hall. Mr. Saarinen was called to the stage by the conductor. The Buffalo building of modern and functional design, contains two auditoriums, one seating 3200 and the other about 500. For last night's concerts both auditoriums were filled and all available standing room sold. At the concert Monday night in Rochester, the Eastman Theatre was sold out. Tonight the orchestra plays at the University of Michigan in Ann Arbor and other concerts this week will be at Toledo, Cleveland and Pittsburgh.

This Clipping From
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

DEC 14 1940

Every Saturday

* * * * *

Banner Business for Berkshire Resorts This Winter Likely if Weatherman Cooperates. News From Tanglewood Makes Outlook for Summer Encouraging.

Ready for Big Season

Results already point to justified anticipation by Berkshire resort interests for a record season's income from the entertainment and servicing of visiting skiers, provided the weather man co-operates in line with the extraordinary though spotty early snow supplied to date.

The Berkshire Hills Conference has received 450 inquiries about winter sport and accommodations in less than two weeks of December, compared with 1028 for all of the long 1940-41 season, and feels its intensification of December advertising has paid. Ads are being run in leading metropolitan and other newspapers every December week end, whereas last year there was only one week end of such advertising. This helps achieve for the region an early boost among winter resorts.

Last week end brought conclusive evidence of the increasing attraction of the accesible Berkshires to city skiers. Conscientious long distance phone corrections of earlier favorable snow reports told of the unexpected thaw and sloppy snow, but failed to keep many parties in town as shown by their appearance here notwithstanding. One hotel, the Wendell, put up 135 skiers Saturday night, as many as on some of the best week ends of snow last season. Other houses had proportionate results. Hundreds all told, came to ski on thinly and softly covered slopes whose snow a Boston writer described as resembling a wet mattress.

City skiers have learned to regard the Berkshires as a likely ski grounds whenever there is snow, an attitude which undoubtedly has been advanced by the conservative Berkshire Hills Conference descriptions and dependable snow reports. This season, the Conference has tightened and expanded the information system even beyond last year's careful service. This undoubtedly is strengthening the region's assured position in the snow world, as are the various expansions of skiing facilities embodied in several new developments and improved services.

* * *

Tanglewood Marches On

It is still December and yet we thrill at the news of continued development and progress at Tanglewood, summer home of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Two pieces of news affecting Tanglewood were published this week. One concerned the erection of two more buildings which Eliel Saarinen, eminent architect of Bloomfield Hills, Mich., will design. The other concerned the announcement of plans for the second annual sessions of the Berkshire Music Center, an orchestra project. The list of faculty members reads like a Who's Who in Music. A great majority of the instructors were on the list last year. Among the newcomers to the faculty, but not to Tanglewood, will be Gregor Piatigorsky who ranks tops as a 'cellist. A close friend of Serge Koussevitzky, he participated in the Festival program last summer.

The developments indicate that there is no swerving in the orchestra's high standards, even when the orchestra is only indirectly concerned. Vision and imagination, determination and sound judgment, can go hand in hand, as the orchestra so soudly demonstrates.

* * *

This Clipping From
BUFFALO, N.Y.
COURIER-EXPRESS

DEC 3 - 1940

Boston Symphony Audition Will Be Held Here Tuesday

The Buffalo Philharmonic Orchestra is putting at the disposal of the Boston Symphony Orchestra its quarters in Kleinhans Music Hall for auditions on Tuesday afternoon, December 10th of advanced students interested in attending the Berkshire Music Center. The auditions will be given by Richard Burgin, concert master of the Boston Symphony, and Bernard Zighera, pianist of the orchestra.

Any advanced pupils interested in being auditioned may send their applications to the Buffalo Philharmonic Orchestra, Kleinhans Music Hall. Accepted students may enter the classes in orchestral conducting, orchestral playing, chamber music, opera dramatics and composition at the famous Berkshire Music Center during the coming July and August.

Berkshire Music Center Plans for Second Season

School Sessions To Extend From July 7 to Aug. 17—Piatigorsky And Others Join Faculty

Preliminary announcements of the Berkshire Music Center's second season at Tanglewood are being mailed now by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The school session will extend from July 7 to Aug. 17, the last three weeks coinciding with the period of the eighth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival concerts by the orchestra.

New Faculty Members

New members of the faculty will include Gregor Piatigorsky, eminent violincello virtuoso and specialist in chamber music; Hugh Ross, director of the Schola Cantorum of New York. Special lectures will be given by Dr. Howard Hanson, composer and director of the Eastman School of Music at Rochester, N. Y., and Carlton Sprague Smith, chief of the division of music, New York Public Library. Dr. Archibald K. Davison, professor of choral music at Harvard University will return as lecturer.

Others on the faculty will include the following: Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, director who will also take a limited number of students in conducting; Richard Burgin, concert-master and assistant conductor of the orchestra, Aaron Copland, composer and author; Olin Downes, music editor of the New York Times; Dr. Herbert Graf, stage director of the Metropolitan Opera Company; Paul Hindemith, composer; G. Wallace Woodworth, head of the music department at Harvard University. Assistants will include Putnam Aldrich, harpsichordist and lecturer; Stanley Chapple, conductor and lecturer and Boris Goldovsky, head of the opera department at the Cleveland Institute of Music.

Also these members of the orchestra: Julius Theodorowicz, Robert Gundersen, Einar Hansen, Alfred Krips, Clarence Knudson, Jean Le Franc, Georges Fourel, Eugene Legner, eJan Bedetti, Alfred Zighera, Georges Moleux, Gaston DuFresne, Georges Laurent, George Madsen, Fernand Gillet, Louis Speyer, Victor Polatschek, Rosario Mazzeo, Raymond Allard, Willem Valkenier, Walter MacDonald, Georges Mager, Marcel LaFosse, Jacob Raichman, Bernard Ziphera, Roman Szulc, Jesus Maria Sanroma and E. Power Biggs.

Koussevitzky's Statement

A statement from Dr. Koussevitzky contained in the preliminary announcement follows:

As music takes its increasing place in the life of America, there is a corresponding desire for a broader comprehension of the art. The Berkshire Music Center offers special opportunities to all for the practice and contemplation of music in its noblest aspects. It brings them into association with the leading artists and scholars of the day. Tanglewood is a place for those who wish to refresh mind and personality by the experience of the best in music and the related arts, and who long for a creative rest in summer.

The Center is designed to meet the needs of advanced students who have already had the essential technical training and are studying to make music their career and also of students with less specific qualifications and amateurs who wish to increase their acquaintance with music and its interpretation.

The central ideas of our short summer work are creation and creative interpretation. Our special aims are to find sound bases for creation and to attain perfection in interpretation.

Obviously, in six weeks we cannot hope to give fundamental courses and instruction on the same basis as they are introduced in conservatories and music schools. What we want to give our students is constructive advice and a practical method which will stimulate their gifts and carry their knowledge gained during their years of study in conservatories.

Our problem is to help artists with good training and knowledge to acquire a penetrating and vivid conception of the music they create and interpret; to stir their imagination to new heights and new depths, because imagination invokes in the creator and interpreter the right intuition and emotions to conceive the inner meaning of their art.

All who enroll in the Center will participate in the student orchestras, choruses, chamber music, or operatic groups, acquiring a direct understanding of music as it is written, conducted, played or sung. Lectures will supplement the making of music. The Festival rehearsals and concerts provide an opportunity for close observation of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

We want to be modest in our promises. But by no means do we want to be modest in our aspirations. We are confident that our students will receive the very best of our ability and practical experience, as well as our spiritual guidance.

Applications for catalogues may be sent to Mrs. Margaret Grant, secretary of the Center at Symphony Hall, Boston.

This Clipping From
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

DEC 12 1940

Berkshire Music Center Plans for Second Season

School Sessions To Extend From July 7 to Aug. 17—Piatigorsky And Others Join Faculty

Preliminary announcements of the Berkshire Music Center's second season at Tanglewood are being mailed now by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The school session will extend from July 7 to Aug. 17, the last three weeks coinciding with the period of the eighth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival concerts by the orchestra.

New Faculty Members

New members of the faculty will include Gregor Piatigorsky, eminent violincello virtuoso and specialist in chamber music; Hugh Ross, director of the Schola Cantorum of New York. Special lectures will be given by Dr. Howard Hanson, composer and director of the Eastman School of Music at Rochester, N. Y., and Carlton Sprague Smith, chief of the division of music, New York Public Library. Dr. Archibald K. Davison, professor of choral music at Harvard University will return as lecturer.

Others on the faculty will include the following: Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, director who will also take a limited number of students in conducting; Richard Burgin, concert-master and assistant conductor of the orchestra, Aaron Copland, composer and author; Olin Downes, music editor of the New York Times; Dr. Herbert Graf, stage director of the Metropolitan Opera Company; Paul Hindemith, composer; G. Wallace Woodworth, head of the music department at Harvard University. Assistants will include Putnam Aldrich, harpsichordist and lecturer; Stanley Chapple, conductor and lecturer and Boris Goldovsky, head of the opera department at the Cleveland Institute of Music.

Also these members of the orchestra: Julius Theodorowicz, Robert Gundersen, Einar Hansen, Alfred Krips, Clarence Knudson, Jean Le Franc, Georges Fourel, Eugene Legner, eJan Bedetti, Alfred Zighera, Georges Moleux, Gaston DuFresne, Georges Laurent, George Madsen, Fernand Gillet, Louis Speyer, Victor Polatschek, Rosario Mazzeo, Raymond Allard, Willem Valkenier, Walter MacDonald Georges Mager, Marcel LaFosse Jacob Raichman, Bernard Ziphera Roman Szulc, Jesus Maria Sanroma and E. Power Biggs.

Koussevitzky's Statement

A statement from Dr. Koussevitzky contained in the preliminary announcement follows:

As music takes its increasing place in the life of America, there is a corresponding desire for a broader comprehension of the art. The Berkshire Music Center offers special opportunities to all for the practice and contemplation of music in its noblest aspects. It brings them into association with the leading artists and scholars of the day. Tanglewood is a place for those who wish to refresh mind and personality by the experience of the best in music and the related arts, and who long for a creative rest in summer.

The Center is designed to meet the needs of advanced students who have already had the essential technical training and are studying to make music their career and also of students with less specific qualifications and amateurs who wish to increase their acquaintance with music and its interpretation.

The central ideas of our short summer work are creation and creative interpretation. Our special aims are to find sound bases for creation and to attain perfection in interpretation.

Obviously, in six weeks we cannot hope to give fundamental courses and instruction on the same basis as they are introduced in conservatories and music schools. What we want to give our students is constructive advice and a practical method which will stimulate their gifts and carry their knowledge gained during their years of study in conservatories.

Our problem is to help artists with good training and knowledge to acquire a penetrating and vivid conception of the music they create and interpret; to stir their imagination to new heights and new depths, because imagination invokes in the creator and interpreter the right intuition and emotions to conceive the inner meaning of their art.

All who enroll in the Center will participate in the student orchestras, choruses, chamber music, or operatic groups, acquiring a direct understanding of music as it is written, conducted, played or sung. Lectures will supplement the making of music. The Festival rehearsals and concerts provide an opportunity for close observation of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

We want to be modest in our promises. But by no means do we want to be modest in our aspirations. We are confident that our students will receive the very best of our ability and practical experience, as well as our spiritual guidance.

Applications for catalogues may be sent to Mrs. Margaret Grant, secretary of the Center at Symphony Hall, Boston.

BLANK PAGE

BLANK PAGE

176

This Clipping From
WINSTON SALEM, N. C.
TWIN CITY SENTINEL

JAN 28 1941

This Clipping From
CHATTANOOGA, TENN.
TIMES

JAN 19 1941

THIS CLIPPING FROM OWATONNA, MINN.
PEOPLE'S PRESS

JAN 26 1941

Dream Castle of Shining Steel Built by One Woman's Love of Music

By ADELAIDE KERR
(A.P. Feature Service Writer)

Once a friend said of Gertrude Robinson Smith: "Lots of people build castles in Spain, but Gertrude builds castles and then moves in."

The castle which Gertrude Robinson Smith helped build stands on a farm in the Berkshires near Stockbridge, Mass. It is a great shining shed of silvery steel, home of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival. A leading New York music critic has predicted that it is "destined to become . . . the most important festival of summer music in the world."

In the six years since Miss Robinson Smith helped bring the festival to life and served as its president, it has moved from a farm horse show ring to the $90,000 shed, and has grown from audiences of 5,000 to last summer's total of nearly 70,000.

"Music Under the Moon"

In 1934 Miss Robinson Smith—silver-haired, jolly member of a New York social register family—was summering in Stockbridge. Henry Hadley, American composer and conductor, approached her with a plan of giving symphonic music outdoors in the Berkshires. She called some friends together, they formed committees and pitched in to raise the required funds.

Three months later, Dr. Hadley, standing in a newly-built shell, in the horse show ring of the old Dan Hanna farm near Stockbridge, lifted his baton to conduct 65 members of the New York Philharmonic Symphony Orchestra in the festival's first concert. "Music under the moon" was launched, supported by popular subscription to the tune of $5 for the season's three concerts.

A Storm Made History

When ill health forced Dr. Hadley to resign after the festival's second year, Miss Robinson Smith secured Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony for the following ~~season's concerts~~. The festival moved to Tanglewood (the estate where Nathaiel Hawthorne once lived and wrote) and gave its concerts in a huge tent.

Member of a New York social register family, Gertrude Robinson Smith has been honored by village and nation.

Then, in 1937, the concerts and the elements tangled. While Koussevitzky conducted an all-Wagner program, a thunderstorm broke, rain fell in torrents, water poured down the aisles under the tent top and interrupted the music.

That night Gertrude Robinson Smith drafted a circular which launched the campaign for the building of her dream castle.

By August, 1938, the great fan-shaped steel shed, covering an acre and a half and seating 6,000, was completed. Last summer audiences overflowed its capacity for nine concerts.

Miss Robinson Smith has done more than mother the festival. She wears on her tailored frocks the red rosette of the Legion of Honor, which France bestowed upon her for work in World War I. She founded and ran the French theatre at the New York Hotel Barbizon Plaza for four years and presided over the American Woman's Association for 17 years.

Modest of Her Deeds

She "plays down" her part in building the festival. "It was the committee and the board who were wonderful," she will tell you. But that isn't the way the Stockbridge city fathers see it. Not long ago they wrote her:

"The selectmen of Stockbridge wish to bestow upon you the honor of being the outstanding citizen of our present generation. . . . In future generations your name and what it stands for will be cherished and honored with our other great educators and benefactors."

Music Theater And Concert Hall For Tanglewood

Jan.

Construction will begin immediately upon two new buildings for the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, it has been announced by the executive offices of the school at Symphony Hall. These structures which will replace temporary quarters of last year, are to be completed in time for the second session of the school which will be held July 7 to Aug. 17.

A combined theater and concert hall, seating 1100, will be erected, and a smaller chamber music auditorium seating 300. Both buildings have been designed by Eliel Saarinen, the Finnish architect, designer of the recently opened Kleinhans Music Hall in Buffalo. The construction will be in the hands of the firm of Graves & Hemmes of Great Barrington, Mass. Gifts of a small group of friends of the Berkshire Music Center have made possible this valuable enhancement of the school's facilities.

Each building will be close to the formal gardens, which will afford a convenient promenade. The larger hall, to be used for concerts and stage performances, will be located on the site of the tent which was used for the Berkshire Symphonic Festival before construction of the present shed. The chamber music auditorium will be situated in the grove between the main house and Hawthorne street, about 100 feet from the site of "The Little Red House" in which Nathaniel Hawthorne wrote his "Tanglewood Tales." Both auditoriums will be enclosed with sides so constructed that they can be made semi-open at will.

This Clipping From
ST. PAUL, MINN.
PIONEER-PRESS

APR 6 - 1941

This Clipping From PHOENIX, ARIZ.
ARIZONA REPUBLIC

JUL 5

THIS CLIPPING FROM GREENSBURG, PA.
REVIEW

FEB 21 1941

This Clipping From
HUTCHINSON, KAN.
NEWS

FEB 3 - 1941

BRIDGEPORT, CONN
POST
2/2/41

THIS CLIPPING FROM BINGHAMTON, N. Y.
SUN

FEB 17 1941

This Clipping From LEXINGTON, KY.
HERALD

FEB 2 - 1941

This Clipping From TROY, N.Y.
MORNING RECORD

FEB 25 1941

This Clipping From TOLEDO, O.
TIMES

MAR 23 1941

This Clipping From
INDIANAPOLIS, IND.
STAR

APR 13 1941

Music Center At Tanglewood To Be Larger

Jan.

Koussevitzky Announces Department Of Music and Culture

The Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, established last summer by the Boston Symphony Orchestra with Serge Koussevitzky as its director, will be larger this year. The details of the second session, which will consist of six weeks, July 7 to Aug. 17, will be disclosed in the catalogue for 1941 which will be published this week.

Principal Change

The school will have classes in conducting, in composition, in operatic interpretation, and in symphonic performance. The principal change will be in the largest department of the school, which is named in the new catalogue as "The Department of Music and Culture," and which includes the Festival chorus. Dr. Koussevitzky refers to this department in his preliminary statement as designed for "students with less specific qualifications" than in the other departments, and for "amateurs who wish to increase their acquaintance with music and its interpretation." A unique feature of this department will be under Paul Hindemith who, with assistants, will conduct "a survey of choral and instrumental music in study and performance." "The music will be sung and played by various groups," lectures and study supplementing each period, with certain pieces to be chosen for a concert each week.

The Festival chorus will be prepared by Prof. G. Wallace Woodworth of Harvard and Hugh Ross in Beethoven's "Missa Solemnis," which is to be performed at the Berkshire Symphonic Festival of 1941 under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky.

Gregor Piatigorsky, the Russian 'cello virtuoso, announced as a new member of the faculty, is to have charge of the chamber music department. Hugh Ross, director of the Schola Cantorum of New York, has been added to the faculty, and likewise Leo Schrade, the musicologist who is now connected with the Department of Music at Yale.

The department of orchestral conducting will be in charge of Serge Koussevitzky and Stanley Chapple, as last year. The department of choral conducting will be under Prof. Woodworth and Hugh Ross. The school orchestra will be in charge of Dr. Koussevitzky assisted by Richard Burgin, Mr. Chapple, and 30 members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The classes in composition will be in charge of Aaron Copland and Mr. Hindemith. The opera department will be in charge of Herbert Graf, stage director of the Metropolitan Opera Company, assisted by Boris Goldovsky and Richard Rychtarik, of Cleveland. Classes in solfege and country dancing are announced.

Olin Downes will give general lectures in addition to the part he will take in the survey conducted by Mr. Hindemith. Lecturers will include Howard Hanson, Archibald T. Davison, Carleton Sprague Smith, and others to be announced.

An enlarged membership, limited to 350, will be accepted for the second term. To accommodate these, new buildings are planned, with extended facilities for group performances. Already 285 applications have been received in advance of the publication of the catalogue.

The catalogue contains a resume of the Center's first season, showing that the full enrollment for 1940 was 312, chosen from more than 600 applicants. These were almost equally divided as to sex. The average age was 26; more than one-half were under 25 and two-thirds were under 30. More than two-thirds were or had been college students, and two-thirds had attended special music schools. The personnel was drawn from 29 states and Canada.

177

This Clipping From OWENSBORO, KY.
MESSENGER

FEB 9 - 1941

Gaylord Browne Will Conduct Philharmonic Orchestra Feb.22

Gaylord Browne, above, will conduct the Evansville Philharmonic orchestra, in its first out-of-town concert, in Owensboro, at 8:30 p. m. Saturday, February 22, in the Senior High School auditorium.

Mr. Browne attended the University of Chicago, the American Conservatory of Music, and the Mozarteum Academy at Salzburg, Austria. Last summer, he was one of five selected to attend Dr. Sergei Koussevitzsky's conducting schools in the Berkshires in Massachusetts. He also conducted four concerts for the ~~Boston Symphony or~~chestra—quite an honor for one so young in the field of conducting.

The orchestra will play four compositions by famous composers, Conductor Gaylord Browne has announced.

The overture to "Oberon," a romantic three-act opera by Carl Maria von Weber, will be a highlight of the program.

A series of five old Viennese dances by Straus, the "Emperor Waltzes," will be presented, and the program will also include Edward German's "Dance from Henry VIII" and the last two movements of Tschaikowsky's "Fourth Symphony."

Dr. Basil Gauntlett will appear as guest piano soloist with the Philharmonic.

Mrs. Bert Horn is Evansville chairman of ticket sales for the concert. On her committee are: Fred Fischer, Dr. Isidor Raphael, Mrs. Daniel Mead Johnson, Jr., and Henry Walker, Jr.

Word has been received that Owensboro will have guests for the concert from Evansville, Ind.; Henderson and Bowling Green; and Cincinnati.

Funds will be donated to the

This Clipping From
DAVENPORT, IA.
DEMOCRAT-LEADER

This Clipping From BROOKLYN, N.Y.
EAGLE

MAR 16 1941

This Clipping From
WORCESTER, MASS.
SUNDAY TELEGRAM

MAR 16 1941

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE

FEB 16 1941

THIS CLIPPING FROM BRISTOL, CONN.
PRESS

FEB 19 1941

THIS CLIPPING FROM
CLAREMONT, N. H.
EAGLE

FEB 17 1941

This Clipping From
BUFFALO, N.Y.
COURIER-EXPRESS

FEB 16 1941

THIS CLIPPING FROM LEWISTON, ME.
SUN

FEB 14 1941

This Clipping From
WATERBURY, CONN.
REPUBLICAN

FEB 16 1941

This Clipping From
SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
GAZETTE

FEB 15 1941

This Clipping From
INDIANAPOLIS, IND.
STAR

FEB 16 1941

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN

FEB 12 1941

This Clipping From
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

FEB 11 1941

Music Center At Tanglewood To Be Larger

Koussevitzky Announces Department Of Music and Culture

The Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, established last summer by the Boston Symphony Orchestra with Serge Koussevitzky as its director, will be larger this year. The details of the second session, which will consist of six weeks, July 7 to Aug. 17, will be disclosed in the catalogue for 1941 which will be published this week.

Principal Change

The school will have classes in conducting, in composition, in operatic interpretation, and in symphonic performance. The principal change will be in the largest department of the school, which is named in the new catalogue as "The Department of Music and Culture," and which includes the Festival chorus. Dr. Koussevitzky refers to this department in his preliminary statement as designed for "students with less specific qualifications" than in the other departments, and for "amateurs who wish to increase their acquaintance with music and its interpretation." A unique feature of this department will be under Paul Hindemith who, with assistants, will conduct "a survey of choral and instrumental music in study and performance." "The music will be sung and played by various groups," lectures and study supplementing each period, with certain pieces to be chosen for a concert each week.

The Festival chorus will be prepared by Prof. G. Wallace Woodworth of Harvard and Hugh Ross in Beethoven's "Missa Solemnis," which is to be performed at the Berkshire Symphonic Festival of 1941 under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky.

Gregor Piatigorsky, the Russian 'cello virtuoso, announced as a new member of the faculty, is to have charge of the chamber music department. Hugh Ross, director of the Schola Cantorum of New York, has been added to the faculty, and likewise Leo Schrade, the musicologist who is now connected with the Department of Music at Yale.

The department of orchestral conducting will be in charge of Serge Koussevitzky and Stanley Chapple, as last year. The department of choral conducting will be under Prof. Woodworth and Hugh Ross. The school orchestra will be in charge of Dr. Koussevitzky assisted by Richard Burgin, Mr. Chapple, and 30 members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The classes in composition will be in charge of Aaron Copland and Mr. Hindemith. The opera department will be in charge of Herbert Graf, stage director of the Metropolitan Opera Company, assisted by Boris Goldovsky and Richard Rychtarik, of Cleveland. Classes in solfege and country dancing are announced.

Olin Downes will give general lectures in addition to the part he will take in the survey conducted by Mr. Hindemith. Lecturers will include Howard Hanson, Archibald T. Davison, Carleton Sprague Smith, and others to be announced.

An enlarged membership, limited to 350, will be accepted for the second term. To accommodate these, new buildings are planned, with extended facilities for group performances. Already 285 applications have been received in advance of the publication of the catalogue.

The catalogue contains a resume of the Center's first season, showing that the full enrollment for 1940 was 312, chosen from more than 600 applicants. These were almost equally divided as to sex. The average age was 26; more than one-half were under 25 and two-thirds were under 30. More than two-thirds were or had been college students, and two-thirds had attended special music schools. The personnel was drawn from 29 states and Canada.

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
EVENING UNION

FEB 11 1941

This Clipping From
HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES

FEB 11 1941

Berkshire Music Center, 1941

Monitor Feb 11

Gregor Piatigorsky, Hugh Ross, and Leo Schrade have been added to the faculty of Berkshire Music Center, which will meet this year, July 7-Aug. 17, at Tanglewood, between Stockbridge and Lenox, Mass., under the direction of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The Berkshire Festival (July 31-Aug.17) falls within the last three weeks of the school term.

Mr. Piatigorsky will have charge of the chamber music department. Mr. Ross, who is director of the Schola Cantorum in New York, will join G. Wallace Woodworth, conductor of the Harvard and Radcliffe choruses, in preparing the Festival Chorus for the performance of the "Missa Solemnis" of Beethoven at the Berkshire Festival. Mr. Schrade, of the Department of Music at Yale University, will be an assistant instructor in composition.

The school will offer classes in conducting, in composition, in operatic interpretation, and in symphonic performance.

Paul Hindemith will conduct a survey of choral and instrumental music in study and performance. A concert will be given each week.

The Department of Orchestral Conducting will be in charge of Dr. Koussevitzky and Stanley Chapple, as last year. The Department of Choral Conducting will be under Messrs. Woodworth and Ross. The School Orchestra will be in charge of Dr. Koussevitzky, assisted by Richard Burgin, Stanley Chapple, and 30 members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The classes in Composition will be in charge of Aaron Copland and of Paul Hindemith. The Opera Department will be in charge of Herbert Graf, stage director of the Metropolitan Opera Company, assisted by Boris Goldovsky and Richard Rychtarik. Classes in Solfege and Country Dancing are announced.

Olin Downes will give general lectures in addition to the part he will take in the survey conducted by Mr. Hindemith. Lecturers will include Howard Hanson, Archibald T. Davison, Carleton Sprague Smith, and others.

An enlarged membership, limited to 350, will be accepted for this second term. To accommodate these, new buildings are planned, with extended facilities for group performance. Two hundred eighty-five applications have been received in advance of the publication of the catalogue.

Plans of Tanglewood

Boston Evening Transcript Feb 11 1941

Expansion of Berkshire Music Center Is Announced Under Aegis of Koussevitzky

Enlargement of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, between Stockbridge and Lenox, Mass., the result of plans completed during Serge Koussevitzky's three weeks' mid-season vacation at his home in Lenox, was announced today. Details of the Music Center's second season schedule will be disclosed in the 1941 catalogue, to be published this week.

The school will have classes in conducting, in composition, in operatic interpretation, and in symphonic performance. The principal change will be in the largest department of the school, which is named in the new catalogue as "The Department of Music and Culture," and which includes the Festival Chorus. Dr. Koussevitzky refers to this department in his preliminary statement as designed for "students with less specific qualifications" than in the other departments, and for "amateurs who wish to increase their acquaintance with music and its interpretation." A unique feature of this department will be under Paul Hindemith who, with assistants, will conduct "a survey of choral and instrumental music in study and performance." "The music will be sung and played by various groups," lectures and study supplementing each period, with certain pieces to be chosen for a concert each week.

The Festival Chorus will be prepared by G. Wallace Woodworth and Hugh Ross in Beethoven's "Missa Solemnis," which is to be performed at the Berkshire Symphonic Festival of 1941 under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky. The Festival will consist of nine concerts at Tanglewood on Thursday evenings, Saturday evenings, and Sunday evenings, July 31-August 17, which are within the last three weeks of the school term.

Gregor Piatigorsky, the Russion 'cello virtuoso, a new member of the faculty, will have charge of the Chamber Music Department. Hugh Ross, director of the Schola Cantorum of New York, has been added to the faculty, and likewise Leo Schrade, the musicologist now of the Department of Music at Yale.

The Department of Orchestral Conducting will be in charge of Serge Koussevitzky and Stanley Chapple, as last year. The Department of Choral Conducting will be under G. Wallace Woodworth and Hugh Ross. The school orchestra will be in charge of Serge Koussevitzky assisted by Richard Burgin, Stanley Chapple and 30 members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The classes in Composition will be in charge of Aaron Copland and of Paul Hindemith. The Opera Department will be in charge of Herbert Graf, stage director of the Metropolitan Opera Company.

Olin Downes will give general lectures in addition to the part he will take in the survey conducted by Mr. Hindemith. Lecturers will include Howard Hanson, Archibald T. Davison, Carleton Sprague Smith, and others to be announced.

An enlarged membership, limited to 350, will be accepted for the second term. To accommodate these, new buildings are planned, with extended facilities for group performance. Two hundred and 85 applications have been received in advance of the publication of the catalogue.

This Clipping From OWENSBORO, KY.
MESSENGER

FEB 9 - 1941

122

Gaylord Browne Will Conduct Philharmonic Orchestra Feb.22

Gaylord Browne, above, will conduct the Evansville Philharmonic orchestra, in its first out-of-town concert, in Owensboro, at 8:30 p. m. Saturday, February 22, in the Senior High School auditorium.

Mr. Browne attended the University of Chicago, the American Conservatory of Music, and the Mozarteum Academy at Salzburg, Austria. Last summer, he was one of five selected to attend Dr. Sergei Koussevitzsky's conducting schools in the Berkshires in Massachusetts. He also conducted four concerts for the ~~Boston Symphony orc~~hestra—quite an honor for one so young in the field of conducting.

The orchestra will play four compositions by famous composers, Conductor Gaylord Browne has announced.

The overture to "Oberon," a romantic three-act opera by Carl Maria von Weber, will be a highlight of the program.

A series of five old Viennese dances by Straus, the "Emperor Waltzes," will be presented, and the program will also include Edward German's "Dance from Henry VIII" and the last two movements of Tschaikowsky's "Fourth Symphony."

Dr. Basil Gauntlett will appear as guest piano soloist with the Philharmonic.

Mrs. Bert Horn is Evansville chairman of ticket sales for the concert. On her committee are: Fred Fischer, Dr. Isidor Raphael, Mrs. Daniel Mead Johnson, Jr., and Henry Walker, Jr.

Word has been received that Owensboro will have guests for the concert from Evansville, Ind.; Henderson and Bowling Green; and Cincinnati.

Funds will be donated to the

This Clipping From BROOKLYN, N.Y.
EAGLE
MAR 16 1941

This Clipping From
WORCESTER, MASS.
SUNDAY TELEGRAM
MAR 16 1941

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE
FEB 16 1941

THIS CLIPPING FROM BRISTOL, CONN.
PRESS
FEB 19 1941

THIS CLIPPING FROM
CLAREMONT, N. H.
EAGLE
FEB 17 1941

This Clipping From
BUFFALO, N.Y.
COURIER-EXPRESS
FEB 16 1941

This Clipping From
DAVENPORT, IA.
DEMOCRAT-LEADER
FEB 16 1941

THIS CLIPPING FROM LEWISTON, ME.
SUN
FEB 14 1941

This Clipping From
WATERBURY, CONN.
REPUBLICAN
FEB 16 1941

This Clipping From
SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
GAZETTE
FEB 15 1941

This Clipping From
INDIANAPOLIS, IND.
STAR
FEB 16 1941

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN
FEB 12 1941

This Clipping From
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

FEB 11 1941

Music Center At Tanglewood To Be Larger

Koussevitzky Announces Department Of Music and Culture

The Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, established last summer by the Boston Symphony Orchestra with Serge Koussevitzky as its director, will be larger this year. The details of the second session, which will consist of six weeks, July 7 to Aug. 17, will be disclosed in the catalogue for 1941 which will be published this week.

Principal Change

The school will have classes in conducting, in composition, in operatic interpretation, and in symphonic performance. The principal change will be in the largest department of the school, which is named in the new catalogue as "The Department of Music and Culture," and which includes the Festival chorus. Dr. Koussevitzky refers to this department in his preliminary statement as designed for "students with less specific qualifications" than in the other departments, and for "amateurs who wish to increase their acquaintance with music and its interpretation." A unique feature of this department will be under Paul Hindemith who, with assistants, will conduct "a survey of choral and instrumental music in study and performance." "The music will be sung and played by various groups," lectures and study supplementing each period, with certain pieces to be chosen for a concert each week.

The Festival chorus will be prepared by Prof. G. Wallace Woodworth of Harvard and Hugh Ross in Beethoven's "Missa Solemnis," which is to be performed at the Berkshire Symphonic Festival of 1941 under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky.

Gregor Piatigorsky, the Russian 'cello virtuoso, announced as a new member of the faculty, is to have charge of the chamber music department. Hugh Ross, director of the Schola Cantorum of New York, has been added to the faculty, and likewise Leo Schrade, the musicologist who is now connected with the Department of Music at Yale.

The department of orchestral conducting will be in charge of Serge Koussevitzky and Stanley Chapple, as last year. The department of choral conducting will be under Prof. Woodworth and Hugh Ross. The school orchestra will be in charge of Dr. Koussevitzky assisted by Richard Burgin, Mr. Chapple, and 30 members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The classes in composition will be in charge of Aaron Copland and Mr. Hindemith. The opera department will be in charge of Herbert Graf, stage director of the Metropolitan Opera Company, assisted by Boris Goldovsky and Richard Rychtarik, of Cleveland. Classes in solfege and country dancing are announced.

Olin Downes will give general lectures in addition to the part he will take in the survey conducted by Mr. Hindemith. Lecturers will include Howard Hanson, Archibald T. Davison, Carleton Sprague Smith, and others to be announced.

An enlarged membership, limited to 350, will be accepted for the second term. To accommodate these, new buildings are planned, with extended facilities for group performances. Already 285 applications have been received in advance of the publication of the catalogue.

The catalogue contains a resume of the Center's first season, showing that the full enrollment for 1940 was 312, chosen from more than 600 applicants. These were almost equally divided as to sex. The average age was 26; more than one-half were under 25 and two-thirds were under 30. More than two-thirds were or had been college students, and two-thirds had attended special music schools. The personnel was drawn from 29 states and Canada.

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
EVENING UNION
FEB 11 1941

This Clipping From
HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES
FEB 11 1941

Berkshire Music Center, 1941

Monitor Feb 11

Gregor Piatigorsky, Hugh Ross, and Leo Schrade have been added to the faculty of Berkshire Music Center, which will meet this year, July 7-Aug. 17, at Tanglewood, between Stockbridge and Lenox, Mass., under the direction of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The Berkshire Festival (July 31-Aug.17) falls within the last three weeks of the school term.

Mr. Piatigorsky will have charge of the chamber music department. Mr. Ross, who is director of the Schola Cantorum in New York, will join G. Wallace Woodworth, conductor of the Harvard and Radcliffe choruses, in preparing the Festival Chorus for the performance of the "Missa Solemnis" of Beethoven at the Berkshire Festival. Mr. Schrade, of the Department of Music at Yale University, will be an assistant instructor in composition.

The school will offer classes in conducting, in composition, in operatic interpretation, and in symphonic performance.

Paul Hindemith will conduct a survey of choral and instrumental music in study and performance. A concert will be given each week.

The Department of Orchestral Conducting will be in charge of Dr. Koussevitzky and Stanley Chapple, as last year. The Department of Choral Conducting will be under Messrs. Woodworth and Ross. The School Orchestra will be in charge of Dr. Koussevitzky, assisted by Richard Burgin, Stanley Chapple, and 30 members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The classes in Composition will be in charge of Aaron Copland and of Paul Hindemith. The Opera Department will be in charge of Herbert Graf, stage director of the Metropolitan Opera Company, assisted by Boris Goldovsky and Richard Rychtarik. Classes in Solfege and Country Dancing are announced.

Olin Downes will give general lectures in addition to the part he will take in the survey conducted by Mr. Hindemith. Lecturers will include Howard Hanson, Archibald T. Davison, Carleton Sprague Smith, and others.

An enlarged membership, limited to 350, will be accepted for this second term. To accommodate these, new buildings are planned, with extended facilities for group performance. Two hundred eighty-five applications have been received in advance of the publication of the catalogue.

Plans of Tanglewood

Boston Evening Transcript Feb. 11, 1941

Expansion of Berkshire Music Center Is Announced Under Aegis of Koussevitzky

Enlargement of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood between Stockbridge and Lenox, Mass., the result of plans completed during Serge Koussevitzky's three weeks' mid-season vacation at his home in Lenox, was announced today. Details of the Music Center's second season schedule will be disclosed in the 1941 catalogue, to be published this week.

The school will have classes in conducting, in composition, in operatic interpretation, and in symphonic performance. The principal change will be in the largest department of the school, which is named in the new catalogue as "The Department of Music and Culture," and which includes the Festival Chorus. Dr. Koussevitzky refers to this department in his preliminary statement as designed for "students with less specific qualifications" than in the other departments, and for "amateurs who wish to increase their acquaintance with music and its interpretation." A unique feature of this department will be under Paul Hindemith who, with assistants, will conduct "a survey of choral and instrumental music in study and performance." "The music will be sung and played by various groups," lectures and study supplementing each period, with certain pieces to be chosen for a concert each week.

The Festival Chorus will be prepared by G. Wallace Woodworth and Hugh Ross in Beethoven's "Missa Solemnis," which is to be performed at the Berkshire Symphonic Festival of 1941 under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky. The Festival will consist of nine concerts at Tanglewood on Thursday evenings, Saturday evenings, and Sunday evenings, July 31-August 17, which are within the last three weeks of the school term.

Gregor Piatigorsky, the Russion 'cello virtuoso, a new member of the faculty, will have charge of the Chamber Music Department. Hugh Ross, director of the Schola Cantorum of New York, has been added to the faculty, and likewise Leo Schrade, the musicologist now of the Department of Music at Yale.

The Department of Orchestral Conducting will be in charge of Serge Koussevitzky and Stanley Chapple, as last year. The Department of Choral Conducting will be under G. Wallace Woodworth and Hugh Ross. The school orchestra will be in charge of Serge Koussevitzky assisted by Richard Burgin, Stanley Chapple and 30 members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The classes in Composition will be in charge of Aaron Copland and of Paul Hindemith. The Opera Department will be in charge of Herbert Graf, stage director of the Metropolitan Opera Company.

Olin Downes will give general lectures in addition to the part he will take in the survey conducted by Mr. Hindemith. Lecturers will include Howard Hanson, Archibald T. Davison, Carleton Sprague Smith, and others to be announced.

An enlarged membership, limited to 350, will be accepted for the second term. To accommodate these, new buildings are planned, with extended facilities for group performance. Two hundred and 85 applications have been received in advance of the publication of the catalogue.

178

This Clipping From
N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT

FEB 11 1941

Berkshire Music Center To Be Enlarged In 1941

Broader Curriculum, Enlarged Instructional Force, Bigger Student Body and Expanded School Plant Planned by Serge Koussevitzky for Second Season of Music School at Tanglewood—Six Weeks' Course to Open on July 7—Applications Received From 285—Noted Musicians Make up Faculty.

The Berkshire Music Center which the Boston Symphony orchestra established last year at Tanglewood in Lenox will have an enlarged curriculum, a larger instructional force, a bigger student body and an expanded school plant in its second season which will open on July 7 and run for six weeks according to an announcement made today by Serge Koussevitzky, its director.

Complete details of the 1941 plans as completed by Dr. Koussevitzky during a three-weeks' vacation which he spent at his new home in Lenox last month, were disclosed with the publication of the catalogue this morning. At the same time, it was revealed that 285 applicants have already been received even before the announcement of the courses. Dr. Koussevitzky plans to admit 350 students, an increase of 38 over the 312 who were admitted last year from among more than 600 applicants.

Plan New Buildings

Some of the new buildings which will incorporate better facilities for group instruction have already been announced and it is expected that detailed plans for the development of the Tanglewood property this season will soon be revealed.

The school will have classes in conducting, in composition, in operatic interpretation, and in symphonic performance. The principal change will be in the largest department of the school, which is named in the new catalogue as "The Department of Music and Culture," and which includes the Festival chorus. Dr. Koussevitzky refers to this department in his preliminary statement as designed for "students with less specific qualifications" than in the other departments, and for "amateurs who wish to increase their acquaintance with music and its interpretation." A unique feature of this department will be under Paul Hindemith who, with assistants, will conduct "a survey of choral and instrumental music in study and performance." "The music will be sung and played by various groups," lectures and study supplementing each period, with certain pieces to be chosen for a concert each week.

The Festival chorus will be prepared by G. Wallace Woodworth and Hugh Ross in Beethoven's "Missa Solemnis," which is to be performed at one of the 1941 Festival concerts under the direction of Dr. Koussevitzky. The Festival will again consist of nine concerts at Tanglewood on Thursday evenings, Saturday evenings, and Sunday afternoons, July 31 to Aug. 17, which are within the last three weeks of the school term.

Piatigorsky on Faculty

Gregor Piatigorsky, the Russian 'cello virtuoso, is announced as a new member of the faculty, to have charge of the chamber music department. Hugh Ross, director of the Schola Cantorum of New York, has been added to the faculty, and likewise Leo Schrade, the musicologist who is now connected with the department of music at Yale.

The department of orchestral conducting will be in the charge of Serge Koussevitzky and Stanley Chappel, as last year. The department of choral conducting will be under G. Wallace Woodworth and Hugh Ross. The school orchestra will be under Dr. Koussevitzky assisted by Richard Burgin, Stanley Chappel, and 30 members of the Boston Symphony orchestra. The classes in composition will be in the charge of Aaron Copland and of Paul Hindemith. The opera department will be under Herbert Graf, stage director of the Metropolitan Opera company, assisted by Boris Goldovsky and Richard Rychtarik. Classes in solfege and country dancing are announced.

Olin Downes will give general lectures in addition to the part he will take in the survey conducted by Mr. Hindemith. Lecturers will include Howard Hanson, Archibald T. Davison, Carleton Sprague Smith, and others to be announced.

Resume of 1940

The catalogue contains a resume of the Center's first season, showing that the full enrollment of 312 was almost equally divided as to sex. The average age was 26; more than one-half were under 25 and two-thirds were under 30. More than two-thirds were or had been college students, and two thirds had attended special music personnel was drawn and Canada; Mas
New York were r resented.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE

FEB 12 1941

Berkshire Music Center Announces '41 Session

Koussevitzky to Direct Study From July 7 to Aug. 17

The second summer session of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., which was established by the Boston Symphony Orchestra last year with Serge Koussevitzky as director, will extend from Monday, July 7, to Sunday, Aug. 17, it was announced yesterday.

One of the activities of the largest division of the center, the Department of Music and Culture, will be a chorus which will rehearse Beethoven's "Missa Solemnis" in D for performance in one of the concerts of the eighth Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood in August. Other choral and instrumental groups will study and perform a historically arranged series of works under the general direction of Paul Hindesmith.

Dr. Koussevitzky, continuing as director, again heads the department of orchestral conducting, and G. Wallace Woodworth and Hugh Ross will be in charge of choral conducting. Classes in composition will be held by Aaron Copland and Mr. Hindemith, and Herbert Graf, Metropolitan Opera stage director, will head the opera department. Dr. Koussevitzky and Boston Symphony players will instruct the school orchestra, and lectures will be given by Olin Downes, Howard Hanson, Archibald T. Davison, Carleton Sprague Smith and others.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES

FEB 12 1941

BERKSHIRE CENTER ENLARGES FACULTY

Gregor Piatigorsky, 'Cellist, and Hugh Ross to Join Music School This Summer

ENROLLMENT GAIN IS SEEN

350 Students to Be Accepted —Serge Koussevitzky Again Will Be the Director

Gregor Piatigorsky, 'cellist, and Hugh Ross, director of the Schola Cantorum of New York, have been added to the faculty of the Berkshire Music Center, it was learned yesterday with the publication of the catalogue for the Center's second season, which will open on July 7 and continue for six weeks.

The Center, which was established last Summer by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, at Tanglewood, between Stockbridge and Lenox, Mass., will again be directed by Serge Koussevitzky, and again consist of a large department of music and culture, with no formal entrance requirements beyond a certain amount of experience in choral singing, and four smaller departments in conducting, orchestral playing, composition and opera, which will be limited to students of exceptional talent and technical competence.

The climax of the school term will be the Berkshire Symphonic Festival during the last three weeks. The entire Boston Symphony Orchestra will be present rehearsing during those weeks and members of the Center will be entitled to attend the nine concerts of the festival. The Festival Chorus will be made up of members of the department of music and culture who will sing in Beethoven's "Missa Solemnis" at one of the concerts.

The enrollment of the Center will probably be larger this year, for 350 students will be accepted for membership whereas the number who attended last year was 312. Already 285 applications have been received.

One of the new features will be the teaching of Morris and American square dances, which will not be organized in formal classes, but which will be an important part of the social and recreational life of the Center.

It is expected that a new theatre and chamber music hall and several new small studios will be ready to accommodate the larger number of students this year. The students will perform one complete opera and opera scenes and there will be weekly concerts by the student orchestra and the student chamber orchestra, for the aim of the Center is to teach music both by study and actual performance.

The conducting department will be directed by Mr. Koussevitzky, assisted by Stanley Chapple, and it will include auditors as well as a limited number of students who actually will conduct. Mr. Koussevitzky also will direct the orchestral department, assisted by Mr. Chapple, Richard Burgin, concert master, and thirty members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Mr. Piatigorsky will be in charge of chamber music.

Aaron Copland and Paul Hindemith will be in charge of the composition classes and Herbert Graf, assisted by Boris Goldovsky and Richard Rychtarik, will be in charge of the opera classes. Mr. Ross will assist in the composition classes and together with G. Wallace Woodworth will train the Festival Chorus.

Other members of the faculty will be Putnam Aldrich, Olin Downes, Malcolm Holmes and Leo Schrade, and Archibald T. Davidson, Howard Hanson and Carleton Sprague Smith have been appointed as special lecturers.

This Clipping From NEWARK, N. J.
NEWS

FEB 15 1941

* * *

Expanded activities of the Berkshire Music Center next Summer have been announced by its director, Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The school will have classes in conducting, composition, operatic interpretation and symphonic performances.

The B[illegible] will play three series of concerts beginning July 31 at Tanglewood.

This Clipping From
LOWELL, MASS.
COURIER-CITIZEN

FEB 12 1941

Berkshire Music Centre.

The Berkshire Music Centre at Tanglewood, established last summer by the Boston Symphony Orchestra with Dr. Serge Koussevitzky as its director, will be larger this summer. The second session will extend from July 7 to Aug. 17. Dr. Koussevitzky spent his three weeks' January vacation at his home in Lenox preparing details for the summer's courses, which include conducting, composition, operatic interpretation and symphonic performance.

The principal change will be in the larges department of the school, which is named in the new catalog now available as the Department of Music and Culture, and which includes the festival chorus. This is designed for students with less specific qualifications than those in the other department and for amateurs who wish to increase their acquaintance with music and its interpretation. The director believes it is as important to develop this class as it is the special talent. Paul Hindemith is to conduct a survey of choral and instrumental music in study and performance.

Gregor Piatigorsky, the eminent cellist has been added to the faculty. Dr. Koussevitzky and Stanley Chapple will be in charge of the instruction in conducting. Olin Downes, Howard Hanson, Archibald T. Davidson and others will be among the lecturers. An enlarged membership, limited to 350, will be accepted at the school this summer. Already 285 applications have been received. New buildings are planned to accommodate the students.

This Clipping From
HOLYOKE, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT TELEGRAM

FEB 11 1941

Dr. Koussevitzky Plans For Summer Music School

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra and director of the Berkshire symphonic festival at Tanglewood, has begun announcing plans for the second season of the Berkshire Music Center, summer music school which he started there last year.

The school will have the same two divisions, one for advanced musicians, and one for amateurs. The second division will be larger this year, and Paul Hindemith is to conduct a survey of choral and instrumental music in connection with it.

Additions to the faculty include Gregor Piatagorsky, Russian 'cellist, who will direct the chamber music department, Hugh Ross, director of the Schola Cantorum of New York city, and Leo Schrade of the Yale music department.

The department of orchestral conducting will be in charge of Serge Koussevitzky and Stanley Chapple, as last year. The department of choral conducting will be under G. Wallace Woodworth and Hugh Ross. The school orchestra will be in charge of Serge Koussevitzky assisted by Richard Burgin, Stanley Chapple, and 30 members of the Boston Symphony orchestra. The classes in composition will be in charge of Aaron Copland and of Paul Hindemith. The opera department will be in charge of Herbert Graf, stage director of the Metropolitan Opera company, assisted by Boris Goldovsky and Richard Rychtarik. Classes in Solfege and country dancing are announced.

Olin Downes will give general lectures in addition to the part he will take in the survey conducted by Mr. Hindemith. Lecturers will include Howard Hanson, Archibald T. Davison, Carleton Sprague Smith ,and others to be announced.

The Festival chorus, made up of members of the music school, will present Beethoven's "Missa Solemnis" at the symphonic festival, which is scheduled for July 31-August 17, the last three weeks of the school session.

This Clipping From
BUFFALO, N.Y.
NEWS
FEB 15 1941

Berkshire Festival Plans Call for a Busier Year

Additions Are Made to the Faculty As Koussevitsky Enlarges His Plan; Chorus to Prepare Missa Solemnis

By THEODOLINDA C. BORIS

"WE WANT to be modest in our promises. But by no means do we want to be modest in our aspirations." So writes Dr. Serge Koussevitzky in his statement prefacing the catalog, just issued, announcing the second season of the Berkshire Music Center to be held at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., from July 7 to Aug. 17.

The Music Center will be larger next Summer, and interestingly enough, the principal change for the second season will be in the largest department of the school, named in the catalog as "The Department of Music and Culture," which includes the Festival Chorus. Dr. Koussevitzky speaks of this department as being for "students with less specific qualifications" and for "amateurs who wish to increase their acquaintance with music and its interpretation."

A feature of this department will be a "survey of choral and instrumental music in study and performance," given by Paul Hindemith, the composer, and several assistants. Besides lectures on the material to be studied, the music will be sung and played by various groups.

Faculty Augmented

The Festival Chorus, under G. Wallace Woodworth and Hugh Ross, will prepare Beethoven's "Missa Solemnis," which will be performed at the 1941 Berkshire Symphonic Festival under Dr. Koussevitzky's direction. The nine Festival concerts are given on Thursday evenings, Saturday evenings and Sunday evenings from July 31 to Aug. 17, within the last three weeks of the school term.

New members of the faculty will be: Gregor Piatigorsky, 'cellist; Hugh Ross, director of the Schola Cantorum of New York City, and Leo Schrade, musicologist of the Yale Department of Music.

This Clipping From
BRIDGEPORT, CONN.
SUNDAY HERALD
FEB 16 1941

Serge Koussevitzky Plans Berkshire Musical Fete

Even though Summer is a long way off, Serge Koussevitzky, director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra heard this season at Woolsey Hall, is making plans for the Berkshire Musical Festival, a highlight of the year for local music lovers.

He has just announced the Music Center this year will be enlarged to accommodate 350 members.

Dr. Koussevitzky was director of last year's session and will be in charge of the second season also.

The school, which will run for six weeks, July 7 to Aug. 17, will have classes in conducting, in composition, operatic interpretation and symphonic performance.

This year's festival will consist of nine concerts at Tanglewood on Thursday, Saturday and Sunday evenings, July 31 to Aug. 17.

This Clipping From GALVESTON, TEX.
TRIBUNE
FEB 28 1941

The Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., will open for its second season of six weeks on July 7. It will include the three weeks of the eighth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival.

The music center was established last summer by Serge Koussevitzky, with the Boston Symphony Orchestra. For more advanced students, there will be classes in orchestral conducting, held by Dr. Koussevitzky and Stanley Chapple, and in choral conducting by Hugh Ross and G. Wallace Woodworth. There will be a department of music and culture for students of less specific qualifications and for amateurs "who wish to increase their acquaintance with music and its interpretation."

This Clipping From
BEAUMONT, TEX.
JOURNAL
FEB 28 1941

The music center was established last summer by Serge Koussevitzky, with the Boston Symphony orchestra. For more advanced students, there will be classes in orchestral conducting, held by Dr. Koussevitzky and Stanley Chapple; and in choral conducting by Hugh Ross and G. Wallace Woodworth. There will be a department of music and culture for students of less specific qualifications and for amateurs "who wish to increase their acquaintance with music and its interpretation."

This Clipping From
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE
FEB 27 1941

BMA Resuming Rehearsals

Director Hunt Preparing for Tanglewood Concert

The Berkshire Musical Association chorus, Horace Hunt of Dalton, director, will resume rehearsals Monday night at 7.30 in anticipation of its participation in the Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Tanglewood next summer. The rehearsal will be held at the First Church parish house.

Mr. Hunt was in Boston last week end and while there completed arrangements with the Boston Symphony Orchestra for the scores to be sent for the rehearsal. A number of works have arrived, among them the new Roy Harris Folksong Symphony.

While in Boston, Mr. and Mrs. Hunt had dinner with Mr. and Mrs. Harris and discussed the scores of the symphony in detail.

Persons wishing to join the chorus are urged to attend the rehearsal Monday.

This Clipping From
SCHENECTADY, N.Y.
UNION-STAR
FEB 25 1941

Music Center At Tanglewood Opens July 7

Berkshire School Schedules Season Of Six Weeks

The Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., inaugurated last Summer by the Boston Symphony Orchestra with Serge Koussevitzky as director, will begin its second session July 7. The school will continue for six weeks, closing Sunday. August 17, this period including the three weeks of the eighth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival.

The largest department, known as the Academy last year and now titled the Department of Music and Culture, is for students of less specific qualifications than those expected for the more advanced divisions, and for amateurs "who wish to increase their acquaintance with music and its interpretation." This includes a chorus which will prepare under the direction of G. Wallace Woodworth and Hugh Ross for the festival performance of Beethoven's "Missa Solemnis;" choral and instrumental groups which will survey the development of music, by study and performance, from Gregorian chant to works of today under the general direction of Paul Hindewith, and a series og weekly lectures by Olin Downes, music critic of the "New York Times." In the survey course, which will include weekly concerts, Mr. Hindewith will be assisted by Putnam Aldrich, Malcolm Holmes, Leo Schrade, Messrs. Ross and Woodworth and members of the Boston Symphony.

For more advanced students, classes in orchestral conducting will be held by Dr. Koussevitzky, assisted by Stanley Chapple, and in choral conducting by Messrs. Woodworth and Ross. The center's orchestra will study a repertoire chosen from works of various kinds and periods for full orchestra and for chamber orchestra under Dr. Koussevitzky, assisted by Richard Burgin, Stanley Chapple and Boston Symphony musicians. Classes in composition will be held by Aaron Copland and Mr. Hindemith. Gregory Piatigorsky and faculty members of the Boston Symphony will offer special training in chamber music ensemble playing.

The opera department is headed by Herbert Graf, Metropolitan Opera stage director, with Boris Goldevsky and Richard Rychtarik as his assistants. Training in operatic acting, individual and ensemble musical study, physical training, diction and stage setting, costuming and make-up will be offered.

NORTHFIELD, MASS
PRESS
2/28/41

The Boston Symphony School And Festival Held At Tanglewood

Announcement has been made that the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, between Stockbridge and Lenox will conduct its sessions with Serge Koussevitzky, as director for six weeks, July 7 to Aug. 17. Last year was the Center's first season and it had an enrollment of 312 chosen from 600 applicants. It is expected that this summer more will be accepted for training in the various departments of music. The Berkshire Symphonic Festival of the Boston Symphony orchestra will consist of nine concerts on Thursday, Saturday and Sunday evenings from July 31 to Aug. 17. It is expected that the completed program will shortly be announced for the Festival of Music, and that catalogs for the school of music will soon be ready for distribution. The distance from Northfield, with evening concerts, have precluded many from attending but several did attend last season, who were able to secure hotel accomodations.

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
SUNDAY UNION
& REPUBLICAN
FEB 23 1941

New Department Offered at Center

Course in Music and Culture Which Will Include a Festival Chorus Has Been Added to Curriculum Under Paul Hindemith — Designed for Amateurs and Teachers of Music History

THE BERKSHIRE Music Center will enter its second session on July 7 with an enlarged membership and faculty. The enrolment, which was 312 last summer, will be increased to 350 this year and already 285 applications have been received.

Gregor Piatigorsky, Russian cello virtuoso, has been added to the faculty to take charge of the chamber music department. Other new members are Hugh Ross, director of the Schola Cantorum of New York, and Leo Schrade, musicologist now connected with the department of music at Yale.

A new department of music and culture has been added to the curriculum which includes a festival chorus. This course, Dr Serge Koussevitzky, director of the center, points out, is designed for "students with less specific qualifications" than the other departments call for and for" amateurs who wish to increase their acquaintance with music and its interpretation." Paul Hindemith, assisted by Putnam Aldrich, Malcolm Holmes, Hugh Hoss, Leo Schrade, G. Wallace Woodworth, and members of the Boston Symphony orchestra, will devote the afternoons of the six-weeks' session to a survey of choral and instrumental music in study and performance. The program will traverse the development of musical composition beginning with the Gregorian chant, leading through the first contrapuntal music instrumental and vocal, the Netherlands period, the church and secular music of the following centuries and compositions of the 18th century. A week will be devoted to music of the present day. Music will be played and sung by various groups according to their abilities so that everyone will have an opportunity to work with the music of these periods. Each week there will be a concert of choral and instrumental music chosen from the works studied.

The festival chorus will be prepared in Beethoven's "Missa Solemnis" which will be performed at the Berkshire Symphonic Festival this summer under the direction of Dr Koussevitzky. The Festival will consist of nine concerts at Tanglewood at Thursday evenings, Saturday evenings and Sunday evenings, July 31-August 17.

Dr Koussevitzky, assisted by Stanley Chapple, will be in charge of the class in orchestral conducting and, assisted by Richard Burgin, Mr Chapple and members of the Boston Symphony, will head the department of ensemble work. The department of choral conducting will be under G. Wallace Woodworth and Hugh Ross; composition classes under Aaron Copland and Paul Hindemith; opera department under Herbert Graf, stage director of the Metropolitan Opera company, assisted by Boris Goldovsky and Richard Rychtarik. Gaston Dufresne will conduct classes in solfege and there will be informal instruction in country, Morris and American square dances. Lectures will be given by Olin Downes, Howard Hanson, Archibald T. Davison, Carleton Sprague Smith and others.

In announcing the plans for the second session, Dr Koussevitzky made the following statement:—

As music takes its increasing place in the life of America, there is a corresponding desire for a broader comprehension of the art. The Berkshire Music Center offers special opportunities to all for the practice and contemplation of music in its noblest aspects. It brings them into association with the leading artists and scholars of the day. Tanglewood is a place for those who wish to refresh mind and personality by the experience of the best in music and the related arts, and who long for a creative rest in summer.

The center is designed to meet the needs of advanced students who have already had the essential technical training and are studying to make music their career, and also of students with less specific qualifications and amateurs who wish to increase their acquaintance with music and its interpretation.

The central ideas of our short summer work are creation and creative interpretation. Our special aims are to find sound bases for creation and to attain perfecion in interpretation.

Obviously, in six weeks we cannot hope to give fundamental courses and instruction on the same basis as they are introduced in conservatories, colleges and music schools. What we want to give our students is constructive advice and a practical method which will stimulate their gifts, round out their abilities gained during their years of study, and broaden their acquaintance with music.

Our problem is to help artists with good training and knowledge to acquire a penetrating and vivid conception of the music they create and interpret; to stir their imagination to new hights and new depths, because imagination invokes in the creator and interpreter the right intuition and emotions to conceive the inner meaning of their art.

All who enrol in the center will participate in the student orchestras, choruses, chamber music, or operatic groups, acquiring a direct understanding of music as it is written, conducted, played or sung. Lectures will supplement the making of music. The rehearsals and concerts of the Berkshires Symphonic Festival provide an opportunity for close observation of the Boston Symphony orchestra.

We want to be modest in our promises. But by no means do we want to be modest in our aspirations. We are confident that our students will receive the very best of our ability and practical experience, as well as our spiritual guidance.

179

This Clipping From
BUFFALO, N.Y.
NEWS
FEB 15 1941

Berkshire Festival Plans Call for a Busier Year

Additions Are Made to the Faculty As Koussevitsky Enlarges His Plan; Chorus to Prepare Missa Solemnis

By THEODOLINDA C. BORIS

"WE WANT to be modest in our promises. But by no means do we want to be modest in our aspirations." So writes Dr. Serge Koussevitzky in his statement prefacing the catalog, just issued, announcing the second season of the Berkshire Music Center to be held at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., from July 7 to Aug. 17.

The Music Center will be larger next Summer, and interestingly enough, the principal change for the second season will be in the largest department of the school, named in the catalog as "The Department of Music and Culture," which includes the Festival Chorus. Dr. Koussevitzky speaks of this department as being for "students with less specific qualifications" and for "amateurs who wish to increase their acquaintance with music and its interpretation."

A feature of this department will be a "survey of choral and instrumental music in study and performance," given by Paul Hindemith, the composer, and several assistants. Besides lectures on the material to be studied, the music will be sung and played by various groups.

Faculty Augmented

The Festival Chorus, under G. Wallace Woodworth and Hugh Ross, will prepare Beethoven's "Missa Solemnis," which will be performed at the 1941 Berkshire Symphonic Festival under Dr. Koussevitzky's direction. The nine Festival concerts are given on Thursday evenings, Saturday evenings and Sunday evenings from July 31 to Aug. 17, within the last three weeks of the school term.

New members of the faculty will be: Gregor Piatigorsky, 'cellist; Hugh Ross, director of the Schola Cantorum of New York City, and Leo Schrade, musicologist of the Yale Department of Music.

This Clipping From
BRIDGEPORT, CONN.
SUNDAY HERALD
FEB 16 1941

Serge Koussevitzky Plans Berkshire Musical Fete

Even though Summer is a long way off, Serge Koussevitzky, director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra heard this season at Woolsey Hall, is making plans for the Berkshire Musical Festival, a highlight of the year for local music lovers.

He has just announced the Music Center this year will be enlarged to accommodate 350 members.

Dr. Koussevitzky was director of last year's session and will be in charge of the second season also.

The school, which will run for six weeks, July 7 to Aug. 17, will have classes in conducting, in composition, operatic interpretation and symphonic performance.

This year's festival will consist of nine concerts at Tanglewood on Thursday, Saturday and Sunday evenings, July 31 to Aug. 17.

This Clipping From GALVESTON, TEX.
TRIBUNE
FEB 28 1941

The Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., will open for its second season of six weeks on July 7. It will include the three weeks of the eighth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival.

The music center was established last summer by Serge Koussevitzky, with the Boston Symphony Orchestra. For more advanced students, there will be classes in orchestral conducting, held by Dr. Koussevitzky and Stanley Chapple, and in choral conducting by Hugh Ross and G. Wallace Woodworth. There will be a department of music and culture for students of less specific qualifications and for amateurs "who wish to increase their acquaintance with music and its interpretation."

This Clipping From
BEAUMONT, TEX.
JOURNAL
FEB 28 1941

The music center was established last summer by Serge Koussevitzky, with the Boston Symphony orchestra. For more advanced students, there will be classes in orchestral conducting, held by Dr. Koussevitzky and Stanley Chapple, and in choral conducting by Hugh Ross and G. Wallace Woodworth. There will be a department of music and culture for students of less specific qualifications and for amateurs "who wish to increase their acquaintance with music and its interpretation."

This Clipping From
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE
FEB 27 1941

BMA Resuming Rehearsals

Director Hunt Preparing for Tanglewood Concert

The Berkshire Musical Association chorus, Horace Hunt of Dalton, director, will resume rehearsals Monday night at 7.30 in anticipation of its participation in the Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Tanglewood next summer. The rehearsal will be held at the First Church parish house.

Mr. Hunt was in Boston last week end and while there completed arrangements with the Boston Symphony Orchestra for the scores to be sent for the rehearsal. A number of works have arrived, among them the new Roy Harris Folksong Symphony.

While in Boston, Mr. and Mrs. Hunt had dinner with Mr. and Mrs. Harris and discussed the scores of the symphony in detail.

Persons wishing to join the chorus are urged to attend the rehearsal Monday.

This Clipping From
SCHENECTADY, N.Y.
UNION-STAR
FEB 25 1941

Music Center At Tanglewood Opens July 7

Berkshire School Schedules Season Of Six Weeks

The Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., inaugurated last Summer by the Boston Symphony Orchestra with Serge Koussevitzky as director, will begin its second session July 7. The school will continue for six weeks, closing Sunday, August 17, this period including the three weeks of the eighth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival.

The largest department, known as the Academy last year and now titled the Department of Music and Culture, is for students of less specific qualifications than those expected for the more advanced divisions, and for amateurs "who wish to increase their acquaintance with music and its interpretation." This includes a chorus which will prepare under the direction of G. Wallace Woodworth and Hugh Ross for the festival performance of Beethoven's "Missa Solemnis;" choral and instrumental groups which will survey the development of music, by study and performance, from Gregorian chant to works of today under the general direction of Paul Hindewith, and a series of weekly lectures by Olin Downes, music critic of the "New York Times." In the survey course, which will include weekly concerts, Mr. Hindewith will be assisted by Putnam Aldrich, Malcolm Holmes, Leo Schrade, Messrs. Ross and Woodworth and members of the Boston Symphony.

For more advanced students, classes in orchestral conducting will be held by Dr. Koussevitzky, assisted by Stanley Chapple, and in choral conducting by Messrs. Woodworth and Ross. The center's orchestra will study a repertoire chosen from works of various kinds and periods for full orchestra and for chamber orchestra under Dr. Koussevitzky, assisted by Richard Burgin, Stanley Chapple and Boston Symphony musicians. Classes in composition will be held by Aaron Copland and Mr. Hindemith. Gregory Piatigorsky and faculty members of the Boston Symphony will offer special training in chamber music ensemble playing.

The opera department is headed by Herbert Graf, Metropolitan Opera stage director, with Boris Goldevsky and Richard Rychtarik as his assistants. Training in operatic acting, individual and ensemble musical study, physical training, diction and stage setting, costuming and make-up will be offered.

NORTHFIELD, MASS
PRESS
2/28/41

The Boston Symphony School And Festival Held At Tanglewood

Announcement has been made that the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, between Stockbridge and Lenox will conduct its sessions with Serge Koussevitzky, as director for six weeks, July 7 to Aug. 17. Last year was the Center's first season and it had an enrollment of 312 chosen from 600 applicants. It is expected that this summer more will be accepted for training in the various departments of music. The Berkshire Symphonic Festival of the Boston Symphony orchestra will consist of nine concerts on Thursday, Saturday and Sunday evenings from July 31 to Aug. 17. It is expected that the completed program will shortly be announced for the Festival of Music, and that catalogs for the school of music will soon be ready for distribution. The distance from Northfield, with evening concerts, have precluded many from attending but several did attend last season, who were able to secure hotel accomodations.

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
SUNDAY UNION
& REPUBLICAN
FEB 23 1941

New Department Offered at Center

Course in Music and Culture Which Will Include a Festival Chorus Has Been Added to Curriculum Under Paul Hindemith — Designed for Amateurs and Teachers of Music History

THE BERKSHIRE Music Center will enter its second session on July 7 with an enlarged membership and faculty. The enrolment, which was 312 last summer, will be increased to 350 this year and already 285 applications have been received.

Gregor Piatigorsky, Russian cello virtuoso, has been added to the faculty to take charge of the chamber music department. Other new members are Hugh Ross, director of the Schola Cantorum of New York, and Leo Schrade, musicologist now connected with the department of music at Yale.

A new department of music and culture has been added to the curriculum which includes a festival chorus. This course, Dr Serge Koussevitzky, director of the [illegible] out, is designed for "students with less specific qualifications" than the other departments call for and for" amateurs who wish to increase their acquaintance with music and its interpretation." Paul Hindemith, assisted by Putnam Aldrich, Malcolm Holmes, Hugh Hoss, Leo Schrade, G. Wallace Woodworth, and members of the Boston Symphony orchestra, will devote the afternoons of the six-weeks' session to a survey of choral and instrumental music in study and performance. The program will traverse the development of musical composition beginning with the Gregorian chant, leading through the first contrapuntal music instrumental and vocal, the Netherlands period, the church and secular music of the following centuries and compositions of the 18th century. A week will be devoted to music of the present day. Music will be played and sung by various groups according to their abilities so that everyone will have an opportunity to work with the music of these periods. Each week there will be a concert of choral and instrumental music chosen from the works studied.

The festival chorus will be prepared in Beethoven's "Missa Solemnis" which will be performed at the Berkshire Symphonic Festival this summer under the direction of Dr Koussevitzky. The Festival will consist of nine concerts at Tanglewood at Thursday evenings, Saturday evenings and Sunday evenings, July 31-August 17.

Dr Koussevitzky, assisted by Stanley Chapple, will be in charge of the class in orchestral conducting and, assisted by Richard Burgin, Mr Chapple and members of the Boston Symphony, will head the department of ensemble work. The department of choral conducting will be under G. Wallace Woodworth and Hugh Ross; composition classes under Aaron Copland and Paul Hindemith; opera department under Herbert Graf, stage director of the Metropolitan Opera company, assisted by Boris Goldovsky and Richard Rychtarik. Gaston Dufresne will conduct classes in solfege and there will be informal instruction in country, Morris and American square dances. Lectures will be given by Olin Downes, Howard Hanson, Archibald T. Davison, Carleton Sprague Smith and others.

In announcing the plans for the second session, Dr Koussevitzky made the following statement:—

As music takes its increasing place in the life of America, there is a corresponding desire for a broader comprehension of the art. The Berkshire Music Center offers special opportunities to all for the practice and contemplation of music in its noblest aspects. It brings them into association with the leading artists and scholars of the day. Tanglewood is a place for those who wish to refresh mind and personality by the experience of the best in music and the related arts, and who long for a creative rest in summer.

The center is designed to meet the needs of advanced students who have already had the essential technical training and are studying to make music their career, and also of students with less specific qualifications and amateurs who wish to increase their acquaintance with music and its interpretation.

The central ideas of our short summer work are creation and creative interpretation. Our special aims are to find sound bases for creation and to attain perfecion in interpretation.

Obviously, in six weeks we cannot hope to give fundamental courses and instruction on the same basis as they are introduced in conservatories, colleges and music schools. What we want to give our students is constructive advice and a practical method which will stimulate their gifts, round out their abilities gained during their years of study, and broaden their acquaintance with music.

Our problem is to help artists with good training and knowledge to acquire a penetrating and vivid conception of the music they create and interpret; to stir their imagination to new hights and new depths, because imagination invokes in the creator and interpreter the right intuition and emotions to conceive the inner meaning of their art.

All who enrol in the center will participate in the student orchestras, choruses, chamber music, or operatic groups, acquiring a direct understanding of music as it is written, conducted, played or sung. Lectures will supplement the making of music. The rehearsals and concerts of the Berkshires Symphonic Festival provide an opportunity for close observation of the Boston Symphony orchestra.

We want to be modest in our promises. But by no means do we want to be modest in our aspirations. We are confident that our students will receive the very best of our ability and practical experience, as well as our spiritual guidance.

This Clipping From WILMINGTON, DEL.
NEWS

MAR 7 - 1941

Music Center Plans Season

The Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., will open for its second season of six weeks on July 7. It will include the three weeks of the eighth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival.

The music center was established last summer by Serge Koussevitzky, with the Boston Symphony Orchestra. For more advanced students, there will be classes in orchestra conducting, held by Dr. Koussevitzky, and Stanley Chapple, and in choral conducting by Hugh Ross and G. Wallace Woodworth.

There will be a department of music and culture for students of less specific qualifications and for amateurs "who wish to increase their acquaintance with music and its interpretation."

THIS CLIPPING FROM OSHKOSH, WIS.
NORTHWESTERN

MAR 1 - 1941

This Clipping From
NEW KENSINGTON, PA.
DISPATCH

MAR 5 - 1941

This Clipping From
WHEELING, W. VA.
NEWS-REGISTER

MAR 2 - 1941

This Clipping From
AUSTIN, TEXAS
AMERICAN

MAR 9 - 1941

THIS CLIPPING FROM WAUKESHA, WIS.
FREEMAN

MAR 1 - 1941

This Clipping From ROANOKE, VA.
TIMES

MAR 2 - 1941

This Clipping From
Los Angeles, Cal.
Times

MAR 4 1941

This Clipping From
CHARLESTON, S. C.
NEWS-COURIER

MAR 2 - 1941

THIS CLIPPING FROM CARTHAGE, MO.
DEMOCRAT

MAR 6 1941

This Clipping From SPOKANE, WASH.
CHRONICLE

MAR 6 - 1941

This Clipping From
INDIANAPOLIS, IND.
STAR

MAR 2 - 1941

This Clipping From
SOUTH BEND, IND.
TRIBUNE

MAR 2 - 1941

This Clipping From MUNCIE, IND.
STAR

MAR 2 - 1941

THIS CLIPPING FROM
TROY, N. Y.
OBSERVER & BUDGET

MAR 2 - 1941

THIS CLIPPING FROM WALTHAM, MASS.
NEWS TRIBUNE

MAR 3 - 1941

This Clipping From MONTGOMERY, ALA.
ADVERTISER

MAR 2 - 1941

This Clipping From
AKRON, O.
BEACON-JOURNAL

MAR 16 1941

This Clipping From
BILLINGS, MONT.
MORNING GAZETTE

MAR 6 1941

This Clipping From
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

MAR 12 1941

Tanglewood Grows

The announcement of contracts let for a $50,000 expenditure at Tanglewood is yet another sign that the Berkshire Festival is growing up. While the money is for projects connected with the music school, it nonetheless represents a further flowering of Dr. Koussevitzky's concept as a New World musical center to rival, if indeed not to surpass, the great European summer citadels of musical art.

As the impact of Tanglewood's growth is understood by the community, there is recalled the nostalgic commentary of a Berkshire listener last summer after the magnificent closing performance. As a music-lover who had witnessed the large artistic strides, the great physical expansion and the nation-wide acceptance of the Festival, her local pride was tempered by a certain regret at a passing of the neighborhood aspect of the enterprise. Though flattered to have Sioux City rubbing elbows with Mobile in her very Berkshire dooryard, something of the calm satisfaction of a small but successful local enterprise departed with the traffic snarls at Lenox Town Hall.

Nor has this viewpoint escaped the genius of Dr. Koussevitzky's understanding. Because, fittingly enough, simultaneously with the announcement of new buildings comes the report of the first rehearsal of the chorus of the Berkshire Musical Association in preparation for a choral program as part of the Festival's 1941 program. Several works, including the new Folksong Symphony by Roy Harris are under consideration and are being studied by the chorus.

However, that Dr. Koussevitzky was not wholly concerned with instilling local color is sure. Since he makes no compromise with perfection, it is indeed a great feather in the cap of the local choristers and their director, Mr. Horace Hunt of Dalton. Fortunate indeed in their experience will be the 150 Berkshire men and women who will be privileged to sing with the great Boston Symphony Orchestra under Koussevitzky's baton before America's musical elite.

The best wishes of the community go out to the permanent members of the association and those voices who have yet to be admitted in the necessary augmentation of personnel that they may give increased significance and a home-grown brilliance to Berkshire's adventitious musical renown at Tanglewood.

This Clipping From
CORPUS CHRISTI, TEXAS
CALLER

MAR 2 - 1941

The music center was established last summer by Serge Koussevitzky, with the Boston Symphony Orchestra. For more advanced students, there will be classes in orchestral conducting, held by Dr. Koussevitzky and Stanley Chapple, and in choral conducting by Hugh Ross and G. Wallace Woodworth. There will be a department of music and culture for students of less specific qualifications and for amateurs "who wish to increase their acquaintance with music and its interpretation."

This Clipping From LOUISVILLE, KY.
COURIER-JOURNAL

MAR 2 - 1941

MUSIC:

Berkshire Music Center.

The Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, between Stockbridge and Lenox, Mass., which was established last summer by the Boston Symphony Orchestra with Serge Koussevitzky as its director, will be larger next summer. The session will consist of six weeks, July 7-August 17.

The school will have classes in conducting, in composition, in operatic interpretation and in symphonic performance. The principal change will be in the largest department of the school, which is named in the new catalogue as The Department of Music Culture, and which includes the Festival Chorus. Dr. Koussevitzky refers to this department in his preliminary statement as designed for "students with less specific qualifications" than in other departments, and for "amateurs who wish to increase their acquaintance with music and its interpretations."

The Festival Chorus will be prepared by G. Wallace Woodworth and Hugh Ross in Beethoven's Missa Solemnis, which is to be performed at the Berkshire Symphonic Festival of 1941 under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky. The festival will consist of nine concerts at Tanglewood on Thursday evenings, Saturday evenings and Sunday evenings, July 31-August 17, which are within the last three weeks of the school term.

This Clipping From
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

MAR 11 1941

Award Contract for Buildings At Berkshire Music Center

Graves & Hemmes of Great Barrington Lowest of Six Bidders—Concert-Theatre Hall To Seat 1100

Graves & Hemmes, Great Barrington contractors, lowest of six bidders were yesterday awarded the contract for new buildings at Tanglewood to serve the Berkshire Music Center. The contract was awarded at a meeting of the trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the home of Ernest B. Dane, president.

Cost, $50,000

The buildings to be erected will include a concert-theatre hall seating 1100 persons, a chamber music hall and four small rehearsal rooms. The concert-theatre hall will be placed on the site north of the Tanglewood gardens where the tent stood in 1937 when the Berkshire Symphonic Festival concerts were first held at the former Tappen estate. The chamber music hall will stand in the grove immediately east of the gardens. The location of the rehearsal rooms has not been determined. The cost will be about $50,000.

At the meeting with the orchestra trustees were Eliel Saarinen and his son Eerio of Bloomfield Hills, Mich., architects. Mr. Saarinen drew the original plans for the shed which were accepted by the Festival board and modified by Joseph Franz, Stockbridge engineer.

Graves & Hemmes built the Festival's shed in 1938. The new buildings will be of simple design, the concert-theatre hall being somewhat in the shape of a cross while the chamber music hall will be rectangular. They will be completed in time for the opening of the second season of the Berkshire Music Center, July 7, three weeks ahead of the Festival.

Tanglewood Tales Retold

March 5

(Transcript Photo—Smith)

Miss Lee Burnett, Southboro debutante, came early to yesterday's Boston Symphony concert, which launched an exhibit of relics of Tanglewood, the Berkshire estate presented to the orchestra by Mrs. Gorham Brooks. In the case are water colors of Berkshire life in the 1860's, done by Mrs. Brooks' mother, and letters from authors and actors of period received by her grandmother.

Happy Days at Tanglewood Live Again at Symphony Hall

By Mary Elizabeth Prim

Past, present and future of Tanglewood, setting for the Boston Symphony Orchestra's summer season, is now spread out in the gallery of Symphony Hall with the announcement of the second season of the Berkshire Music Center, to be held from July 7 to Aug. 17.

Mrs. Gorham Brooks who presented Tanglewood, her family's extensive Berkshire estate to the Symphony Orchestra, has now lent relics of the place. Among them are paintings by her mother, Mrs. Richard C. Dixey, and letters received by her grandmother, Mrs. William Aspinwall Tappan. Among Mrs. Tappan's correspondents were Elizabeth Barrett Browning, Oliver Wendell Holmes, Ralph Waldo Emerson, Nathaniel Hawthorne, Henry James, Charlotte Cushman and many other celebrities of the last century.

The Tappans were among the first families to make summer estates in the Berkshires, arriving there in the 1840s. Their estate received its name because of the little red house where Hawthorne first told his "Tanglewood Tales."

Two watercolors of the house and its living room, done by Mrs. Dixey about 1870, are shown in the exhibit.

The glass cases in the exhibition gallery contain a series of Currier and Ives-like views of indoor and outdoor life in the Berkshires painted by Mrs. Dixey as a young girl in the sixties. Girls in bright-colored crinolines play croquet, ride side saddle or go sliding—not skating—or gather with young men in Union blue to sing about the parlor melodion. The lively watercolors might serve as illustration for "Little Women."

Mrs. Tappan, who had the same gift for sprightly watercolor as her daughter, is represented by some views of Tanglewood in the seventies, when the croquet players had discarded their hoop skirts for the superlatively elegant attire of that decade. In Mrs. Tappan's earliest sketch book is a pencil view of Mary Aspinwall Tappan, Mrs. Brooks' aunt, as a baby.

The most recent of Mrs. Dixey's sketches shown are three views of Tanglewood gardens and the beautiful view to Rattlesnake Mountain, done in 1912.

Also on view are photographs of present-day Tanglewood and last season's music festival done by Egone, an Italian refugee. The huge trees in his pictures are shown as saplings in Mrs. Dixey's early paintings.

This Clipping From
OGDEN, UTAH
STANDARD EXAMINER

Glorious Rendition

Vic. M-730 is a glorious rendition of the Brahms' Symphony No. 4 in E Minor by the Boston Symphony with Serge Koussevitzky conducting. Critics have ranked this symphony in every way from rubbish to the composer's greatest work. Brahms' remarkable contrapuntal skill manifested in the extraordinary relationship of his part-writing and theme derivations has given rise to criticisms at once as incompresensible as they are absurd. If in Brahms, many passages are more fully analysed with the eye than the ear, save by the musician, this fact certainly has not prevented great masses of hearers from becoming true lovers of Brahms. To possess intricate contrapuntal substance and at the same time to unfold a wealth of melodious richness is indeed evidence of genius. Added to this, high emotion, spirituality, true philosophic insight, and superb mastery of orchestration and the result is a Brahms symphony.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM
MAR 1 - 1941

Opportunity.

Auditions for membership in the advanced student orchestra of the Berkshire Music Center, Serge Koussevitzky, director, will be held during the March visit here of the Boston Symphony. Applications should be sent in advance to Symphony Hall, Boston.

* * *

Music News and Comment

More than 700 applications for enrollment at the Berkshire Music Center have been received at Symphony Hall. Since only 350 students can be accepted, this means that the applications are double that number. They have come from 38 of the United States, from Washington, D. C., Canada, Scotland and Switzerland. More than half the applications are from men, and the prevailing age group is between 20 and 24. One hundred music schools are represented, and about 150 colleges and universities.

The Berkshire Music Center is directed by Serge Koussevitsky, sponsored by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and conducts its sessions on "Tanglewood" estate, where the Berkshire Symphonic Festivals are given. Mr. Koussevitsky has chosen six active members for his conducting class, in which there will be an additional number of listeners.

The membership of the Advanced Orchestra of 85 players has been virtually decided, as has that of the classes in Choral Conducting under G. Wallace Woodworth and Hugh Ross, the Chamber Music Department directed by Gregor Piatigorsky, the composition classes of Paul Hindemith and Aaron Copland, and Dr. Herbert Graf's Opera Class. A limited number can still be accepted for the Department of Music and Culture. The Center has been presented with scholarships from the principal music schools of the country, individual donors and others. There are to be two new buildings, designed by the Finnish architect Eliel Saarinen. The new theatre-concert hall will seat about 1200, and the chamber music hall will accommodate about 400.

Berkshire Center Opera Auditions

Auditions for students wishing to apply for the opera department of the Berkshire Music Center, Serge Koussevitzky director, will be held in Boston on Saturday, March 29. at 10 A. M., and on Sunday, March 30, at 2 P. M. in Symphony Hall.

The opera department is under Dr. Herbert Graf, stage director of the Metropolitan Opera Company, assisted by Boris Goldovsky, head of the opera department of the Cleveland Institute of Music, and Richard Rychtarik, his colleague at the Cleveland Institute. This department was an important part of the school at Lenox last summer at Tanglewood, the grounds where the Berkshire Symphonic Festival is held. It will continue to give individual and ensemble training leading to the performance of a complete opera and opera scenes.

The Berksire Music Center will hold its second season, July 7 through August 17, next. The last three of these weeks coincide with the festival. The opera department has been created in order that advanced young opera students may add to their previous training the study and performance of operatic parts, according to the requirements of the modern opera stage. A limited number of scholarships will be available.

Transcript

Tanglewood Orchestra Auditions Next Week

3/1/41

Auditions for membership in the advanced student orchestra of the Berkshire Music Center, which has announced the second season, July 7 to Aug. 17, will be held at Symphony Hall next week. Wind players will be heard at five o'clock Thursday afternoon, string players at the same time Friday. The orchestra, which is to have about 75 members, will study orchestral and chamber orchestra works under Dr. Koussevitzky, Stanley Chapple, Richard Burgin and other conductors, and will give concerts each week.

Applications and requests for the school catalog should be sent at once to Symphony Hall, Boston.

Tanglewood Growing Up

TWO new buildings for the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood will be ready in time for the second session of the School —July 7 to Aug. 17—of which Serge Koussevitzky is the director.

A combined theater and concert hall, seating 1100, will be erected, and a smaller chamber music auditorium seating 300. Each building will be close to the floral gardens, which will afford a convenient promenade. The larger hall, to be used for concerts and stage performances, will be located on the site of the tent which was used for the Berkshire Symphonic Festival before construction of the present shed. The chamber music auditorium will be situated in the grove between the main house and Hawthorne st., about 100 feet from the site of "The Little Red House"

This Clipping From SAN DIEGO, CAL.
UNION
APR 6 1941

Berkshire Center Enlarges Program

The Berkshire Music center at Tanglewood, between Stockbridge and Lenox, Mass., which was established last summer by the Boston Symphony orchestra with Serge Koussevitzky as its director, will be larger this summer, according to catalog announcement.

There will be classes in conducting, composition, operatic interpretation and in symphonic performance. The principal change will be in the largest department of the school, which is named the Department of Music and Culture, and which included the Festival chorus.

A unique feature of this department will be under Paul Hindemith, who, with assistants, will conduct a survey of choral and instrumental music in study and performance. The music will be sung and played by various groups.

The Festival chorus will be prepared by G. Wallace Woodworth and Hugh Ross in Beethoven's "Missa Solemnis," which is to be performed at the Berkshire Symphonic festival of 1941 under the direction of Koussevitzky.

Gregor Piatigorsky, Russian 'cello virtuoso, is announced as a new member of the faculty in charge of the chamber music department.

Tanglewood Tales Retold

March 5

(Transcript Photo—Smith)

Miss Lee Burnett, Southboro debutante, came early to yesterday's Boston Symphony concert, which launched an exhibit of relics of Tanglewood, the Berkshire estate presented to the orchestra by Mrs. Gorham Brooks. In the case are water colors of Berkshire life in the 1860's, done by Mrs. Brooks' mother, and letters from authors and actors of period received by her grandmother.

Happy Days at Tanglewood Live Again at Symphony Hall

By Mary Elizabeth Prim

Past, present and future of Tanglewood, setting for the Boston Symphony Orchestra's summer season, is now spread out in the gallery of Symphony Hall with the announcement of the second season of the Berkshire Music Center, to be held from July 7 to Aug. 17.

Mrs. Gorham Brooks who presented Tanglewood, her family's extensive Berkshire estate to the Symphony Orchestra, has now lent relics of the place. Among them are paintings by her mother, Mrs. Richard C. Dixey, and letters received by her grandmother, Mrs. William Aspinwall Tappan. Among Mrs. Tappan's correspondents were Elizabeth Barrett Browning, Oliver Wendell Holmes, Ralph Waldo Emerson, Nathaniel Hawthorne, Henry James, Charlotte Cushman and many other celebrities of the last century.

The Tappans were among the first families to make summer estates in the Berkshires, arriving there in the 1840s. Their estate received its name because of the little red house where Hawthorne first told his "Tanglewood Tales."

Two watercolors of the house and its living room, done by Mrs. Dixey about 1870, are shown in the exhibit.

The glass cases in the exhibition gallery contain a series of Currier and Ives-like views of indoor and outdoor life in the Berkshires painted by Mrs. Dixey as a young girl in the sixties. Girls in bright-colored crinolines play croquet, ride side saddle or go sliding—not skating—or gather with young men in Union blue to sing about the parlor melodion. The lively watercolors might serve as illustration for "Little Women."

Mrs. Tappan, who had the same gift for sprightly watercolor as her daughter, is represented by some views of Tanglewood in the seventies, when the croquet players had discarded their hoop skirts for the superlatively elegant attire of that decade. In Mrs. Tappan's earliest sketch book is a pencil view of Mary Aspinwall Tappan, Mrs. Brooks' aunt, as a baby.

The most recent of Mrs. Dixey's sketches shown are three views of Tanglewood gardens and the beautiful view to Rattlesnake Mountain, done in 1912.

Also on view are photographs of present-day Tanglewood and last season's music festival done by Egone, an Italian refugee. The huge trees in his pictures are shown as saplings in Mrs. Dixey's early paintings.

This Clipping From
OGDEN, UTAH
STANDARD EXAMINER

[illegible] 3 1941

Glorious Rendition

Vic. M-730 is a glorious rendition of the Brahms' Symphony No. 4 in E Minor by the Boston Symphony with Serge Koussevitzky conducting. Critics have ranked this symphony in every way from rubbish to the composer's greatest work. Brahms' remarkable contrapuntal skill manifested in the extraordinary relationship of his part-writing and theme derivations has given rise to criticisms at once as incompresensible as they are absurd. If in Brahms, many passages are more fully analysed with the eye than the ear, save by the musician, this fact certainly has not prevented great masses of hearers from becoming true lovers of Brahms. To possess intricate contrapuntal substance and at the same time to unfold a wealth of melodious richness is indeed evidence of genius. Added to this, high emotion, spirituality, true philosophic insight, and superb mastery of orchestration and the result is a Brahms symphony.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM
MAR 1 - 1941

Opportunity.

Auditions for membership in the advanced student orchestra of the Berkshire Music Center, Serge Koussevitzky, director, will be held during the March visit here of the Boston Symphony. Applications should be sent in advance to Symphony Hall, Boston.

* * *

Music News and Comment

More than 700 applications for enrollment at the Berkshire Music Center have been received at Symphony Hall. Since only 350 students can be accepted, this means that the applications are double that number. They have come from 38 of the United States, from Washington, D. C., Canada, Scotland and Switzerland. More than half the applications are from men, and the prevailing age group is between 20 and 24. One hundred music schools are represented, and about 150 colleges and universities.

The Berkshire Music Center is directed by Serge Koussevitsky, sponsored by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and conducts its sessions on "Tanglewood" estate, where the Berkshire Symphonic Festivals are given. Mr. Koussevitsky has chosen six active members for his conducting class, in which there will be an additional number of listeners.

The membership of the Advanced Orchestra of 85 players has been virtually decided, as has that of the classes in Choral Conducting under G. Wallace Woodworth and Hugh Ross, the Chamber Music Department directed by Gregor Piatigorsky, the composition classes of Paul Hindemith and Aaron Copland, and Dr. Herbert Graf's Opera Class. A limited number can still be accepted for the Department of Music and Culture. The Center has been presented with scholarships from the principal music schools of the country, individual donors and others. There are to be two new buildings, designed by the Finnish architect Eliel Saarinen. The new theatre-concert hall will seat about 1200, and the chamber music hall will accommodate about 400.

Berkshire Center Opera Auditions

Auditions for students wishing to apply for the opera department of the Berkshire Music Center, Serge Koussevitzky director, will be held in Boston on Saturday, March 29. at 10 A. M., and on Sunday, March 30, at 2 P. M. in Symphony Hall.

The opera department is under Dr. Herbert Graf, stage director of the Metropolitan Opera Company, assisted by Boris Goldovsky, head of the opera department of the Cleveland Institute of Music, and Richard Rychtarik, his colleague at the Cleveland Institute. This department was an important part of the school at Lenox last summer at Tanglewood, the grounds where the Berkshire Symphonic Festival is held. It will continue to give individual and ensemble training leading to the performance of a complete opera and opera scenes.

The Berksire Music Center will hold its second season, July 7 through August 17, next. The last three of these weeks coincide with the festival. The opera department has been created in order that advanced young opera students may add to their previous training the study and performance of operatic parts, according to the requirements of the modern opera stage. A limited number of scholarships will be available.

Transcript

Tanglewood Orchestra Auditions Next Week

3/17/41

Auditions for membership in the advanced student orchestra of the Berkshire Music Center, which has announced the second season, July 7 to Aug. 17, will be held at Symphony Hall next week. Wind players will be heard at five o'clock Thursday afternoon, string players at the same time Friday. The orchestra, which is to have about 75 members, will study orchestral and chamber orchestra works under Dr. Koussevitzky, Stanley Chapple, Richard Burgin and other conductors, and will give concerts each week.

Applications and requests for the school catalog should be sent at once to Symphony Hall, Boston.

Tanglewood Growing Up

March 23/41

TWO new buildings for the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood will be ready in time for the second session of the School—July 7 to Aug. 17—of which Serge Koussevitzky is the director.

A combined theater and concert hall, seating 1100, will be erected, and a smaller chamber music auditorium seating 300. Each building will be close to the floral gardens, which will afford a convenient promenade. The larger hall, to be used for concerts and stage performances, will be located on the site of the tent which was used for the Berkshire Symphonic Festival before construction of the present shed. The chamber music auditorium will be situated in the grove between the main house and Hawthorne st., about 100 feet from the site of "The Little Red House"

This Clipping From SAN DIEGO, CAL.
UNION

APR 6 1941

Berkshire Center Enlarges Program

The Berkshire Music center at Tanglewood, between Stockbridge and Lenox, Mass., which was established last summer by the Boston Symphony orchestra with Serge Koussevitzky as its director, will be larger this summer, according to catalog announcement.

There will be classes in conducting, composition, operatic interpretation and in symphonic performance. The principal change will be in the largest department of the school, which is named the Department of Music and Culture, and which included the Festival chorus.

A unique feature of this department will be under Paul Hindemith, who, with assistants, will conduct a survey of choral and instrumental music in study and performance. The music will be sung and played by various groups.

The Festival chorus will be prepared by G. Wallace Woodworth and Hugh Ross in Beethoven's "Missa Solemnis," which is to be performed at the Berkshire Symphonic festival of 1941 under the direction of Koussevitzky.

Gregor Piatigorsky, Russian cello virtuoso, is announced as a new member of the faculty in charge of the chamber music department.

This Clipping From
NEW HAVEN, CONN.
REGISTER
APR 6 - 1941

Faculty Is Expanded At Berkshire Center

Summer Music School Prepares for An Important Season With Enlarged Curriculum and Festival Program

By H. EARLE JOHNSON

The Berkshire Music Center is prepared to carry on the excellent work done last season and to add to its glories with a small, but well chosen, series of extensions. Thus opera will have a larger part in the life of the summer's study, and chamber music will form a new department under the direction of Gregor Piatigorsky. Dr. Koussevitsky remains head over all, no less enthusiastic then heretofore in his belief that the Boston Symphony Orchestra is nucleus of an influential musical community. The musicians elected to be in residence comprise a group of remarkable talents, and this year include two of the more recent additions to the Yale School of Music faculty, Paul Hindemith, and Leo Schrade.

Every amateur is welcomed at the Berkshire Music Center, for the work is so graded that the music-lover in search of ideal surroundings to make holiday in an intellectually profitable way may find unusual opportunities for combining pleasure with sound musical instruction. He may, furthermore, take active part in the more brilliant events of the Festival by singing in the chorus, playing in the Academy orchestra, or joining the smaller singing or dancing groups, and enjoying the many lectures. The nucleus, however, comprises some of the best American talents, and professional musicians from many music schools, all of them anxious to study with specialists in the several departments of their art. Thus the opera will be in charge of Herbert Graf, of The Metropolitan, assisted by Boris Goldovsky of Cleveland, and Richard Rychtarik of New York; courses in diction and physical training will be conducted by Roland Partridge of Dartmouth and Eric Hawkins, a well-known dancer.

G. Wallace Woodworth of Harvard, and Hugh Ross of the Schola Cantorum are in charge of the chorus which is pledged to sing Beethoven's "Missa Solemnis" at the Festival. The orchestra conducting course is under the direction of Dr. Koussevitsky and Stanley Chapple, while Richard Burgin and the former faculty conduct the student players in daily rehearsals. So successful was the class in composition headed by Mr. Hindemith and Aaron Copland that it will be continued, yet augmented by Hugh Ross and Leo Schrade who give special advice on the writing of choral music. For lectures, Olin Downes will be principal instructor, but special lectures are announced by Howard Hanson, Archibald T. Davison, Carlegon Sprague Smith, and others. Gaston Dufresne teaches Solfeggio, and counrty dancing will be taught to those interested.

The Berkshire Center is not merely a school, in the narrower implications of the term, but a musical community where musicians of high and low degree may work together in delightful fellowship. The presence of 30 regular members of the Boston Symphony to assist in teaching and ensemble groups guarantees a high standard throughout the season which begins on July 7 and extends to August 17; the last three weeks are Festival periods when the huge crowds from places far distant will throng the hills for a repetition of the thrilling concerts given on Thursday and Saturday evenings, and Sunday afternoons. Catalogues giving further information on the entire period are now available by application to Margaret Grant, executive secretary, Symphony Hall, Boston.

A Golden Treasury

The useful volumes of the Longmans Miniature Arrow Score Library are being increased to the point where they become all-inclusive for the average listener. The latest, a partner of the earlier volume, is "Romantic and Modern Violin Concertos" which just about takes care of all the works known to the active repertory. Current events have made these the more valuable for the miniature scores are becoming scarce, and the desirability or likelihood of securing them from abroad is lessened as the war goes on. Furthermore the price of these volumes is from one-half to one-third the minimum cost of separate scores, and the amateur is deprived of the arrow-system which these handsome volumes feature.

Albert E. Weir had no great job of selection here; the repertory of concertos for violin is so limited that a complete piece of work is easily justifiable. Two Concertos by Brahms—one of them the double, in A minor—and one each by Bruch, Dvorak, Glazounoff, Lalo (the Symphonie Espagnole), Saint-Saens, Tchaikowsky, Vieuxtemps, and Wieniawski make the list virtually tight, except for the Sibelius which, presumably, is not available.

Concertos have a way of travelling singly. The greatest composers have written but one—witness Beethoven, Mendelssohn, Schumann, Tchaikowsky, Brahms, Grieg, and Sibelius—while those lesser virtuosi who reeled them off in numbers have been survived by a single example. There are few exceptions to this rule, insofar as the violin is concerned. Incidentally, one may look with hope for the future, since Prokofieff, Stravinsky, Hindemith, Piston and a half-dozen other twentieth century composers have shown a renewed interest in this form of writing. While it is true that many new concertos deserve but a few performances, it is also true that there are few first-rate violinists with sufficient missionary zeal to persistently stand sponsor for new works in the manner shown them by Auer and Joachim.

The new volume under discussion has a brief series of program notes and a list of available recordings; the latter list shows that the phonograph companies are rather behind the times, but here are the convenient scores ready for concert, radio, or phonograph listening.

COMMENTS

Benny Goodman has commissioned Paul Hindemith to write a clarinet concerto for him; he also wants one from Serge Prokofieff, but must deal with the Soviet government in order to claim the services of that composer.

The Metropolitan Museum of Art is revising its program of integrating music and the arts. It is currently presenting Dr. Emanuel Winternitz in a course of lectures on "Images and Imagination" on Saturday mornings, supplemented by an exhibition of specially chosen works of art.

The annual May Festival is to be given at Ann Arbor, Mich., from May 7 to 10. The Philadelphia Orchestra will be on hand to aid the Festival chorus; soloists include Heifetz, Iturbi, Piatigorsky, Novotna, Sten, Maynor, Tibbett, Nordon, Kullmann and Mack Harrell.

American music will be stressed at the 23d Biennial Convention of the National Federation of Music Clubs in Los Angeles from June 18-25. Latin-American countries will be represented by Elsie Houston Brazilian soprano. David Smith, winner of the Edgar Stillman-Kelly Scholarship will give a piano recital. Rosalyn Tureck, piano, and Eudice Shapiro, violin, both former award winners, will be heard. Beryl Rubinstein and Arthur Loesser, duo-pianists, and Rose Dirman, soprano, will be heard.

Two buses loaded with school children from Waterbury journeyed to New York for a special matinee of "Carmen" at the Metropolitan a fortnight ago. The jaunt was the result of long months of anticipation and saving of funds, and the performance under the auspices of the Guild which arranges for these events each year. The audience was entirely of children from public schools within traveling distance of New York; Gladys Swarthout sang the title role.

If you have suggestions for Walt Disney, compare them with favorite selections arrived at in one poll. "Rhapsody in Blue," "Bolero," "Tales of the Vienna Woods," "Perpetuum Mobile" and "Tristan and Isolde." That would be a day! Snow White and Dopey as the Irish princess and her lover, with Donald Duck as Brangaene!

This Clipping From
FLINT, MICH.
JOURNAL
APR 13 1941

Berkshire Music Center Planning Second Season

The Berkshire Music center at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., will open for its second season of six weeks on July 1. It will include the three weeks of the eighth annual Berkshire Symphonic festival.

The music center was established last summer by Serge Koussevitzky, with the Boston Symphony orchestra. For more advanced students, there will be classes in orchestral conducting, held by Dr. Koussevitzky and Stanley Chapple, and in choral conducting by Hugh Ross and G. Wallace Woodworth. There will be a department of music and culture for students of less specific qualifications and for amateurs "who wish to increase their acquaintance with music and its interpretation."

This Clipping From PAINSVILLE, O.
TELEGRAPH
JUN 13 1941

This Clipping From MILWAUKEE, WIS.
JOURNAL
APR 6 - 1941

Berkshire Music Center Will Open Sessions on July 7

THE Berkshire Music Center at Lenox, Mass., established last summer by the Boston symphony orchestra with Serge Koussevitzky as director, will open for its second session July 7. This is one of America's most ambitious musical enterprises. This will be six weeks long, closing Sunday, Aug. 17, and including the three weeks of the eighth annual Berkshire symphonic festival. The largest department, known as the academy last year, and now titled the department of music and culture, is for students of less specific qualifications than those expected for the more advanced divisions, and for amateurs "who wish to increase their acquaintance with music and its interpretation."

This includes a festival chorus, which will prepare under the direction of G. Wallace Woodworth and Hugh Ross for the festival performance of Beethoven's "Missa Solemnis"; choral and instrumental groups, which will survey the development of music, by study and performance, from Gregorian chant to works of today under the general direction of Paul Hindemith, and a series of weekly lectures by Olin Downes, music critic of the New York Times. In the survey course, which includes weekly concerts, Mr. Hindemith will be assisted by Putnam Aldrich, Malcolm Holmes, Leo Schrade, Ross and Woodworth and members of the Boston symphony.

For more advanced students, classes in orchestral conducting will be held by Dr. Koussevitzky, assisted by Stanley Chapple, and in choral conducting by Woodworth and Ross. The center's orchestra will study a repertoire chosen from 37 works of various kinds and periods for full orchestra and for chamber orchestra under Dr. Koussevitzky, assisted by Richard Burgin, Stanley Chapple and Boston symphony musicians. Classes in composition will be held by Aaron Copland and Mr. Hindemith. Gregor Piatigorsky and faculty members of the Boston symphony will offer special training in chamber music ensemble playing.

The opera department is headed by Herbert Graf, Metropolitan Opera stage director, with Boris Goldevsky and Richard Rychtarik as his assistants. This provides training in operatic acting, individual and ensemble musical study, physical training, diction and stage setting, costuming and make-up.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD-TRIBUNE
APR 18 1940

New Theater in Berkshire

Music Festival Will Have New Setting at Stockbridge, Mass.

BERKSHIRE HILLS, Mass., April 17.—Mr. Gordon Allen, Boston architect, has been commissioned by the Boston Symphony Orchestra to design an outdoor theater for the Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood, Stockbridge, to seat 800 persons. He is being assisted by Dr. Gray, technician of the Metropolitan Opera, New York, and Professor Fay, acoustics expert of Massachusetts Institute of Technology.

Mrs. Serge Koussevitzky, wife of the conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestrwa, is at Village Inn, Lenox. Also there are Mr. and Mrs. W. Roscoe Bonsal jr., of Camden, S. C.; Mr. and Mrs. Carl Weyerhaeuser, of Greenwich, Conn., and Mrs. Charles Weyerhaeuser, of St. Paul.

This Clipping From
CAMDEN, N. J.
COURIER
APR 18 1941

THIS CLIPPING FROM SCRANTON, PA.
SCRANTONIAN
APR 6 - 1941

This Clipping From
ST. PAUL, MINN.
PIONEER-PRESS
APR 13 1941

This Clipping From MIAMI, FLA.
NEWS
APR 6 - 1941

This Clipping From
CAMDEN, N. J.
POST
APR 7 - 1941

This Clipping From
ST. JOSEPH, MO.
NEWS-PRESS
APR 6 1941

This Clipping From
UTICA, N.Y.
OBSERVER DISPATCH
APR 13 1941

This Clipping From
ROCHESTER, N.Y.
TIMES UNION
APR 2 - 1941

This Clipping From
GRAND RAPIDS, MICH.
PRESS
APR 9 - 1941

THIS CLIPPING FROM ANADARKO, OKLA.
NEWS
APR 6 1941

Music Classes At Tanglewood To Be Enlarged

LENOX, Mass. (U.P) — The Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, a school established last summer by the Boston Symphony Orchestra with Serge Koussevitzky as director, will be enlarged this year.

The school will have classes in conducting, composition, operatic interpretation and in symphonic performance. The largest department of Music and Culture, is designed for "students with less specific qualifications" and for "amateurs who wish to increase their acquaintance with music and its interpretation."

The enrollment has been increased to 350 for the second term and to accommodate these, new buildings are planned. The course runs for six weeks, from July 7 to Aug. 17.

Last year the full enrollment totalled 312 students selected from 29 states and Canada.

THIS CLIPPING FROM MEXIA, TEXAS
NEWS
APR 14 1941

This Clipping From
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
JOURNAL
APR 20 1941

This Clipping From
WALLA WALLA, WASH.
UNION-BULLETIN
MAY 4 1941

THIS CLIPPING FROM EDINBURG, IND.
COURIER
APR 1 - 1941

THIS CLIPPING FROM
MONNESSEN, PA.
INDEPENDENT
APR 4 - 1941

THIS CLIPPING FROM LANCASTER, O.
EAGLE
APR 3 - 1941

This Clipping From
RALEIGH, N. C.
NEWS-OBSERVER
APR 13 1941

This Clipping From
LYNCHBURG, VA.
NEWS
APR 1 - 1941

This Clipping From LOUISVILLE, KY.
COURIER-JOURNAL
APR 2 - 1941

This Clipping From
ST. CLOUD, MINN.
TIMES
MAR 29 1941

This Clipping From ROANOKE, VA.
TIMES
APR 13 1941

THIS CLIPPING FROM PONTIAC, ILL.
LEADER
MAR 28 1941

This Clipping From
JACKSON, MICH.
CITIZEN-PATRIOT
APR 2 - 1941

This Clipping From
OLEAN, N. Y.
TIMES-HERALD
APR 3 - 1941

183

This Clipping From
HOLYOKE, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT TELEGRAM

APR 11 1941

Announce Tentative Programs For Berkshire Symphonic Festival

Contemporary composers are well represented on the tentative programs announced for the eighth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival to be held at Tanglewood this August. Among the works chosen by Dr. Serge Koussevitsky for presentation this summer will be Shostakovitch's Symphony No. 5, Dr. Howard Hanson's Symphony No. 2 "Romantic," and Chorus No. 10 by the Brazilian composer Villa Lobos.

The concert programs, which are scheduled for July 31 to August 17, will include the following works:

SERIES "A"—Haydn, Symphony in G major, No. 88; Beethoven, Symphony No. 3, "Eroica"; Schubert, Symphony in B minor, "Unfinished"; Mendelssohn, "Italian" Symphony; Brahms, Symphony No. 4, in E minor; Shostakovitch, Symphony No. 5; Beethoven, Overture to "Leonore" No. 3; Debussy, Three Nocturnes ("Clouds"-"Festivals" "Sirens"); Villa Lobos, Choros No. 10; Copland, Quiet City; Hindemith, Concerto for Violoncello.

SERIES "B"—Mozart, Requiem, Symphony in C major; Symphony in A major; (in commemoration of the 150th anniversary of Mozart's death); Beethoven, Symphony No. 5 in C minor; Berlioz, "Fantastic" Symphony; Hanson, Symphony No. 2, "Romantic"; Brahms, piano concerto in B flat major, No. 2; Debussy, "La Mer."

SERIES "C"—Beethoven, "Miss Solemnis"; Tchaikovsky, Symphony No. 5; Sibelius, Symphony No. 6; Vaughan Williams, "A London Symphony"; Wagner, relude and Love-Death, "Tristan and Isolde"; Prelude to "Die Meistersinger von Nurnberg"; Strauss, "Death and Transfiguration"; Barber, violon concerto; Piston, "The Incredible Flutist."

This Clipping From
N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT

APR 12 1941

Nine Living Composers On Program For Festival

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky Announces Works to be Performed at Tanglewood by Boston Symphony Orchestra at Three Series of Concerts Opening July 31—Second Week to be Devoted to Mozart's Works in Commemoration of 150th Anniversary of His Death—Advance Registrations Are Heavy —Music Center Plans Advanced.

Nine contemporary composers will be represented in the programs to be offered by the Boston Symphony orchestra during the three concert series of the eighth annual Berkshire Symphonic festival at Tanglewood July 31 to Aug. 17.

Included are works of Piston, Hindemith, Copland and Hanson, all of whom are members of the faculty or lecturers at the Berkshire Music center; Sibelius, Vaughan Williams, Barber, Shostakovitch and Villa Lobos, eminent Brazilian composer.

Mozart Anniversary

During the second week of the festival three Mozart works will be presented in commemoration of the 150th anniversary of the composer's death.

Troubled conditions abroad and the defense program in this country have not had an adverse effect on advance reservations for this year's concerts, the festival organization reports. Already a dozen more boxes have been sold than were sold at this time last year, and all subscriptions are running about a month ahead of last year.

Those coming from a distance to attend the festival have been advised to arrange with the Berkshire Hills Conference in Pittsfield for reservations, as already one Southern Berkshire hotel reports it is booked to capacity.

The Music center, which was successfully initiated last year, will be operated again under the direction of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston orchestra, starting the first week in July and ending with the festival concerts.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
SUN

APR 12 1941

Berkshire Festival Programs

The programs for the eighth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival, to be given at "Tanglewood" by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky, were announced today. There will be nine concerts, divided into three series of three each.

The festival will open on Thursday evening, July 31.

Works to be included on the programs of that concert, and those of August 2 and August 3, comprising the first series, are:

Haydn	Symphony in G major, No. 88
Beethoven	Symphony No. 3 ("Eroica")
Schubert,	Symphony in B minor ("Unfinished")
Mendelssohn	"Italian" Symphony
Brahms	Symphony No. 4, in E minor
Shostakovitch	Symphony No. 5
Beethoven	Overture to "Leonore" No. 3
Debussy	Three Nocturnes
Villa Lobos	Choros No. 10
Copland	Quiet City
Hindemith	Concerto for Violoncello

Those to be heard during the second series of concerts, on August 7, 9 and 10, are:

Mozart	Requiem
Mozart	Symphony in C major
Mozart	Symphony in A major
(In commemoration of the 150th anniversary of Mozart's death.)
Beethoven	Symphony No. 5 in C minor
Berlioz	"Fantastic" Symphony
Hanson	Symphony No. 2 ("Romantic")
Brahms,	Piano Concerto in B flat major, No. 2
Debussy	"La Mer"

Works announced for the final series, on August 14, 16 and 17, are:

Beethoven	"Missa Solemnis"
Tchaikovsky	Symphony No. 5
Sibelius	Symphony No. 6
Vaughan Williams	"A London Symphony"
Wagner,	Prelude and Love-Death "Tristan und Isolde."
Wagner	Prelude to "Die Meistersinger"
Strauss	"Death and Transfiguration"
Barber	Violin Concerto
Piston	"The Incredible Flutist"

This Clipping From
LOWELL, MASS.
LEADER

APR 11 1941

Program for Festival Is Announced

Classic and Modern Works to Be Heard at Tanglewood

Although the Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Tanglewood does not open until July 31, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky has already selected and announced the main features of the concerts which will continue through Aug. 17. As already announced, there will be three weekly series of concerts. The principal musical works to be presented in each series have been chosen and the list shows a blending of the classic and the modern.

For example, among contemporary composers represented will be Sibelius, Vaughan Williams, Barber, Piston, Hindemith, Shostakovitch, Vila Lobos, Copland and Hanson.

The much discussed Fifth Symphony of Shostakovitch will be played in the first series, as will be the Chorus No. 10 by the eminent Brazilian composer Villa Lobos.

But in the second week the classics will have their day and three Mozart works will be presented in commemoration of the 150th anniversary of the composer's death.

A feature of the final week will be Dr. Howard Hanson's Second Symphony, the Romantic. And the series will include the Beethoven "Missa Solemnis" and excerpts from several of the Wagner operas.

Troubled conditions abroad and our national defense program are not decreasing the interest in this festival. There has been an encouraging response for subscriptions for the season. And these are about a month ahead of last year. One of the southern Berkshire hotels is already booked to capacity. Meanwhile about a dozen more boxes have been sold than last year at this date. Those contemplating attending the festival will be wise to make their arrangements promptly. The Berkshire Hills Conference at the Courthouse in Pittsfield may be consulted as to room accommodations.

S. R. R.

This Clipping From
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

APR 12 1941

Berkshire Festival Lists 1941 Tanglewood Programs

Boston Symphony To Include Works By Contemporaries Including Shostakovitch and Villa Lobos

Trustees of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival today announced the programs by series to be presented this summer at Tanglewood by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky, conductor.

A number of contemporary composers are listed including Shostakovitch, Villa Lobos, the Brazilian; Copland, Hindemith, Hanson, Sibelius, Vaughan Williams, Barber and Piston.

It is of interest to note that a number of these contemporaries are either members of the faculty or scheduled as lecturers at the orchestra's Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood.

The Festival opens July 31 and continues for three week ends. The Berkshire Music Center opens the first week in July and continues through the final concert of the Festival, Aug. 17.

Many Subscriptions

The trustees also announced today that returns on subscriptions have been satisfactory, despite troubles abroad and this country's defense program. Subscriptions they said were about one month ahead of last year while there have been 209 boxes sold, about a dozen more than on the corresponding date last year.

The much discussed Shostakovitch Symphony No. 5 is scheduled for the first series as is the Villa Lobos Chorus No. 10. The Berkshire Musical Association chorus, Horace Hunt, director, will join with the orchestra with some of the chorus works.

Three works by Mozart will be performed in the second series in commemoration of the 150th anniversary of the composer's death. Wagner is represented by three works for the final series.

Subscriptions may be mailed to the Festival office at Stockbridge or to the office at Steinway Hall, 113 West 57th Street, New York.

The programs follow:

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE

APR 13 1941

Thirty Works For Festival In Berkshires

Koussevitzky Announces Repertoire for Eighth Annual Summer Series

Thirty works or excerpts have been announced for the nine programs to be played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky's direction in the eighth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. The list for Series A, on Thursday and Saturday nights and Sunday afternoon, July 31, Aug. 2 and 3, is:

Haydn, Symphony in G, No. 88; Beethoven, "Eroica" Symphony; Schubert, Unfinished Symphony; Mendelssohn, "Italian" Symphony; Brahms, Symphony No. 4; Shostakovitch, Symphony No, 5; Debussy, Nuages, Fetes, Sirenes.

Music of Mozart will be featured in Series B, on Thursday and Saturday nights and Sunday afternoons, Aug. 7, 9 and 10. The programs will include:

Mozart, Requiem, Symphonies in C major and A major; Beethoven, Symphony No. 5; Berlioz, "Fantastic" Symphony; Hanson, "Romantic" Symphony; Brahms, Piano concerto No. 2; Debussy, La Mer.

Works to be heard in Series C, on Thursday and Saturday nights and Sunday afternoon, Aug. 14, 16 and 17, are:

Beethoven, Missa Solemnis; Tchaikovsky, Symphony No. 5; Sibelius, Symphony No. 6; Vaughan Williams, A London Symphony; Wagner, Prelude and Liebestod from "Tristan und Isolde," Prelude to "Die Meistersinger"; Strauss, Death and Transfiguration; Barber, Violin concerto; Piston, The Incredible Flutist.

This will be the fifth festival at Tanglewood, the fourth in the Music Shed, and the sixth with the participation of the Boston Symphony. Further information is obtainable either from the Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Stockbridge, Mass., or from its New York office at 113 West Fifty-seventh Street.

Berkshire Festival Programs

Serge Koussevitzky has announced the programs for each of the three weeks of next summer's Berkshire Symphonic Festival. The nine concerts will be given in the Music Shed at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., on Thursday evenings, Saturday evenings and Sunday afternoons between July 31 and August 17 by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky. The following are the works to be played:

First Week, July 31-Aug. 3

Haydn—Symphony in G major, No. 88.

Beethoven—Symphony No. 3, "Eroica."

Schubert—Symphony in B minor, "Unfinished."

Mendelssohn — "Italian" Symphony.

Brahms—Symphony No. 4, in E minor

Shostakovitch—Symphony No. 5.

Beethoven—"Leonore," No. 3.

Debussy — Three Nocturnes: "Clouds," "Festivals," "Sirens."

Villa Lobos—Choros, No. 10.

Copland—"Quiet City."

Hindemith—Concerto for Violoncello.

Second Week, Aug. 7-10

Mozart—Requiem, Symphony in C Major, Symphony in A major (in commemoration of the 150th anniversary of Mozart's death).

Beethoven—Symphony No. 5 in C minor.

Berlioz—"Fantastic" Symphony.

Hanson—Symphony No. 2, "Romantic."

Brahms—Piano Concerto in B flat major, No. 2

Debussy—"La Mer."

Third Week, Aug. 14-17

Beethoven—Missa Solemnis.

Tchaikovsky—Symphony No. 5.

Sibelius—Symphony No. 6.

Vaughan Williams—"A London Symphony."

Wagner—Prelude and Love-Death. "Tristan and Isolde," Prelude to "Die Meistersinger von Nuernberg."

Strauss—"Death and Transfiguration."

Barber—Violin Concerto.

Piston—"The Incredible Flutist."

This Clipping From
HOLYOKE, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT TELEGRAM

APR 11 1941

Announce Tentative Programs For Berkshire Symphonic Festival

Contemporary composers are well represented on the tentative programs announced for the eighth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival to be held at Tanglewood this August. Among the works chosen by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky for presentation this [illegible] will be Shostakovitch's Symphony No. 5, Dr. Howard Hanson's Symphony No. 2 "Romantic," and Chorus No. 10 by the Brazilian composer Villa Lobos.

The concert programs, which are scheduled for July 31 to August 17, will include the following works:

SERIES "A"—Haydn, Symphony in G major, No. 88; Beethoven, Symphony No. 3, "Eroica"; Schubert, Symphony in B minor, "Unfinished"; Mendelssohn, "Italian" Symphony; Brahms, Symphony No. 4, in E minor; Shostakovitch, Symphony No. 5; Beethoven, Overture to "Leonore" No. 3; Debussy, Three Nocturnes ("Clouds"-"Festivals" "Sirens"); Villa Lobos, Choros No. 10; Copland, Quiet City; Hindemith, Concerto for Violoncello.

SERIES "B"—Mozart, Requiem, Symphony in C major; Symphony in A major; (in commemoration of the 150th anniversary of Mozart's death); Beethoven, Symphony No. 5 in C minor; Berlioz, "Fantastic" Symphony; Hanson, Symphony No. 2, "Romantic"; Brahms, piano concerto in B flat major, No. 2; Debussy, "La Mer."

SERIES "C"—Beethoven, "Miss Solemnis"; Tchaikovsky, Symphony No. 5; Sibelius, Symphony No. 6; Vaughan Williams, "A London Symphony"; Wagner, relude and Love-Death, "Tristan and Isolde"; Prelude to "Die Meistersinger von Nurnberg"; Strauss, "Death and Transfiguration"; Barber, violon concerto; Piston, "The Incredible Flutist."

This Clipping From
LOWELL, MASS.
LEADER

APR 11 1941

Program for Festival Is Announced

Classic and Modern Works to Be Heard at Tanglewood

Although the Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Tanglewood does not open until July 31, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky has already selected and announced the main features of the concerts which will continue through Aug. 17. As already announced, there will be three weekly series of concerts. The principal musical works to be presented in each series have been chosen and the list shows a blending of the classic and the modern.

For example, among contemporary composers represented will be Sibelius, Vaughan Williams, Barber, Piston, Hindemith, Shostakovitch, Vila Lobos, Copland and Hanson.

The much discussed Fifth Symphony of Shostakovitch will be played in the first series, as will be the Chorus No. 10 by the eminent Brazilian composer Villa Lobos.

But in the second week the classics will have their day and three Mozart works will be presented in commemoration of the 150th anniversary of the composer's death.

A feature of the final week will be Dr. Howard Hanson's Second Symphony, the Romantic. And the series will include the Beethoven "Missa Solemnis" and excerpts from several of the Wagner operas.

Troubled conditions abroad and our national defense program are not decreasing the interest in this festival. There has been an encouraging response for subscriptions for the season. And these are about a month ahead of last year. One of the southern Berkshire hotels is already booked to capacity. Meanwhile about a dozen more boxes have been sold than last year at this date. Those contemplating attending the festival will be wise to make their arrangements promptly. The Berkshire Hills Conference at the Courthouse in Pittsfield may be consulted as to room accommodations.

S. R. [illegible]

Berkshire Festival Programs

Serge Koussevitzky has announced the programs for each of the three weeks of next summer's Berkshire Symphonic Festival. The nine concerts will be given in the Music Shed at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., on Thursday evenings, Saturday evenings and Sunday afternoons between July 31 and August 17 by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky. The following are the works to be played:

First Week, July 31-Aug. 3

Haydn—Symphony in G major, No. 88.

Beethoven—Symphony No. 3, "Eroica."

Schubert—Symphony in B minor, "Unfinished."

Mendelssohn — "Italian" Symphony.

Brahms—Symphony No. 4, in E minor.

Shostakovitch—Symphony No. 5.

Beethoven—"Leonore," No. 3.

Debussy — Three Nocturnes: "Clouds," "Festivals," "Sirens."

Villa Lobos—Choros, No. 10.

Copland—"Quiet City."

Hindemith—Concerto for Violoncello.

Second Week, Aug. 7-10

Mozart—Requiem, Symphony in C Major, Symphony in A major (in commemoration of the 150th anniversary of Mozart's death).

Beethoven—Symphony No. 5 in C minor.

Berlioz—"Fantastic" Symphony.

Hanson—Symphony No. 2, "Romantic."

Brahms—Piano Concerto in B flat major, No. 2

Debussy—"La Mer."

Third Week, Aug. 14-17

Beethoven—Missa Solemnis.

Tchaikovsky—Symphony No. 5.

Sibelius—Symphony No. 6.

Vaughan Williams—"A London Symphony."

Wagner—Prelude and Love-Death. "Tristan and Isolde," Prelude to "Die Meistersinger von Nuernberg."

Strauss—"Death and Transfiguration."

Barber—Violin Concerto.

Piston—"The Incredible Flutist."

This Clipping From
N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT

APR 12 1941

Nine Living Composers On Program For Festival

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky Announces Works to be Performed at Tanglewood by Boston Symphony Orchestra at Three Series of Concerts Opening July 31—Second Week to be Devoted to Mozart's Works in Commemoration of 150th Anniversary of His Death—Advance Registrations Are Heavy—Music Center Plans Advanced.

Nine contemporary composers will be represented in the programs to be offered by the Boston Symphony orchestra during the three concert series of the eighth annual Berkshire Symphonic festival at Tanglewood July 31 to Aug. 17.

Included are works of Piston, Hindemith, Copland and Hanson, all of whom are members of the faculty or lecturers at the Berkshire Music center; Sibelius, Vaughan Williams, Barber, Shostakovitch and Villa Lobos, eminent Brazilian composer.

Mozart Anniversary

During the second week of the festival three Mozart works will be presented in commemoration of the 150th anniversary of the composer's death.

Troubled conditions abroad and the defense program in this country have not had an adverse effect on advance reservations for this year's concerts, the festival organization reports. Already a dozen more boxes have been sold than were sold at this time last year, and all subscriptions are running about a month ahead of last year.

Those coming from a distance to attend the festival have been advised to arrange with the Berkshire Hills Conference in Pittsfield for reservations, as already one Southern Berkshire hotel reports it is booked to capacity.

The Music center, which was successfully initiated last year, will be operated again under the direction of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston orchestra, starting the first week in July and ending with the festival concerts.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
SUN

APR 12 1941

Berkshire Festival Programs

The programs for the eighth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival, to be given at "Tanglewood" by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky, were announced today. There will be nine concerts, divided into three series of three each.

The festival will open on Thursday evening, July 31.

Works to be included on the programs of that concert, and those of August 2 and August 3, comprising the first series, are:

Haydn	Symphony in G major, No. 88
Beethoven	Symphony No. 3 ("Eroica")
Schubert,	Symphony in B minor ("Unfinished")
Mendelssohn	"Italian" Symphony
Brahms	Symphony No. 4, in E minor
Shostakovitch	Symphony No. 5
Beethoven	Overture to "Leonore" No. 3
Debussy	Three Nocturnes
Villa Lobos	Choros No. 10
Copland	Quiet City
Hindemith	Concerto for Violoncello

Those to be heard during the second series of concerts, on August 7, 9 and 10, are:

Mozart	Requiem
Mozart	Symphony in C major
Mozart	Symphony in A major
	(In commemoration of the 150th anniversary of Mozart's death.)
Beethoven	Symphony No. 5 in C minor
Berlioz	"Fantastic" Symphony
Hanson	Symphony No. 2 ("Romantic")
Brahms,	Piano Concerto in B flat major, No. 2
Debussy	"La Mer"

Works announced for the final series, on August 14, 16 and 17, are:

Beethoven	"Missa Solemnis"
Tchaikovsky	Symphony No. 5
Sibelius	Symphony No. 6
Vaughan Williams	"A London Symphony"
Wagner,	Prelude and Love-Death "Tristan und Isolde."
Wagner	Prelude to "Die Meistersinger"
Strauss	"Death and Transfiguration"
Barber	Violin Concerto
Piston	"The Incredible Flutist"

This Clipping From
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

APR 12 1941

Berkshire Festival Lists 1941 Tanglewood Programs

Boston Symphony To Include Works By Contemporaries Including Shostakovitch and Villa Lobos

Trustees of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival today announced the programs by series to be presented this summer at Tanglewood by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky, conductor.

A number of contemporary composers are listed including Shostakovitch, Villa Lobos, the Brazilian; Copland, Hindemith, Hanson, Sibelius, Vaughan Williams, Barber and Piston.

It is of interest to note that a number of these contemporaries are either members of the faculty or scheduled as lecturers at the orchestra's Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood.

The Festival opens July 31 and continues for three week ends. The Berkshire Music Center opens the first week in July and continues through the final concert of the Festival, Aug. 17.

Many Subscriptions

The trustees also announced today that returns on subscriptions have been satisfactory, despite troubles abroad and this country's defense program. Subscriptions they said were about one month ahead of last year while there have been 209 boxes sold, about a dozen more than on the corresponding date last year.

The much discussed Shostakovitch Symphony No. 5 is scheduled for the first series as is the Villa Lobos Chorus No. 10. The Berkshire Musical Association chorus, Horace Hunt, director, will join with the orchestra with some of the chorus works.

Three works by Mozart will be performed in the second series in commemoration of the 150th anniversary of the composer's death. Wagner is represented by three works for the final series.

Subscriptions may be mailed to the Festival office at Stockbridge or to the office at Steinway Hall, 113 West 57th Street, New York.

The programs follow:

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE

APR 13 1941

Thirty Works For Festival In Berkshires

Koussevitzky Announces Repertoire for Eighth Annual Summer Series

Thirty works or excerpts have been announced for the nine programs to be played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under [illegible] Koussevitzky's direction in the eighth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. The list for Series A, on Thursday and Saturday nights and Sunday afternoon, July 31, Aug. 2 and 3, is:

Haydn, Symphony in G, No. 88; Beethoven, "Eroica" Symphony; Schubert, Unfinished Symphony; Mendelssohn, "Italian" Symphony; Brahms, Symphony No. 4; Shostakovitch, Symphony No. 5; Debussy, Nuages, Fetes, Sirenes.

Music of Mozart will be featured in Series B, on Thursday and Saturday nights and Sunday afternoons, Aug. 7, 9 and 10. The programs will include:

Mozart, Requiem, Symphonies in C major and A major; Beethoven, Symphony No. 5; Berlioz, "Fantastic" Symphony; Hanson, "Romantic" Symphony; Brahms, Piano concerto No. 2; Debussy, La Mer.

Works to be heard in Series C, on Thursday and Saturday nights and Sunday afternoon, Aug. 14, 16 and 17, are:

Beethoven, Missa Solemnis; Tchaikovsky, Symphony No. 5; Sibelius, Symphony No. 6; Vaughan Williams, A London Symphony; Wagner, Prelude and Liebestod from "Tristan und Isolde," Prelude to "Die Meistersinger"; Strauss, Death and Transfiguration; Barber, Violin concerto; Piston, The Incredible Flutist.

This will be the fifth festival at Tanglewood, the fourth in the Music Shed, and the sixth with the participation of the Boston Symphony. Further information is obtainable either from the Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Stockbridge, Mass., or from its New York office at [illegible] West Fifty-seventh Street.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES
APR 6 - 1941

"IN 1900 the American compositions that were appearing—even the best of them—might have been written by some European; the impact of strong foreign cultures on a young and tender one inevitably produced recognizable influences. But again a change came. The lineaments of our own national profile began to appear. By now—when the festival comes to us—it is clearly recognizable. In fact, during the last few years the influences have been reciprocal ones, between our country and other lands. Any one who has gone with any regularity to the American composers' concerts in Rochester, any one who heard Dr. Koussevitzky's Festival of American Music in New York and Boston—given last year under the sponsorship of the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers—must have felt that, now at last, American music has a profile, a technical proficiency, a poetry and power of its own. It dares to be simple, to be itself. It is a fine thing that the ISCM festival comes to us at this time.

"It is fine for another reason: many of the European musicians who would naturally foregather at such a festival have already made the journey to America, and many of them have made America their home. The festival means an opportunity for us to know them and to welcome them to our shores, and for them to become acquainted with what our country stands for in music. For in addition to our composers and performers, we are organized for music in a way that offers, I believe, no parallel in scope or magnitude. Our visitors and new fellow-citizens will discover this.

This Clipping From
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE
APR 18 1941

Tenor Shortage

One rather imagines that the musical problem which faces the Tanglewood-bound Berkshire chorus in the diminishing supply of male voices confronts every local choral organization. In fact, report has it that the St. Cecilia Chorus which regularly sings with the Boston ~~Orchestra~~ in Symphony Hall ~~lately~~ appeared with only about 80 voices. Generally they can muster a full hundred competent singers, which probably means that the numerical deficiencies are appearing in the male sections.

Director Hunt, however, appears fairly well buttressed in the bass section which is fortunate. This is not because national defense is taking an inordinate number of tenors but because there are more basses to start with. In ordinary times, it is difficult enough for any chorus to have the full complement of tenors.

Mr. Hunt, however, has considerable incentive to offer men candidates for the chorus. It is true the work of the chorus will have to be even more exacting in its approach to the great music which it will sing with the Boston Orchestra under its eminent conductor than necessity might demand before a less musically sophisticated audience. But the members will have the satisfaction of knowing that they are being listened to seriously and critically by a cross-section of musical America.

Such is a privilege not frequently thrust upon a non-metropolitan choral organization. That the group will rise to the occasion if the current tenor question can be solved cannot be doubted.

This Clipping From WILMINGTON, DEL.
NEWS
APR 21 1941

Works Slated For Berkshire

THE Boston Symphony Orchestra with Serge Koussevitzky conducting will play 30 works or excerpts on the nine programs it will give at the eighth annual Berkshire Smyphonic Festival this summer at Tanglewood, Mass.

The list for Series A, on Thursday and Saturday nights and Sunday afternoon, July 31, Aug. 2 and 3, is:

Haydn, Symphony in G, No. 88; Beethoven, "Eroica" Symphony; Schubert, Unfinished Symphony; Mendelssohn, "Italian" Symphony; Brahms, Symphony No. 4; Shostakovitch, Symphony No. 5; Debussy, Nuages, Fetes, Sirenes.

Music of Mozart will be featured in Series B, on Thursday and Saturday nights and Sunday afternoons, Aug. 7, 9 and 10. The programs will include:

Mozart, Requiem, Symphonies in C major and A major; Beethoven, Symphony No. 5; Berlioz, "Fantastic" Symphony; Hanson, "Romantic" Symphony; Brahams, Piano concerto No. 2; Debussy, Le Mer.

Works to be heard in Series C, on Thursday and Saturday nights and Sunday afternoon, Aug. 14, 16 and 17, are:

Beethoven, Miss Solemnis; Tchaikowsky, Symphony No. 5; Sibelius, Symphony No. 6; Vaughan Williams, A London Symphony, Wagner, Prelude and Liebestod from "Tristan and Isolde," Prelude to "Die Meistersinger"; Strauss, Dearth and Transfiguration; Barber, Violin concerto; Piston, The Incredible Flutist.

This will be the fifth festival at Tanglewood, the fourth in the Music Shed, and the sixth with the participation of the Boston Symphony.

This Clipping From
DAYTON, OHIO
SUNDAY JOURNAL HERALD
APR 20 1941

Festival Includes Nine Concerts

The Berkshire Symphonic festival of 1941, under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky, will consist of nine concerts at Tanglewood, in the Berkshires, Thursday evenings, Saturday evenings and Sunday evenings, July 31-August 17, which are within the last three weeks of the school term.

Gregor Piatigorsky, the Russian 'cello virtuoso, is announced as a new member of the faculty, to have charge of the chamber music department. Hugh Ross, director of the Schola Cantorum of New York, has been added to the faculty, and likewise Leo Schrade, the musicologist who is now connected with the department of music at Yale.

The department of orchestral conducting will be in charge of Serge Koussevitzky and Stanley Chappie, as last year. The department of choral conducting will be under G. Wallace Woodworth and Hugh Ross. The school orchestra will be in charge of Serge Koussevitzky, assisted by Richard Burgin, Stanley Chapple and 30 members of the Boston Symphony orchestra.

The classes in composition will be in charge of Aaron Copland and of Paul Hindemith. The opera department will be in charge of Herbert Graf, stage director of the Metropolitan Opera company, assisted by Boris Goldovsky and Richard Rychtarik. Classes in solfege and country dancing are announced.

Olin Downes will give general lectures in addition to the part he will take in the survey conducted by Mr. Hindemith. Lecturers will include Howard Hanson, Archibald T. Davison, Carleton Sprague Smith and others to be announced.

This Clipping From SACRAMENTO, CALIF.
UNION
MAY 4 1941

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
PM
APR 20 1941

News From Tanglewood

Contemporary composers and Mozart will share the limelight at the eighth annual Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood July 31 to Aug. 17. The Boston Symphony under Serge Koussevitzky will play works by Barber, Copland, Hanson, Hindemith, Piston, Shostakovitch, Sibelius, Villa Lobos and Vaughan Williams.

In commemoration of the 150th anniversary of Mozart's death the second week's programs include his Requiem and symphonies in C major and A major.

The season's most ambitious single offering is the Beethoven Missa Solemnis, to be offered during the third week.

THIS CLIPPING FROM CHARLESTON, ILL.
COURIER
APR 18 1941

Hawthorne's Home

Tanglewood, the estate at Stockbridge, Mass, where Nathaniel Hawthorne lived, was deeded to the Boston symphony as a permanent home several years ago. It is here that the annual Berkshire Symphonic festivals are held.

This Clipping From
CAMDEN, N. J.
COURIER
APR 22 1941

This Clipping From
LOS ANGELES, CAL.
HERALD-EXPRESS
APR 18 1941

This Clipping From
ALBANY, N.Y.
KNICKERBOCKER NEWS
APR 23 1941

This Clipping From
ELWOOD, IND.
CALL-LEADER
APR 21 1941

THIS CLIPPING FROM MINERAL WELLS, TEXAS
TEXAS INDEX
APR 18 19

THIS CLIPPING FROM HARRISBURG, ILL.
REGISTER
APR 18 1941

THIS CLIPPING FROM MONNESSEN, PA.
INDEPENDENT
APR 23 1941

THIS CLIPPING FROM LEWISTOWN, ILL.
RECORD
APR 18 1941

This Clipping From
CAMDEN, N. J.
POST
APR 22 1941

This Clipping From MILWAUKEE, WIS.
POST
APR 21 1941

Hires musician to tend estate

LENOX, Mass. (U.P.) — On the theory, perhaps, that music hath charms to soothe the eglantine, Conductor Serge Koussevitzky of the Boston Symphony orchestra has hired Robert Richardson, a cornet-playing farmer, as superintendent of his Lenox estate.

N.Y. TEACHER
NEW YORK CITY
APRIL, 1941

It is however the Berkshire Music Festival which has gradually become the most important musical experience of the summer season. Here one may attend what is the only American equivalent of the late-lamented Salzburg music festival. During the first three weeks in August the matchless Boston Symphony Orchestra under Serge Koussevitzki gives a series of nine concerts at Tanglewood near Stockbridge, Mass. in a setting of mountain, field, and lake, and in an open-sided hall seating 10,000 people, where the acoustics must surely be the eighth wonder of the world. For this summer there is the promise of opera in addition to the symphonic music.

I should like to advise those of you that will be within 150 miles of Tanglewood not to miss this grand experience. Write for information and reservations now. Address the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, Inc. at 113 W. 57 St., N. Y. C. Since there is also a music school at Tanglewood, offering instruction in all branches of music from piccolo playing to orchestral conducting, those interested may receive detailed information at the same address.

This Clipping From
SAN JOSE, CALIF.
MERCURY-HERALD
APR 27 1941

* * *

The Berkshire music center at Tanglewood has recently published a bulletin of its summer courses for the six weeks' course beginning July 7. Established last summer, the school will have classes in conducting, composition, operatic interpretation and symphonic performance. By far the largest department is for amateurs who "wish to increase their acquaintance with music and its interpretation." Serge Koussevitsky, conductor of the Boston symphony orchestra, is the director of the Berkshire school.

This Clipping From
WAUKEGAN, ILL.
NEWS-SUN
MAY 29 1941

This Clipping From
BINGHAMPTON, N. Y.
PRESS
May 13, 1941

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES
MAY 14 1941

This Clipping From
ST. JOSEPH, MO.
NEWS-PRESS
APR 16 1941

This Clipping From
CLEVELAND, OHIO
PLAIN DEALER
APR 20 1941

This Clipping From
INDIANAPOLIS, IND.
STAR
APR 20 1941

This Clipping From
FOND DU LAC, WIS.
COMMONWEALTH-REPORTER
APR 18 1941

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES
APR 6 - 1941

"IN 1900 the American compositions that were appearing—even the best of them—might have been written by some European; the impact of strong foreign cultures on a young and tender one inevitably produced recognizable influences. But again a change came. The lineaments of our own national profile began to appear. By now—when the festival comes to us—it is clearly recognizable. In fact, during the last few years the influences have been reciprocal ones, between our country and other lands. Any one who has gone with any regularity to the American composers' concerts in Rochester, any one who heard Dr. Koussevitzky's Festival of American Music in New York and Boston—given last year under the sponsorship of the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers—must have felt that, now at last, American music has a profile, a technical proficiency, a poetry and power of its own. It dares to be simple, to be itself. It is a fine thing that the ISCM festival comes to us at this time.

"It is fine for another reason: many of the European musicians who would naturally foregather at such a festival have already made the journey to America, and many of them have made America their home. The festival means an opportunity for us to know them and to welcome them to our shores, and for them to become acquainted with what our country stands for in music. For in addition to our composers and performers, we are organised for music in a way that offers, I believe, no parallel in scope or magnitude. Our visitors and new fellow-citizens will discover this.

This Clipping From
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE
APR 18 1941

Tenor Shortage

One rather imagines that the musical problem which faces the Tanglewood-bound Berkshire chorus in the diminishing supply of male voices confronts every local choral organization. In fact, report has it that the St. Cecilia Chorus which regularly sings with the Boston Orchestra in Symphony Hall lately appeared with only about 80 voices. Generally they can muster a full hundred competent singers, which probably means that the numerical deficiencies are appearing in the male sections.

Director Hunt, however, appears fairly well buttressed in the bass section which is fortunate. This is not because national defense is taking an inordinate number of tenors but because there are more basses to start with. In ordinary times, it is difficult enough for any chorus to have the full complement of tenors.

Mr. Hunt, however, has considerable incentive to offer men candidates for the chorus. It is true the work of the chorus will have to be even more exacting in its approach to the great music which it will sing with the Boston Orchestra under its eminent conductor than necessity might demand before a less musically sophisticated audience. But the members will have the satisfaction of knowing that they are being listened to seriously and critically by a cross section of musical America.

Such is a privilege not frequently thrust upon a non-metropolitan choral organization. That the group will rise to the occasion if the current tenor question can be solved cannot be doubted.

This Clipping From WILMINGTON, DEL.
NEWS
APR 21 1941

Works Slated For Berkshire

THE Boston Symphony Orchestra with Serge Koussevitzky conducting will play 30 works or excerpts on the nine programs it will give at the eighth annual Berkshire Smyphonic Festival this summer at Tanglewood, Mass.

The list for Series A, on Thursday and Saturday nights and Sunday afternoon, July 31, Aug. 2 and 3, is:

Haydn, Symphony in G, No. 88; Beethoven, "Eroica" Symphony; Schubert, Unfinished Symphony; Mendelssohn, "Italian" Symphony; Brahms, Symphony No. 4; Shostakovitch, Symphony No. 5; Debussy, Nuages, Fetes, Sirenes.

Music of Mozart will be featured in Series B, on Thursday and Saturday nights and Sunday afternoons, Aug. 7, 9 and 10. The programs will include:

Mozart, Requiem, Symphonies in C major and A major; Beethoven, Symphony No. 5; Berlioz, "Fantastic" Symphony; Hanson, "Romantic" Symphony; Brahams, Piano concerto No. 2; Debussy, Le Mer.

Works to be heard in Series C, on Thursday and Saturday nights and Sunday afternoon, Aug. 14, 16 and 17, are:

Beethoven, Miss Solemnis; Tchaikowsky, Symphony No. 5! Sibelius, Symphony No. 6; Vaughan Williams, A London Symphony, Wagner, Prelude and Liebestod from "Tristan and Isolde," Prelude to "Die Meistersinger"; Strauss, Dearth and Transfiguration; Barber, Violin concerto; Piston, The Incredible Flutist.

This will be the fifth festival at Tanglewood, the fourth in the Music Shed, and the sixth with the participation of the Boston Symphony.

This Clipping From
DAYTON, OHIO
SUNDAY JOURNAL HERALD
APR 20 1941

Festival Includes Nine Concerts

The Berkshire Symphonic festival of 1941, under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky, will consist of nine concerts at Tanglewood, in the Berkshires, Thursday evenings, Saturday evenings and Sunday evenings, July 31-August 17, which are within the last three weeks of the school term.

Gregor Piatigorsky, the Russian 'cello virtuoso, is announced as a new member of the faculty, to have charge of the chamber music department. Hugh Ross, director of the Schola Cantorum of New York, has been added to the faculty, and likewise Leo Schrade, the musicologist who is now connected with the department of music at Yale.

The department of orchestral conducting will be in charge of Serge Koussevitzky and Stanley Chapple, as last year. The department of choral conducting will be under G. Wallace Woodworth and Hugh Ross. The school orchestra will be in charge of Serge Koussevitzky, assisted by Richard Burgin, Stanley Chapple and 30 members of the Boston Symphony orchestra.

The classes in composition will be in charge of Aaron Copland and of Paul Hindemith. The opera department will be in charge of Herbert Graf, stage director of the Metropolitan Opera company, assisted by Boris Goldovsky and Richard Rychtarik. Classes in solfege and country dancing are announced.

Olin Downes will give general lectures in addition to the part he will take in the survey conducted by Mr. Hindemith. Lecturers will include Howard Hanson, Archibald T. Davison, Carleton Sprague Smith and others to be announced.

This Clipping From SACRAMENTO, CALIF.
UNION
MAY 4 1941

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
PM
APR 20 1941

News From Tanglewood

Contemporary composers and Mozart will share the limelight at the eighth annual Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood July 31 to Aug. 17. The Boston Symphony under Serge Koussevitzky will play works by Barber, Copland, Hanson, Hindemith, Piston, Shostakovitch, Sibelius, Villa Lobos and Vaughan Williams.

In commemoration of the 150th anniversary of Mozart's death the second week's programs include his Requiem and symphonies in C major and A major.

The season's most ambitious single offering is the Beethoven Missa Solemnis, to be offered during the third week.

THIS CLIPPING FROM CHARLESTON, ILL.
COURIER
APR 18 1941

Hawthorne's Home

Tanglewood, the estate at Stockbridge, Mass, where Nathaniel Hawthorne lived, was deeded to the Boston symphony as a permanent home several years ago. It is here that the annual Berkshire Symphonic festivals are held.

This Clipping From
CAMDEN, N. J.
COURIER
APR 22 1941

This Clipping From
LOS ANGELES, CAL.
HERALD-EXPRESS
APR 18 1941

This Clipping From
ALBANY, N.Y.
KNICKERBOCKER NEWS
APR 23 1941

This Clipping From
ELWOOD, IND.
CALL-LEADER
APR 21 1941

THIS CLIPPING FROM MINERAL WELLS, TEXAS
TEXAS INDEX
APR 18 1941

THIS CLIPPING FROM HARRISBURG, ILL.
REGISTER
APR 18 1941

THIS CLIPPING FROM MONNESSEN, PA.
INDEPENDENT
APR 23 1941

THIS CLIPPING FROM LEWISTOWN, ILL.
RECORD
APR 18 1941

This Clipping From
CAMDEN, N. J.
POST
APR 22 1941

This Clipping From MILWAUKEE, WIS.
POST
APR 21 1941

Hires musician to tend estate

LENOX, Mass. (U.P.) — On the theory, perhaps, that music hath charms to soothe the eglantine, Conductor Serge Koussevitzky of the Boston Symphony orchestra has hired Robert Richardson, a cornet-playing farmer, as superintendent of his Lenox estate.

N.Y. TEACHER
NEW YORK CITY
APRIL, 1941

It is however the Berkshire Music Festival which has gradually become the most important musical experience of the summer season. Here one may attend what is the only American equivalent of the late-lamented Salzburg music festival. During the first three weeks in August the matchless Boston Symphony Orchestra under Serge Koussevitzki gives a series of nine concerts at Tanglewood near Stockbridge, Mass. in a setting of mountain, field, and lake, and in an open-sided hall seating 10,000 people, where the acoustics must surely be the eighth wonder of the world. For this summer there is the promise of opera in addition to the symphonic music.

I should like to advise those of you that will be within 150 miles of Tanglewood not to miss this grand experience. Write for information and reservations now. Address the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, Inc. at 113 W. 57 St., N. Y. C. Since there is also a music school at Tanglewood, offering instruction in all branches of music from piccolo playing to orchestral conducting, those interested may receive detailed information at the same address.

This Clipping From
SAN JOSE, CALIF.
MERCURY-HERALD
APR 27 1941

The Berkshire music center at Tanglewood has recently published a bulletin of its summer courses for the six weeks' course beginning July 7. Established last summer, the school will have classes in conducting, composition, operatic interpretation and symphonic performance. By far the largest department is for amateurs who "wish to increase their acquaintance with music and its interpretation." Serge Koussevitsky, conductor of the Boston symphony orchestra, is the director of the Berkshire school.

This Clipping From
WAUKEGAN, ILL.
NEWS-SUN
MAY 29 1941

This Clipping From
BINGHAMPTON, N. Y.
PRESS
May 13, 1941

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES
MAY 14 1941

This Clipping From
ST. JOSEPH, MO.
NEWS-PRESS
APR 16 1941

This Clipping From
CLEVELAND, OHIO
PLAIN DEALER
APR 20 1941

This Clipping From
INDIANAPOLIS, IND.
STAR
APR 20 1941

This Clipping From
FOND DU LAC, WIS.
COMMONWEALTH-REPORTER
APR 18 1941

HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES
APR 12 1941

Tanglewood Scene to be Re-enacted July 31-Aug. 17

Intermission time at the Stockbridge Music Festival finds the audience strolling on the grounds but never far from the music shed where the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky hold sway.

Berkshire Festival to Feature Several Contemporary Composers

Second Week to Commemorate 150th Anniversary of Mozart's Death

Works by the contemporary composers, Sibelius, Vaughan Williams, Barber, Piston, Hindemith, Shostakovitch, Villa Lobos, Copland and Hanson will be played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky conductor, at the eighth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Tanglewood, July 31 to Aug. 17.

There will be three Mozart works the second week of the Festival in commemoration of the 150th anniversary of the composer's death. The much discussed Symphony No. 5 by Shostakovitch is included in the first series of concerts. The eminent Brazilian composer, Villa Lobos, will have presented his Choros No. 10 also in the first series. Dr. Howard Hanson's Symphony No. 2. "Romantic," will be given the final week.

On Faculty

Piston, Hindemith, Copland and Hanson are either members of the faculty or lecturers at the Berkshire Music Center, which will be operated for its second year at Tanglewood by the Boston Symphony Orchestra for six weeks starting the first week in July, ending with the final Festival concert.

Despite troubled conditions abroad and this country's defense program, the Festival reports encouraging response for subscriptions for the coming season. About a dozen more boxes have been sold than last year at this date. Music lovers contemplating attendance at the Festival are urged to communicate at once with the Berkshire Hills Conference at the Courthhouse in Pittsfield for room accommodations. One Southern Berkshire Hotel is already booked to capacity.

Programs for Series

The programs by series follow:

Series A: Haydn's Symphony in G major, No. 88; Beethoven's Symphony No. 3, "Eroica"; Schubert's Symphony in B minor, "Unfinished"; Mendelssohn's "Italian" Symphony; Brahms' Symphony No. 4, in E minor; Shostakovitch's Symphony No. 5; Beethoven's Overture to "Leonore" No. 3; Debussy's Three Nocturnes, "Clouds", "Festivals", "Sirens"; Villa Lobos' Choros No. 10; Copland's "Quiet City"; Hindemith's Concerto for cello.

Series B: Mozart's "Requiem," Symphony in C major, Symphony in A major (in commemoration of the 150th anniversary of Mozart's death); Beethoven's Symphony No. 5 in C minor; Berlioz' "Fantastic" Symphony; Hanson's Symphony No. 2, "Romantic"; Brahms' Piano Concerto in B flat major, No. 2; Debussy's "La Mer".

Series C: Beethoven's "Missa Solemnis"; Tchaikovsky's Symphony No. 5; Sibelius' Symphony No. 6; Vaughan Williams' "A London Symphony"; Wagner's Prelude and Love-Death from "Tristan und Isolde", Prelude to "Die Meistersinger von Nurnberg"; Strauss, "Death and Transfiguration"; Barber's Violin Concerto; Piston's "The Incredible Flutist".

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
EVENING UNION
APR 12 1941

THIS CLIPPING FROM
LAWRENCE, MASS.
TRIBUNE
APR 18 1941

This Clipping From
INDIANAPOLIS, IND.
STAR
APR 20 1941

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
SUNDAY UNION
& REPUBLICAN
APR 13 1941

This Clipping From MOUNT VERNON, N.Y.
ARGUS
APR 17 1941

This Clipping From
POUGHKEEPSIE, N.Y.
STAR-ENTERPRISE
APR 12 1941

This Clipping From
ALBANY, N.Y.
KNICKERBOCKER NEWS
APR 14 1941

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS
APR 12 1941

[illegible]ing From TOLEDO, O.
TIMES
APR 27 1941

This Clipping From
SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
GAZETTE
APR 22 1941

This Clipping From DALLAS, TEX.
NEWS
APR 15 1941

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SYRACUSE, N. Y.
HERALD-AMERICAN
APR 13 1941

This Clipping From
DAVENPORT, IA.
DEMOCRAT-LEADER
JUL 27 1941

This Clipping From
ROCHESTER, N.Y.
DEMOCRAT-CHRONICLE
MAY 25 1941

Portland. Me.
Sunday Telegram
May 25, 1941

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
SUNDAY UNION
& REPUBLICAN
APR 13 1941

This Clipping From RICHMOND, VA.
NEWS LEADER
APR 22 1941

This Clipping From
SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
UNION-STAR
APR 21 1941

Berkshire Music Festival Will Play Works of Contemporary Composers July 31-Aug. 17

Works by the contemporary composers, Sibelius, Vaughan Williams, Barber, Piston, Hindemith, Shostakovitch, Villa Lobos, Copland and Hanson are included in the programs to be played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky conductor, at the eighth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Tanglewood, Stockbridge, Mass., July 31-Aug. 17.

There will be three Mozart works the second week of the festival in commemoration of the 150th anniversary of the composer's death. The much discussed Symphony No. 5 by Shostakovitch is included in the first series of concerts. The eminent Brazilian composer, Villa Lobos, will have presented his Chorus No. 10, also in the first series.

Dr. Howard Hanson's Symphony No. 2, "Romantic," will be given the final week. It is of interest to note that Piston, Hindemith, Copland and Hanson are listed either as members of the faculty of lecturers at the Berkshire Music Center which will be operated for its second year at Tanglewood by the Boston Symphony Orchestra for six weeks, starting the first week in July ending with the final festival concert.

Despite troubled conditions abroad and this country's defense program, the festival reports encouraging response for subscriptions for the coming season, the returns being about a month in advance of 1940. About a dozen more boxes have been sold than last year at this date. Music lovers contemplating attendance at the festival are urged to communicate at once with the Berkshire Hills Conference at the Court House in Pittsfield for room accommodations. One Southern Berkshire Hotel is already booked to capacity.

The programs by series follow:

Series "A"—Haydn, Symphony in G major, No. 88; Beethoven, Symphony No. 3, "Eroica"; Schubert, Symphony in B minor, "Unfinished"; Mendelssohn, "Italian" Symphony; Brahms, Symphony No. 4, in E minor; Shostakovitch, Symphony No. 5; Beethoven, Overture to "Leonore" No. 3; Debussy, Three Nocturnes ("Clouds," "Festivals," "Sirens"); Villa Lobos, Chorus No. 10; Copland, "Quiet City"; Hindemith, Concerto for Violoncello.

Series "B"—Mozart, Requiem, Symphony in C major, Symphony in A major (In commemoration of the 150th anniversary of Mozart's death); Beethoven, Symphony No. 5 in C minor; Berlioz, "Fantastic" Symphony; Hanson, Symphony No. 2, "Romantic"; Brahms, Piano Concerto in B flat major, No. 2; Debussy, "La Mer."

Series "C"—Beethoven, "Missa Solemnis"; Tschaikowsky, Symphony No. 5; Sibelius, Symphony No. 6; Vaughan Williams, "A London Symphony"; Wagner, Prelude and "Love-Death," "Tristan und Isolde" and Prelude to "Die Meistersinger von Nurnberg"; Strauss, "Death and Transfiguration"; Barber, Violin Concerto; Piston, "The Incredible Flutist."

This Clipping From COLUMBUS, OHIO
CITIZEN

MAY 18 1941

"Summer Seasons"

Carlos Chavez, Eugene Ormandy, Serge Koussevitzky and Artur Rodzinsky, pictured left to right, above, are among conductors scheduled for summer concerts in this country and Mexico.

* * * *

Plans Completed for Summer Concerts in Other Cities

By GEORGE HAGE

WITH THE CONCERT SEASON CONSIGNED TO THE REALM of memories of things past, the interest of Columbus' music-minded citizens is turning to other cities around the country which are fortunate enough to have summer concert seasons.

This summer will find the number of such cities decreased by one—a very important one for Columbus music-lovers. The Cincinnati Summer Opera Association has announced that there will be no al fresco productions of opera at the Cincinnati Zoo this year. They couldn't meet the deficit, they explained. Naturally it's a disappointment that will be keenly felt by the many Columbusites who counted the music in the Zoo pavilion one of summer's pleasures.

The lucky ones, so far as music is concerned, then, will be those who can vacation in such communities as support summer concert seasons.

+ + +

In Berkshires

Most notable of these, of course, is that American Salzburg, the Berkshire Symphonis Festival which will be held as usual at Tanglewood, between Stockbridge and Lenox, Mass., from July 31 to Aug. 17. The festival will consist of nine concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra and soloists on the Thursday, Saturday and Sunday evenings between the two

The major choral work scheduled for the festival this year is Beethoven's "Missa Solemnis," which will be performed under the direction of Serge Koussevitsky with a chorus prepared by G. Wallace Woodworth and Hugh Ross in the Berkshire Music Center.

The Center itself, the summer music school established last year by the Boston Symphony Orchestra with Mr. Koussevitzky as its director, will be in session for six weeks, July 7 to Aug. 17.

According to the Center bulletin, the school will have classes in conducting, composition, operatic interpretation and symphonic performance. Principal improvement over last year will be in the largest department of the school, "the Department of Music and Culture."

This is the department designed by Dr. Koussevitzky for "students with less specific qualifications" than in other departments, and for "amateurs who wish to increase their acquaintance with music and its interpretation." A unique feature of this department will be Paul Hindemith's "survey of choral and instrumental music in study and performance."

+ + +

In New York

But to get on with the other festivals and summer seasons.

An all-Tschaikowsky program will open the 24th season of the Lewisohn Stadium concerts in New York on June 19. Arthur Rodzinski, conductor of the Cleveland Orchestra, and Artur Rubenstein will be piano soloist. The program will consist of the "Romeo and Juliet" Overture, the Fifth Symphony and the Piano Concerto in B flat minor.

+ + +

This Clipping From
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

MAY 10 1941

The Symphonic Festival, founded in 1934 and moved in 1938 to its present permanent quarters at Tanglewood, between Lenox and Stockbridge, is held during the first three week ends in August and attracts audiences of 5000 to 6000 persons from all parts of the country. The Boston Symphony Orchestra, with Serge Koussevitzky as conductor, gives the Berkshires a leading place in the musical calendar of the year. Admirers of chamber music have had the opportunity, since 1918, of hearing the best in this form of musical expression at the weekly chamber music concerts at Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge's Temple of Music at South Mountain, Pittsfield.

This Clipping From
HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES

MAY 12 1941

Chasins Taught At Berkshire Music Center

Among the famous musicians invited to join the 1940 faculty of the widely-acclaimed Berkshire Music Center, was Abram Chasins, eminent American pianist-composer, who appears here with the Hartford Symphony Orchestra Wednesday evening at Bushnell.

The Center, under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky, invited leaders in many musical fields to conduct classes and lectures for advanced students and professional musicians. Chasins lectured and taught at Tanglewood during the first session of the new school. A chair of pedagogy was established by the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers, and Chasins was appointed to occupy it.

Chasins' private classes at the Berkshire Music Center were on the subject of "The Relation of Analysis to Interpretation." Attending Chasins' lectures were the most advanced students, members of the orchestra and the faculty.

Although only in his thirties, Chasins is internationally known as a pioneering musical thinker. His radio broadcasts were not only the first successful piano series on the air, but initiated the idea of instruction by a master for the benefit of piano teachers and students throughout the country. His work at the Center was another original effort. He formulated and illustrated interpretative principles, based on years of compositional experience, teaching and performances on the concert platform.

This Clipping From
WATERBURY, CONN.
DEMOCRAT

MAY 28 1941

Music. . . . With summer and July comes the Berkshire Music Festival now ranking among the country's outstanding musical undertakings. The Boston Symphony with Sergei Koussevitsky conducting are the principal performers. Also heard this summer will be the Berkshire Musical Chorus who will sing with the orchestra at the opening concert Thursday evening, July 31. The festival concerts are held at Tanglewood, between Lenox and Stockbridge, and thither come visitors from the nearby places and from far away. The summer residents form part of the audiences. The concerts are on Thursdays, Saturdays and Sundays beginning July 31 and ending August 17. Another chorus, The Berkshire Festival Chorus, will also be heard with the orchestra on August 14. The chorus mentioned first is composed of singers in the Berkshire area, the second named consists of students at the Berkshire Musical Center. During the summer season the Center supplies courses in the many branches of music.

This Clipping From PITTSBURGH, PA.
PRESS

MAY 19 1940

187

Conductor Realizes Long-Cherished Idea As Art Center Opens

Koussevitsky's Project Offers Fine Opportunity to Music Students For Summer Courses

By RALPH LEWANDO
Press Music Editor

Amid the picturesque historic hills of western Massachusetts a citadel of art is rising—the Berkshire Music Center at "Tanglewood" between Stockbridge and Lenox, home of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, made famous by Serge Koussevitsky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Like the Berkshire Festival this music center is the realization of an idea that for several years has been cherished by Dr. Koussevitzky.

Mr. Lewando

Three years ago the noted conductor told the writer of the plan to found a music center where for six weeks during summer months talented musicians might come annually for participation in study and activity in various phases of musical art, broaden their concept, stimulate aspiration and perhaps receive encouragement and opportunity to speed them toward their respective goals.

Truly a remarkable project! Certainly one replete with incalculable possibilities. To this fine purpose Dr. Koussevitzky, director of the Center, and his distinguished associates are devoting time and energy in this fascinating endeavor.

In a statement Dr. Koussevitzky says that "The Berkshire Music Center presents a unique opportunity for a summer of living and working in music. It will serve those who seek the best in music and related arts, who are anxious to refresh mind and personality through contact with the elite in art and culture, and who long for a creative rest in summer.

"The Center is designed to lay special emphasis upon those aspects of musical education concerned with collective performance. It will thus supplement rather than duplicate the training available in the established schools of music where, although some time is devoted to ensemble playing, attention is centered primarily upon developing the technical equipment of the individual.

"The rehearsals and concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will provide a rare opportunity for close observation of the work of a great orchestra. Active participation in the student orchestra, choruses, chamber music and operatic groups will offer the means of acquiring a working knowledge of music as it is written, conducted, played and sung. There will also be lectures by men prominent in the arts and letters as well as in music.

"The Music Center will have two sections: one to be known as the Institute for Advanced Study, limited to those who have had a thorough preliminary musical training and who are studying to make music their career; the other to be known as the Academy, for music lovers with less specific qualifications, who have an intelligent interest in music and wish to increase their knowledge of the art of interpretation and to participate in a stimulating musical experience.

"We have chosen a practical method so that students may draw from us some of the essence of the knowledge and experience we have acquired in our years of work."

* * *

Thus it is apparent that serious students bent upon a professional career and ardent amateur performers, creators or lovers of music for its own sake shall have opportunity to widen the scope of musical understanding. In aim, the Institute and Academy constitute a project of originality and importance that seems likely to exert great influence on procedure in music education.

In the Institute for advanced study, students of unusual promise will be accepted for the conducting class under Dr. Koussevitzky's personal direction. They will be given opportunity to lead orchestral and choral groups either in rehearsal or performance. The institute orchestra will be open only to those who are technically competent. These players will be given individual as well as collective attention in the study of works that run the gamut from Bach to Stravinsky.

The opera dramatics class will be headed by Dr. Herbert Graf, noted stage director of the Metropolitan Opera Company. He will be assisted by Boris Goldovsky, head of Cleveland Institute's opera department.

THE Berkshires are calling. The first announcements are those of the Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky, who will as before lead the Boston Symphony Orchestra in three weekly series of three concerts each, Thursday and Friday evenings and Sunday afternoons, July 31 to August 17.

May 2, 1941

From the Boston headquarters comes the announcement of the second season of the Music Center at Tanglewood. This, according to Dr. Koussevitzky's conceptions, is not a summer school of music in the ordinary sense, but a graduate school of interpretation and musical trends. Those who have had essential training will, in the courses given — and no less in the musical atmosphere of Tanglewood and near-by centers — have a chance to see and feel more clearly "what it is all about." Provision is also made for non-professional musicians: group work, choral and instrumental. — New members of the faculty are Gregor Piatigorsky, Russian cello virtuoso, Hugh Ross, director of the Schola Cantorum of New York City, and Leo Schrade, Yale musicologist. Among those returning will be Olin Downes, Paul Hindemith, and Aaron Copland (o as in cope!). Special lecturers for 1941: Archibald T. Davison, of Harvard University, Howard Hanson, director of the Eastman School of Music, and Carleton Sprague Smith, chief of the Division of Music, New York Public Library.

Bloomington Ind. Star

Of the 312, selected from over 600, in attendance last summer, four were from Indiana. Twenty-eight other states and Canada were represented. More than a third of the total number were from states other than Massachusetts and New York, which registered 104 and 77, respectively. — This year 350 will be accepted. The six weeks session begins July 7, the first three will be, with all else, a fine preparation for the festival concerts. Further details can be learned by addressing Margaret Grant, Executive Secretary of the Berkshire Music Center, Symphony Hall, Boston, Mass.

From the Stockbridge, Massachusetts, headquarters, G. W. Edman, secretary in charge, sends us details about the festival concerts. Contemporary composers to be presented are Sibelius, Vaughan Williams, Samuel Barber, Walter Piston (whose lively "Incredible Flutist" I reported on in my letters giving an account of the musical blitz week in Pittsburgh last Thanksgiving time), Hindemith, Shostakovitch, ("the much discussed Symphony No. 5," to quote Mr. Edman), Villa Lobos, Aaron Copland, and Howard Hanson. "There will be three Mozart works the second week of the Festival in commemoration of the 150th anniversary of the composer's death." Mr. Edman adds: "Despite troubled conditions abroad and this country's defense program the Festival reports encouraging response, the returns being about a month in advance of 1940."

An announcement of unusual importance is that Beethoven's Missa Solemnis will be given. The Mozart threesome will include his Requiem, which he left unfinished because of a superstitious fear that the last note would be his death knell.

Full Programs For Festival In Berkshires

N.Y. Her. Tribune
May 25, 1941

Eighth Annual Event Will Open July 31; Beethoven Mass Set for Aug. 14

Complete programs have been announced for the nine concerts to be given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky's direction in the eighth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival in the Music Shed at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. The dates and works to be performed are:

SERIES A
Thursday, July 31, 8:30
Concerto for organ and orchestra, No. 10, in D minor	Handel
Nuages, Fetes, Sirenes	Debussy
Chorus No. 10, Rasga o Coracao	Villa-Lobos Villa-Lobos
Symphony No. 3, "Eroica"	Beethoven
Saturday, Aug. 2, 8:30
Symphony No. 4, "Italian"	Mendelssohn
Overture to "Leonore," No. 3	Beethoven
Symphony No. 5	Shostakovitch
Sunday, Aug. 3, 3:30
Unfinished Symphony	Schubert
Quiet City	Copland
Cello Concerto	Hindemith
Soloist, Gregor Piatigorsky
Symphony No. 4, in E minor	Brahms
SERIES B
Thursday, Aug. 7, 8:30
Symphony in G minor; excerpts from Requiem	Mozart
Symphony No. 5, in C minor	Beethoven
Saturday, Aug. 9, 8:30
Eine Kleine Nachtmusik	Mozart
Symphony No. 2, "Romantic"	Hanson
Piano Concerto No. 2, in B flat	Brahms
Soloist, Leonard Shure
Preludes to "Lohengrin" and "Die Meistersinger"	Wagner
Sunday, Aug 10, 3:30
Symphony in E flat	Mozart
La Mer	Debussy
Fantastic Symphony	Berlioz
SERIES C
Thursday, Aug. 14, 8:30
Prelude and Fugue in C major	Bach-Koussevitzky
Missa Solemnis in D major	Beethoven
Saturday, Aug. 16, 8:30
A London Symphony	Vaughan Williams
Violin Concerto	Samuel Barber
Soloist, Ruth Posselt
Prelude and Good Friday Music From "Parsifal"; Overture to "Tannhaeuser"	Wagner
Sunday, Aug. 17, 3:30
Symphony No. 6	Sibelius
Death and Transfiguration	Strauss
Symphony No. 5, in E minor	Tchaikovsky

The chorus of the Berkshire Musical Association, directed and trained by Horace Hunt, will sing in the Villa-Lobos Chorus, Debussy's "Sirenes" and the excerpts from Mozart's Requiem. The Berkshire Festival Chorus, composed of students at the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, will sing in the Beethoven Missa Solemnis.

The subscription sale will close June 30, or earlier, if the lists are filled before that time. After its close, tickets for single concerts may be obtained at the festival's offices in Stockbridge and New York and from community chairmen in the Berkshire region. Inquiries for accommodations during the festival may be sent to the Berkshire Hills Conference, Courthouse, Pittsfield, Mass.

This Clipping From LEWISTON, ME.
JOURNAL

MAY 27 1941

Berkshire Symphonic Festival Concerts for This Year

Since its organization, the Berkshire Symphonic Festival has been noteworthy, but never so much so as since war in Europe has either brought or retained in this country about all the available musical talent. While battles rage across the Atlantic, this country is still able to hear the best in music now being offered anywhere in the world.

Beginning late next July and continuing thru mid-August, Serge Koussevitzky will again lead the Boston Symphony orchestra in concerts that will bring thousands of music lovers to Tanglewood; the big estate at Lenox, Mass., that is now the summer home of the Boston Symphony orchestra and a school where the best in musical instruction can be obtained.

This year, Koussevitzky has invited the Berkshire Musical Association chorus to appear with the Boston Symphony. The chorus is drawn from communities in the Berkshire area, and is trained by Horace Hunt. The Berkshire Festival chorus, composed of students at the Music Center of Tanglewood, will take part in the presentation of Beethoven's Missa Solemnis.

Programs of the festival were announced recently, and are in three series to be given on three successive Thursday and Saturday evenings, and Sunday afternoons.

Few soloists are announced, but two of them are known in Maine. Gregor Piatigorsky, 'cellist, who played in Portland a season ago and is one of the artists the Lewiston-Auburn Community Concert association will present next season, is to be one of these; and the others are Leonard Shure, pianist; and Ruth Posselt, violinist, who has played in Brunswick. It will be recalled that Dorothy Maynor, colored soprano, recently heard in Portland, first attracted attention of major music critics at Tanglewood.

The Programs

The complete programs to be given this year follow: July 31, Organ Concerto in D Minor, Handel; Three Nocturnes by Debussy, Choros No. 10, Villa-Lobos; and the Eroica Symphony, Beethoven; Aug. 2, Italian Symphony, Mendelssohn; Leonore Overture no. 3, Beethoven; and Fifth Symphony, Shostakovitch; Aug. 3, Unfinished Symphony by Schubert; Quiet City, Copland; Cello Concerto, Hindemith, Gregor Piatigorsky, soloist; Fourth Symphony, Brahms.

Series B will begin Aug. 7 with Symphony in G Minor, Mozart; excerpts from the Requiem Mass, and Beethoven's Fifth Symphony; Aug. 9, A Little Night Music, Mozart; Romantic Symphony by Hanson; Brahms' Second Piano Concerto, Leonard Shure, soloist; Preludes to Lohengrin and Die Meistersinger, Wagner; Aug. 10, Mozart's Symphony in E flat, The Sea by Debussy, and the Berlioz Fantastic Symphony.

The final series will be: Aug. 14, Prelude and Fugue in C Major No. 17 Bach-Koussevitzky; Beethoven's Missa Solemnis; Aug. 16, London Symphony, Vaughan Williams; Violin concerto, Barber, Ruth Posselt, soloist; Prelude and Good Friday Spell from Parsifal, and the Tannhaeuser Overture, by Wagner; Aug. 17, the Sibelius Sixth Symphony, Death and Transfiguration by Stauss, and the Tchaikowsky Fif Symphony.

This Clipping From
BUFFALO, N.Y.
NEWS

MAY 31 1941

Buffalo Musicians Win Honors Abroad

Priebe to Sing Missa Solemnis Again With Koussevitsky's Berkshire Orchestra

By THEODOLINDA C. BORIS

MUSICAL MUSINGS . . . . . . Congratulations to Buffalo's tenor, John Priebe, who has been engaged by the Boston Symphony Orchestra as soloist in Beethoven's "Missa Solemnis," to be given at the Berkshire Symphonic Festival in Stockbridge, Mass., on Aug. 14. Mr. Priebe holds some kind of a record—this will be his seventh appearance with the orchestra this season, and his fifth performance of this work under the baton of the Boston organization's famed conductor, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky.

187

This Clipping From PITTSBURGH, PA.
PRESS

MAY 19 1940

Conductor Realizes Long-Cherished Idea As Art Center Opens

Koussevitsky's Project Offers Fine Opportunity to Music Students For Summer Courses

By RALPH LEWANDO
Press Music Editor

Amid the picturesque historic hills of western Massachusetts a citadel of art is rising—the Berkshire Music Center at "Tanglewood" between Stockbridge and Lenox, home of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, made famous by Serge Koussevitsky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Like the Berkshire Festival this music center is the realization of an idea that for several years has been cherished by Dr. Koussevitzky.

Three years ago the noted conductor told the writer of the plan to found a music center where for six weeks during summer months talented musicians might come annually for participation in study and activity in various phases of musical art, broaden their concept, stimulate aspiration and perhaps receive encouragement and opportunity to speed them toward their respective goals.

Mr. Lewando

Truly a remarkable project! Certainly one replete with incalculable possibilities. To this fine purpose Dr. Koussevitzky, director of the Center, and his distinguished associates are devoting time and energy in this fascinating endeavor.

In a statement Dr. Koussevitzky says that "The Berkshire Music Center presents a unique opportunity for a summer of living and working in music. It will serve those who seek the best in music and related arts, who are anxious to refresh mind and personality through contact with the elite in art and culture, and who long for a creative rest in summer.

"The Center is designed to lay special emphasis upon those aspects of musical education concerned with collective performance. It will thus supplement rather than duplicate the training available in the established schools of music where, although some time is devoted to ensemble playing, attention is centered primarily upon developing the technical equipment of the individual.

"The rehearsals and concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will provide a rare opportunity for close observation of the work of a great orchestra. Active participation in the student orchestra, choruses, chamber music and operatic groups will offer the means of acquiring a working knowledge of music as it is written, conducted, played and sung. There will also be lectures by men prominent in the arts and letters as well as in music.

"The Music Center will have two sections: one to be known as the Institute for Advanced Study, limited to those who have had a thorough preliminary musical training and who are studying to make music their career; the other to be known as the Academy, for music lovers with less specific qualifications, who have an intelligent interest in music and wish to increase their knowledge of the art of interpretation and to participate in a stimulating musical experience.

"We have chosen a practical method so that students may draw from us some of the essence of the knowledge and experience we have acquired in our years of work."

* * *

Thus it is apparent that serious students bent upon a professional career and ardent amateur performers, creators or lovers of music for its own sake shall have opportunity to widen the scope of musical understanding. In aim, the Institute and Academy constitute a project of originality and importance that seems likely to exert great influence on procedure in music education.

In the Institute for advanced study, students of unusual promise will be accepted for the conducting class under Dr. Koussevitzky's personal direction. They will be given opportunity to lead orchestral and choral groups either in rehearsal or performance. The institute orchestra will be open only to those who are technically competent. These players will be given individual as well as collective attention in the study of works that run the gamut from Bach to Stravinsky.

The opera dramatics class will be headed by Dr. Herbert Graf, noted stage director of the Metropolitan Opera Company. He will be assisted by Boris Goldovsky, head of Cleveland Institute's opera department.

* * *

This Clipping From
BUFFALO, N.Y.
NEWS

MAY 31 1941

Buffalo Musicians Win Honors Abroad

Priebe to Sing Missa Solemnis Again With Koussevitsky's Berkshire Orchestra

By THEODOLINDA C. BORIS

MUSICAL MUSINGS . . . . . . Congratulations to Buffalo's tenor, John Priebe, who has been engaged by the Boston Symphony Orchestra as soloist in Beethoven's "Missa Solemnis," to be given at the Berkshire Symphonic Festival in Stockbridge, Mass., on Aug. 14. Mr. Priebe holds some kind of a record—this will be his seventh appearance with the orchestra this season, and his fifth performance of this work under the baton of the Boston organization's famed conductor, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky.

THE Berkshires are calling. The first announcements are those of the Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky, who will as before lead the Boston Symphony Orchestra in three weekly series of three concerts each, Thursday and Friday evenings and Sunday afternoons, July 31 to August 17.

May 2, 1941

From the Boston headquarters comes the announcement of the second season of the Music Center at Tanglewood. This, according to Dr. Koussevitzky's conceptions, is not a summer school of music in the ordinary sense, but a graduate school of interpretation and musical trends. Those who have had essential training will, in the courses given — and no less in the musical atmosphere of Tanglewood and near-by centers — have a chance to see and feel more clearly "what it is all about." Provision is also made for non-professional musicians: group work, choral and instrumental. — New members of the faculty are Gregor Piatigorsky, Russian cello virtuoso, Hugh Ross, director of the Schola Cantorum of New York City, and Leo Schrade, Yale musicologist. Among those returning will be Olin Downes, Paul Hindemith, and Aaron Copland (o as in cope!). Special lecturers for 1941: Archibald T. Davison, of Harvard University, Howard Hanson, director of the Eastman School of Music, and Carleton Sprague Smith, chief of the Division of Music, New York Public Library.

Bloomington Ind. Star

Of the 312, selected from over 600, in attendance last summer, four were from Indiana. Twenty-eight other states and Canada were represented. More than a third of the total number were from states other than Massachusetts and New York, which registered 104 and 77, respectively. — This year 350 will be accepted. The six weeks session begins July 7, the first three will be, with all else, a fine preparation for the festival concerts. Further details can be learned by addressing Margaret Grant, Executive Secretary of the Berkshire Music Center, Symphony Hall, Boston, Mass.

From the Stockbridge, Massachusetts, headquarters, G. W. Edman, secretary in charge, sends us details about the festival concerts. Contemporary composers to be presented are Sibelius, Vaughan Williams, Samuel Barber, Walter Piston (whose lively "Incredible Flutist" I reported on in my letters giving an account of the musical blitz week in Pittsburgh last Thanksgiving time), Hindemith, Shostakovitch, ("the much discussed Symphony No. 5," to quote Mr. Edman), Villa Lobos, Aaron Copland, and Howard Hanson. "There will be three Mozart works the second week of the Festival in commemoration of the 150th anniversary of the composer's death." Mr. Edman adds: "Despite troubled conditions abroad and this country's defense program the Festival reports encouraging response, the returns being about a month in advance of 1940."

An announcement of unusual importance is that Beethoven's Missa Solemnis will be given. The Mozart threesome will include his Requiem, which he left unfinished because of a superstitious fear that the last note would be his death knell.

Full Programs For Festival In Berkshires

N.Y. Her. Tribune
May 25, 1941

Eighth Annual Event Will Open July 31; Beethoven Mass Set for Aug. 14

Complete programs have been announced for the nine concerts to be given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky's direction in the eighth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival in the Music Shed at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. The dates and works to be performed are:

SERIES A

Thursday, July 31, 8:30
Concerto for organ and orchestra, No. 10, in D minor....Handel
Nuages, Fetes, Sirenes....Debussy
Chorus No. 10, Rasga o Coracao..Villa-Lobos
Villa-Lobos
Symphony No. 3, "Eroica"......Beethoven

Saturday, Aug. 2, 8:30
Symphony No. 4, "Italian"...Mendelssohn
Overture to "Leonore," No. 3..Beethoven
Symphony No. 5..........Shostakovitch

Sunday, Aug. 3, 3:30
Unfinished Symphony............Schubert
Quiet City....................Copland
Cello Concerto...............Hindemith
Soloist, Gregor Piatigorsky
Symphony No. 4, in E minor.....Brahms

SERIES B

Thursday, Aug. 7, 8:30
Symphony in G minor; excerpts from Requiem..........Mozart
Symphony No. 5, in C minor....Beethoven

Saturday, Aug. 9, 8:30
Eine Kleine Nachtmusik.........Mozart
Symphony No. 2, "Romantic".....Hanson
Piano Concerto No. 2, in B flat...Brahms
Soloist, Leonard Shure
Preludes to "Lohengrin" and "Die Meistersinger"..........Wagner

Sunday, Aug 10, 3:30
Symphony in E flat..............Mozart
La Mer.........................Debussy
Fantastic Symphony..............Berlioz

SERIES C

Thursday, Aug. 14, 8:30
Prelude and Fugue in C major
Bach-Koussevitzky
Missa Solemnis in D major....Beethoven

Saturday, Aug. 16, 8:30
A London Symphony....Vaughan Williams
Violin Concerto...........Samuel Barber
Soloist, Ruth Posselt
Prelude and Good Friday Music From "Parsifal"; Overture to "Tannhaeuser"
Wagner

Sunday, Aug. 17, 3:30
Symphony No. 6..................Sibelius
Death and Transfiguration........Strauss
Symphony No. 5, in E minor..Tchaikovsky

The chorus of the Berkshire Musical Association, directed and trained by Horace Hunt, will sing in the Villa-Lobos Chorus, Debussy's "Sirenes" and the excerpts from Mozart's Requiem. The Berkshire Festival Chorus, composed of students at the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, will sing in the Beethoven Missa Solemnis.

The subscription sale will close June 30, or earlier, if the lists are filled before that time. After its close, tickets for single concerts may be obtained at the festival's offices in Stockbridge and New York and from community chairmen in the Berkshire region. Inquiries for accommodations during the festival may be sent to the Berkshire Hills Conference, Courthouse, Pittsfield, Mass.

This Clipping From LEWISTON, ME.
JOURNAL

MAY 27 1941

Berkshire Symphonic Festival Concerts for This Year

Since its organization, the Berkshire Symphonic Festival has been noteworthy, but never so much so as since war in Europe has either brought or retained in this country about all the available musical talent. While battles rage across the Atlantic, this country is still able to hear the best in music now being offered anywhere in the world.

Beginning late next July and continuing thru mid-August, Serge Koussevitzky will again lead the Boston Symphony orchestra in concerts that will bring thousands of music lovers to Tanglewood; the big estate at Lenox, Mass., that is now the summer home of the Boston Symphony orchestra and a school where the best in musical instruction can be obtained.

This year, Koussevitzky has invited the Berkshire Musical Association chorus to appear with the Boston Symphony. The chorus is drawn from communities in the Berkshire area, and is trained by Horace Hunt. The Berkshire Festival chorus, composed of students at the Music Center of Tanglewood, will take part in the presentation of Beethoven's Missa Solemnis.

Programs of the festival were announced recently, and are in three series to be given on three successive Thursday and Saturday evenings, and Sunday afternoons.

Few soloists are announced, but two of them are known in Maine. Gregor Piatigorsky, 'cellist, who played in Portland a season ago and is one of the artists the Lewiston-Auburn Community Concert association will present next season, is to be one of these; and the others are Leonard Shure, pianist; and Ruth Posselt, violinist, who has played in Brunswick. It will be recalled that Dorothy Maynor, colored soprano, recently heard in Portland, first attracted attention of major music critics at Tanglewood.

The Programs

The complete programs to be given this year follow: July 31, Organ Concerto in D Minor, Handel; Three Nocturnes by Debussy, Choros No. 10, Villa-Lobos; and the Eroica Symphony, Beethoven; Aug. 2, Italian Symphony, Mendelssohn; Leonore Overture no. 3, Beethoven; and Fifth Symphony, Shostakovitch; Aug. 3, Unfinished Symphony by Schubert; Quiet City, Copland; Cello Concerto, Hindemith, Gregor Piatigorsky, soloist; Fourth Symphony, Brahms.

Series B will begin Aug. 7 with Symphony in G Minor, Mozart; excerpts from the Requiem Mass, and Beethoven's Fifth Symphony; Aug. 9, A Little Night Music, Mozart; Romantic Symphony by Hanson; Brahms' Second Piano Concerto, Leonard Shure, soloist; Preludes to Lohengrin and Die Meistersinger, Wagner; Aug. 10, Mozart's Symphony in E flat, The Sea by Debussy, and the Berlioz Fantastic Symphony.

The final series will be: Aug. 14, Prelude and Fugue in C Major No. 17 Bach-Koussevitzky; Beethoven's Missa Solemnis; Aug. 16, London Symphony, Vaughan Williams; Violin concerto, Barber, Ruth Posselt, soloist; Prelude and Good Friday Spell from Parsifal, and the Tannhaeuser Overture, by Wagner; Aug. 17, the Sibelius Sixth Symphony, Death and Transfiguration by Stauss, and the Tchaikowsky Fifth Symphony.

This Clipping From
WATERBURY, CONN.
REPUBLICAN

MAY 27 1941

BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL WILL OPEN JULY 31

The Boston Symphony orchestra, conducted by Serge Koussevitzky, will open the eighth annual Berkshire symphonic festival at Tanglewood, between Stockbridge and Lenox, July 31 at 8:30 p. m.

For the first time at Tanglewood the Berkshire Musical association's chorus under Horace Hunt, director, will perform with the orchestra. The chorus trained for many months by Mr. Hunt comes from communities in the Berkshire area and will be heard in the Villa-Lobos Chorus No. 10 and in Debussy's Three Nocturnes (Clouds-Festivals-Sirens) the opening night. When the festival was in its second year at the Hanna farm, the chorus participated under Mr. Hunt's direction. It will be heard again Thursday night, Aug. 7, with the orchestra under Dr. Koussevitsky.

The Berkshire Festival chorus, made up of students at the Berkshire Music Center, at Tanglewood, will sing Thursday, Aug. 14.

This Clipping From
N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT

MAY 31 1941

MUSIC IS STOLEN FROM MR. COPLAND

Tanglewood Instructor Robbed in New York

A valise containing scores of unfinished musical works was stolen from the automobile of Aaron Copland, one of America's leading composers, in New York city Wednesday, shortly before he was to leave for Lenox, where he will serve on the faculty of the Berkshire Music center at Tanglewood this summer.

Mr. Copland reported to New York police that the bag containing the music and another containing clothing, were stolen from his car, parked outside his studio at 113 West 63rd street, about 1.30 o'clock, Wednesday morning. He had planned to leave the car in a garage for the night, and get an early start for Tanglewood, the Boston Symphony orchestra's estate in Lenox, where he planned to work on some of the unfinished compositions. He will teach composition at the music center, which will open July 7.

The composer said he was not concerned about the clothing, but he offered a "liberal reward" for the musical manuscripts, which include themes collected over a period of years, the score of an orchestra' suite, the first two movements of a piano sonata and other partly completed works.

Mr. Copland has asked the city sanitation department to be on the lookout for the irreplaceable manuscripts, and a friend, Victor Kraft, has been checking with junk dealers and ragpickers in the hope of locating them. Detectives have been assigned to the case.

This Clipping From
SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
UNION-STAR

MAY 26 1941

Concerts at Tanglewood Begin July 31

Two Choruses to Take Part in Several Programs

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will open the eighth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Tanglewood between Stockbridge and Lenox July 31 with Serge Koussevitzky conducting. The festival will include nine concerts with the final one taking place August 17. Subscriptions and box office sales are considerably ahead of last year.

At the invitation of Dr. Koussevitzky, the Berkshire Musical Association's chorus, Horace Hunt, director, will perform with the orchestra for the first time at Tanglewood this year. This chorus comes from communities in the Berkshire area and will be heard in the Villa-Lobos "Choros, No. 10" and in Debussy's "Three Nocturnes" the opening night. When the festival was in its second year at the Hanna farm, the chorus participated under Mr. Hunt's direction. The chorus wil lalso participate in the concert scheduled for August 7.

The Berkshire Festival Chorus, made up of students at the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, will be heard Thursday, August 14, with a quartet of soloists. The center, which operates for six weeks, the last three during the period of the festival, has already received many more applications for admission than last year, its first.

This Clipping From
N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT
MAY 24 1941

Programs Are Announced For Symphonic Festival

Berkshire Musical Association's Chorus to Perform With Orchestra at Dr. Serge Koussevitsky's Invitation, During Two Concerts of Eighth Annual Festival at Stockbridge—Nine Concerts of Festival Divided Into Three Series Opening on July 31.

At the invitation of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, Boston Symphony orchestra conductor, the Berkshire Musical association's chorus, directed by Horace Hunt, will perform with the orchestra during the first concert of the eighth annual Berkshire symphonic festival July 31. This was announced today, as the detailed program for the 1941 concerts were made public.

Although this chorus, made up of persons from Berkshire communities, participated in a concert at the Hanna farm during the second year of the festival, this will be its first appearance at Tanglewood. The group will be heard in the Villa-Lobos Choros No. 10, and in Debussy's Three Nocturnes. (Clouds-Festivals-Sirens).

The Berkshire Festival chorus, made up of students at the Berkshire Music center, will be heard Thursday, Aug. 14, with a quartet of soloists.

Three Series Planned

As usual, the nine concerts of the festival are divided into three series, with Thursday and Saturday night and Sunday afternoon concerts scheduled for each series.

The first concert, Thursday, July 31, will open with Handel's Concerto for Organ and Orchestra, No. 10, in D minor, followed by the Debussy and Villa-Lobos selections, and concluded by Beethoven's Symphony No. 3 (Eroica). The Saturday program includes Mendelssohn's "Italian" symphony, Beethoven's Overture to "Leonore", No. 3, and Shostakovitch's Symphony No. 5. Gregor Piatigorsky, 'cellist will appear with the orchestra Sunday, when the program will include Schubert's "Unfinished" symphony, Copland's "Quiet City". Hindemith's Violoncello concerto and Brahms' Symphony No. 4.

The second series will open Aug. 7 with the following program: Mozart, Symphony in G minor and Requiem (excerpts), and Beethoven's Symphony No. 5. The music association chorus will again assist the orchestra. On Saturday night the program will include Mozart's "Eine Kleine Nachtmusik", Hanson's Symphony No. 2 "Romantic", Brahms' Concerto No 2 in B-flat for pianoforte, and Preludes to "Lohengrin" and "Die Meistersinger", by Wagner. Leonard Shure will be the soloist.

For the concluding concert of this series, the orchestra will play Mozart's Symphony in E-flat major, "La Mer", by Debussy, and the Fantastic symphony of Berlioz.

Series C Program

Opening Series "C" Aug. 14 will be Bach's Prelude and Fugue in C major, arranged by Koussevitzky, and the "Missa Solemnis" of Beethoven. The festival chorus will participate in this program. Listed for the Saturday night concert are Vaughan Williams' "London" symphony, Barber's violin concerto, and three Wagner selections, the Prelude to "Parsifal", the Good Friday Spell from "Parisfal", and the overture to "Tannhauser." The soloist will be Ruth Posselt.

For the concluding concert, the orchestra will play the Symphony No. 6 of Sibelius, "Death and Transfiguration", by Strauss, and Tchaikovsky's Symphony No. 5.

This Clipping From
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

MAY [illegible] 1941

BMA Chorus Will Sing at Two Festival Concerts

The Berkshire Muscal Association's chorus, Horace Hunt, director, will be heard at the opening concert of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Tanglewood, July 31.

Singing with the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky, the chorus will give Debussy's Three Nocturnes (Clouds-Festivals-Sirens) and the Villa-Lobos Choros No. 10.

Again Thursday night, Aug. 7, the chorus will sing excerpts from Mozart's Requiem.

This Clipping From
DAYTON, OHIO
SUNDAY JOURNAL HERALD

JUN 8 - 1941

Berkshire Festival

The eighth annual Berkshire festival at Tanglewood will open July 31 with the Boston Symphony orchestra playing Handel's concerto for organ and orchestra, No. 10 in D minor.

This Clipping From
HOLYOKE, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT TELEGRAM

JUN 2 - 1941

Officials of the Berkshire Music Center, the school at Tanglewood sponsored by the Boston Symphony orchestra and directed by Serge Koussevitzky, are faced with the task of selecting about 350 students from more than 700 applicants.

This Clipping From
ALBANY, N.Y.
KNICKERBOCKER NEWS
MAY 31 1941

THIS CLIPPING FROM

CHICOPEE, MASS
HERALD
5/29/41

WILTON, CONN
BULLETIN
5/29/41

This Clipping From
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

MAY 31 1941

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS
MAY 31 1941

Berkshire Music Center Is Flooded With Applications for '41 Season

More than 700 applications for enrollment have been received for the Berkshire Music Center, the school directed by Serge Koussevitzky and sponsored by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The Center, which was instituted last summer, will hold its second session at Tanglewood, Lenox, Massachusetts, from July 7 through August 17, its term to include the last three weeks of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival.

Applications have come to the Office of the Center at Symphony Hall, Boston, from points far and near, including 38 state, Washington, D. C., Canada, Scotland and Switzerland. One hundred music schools are represented, and more than 150 colleges and universities. The age group between 20 and 24 is the most numerous, and over half of the applications are from men. Since the enrollment must be limited to about 350, the acceptances will be necessarily selective. The selection has been almost completed for the specialized departments. Dr. Koussevitzky has chosen six active members of his conducting class, in which, however, there will be an additional number of auditors. The Advanced Orchestra, instructed by principal members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will be limited to 85 players, and for this the personnel is now virtually decided. The same is true of the classes in Choral Conducting under G. Wallace Woodworth and Hugh Ross, the Department of Chamber Music under Gregor Piatigorsky, the classes in Composition under Paul Hindemith and Aaron Copland, and the class in Opera under Dr. Herbert Graf.

A limited number can still be accepted for the largest department of the Music Center, which is called the Department of Music and Culture, and is designed for music students, college students, teachers and amateurs. This will include the Festival Chorus (which is to sing Beethoven's Missa Solemnis under Dr. Koussevitsky at a Festival performance), a symphony orchestra, and smaller choral groups which will sing and study choral music from the earliest stages of its development. The faculty of this department will include Messrs. Hindemith, Ross, Woodworth, Olin Downes, and others.

Students of all departments will have the privilege of attending all nine Festival Concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Special Scholarships

The Berkshire Music Center has been presented with scholarships from the principal music schools of the United States: the Curtis Institute of Music, in Philadelphia, the Academy of Vocal Arts of the same city, the Eastman School of Music in Rochester, New York, the Juilliard School of Music in New York, and the New England Conservatory of Music in Boston. Additional scholarship funds have been provided by ASCAP, the Rhode Island Federation of Music Clubs, and by a number of individual donors. Further scholarships have been made possible by the Trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and by a grant from the Rockefeller Foundation toward the general support of the Center. This generosity and friendly cooperation is evidence that the Berkshire Music Center complements rather than competes with the various conservatories and music schools.

The New Buildings

Two new buildings are under construction at Tanglewood and will be opened in July for the special uses of the school. Each has been designed by Eliel Saarinen, the eminent Finnish architect. The new theater-concert hall seating about 1,200 will be suitable for the rehearsals and performances of the Opera Department and the student orchestras, and a chamber music hall with a capacity of about 400 will be used for classes, lectures, rehearsals and concerts. Four separate small studios provide additional practice and rehearsal space.

This Clipping From
LAWRENCE, MASS.
TRIBUNE

JUN 6 - 1941

This Clipping From
DAYTON, OHIO
SUNDAY JOURNAL HERALD

JUN 15 1941

This Clipping From
DAYTON, OHIO
JOURNAL

JUL 12 1941

This Clipping From
HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES

MAY 31 1941

This Clipping From
BRIDGEPORT, CONN.
POST

JUN 2 - 1941

This Clipping From
AKRON, O.
BEACON-JOURNAL

JUN 1 - 1941

This Clipping From
BUFFALO, N.Y.
COURIER-EXPRESS

JUN 1 - 1941

THIS CLIPPING FROM
LOWELL, MASS.
SUNDAY TELEGRAM

JUN 1 - 1941

This Clipping From PORTLAND, OREGON
OREGONIAN
JUN 8 - 1941

This Clipping From
ALBANY, N. Y.
TIMES UNION
JUN 22 1941

189

THIS CL'PPING FROM QUINCY, ILL.
HERALD-WHIG
MAY 25 1941

Miss Martha McCrory Wins Scholarship to Berkshire Music Center

Miss Martha McCrory, younger daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph McCrory and a senior at the University of Michigan, has been awarded one of the few scholarships granted to advanced music students for this summer's session of the Berkshire Music Center in Massachusetts. During the winter the Boston Symphony gave a concert in Ann Arbor and at that time the director ~~became~~ interested in Miss McCrory's talent and she was verbally offered a scholar ship in the Music Center. Th written confirmation has just bee received.

Distinguished Faculty.

This is the second season that th Boston Symphony orchestra ha conducted a six weeks' summe school and music festival at "Tan glewood" near Lenox, Mass. Th faculty is a distinguished one. I is headed by Serge Koussevitsky the conductor of the orchestra, an includes Aaron Copland, compose and author, Olin Downes, musi editor of The New York Times, Herbert Graf, stage director of th Metropolitan Opera company; Pau Hindemith, composer; Gregor Piatigorsky, violoncello virtuoso an specialist in chamber music; Hugh Ross, director of the Schola Cantorum of New York; Archibald Davison, professor of choral music at Harvard; Howard Hanson, director of the Eastman School of Music; Carleton Smith, chief of the division of music of the New York Public Library; and all the members of the Boston Symphony orchestra.

The Music Center will open July and will continue until August 17. The first three weeks will be devoted to private instruction, ensemble work, conducting, composition, etc. The last three weeks will feature the Berkshire Symphonic Festival when the full Boston Symphony orchestra will present a series of nine concerts.

"Tanglewood" the extensive estate which Mrs. Gorham Brooks has presented to the orchestra, holds artistic associations as well as natural beauty. Emerson, Holmes, Melville and Hawthorne often visited there and the estate was given ts name because it was there that Hawthorne first told his "Tanglewood Tales" and wrote "The House of the Seven Gables." Accommodations for the students will be found n the dormitories of two small colleges which are situated in the village of Lenox.

This Clipping From
BUFFALO, N.Y.
NEWS
MAY 2 4 1941

Berkshire To Enjoy The Ballet

2 English Stars Plan Festival; Program Outlined

By THEODOLINDA C. BORIS

JUST about the ideal Summer vacation for the music lover would be to attend the nine concerts of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Tanglewood, Stockbridge, Mass., from July 31 to Aug. 17. As if those riches were not enough, now comes the announcement of a dance festival at nearby Jacob's Pillow, near Lee, under the direction of Alicia Markova and Anton Dolin, so that Berkshire attendants can take the easy jaunt over there on Friday and Saturday afternoons to see dance performances by the two English stars, as well as by guest stars that represent the finest and best dancers in the country.

The Berkshire Symphonic Festival, through Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has invited the Berkshire Musical Association's chorus to perform with the orchestra. This chorus, trained by Horace Hunt, is made up of persons from many Berkshire communities. It will be heard in the Heitor Villa-Lobos Choros No. 10 and in Debussy's Three Nocturnes (Clouds - Festivals - Sirens) on the opening night of the festival. It will also be heard again on Aug. 7 in excerpts from Mozart's Requiem.

The Berkshire Festival Chorus, made up of students at the Berkshire Music Center, will sing the Beethoven "Missa Solemnis" on Aug. 14.

The complete program for the three series follows:

Series A: July 31, evening—Handel's Concerto for organ and orchestra, No. 10 in D minor; Debussy's Three Nocturnes; Villa-Lobos' Choros No. 10, and Beethoven's Third Symphony.

Aug. 2 (evening)—Mendelssohn's "Italian" Symphony; Beethoven's Leonore Overture No. 3; Shostakovich's Fifth Symphony. Aug. 3 (afternoon)—Schubert's "Unfinished" Symphony; Copland's "Quiet City"; Hindemith's 'cello concerto (Gregor Piatigorsky, soloist); Brahms' Fourth Symphony.

Series B: Aug. 7 (evening) — Mozart's Symphony in G minor; Mozart's Requiem (excerpts); Beethoven's Fifth Symphony. Aug. 9 (evening)—Mozart's "Eine kleine Nachtmusik"; Hanson's Second Symphony (Romantic); Brahms' piano concerto No. 2 (Leonard Shure, soloist); Wagner's Prelude to "Die Meistersinger" and to "Lohengrin." Aug. 10 (afternoon) — Mozart's Symphony in E flat major; Debussy's "La Mer," and Berlioz' Fantastic Symphony.

Series C: Aug. 14 (evening)—Prelude and Fugue in C major by Bach-Koussevitzky; Beethoven's "Missa Solemnis." Aug. 16 (evening)—Vaughan Williams' "London" Symphony; Barber's violin concerto (Ruth Posselt, soloist); Wagner's Prelude to "Parsifal," Good Friday Spell from "Parsifal, and Overture to "Tannhaeuser." Aug. 17 (afternoon)—Sibelius' Sixth Symphony; Strauss' "Death and Transfiguration"; Tchaikovsky's Fifth Symphony.

Among the guests during the Markova-Dolin festival will be Ruth St. Denis, Ted Shawn, Irina Baronova, Paul Draper, Paul Haakon, Barton Mumaw, Martha Graham, Doris Humphrey and Charles Weidman.

All in all, ample opportunity for what Dr. Koussevitzky calls "a broader comprehension" of both music and dance.

This Clipping From
LOS ANGELES, CALIF.
EXAMINER
JUN 11 1941

This Clipping From DETROIT, MICH.
FREE PRESS
JUN 8 - 1941

This Clipping From
NEWARK, N. J.
NEWS
MAY 2 4 1941

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
EVENING UNION
MAY 2 4 1941

This Clipping From MIDDLETOWN, CONN.
PRESS
MAY 31 1941

This Clipping From
LAWRENCE, MASS.
TRIBUNE
May 23, 1941

This Clipping From
ALBANY, N.Y.
KNICKERBOCKER NEWS
MAY 2 4 1941

This Clipping From
HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES
MAY 2 4 1941

This Clipping From BRADFORD, PA.
STAR RECORD
MAY 28 1941

This Clipping From
INDIANAPOLIS, IND.
STAR
MAY 25 1941

THIS CLIPPING FROM
CATSKILL, N. Y.
MAIL
MAY 27 1941

This Clipping From
WATERBURY, CONN.
AMERICAN
MAY 26 1941

This Clipping From
SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
GAZETTE
MAY 26 1941

This Clipping From
TORRINGTON, CONN.
REGISTER
MAY 24 1941

This Clipping From
SYRACUSE, N. Y.
HERALD-AMERICAN
MAY 25 1941

This Clipping From
ALBANY, N. Y.
TIMES UNION
MAY 25 1941

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS
MAY 2 4 1941

This Clipping From GALVESTON, TEX.
TRIBUNE
MAY 30 1941

This Clipping From
WATERBURY, CONN.
REPUBLICAN
MAY 25 1941

Berkshire Festival Program Announced

Stockbridge, Mass., May 24.

THE EIGHTH annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Tanglewood, between Stockbridge and Lenox, will open July 31 at 8:30 p.m. with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky, conducting, playing Handel's Concerto for Organ and Orchestra, No. 10 In D Minor.

For the first time at Tanglewood, at the invitation of Dr. Koussevitzky, the Berkshire Musical Association's chorus, Horace Hunt, director, will perform with the orchestra. This chorus of voices, trained for many months by Mr. Hunt, comes from communities in the Berkshire area and will be heard in the Villa-Lobos "Choros" No. 10 and in Debussy's Three Nocturnes (clouds, festivals, sirens) the opening night.

When the festival was in its second year at the Hanna farm, the chorus participated under Mr. Hunt's direction. The same chorus will be heard again Thursday night, Aug. 7, with the orchestra under Dr. Koussevitzky's baton.

Chorus to Be Heard.

The Berkshire Festival Chorus, made up of students at the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, will be heard Thursday, Aug. 14, with a quartet of soloists. The center, which operates for six weeks, the last three during the period of the festival, has already received many more applications for admission than last year, its first, according to Mrs. Margaret Grant, the secretary.

Subscriptions for the nine festival concerts and box sales are considerably ahead of last year. Last fall when the subscription sale was announced it was stated that sales would close June 30, or earlier if the lists were filled. After the subscription sale closes tickets ference, Courthouse, Pittsfield, Mass.

Three Series Planned.

The programs follow:

SERIES "A"

—Thursday Evening, July 31—
"Concerto for Organ and Orchestra, No. 10, In D Minor"........Handel
"Three Nocturnes" (clouds, festivals, sirens)..........Debussy
"Choros No. 10"..........Villa-Lobos
"Symphony No. 3" ("Eroica")..Beethoven
(Chorus of the Berkshire Musical Association.)

—Saturday Evening, Aug. 2—
"Italian Symphony"..........Mendelssohn
"Overture to Leonore, No. 3"...Beethoven
"Symphony No. 5"..........Shostakovitch

—Sunday Afternoon, Aug. 3—
"Unfinished Symphony"........Schubert
"Quiet City"..................Copland
"Violoncello [illegible]to"..........Hindemith
"Symphony [illegible]..........Brahms
Soloist, Gregor Piatigorsky.

SERIES "B"

—Thursday Evening, Aug. 7—
"Symphony In G Minor" (K. 550)—Mozart
"Requiem" (excerpts)..........Mozart
"Symphony No. 5"..........Beethoven
(Chorus, Berkshire Musical Association.)

—Saturday Evening, Aug. 9—
"Eine Kleine Nachtmusik"........Mozart
Symphony No. 2, "Romantic"....Hanson
"Concerto No. 2 in B-Flat for Pianoforte"..........Brahms
Prelude to "Lohengrin"..........Wagner
Prelude to "Die Meistersinger"....Wagner
Soloist, Leonard Shure.

—Sunday Afternoon, Aug. 10—
"Symphony in E-Flat Major" (K. 543)..........Mozart
"La Mer"..........Debussy
"Fantastic Symphony"..........Berlioz

SERIES "C"

—Thursday Evening, Aug. 14—
"Prelude and Fugue in C Major".........Bach-Koussevitzky
"Missa Solemnis"..........Beethoven
Quartet of soloists.
Berkshire Festival Chorus.

—Saturday Evening, Aug. 16—
"London Symphony"....Vaughan Williams
"Violin Concerto"..........Barber
"Prelude to "Parsifal"..........Wagner
"Good Friday Spell" from "Parsifal"..........Wagner
Overture to "Tannhauser"..........Wagner
Soloist, Ruth Posselt.

—Sunday Afternoon, Aug. 17—
"Symphony No. 6"..........Sibelius
"Death and Transfiguration"..........Strauss
"Symphony No. 5"..........Tschaikowsky

This Clipping From CINCINNATI, O.
ENQUIRER
JUN 10 1941

190

This Clipping From ROANOKE, VA.
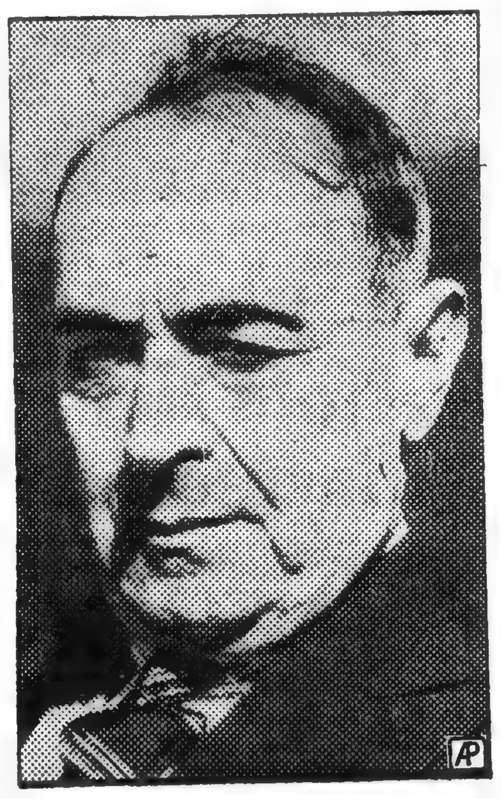
TIMES

JUN 1 - 1941

The eighth annual Berkshire symphonic festival, with the Boston Symphony orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky, will open at Tanglewood ~~in~~ Massachusetts on July 31, presenting Handel's concerto for organ and orchestra, No. 10 in D Minor. On the same program will be the Berkshire Musical Association Chorus, under Horace Hunt, to be heard in the Villa-Lobos "Choros" No. 10 and in Debussy's Three Nocturnes.



SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY

The festival will consist of nine concerts, lasting through July until August 17. There will be three series of three concerts each.

* * *

Better Acoustics

The Carnegie Corporation of New York has voted a grant of $5,000 to the Lewisohn Stadium concerts to improve the amplification and acoustics at the stadium, where the New York Philharmonic-Symphony holds forth during the summer.

The money will be used to reconstruct the wings of the present shell, to enlarge the sound booth, improve equipment and to re-locate the sound speakers.

Five amplifiers will be used, located above the shell to create the illusion of sound coming from the stage itself. The reproducers will be so designed that complete coverage of the stadium will be possible, and still permit patrons at the front tables to hear the sound directly from the stage without amplification.

The acoustics of the stadium are variable, improving with increased attendance. To minimize the "echo" in parts of the field, the sound will be directed only to those sections that are occupied.

THIS CLIPPING FROM CHICAGO, ILL.
DIAPASON

JUN

E. POWER BIGGS WILL PLAY AND TEACH AT TANGLEWOOD

The trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra announce the second season of the Berkshire Music Center, under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky, at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., from July 7 to Aug. 17. For the opening concert of the festival on July 31 E. Power Biggs has been engaged as organ soloist, playing the Tenth Concerto of Handel on the new organ designed by G. Donald Harrison. While the emphasis of the music center is on orchestral and ensemble playing, the organ is represented on the faculty and there is opportunity for organ study under Mr. Biggs.

Tanglewood, the extensive estate which was presented by Mrs. Gorham Brooks to the Boston Symphony Orchestra, holds artistic associations as well as natural beauty. Tanglewood has become a gathering point in the summer of the musically minded from every state in the Union and from Canada. The festival performances in 1941 are expected to have an attendance of more than 70,000. The audiences are especially notable for the large number of persons prominent in the musical world.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
VOGUE
GREENWICH, CONN.

JUN 1 - 1940

IN MASSACHUSETTS, the biggest fête is the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, during the first three week-ends of August, at "Tanglewood," between Stockbridge and Lenox. Here, in a fluted, grey music shed, shaped like a wide wedge from a pie, Serge Koussevitzky conducts the Boston Symphony Orchestra in three programs on each week-end. In the second series, Albert Spalding will play the Tschaikowsky Violin Concerto; and in the third, there will be Dorothy Maynor, the Negro soprano, singing the arias from Hindemith's opera, "Mathis der Maler." The Festival, like many other American outdoor music events, is a family affair, with big groups coming to spend whole week-ends, wandering about the lovely grounds, and sitting at night in the music shed or outside on the ground. It is all casual, unpretentious, and as American as brown bread.

The great lure, in fact, of all the summer happenings—the little fairs, the great expositions, the pageants and parades—lies in their completely American flavour and tang. After years of expatriation in travel, Americans are at last off to their own fairs, discovering the drama of their own country.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES

JUN 1 - 1941

AS BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL APPROACHES

Full Programs Are Made Public—Two New Buildings

AT the eighth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Tanglewood, between Stockbridge and Lenox, Mass., which opens Thursday night, July 31, the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under Serge Koussevitzky, will be assisted by the chorus of the Berkshire Musical Association, Horace Hunt, director, and the Berkshire Festival Chorus. Gregor Piatigorsky, 'cello; Leonard Shure, piano, and Ruth Posselt, violin, will be the soloists.

The complete programs are as follows:

SERIES "A"

Thursday Night, July 31

Concerto for organ and orchestra, No. 10, in D minor	Handel
Three Nocturnes: Clouds; Festivals, Sirens	Debussy
Choros No. 10	Villa-Lobos
Symphony No. 3, "Eroica"	Beethoven

Chorus of the Berkshire Musical Association.

Saturday Night, Aug. 2

"Italian" symphony	Mendelssohn
Overture to "Leonore," No. 3	Beethoven
Symphony No. 5	Shostakovich

Sunday Afternoon, Aug. 3

"Unfinished" symphony	Schubert
Quiet City	Copland
'Cello Concerto	Hindemith
Symphony No. 4	Brahms

Gregor Piatigorsky, soloist.

SERIES "B"

Thursday Night, Aug. 7

Symphony in G minor (K. 550); Requiem (Excerpts)	Mozart
Symphony No. 5	Beethoven

Chorus of the Berkshire Musical Association.

Saturday Night, Aug. 9

"Eine Kleine Nachtmusik"	Mozart
Symphony No. 2, "Romantic"	Hanson
Concerto No. 2, in B flat, for piano	Brahms
Prelude to "Lohengrin"; Prelude to "Die Meistersinger"	Wagner

Leonard Shure, soloist.

Sunday Afternoon, Aug. 10

Symphony in E flat (K. 543)	Mozart
La Mer	Debussy
"Fantastic" symphony	Berlioz

SERIES "C"

Thursday Night, Aug. 14

Prelude and Fugue in C	Bach-Koussevitzky
Missa Solemnis	Beethoven

Quartet of soloists; Berkshire Festival Chorus.

Saturday Night, Aug. 16

"London" symphony	Vaughan Williams
Violin Concerto	Barber
Prelude to "Parsifal"; Good Friday Spell, from "Parsifal"; Overture to "Tannhaeuser"	Wagner

Ruth Posselt, soloist.

Sunday Afternoon, Aug. 17

Symphony No. 6	Sibelius
Death and Transfiguration	Strauss
Symphony No. 5	Tchaikovsky

* * *

More than 700 students have applied for enrollment at the Berkshire Music Center, which will open its second session on July 7 at Tanglewood. Their applications have already been sifted and Serge Koussevitzky said last week that most of those who will be admitted to the specialized classes have already been selected. Six have been picked for active participation in Dr. Koussevitzky's orchestral conducting classes, nearly all of the eighty-five instrumentalists for the advanced orchestra have been determined, and so have those who will study choral conducting under G. Wallace Woodworth and Hugh Ross, chamber music under Gregor Piatigorsky, composition under Paul Hindemith and Aaron Copland and opera under Dr. Herbert Graf.

More than 300 of the applicants will have to be turned down, for the enrollment of the center is limited to 350. But despite the already existing surplus it was announced that a limited number can still be accepted for the center's largest department—that of music and culture. This department, which has no entrance requirements beyond a certain amount of experience in choral singing, is open to music students, college students, teachers and amateurs and the Festival Chorus will be drawn from its numbers.

Scholarships have been presented to the center by the Curtis Institute of Music and the Academy of Vocal Arts of Philadelphia, the Eastman School of Music in Rochester, the Juilliard School of Music in New York and the New England Conservatory of Music in Boston. This is offered as proof that the center complements rather than competes with existing conservatories and music schools. Other scholarship funds have been granted by ASCAP, the Rhode Island Federation of Music Clubs, the Rockefeller Foundation, trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and a number of individual donors.

Two new buildings are under construction for this session. One is a theatre-concert hall with a seating capacity of 1,200, which will be used for rehearsals and performances by the opera department and the student orchestras. The other is a chamber-music hall with a seating capacity of 400, which will be used for classes and lectures as well as for rehearsals and concerts. Both buildings were designed by Eliel Saarinen, Finnish architect.

This Clipping From MILWAUKEE, WIS.
JOURNAL
JUN 1 - 1941

Serge Koussevitzky's basic Philharmonic-symphony programs include two standard symphonies, the Tchaikovsky Fourth and the Beethoven "pastoral," as well as the Shostakovich Fifth.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE

JUN 1 - 1941

Many Apply For Berkshire Music Center

Enrollment Total Limited to 350; Membership of Advanced Classes Chosen

The Berkshire Music Center, at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., has received over 700 applications for enrollment for its second session, from July 7 to Aug. 17. Only about half this number can be accepted. Serge Koussevitzky, who is director of the Center, has chosen six active members for his conducting class, which will be attended by others as listeners. The personnel has already been virtually decided for the advanced orchestra, to be instructed by principal members of the Boston Symphony; for the classes in choral conducting under G. Wallace Woodworth and Hugh Ross; in chamber music under Gregor Piatigorsky; in composition under Paul Hindemith and Aaron Copland, and in opera under Dr. Herbert Graf.

A limited number of students can still be accepted for the Center's Department of Music and Culture. This includes the festival chorus, which will sing in Beethoven's "Missa Solemnis" in the Berkshire Festival concert of Aug. 14, a symphony orchestra and several smaller choral groups. Students in all departments will be entitled to attend the nine Berkshire Symphonic Festival programs.

Five prominent music schools have donated scholarships. Other scholarship funds have been provided by the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers, the Rhode Island Federation of Music Clubs, the Boston Symphony's trustees and various individuals, and by a grant from the Rockefeller Foundation.

Two new buildings designed by Eliel Saarinen will be opened in July. One is a new theater and concert hall seating 1,200, and the other a chamber music hall with a capacity of 400.

THIS CLIPPING FROM BROOKLYN, N. Y.
EAGLE

JUN 2 - 1940

OVERTONES

Summer Music Brings Announcements Of Stadium Season and Goldman Band; Berkshire Festival of Special Interest

By MILES KASTENDIECK

Berkshire Festival in August

An ambitious program promises world leadership for the Berkshire Symphonic Festival of 1940. Now in its seventh year, the festival announces nine programs for three consecutive weekends as well as the inauguration of the Berkshire Music Center. The first concert is scheduled for Thursday evening, Aug. 1, when the first symphonies of Beethoven, Schumann and Sibelius will be heard. The second weekend will be devoted to a Beethoven-Tchaikowsky "festival"; the third to Bach's B Minor Mass and miscellaneous programs.

"Tanglewood," the Boston Symphony Orchestra's historic 200 acre estate, between Lenox and Stockbridge, Mass., will be the six weeks between July 8 and Aug. 18, a place of busy musical life of an unprecedented sort. Serge Koussevitzky, 30 members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, other prominent musicians and distinguished lecturers will provide the faculty for the Center where those who attend will have the opportunity of "living and working in music," in close association with a great orchestra and its conductor. There will be a class in orchestral conducting under Serge Koussevitzky, a student orchestra of skilled players, an amateur orchestra, a chorus, courses in composition, operatic interpretation, choral conducting and other subjects. Members of the Music Center will be trained as a festival chorus which will appear in the Festival performance of Bach's Mass in B Minor.

A visit to one or more sessions of this festival is worth a special trip, for there is something ideal about the whole story, setting and activity. Europe's curtailed Summer festivals throw the limelight on Tanglewood. No European festival was quite like this. America has created something of its own with the Berkshire Festival.

This Clipping From ROANOKE, VA.
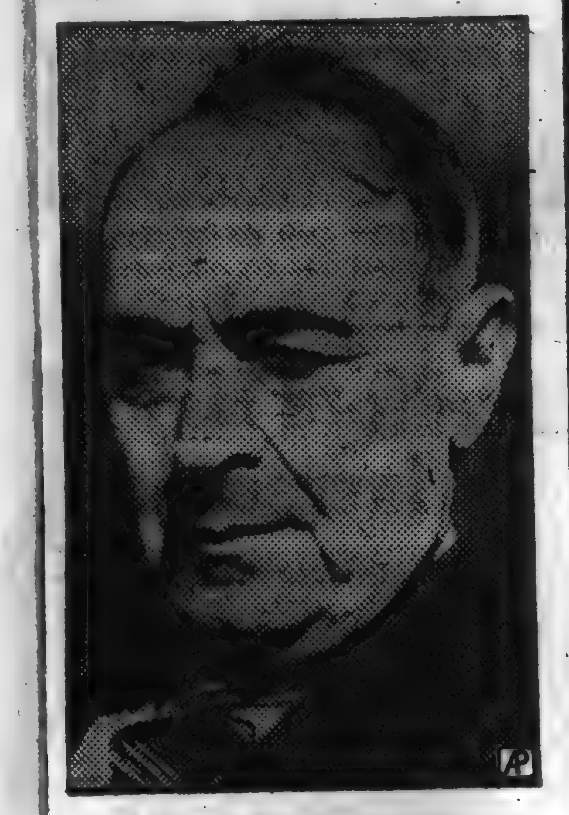
TIMES

JUN 1 - 1941

The eighth annual Berkshire symphonic festival, with the Boston Symphony orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky, will open at Tanglewood in Massachusetts on July 31, presenting Handel's concerto for organ and orchestra, No. 10 in D Minor. On the same program will be the Berkshire Musical Association Chorus, under Horace Hunt, to be heard in the Villa-Lobos "Choros" No. 10 and in Debussy's Three Nocturnes.



SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY

The festival will consist of nine concerts, lasting through July until August 17. There will be three series of three concerts each.

* * *

Better Acoustics

The Carnegie Corporation of New York has voted a grant of $5,000 to the Lewisohn Stadium concerts to improve the amplification and acoustics at the stadium, where the New York Philharmonic-Symphony holds forth during the summer.

The money will be used to reconstruct the wings of the present shell, to enlarge the sound booth, improve equipment and to re-locate the sound speakers.

Five amplifiers will be used, located above the shell to create the illusion of sound coming from the stage itself. The reproducers will be so designed that complete coverage of the stadium will be possible, and still permit patrons at the front tables to hear the sound directly from the stage without amplification.

The acoustics of the stadium are variable, improving with increased attendance. To minimize the "echo" in parts of the field, the sound will be directed only to those sections that are occupied.

THIS CLIPPING FROM CHICAGO, ILL.
DIAPASON

JUN 1 - 1941

E. POWER BIGGS WILL PLAY AND TEACH AT TANGLEWOOD

The trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra announce the second season of the Berkshire Music Center, under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky, at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., from July 7 to Aug. 17. For the opening concert of the festival on July 31 E. Power Biggs has been engaged as organ soloist, playing the Tenth Concerto of Handel on the new organ designed by G. Donald Harrison. While the emphasis of the music center is on orchestral and ensemble playing, the organ is represented on the faculty and there is opportunity for organ study under Mr. Biggs.

Tanglewood, the extensive estate which was presented by Mrs. Gorham Brooks to the Boston Symphony Orchestra, holds artistic associations as well as natural beauty. Tanglewood has become a gathering point in the summer of the musically minded from every state in the Union and from Canada. The festival performances in 1941 are expected to have an attendance of more than 70,000. The audiences are especially notable for the large number of persons prominent in the musical world.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
VOGUE
GREENWICH, CONN.

JUN 1 - 1940

IN MASSACHUSETTS, the biggest fête is the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, during the first three week-ends of August, at "Tanglewood," between Stockbridge and Lenox. Here, in a fluted, grey music shed, shaped like a wide wedge from a pie, Serge Koussevitzky conducts the Boston Symphony Orchestra in three programs on each week-end. In the second series, Albert Spalding will play the Tschaikowsky Violin Concerto; and in the third, there will be Dorothy Maynor, the Negro soprano, singing the arias from Hindemith's opera, "Mathis der Maler." The Festival, like many other American outdoor music events, is a family affair, with big groups coming to spend whole week-ends, wandering about the lovely grounds, and sitting at night in the music shed or outside on the ground. It is all casual, unpretentious, and as American as brown bread.

The great lure, in fact, of all the summer happenings—the little fairs, the great expositions, the pageants and parades—lies in their completely American flavour and tang. After years of expatriation in travel, Americans are at last off to their own fairs, discovering the drama of their own country.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES

JUN 1 - 1941

AS BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL APPROACHES

Full Programs Are Made Public—Two New Buildings

At the eighth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Tanglewood, between Stockbridge and Lenox, Mass., which opens Thursday night, July 31, the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under Serge Koussevitzky, will be assisted by the chorus of the Berkshire Musical Association, Horace Hunt, director, and the Berkshire Festival Chorus. Gregor Piatigorsky, 'cello; Leonard Shure, piano, and Ruth Posselt, violin, will be the soloists.

The complete programs are as follows:

SERIES "A"

Thursday Night, July 31

Concerto for organ and orchestra, No. 10, in D minor	Handel
Three Nocturnes: Clouds; Festivals, Sirens	Debussy
Choros No. 10	Villa-Lobos
Symphony No. 3, "Eroica"	Beethoven

Chorus of the Berkshire Musical Association.

Saturday Night, Aug. 2

"Italian" symphony	Mendelssohn
Overture to "Leonore," No. 3	Beethoven
Symphony No. 5	Shostakovich

Sunday Afternoon, Aug. 3

"Unfinished" symphony	Schubert
Quiet City	Copland
'Cello Concerto	Hindemith
Symphony No. 4	Brahms

Gregor Piatigorsky, soloist.

SERIES "B"

Thursday Night, Aug. 7

Symphony in G minor (K. 550); Requiem (Excerpts)	Mozart
Symphony No. 5	Beethoven

Chorus of the Berkshire Musical Association.

Saturday Night, Aug. 9

"Eine Kleine Nachtmusik"	Mozart
Symphony No. 2, "Romantic"	Hanson
Concerto No. 2, in B flat, for piano	Brahms
Prelude to "Lohengrin"; Prelude to "Die Meistersinger"	Wagner

Leonard Shure, soloist.

Sunday Afternoon, Aug. 10

Symphony in E flat (K. 543)	Mozart
La Mer	Debussy
"Fantastic" symphony	Berlioz

SERIES "C"

Thursday Night, Aug. 14

Prelude and Fugue in C	Bach-Koussevitzky
Missa Solemnis	Beethoven

Quartet of soloists; Berkshire Festival Chorus.

Saturday Night, Aug. 16

"London" symphony	Vaughan Williams
Violin Concerto	Barber
Prelude to "Parsifal"; Good Friday Spell, from "Parsifal"; Overture to "Tannhaeuser"	Wagner

Ruth Posselt, soloist.

Sunday Afternoon, Aug. 17

Symphony No. 6	Sibelius
Death and Transfiguration	Strauss
Symphony No. 5	Tchaikovsky

* * *

More than 700 students have applied for enrollment at the Berkshire Music Center, which will open its second session on July 7 at Tanglewood. Their applications have already been sifted and Serge Koussevitzky said last week that most of those who will be admitted to the specialized classes have already been selected. Six have been picked for active participation in Dr. Koussevitzky's orchestral conducting classes, nearly all of the eighty-five instrumentalists for the advanced orchestra have been determined, and so have those who will study choral conducting under G. Wallace Woodworth and Hugh Ross, chamber music under Gregor Piatigorsky, composition under Paul Hindemith and Aaron Copland and opera under Dr. Herbert Graf.

More than 300 of the applicants will have to be turned down, for the enrollment of the center is limited to 350. But despite the already existing surplus it was announced that a limited number can still be accepted for the center's largest department—that of music and culture. This department, which has no entrance requirements beyond a certain amount of experience in choral singing, is open to music students, college students, teachers and amateurs and the Festival Chorus will be drawn from its numbers.

Scholarships have been presented to the center by the Curtis Institute of Music and the Academy of Vocal Arts of Philadelphia, the Eastman School of Music in Rochester, the Juilliard School of Music in New York and the New England Conservatory of Music in Boston. This is offered as proof that the center complements rather than competes with existing conservatories and music schools. Other scholarship funds have been granted by ASCAP, the Rhode Island Federation of Music Clubs, the Rockefeller Foundation, trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and a number of individual donors.

Two new buildings are under construction for this session. One is a theatre-concert hall with a seating capacity of 1,200, which will be used for rehearsals and performances by the opera department and the student orchestras. The other is a chamber-music hall with a seating capacity of 400, which will be used for classes and lectures as well as for rehearsals and concerts. Both buildings were designed by Eliel Saarinen, Finnish architect.

This Clipping From MILWAUKEE, WIS.
JOURNAL
JUN 1 - 1941

Serge Koussevitzky's basic Philharmonic-symphony programs include two standard symphonies, the Tchaikovsky Fourth and the Beethoven "pastoral," as well as the Shostakovich Fifth.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE

JUN 1 - 1941

Many Apply For Berkshire Music Center

Enrollment Total Limited to 350; Membership of Advanced Classes Chosen

The Berkshire Music Center, at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., has received over 700 applications for enrollment for its second session, from July 7 to Aug. 17. Only about half this number can be accepted. Serge Koussevitzky, who is director of the Center, has chosen six active members for his conducting class, which will be attended by others as listeners. The personnel has already been virtually decided for the advanced orchestra, to be instructed by principal members of the Boston Symphony; for the classes in choral conducting under G. Wallace Woodworth and Hugh Ross; in chamber music under Gregor Piatigorsky; in composition under Paul Hindemith and Aaron Copland, and in opera under Dr. Herbert Graf.

A limited number of students can still be accepted for the Center's Department of Music and Culture. This includes the festival chorus, which will sing in Beethoven's "Missa Solemnis" in the Berkshire Festival concert of Aug. 14, a symphony orchestra and several smaller choral groups. Students in all departments will be entitled to attend the nine Berkshire Symphonic Festival programs.

Five prominent music schools have donated scholarships. Other scholarship funds have been provided by the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers, the Rhode Island Federation of Music Clubs, the Boston Symphony's trustees and various individuals, and by a grant from the Rockefeller Foundation.

Two new buildings designed by Eliel Saarinen will be opened in July. One is a new theater and concert hall seating 1,200, and the other a chamber music hall with a capacity of 400.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
BROOKLYN, N. Y.
EAGLE

JUN 2 - 1940

OVERTONES

Summer Music Brings Announcements Of Stadium Season and Goldman Band; Berkshire Festival of Special Interest

By MILES KASTENDIECK

Berkshire Festival in August

An ambitious program promises world leadership for the Berkshire Symphonic Festival of 1940. Now in its seventh year, the festival announces nine programs for three consecutive weekends as well as the inauguration of the Berkshire Music Center. The first concert is scheduled for Thursday evening, Aug. 1, when the first symphonies of Beethoven, Schumann and Sibelius will be heard. The second weekend will be devoted to a Beethoven-Tchaikowsky "festival"; the third to Bach's B Minor Mass and miscellaneous programs.

"Tanglewood," the Boston Symphony Orchestra's historic 200 acre estate, between Lenox and Stockbridge, Mass., will be the six weeks between July 8 and Aug. 18, a place of busy musical life of an unprecedented sort. Serge Koussevitzky, 30 members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, other prominent musicians and distinguished lecturers will provide the faculty for the Center where those who attend will have the opportunity of "living and working in music," in close association with a great orchestra and its conductor. There will be a class in orchestral conducting under Serge Koussevitzky, a student orchestra of skilled players, an amateur orchestra, a chorus, courses in composition, operatic interpretation, choral conducting and other subjects. Members of the Music Center will be trained as a festival chorus which will appear in the Festival performance of Bach's Mass in B Minor.

A visit to one or more sessions of this festival is worth a special trip, for there is something ideal about the whole story, setting and activity. Europe's curtailed Summer festivals throw the limelight on Tanglewood. No European festival was quite like this. America has created something of its own with the Berkshire Festival.

191-

This Clipping From DALLAS, TEX.
NEWS
JUN 1 - 1941

This Clipping From
CORPUS CHRISTI, TEX.
TIMES
JUN 1 1941

This Clipping From ASHLAND, KY.
INDEPENDENT
JUN 1 - 1941

THIS CLIPPING FROM LANCASTER, PA.
SUNDAY NEWS
JUN 1 - 1941

THIS CLIPPING FROM CLINTON, ILL.
JOURNAL - REPUBLIC
JUN 1 - 1941

This Clipping From MONTGOMERY, ALA.
ADVERTISER
JUN 1 - 1941

This Clipping From
SHREVEPORT, LA.
TIMES
JUN 1 - 1941

This Clipping From
INDIANAPOLIS, IND.
STAR
JUN 1 - 1941

This Clipping From
BILLINGS, MONT.
MORNING GAZETTE
JUN 1 1941

This Clipping From
SAN MATEO, CALIF.
TIMES & NEWS LEADER
JUN 3 1941

This Clipping From MONTGOMERY, ALA.
ADVERTISER
JUN 1 - 1941

* * *

The eighth annual Berkshire symphonic festival, with the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky, will open at Tanglewood in Massachusetts on July 31, presenting Handel's concerto for organ and orchestra, No. 10 in D Minor. On the same program will be the Berkshire's Musical Association Chorus, under Horace Hunt, to be heard in the Villa-Lobos "Choros" No. 10 and in Debussy's Three Nocturnes.

The festival will consist of nine concerts, lasting through July until Aug. 17. There will be three series of three concerts each

---

This Clipping From
BEAUMONT, TEX.
JOURNAL
JUN 6 1941

KNOXVILLE, TENN.
NEWS-SENTINEL
JUN 15 1941

This Clipping From
ALBANY, N. Y.
TIMES UNION
JUN 8 - 1941

The Symphonic Festival, founded in 1934 and moved in 1938 to its present permanent quarters at Tanglewood, between Lenox and Stockbridge, is held during the first three week-ends in August and attracts audiences of 5,000 to 6,000 persons from all parts of the country. The Boston Symphony orchestra, with Serge Koussevitzky as conductor, gives the Berkshires a leadnig place in the musical calendar of the year. Admirers of chamber music have had the opportunity, since 1918, of hearing the best in this form of musical expression at the weekly chamber music concerts at Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge's Temple of Music at South Mountain, Pittsfield.

This Clipping From BALTIMORE, MD.
MORNING SUN
JUN 1 - 1941

Berkshire Festival Program Announced

PROGRAMS for the nine concerts of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival to be given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood, near Stockbridge, Mass., between July 31 and August 17, have been announced by festival officials.

This is the eighth season for the festival. Serge Koussevitsky will conduct the concerts, and the orchestra will be assisted by the Berkshire Musical Association's Chorus, which is directed by Horace Hunt, and the Berkshire Festival Chorus, the latter of which is composed to students of the Music Center, the school which is operated for a six-week session in conjunction with the concerts, and which opens July 7.

The Music Center was inaugurated last year, and many more applications have already been received for study under the distinguished teachers that comprise its faculty than were sent in last year, according to the secretary, Mrs. Margaret Grant.

Soloists For Year

Soloists for this year include Greger Piatigorsky, who will play the new "Violoncello Concerto" by Hindemith; Leonard Shure, pianist, who is scheduled for the Brahms "Concerto in B Flat", and Ruth Posselt, who is to play the "Concerto for Violin" by the American composer, Samuel Barber.

The concerts will be given on Thursday, Saturday and Sunday of three successive weeks. Special features of the festival will be the performance of Beethoven's "Missa Solemnis," in which the choral portion will be sung by the Berkshire Festival Chorus; and the "Chorus No. 10" (Villa-Lobos), "Sirens" (Debussy) and excerpts from Mozart's "Requiem," to be sung by the Berkshire Musical Association Chorus.

Festival Programs

The programs for the festival are as follows:

Thursday, July 31: "Concerto for Organ and Orchestra" (Handel), "Three Nocturnes" (Debussy), "Chorus No. 10" (Villa-Lobos), and the "Eroica Symphony' (Beethoven); Saturday, August 2: "Italian Symphony" (Mendelssohn), "Leonore Overture No. 3" (Beethoven), and "Symphony No. 5" (Shostakovich); Sunday, August 3: "Unfinished Symphony" (Schubert), "Quiet City" (Copeland), "Violoncello Concerto" (Hindemith), "Symphony No. 4" (Brahms).

Thursday, August 7: "Symphony in G Minor" (Mozart), "Requiem" (excerpts) by Mozart, and "Symphony No. 5" (Beethoven); Saturday, August 9: "Eine Kleine Nachtmusik" (Mozart), "Symphony No. 2" (Hanson), "Concerto in B Flat" (Brahms), "Prelude" to "Lohengrin" and "Prelude" to "Die Meistersinger" (Wagner); Sunday, August 10: "Symphony in E Flat Major" (Mozart); "La Mer" (Debussy), and "Fantastic Symphony" (Berlioz).

Thursday, August 14: "Prelude and Fugue in C Major" (Bach-Koussevitzky) and "Missa Solemnis" (Beethoven); Saturday, August 16: "London Symphony" (Vaughan Williams), "Concerto for Violin" (Barber), and three Wagner selections, including the "Prelude" to "Parsifal," the "Good Friday Spell" from "Parsifal," and the "Overture" to "Tannhauser"; Sunday, August 17: "Symphony No. 6" (Sibelius), "Death and Transfiguration" (Strauss), and "Symphony No. 5" (Tchaikovsky).

This Clipping From NORWALK, CONN.
HOUR
JUN 3 - 1941

BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL TO BEGIN ON JULY 31

The eighth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Tanglewood between Stockbridge and Lenox, will open July 31 at 8:30 P. M. with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky conducting, playing Handel's Concerto for Organ and Orchestra, No. 10 in D Minor.

For the first time at Tanglewood, at the invitation of Dr. Koussevitzky, the Berkshire Musical Association's chorus, Horace Hunt, director, will perform with the orchestra. This chorus of voices, trained for many months by Mr. Hunt comes from communities in the Berkshire area and will be heard in the Villa-Lobos Choros No. 10 and in Debussy's Three Nocturnes (Clouds - Festivals - Sirens) the opening night. When the Festival was in its second year at the Hanna farm, the chorus participated under Mr. Hunt's direction. The same chorus will be heard again Thursday night Aug. 7 with the orchestra under Dr. Koussevitzky's baton.

This Clipping From COLUMBUS, OHIO
CITIZEN
JUN 1 - 1941

Berkshire Festival

Speaking of the Berkshire Music Center, as we were several paragraphs back, the programs for the eight annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Tanglewood have been announced. The Festival will open July 31 at 8:30 p. m. with the performance of Handel's Concerto for Organ and Orchestra by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky conducting.

In this opening concert, the Berkshire Musical Association's Chorus, Horace Hunt, director, will perform with the orchestra for the first time at Tanglewood. This chorus, trained for many months by Mr. Hunt, is drawn from communities in the Berkshire area. Once before it sang with the Boston orchestra—when the Festival was in its second year at the Hanna farm.

Another chorus, the Berkshire Festival Chorus, made up of students at the Berkshire Music Center, will be heard with a quartet of soloists in Beethoven's "Missa Solemnis" on Aug. 14.

Following are details for the full Festival schedule:

Series "A"

THURSDAY EVENING, JULY 31

Concerto for Organ and Orchestra No. 10 in D minor ------------------Handel
Three Nocturnes ------------------Debussy
Clouds
Festivals
Sirens
Choros No. 10 ------------------Villa-Lobos
Chorus of the Berkshire Musical Association
Symphony No. 3, "Eroica" ------Beethoven

SATURDAY EVENING, AUG. 2

"Italian" Symphony ----------Mendelssohn
Overture to "Leonore," No. 3----Beethoven
Symphony No. 5 --------------Shostakovitch

SUNDAY AFTERNOON, AUG. 3

"Unfinished" Symphony ----------Schubert
Quiet City --------------------------Copeland
Violoncello Concerto -------------Hindemith
Gregor Piatigorsky, Soloist
Symphony No. 4 ------------------Brahms

Series "B"

THURSDAY EVENING, AUG. 7

Symphony in G minor -------------Mozart
Requiem (Excerpts) ---------------Mozart
Chorus of the Berkshire Musical Association
Symphony No. 5 --------------Beethoven

SATURDAY EVENING, AUG. 9

"Eine Kleine Nachmusik" -----------Mozart
Symphony No. 2, "Romantic"-------Hanson
Concerto No. 2 in B flat for Pianoforte ---------------------------Brahms
Leonard Shure, Soloist
Prelude to "Lohengrin" -----------Wagner
Prelude to "Die Meistersinger" -----Wagner

SUNDAY AFTERNOON, AUG. 10

Symphony in E flat major ---------Mozart
"La Mer" ------------------------Debussy
Fantastic Symphony --------------Berlioz

Series "C"

THURSDAY EVENING, AUG. 14

Prelude and Fugue in C major----- ----------------------Bach-Koussevitzky
"Missa Solemnis" -----------------Beethoven
Quartet of Soloists
Berkshire Festival Chorus

SATURDAY EVENING, AUG. 16

"London" Symphony -----Vaughan Williams
Violin Concerto ---------------------Barber
Ruth Posselt, Soloist
Prelude to "Parsifal" -------------Wagner
Good Friday Spell from "Parsifal"--Wagner
Overture to "Tannhauser" ---------Wagner

SUNDAY AFTERNOON, AUG. 17

Symphony No. 6 ------------------Sibelius
"Death and Transfiguration" -------Strauss
Symphony No. 5 -------------Tchaikowsky

This Clipping From
PITTSBURGH, PA.
SUN-TELEGRAPH
JUN 1 - 1941

Vacationists Classic Progr Summer Mus

By J. FRED L
Sun-Telegraph M

FOR THOSE STUDENTS ar go to Europe each summer now providing a center at Tangl where they may learn and play. is in its second year.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under its distinguished leader, Serge Koussevitsky, has made a program more elaborate than before, and the school, connected with the colony, has enlisted the best of American teaching talent, together with such notables as Paul Hindemith and Aaron Copland, composers, and Herbert Graf, opera director. The place is one of the choice spots of American vacation scenes—the time, July 7 until August 17.

Mr. Lissfelt

The Boston Symphony expects to play the usual classic programs and as choral works has chosen the Mozart Requiem and Beethoven's Missa Solemnis. Novelties of Villa-Lobos, Piston, Copland, Hindemith and Samuel Barber are scheduled; revivals of Berloiz' "Fantastique Symphony," Hanson's "Romantic Symphony" are timely. The brilliant French, Russian and German works in Koussevitsky's avorite repertory all are there.

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS
JUN 9 - 1941

ALL TICKETS SOLD FOR FIRST SERIES IN MUSIC FESTIVAL

Stockbridge, June 9—Indicative of the continued demand for subscriptions to the eighth annual Berkshire Symphonic festival concerts at Tanglewood by the Boston Symphony orchestra and Serge Koussevitzky, was the announcement today by the festival trustees that all subscriptions for the first series had been sold. Tickets for single concerts in Series A beginning July 31 became available as soon as the quota of 1800 subscriptions for that series was reached.

Tickets for single concerts in Series B beginning August 7 and Series C beginning August 14 will be available when the subscription limit for these series is filled. Only 100 subscriptions remain for Series B and 150 for Series C, according to the trustees.

Reservations for tickets may be made by communicating with the Berkshire Symphonic festival at Stockbridge, or the New York office in Steinway hall, 113 West 57th street.

192

This Clipping From
ALBANY, N. Y.
TIMES UNION
JUN 1 - 1941

MUSIC WORLD

by E.S.V.O.

For the convenience of the music lovers of the Albany Area who are unable to attend the complete series of concerts by the Berkshire Symphonic festival by the Boston Symphony orchestra, under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky, we publish the programs covering the three weeks, beginning July 31, which are as follows:

SERIES "A"

I. Thursday Eve., July 31—
Handel: Concerto for Organ and Orchestra, No. 10, in ....D Minor
Debussy: Three Nocturnes ......(Clouds-Festivals-Sirens)
Villa-Lobos ....Choros No. 10
Beethoven: Symphony No. 3, ... "Broica"
(Chorus of the Berkshire Musical Association.)

II. Saturday Eve., August 2—
Mendelssohn: Italian Symphony
Beethoven: Overture to "Leonore" No. 3
Shostakovitch: Symphony No. 5

III. Sunday Aft., August 3—
Schubert: "Unfinished" .... Symphony
Copeland ...."Quiet City"
Hindemith ..Violincello Concerto
Brahms ....Symphony No. 4
Soloist: Gregor Piatigorsky.

SERIES "B"

IV. Thursday Eve., August 7—
Mozart: Symphony in G Minor .... (K.550)
Mozart: ....Requiem (Excerpts)
Beethoven ......Symphony No. 5
(Chorus, Berkshire Musical (Association)

V. Saturday Eve., August 9—
Mozart: "Eine Kleine .... Nactmusik"
Hanson: Symphony No. 2 .... "Romantic"

Brahms: Concerto No. 2 in .. ..B-flat for Pianoforte
Wagner: Prelude to "Lohengrin"
Wagner: Prelude to "Die ... . Meistersinger"
Soloist: Leonard Shure.

VI. Sunday Aft., August 10—
Mozart: Symphony in E flat .... Major (K.543).
Debussy: .... "La Mer"
Berlioz: ...Fantastic Symphony

SERIES "C"

VII. Thursday Eve., August 14—
Bach-Koussevitzky: Prelude ....and Fugue in C Major Beethoven: ..."Missa Salemnis"
Quartet of Soloists
Berkshire Festival Chorus

VIII. Saturday Eve., August 16—
Vaughan Williams: "London" .... Symphony
Barber: ....Violin Concerto
Wagner: Prelude to "Parsifal"
Wagner: Good Friday Spell .... from "Parsifal"
Wagner: Overture to ...."Tanhauser"
Soloist: Ruth Posselt.

IX. Sunday Aft., August 17—
Sibelius: ......Symphony No. 6
Strauss: "Death and .... Transfiguration"
Tchaikovsky: Symphony No. 5

This Clipping From
CHICAGO, ILL.
NEWS
JUN 6 - 1941

Music Views

In the Berkshires

BY EUGENE STINSON

PLANS for Serge Koussevitsky's festival with the Boston Symphony at Tanglewood, in Massachusetts, have been made public. The festival will consist of three weekly cycles of three concerts each, played on Thursday and Saturday evenings and Sunday afternoons. The festival opens July 31.

For the first week: Handel's tenth organ concerto, Debussy's Three Nocturnes, Villa-Lobos' Choros No. 10 and Beethoven's "Eroica" symphony. Mendelssohn's "Italian" symphony, Beethoven's third "Leonora" overture and Szostakovicz' fifth symphony. Schubert's Unfinished symphony, Copland's "Quiet City," Hindemith's recent cello concerto (Gregor Piatigorsky) and Brahms' fourth symphony.

For the second week: the G minor symphony and portions of the Requiem Mass of Mozart and Beethoven's fifth symphony. Mozart's "Eine Kleine Nachtmusik," Hanson's "Romantic" symphony, Brahms' piano concerto in B flat (Leonard Shure) and the preludes to "Lohengrin" and "Meistersinger." Mozart's E flat symphony, Debussy's "La Mer" and Berlioz' "Fantastic" symphony.

For the third week: the Bach-Koussevitsky prelude and fugue in C, and Beethoven's Missa Solemnis. Williams' "A London Symphony," Barber's violin concerto (Ruth Posselt), excerpts from "Parsifal" and the overture to "Tannhaeuser." Sibelius' sixth symphony, Strauss' "Death and Transfiguration" and Tschaikowsky's fifth symphony.

This Clipping From
WASHINGTON, D. C.
TIMES HERALD
JUN 8 - 1941

700 Ask to Enroll In Berkshire School..

For his school of conducting at this summer's session of the Berkshire Music Festival and Center, Serge Koussevitzky, venerable conductor of the Boston Orchestra, will have new buildings.

The center was established last year and will hold its second session at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., from July 7 to August 17. Seven hundred would-be conductors have applied for enrollment. They come from 200 schools of music and 150 universities and colleges. Only half of them can be accepted. Last summer Koussevitzky issued a list of the works to be prepared by his students. Only one native composition was included, a circumstance which stimulated some adverse comment.

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
SUNDAY UNION
& REPUBLICAN
JUN 8 - 1941

July Exhibitions At Berkshire Museum

Pittsfield, June 7 — Exhibitions scheduled for July at the Berkshire museum are as follows: July 1-August 10, paintings by Albert Sterner; July 1-31, Old Master drawings, lent by Durlacher Brothers; and drawings by Carl Pickhard; July 29, photographs and sketches of "Tanglewood Yesterday and Today," lent by the Boston Symphony orchestra. The museum is open on weekdays (except Mondays) from 10 a. m. to 5 p. m. and on Sundays from 2 to 5 p. m.

This Clipping From
JERSEY CITY, N. J.
JERSEY JOURNAL
JUN 2 - 1941

MUSIC NOTES

By EILEEN GATELY

Symphonic Summers

Amidst the cool and lovely setting of the New England Berkshires, within the last few years, has come into existence the now famous Berkshire Festival.

The very idea of outdoor symphonic concerts, which this Summer will be presented for the eighth consecutive year, was conceived in 1934 by Henry Hadley, the distinguished American conductor and composer. The leading executive of the festival is Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, who for three years was a member of the board of directors of the Metropolitan Opera Guild.

Feeling the true need for such an experiment, Mr. Hadley first organized a small group from the Philharmonic Symphony Orchestra, who used to perform in the outdoor horse show ring of the Hanna farm in Stockbridge, Mass. A short time later a stage, orchestra shell and 500 benches were constructed. The community indicated its spirit of cooperation; many of the permanent Summer residents made up the board of trustees. A variety of services were volunteered, and it was not long before ushers, ticket sellers, program and parking attendants were helping out, all serving free of charge.

Because of ill health in 1935 Dr. Hadley resigned and was succeeded by the capable Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Two years later the group moved to Tanglewood, beautiful estate of Mrs. Gorham Brooks and one-time home of Nathaniel Hawthorne, which Mrs. Brooks gave to the Boston Symphony.

The concerts were then increased to six, and in August, 1938, a fan-shaped music shed, erected on an acre and a half of ground and comfortably seating more than 6,000 people, was secured. One of the outstanding events of last Summer's season was the discovery of the colored soprano, Dorothy Maynor.

During the 1940 season Dr. Koussevitzky realized two of his fondest dreams—the festival presented a total of nine concerts for over 70,000 people, and a music center was established. This consists of a six weeks' Summer school under the management of the Boston Symphony trustees. The faculty includes the leading members of the orchestra and a group of more than a dozen musical authorities.

Like the Metropolitan Opera, the Bershire Symphonic Festival is a community effort, conceived and organized by local initiative. Through its continuous efforts to bring the best in music and talent to its people, it has attracted a nation-wide audience which responds to its message with electrifying enthusiasm.

May their example be a keynote to more and better Summer community ventures in the realm of music nearer home.

This Clipping From HARRISBURG, PA.
PATRIOT
JUN 6 - 1941

* * *

THE eighth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival, held in the cool New England mountains, will be formally opened on Thursday night, July 31. The Berkshire Music Center, established within the past two years at Tanglewood, between Stockbridge and Lenox, Mass., will also have an appeal for music lovers who will go to Tanglewood for the Symphonic Festival.

During the festival the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the conductorship of Serge Koussevitzky, will present outstanding guest artists as soloists with the orchestra. They are Gregor Piatigorsky, cellist, who appeared in Harrisburg several seasons ago with the Harrisburg Symphony Orchestra, under the conductorship of George King Raudenbush; Leonard Shure, pianist, and Ruth Posselt, violinist.

This Clipping From
HOLYOKE, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT TELEGRAM
JUN 5 - 1941

Berkshire Symphonic Festival To Open At Tanglewood July 31

The eighth annual Berksihre symphonic festival will open at Tanglewood this year the evening of July 31. The program for the first of the nine concerts to be conducted by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky will open with Handel's Concerto for Organ and Orchestra, No. 10 in D minor and will include Three Nocturnes by Debussy, Chorus No. 10 by Villa-Lobos, which is to be presented by the Berkshire Musical association chorus, and Beethoven's "Eroica," the third symphony.

This will be the first time the Berkshire organization has performed with the Boston Symphony at Tanglewood. Under the direction of Horace Hunt, the group, recruited from communities thruout the Berkshires, has trained for many months, and it will in two subsequent programs. The chorus has been heard before with the orchestra, during its second season, when the festival was held at the Hanna farm.

Complete programs for the nine concerts followw:

Thursday evening, July 31—Handel, Concerto for Organ and Orchestra, No. 10, in D Minor; Debussy, Three Nocturnes (Clouds-Festivals - Sirens); Villa - Lobos, Choros No. 10; Beethoven, Symphony No. 3, "Eroica" (chorus of the Berkshire Musical Association).

Saturday evening, August 2—Mendelssohn, "Italian" Symphony; Beethoven, Overture to "Leonore" No. 3; Shostakovitch, Symphony No. 5.

Sunday afternoon, August 3—Schubert, "Unfinished" Symphony; Copland, "Quiet City"; Hindemith, Violoncello Concerto; Brahms, Symphony No. 4, soloist, Gregor Piatigorsky.

SERIES "B"

Thursday evening, Aug. 7—Mozart, Symphony in G minor (K.550), Mozart, Requiem (Excerpts), Beethoven, Symphony No. 5. (Chorus, Berkshire Musical association).

Saturday evening, Aug. 9—Mozart "Eine Kleine Nachtmusik," Hanson, Symphony No. 2, "Romantic," Brahms, Concerto No. 2 in B-flat for Pianoforte, Wagner, Prelue to "Lohengrin," Wagner, Prelude to "Die Meistersinger"; soloist, Leonard Shure.

Sunday afternoon, Aug. 10—Mozart, Symphony in E-flat Major (K. 543), Debussy, "La Mer," Berlioz, Fantastic Symphony.

SERIES "C"

Thursday evening, Aug. 14—Bach-Koussevitzky, Prelude and Fugue in C Major, Beethoven, "Missa Solemnis." Quartet of soloists, Berkshire Festival Chorus.

Saturday evening, Aug. 16—Vaughan Williams, "London" Symphony. Barber, Violin Concerto. Wagner, Prelude to "Parsifal." Wagner, Good Friday Spell from "Parsifal." Wagner, Overture to "Tannhauser." Soloist: Ruth Posselt.

Sunday afternoon, Aug. 17—Sibelius, Symphony No. 6, Strauss, "Death and Transfiguration." Tchaikovsky, Symphony No. 5.

Subscriptions for the concerts are reported to be ahead of last year, and those wishing tickets for the series are urged to act promptly. After the subscription sale closes, which will be within a few weeks, tickets for single concerts will be available.

193

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION

JUN 6 - 1940

MUSIC CENTER IN BERKSHIRES OPENS JULY 8

Sizable School to Have Limit of 350 to Enrollment, Chosen From 600

A center of musical activity, inaugurated by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, not quite like anything which has hitherto been attempted in this country, will begin operations at "Tanglewood," between Stockbridge and Lenox, on July 8. The Berkshire Music Center will be a sizable school with an enrollment which will be limited to 350. These have been chosen from the applications reaching 600 which, since the first announcement of the school months ago, have been coming from virtually every state in the Union. Of the 350, the majority will consist of the department which will be called the academy, and which will comprise the festival chorus and the amateur orchestra. Most of them are young students seeking the experience of living and working with professional musicians, and of singing in Bach's Mass in B minor in conjunction, with the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Berkshire Music Festival, on Thursday, Aug. 15, under direction of Serge Koussevitzky.

Division of Classes

The institute, a more selective department of the school, will consist of a class in conducting, held by Dr. Koussevitzky; a class in composition, under Aaron Copland and Paul Hindemith; and an orchestra of skilled musicians, under direction of Richard Burgin, concertmaster and assistant conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

A well-balanced personnel for both the institute and the amateur orchestra has been accepted. Dr. Koussevitzky's conducting class will consist of five musicians of extraordinary promise and qualifications, and a larger group of "auditors" who will have more priviliges of observation than of participation. Thirty members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will assist in the coaching of the two orchestras. Other prominent musicians and distinguished lecturers will provide the faculty for the center, where those who attend will have the opportunity of "living and working in music" in close association with a great orchestra and its conductor. A department in opera dramatics, dealing with operatic interpretation, will be held by Dr. Herbert Graf, stage director of the Metropolitan Opera Company of New York. The stage unit of a small theater has been built for this department, and will serve for rehearsal and performance as well as for chamber music. There will be a class in choral conducting held by G. Wallace Woodworth, who will also prepare the festival chorus; and a course in music in the schools, to be held by Howard Abell.

The student body, according to an examination of the applications of those who have enrolled, will be equally divided as to sex. Although a number of teachers have joined the school, most of the members are of student age—nearly half coming under the category between 18 and 25. Almost a third of the students come from Massachusetts, New York providing a number not far short of this. Next in point of representation are Ohio, Pennsylvania, Illinois, Connecticut and New Jersey. Almost every state of the South and Far West is represented, as well as Canada. A number come from the principal music schools of this country, the following schools leading in the order named: New England Conservatory, Juilliard School, Eastman School, Concord School of Music, Cleveland Institute, Longy School of Music. The colleges from which the students have come are equally extensive, those most numerously represented, again in the order named, being: Harvard, Radcliffe, Wellesley, Smith, Vassar, New York University, Oberlin, Columbia and Boston University.

The several buildings standing upon "Tanglewood," the beautiful estate which was presented to the Boston Symphony Orchestra, have been remodelled for school uses. The shed will be used for practice performances and lectures; the residence and the garage have both been remodelled to provide numerous classrooms, studios, and administration offices. The barn near the shore of Lake Mahkeenac has been rebuilt into an assembly hall where the chorus will meet daily.

The Berkshire Symphonic Festival, extended from two to three weeks, will coincide with the last three weeks of the school term (Aug. 1, 3, 4, 8, 10, 11, 15, 17, 18). All who attend the music center will be admitted to specified Boston Symphony rehearsals, and to all of the festival performances.

The seat sale for the festival is already 50 per cent ahead of last year, even though the festival has been extended to nine performances. According to recent figures 3100 seats have been taken for Series A; 2900 for Series B, and 2600 for Series C.

There seems no doubt that when the festival opens crowds of 5000 or more will be on hand. It has happened in the past and today the fame of the festival has spread the world over.

This Clipping From WILMINGTON, DEL.
NEWS

JUN 9 - 1941

Berkshire Festival Plans 9 Concerts

THe eighth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival will open at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mas., on Thursday, July 31, and continue over three week-ends until Sunday ,Aug. 17.

The nine concerts scheduled for the three series will be given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of its conductor, Serge Koussevitzky.

The dates and works to be performed are:

SERIES A

Thursday, July 31, 8:30

Concerto for organ and orchestra, No. 10, in D minor .... Handel
Nauges, Fetes, Sirens .... Debussy
Chorus No. 10, Rasga o Coracao. Villa-Lobos
Villa-Lobos
Symphony No. 3, "Eroica" ..... Beethoven

Saturday, Aug. 2, 8:30

Symphony No. 4, "Italian" .. Mendelssohn
Overture to "Leonore," No. 3... Beethoven
Symphony No. 5 .... Shostakovitch

Sunday, Aug. 3, 3:30

Unfinished Symphony .... Shubert
Quiet City .... Copland
Cello Concerto .... Hindemith
Soloist, Gregor Pratigorsky
Symphony No. 4, in E minor...... Brahms

SERIES B

Thursday, Aug. 7, 8:30

Symphony in G minor; excerpts from Requiem .... Mozart
Symphony No. 5, in C minor .... Beethoven

Saturday, Aug. 9, 8:30

Eine Kleine Nachtmusik .... Mozart
Symphony No. 2, "Romantic" ...... Hanson
Piano Concerto No. 2, in B flat.... Brahms
Soloist, Leonard Shure
Preludes to "Lohengrin" and "Die Meistersinger" .... Wagner

Sunday, Aug. 10,3:30

Symphony in E flat .... Mozart
La Mer .... Debussy
Fantastic Symphony .... Berlioz

SERIES C

Thursday, Aug. 14, 8:30

Prelude and Fugue in C minor
Bach-Koussevitzky
Missa Solemnis in D minor.... Beethoven

Saturday, Aug. 16,8:30

A London Symphony.... Vaughan Williams
Violin Concerto .... Samuel Barker
Soloist, Ruth Posselt
Prelude and Good Friday Music From "Parsifal"; Overture to "Tannhaeuser"
Wagner

Sunday, Aug. 17, 3:30

Symphony No. 6 .... Sibelius
Death and Transfiguration........ Strauss
Symphony No. 5, in E minor.. Tchaikovsky

The chorus of the Berkshire Muisical Association, directed and trained by Horace Hunt, will sing in the Villa-Lobos Chorus, Debussy's "Sirenes" and the excerpts from Mozart's Requiem .The Berkshire Festival Chorus, composed of students at Tanglewood, will sing in the Beethoven Missa Solemnis.

This Clipping From PORTLAND, ME.
SUNDAY TELEGRAM

JUN 9 - 1940

Serge Koussevitzky, famed conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will be the Director of the Berkshire Music Center which will be inaugurated by this orchestra July 8 for a period of six weeks at Tanglewood, historic two-hundred acre estate of the symphony, located between Lenox and Stockbridge, Mass.

Dr. Koussevitzky, thirty members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and widely known lecturers will comprise the faculty for the Center, where those attending will have the opportunity of "living and working in music."

Classes will be held in orchestral conducting, a student orchestra of skilled players, an amateur orchestra music will be extended this year from two to three weeks, coinciding with the last three weeks of the school term. All registered in the school will be admitted to specified rehearsals of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and to all of the Festival performances.

In defining the aims of the Center, Dr. Koussevitzky says, "The Berkshire Music Center will serve those who seek the best in music and the related arts, who are anxious to refresh the mind and personality through contact with the elite in art and culture, and who long for a creative rest in the Summer."

Faculty members will include Dr. Koussevitzky, who will teach advanced conducting, give lectures and supervise the Institute orchestra, Aaron Copland and Paul Hindemith, brilliant modern composers, Olin Downs, distinguished Music Critic, and principal players of the symphony.

This Clipping From PITTSBURGH, PA.
PRESS

JUN 8 - 1941

Berkshire Music Center Gets Approximately 700 Applications

Serge Koussevitsky to Again Direct Courses for Young People at Massachusetts Estate

By RALPH LEWANDO
Press Music Editor

With its second consecutive year of activity scheduled from July 7 through Aug. 17, the Berkshire Music Center at "Tanglewood," Lenox, Mass., of which Serge Koussevitzy is director, already has received more than 700 applications from young people in 38 states, the District of Columbia, Scotland, Canada and Switzerland.

The term, during the final three weeks, will run concurrently with the Berkshire Symphonic Festival of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Applicants represent 100 music schools and more than 150 colleges and universities. Most numerous age group is between 20 and 24.

More than half the applications are from men.

Mr. Lewando

The flood of applications, far in excess of those of last season, presents quite a problem to the management since enrollment is limited to about 350.

The acceptances, therefore, will be on a highly selective basis. The classes of the specialized departments have almost been filled.

For his conducting class Dr. Koussevitzky has chosen six members. However, there will be an additional number of auditors in this group.

The advanced orchestra, limited to 85 players, will be taught by the principals of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The personnel of the orchestra has virtually been chosen, as is also the case with the classes in choral conducting with G. Wallace Woodworth and Hugh Ross; the chamber music section under Gregor Piatigorsky, the composition classes headed by Aaron Copland and Paul Hindemith, and the opera class directed by Herbert Graf.

However, applications in limited number are still being accepted for the Center's music and culture department for music students, college students, teachers and amateurs. This includes the Festival Chorus, which will participate in performance of Beethoven's Mass Solemnis at one of the Festival concerts led by Mr. Koussevitzky, a symphony orchestra, and smaller choral groups which will study development of choral music. The faculty of this section embraces Messrs. Olin Downes, Hindemith, Ross, Woodworth and others.

Registrants in the courses are entitled, without further charge, to attend all of the nine Festival events of the Boston Orchestra.

A number of special scholarships have been presented to the Center by important music schools of the country. These include the Curtis Institute, and the Academy of Vocal Arts, both of Philadelphia; the Eastman School of Music, Rochester, N. Y.; the Juilliard School of Music, of New York; and the New England Conservatory of Boston.

This Clipping From
SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
GAZETTE

JUN 11 1941

Subscriptions Taken for 1st Festival Series

Indicative of the continued demand for subscriptions to the eighth annual Berkshire Symphonic festival concerts at Tanglewood by the Boston Symphony orchestra and Serge Koussevitzky, was the announcement by the festival trustees that all subscriptions for the first series had been sold. Tickets for single concerts in series A beginning July 31 became available as a result of the quota of 1,800 subscriptions for that series being reached.

Tickets for single concerts in series B beginning Aug. 7 and series C beginning Aug. 14 will be available when the subscription limit for these series is filled. Only 100 subscriptions remain for series B and 150 for series C, according to the trustees.

Reservations for tickets may be made by communicating with the Berkshire Symphony festival at Stockbridge, or the New York office in Steinway hall, 113 West 57th street.

During the period of the Berkshire Symphony festival at Tanglewood there will be an extensive exhibition of Rex Brasher's collection of paintings of "Birds and Trees of North America". Rex Brasher's home is in nearby Chickadee valley, Kent, Conn.

A number of original paintings will be shown in the Berkshire museum at Pittsfield, while at the Pleasant Valley wild flower and bird sanctuary in Lenox and at the Lenox library several hundred prints from the limited edition will be on display.

This public display will be the first since the original showing in 1938 by the National Geographic society in Washington, D.C. The original collection of 874 paintings, a complete pictorial representation of North American birds (90 per cent of which are life-size) is considered one of the greatest single artistic achievements of our time and is now being considered for purchase by the State of Connecticut.

When the exhibition was held in Washington, thousands visited the unique one man show. As a result, the British museum, as well as other museums in Europe arranged for similar showings, only to have the war interfere.

This Clipping From TOLEDO, O.
TIMES

JUN 22 1941

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION

JUN 6 - 1940

MUSIC CENTER IN BERKSHIRES OPENS JULY 8

Sizable School to Have Limit of 350 to Enrollment, Chosen From 600

A center of musical activity, inaugurated by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, not quite like anything which has hitherto been attempted in this country, will begin operations at "Tanglewood," between Stockbridge and Lenox, on July 8. The Berkshire Music Center will be a sizable school with an enrollment which will be limited to 350. These have been chosen from the applications reaching 600 which, since the first announcement of the school months ago, have been coming from virtually every state in the Union. Of the 350, the majority will consist of the department which will be called the academy, and which will comprise the festival chorus and the amateur orchestra. Most of them are young students seeking the experience of living and working with professional musicians, and of singing in Bach's Mass in B minor in conjunction, with the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Berkshire Music Festival, on Thursday, Aug. 15, under direction of Serge Koussevitzky.

Division of Classes

The institute, a more selective department of the school, will consist of a class in conducting, held by Dr. Koussevitzky; a class in composition, under Aaron Copland and Paul Hindemith; and an orchestra of skilled musicians, under direction of Richard Burgin, concertmaster and assistant conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

A well-balanced personnel for both the institute and the amateur orchestra has been accepted. Dr. Koussevitzky's conducting class will consist of five musicians of extraordinary promise and qualifications, and a larger group of "auditors" who will have more priviliges of observation than of participation. Thirty members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will assist in the coaching of the two orchestras. Other prominent musicians and distinguished lecturers will provide the faculty for the center, where those who attend will have the opportunity of "living and working in music" in close association with a great orchestra and its conductor. A department in opera dramatics, dealing with operatic interpretation, will be held by Dr. Herbert Graf, stage director of the Metropolitan Opera Company of New York. The stage unit of a small theater has been built for this department, and will serve for rehearsal and performance as well as for chamber music. There will be a class in choral conducting held by G. Wallace Woodworth, who will also prepare the festival chorus; and a course in music in the schools, to be held by Howard Abell.

The student body, according to an examination of the applications of those who have enrolled, will be equally divided as to sex. Although a number of teachers have joined the school, most of the members are of student age—nearly half coming under the category between 18 and 25. Almost a third of the students come from Massachusetts, New York providing a number not far short of this. Next in point of representation are Ohio, Pennsylvania, Illinois, Connecticut and New Jersey. Almost every state of the South and Far West is represented, as well as Canada. A number come from the principal music schools of this country, the following schools leading in the order named: New England Conservatory, Juilliard School, Eastman School, Concord School of Music, Cleveland Institute, Longy School of Music. The colleges from which the students have come are equally extensive, those most numerously represented, again in the order named, being: Harvard, Radcliffe, Wellesley, Smith, Vassar, New York University, Oberlin, Columbia and Boston University.

The several buildings standing upon "Tanglewood," the beautiful estate which was presented to the Boston Symphony Orchestra, have been remodelled for school uses. The shed will be used for practice performances and lectures; the residence and the garage have both been remodelled to provide numerous classrooms, studios, and administration offices. The barn near the shore of Lake Mahkeenac has been rebuilt into an assembly hall where the chorus will meet daily.

The Berkshire Symphonic Festival, extended from two to three weeks, will coincide with the last three weeks of the school term (Aug. 1, 3, 4, 8, 10, 11, 15, 17, 18). All who attend the music center will be admitted to specified Boston Symphony rehearsals, and to all of the festival performances.

The seat sale for the festival is already 50 per cent ahead of last year, even though the festival has been extended to nine performances. According to recent figures 3100 seats have been taken for Series A; 2900 for Series B, and 2600 for Series C.

There seems no doubt that when the festival opens crowds of 5000 or more will be on hand. It has happened in the past and today the fame of the festival has spread the world over.

193

This Clipping From PITTSBURGH, PA.
PRESS

JUN 8 - 1941

Berkshire Music Center Gets Approximately 700 Applications

Serge Koussevitsky to Again Direct Courses for Young People at Massachusetts Estate

By RALPH LEWANDO
Press Music Editor

With its second consecutive year of activity scheduled from July 7 through Aug. 17, the Berkshire Music Center at "Tanglewood," Lenox, Mass., of which Serge Koussevitzy is director, already has received more than 700 applications from young people in 38 states, the District of Columbia, Scotland, Canada and Switzerland.

The term, during the final three weeks, will run concurrently with the Berkshire Symphonic Festival of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Applicants represent 100 music schools and more than 150 colleges and universities. Most numerous age group is between 20 and 24.

More than half the applications are from men.

Mr. Lewando

The flood of applications, far in excess of those of last season, presents quite a problem to the management since enrollment is limited to about 350.

The acceptances, therefore, will be on a highly selective basis. The classes of the specialized departments have almost been filled.

For his conducting class Dr. Koussevitzky has chosen six members. However, there will be an additional number of auditors in this group.

The advanced orchestra, limited to 85 players, will be taught by the principals of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The personnel of the orchestra has virtually been chosen, as is also the case with the classes in choral conducting with G. Wallace Woodworth and Hugh Ross; the chamber music section under Gregor Piatigorsky, the composition classes headed by Aaron Copland and Paul Hindemith, and the opera class directed by Herbert Graf.

However, applications in limited number are still being accepted for the Center's music and culture department for music students, college students, teachers and amateurs. This includes the Festival Chorus, which will participate in performance of Beethoven's Mass Solemnis at one of the Festival concerts led by Mr. Koussevitzky, a symphony orchestra, and smaller choral groups which will study development of choral music. The faculty of this section embraces Messrs. Olin Downes, Hindemith, Ross, Woodworth and others.

Registrants in the courses are entitled, without further charge, to attend all of the nine Festival events of the Boston Orchestra.

A number of special scholarships have been presented to the Center by important music schools of the country. These include the Curtis Institute, and the Academy of Vocal Arts, both of Philadelphia; the Eastman School of Music, Rochester, N. Y.; the Juilliard School of Music, of New York; and the New England Conservatory of Boston.

This Clipping From WILMINGTON, DEL.
NEWS

JUN 9 - 1941

Berkshire Festival Plans 9 Concerts

THe eighth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival will open at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mas., on Thursday, July 31, and continue over three week-ends until Sunday ,Aug. 17.

The nine concerts scheduled for the three series will be given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of its conductor, Serge Koussevitzky.

The dates and works to be performed are:

SERIES A

Thursday, July 31, 8:30

Concerto for organ and orchestra, No. 10, in D minor ....Handel
Nauges, Fetes, Sirens .... Debussy
Chorus No. 10, Rasga o Coracao. Villa-Lobos
Villa-Lobos
Symphony No. 3, "Eroica" .....Beethoven

Saturday, Aug. 2, 8:30

Symphony No. 4, "Italian" ..Mendelssohn
Overture to "Leonore," No. 3...Beethoven
Symphony No. 5 .... Shostakovitch

Sunday, Aug. 3, 3:30

Unfinished Symphony ....Shubert
Quiet City ....Copland
Cello Concerto ....Hindemith
Soloist, Gregor Pratigorsky
Symphony No. 4, in E minor......Brahms

SERIES B

Thursday, Aug. 7, 8:30

Symphony in G minor; excerpts from Requiem ....Mozart
Symphony No. 5, in C minor ....Beethoven

Saturday, Aug. 9, 8:30

Eine Kleine Nachtmusik ....Mozart
Symphony No. 2, "Romantic" ......Hanson
Piano Concerto No. 2, in B flat....Brahms
Soloist, Leonard Shure
Preludes to "Lohengrin" and "Die Meistersinger" ....Wagner

Sunday, Aug. 10,3:30

Symphony in E flat ....Mozart
La Mer ....Debussy
Fantastic Symphony ....Berlioz

SERIES C

Thursday, Aug. 14, 8:30

Prelude and Fugue in C minor
Bach-Koussevitzky
Missa Solemnis in D minor....Beethoven

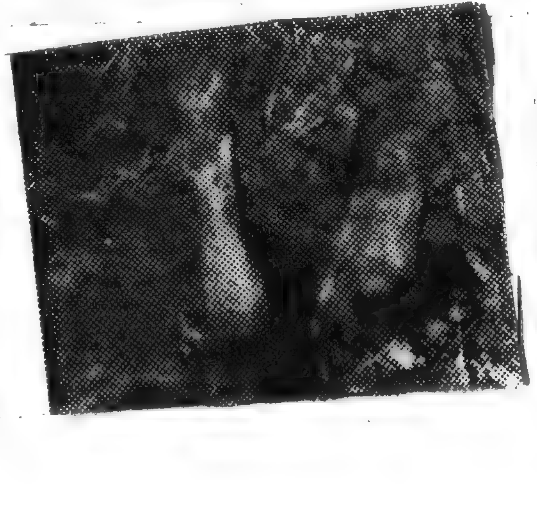
Saturday, Aug. 16,8:30

A London Symphony....Vaughan Williams
Violin Concerto ....Samuel Barker
Soloist, Ruth Posselt
Prelude and Good Friday Music From "Parsifal"; Overture to "Tannhaeuser"
Wagner

Sunday, Aug. 17, 3:30

Symphony No. 6 ....Sibelius
Death and Transfiguration........Strauss
Symphony No. 5, in E minor..Tchaikovsky

The chorus of the Berkshire Muisical Association, directed and trained by Horace Hunt, will sing in the Villa-Lobos Chorus, Debussy's "Sirenes" and the excerpts from Mozart's Requiem .The Berkshire Festival Chorus, composed of students at Tanglewood, will sing in the Beethoven Missa Solemnis.



---

a chorus, courses in composition, operatic interpretation, choral conducting, and other such subjects. Members of the school will be trained as a festival chorus which will appear in the Berkshire Festival, in a performance of Bach's "Mass In B Minor."

This famous festival of symphonic music will be extended this year from two to three weeks, coinciding with the last three weeks of the school term. All registered in the school will be admitted to specified rehearsals of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and to all of the Festival performances.

In defining the aims of the Center, Dr. Koussevitzky says, "The Berkshire Music Center will serve those who seek the best in music and the related arts, who are anxious to refresh the mind and personality through contact with the elite in art and culture, and who long for a creative rest in the Summer."

Faculty members will include Dr. Koussevitzky, who will teach advanced conducting, give lectures and supervise the Institute orchestra, Aaron Copland and Paul Hindemith, brilliant modern composers, Olin Downs, distinguished Music Critic, and principal players of the symphony.

This Clipping From
SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
GAZETTE

JUN 11 1941

Subscriptions Taken for 1st Festival Series

Indicative of the continued demand for subscriptions to the eighth annual Berkshire Symphonic festival concerts at Tanglewood by the Boston Symphony orchestra and Serge Koussevitzky, was the announcement by the festival trustees that all subscriptions for the first series had been sold. Tickets for single concerts in series A beginning July 31 became available as a result of the quota of 1,800 subscriptions for that series being reached.

Tickets for single concerts in series B beginning Aug. 7 and series C beginning Aug. 14 will be available when the subscription limit for these series is filled. Only 100 subscriptions remain for series B and 150 for series C, according to the trustees.

Reservations for tickets may be made by communicating with the Berkshire Symphony festival at Stockbridge, or the New York office in Steinway hall, 113 West 57th street.

During the period of the Berkshire Symphony festival at Tanglewood there will be an extensive exhibition of Rex Brasher's collection of paintings of "Birds and Trees of North America". Rex Brasher's home is in nearby Chickadee valley, Kent, Conn.

A number of original paintings will be shown in the Berkshire museum at Pittsfield, while at the Pleasant Valley wild flower and bird sanctuary in Lenox and at the Lenox library several hundred prints from the limited edition will be on display.

This public display will be the first since the original showing in 1938 by the National Geographic society in Washington, D.C. The original collection of 874 paintings, a complete pictorial representation of North American birds (90 per cent of which are life-size) is considered one of the greatest single artistic achievements of our time and is now being considered for purchase by the State of Connecticut.

When the exhibition was held in Washington, thousands visited the unique one man show. As a result, the British museum, as well as other museums in Europe arranged for similar showings, only to have the war interfere.

This Clipping From TOLEDO, O.
TIMES

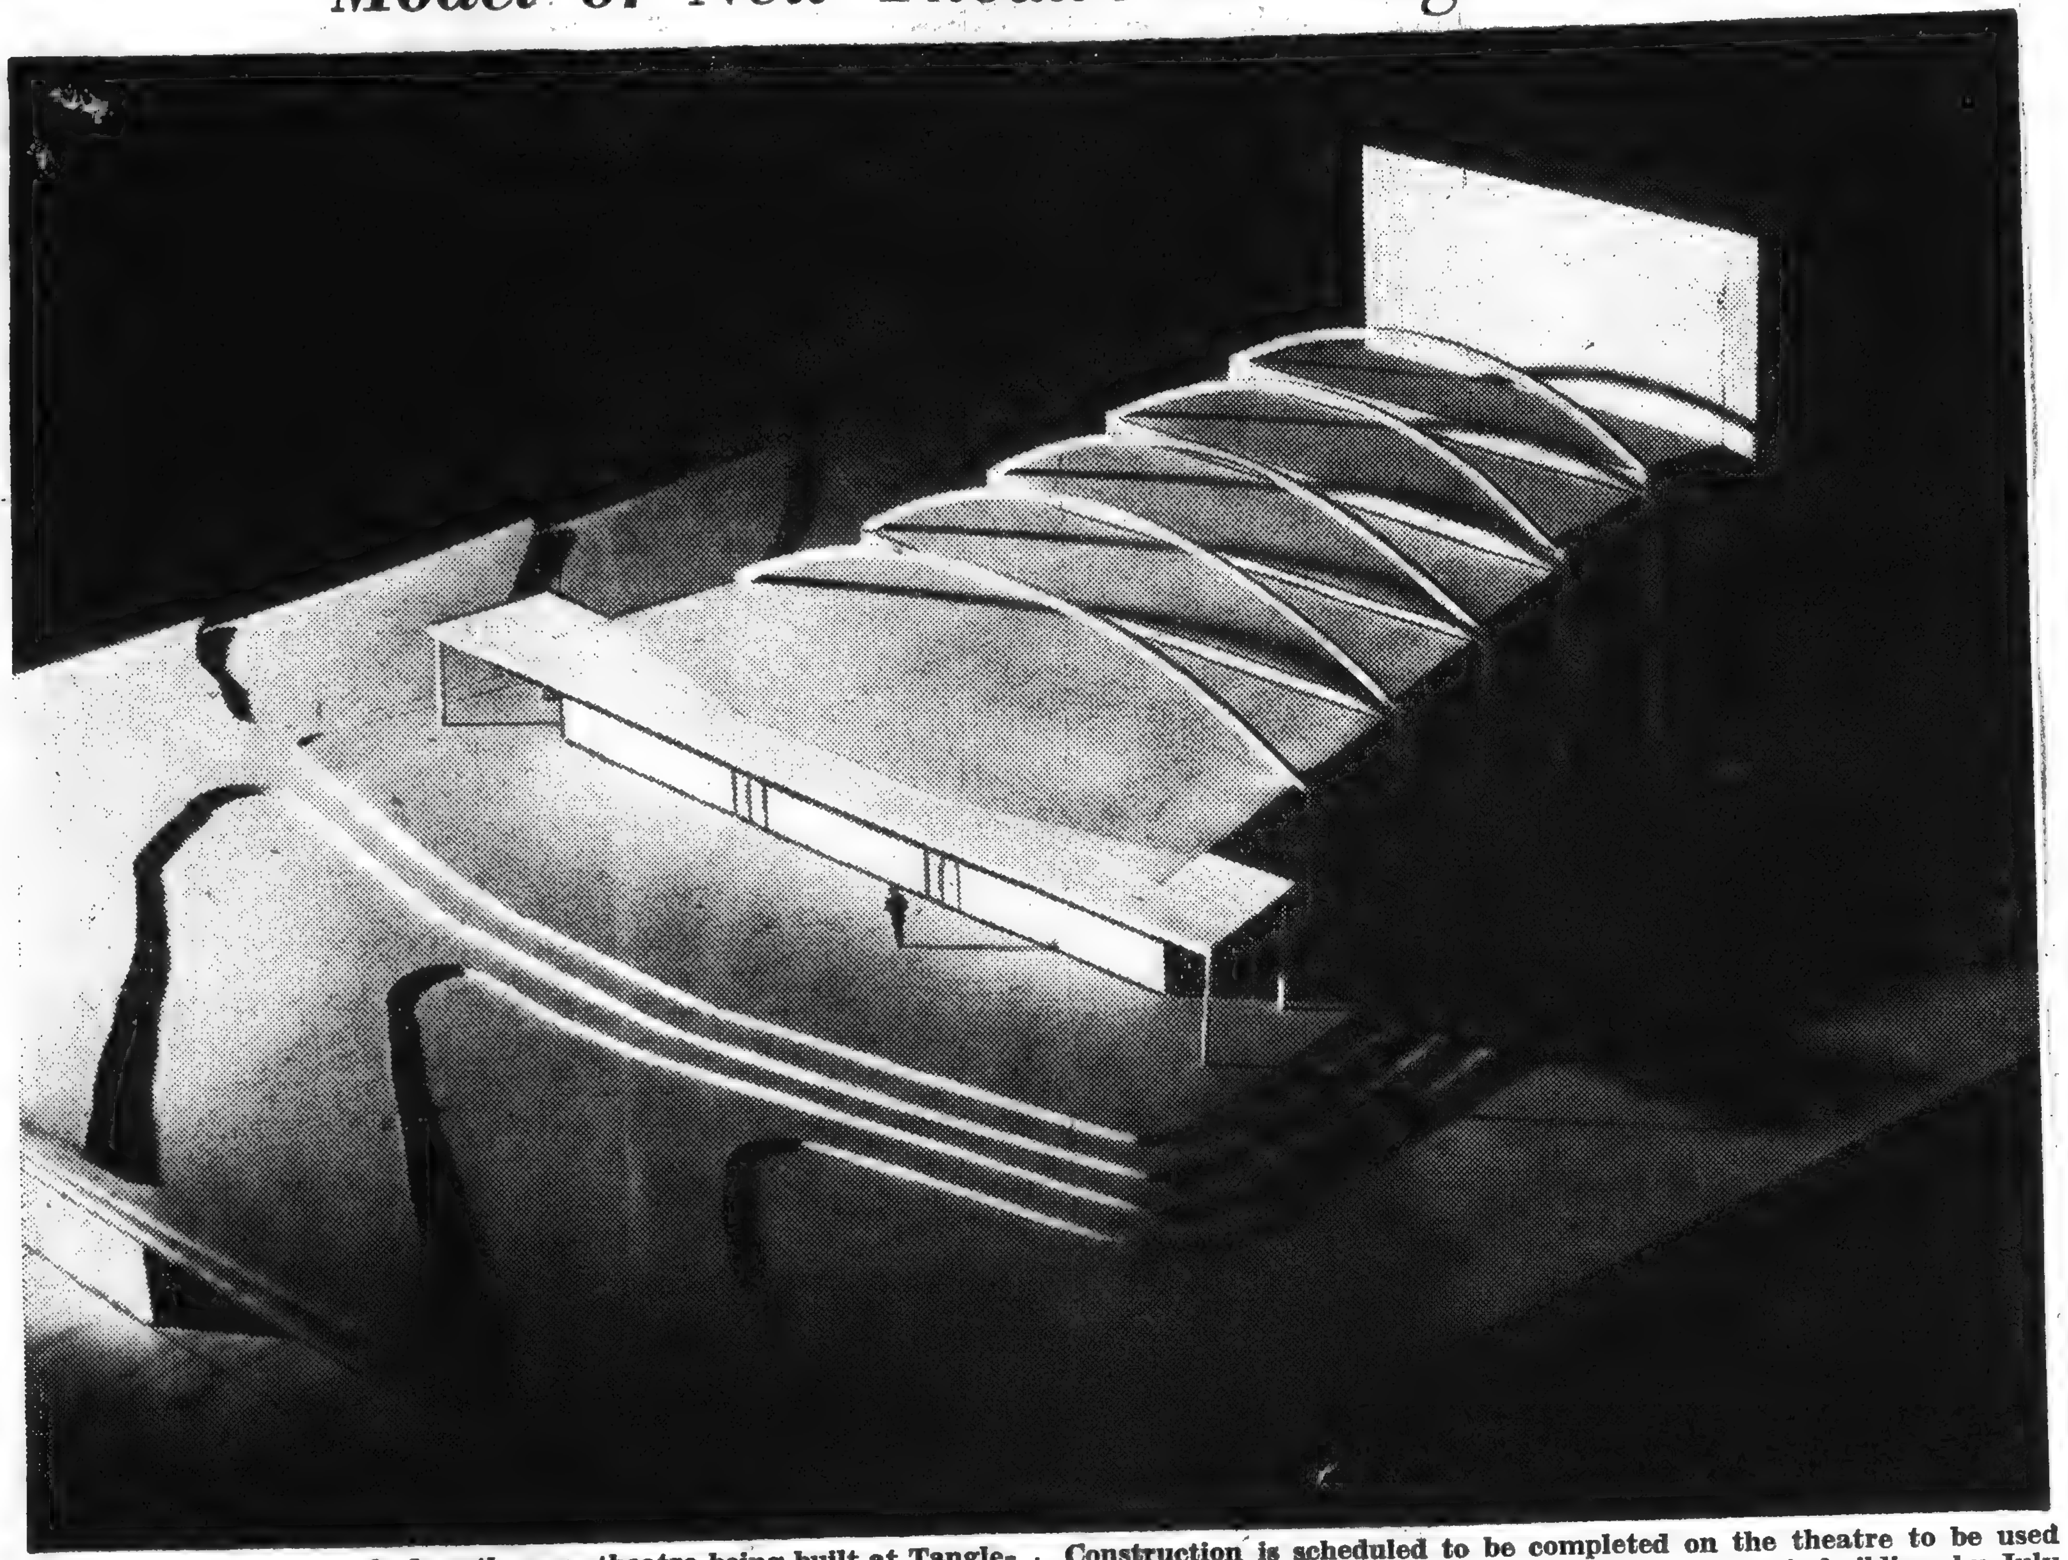
JUN 22 1941

This Clipping From
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE
JUN 11 1941

HUDSON, N. Y.
DAILY STAR
JUN 17 1941

This Clipping From
WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM
JUN 15 1941

Model of New Theatre at Tanglewood



Construction is being rushed on the new theatre being built at Tanglewood for the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Berkshire Music Center. The picture [redacted] the building designed by Eliel Saarinen, eminent architect of Bloomfield Hills, Mich., and his son, Eero. Construction is scheduled to be completed on the theatre to be used by the opera department, also on the chamber music building, by July 1. The theatre will seat 1000. Graves & Hemmes of Great Barrington are the contractors.

This Clipping From
NEWARK, N. J.
STAR-LEDGER
JUN 12 1941

BERKSHIRE FETE OPENING SOLD OUT

Indicative of the continued demand for subscriptions to the eighth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival concerts at Tanglewood by the Boston Symphony Orchestra and [redacted]sevitzky, came the announcement yesterday that all subscriptions for the first series had been sold.

Tickets for single concerts in Series A beginning July 31 became available as a result of the quota of 1,800 subscriptions for that series being reached.

Tickets for single concerts in Series B beginning Aug. 7 and Series C beginning Aug. 14 will be available when the subscription limit for them is filled.

This Clipping From
LAWRENCE, MASS.
TRIBUNE
JUN 13 1941

This Clipping From
WASHINGTON, D. C.
POST
JUN 22 1941

Subscriptions for the first series of the eighth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival concerts at Tanglewood, Mass., starting July 31, have all been sold. The Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Sergei Koussevitzky, will play for the entire concert season. Tickets for single concerts in Series B, beginning August 7, and Series C, beginning August 14, will be available when the subscription limit for these series is filled.

This Clipping From
HOLYOKE, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT TELEGRAM
JUN 11 1941

Tickets For Single Tanglewood Concerts Still Available

Altho subscription limits for the first series of concerts in the Berkshire Symphonic Festival to be held at Tanglewood this summer have been reached, tickets for the second and third series are still available and tickets for single concerts in all series may still be obtained.

The festival will open Thursday, July 31, and subsequent concerts by the Boston Sympsony orchestra, conduc[redacted]ge Koussevitky will be given Aug. 1, 2, 7, 9, 10, 14, 16 and 17. The Sunday concerts are given in the afternoon.

It has been announced that an extensive exhibition of Rex Brasher's collection of "Birds and Trees of North America," will be held during the Festival period at the Berkshire museum in Pittsfield, the Pleasant Valley Wild Flower and Bird Sanctuary in Lenox, and the Lenox library.

This Clipping From
MONTREAL, CANADA
GAZETTE
JUN 12 [illegible]

Berkshire Festival To Aid British Cause

Stockbridge, July 11.—A New England manifestation calling everybody from everywhere to Tanglewood will be given Friday, August 15 under the direction of Serge Koussevitsky, conductor of the ~~Boston~~ Symphony Orchestra. The program, patterned after the eminently successful manifestation of last year which netted nearly $25,000 for Allied relief, will be presented at the home of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival and the Berkshire Music Centre.

The proceeds this year will be divided equally between the United Service Organizations and British War Relief Inc. All the forces at Tanglewood—the Festival organization, the orchestra, Dr. Koussevitzky and the Music Centre—will co-operate in presenting the manifestation.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
JOURNAL AMERICAN
JUN 15 1941

Outdoor Music Festival Scheduled in Berkshires

GREAT BARRINGTON, Mass.—Scenic charms of the Berkshire hills bring Summer guests back year after year, but the current season adds powerful new inducements for vacation tourists.

The Berkshire Music Festival, which brings Sergei Koussevitsky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra to Tanglewood from July 31 to Aug. 17, has been sold out for the entire series, with several thousand music lovers seeking accommodations near the amphitheater.

195

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS
JUN 12 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM
POUGHKEEPSIE, N. Y.
STAR-ENTERPRISE
JUN 15 1940

Berkshire Music Center Expects Enrolment of 325

Boston, June 12—The membership of the Berkshire Music center, now virtually completed, and the details of its scheduled activities confirm the supposition that the school which the Boston Symphony orchestra will open at "Tanglewood," its Berkshire estate, on July 8, will be quite unlike anything which has been attempted in this country.

The number of pupils accepted will be approximately 325, these chosen from applications reaching 600 which, since the first announcement of the center, have been coming from almost every state this side of the Mississippi. Of the 325, about 125 will comprise the institute for students of advanced ability, and about 200 will comprise the academy, the principal concerted activity of which will be the festival chorus which will sing with the Boston Symphony orchestra, under Serge Koussevitzky, Bach's Mass in B minor, on August 15 in the last week of the Berkshire Symphonic festival.

Conducting Class

The institute, more selective than the academy as to skill, will consist of an orchestra, and groups in conducting, composition and opera dramatics. Dr Koussevitzky has accepted a few musicians qualified by exceptional talent for instruction in conducting. Among the few active participants are Leonard Bernstein, who has won honors at the Curtis institute; Thor Johnson, conductor of the University of Michigan Symphony orchestra at Ann Arbor, and Richard Bales, graduate of the Eastman and Juilliard schools. Others, many of whom have had professional experience, will be given the privileges of observation.

The orchestra of the institute will be under the direction of Richard Burgin, concertmaster and assistant conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra, and will have the advantage of coaching and joint performance with the 30 members of the Boston Symphony orchestra, including all of the principals, who are part of the faculty of the school. This orchestra will number about 65 student players, distributed approximately as follows: 18 violins, 15 lower strings, four flutes, three oboes and English horn, four clarinets, four bassoons, five horns, three trumpets, four trombones, tuba, two harps and three percussion. Fifty-eight have already been accepted.

Instruction in Composition

Composers accepted by Aaron Copland and Paul Hindemith for instruction in composition and orchestration will include the following: Lukas Foss (Paris Conservatoire and Curtis), Harold Shapero (Harvard), Harold Brown (Ecole Normale), Robert Palmer (Eastman), Donald Fuller (Yale and Juilliard), John Verrall (Royal college, London), Robert Strassburg (Harvard), Charles Naginski (Juilliard), Charles Jones (Juilliard), Norman Dello Joio (Juilliard). Of these, each will have the benefit of individual coaching by either Mr Copland or Mr Hindemith, and group discussion under both composers.

Dr Herbert Graf has accepted 20 pupils for his class in operatic interpretation. These will have the advantage of a small theater which is being built at "Tanglewood," and which will be useful for performances of intimate opera or chamber music.

The Academy

The personnel of the institute will naturally be largely drawn from the music schools of the country, such as the New England Conservatory of Music, the Juilliard school, the Curtis institute, the Eastman school and various colleges. The president of the New England Conservatory has offered 10 scholarships in the Music center for the benefit of students attending the conservatory in its winter sessions. The personnel of the academy, according to an examination of the applications of those who have enroled, will be about equally divided as to sex. Although a number of teachers have joined the school, most of the members are of student age, nearly half coming under the category between 18 and 25.

The chorus of 200 will be conducted by G. Wallace Woodworth. Mr Woodworth has also accepted about 20 pupils in a class for choral conducting. The class is largely drawn from lead- college glee clubs, and teachers who wish to form groups in singing. Mr Howard Abell has accepted 25 for his class of intruction in music in the schools. The academy orchestra will consist of 45 players and will be under the direction of Malcolm Holmes. Having less rigid requirements for acceptance than the institute orchestra, the personnel will consist largely of college students, music teachers, teachers of instruments who wish orchestral experience, and others in business or professional walks of life who have made music their hobby.

Berkshire Festival

The Berkshire Symphonic festival, extended from two to three weeks, will coincide with the last three weeks of the school term (August 1, 3, 4, 8, 10, 11, 15, 17, 18). All who attend the Music center will be admitted to specified Boston Symphony rehearsals, and to all of the festival performances.

This Clipping From
HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES
JUN 13 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE
JUN 13 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
GAZETTE
JUN 14 1940

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE
JUN 16 1940

This Clipping From TOLEDO, O.
TIMES
JUN 16 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW YORK, N. Y.
TELEGRAPH
JUN 18 1940

This Clipping From
ATLANTIC CITY, N. J.
PRESS
JUN 15 1941

Arts And Music

Berkshire Festival Esquire Article Topic; What's Doing At Nearby Summer Theatres

College students, housewives with voices, amateurs who like music and want to know more about it—these are the people who will attend Serge Koussevitzky's Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood this Summer, according to an article by Carleton Smith in the July Esquire.

There Koussevitzky has founded a school with a future, a center where there is a wellspring of genuine enthusiasm for art. There they study a score not only for the sake of performing it but to know it. They teach students music from the inside instead of from the outside. Creative interpretation is Doctor Koussevitzky's central theme.

Conducting is studied under him, composition under Aaron Copland and Paul Hindemith, chamber groups under Gregor Piatigorsky, and opera dramatics supervised by Herbert Graf. Singers are taught that the day has passed when they can stop in the middle of the aria, however tragic, and bow and smile if some man from sheer boredom happens to spring his opera hat

The difference between this and other schools? A Juilliard scholarship man explains it. "Here," he says, "you never play a note your teacher doesn't hear. And when you rehearse, the first chair men of the Boston orchestra sit right alongside of you. When we play a concert at Juilliard, my teacher is usually playing in Carnegie Hall with the Philharmonic."

The schedule at the Center runs something like this: rehearse Beethoven's Missa Solemnis five mornings a week, and then sing it under Koussevitzky. In the afternoons the members may study choral and instrumental music of the past six centuries and participate in recreating it. In the evenings there will be lectures, fragments from opera, orchestral concerts, plays starring Ethel Barrymore, Tallulah Bankhead, Ina Clair and others at the nearby playhouse, boating, fishing, a full moon, and a boy for every girl.

If you have six weeks free beginning July 7, suggests Esquire, you may want to spend it at the Berkshire Music Center where Koussevitzky offers the finest summer music making in the world. Koussevitzky aims to bring music to life . . . and to inspire young boys and girls to do the same. He succeeds in doing this at Tanglewood.

Berkshire School at 'Tanglewood'

The enrollment of students in the Berkshire Music Center, the school which the Boston Symphony Orchestra will open at "Tanglewood," its Berkshire estate, on July 8, is virtually completed. Only 325 of the 600 applications can be accepted, applications which came from almost every State this side of the Mississippi. Of these about 125 will make up the institute for students of advanced ability and about 200 will comprise the academy, the principal concerted activity of which will be to sing in Bach's B minor Mass with the Boston Symphony under Serge Koussevitzky on Aug. 15, in the last week of the Berkshire Festival.

Koussevitzky's Class

Dr. Koussevitzky has selected a few musicians of exceptional talent for instruction by himself in conducting. Among them are Leonard Bernstein, who has won honors at Curtis Institute; Thor Johnson, conductor of the University of Michigan Symphony, and Richard Bales, graduate of Eastman and Juilliard Schools.

Composers' Group

Composers accepted by Aaron Copland and Paul Hindemith for instruction in composition and orchestration will include the following: Lukas Foss (Paris Conservatoire and Curtis), Harold Shapero (Harvard), Harold Brown (Ecole Normale), Robert Palmer (Eastman), Donald Fuller (Yale and Juilliard), John Verrall (Royal College, London), Robert Strassburg (Harvard), Charles Naginski (Juilliard), Charles Jones (Juilliard), Norman Dello Joio (Juilliard). Of these, each will have the benefit of individual coaching by either Mr. Copland or Mr. Hindemith, and group discussion under both composers.

Dr. Herbert Graf has accepted 20 pupils for his class in operatic interpretation. These will have the advantage of a small theater which is being built at "Tanglewood," and which will be useful for performances of intimate opera or chamber music.

Berkshire Festival

The Berkshire Symphonic Festival, extended from two to three weeks will coincide with the last three weeks of the school term (Aug. 1, 3, 4, 8, 10, 11, 15, 17, 18). All who attend the Music Center will be admitted to specified Boston Symphony rehearsals, and to all of the Festival performances.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
SUNDAY UNION
& REPUBLICAN
JUN 16 1940

Institute Orchestra

The orchestra of the institute will be under the direction of Richard Burgin, concert master and assistant conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra, and will have the advantage of coaching and joint performance with the 30 members of the Boston Symphony orchestra, including all of the principals, who are part of the faculty of the school. This orchestra will number about 65 student players, distributed approximately as follows: 18 violins, 15 lower strings, four flutes, three oboes and English horn, four clarinets, four bassoons, five horns, three trumpets, four trombones, tuba, two harps and three percussion. Fifty-eight have already been accepted.

Composers accepted by Aaron Copland and Paul Hindemith for instruction in composition and orchestration will include the following: Lukas Foss (Paris Conservatoire and Curtis), Harold Shapero (Harvard), Harold Brown (Ecole Normale), Robert Palmer (Eastman), Donald Fuller (Yale and Juillard), John Verrall (Royal college, London), Robert Strassburg (Harvard), Charles Naginski (Juilliard), Charles Jones (Juilliard), Norman Dello Joio (Juilliard). Of these, each will have the benefit of individual coaching by either Mr Copland or Mr Hindemith, and group discussion under both composers.

Dr Herbert Graf has accepted 20 pupils for his class in operatic interpretation. These will have the advantage of a small theater which is being built at Tanglewood, and which will be useful for performances of intimate opera or chamber music.

The personnel of the institute will naturally be largely drawn from the music schools of the country, such as the New England Conservatory of Music, the Juilliard school, the Curtis institute, the Eastman school, and various colleges. The president of the New England conservatory has offered 10 scholarships in the Music Center for the benefit of students attending the conservatory in its winter sessions. The personnel of the academy, according to an examination of the applications of those who have enroled, will be about equally divided as to sex.

Although a number of teachers have joined the school, most of the members are of student age, nearly half coming under the category between 18 and 25. The chorus of 200 will be conducted by G. Wallace Woodworth. Mr Woodworth has also accepted about 20 pupils in a class for choral conducting. The class is largely drawn from leaders of local choral societies, school and college glee clubs, and teachers who wish to form groups in singing. Mr Howard Abell has accepted 25 for his class of instruction in music in the schools. The Academy orchestra will consist of 45 players, and will be under the direction of Malcolm Holmes. Having less rigid requirements for acceptance than the Institute orchestra, the personnel will consist largely of college students, music teachers and teachers of instruments who wish orchestral experience, and others in business or professional walks of life who have made music their hobby.

The Berkshire Symphonic festival, extended from two to three weeks, will coincide with the last three weeks of the school term (August 1, 3, 4, 8, 10, 11, 15, 17, 18). All who attend the Music Center will be admitted to specified Boston Symphony rehearsals, and to all of the festival performances.

This Clipping From LYNN, MASS.
ITEM
JUN 24 1941

This Clipping From
HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES
JUN 19 1941

This Clipping From
SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
GAZETTE
JUN 19 1941

This Clipping From
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE
JUN 17 1941

Only Single Concert Tickets Available Now for Festival

The advisory committee of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, made up of community chairmen, was told this afternoon, that all subscriptions have been taken for all three series. That means that subscriptions have been taken for each of the series.

The announcement was made at a meeting held at Red Lion Inn, Stockbridge, by Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, president of the Festival.

Despite the closing of the subscription lists it was emphasized to the chairmen, that tickets for single concerts in all three series were available in great numbers.

The demand for subscriptions was taken as an indication by Festival trustees that attendance at the Tanglewood concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra this summer would be equal to that of 1941.

Mrs. Robert H. Colton, Pittsfield chairman, announced today that headquarters here for the sale of tickets during the immediate period of the Festival would be at England Brothers. Members of her committee will be in attendance all day starting Monday of the Festival week.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
HUDSON, N. Y.
DAILY STAR
JUN 19 1941

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES
JUN 16 1940

BERKSHIRE CENTER

The Berkshire Music Center, directed by Serge Koussevitzky, which begins its activities July 8 at Tanglewood, near Lenox, Mass., announces that its membership is virtually completed. From the 600 applications which have been received approximately 325 pupils will be accepted. Of these about 125 will comprise the Institute for students of advanced ability, and 200 will form the Academy.

196

This Clipping From
GRAND RAPIDS, MICH.
HERALD

JUN 22 1941

Woman Built Music Shed

Tanglewood Result of Her Dream

By ADELAIDE KERR
AP Feature Service Writer

Once a friend said to Gertrude Robinson Smith: 'Lots of people build castles in Spain, but Gertrude builds castles and then moves in."

The castle which Gertrude Robinson Smith helped build stands on a farm in the Berkshires near Stockbridge, Mass. It is a great shining shed of silvery steel, home of the Berkshire Symphony Festival. A leading New York music critic has predicted that it is "destined to become . . . the most important festival of summer music in the world."

Thor Johnson, conductor of the Grand Rapids symphony orchestra, spent last summer in study under Dr. Koussevitsky at the Berkshire Music center and while there appeared six times in the Tanglewood music shed as conductor of the Berkshire institute orchestra.

In the six years since Miss Robinson Smith helped bring the festival to life and served as its president, it has moved from a farm horse show ring to the $90,000 shed, and has grown from audiences of 5,000 to last summer's total of nearly 70,000.

✦ ✦ ✦

In 1934 Miss Robinson Smith—silverhaired, jolly member of a New York social register family—was summering in Stockbridge. Henry Hadley, American composer and conductor, approached her with a plan of giving symphonic music outdoors in the Berkshires. She called some friends together, they formed committees and pitched in to raise the required funds.

Three months later, Dr. Hadley, standing in a new built shell in the show ring of the old Dan Hanna farm near Stockbridge, lifted his baton to conduct 65 members of the New York Philharmonic Symphony orchestra in the festival's first concert. "Music under the moon" was launched, supported by popular subscription to the tune of $5 for the season's three concerts.

✦ ✦ ✦

When ill health forced Dr. Hadley to resign after the festival's second year, Miss Robinson Smith secured Serge Koussevitsky and the Boston Symphony for the following season's concerts. The festival moved to Tanglewood (the estate where Nathanial Hawthorne once lived and wrote) and gave its concerts in a huge tent.

Then, in 1937, the concerts and the elements tangled. While Koussevitzky conducted an all-Wagner program, a thunderstorm broke rain fell in torrents, water poured down the aisles under the tent and interrupted the music.

That night Gertrude Robinson Smith drafted a circular which launched the campaign for the building of her dream castle.

By August, 1938, the great fan-shaped steel shed, covering an acre and a half and seating 6,000, was completed. Last summer audiences overflowed its capacity for nine concerts.

This Clipping From
N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT

JUN 18 1941

BERKSHIRE HILLS EXCITE INTEREST

Seventy-Six Inquiries on Available Accommodations Listed

Listing 76 inquiries concerning accommodations in the Berkshire hills from residents of 15 states and the dominion of Canada, the weekly bulletin of the Berkshire Hills conference, which is sent to hotel and rooming houses throughout the county and which was released today, reveals that the great majority of the persons interested in coming to the county are coming for the Boston Symphony concerts at Tanglewod. However, many persons are interested in spending the summer or vacations outside of the concert period here.

A number of the inquiries received by the conference in response to advertisements published in various magazines and newspapers throughout the country seek information concerning recreational and sporting facilities. One inquiry was from a young girl in New Jersey who has won a ticket to the three concerts of the first series. She is seeking a good place to stay in the county.

As usual, the largest number of inquiries come from New York state, most of them from New York city itself. The complete list follows: New York state, 43; New Jersey, seven; Massachusetts, six; Pennsylvania, four; two each from Rhode Island, Connecticut, Ohio, and the District of Columbia, and one each from Virginia, Illinois, New Hampshire, Florida, Canada, Texas, Michigan and Kentucky.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
SUN

JUN 28 1941

The Choir Loft

Beethoven's 'Missa Solemnis' Is Recorded by Dr. Koussevitzky—Weinrich Takes New Post.

By WILLARD IRVING NEVINS.

With the Harvard Glee Club, the Radcliffe Choral Society and the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky, Beethoven's "Missa Solemnis" has been recorded by the Victor Company.

Jeanette Vreeland, Anna Kaskas, John Priebe, Norman Cordon and E. Power Biggs, organist, are the assisting artists.

This magnificent choral work was completed by Beethoven in 1822 and part of it was given in the presence of the composer on May 7, 1824. It is interesting to note that the Ninth Symphony was also heard for the first time on that same date.

Dr. Koussevitzky gives a splendid performance. In spite of the great difficulties of Beethoven's choral writing the chorus and soloists acquit themselves with a high degree of success.

Carl Weinrich, formerly organist and choirmaster of the Church of the Holy Communion, has been appointed organist of the Society for Ethical Culture, 2 West 64th street. Mr. Weinrich is a well-known recitalist and has made a great number of recordings of the Music of Bach. During the past year he has served as acting organist at Vassar College.

Pietro Yon's Mass, Te Deum Laudamus, will be heard under the direction of the composer at St. Patrick's Cathedral, Fifth avenue and 50th street, at 11 A. M., tomorrow.

Ernest White will direct the plain chant mass, Lux et origo, at the Church of St. Mary the Virgin, 139 West 46th street, at 11 A. M. tomorrow.

ORGAN RECITAL.

By Frank Cleveland at Trinity Church, Broadway and Wall street, at 12:30 P. M. next Wednesday: Choral from Six Pieces for the Organ, Bossi; Andante from Orfeo, Gluck; Allegro ma non troppo, Andante, Allegro, Sonata I, Borowski.

This Clipping From PHILADELPHIA, PA.
INQUIRER

JUN 29 1941

Major Musical Event Scheduled for August

The eighth annual gathering of the Berskshire Symphonic Festival is scheduled for a series of three programs on week-ends, that is, on Thursdays, Saturdays and Sundays during the month of August beginning Thursday, July 31, according to a bulletin just received from the American Express Travel Service. This outstanding musical event by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, directed by Serge Koussevitzky, takes place at Tanglewood, Mass., which is near Stockbridge.

June 27 N.Y. Trib

Berkshire Center

Graf Continues as Head of Opera Department

The opera department of the Berkshire Music Center will hold its second session from July 7 to Aug. 17 at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. Dr. Herbert Graf, continuing as the department's head, has accepted twenty out of 250 applicants for active participation in its activities, which will be centered in the new theater designed by Eliel Saarinen.

Boris Goldovsky will continue as the department's musical director, with the assistance of Felix Wolfes. Richard Rychtarik, who designed the current production of "Alceste" at the Metropolitan, will teach stage design and costuming. Eric Hawkins will have charge of physical training and Roland Partridge of diction. At least one complete opera and various programs of operatic scenes will be performed.

This Clipping From
N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT

JUN 18 1941

SINGLE CONCERT TICKETS ON SALE

Tanglewood Subscription Limit of 1,800 Reached —Series Start July 31 —Fine Response.

Now that the limit of 1800 subscriptions has been reached for each of the three series of concerts by the Boston Symphony orchestra, which starts July 31 at Tanglewood, tickets for single concerts in each series are available, the advisory committee of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, comprising community chairmen, was informed yesterday afternoon at the Red Lion inn, Stockbridge. Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, president of the Festival, was in charge of the meeting.

There are approximately 2000 single concert tickets available to the public. The unprecedented demand for subscriptions is taken by the Festival trustees as an indication that the attendance at the concerts this season will be equally as great as the record attendance during the 1940 season.

Persons wishing tickets may obtain them from the local chairmen or from the Festival office in Stockbridge.

This Clipping From
ALBANY, N. Y.
TIMES UNION

JUN 22 1941

Berkshire Festival

GREAT BARRINGTON, Mass., June 21—Scenic charms of the Berkshire hills bring summer guests back year after year, but the current season adds powerful new inducements for vacation tourists.

The Berkshire Music Festival, which brings Sergei Koussevitsky and the Boston Symphony orchestra to Tanglewood from July 31 to Aug. 17, has been sold out for the entire series, with several thousand music lovers seeking accommodations near the amphitheatre.

The Stockbridge Playhouse and the social season at Lenox likewise serve as a magnet, while camps, adult and for children, report large advance reservations.

This Clipping From
WATERBURY, CONN.
DEMOCRAT

JUN 24 1941

Berkshire Festival . . . Last summer every state in the union was represented at Tanglewood, between Stockbridge and Lenox, where the festival is held. This will be the eighth annual season and it is expected that the attendance this summer will be even greater than last. The Music Shed where the concerts are held holds 6,000 persons with quite ample accommodation for standing room in the colonnade of 3,000 additional. The attendance for nine concerts last summer was about 90,000 who during the concert period filled every available hotel and guest house in the Berkshire area. Koussevitzky will conduct the Boston Symphony orchestra in nine concerts again this summer, beginning July 31st from Thursday to Sunday and closing the week-end of August 17. Students are again registering for studies at the Berkshire Music Centre which begins its second year starting early in July and ending with the final Festival concert.

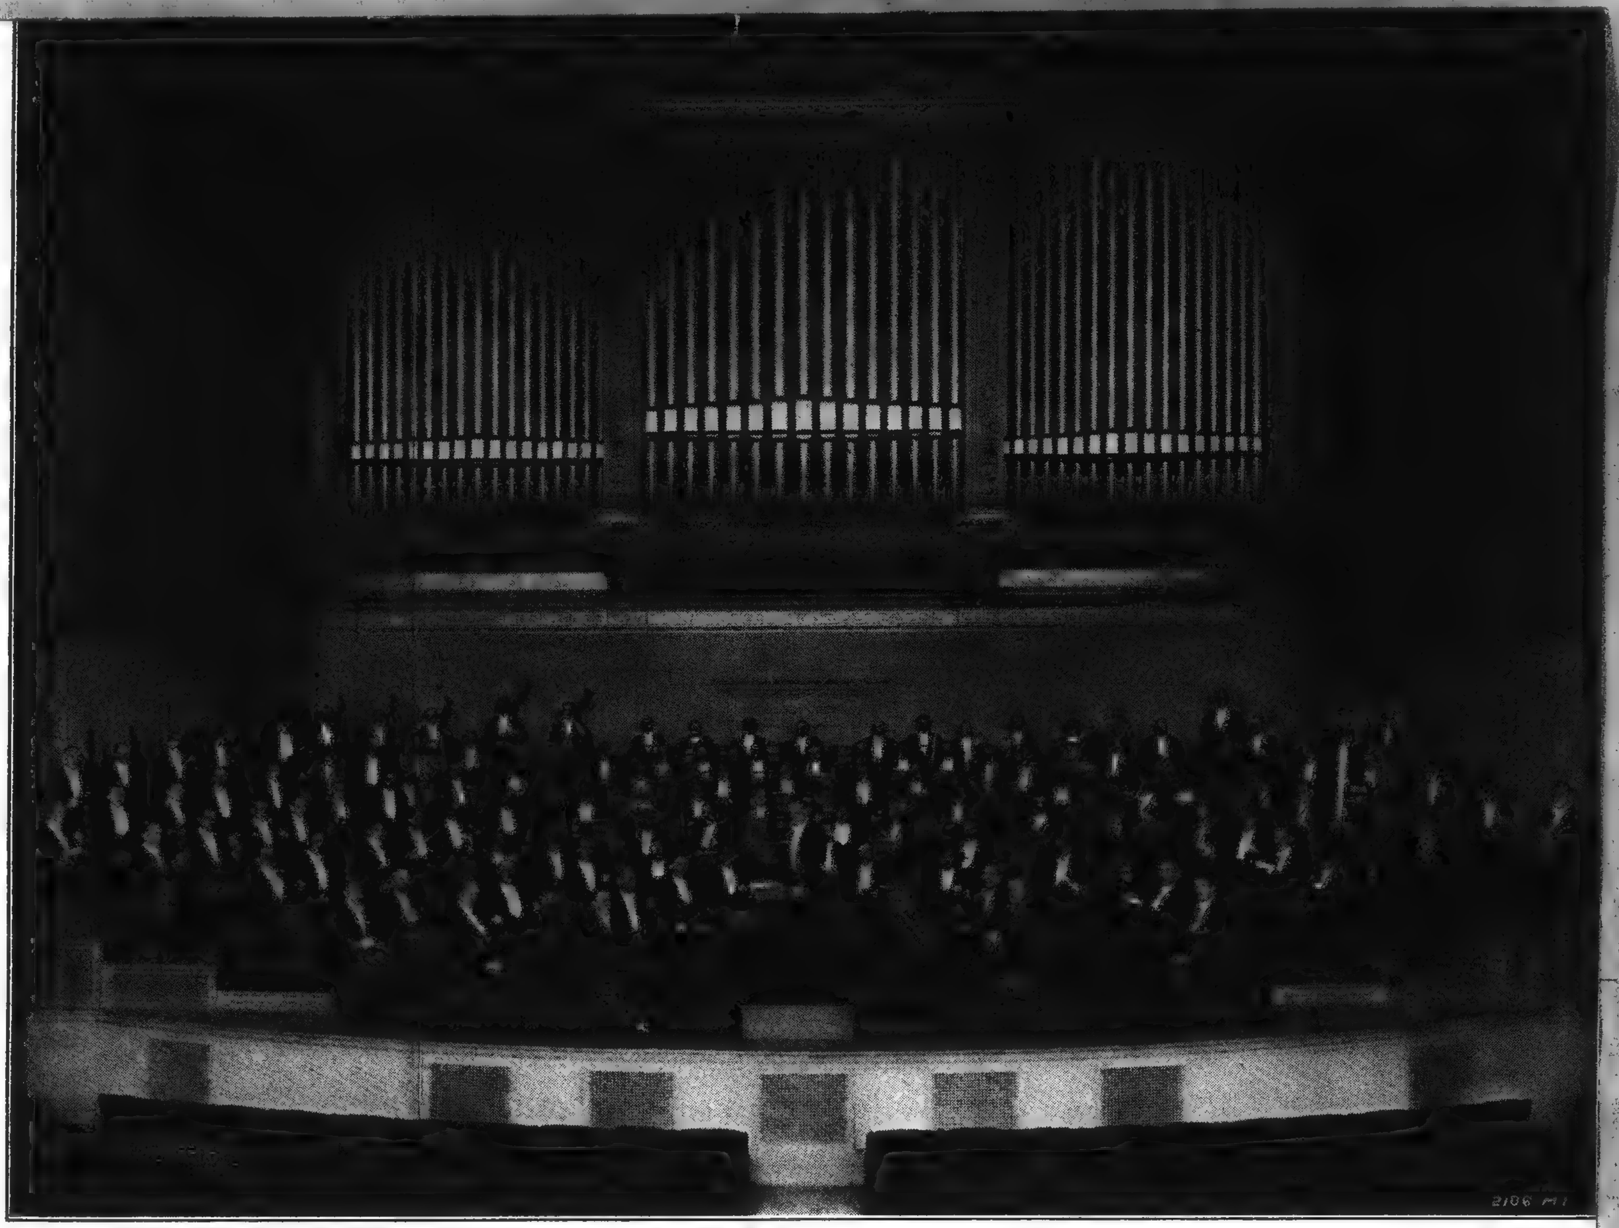
This Clipping From
SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
UNION-STAR

JUN 23 1941

THE limit of 1,800 subscriptions has been reached for the three series of concerts of the 1941 Berkshire Symphonic Festival, commencing July 31 at Tanglewood and concluring August 17. The unprecedented demand for subscriptions is taken by Festival trustees as an indication that the attendence at the concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra for this season will be equally as great as in 1940.

197

PHILA.FORUM MAG.
PHILA., PA.
JUNE, 1941



Annual Philadelphia Concert

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY Conducting

One of their superlative concerts which seem to represent nearly the limit of brilliancy and eloquence which a modern conductor and a peerless orchestra can expect to attain . . . The unrivaled Boston Symphony Orchestra triumphed, because of the inherent qualities of the music they played, and the extraordinary brilliance and euphony of the playing.—Olin Downes

The Boston Symphony is unquestionably the finest orchestra in the world. —Oscar Levant

. . 1942

THE PHILADELPHIA FORUM PROGRAM

This Clipping From
VOGUE
GREENWICH, CONN.
JUL 1 - 1941

at E

Salzburg . . . The Berkshires

At Salzburg, there was Toscanini, magnificent music, Lotte Lehmann, Reinhardt's productions, dirndls, house-parties in old castles, Austrian sausage, lederhosen, Mozart, and a high gaiety.

At the Berkshire Festival, there is Koussevitzky, magnificent music, Coca-Cola, house-parties in columned country houses, and a jam of some 70,000 Americans for the first two August weeks, in austere New England towns, filled suddenly with gaiety.

The Berkshires

BLANK PAGE

This Clipping From ESQUIRE
CHICAGO, ILL.
JUL -- 1941

Roulades and Cadenzas

Citing Serge Koussevitzky's Berkshire Music Center in Tanglewood as one place where honest men live and work in music

by CARLETON SMITH

▪ MUSIC ▪

If a bachelor's degree were given every child at birth, our universities would accomplish more. As it is, they waste time on kudos and credits, overlook learning. Nonsense and tomfoolery have paraded many years in cap and gown. Endless fiddle-daddle has been dished up for the witless.

Now is the time to demand results. Dozers in the ivory towers must be wakened. It is not only that they squander other peoples' money: they throw away irrecoverable opportunities to make this democracy a richer place in the 1950's.

Hitler gained unprecedented response from the German youth because he restored their self-confidence and gave them promise of a better life. They are fighting for something, not against something. Our younger generation does not understand clearly what this struggle is about, or why they may be asked to die. Their experiences have given them little confidence or optimism for the future.

They have entered on their studies, many times, with honorable purpose and invaluable enthusiasm only to be misled and discouraged by eunuchs posing as professors. They have gone away from college incompetent mediocrities and fakirs. They learned to appear to know rather than to know. Their opportunities to do work that is mentally and spiritually exhilarating have been too few. For example, the chorus in a recent Radio City Music Hall contained seventeen A. B.'s, a civil engineer, six Bachelors of Music, a certified public accountant, a quartermaster in navigation, a metallurgist, and three guys who still expected to finish their studies at Cornell.

The fault, of course, is not entirely with the dreamers in our universities. It lies also in our mad-rushing, mechanized society, led as it is by self-satisfied gentlemen who have been so busy hugging themselves that they have not bothered about civilization's collapse. They, and we, have an obligation to our youth . . . for the future.

They, and we, have been mistaking means for ends. In so-called music education, we have spent more, per capita, and received less than any nation on the face of the globe. Literally, we have misused millions. Our public schools are filled with incompetents who haven't a vague notion of the expressive purpose, or the wonder of music. They teach it in the same manner and with the same inspiration that is used on arithmetic tables. Half of them will be pounding out-of-tune pianos when our children march up the steps next September.

Our university Departments of Music are jammed with pedants with an unquenchable appetite for pedal points, and little else. Their incalculable influence is best demonstrated by the fact that when the Boston Symphony plays at Harvard's Sanders Theater, fewer than two hundred students among an audience of eighteen hundred come to hear it.

The landscape from Bangor to Bakersfield is cluttered with conservatories, the only suitable remedy for which is T-N-T. Their promoters may be honest, according to their lights, but in reality they are swindlers and hypocrites, not to mention tenth-raters. They prey upon the public's ignorance and the unquenchable belief of every mother that her little Benny can become a Heifetz or a Hofmann. Agitated and aided by Major Bowes, they have successfully kept from the public the fact that music is the most exclusive profession in the world, not accessible even to Doctors of Music.

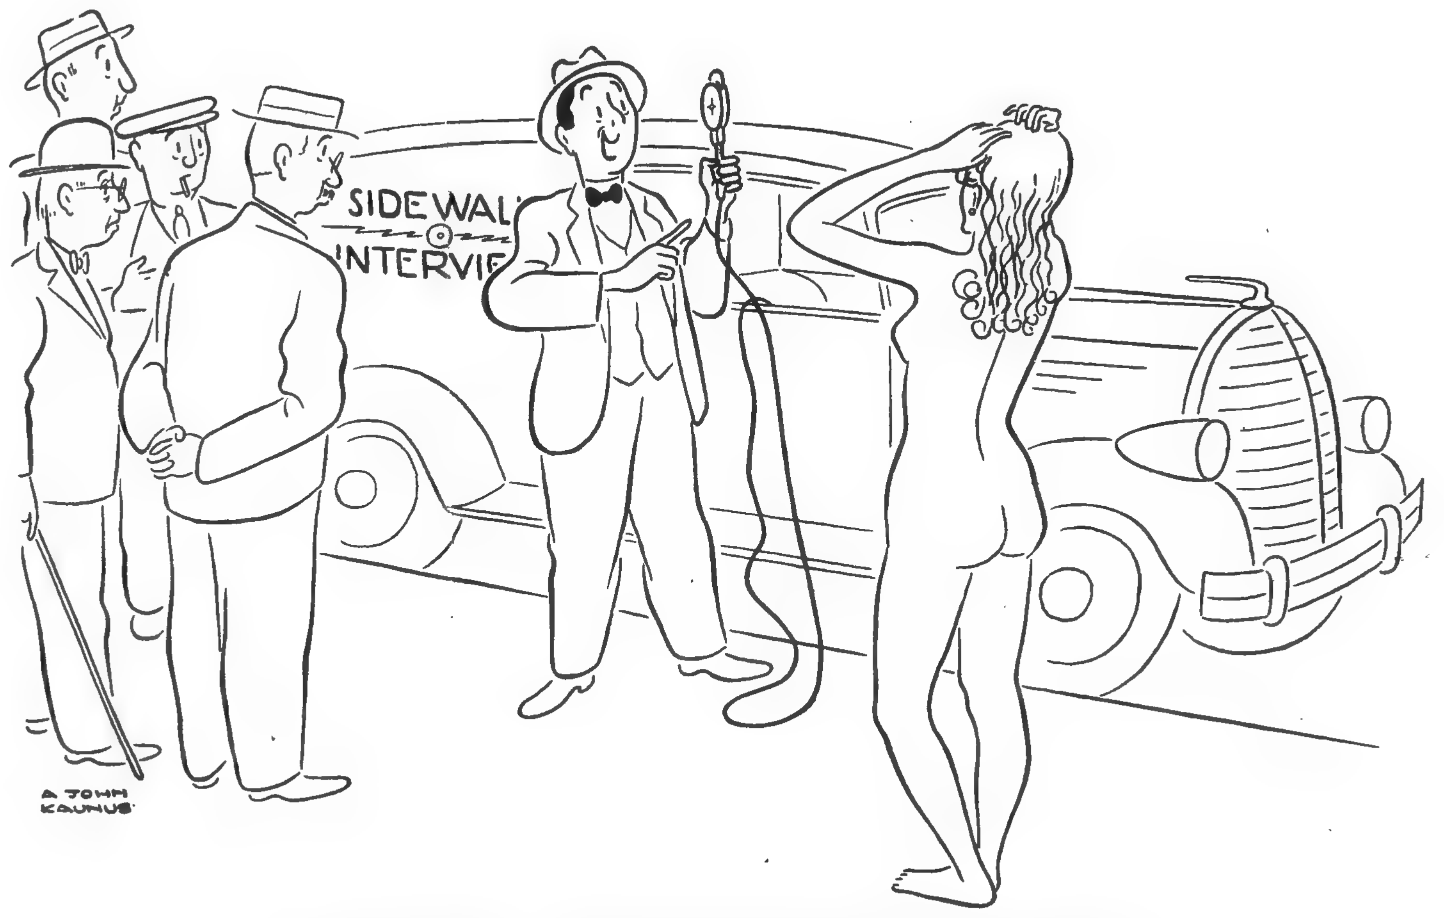
Wall Street is littered with men who keep track of billions of dollars that do not exist and who make triplicate records of innumerable transactions of which not two in a million are ever referred to again. Given a trumpet or a pair of cymbals, these gents would never find out when to toot or clash, as that requires actual business sense. My only banker-friend took private lessons on the drum for six months, and finally gave it up as too expensive. He never did learn when to come in.

Because the fierce strain put by my critical work on my powers of attention makes it necessary, periodically, for me to allow my mind to ramble by way of relief, I go to hear a Business Men's Orchestra, a soirée of the Young Women's Christian Association, or a Conservatory Commencement. There is nothing more reassuring than to wake up from a nap on these occasions, or to come out of a train of political or philosophic speculation, and see everybody present having a happy time.

The chattering of the players, their irreverent waving and yelling to friends in the audience not only relieves the intensity of the musical experience, but positively makes it impossible. Parents, uncles and aunts inevitably interrupt the proceeding at the worst possible moment with applause. And, at one school the pupils blithely treated the most important composition exactly as a new cavalry recruit treats his steed, walloping it from beginning to end. At another, every march sounded like kitchen troops egged on by enthusiastic nursemaids. A Mendelssohn scherzo squeaked like a tune from a hurdy-gurdy. Wagner came off as if he were being turned out by middle-aged traveling salesmen. When the national anthem was played, the audience had to be notified by proclamation. Otherwise, it would have failed to recognize it.

The singing universally bears testimony to the fund of negative advice available across the country. A blind man could see how carefully young vocal aspirants have been told what not to do: not to press on the notes with their breath, not to force the tone, not to sing with effort, and so on. If conservatories would

Continued on page 96



"Ah! Here's a little lady who looks interesting"

Roulades and Cadenzas

Continued from page 75

succeed in getting some teacher who could also tell the pupils what to do, they might one day show signs of knowing how to sing.

At present, they are hopeless as ever. Of the young ladies who sang for me during my recent tour—all announced as holders of scholarships—the worst was as ignorant of the artistic use of her voice as it is possible for any natural musical person with ears to be in a civilized country; and the best, though she evidently had plenty of warnings and cautions from some musician of taste, seemed to have had no positive instruction worth mentioning. At any rate, any practicing imitator of Edgar Bergen could give both young ladies a few pointers about the production of their voices.

Several years ago I wrote that singing teachers were the procurers of the music business . . . that they are without standards or scruples. They practice sorcery, mesmerize, magnetize, wave wands, rub lamps, cast spells, and chiefly misplace and "finish" voices. They are more extravagant in their claims than quacks who offer nostrums to cure everything from syphilis to sneezing. Since many of them have shingles on conservatory doors and young provincials come to them with complete confidence, all of them should be made to study anatomy, acoustics, physiology, not to mention music, and should be licensed. And an Irish policeman should be on hand to watch their lessons.

My chief difficulty at conservatory commencements and music school convocations is to find a viewpoint sufficiently irrational to enable me to keep my face straight throughout the procedure. Generally, we are so tightly packed in—and the humidity is so high—that I would feel more at ease if the institution would install a steam crane near the speakers' rostrum so that any prominent person desiring to leave his place could hook his belt onto the end of a chain, be hoisted out of his chair, swung around, and dropped at the exit nearest a bar.

Now and then, of course, I hear battalions of players who are individually better than members of the finest professional orchestras. What improvements there are in musical training have been in technical proficiency. Instrumental virtuosity is more common in our generation than it ever has been.

The problem is not how to create more virtuosi, but how to make the virtuoso into an artist . . . how to make him think and feel more deeply. The problem, in a larger sense, is how to give our talented young faith in what has to be done . . . a willingness to be excited sincerely, suffer sincerely, grasp the truths of the past and with them shape thought and life itself in the world of tomorrow.

There are no set rules for accomplishing this. It cannot be done by conferring degrees, awarding diplomas, and chalking up credits. There never has been a school for manufacturing geniuses.

But there is a rare climate, a positive atmosphere, a place where honest men live and work in music. It is Serge Koussevitzky's Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood.

"What's the difference between this and other music schools?" I asked a Juilliard scholarship man.

"Well, here you never play a note your teacher doesn't hear. When you rehearse, the first chair men of the Boston orchestra sit right alongside of you. In New York the night we play a concert at Juilliard, my teacher is usually playing in Carnegie Hall with the Philharmonic.

"Then, the men of the Boston Symphony are different. Kind and friendly, they have no feuds. They love music . . . and they don't live in taxicabs between engagements. Their inspiration, the spirit here is unbelievable."

"Is it long enough—six weeks?" I continued.

"Yes, I guess so," he replied. "I lost twenty pounds the first week."

Creative interpretation is Doctor Koussevitzky's central theme. The most talented study conducting under him; others, composition under Aaron Copland and Paul Hindemith. There is an orchestra for the technically proficient who need experience in ensemble playing, chamber groups under Gregor Piatigorsky, and opera dramatics supervised by Herbert Graf. No voice lessons are attempted. Singers are taught (real missionary work!) that the day has passed when they can stop in the middle of any aria, however tragic, and bow and smile and acknowledge the interest if some man from sheer boredom happens to spring his opera hat.

The largest group at the Berkshire Music Center will be college students, music teachers, housewives with voices—amateurs who like music and who want to know more about it . . . who will study a score not only for the sake of performing it but to know it. To examine carefully, first, the visible evidence, in the form of black marks on white paper, of the composer's idea; to look at these signs until gradually there emerges from behind the notes the subtle and mysterious form created from invisibility—a form which becomes always more significant, more fraught with life and meaning as it is contemplated—that is wonder and intoxication as deep as life affords. Gradually to hew out that invisible form in a manner as near the ideal as human effort and limitation permit is a work of magnificent and maddening excitement. The wonder of it is not explainable, for it is compounded, as Olin Downes says, of all that man may know. It leads straight to the secrets of life and of the universe. It gives assurances that no man or law can disperse.

This lay group will rehearse five mornings a week Beethoven's Missa Solemnis, and then sing it under Koussevitzky. In the afternoons the members will study choral and instrumental music of the past six centuries and participate in re-creating it. They will know music from the inside instead of from the outside. In the evenings there will be lectures, fragments from opera, orchestral concerts, plays starring Ethel Barrymore, Tallulah Bankhead, Ina Claire and others at the nearby playhouse, boating, fishing, a full moon, and a boy for every girl.

If you have six weeks free beginning July seventh, write Margaret Grant, the Center's wise and helpful secretary, and enroll. You will not forget your summer. The tuition is a hundred dollars and for another hundred living accommodations are supplied for six weeks. If you have only three weeks (or a week-end), attend the Berkshire Symphonic Festival. For those like myself who require good music as a part of their weekly subsistence, it's a necessity, an oasis in an arid tonal desert. It offers the finest summer music making the world knows today and it is not to be equaled on this side of the Atlantic or the other.

Most summer concerts this time of year are a desperate business. My complaint is not because I invariably manage to get seated between a couple of pop-corn eaters and an echo—one can overlook much when music is being made available to those who ordinarily cannot afford it. The injustice is that those very persons who deserve to hear the best hear only a distortion of it. Acoustics in most outdoor music centers are impossible, and it is not yet considered necessary to have the band together on the fourth beat of the bar as well as the first.

Conductors are not magicians. They cannot prepare four full-length programs during one rehearsal. I suppose we should be grateful if, when one of the poor dopes sweeps wildly down at the beginning of the bar, every musician who is ahead of that point goes back to it, and every one who has not got so far skips forward to it. Many orchestra players are not always so thoughtful.

A great deal of whitewashing is done by a liberal splashing of big names who drape their conscience, stuff their ears, and take advantage of the fact that everybody is in a mood to enjoy himself.

The Berkshire Symphonic concerts brook no compromise, offer no big-name soloists. For one thing, the natural intensity and quality of sound is uniform throughout the Tanglewood Music Shed. For another, Koussevitzky expects the best, and gets it. His glance is like a fresh charge of electricity. He has been seventeen years re-vitalizing the Boston Orchestra and bringing it to its present level of excellence.

He has not confused means with ends. His aim is bringing great music to life . . . and inspiring young boys and girls to do the same. So long as he has been able to do this, he has been content to work in sheds, barns, garages, and under the open sky. He has founded a school with a future—a center where there is a wellspring of genuine enthusiasm for art. And, because of it, his life work will be of more value than that of all the deans and professors and conductors of music now alive. In addition, he has given us one more important institution to make this country worth fighting for. ⧺

Berkshire Symphonic Festival

Lenox, Massachusetts
THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
Serge Koussevitzky, Conductor

Thursday, July 31

Haydn	Symphony in G, No. 8
Debussy	Three Nocturne
Villa-Lobos	Choros No. 1
Beethoven	Symphony No. 3, Eroic

Saturday, August 2

Mendelssohn	Italian Symphon
Beethoven	Leonore Overture, No.
Shostakovich	Symphony No.

Sunday, August 3

Schubert	Unfinished Symphon
Aaron Copland	The Quiet Cit
Hindemith	Concerto for Violoncell (Gregor Piatigorsky, Soloist
Brahms	Symphony No.

Thursday, August 7

Mozart	Fragments from Requiem
Beethoven	Symphony No. 5

Saturday, August 9

Mozart	Symphony in A Minor
Hanson	Romantic Symphony
Brahms	Piano Concerto No. 2

Sunday, August 10

Mozart	Symphony in A Major
Debussy	La Mer
Berlioz	Symphonie Fantastique

Thursday, August 14

Beethoven	Missa Solemnis

Saturday, August 16

Vaughan Williams	London Symphony
Samuel Barber	(Ruth Posselt, Soloist) Violin Concerto
Wagner	Flying Dutchman Overture Prelude and Love Death, Tristan Overture to Die Meistersinger

Sunday, August 17

Sibelius	Symphony No. 6
Strauss	Tod und Verklarung
Tschaikowsky	Symphony No. 6

701

This Clipping From HARPER'S BAZAAR
NEW YORK, N. Y.
JUL -- 1941

by SYLVIA G. DREYFUS

And Ring from All the Trees

Koussevitzky in the Berkshires

AS THE first week-end in August approaches, traffic begins to flow toward the green rolling hills of western Massachusetts, to the Berkshire Festival. The sleepy little New England towns of Stockbridge, Lenox, and Lee, with their freshly painted white houses and delicate church spires, are invaded by gay peaceful hordes, and their quiet elm-bordered streets wake to sudden life. At the monument in the square at Lenox an arrow points west to Tanglewood, summer capital of the world of music.

All kinds of people come. Eight, nine, sometimes ten thousand to a single concert, from every state in the Union and over the border from Canada. They come by plane, by train, by bus, by Rolls-Royce, by jalopy, by bicycle, on foot. They stay at swanky summer hotels and three-room cottages. They pitch tents by the lake or sleep in trailer camps. They dine in full evening regalia or loll at picnic suppers on the grass. Regal old ladies swathed in violet tulle; hikers in shorts; society matrons in ermine coats; young men with black ties and young men with no ties at all; girls in sports dresses and bright sweaters and other girls in clouds of flowered chiffon; an old man in evening togs with a bright blue beret; a young writer in dark shirt and bright blue slacks; earnest students carrying scores of the symphony and rheumatic bankers carrying cushions. Couples, groups of campers, whole families; young and old; shabby and elegant; actors and preachers, musicians and politicians, businessmen, doctors, and farmers, they pour through the gates of Tanglewood.

Steadily the throng flows through the entrance gates and spreads out over the lawns in a sea of color, breaking in different directions, as some go to the refreshment tent for sandwiches and coffee; some wander toward the main house to see the view from the terrace over the lake and the mountains beyond; others stroll through the old formal gardens, great outdoor rooms with green walls of clipped hemlock and simple pools and fountains. There is no hurry, no crowding. One of the charms of Tanglewood is its spacious leisure. But you must not linger too long in the deepening twilight. You have come to hear the music of Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra, ~~and the hour~~ of the concert approaches. A bell rings. The crowd, as if drawn by a magnet, begins to converge toward that modern temple of music, called, with typical New England understatement, "The Shed."

The Shed is breath-taking. You gasp as you see it for the first time. But in spite of its enormous size, the effect of the fan-shaped concrete structure is graceful and airy. Under the shelter of the lofty roof, six thousand people are fully protected from the elements; yet the out-of-doors feeling is never lost. For the encircling colonnade is high, too, and its supporting columns so simple that they merely frame, like panels on a Japanese screen, a continuous frieze of great trees and broad, informal vistas.

Night falls suddenly. The trees grow black against a luminous sky. A sudden rush of late-comers—and the auditorium is darkened. The brightly lighted stage, with a hundred musicians in summer-evening uniform of white coat and black trousers, looks like an animated etching. There is an expectant, almost breathless hush. Then a roar of welcoming applause as Koussevitzky takes his place. The concert has begun.

The audience, relaxed and forgetful of everyday cares in this holiday setting, seem to give themselves up to enjoyment more easily than in a four-walled city auditorium. They have made a journey to hear this concert, they are eager, receptive, intent. There is no movement in the Shed, only the concerted activity of the musicians and the pulsating waves of sound. Beethoven, Shostakovich, Debussy—this is no mere vacation music, no "light summer reading." Classic, romantic, modern, there is musical fare for every taste. Of the twenty-five compositions announced for the nine concerts of the 1941 Festival—and these include an entire Mozart program and Beethoven's "Missa Solemnis"—eight are by living composers of whom four are Americans!

In its infant years of '34 and '35, the Berkshire Symphonic Festival consisted (Continued on page 91) simply of three pleasant outdoor orchestral concerts, promoted by the efforts of an enthusiastic group of Berkshire women who wanted to establish a summer music center in their native hills. While nice music under the stars is charming entertainment and a fine objective for community enterprise, it doesn't make a Festival. The committee had an inspiration: they invited Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra to come to Lenox. The conductor was quick to respond to this challenging opportunity, and in August, 1936, the famous orchestra gave three concerts in a tent on Mrs. Margaret Emerson's Lenox estate. Five thousand people came to each performance. The music was superb. This time, instead of a deficit, there was a small profit, but as yet no basis for real security nor any reason to expect a phenomenal growth.

AND RING FROM ALL THE TREES

(Continued from page 58)

The following winter came a surprising development, an example of the great generosity that so often clothes itself in extreme modesty. One evening Mrs. Gorham Brooks of Boston telephoned a friend and said in her gentle, almost timid voice, "As I sat listening to the Symphony concert this afternoon, I began to think about the Festival. And suddenly an idea came into my head, 'Why shouldn't I give Tanglewood to the Boston Symphony?'" In just that simple way her magnificent two-hundred-acre estate was given as an unrestricted gift to the orchestra. For a hundred years this property had belonged in Mrs. Brooks's family. Her grandparents made their home the meeting place for the great New England men of letters—Emerson, Holmes, Herman Melville, Nathaniel Hawthorne, Longfellow. In a little red house on their estate, Hawthorne wrote the American classics "The Wonder Book," "Tanglewood Tales," "The House of Seven Gables." The next generation of the family welcomed to their home such distinguished friends as William and Henry James, and Charles Eliot Norton. With this background, Tanglewood is the ideal setting for a great cultural project.

The first season at Tanglewood, the concerts were given in a huge tent. There had been a terrific hot spell, and the tent seemed to gather in the heat and hold it as in a big canvas bag. The stage was so badly ventilated that the musicians suffered through rehearsals and concerts until one Sunday afternoon when Koussevitzky, who clings to a European formality in dress, made sartorial history: he asked permission for his men to remove their coats. Then he himself, to the satisfaction of a perspiring audience, appeared on the podium in his white silk shirt sleeves.

The weather was a constant source of worry, for there were thunderstorms almost every day, usually clearing an hour or so before the performance but frightening off people who were driving from a distance. An all-Wagner program had been announced for the Thursday evening of the second week. Dubious skies were scanned the whole afternoon, with hope against hope that the rain would come and be done with. But the storm held off stubbornly until the audience was assembled in the tent; and then, just before eight-thirty, it began to pour. There was thunder and violent lightning. Shortly after the scheduled starting time, Koussevitzky took his place. The rain stopped. He raised his baton for the opening of the "Rienzi" Overture and played a few bars. Again the downpour started, steady, deafening, resounding on the wet canvas tent top like machine gunfire or the relentless roll of drums. Koussevitzky stopped. There was a lull. He started once more and managed to get through the Overture. But with the delicate opening measures of the "Siegfried Idyl" the rain began again, a deluge. With a gesture of despair the conductor left the podium and for half an hour the audience awaited the pleasure of the storm. Backstage, Koussevitzky was assuring the manager that he would finish the concert if it took all night. People began to get wet and kept shifting around to escape the water that dripped through the joints in the tent and down the openings left for the tall upright poles. Nobody could leave. But the audience, fortified with cigarettes, kept their temper while the rain trickled down the back of their neck. Everyone was good-natured, including the indomitable conductor. Eventually, all the louder numbers were played, regardless of the printed order of the program, while the storm went on. No one heard "Forest Murmurs." But who will ever forget that melodramatic "Ride of the Valkyries," every measure of the music beating against the storm, as Wotan's daughters soared through the clouds to Valhalla? The program ended with the "Liebestod," but by that time the rain had stopped, and the conductor was cheered to starry skies by a damp but delighted audience.

At midnight, a small group was talking it all over in the deserted bar of the Berkshire Hunt Club when Koussevitzky, bedraggled, weary, triumphant, stopped in to say good night. "So!" he cried gaily, "Here I am! You see, nor fire nor water shall drive me out. But not again will I do this. I will not conduct here next year if there is no protection against storms. It is not fair to my orchestra. It is not fair to our audience. It is not fair to music."

That was Thursday night. On Saturday evening the audience found on their chairs at the concert announcements of a campaign to raise money for the music pavilion that had been designed by the eminent Finnish architect, Eliel Saarinen. When they arrived in Lenox in 1938, the building was ready.

The Shed was built by popular subscription. In 1939 the Rockefeller Foundation announced a grant of $60,000 to be used over a period of two years for the proposed academy, the Music Center. In 1940 the Festival season was lengthened from two to three weeks, and a fine organ, gift of the Carnegie Corporation, was installed in ~~the Shed. The~~ same year the Berkshire Music Center opened with an overflowing enrollment for its six weeks' course. This year the Music Center will accept an increased number of students; and two new buildings, one for operatic and theatrical performances and one for chamber music, will be ready.

Dorothy Maynor appeared on an evening program last year. The young Negro soprano had been absolutely unknown until a morning in August, 1939, when she sang for Koussevitzky in the Shed. He was tired and warm; at that particular moment he wanted nothing less than to sit through an audition. But he had promised. Electrified by her exquisite voice, he asked her to sing the next afternoon at a picnic he was giving for the men of the orchestra and their families. At the picnic she was heard by one professional critic and by some two or three hundred other people, most of them coolly critical, experienced musicians. The musicians actually wept; the critic wired a full column to his paper, the New York Times, about Koussevitzky's sensational "discovery"—and Dorothy Maynor was made.

On another program Koussevitzky played Prokofieff's gay and charming "Lt. Kije." It calls for a trumpet to be played offstage. Now "offstage" at Tanglewood is not just behind a door; it is a couple of hundred yards away from the Shed, so far away, in fact, that it took two assistant conductors, one of them waving a handkerchief, to relay Koussevitzky's beat to the young trumpeter. Just as he took his position out in the field, a zealous policeman, catching sight of the shiny brass instrument, rushed up to him and cried, "See here, young feller, you can't play that horn here. There's a concert going on!"

In many respects the Festival is unique. It is the only "self-contained" Festival in the country; that is, its success rests entirely on its own conductor and orchestra, not on outside talent imported as box-office drawing cards. It differs from the usual pattern of American "festivals" where several concerts—more perhaps than an audience can digest—are crowded into a few days. At Tanglewood, with concerts on Thursday, Saturday, and Sunday, there is leisure for the audience to enjoy the beauties of the countryside; and plenty of time for the regular rehearsals required by the conductor.

It may not occur to the general public that a first-rate orchestra, composed of highly trained and talented artists, requires anything more than perfunctory practise before a performance. But at Tanglewood, part, at least, of the public has a chance to look behind the scenes. The Saturday morning rehearsal is open to Festival members and to school children from the neighboring districts, most of whom have studied the programs in their public-school music classes. Admission tickets, not to be bought, are precious; fully two thousand people are on hand at the Shed long before ten o'clock.

The orchestra is already seated when, on the dot of ten, Olin Downes, dean of American music critics, begins his brief, illuminating talk on the program about to be played. The half-hour lecture commands absorbed attention. Then Koussevitzky appears, casual in white trousers and shirt and, if the morning is cool, a loose blue flannel jacket. Smiling, he acknowledges the quick flutter of applause—and cuts it short with a peremptory gesture. The gesture says: This is not a concert; we have work to do; please do not interrupt us! He mounts the podium where, for rehearsal use, a straight little wooden chair is screwed firmly to an extra platform. When Koussevitzky happens to think of it, he sits on the edge of the chair or leans against it. Most of the time he forgets it completely, taking his usual well-coordinated stance, which permits an easy range of movement and gesture with hardly a noticeable shifting of balance.

At once the rehearsal begins. Now and then the conductor, with a sharp rap of the baton, stops to repeat a phrase or a page. Occasionally he may flare up in vocal disapproval of some less than perfect tone or tempo, for this is a true rehearsal. The listeners, at first a little uncertain how to behave and inclined to be amused at the volatile Russian temperament, soon understand that they are not witnessing a special kind of show but sharing an actual work period; and that, as far as Koussevitzky is concerned, they aren't there at all. Now they listen as intently as if they were taking a lesson in conducting, and most people regard the rehearsal as one of the outstanding experiences of the Festival. Indeed, many enthusiasts, to make certain of this privilege, sign their membership applications for the next year before they leave Tanglewood.

A concentrated audience, a perfect setting, great music greatly played. But there is something more. There in Tanglewood a subtle harmony between music and nature seems to touch every performance with a strong emotional quality to which both musicians and listeners respond.

The last car rolls through the gate and down the New York road. Tanglewood settles into silence. The violins are mute in their cases, but the chords of Brahms's symphony still vibrate through the clear Berkshire air.

1314X

283

This Clipping From
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

JUL 1 - 1941

Social Activities

Music Center At Tanglewood Opens Sunday

Formal Opening To Be Held At Shed

LENOX—Trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky, director and members of the faculty of the Berkshire Music Center, have issued invitations for the opening exercises of the second season of the Center at Tanglewood, Sunday.

It had been hoped to have the exercises in the new theatre, but the building will not be ready for another week. As last year, the program will be given in the Berkshire Symphonic Festival's shed with Dr. Koussevitzky presiding. Tea will be served in the garden.

Students numbering 350, will arrive at the end of this week to take up living quarters in Lenox School and Cranwell School in Lenox and St. Edmund's School in Stockbridge.

Arrangements for the formal opening of the Center have been made by Dr. Koussevitzky, George E. Judd, manager of the orchestra and Mrs. Margaret Grant, executive secretary of the Center.

Over the week end one of the largest single shipments of pianos ever made to one place, arrived at Tanglewood from the Baldwin factory in Cincinnati, Ohio. There were 47 pianos in all, a dozen of them grands. John Ortiz was in charge of the consignment valued at more than $50,000 which came over the highways in three large vans.

This Clipping From VARIETY
NEW YORK, N. Y.

JUL 2 - 1941

Leonard Shure at Berkshire

Leonard Shure will solo at the Berkshire Festival with Brahms piano concert in B flat under Sergie Koussevitsky on Aug. 9.

On Aug. 14, the pianist is set to play with the Budapest String Quartet at Ravina Park, Chicago.

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
SUNDAY UNION
& REPUBLICAN

JUL 6 - 1941

Music Schools Sponsor Concerts

Berkshire Festival Opening On the 31st Dominates a Busy Scene — Recitals Offered by Cummington, Norfolk (Ct.) Music Schools, South Mountain Association at Pittsfield and Gordon String Quartet at Falls Village, Ct.

IF THE summer season in this part of New England was ever considered something of a let-down as far as things musical were concerned, the steady flow of announcements of concerts, festivals and recitals now coming to this department makes it apparent that music is only a step behind the theater in building up a year-round audience.

Dominating the local scene is, of course, the Berkshire Festival with its three-series program that begins on Thursday evening, the 31st. This year in addition to the Boston Symphony under Dr Koussevitzky, subscribers will hear the Berkshire Festival chorus and a quartet of soloists perform Beethoven's "Missa Solemnis."

From the Cummington Music school comes word that a series of five Sunday afternoon concerts by distinguished artists will begin next Sunday. The first will be by Orrea Pernel, violinist, and Gregory Tucker, pianist. On the 27th, a recital of chamber music will be presented by Orrea Pernel, Gregory Tucker and Louise Rood, viola, and George Brown, violincello. On August 3, Bruce Simonds, piano, and Orrea Pernel will give a sonata recital and on August 17, Hugo Kortschak will offer a violin recital. The final program of the series, on August 24, will be an ensemble affair by members of the school. These concerts will be held at 4 p. m. at the auditorium at Playhouse-in-the Hills at Cummington. Subscriptions are invited and they are open to the public.

South Mountain [illegible]

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE

JUL 7 - 1941

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM

JUL 7 - 1941

Pianos Arrive by the Dozen

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky studies the fine workmanship of one of 40 Baldwin pianos which arrived at the Berkshire Music Center for use of the school. Immediately in back of the Boston Symphony director is Pierre Luboshutz, Mrs. Margaret Grant, executive secretary of the Music Center, and Mrs. Luboshutz. The Luboshutzes are the two-piano team of Luboshutz and Nemenoff.

This Clipping From
N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT

JUL 5 - 1941

BERKSHIRE MUSIC CENTER TO OPEN

Tea to Follow Exercises Tomorrow

Sessions of the Berkshire Music center, conducted by the Boston Symphony orchestra at its estate. Tanglewood, in Lenox, will start Monday with an enrollment of approximately 350 professional and amateur musicians and music lovers.

Invitations have been issued by Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston orchestra and director of the center, trustees of the orchestra and members of the faculty, for opening exercises to be held at 4 o'clock Sunday. Tea will be served in the garden following the exercises.

This Clipping From
ALBANY, N. Y.
TIMES UNION

JUL 6 - 1941

MUSIC World

By

E. S. VAN OLINDA

The trustees of the Boston Symphony orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky, director, and members of the faculty of the Berkshire Music Center will inaugurate the 1941 season this afternoon at "Tanglewood," permanent summer home of the orchestra. Tea will be served in the garden following the opening exercises, which are scheduled for 4 p. m. Admission is by invitation only.

This Clipping From
LOS ANGELES, CALIF.
TIMES

JUL 6 - 1941

Berkshire Music Center Widens Scope This Year

The Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, between Stockbridge and Lenox, Mass., which was established last summer by the Boston Symphony Orchestra with Serge Koussevitzky as its director, will be larger this summer. The second session will consist of six weeks, July 7 to Aug. 17.

The school will have classes in conducting, in composition, in operatic interpretation and in symphonic performance.

HOTEL AND RESTAURANT NEWS
BOSTON, MASS
7/5/41

Symphonic for Berkshire Hills

With the number of reservations about a month in advance of 1940, "encouraging response" for subscriptions for the eighth annual season, presenting the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky, is reported by the Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Tanglewood, Mass. Nine concerts will be given on Thursday and Saturday evenings and Sunday matinees between July 31 and August 17.

Music lovers planning attendance at the Festival are urged to communicate at once with the Berkshire Hills Conference at the Courthouse in Pittsfield for room reservations. Hotels in the immediate vicinity of Tanglewood are already booked nearly to capacity and rooms in private homes in the immediate vicinity are also heavily reserved. Accommodations are obtainable, however, in towns and cities within a radius of 50 miles.

Works by the contemporary composers, Sibelius, Vaughan Williams, Barber, Piston, Hindemith, Shostakovitch, Villa Lobos, Copland and Hanson, are included in this year's program. There will be three Mozart works the second week of the Festival in commemoration of the 150th anniversary of the composer's death. The much-discussed Symphony No. 5 by Shostakovitch will be heard in the first series of concerts, which will be given on July 31 and August 2 and 3. The eminent Brazilian composer, Villa Lobos, will present his Chorous No. 10, also in the first series.

Of special interest to music students is the announcement that Piston, Hindemith, Copland and Hanson are listed either as members of the faculty or lecturers at the Berkshire Music Center, which will be operated for its second year at Tanglewood by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, for six weeks starting the first week in July and ending with the final Festival concert.

Tanglewood, between Stockbridge and Lenox, was given to the Boston orchestra as a permanent home for the Festival in 1937 by Mrs. Gorham Brooks of Brookline, a member of the Festival's board of trustees. The estate received its name from the fact that it was in the little red house on a site now marked by a tablet that Nathaniel Hawthorne first told his "Tanglewood Tales" and wrote "The House of the Seven Gables." Subscriptions were received from throughout the nation to build the Music Shed, which seats 6000 and has standing room in the colonnade for 3000 more. The total attendance last year for 9 concerts and three Saturday morning rehearsals was nearly 90,000, the audience coming from every state in the United States as well as Canada and Central and South American countries.

This Clipping From
OSSINING, N. Y.
CITIZEN-REGISTER

JUL 3 - 1941

Mrs. McDowell Aids Symphonic Festival

Serves on Committee for Berkshire Event

Mrs. James H. McDowell of Underhill Road is serving on the committee for the Annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival to be held during August in the Music Shed at Tenglewood, between Stockbridge and Lenox, Mass.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Serge Koussevitsky, will be heard on three series for three consecutive Thursday and Saturday evenings, and Sunday matinees. The dates for Series A are July 31, Aug. 2 and 3; for Series B, Aug. 7, 9 and 10; and Series C, Aug. 14, 16 and 17.

Further information concerning the Festival may be obtained from Mrs. McDowell.

This Clipping From PITTSBURGH, PA.
PRESS
JUL 6 - 1941

Series of Concerts By Boston Orchestra To Comprise Festival

Musicians Under Serge Koussevitzky to Perform During Annual Event Held In Berkshire Mountains

By RALPH LEWANDO
Press Music Editor

The brilliant Boston Symphony Orchestra and its eminent conductor, Serge Koussevitzky, will inaugurate the eighth Berkshire Symphonic Festival at "Tanglewood," situated between Stockbridge and Lenox, Mass., on the night of July 31.

This important annual seasonal event has become an artistic mecca for thousands of persons of all ages and from all walks of life whose appreciation of the finest aspects of musical art is not lessened by the advent of the summer season. From many parts of the country come these faithful devotees to listen to meticulous performance of great music without having to comply with the formalities of dress.

Mr. Lewando

In the past nearly every performance at "Tanglewood," the scenic estate that is now the property of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has been a sell-out. Those who do not care about listening to the concerts from seats may dispose themselves anywhere upon the vast grassy lawn outside of the shed. Hundreds of persons with blankets, pillows and such, take advantage of this opportunity to enjoy symphonic fare with the utmost ease.

A different program will feature each of the nine concerts to be given on three consecutive weekends that embrace Thursday and Saturday nights and Sunday afternoons, from July 31 to Aug. 17, inclusive. The list of works to be presented comprises 32 compositions of 20 composers, three of the latter—Aaron Copland, Howard Hanson and Samuel Barber—being Americans.

For the first time at these concerts the Berkshire Music Assn. Chorus, Horace Lunt, director, has been invited by Mr. Koussevitzky to participate in the performance of several symphonic-choral works.

The opening concert on July 31 will feature Handel's D-minor concerto No. 10, for organ and orchestra; Debussy's Clouds, Festivals and Sirens; the Chorus No. 10, of Villa Lobos, the noted Brazilian composer, and Beethoven's third—"Eroica"—symphony.

The Aug. 2 program includes Mendelssohn's fourth—"Italian"—symphony; Beethoven's Lenore overture, No. 3, and the Shostakovitch fifth symphony.

Cellist Gregor Piatigorsky will be soloist on Sunday, Aug. 3, playing Hindemith's concerto. The orchestral items are Schubert's "Unfinished" symphony, Aaron Copland's "Quiet City" and Brahms' fourth symphony.

The second series of three concerts begins on Aug. 7. Mozart's G-minor symphony, excerpts from his Requiem and Beethoven's fifth symphony are the fare for this occasion.

The Aug. 9 event brings to performance Mozart's Eine Kleine Nachtmusik; Hanson's second symphony ("Romantic"); Wagner's Lohengrin and Die Meistersinger preludes and Brahms second piano concerto with Leonard Shure as soloist.

The Sunday matinee of Aug. 10 will feature Mozart's E-flat symphony; Debussy's "La Mer" and the Berlioz Fantastic Symphony.

The final series of three concerts starts on Aug. 14, with Beethoven's Missa Solemnis preceded by the Bach C-major prelude and fugue arranged by Mr. Koussevitzky. Soloists will be announced later.

For the Aug. 16 concert the program will consist of Vaughn Williams' "London" symphony; Samuel Barber's violin concerto, with Ruth Posselt as soloist, and three Wagner items; Good Friday Spell from Parsifal, prelude to Parsifal and the Tannhauser overture.

The final event, scheduled for Sunday, Aug. 17, will feature Sibelius' sixth symphony, Strauss' D and Transfiguration and kowsky's fifth symphony.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE
JUL 6 - 1941

Berkshire Festival

Subscriptions Filled; Sale for Single Concerts Begins

The limit of 1,800 subscriptions has been reached for each of the three series of concerts of this summer's Berkshire Symphonic Festival, it was announced at a meeting last month of the festival's advisory committee in Stockbridge, Mass. An ample number of tickets for single concerts is still available in the three series. These may be obtained by communicating with the festival office in Stockbridge, or the New York office at 113 West Fifty-seventh Street, or with local chairmen in the Berkshires.

As already announced, the festival consists of nine concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., on the three Thursday and Saturday nights and Sunday afternoons between July 31 and Aug. 17.

This Clipping From
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE
JUL 3 - 1941

New Tanglewood Theatre Ready For Sunday Opening

LENOX.—The new theatre at Tanglewood designed by Ebiel Saarinen, will be in readiness for the opening of the second annual sessions of the Berkshire Music Center Sunday afternoon at 4 o'clock. Until a few days ago it was believed that the program would have to be given in the shed as last year. Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and director of the Center, will welcome the 350 students and members of the faculty. Tea will be served following the exercises.

This Clipping From
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE
JUL 5 - 1941

Pupils Invited To Tanglewood

Pupils in the Pittsfield schools will be invited to attend rehearsals of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood on Saturday mornings of the Symphonic Festival week ends, Aug. 2, 9 and 16.

F. Carl Gorman, supervisor of music for the Pittsfield School Department, will be in charge of arrangements.

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN
JUL 7 - 1941

New Concert Hall Dedicated At Berkshire Music Center

Principal Address Is Made by Dr Serge Koussevitzky—Donors of New Hall Announced—345 Students Enroled for Courses at Center

Lenox, July 6—The second year of the Berkshire Music center at Tanglewood opened this afternoon with the dedication of a new theater-concert hall. N. Penrose Hallowell, a trustee of the Boston Symphony orchestra, presided and Dr Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the orchestra, was the principal speaker.

He said that new problems confront the center as in every sphere of life. "First of all," he said, "how to listen to serious music, not as an idle pastime, but so that music will penetrate into the living consciousness of the people. Another problem: How and on what basis to establish a fertile and creative contact between youth and their elders in the field of professional musical activity."

Dr Koussevitzky maintained that the solution of these problems can be found only in the process of work itself." In the first place," he continued, "is the plan of general musical development, that is to say, extra-professional musical education within the reach of every one and indispensable in some degree to all. The aim of the general musical development is to bring the wide masses closer to music and thereby introduce music into life, not in the accidental manner, in which this happens in life, but in a cultural way."

The second part of the music center work is the professional plan which "falls into two branches: Musical execution of all types and pure creative work." The speaker named as donors of the new concert hall, which has 1000 seats, Mrs Edward W. Bok, Alvan T. Fuller, Philip Allen, Mr and Mrs Frederic B. Pratt, Miss Alice Clapp and Lucien Wulsin.

Mrs Margaret Grant, executive secretary of the center, said that 345 students are now enrolled, of whom 125 were here last year. Mr Hallowell spoke of the hall as "another link in the accomplished dream of the conductor, a man of great courage, patience and imagination."

Randall Thompson's "Alleluia" was sung by the center chorus with Prof G. Wallace Woodworth of Harvard, conductor. Miss Mary Van Kirk, soprano, sang, Miss Ruth Posselt and Jesus Maria Sanroma were violin and piano soloists, respectively. On the platform were Dr Roger Irving Lee of Boston, also a Boston symphony trustee; Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, president of the Berkshire Symphonic festival, and members of the center faculty. Eight hundred enjoyed tea in the Tanglewood Gardens.

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
EVENING UNION
JUL 7 - 1941

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION
JUL 7 - 1941

SECOND SEASON OF TANGLEWOOD MUSIC IS BEGUN

Registration for Center Is 312; Thompson's "Alleluia" Is Presented

PITTSFIELD, July 6—Stating that the aim of general musical development is to bring the wide masses closer to music and thereby introduce music into life in a cultural way, Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, opened the second season of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood this afternoon. About 1500 persons attended the exercises which were held in the newly constructed theater concert hall across the green from the huge concert shed.

Study for Six Weeks

The exercises opened with the singing of "Alleluia" which was written for the first season last year by Randall Thompson. The singers were the music center chorus composed of the 300 odd students who will study there for the next six weeks. The conductor was G. Wallace Woodworth of Harvard, who will be in charge of choral work.

Registration is between 340 and 350, according to Mrs. Margaret Grant, secretary of the center. Last year 312 registered.

The theater in which the exercises were held was built last spring. It seats 1500, and in it will be given scenes from operas, and possibily chamber music. It is made of wood, as are the other buildings on the property, and is finished inside in natural wood color.

The opening announcement was by H. Penrose Hallowell, trustee of the Boston orchestra, who introduced Dr. Koussevitzky. The program consisted of playing by Jesus Maria Sanroma, resident pianist of the Boston orchestra, Miss Ruth Posselt, violinist and wife of Richard Burgin, concert master of the orchestra, and Mary Van Kirk, contralto, who won the Metropolitan Opera audition this year.

The exercises closed with the singing of the Star Spangled Banner. Tea was served in the garden.

This Clipping From
N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT
JUL 7 -

345 PUPILS ENROLL AT MUSIC CENTER

New Theater-Concert Hall Dedicated

SECOND SEASON

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky is Principal Speaker at Tanglewood Exercises.

The new theater-concert hall at Tanglewood, Boston symphony orchestra estate in Lenox, was dedicated yesterday as the Berkshire Music center, offering instruction to professional and amateur musicians, opened its second season with an enrolment of 345 pupils.

As principal speaker in the dedicatory exercises, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston orchestra and director of the center, explained the two-fold purpose of the center. First, he said, there is "the plan of general musical development, that is to say, extra-professional musical education within the reach of everyone and indispensable in some degree to all. The aim of the general musical development is to bring the wide masses closer to music and thereby introduce mu[illegible] into life, not in the accid[illegible] manner, but in a cultural wa[illegible] [illegible]econd, there is the center's wo[illegible] [illegible]th professional musicians, wh[illegible] [illegible]ls into two branches: Musical [illegible]tion of all types, and pure [illegible]ative work."

[illegible]ng at the exercises was N Pen[illegible] Hallowell, [illegible] trustee of the Boston orchestra, w[illegible] spoke of the hall as "another link in the accomplished dream of the great conductor, a man of great courage, patience and imagination."

Music during the exercises was provided by the center chorus, directed by Prof. Walter Woodworth of Harvard university, which sang Randall Thompson's "Alleluia" with Miss Mary Van Kirk, soprano; Miss Ruth Posselt, violinist, and Jesus Maria Sanroma, pianist.

Dr. Koussevitzky announces that the new hall, which will accommodate 1,000, was donated by Mrs. Edward W. Bok, Alvan T. Fuller, Philip Allen, Mr. and Mrs. Frederic B. Pratt, Miss Alice Clapp and Lucien Wulsin.

Following the exercises tea was served to about 800 persons in the Tanglewood gardens.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES

JUL 7 - 1941

BERKSHIRE CENTER OPENS 2D SEASON

Serge Koussevitzky Speaks at Dedication of New Concert Hall at Tanglewood

CHORUS SINGS 'ALLELUIA'

Prof. G. W. Woodworth the Conductor of Thompson Work —Mary Van Kirk Soloist

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LENOX, Mass., July 6—The second year of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood opened this afternoon with the dedication of a new theatre concert hall. N. Penrose Hallowell, a trustee of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, presided, and Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the orchestra, was a principal speaker.

He said that new problems confront the center as in every sphere of life. "First of all," he said, "how to listen to serious music, not as an idle pastime, but so that music will penetrate into the living consciousness of the people. Another problem is how and on what basis to establish a fertile and creative contact between youth and their elders in the field of professional musical activity."

Dr. Koussevitzky maintained that the solution of these problems can be found only in the process of work itself. "In the first place," he continued, "is the plan of general musical development, that is to say, extraprofessional musical education, within the reach of every one and indispensable in some degree to all. The aim of the general musical development is to bring the wide masses closer to music and thereby introduce music into life. Not in the accidental manner, in which this happens in life, but in a cultural way."

The second part of the music center work is the professional plan which "falls into branches: musical execution of all types and pure creative work." The speaker named as donors of the new concert hall, which has 1,000 seats, Mrs. Edward W. Bok, Alvan T. Fuller, L. Philip Allen, Mr. and Mrs. Frederick B. Pratt, Miss Alice Clapp and Lucien Wulsin.

Mrs. Margaret Grant, executive secretary of the center, said that 345 students are now enrolled, of whom 125 were here last year. Mr. Hallowell spoke of the hall as "another link in the accomplished dream of the conductor, a man of great courage, patience and imagination."

Randall Thompson's "Alleluia" was sung by the center chorus, with Professor G. Wallace Woodworth of Harvard as conductor. Miss Mary Van Kirk, soprano, sang, and Miss Ruth Posselt and Jesus Maria Sanroma were violin and piano soloist, respectively. On the platform were Dr. Roger Irving Lee of Boston, also a Boston Symphony trustee; Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, president of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, and members of the center faculty. Eight hundred attended a tea in the Tanglewood Gardens.

This Clipping From
N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT

JUL 11 1941

Few Students Accept Tanglewood Invitation

Only a few Drury and St. Joseph's high school students have so far accepted the invitation of the Berkshire Symphonic festival to attend rehearsals of the Boston Symphony orchestra at Tanglewood Lenox, on the first three Saturday mornings in August, Donald W Fowler, Drury principal, said today. Mr. Fowler said that tickets will be available at Drury until Monday, but on that day they will be sent back to Tanglewood. Some are also available for adults who drive cars to take the students to Lenox or go along as chaperons.

This Clipping From
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

JUL 8 - 1941

USO and British Relief At Tanglewood, Aug. 15th

New England Manifestation Planned by Dr. Koussevitzky— Philip Allen General Chairman

A New England manifestation calling everybody from everywhere to Tanglewood will be given Friday, Aug. 15, under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The program, patterned after the eminently successful manifestation of last year which netted nearly $25,000 for Allied relief, will be presented at the home of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival and the Berkshire Music Center.

To Divide Proceeds

The proceeds this year will be divided equally between the United Service Organizations and British War Relief, Inc.

Again all the forces at Tanglewood—the Festival organization, the orchestra, Dr. Koussevitzky and the Music Center—will cooperate in presenting the manifestation.

Proceeds turned over to the USO will be used to provide machines and recordings of good music for all boys in the service and now in training at various camps.

Philip R. Allen, prominent industrialist and president of the board of trustees of the New England Conservatory of Music at Boston, has accepted appointment as general chairman for the benefit and to the executive committee he has named trustees of the orchestra and the Festival. On the committee are:

Jerome D. Greene, Richard C. Paine and Edward A. Taft of the orchestra board; Dr. James Phinney Baxter 3d, president of Williams College; Mrs. William Felton Barrett of Rye, N. Y., and Egremont and George W. Edman, managing editor of the Berkshire Eagle in Pittsfield, representing the Festival board.

Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, president of the Festival and Ernest B. Dane, president of the orchestra, will be honorary chairmen. George E. Judd, manager of the orchestra, will assist the executive committee.

This Clipping From
HOLYOKE, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT TELEGRAM

JUL 7 - 1941

The Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, outside of Stockbridge, which grew out of the Boston Symphony orchestra's Music Festival and is building the Berkshires into one of the distngushed music centers of this continent is open for the second year. There are 345 students, 125 of them for their second year. They celebrated their opening with the dedication of a new theater or concert hall that will seat a thousand people. This is the gift of seven people of whom former Gov. Alvan T. Fuller is one.

This Clipping From
HOLYOKE, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT TELEGRAM

JUL 7 - 1941

BERKSHIRE MUSIC CENTER OPENS SECOND SEASON

The second season of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood in Lenox was opened Sunday afternoon with the dedication of the new theatre concert hall. N. Penrose Hallowell, a trustee of the Boston Symphony and Conductor Sergei Koussevitzky took part in the program. There are now 345 students enrolled, of whom 125 were there last year. A musical program accompanied the dedication.

KARNES CITY, TEX
CITATION
9/11/41

A Music Center in America

The Berkshire Music Center is a new name to the world of music. After only two seasons it is a famous one.

Already world-famed is its parent organization, the popular Berkshire Symphonic Festival of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The Salzburg of America, this festival has been called, and there is every reason to predict that the Center—a school of advanced music training—will equal the high repute of the Festival.

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, famous conductor of the Orchestra, and Director of the Center, dreamed of such a project for years. He tried to establish it first in Moscow. That was in 1914. The World War brought it to a quick end. A second try at it in White Plains, New York, in 1929, was frustrated by the depression.

Now America has, in the quiet Berkshire hills of Massachusetts, a Center that seems destined not only to endure, but to bring a new fame to the New World.

Whenever he can find or make occasion to do so, the loyal citizen will er under the greatest music masters of the day. American musicians need no longer go to Europe; indeed, it may well be that Europe will come to America. This season found Scotland, Canada, and five Latin-American countries represented in the Berkshire school.

If the Center accomplishes the high aim of Dr. Koussevitzky to bring to the students "the truly spiritual essence of music, which stands high above the level of vulgar amusement and musical diversion," it cannot help but become an institution of world renown, a Center comparable in every way to the best traditions of Europe.—Christian Science Monitor.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES

JUL 7 - 1941

BERKSHIRE TEA GIVEN BY SYMPHONY GROUP

Fete Held by Boston Orchestra and Faculty of Music Center

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LENOX, Mass., July 6—Five hundred persons attended a tea and garden party here this afternoon at Tanglewood as guests of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, director, and of the faculty of the Berkshire Music Center, which was opened today for its second season.

CHICOPEE, MASS
HERALD
7/10/41

This Clipping From
ALBANY, N. Y.
TIMES UNION

JUL 10 1941

This Clipping From
NEW HAVEN, CONN.
JOURNAL-COURIER

JUL 10 1941

This Clipping From
MANCHESTER, N. H.
LEADER

JUL 10 1941

This Clipping From
HOLYOKE, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT TELEGRAM

JUL 9 - 1941

This Clipping From
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

JUL 11 1941

Cars Needed To Take Students To Rehearsals

From 30 to 35 cars will be needed to transport junior and senior high school students of this city to Tanglewood for rehearsals of the Boston Symphony Orchestra Aug. 2, ~~9 and 16~~. F. Carl Gorman, supervisor of music in the public schools, announced today. Any adult who wishes to transport pupils to Tanglewood on any of the above Saturday mornings should mail a post card to Mr. Gorman, Box 854, with his name, address and telephone number and the morning he will offer his car.

Students tickets for the rehearsals are now available at Room 108, Pittsfield High School, where Mr. Gorman will be stationed every afternoon from 1 to 3, except Saturdays. Transportation will be provided the pupils to the shed and back. These tickets are for school students only.

All pupils attending rehearsals must be in their seats by 9.30 AM.

206

Tanglewood Dedicates New Theatre; Koussevitzky Speaks

Pittsfield Mass Eagle

Opening of Second Season of Music Center Is Auspicious Occasion —Many Attend Dedicatory Tea

July 7

Under sunny and peaceful Berkshire skies, the second season of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood opened yesterday afternoon with the dedication of the new theatre-concert hall, and an introduction by N. Penrose Hallowell, trustee of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who asked "hard work" from the Center's students, and a call from Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, director of the orchestra and of the Center, for "new methods of work" in order to increase the "participation of the masses which influences the course of culture and the very process of its development." A musical program was given by the Center chorus and three soloists.

Mrs. Margaret Grant, executive secretary of the Center, announced an enrollment for this year of close to 350 students, compared to 312 last year, remarking that the school already has become an "international institution," with one student from Scotland, two from Canada and five from Latin America. She expressed a hope that the Center will "do its bit to promote friendly relations with our neighboring countries."

By 4 the new hall of unfinished wood, designed by Eliel Saarinen, the Finnish architect who designed the famous Music Shed, had practically all of its 1200 folding seats filled. On the roomy stage were the officials of the Berkshire music institution, including Mss Gertrude Robinson-Smith, president of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, Dr. Roger Irving Lee of Boston, another trustee of the BSO, members of the faculty and of the orchestra.

At the opening program, Dr. Koussevitzky thanked the donors of the new theatre-concert hall, Mrs. Edward W. Bok, Alvan T. Fuller, Philip Allen, Mr. and Mrs. Frederick B. Pratt, Miss Alice Clapp and Lucien Wulson. He expressed gratitude for these and others who "had responded so generously to my appeal for the Center," adding that he hoped his appeal would "reach even further so that more men and women of America would bring offerings to the altar of music."

Just completed in time for the opening, a feat which brought a tribute of thanks to the contractor from Dr. Koussevitzky, the new building gave an impression of airiness enhanced by the unpainted Oregon fir, brightly painted doors on back and sides of various hues, a high arched roof hung from barrel hoop buttresses showing outside, and a sloping floor of Tarvia covered with gravel on which the seats were placed. A handsome gray curtain of velour yesterday hid the deeper part of the stage, which has a light gray cyclorama, a full complement of overhead lights, dressing rooms and complete set of stage equipment.

Following the dedication of the new theatre the guests gathered in the gardens for tea. Music lovers, students, their parents, instructors and directors of the school surrounded the fountain. In the background can be seen the barrel hoop buttresses of the new theatre.

Tanglewood

Continued From First Page

Another Being Built

Another smaller hall, seating 400, has been built on the grounds for this season, and will accommodate smaller concerts, mostly of chamber music, taught in a new department of the Center, which was the result of great demand by last year's students, as Mrs. Grant stated in her talk. Four other small rehearsal halls have been constructed, all under the direction of Architect Saarinen.

This year, the Center will not be divided into the Academy and the Institute, but will be a unified institution with five departments, the new ones this year being the chamber music and the music and culture departments. In the latter, music will be related to the culture and historical backgrounds of each period.

After Mr. Hallowell had told the audience of the difficulties in the fulfilment of Dr. Koussevitzky's dream for the Center, he warned the students that they would have to work, under "this great disciplinarian."

Takes Bow

Dr. Koussevitzky was applauded after his dedicatory address. At the right is N. Penrose Hallowell,

Singing Opens Program

The program opened with the singing by the Center Chorus of the Alleluia of Randall Thompson, member of the first year's faculty, as conducted by Dr. G. Wallace Woodworth, conductor. After the talks by Mr. Hallowell, who warned the students that Dr. Koussevitzky was a great disciplinarian and could well give friendly criticis because 'he always works harder than anyone else," and by Dr. Koussevitzky himself, as well as the report by Mrs. Grant, the musical program was enjoyed. Jesus Maria Sanroma, piano soloist who has played with the Boston Symphony Orchestra for some years, opened with two Debussy selections. He was followed by Miss Ruth Posselt, violinist, wife of Richard Bergen, concert master of the orchestra, and by Miss Mary Van Kirk, tsudent of the Center last year, who his since been a winner in the audition of the Metropolitan Opera Company.

After the program closed with "The Star Spangled Banner," a tea was given to the guests in the garden behind the main Tanglewood house. Dr. Koussevitzky announced that the "official" opening of the new concert-theatre was next Sunday at 4, when symphony and opera fragments would be played by the Center artists.

"Now," he said after the music yesterday, "you can see that the acoustics are splendid!"

His formal talk of the afternoon was in part as follows:—

Director's Talk

"In greeting you all here at the opening of the second season of the Berkshire Music Center, I cannot just restrict myself to wishing you good day and successful work. Really, this ought to be enough. But life is leading us forward in gigantic strides and least of all has the Music Center, which we have created, the tendency to remain aloof from life, and, rejecting the realistic present, to turn into an academic, narrowly professional institution.

"What do we face and what are our problems?

"Just now, when all questions in every sphere of life are open and require new solutions, new questions confront us also, even in the modest field of our activity.

"First of all, how to listen to seriόus music not as an idle pastime, but so that the music will penetrate into the living consciousness of the people?

"Another problem: How and on what basis to bring about a fertile and creative contact between youth and their elders in the field of professional musical activity?

Within Reach of All

"Insofar as practice of the work, and not the theory, is the essence of a living culture, the solutions of these problems can be found only in the process of work itself, and just this will be our aim in the course of the present season. Let us say only in general terms that reducing musical culture to basic lines, we divide it into two main plans. In the first place is the plan of general musical development, that is to say, extra-professional musical education, within the reach of everyone and indispensable in some degree to all.

"The aim of the general musical development is to bring the wide masses closer to music and thereby introduce music into life, not in the accidental manner in which this happens in life, but in a cultural way.

"It is at this point the general problems of culture attain a preeminent significance. I believe that general culture in a certain measure plays a more important role than even professional musical education, just because of the participation of the masses which influences the course of culture and the very process of its development. In the sense in which we understand it, this problem is new to music and up to now has been little elaborated. It also requires new methods of work because it depends on the sensitiveness of the leader-professionals and on their ability to bring music closer to the general public, not through the simplification and impoverishment of art, but remaining at all times on that higher level on which art at the given moment stands.

For the Masses

"In what does the active drawing of the wide masses nearer to music consist? It consists, with due regard to native creative ability, in breaking down the artificial barriers between the "initiated" and the "non-initiated"; in making the musical language as accessible to the general understanding and emotion as is the spoken language; in exposing the meaning and evolution of all musical styles; in giving a feeling for and an understanding of, the development and structure of musical forms; in an invitation to practical participation in instrumental and vocal ensembles, and so on. But the most important is to introduce into the consciousness of listeners the truly spiritual essence of music, which stands high above the level of vulgar amusement and musical diversions.

One of the greatest vices of European culture (of art, at any rate) has been that art was detached from the people. Fortunately, we do not have this here to any such extent as in Europe. We well know that "a man of action," in the true sense of the word, can only be called one whose actions are linked with the progress of the masses. It depends a great deal on us, therefore, to act in such a way as to make a severance between culture and the people quite impossible in the future.

"This is why we place such great emphasis on the problem of general musical education. The people must be linked with music organically and not merely by an accidental link based on mutual sympathy or taste. The strength of this link is the guarantee of the entire future growth of music in the countrk."

Concluding, Dr. Koussevitzky discussed the professional part of the work, in musical execution of all types and in pure creative work.

This Clipping From
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

JUL 9 - 1941

Mr. and Mrs. Rossario Mazzeo are living in the guest cottage on the Weisbach place in Lenox. Mr. Mazzeo, who is a clarinetist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is a member of the Berkshire Music Center faculty.

George E. Judd, of Norwell, manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has returned to Boston after assisting with the opening of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood. Mr. Judd will divide his time between Boston and Lenox until the Berkshire Festival opens. He will be with Mr. and Mrs. Valario Montanari of Lenox when he is in the Berkshires.

206

Tanglewood Dedicates New Theatre; Koussevitzky Speaks

Pittsfield Mass Eagle

Opening of Second Season of Music Center Is Auspicious Occasion —Many Attend Dedicatory Tea

July 7

Under sunny and peaceful Berkshire skies, the second season of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood opened yesterday afternoon with the dedication of the new theatre-concert hall, and an introduction by N. Penrose Hallowell, trustee of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who asked "hard work" from the Center's students, and a call from Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, director of the orchestra and of the Center, for "new methods of work" in order to increase the "participation of the masses which influences the course of culture and the very process of its development." A musical program was given by the Center chorus and three soloists.

Mrs. Margaret Grant, executive secretary of the Center, announced an enrollment for this year of close to 350 students, compared to 312 last year, remarking that the school already has become an "international institution," with one student from Scotland, two from Canada and five from Latin America. She expressed a hope that the Center will "do its bit to promote friendly relations with our neighboring countries."

By 4 the new hall of unfinished wood, designed by Eliel Saarinen, the Finnish architect who designed the famous Music Shed, had practically all of its 1200 folding seats filled. On the roomy stage were the officials of the Berkshire music institution, including Mss Gertrude Robinson-Smith, president of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, Dr. Roger Irving Lee of Boston, another trustee of the BSO, members of the faculty and of the orchestra.

At the opening program, Dr. Koussevitzky thanked the donors of the new theatre-concert hall, Mrs. Edward W. Bok, Alvan T. Fuller, Philip Allen, Mr. and Mrs. Frederick B. Pratt, Miss Alice Clapp and Lucien Wulson. He expressed gratitude for these and others who "had responded so generously to my appeal for the Center," adding that he hoped his appeal would "reach even further so that more men and women of America would bring offerings to the altar of music."

Just completed in time for the opening, a feat which brought a tribute of thanks to the contractor from Dr. Koussevitzky, the new building gave an impression of airiness enhanced by the unpainted Oregon fir, brightly painted doors on back and sides of various hues, a high arched roof hung from barrel hoop buttresses showing outside, and a sloping floor of Tarvia covered with gravel on which the seats were placed. A handsome gray curtain of velour yesterday hid the deeper part of the stage, which has a light gray cyclorama, a full complement of overhead lights, dressing rooms and complete set of stage equipment.

Following the dedication of the new theatre the guests gathered in the gardens for tea. Music lovers, students, their parents, instructors and directors of the school surrounded the fountain. In the background can be seen the barrel hoop buttresses of the new theatre.

Tanglewood

Continued From First Page

Another Being Built

Another smaller hall, seating 400, has been built on the grounds for this season, and will accommodate smaller concerts, mostly of chamber music, taught in a new department of the Center, which was the result of great demand by last year's students, as Mrs. Grant stated in her talk. Four other small rehearsal halls have been constructed, all under the direction of Architect Saarinen.

This year, the Center will not be divided into the Academy and the Institute, but will be a unified institution with five departments, the new ones this year being the chamber music and the music and culture departments. In the latter, music will be related to the culture and historical backgrounds of each period.

After Mr. Hallowell had told the audience of the difficulties in the fulfilment of Dr. Koussevitzky's dream for the Center, he warned the students that they would have to work, under "this great disciplinarian."

Singing Opens Program

The program opened singing by the Center Cho Alleluia of Randall T member of the first year's as conducted by Dr. G. Woodworth, conductor. A talks by Mr. Hallowell, who the students that Dr. Kouss was a great disciplinarian and well give friendly criticis b 'he always works harder than one else," and by Dr. Koussev himself, as well as the repor Mrs. Grant, the musical prog was enjoyed. Jesus Maria S roma, piano soloist who has pla with the Boston Symphony chestra for some years, opened two Debussy selections. He followed by Miss Ruth Posselt, olinist, wife of Richard Berge concert master of the orchestr and by Miss Mary Van Kirk, tsu dent of the Center last year, wh his since been a winner in the

Takes Bow

Dr. Koussevitzky was applauded after his dedicatory address. At the right is N. Penrose Hallowell, fluences the course of culture and the very process of its development. In the sense in which we understand it, this problem is new to music and up to now has been little elaborated. It also requires new methods of work because it depends on the sensitiveness of the leader-professionals and on their ability to bring music closer to the general public, not through the simplification and impoverishment of art, but remaining at all times on that higher level on which art at the given moment stands.

For the Masses

"In what does the active drawing of the wide masses nearer to music consist? It consists, with due regard to native creative ability, in breaking down the artificial barriers between the "initiated" and the "non-initiated"; in making the musical language as accessible to the general understanding and emotion as is the spoken language; in exposing the meaning and evolution of all musical styles; in giving a feeling for and an understanding of, the development and structure of musical forms; in an invitation to practical participation in instrumental and vocal ensembles, and so on. But the most important is to introduce into the consciousness of listeners the truly spiritual essence of music, which stands high above the level of vulgar amusement and musical diversions.

One of the greatest vices of European culture (of art, at any rate) has been that art was detached from the people. Fortunately, we do not have this here to any such extent as in Europe. We well know that "a man of action," in the true sense of the word, can only be called one whose actions are linked with the progress of the masses. It depends a great deal on us, therefore, to act in such a way as to make a severance between culture and the people quite impossible in the future.

"This is why we place such great emphasis on the problem of general musical education. The people must be linked with music organically and not merely by an accidental link based on mutual sympathy or taste. The strength of this link is the guarantee of the entire future growth of music in the countrk."

Concluding, Dr. Koussevitzky discussed the professional part of the work, in musical execution of all types and in pure creative work.

This Clipping From

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

JUL 9 - 1941

Mr. and Mrs. Rossario Mazzeo are living in the guest cottage on the Weisbach place in Lenox. Mr. Mazzeo, who is a clarinetist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is a member of the Berkshire Music Center faculty.

George E. Judd, of Norwell, manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has returned to Boston after assisting with the opening of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood. Mr. Judd will divide his time between Boston and Lenox until the Berkshire Festival opens. He will be with Mr. and Mrs. Valario Montanari of Lenox when he is in the Berkshires.

280

This Clipping From NORWALK, CONN.
HOUR

JUL 12 1941

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
JOURNAL AMERICAN

JUL 11 1941

This Clipping From
LAWRENCE, MASS.
TRIBUNE

JUL 11 1941

Everyone Called to Tanglewood for USO and British Relief Benefit

A New England manifestation calling everybody from everywhere to Tanglewood will be given Friday, August 15 under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The program, patterned after the eminently successful manifestation of last year, which netted nearly $25,000 for Allied relief, will be presented at the home of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival and the Berkshire Music Center. The proceeds this year will be divided equally between the United Service Organizations and British War Relief Inc.

Again all the forces at Tanglewood, the Festival organization, the orchestra, Dr. Koussevitzky and the Music Center—will cooperate in presenting the manifestation. Proceeds turned over to the USO will be used to provide machines and recordings of good music for all boys in the service and now in training at various camps.

Philip R. Allen, prominent industrialist and president of the board of trustees of the New England Conservtory of Music at Boston, has accepted appointment as general chairman for the benefit and to the executive committee he has named trustees of the orchestra and the Festival. On the committee are:

Jerome D. Greene, Richard C. Paine and Edward A. Taft of the orchestra board; Dr. James Phinney Baxter 3rd, president of Williams College; Mrs. William Felton Barrett of Rye, N. Y. and Egremont, and George W. Edman, managing editor of the Berkshire Eagle in Pittsfield, representing the Festival board. Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, president of the Festival and Ernest B. Dane, president of the orchestra, will be honorary chairmen.

This Clipping From
BUFFALO, N.Y.
COURIER-EXPRESS

JUL 13 1941

This Clipping From
HOUSTON, TEXAS
POST

JUL 13 1941

This Clipping From PORTLAND, OREGON
OREGONIAN

JUL 20 1941

This Clipping From
INDIANAPOLIS, IND.
STAR

JUL 20 1941

This Clipping From
SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
UNION-STAR

JUL 12 1941

Tanglewood Plans Benefit Program

Proceeds Will Be Used for British Relief and USO

The Berkshire Symphonic Festival, at Tanglewood, Stockbridge, will sponsor an all-day benefit for USO and British Relief on August 15. The program, patterned after the successful one of last year which netted nearly $25,000 for Allied relief, will combine all forces at Tanglewood, the Festival organization, the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Dr. Koussevitzky and the Music Center. Proceeds turned over to the USO will be used to provide machines and recordings of good music for all boys in the service and now in training at various camps.

Philip R. Allen, President of the Board of Trustees of the New England Conservatory of Music at Boston, has accepted appointment as general chairman for the benefit. On the committee are Jerome D. Greene, Richard C. Paine and Edward A. Taft of the orchestra board; Dr. James Phinney Baxter 3rd, President of Williams College; Mrs. William Felton Barrett of Rye and George W. Edman, representing the festival board. Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, President of the festival and Ernest B. Dane, President of the orchestra, will be honorary chairmen.

This Clipping From
CHATTANOOGA, TENN.
TIMES

JUL 13 1941

Words About Music

Marea Rankin Ransom, soprano, will sing a program tomorrow morning at 10 o'clock in the University of Chattanooga chapel. Nelly Mae Rankin, sister-in-law of the singer, will accompany her on the piano. The public is invited.

Mrs. Ransom, a graduate of the university and voice pupil of Prof. J. Oscar Miller, later studied at Chautauqua, N. Y., under Evan Evans. Her program tomorrow: "My Love Is a Weaver" (Hildach); "Clouds" (Charles); Rondo gavotte from "Mignon" (Thomas);

"Calm Is the Night" (Bohm); "I Love Thee" (Grieg); "American Lullaby" (Rich).

"Sheep and Lambs" (Homer); "Oh, Promise Me" (De Koven); "Daddy's Sweetheart" (Schaefer).

* * *

United Service Organizations and British War Relief, Inc., will share in the profits of a concert to be given Aug. 15 at Tanglewood, Stockbridge, Mass., by Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony orchestra as a part of its annual summer symphonic festival to be held in the Berkshire country. Money turned over to U. S. O. will be used to buy machines and recordings of good music for the entertainment of soldiers in training.

A similar concert given at the Berkshire festival netted almost $25,000, which was donated to allied relief.

—H. W. H.

This Clipping From KNOXVILLE, TENN.
JOURNAL

JUL 20 1941

This Clipping From
AKRON, O.
BEACON-JOURNAL

JUL 13 1941

Mary Van Kirk In Opera Roles

Mary Van Kirk, Akron contralto and new member of the Metropolitan Opera association, is using her superb voice to excellent advantage this summer at Berkshire festival, Stockbridge, Mass., presided over by Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra.

A letter to her mother, Mrs. J. W. Van Kirk of Akron, states that Mary recently sang at Koussevitzky's request at the dedication of a new theater there, and that in response to the audience's request she sang "O don fatale" from "Don Carlos."

Also appearing on the program were Ruth Posselt, American violinist, and Jesus Maria Sanroma, pianist. Sanroma, a Porto Rican, is pianist with the Boston Symphony.

Miss Van Kirk will portray the following operatic roles this summer at the Berkshire festival: Dame Quickly in "Falstaff"; Amneris in "Aida"; Martha in "Faust"; Bertha in "The Barber of Seville"; and Fricka in "Die Walkuere." She also will sing in "The Magic Flute."

A new England manfestation calling "everybody from everywhere" to the Berkshire festival will be given on Aug. 15 under the direction of Koussevitzky, it is announced by George W. Edman, representing the festival board.

The program, patterned after the successful manifestation of last year which netted nearly $25,000 for allied relief, will be presented at the home of the Berkshire Symphonic festival and the Berkshire music center. Proceeds this year will be divided equally between the United Service Organizations and British War Relief, Inc.

All the forces at Tanglewood—the festival organization, the orchestra, Dr. Koussevitzky and the music center—will cooperate in presenting the manifestation.

Proceeds turned over to the USO will be used to provide machines and recordings of good music for all boys in the service and now in training at various camps.

This Clipping From
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

JUL 12 1941

Tanglewood Invitations Are Issued

Formal Opening of New Building Tomorrow

Invitations have been issued for the formal opening of the new concert-opera hall at Tanglewood tomorow afternoon at 4. Students and faculty of the Berkshire Music Center, will be on hand to welcome guests and to participate in the program.

Serge Koussevitzky, director of the Center and conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will lead the student orchestra in a Mozart program of symphonic music after which the opera department, Dr. Herbert Graf, director, will present excerpts from three operas. The symphonic works will include "Eine Kleine Nachtmusik" and the D Minor Symphony.

This Clipping From
PLAINFIELD, N. J.
COURIER-NEWS

JUL 12 1941

USO and British Relief To Benefit From Music Festival in Berkshires

Plainfield music lovers who summer in the Berkshire Mountain vicinity will be interested in the New England manifestation to be given Friday, Aug. 15, under direction of Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra. The program, patterned after the eminently successful manifestation of last year, which netted nearly $25,000 for Allied relief, will be given at the home of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival and the Berkshire Music Center, Tanglewood, near Stockbridge, Mass.

Proceeds this year will be divided equally between the United Service Organization and the British War Relief branches of which were active in Plainfield under the leadership of Mrs. Edward E. Iremonger and John A. Darsie and Harry Brockley. Money turned over to the USO from the benefit, will be used to provide machines and recordings of good music for all boys in training in various camps in the service of the U. S. Army.

This Clipping From
CHICAGO, ILL.
NEWS

JUL 12 1941

Berkshire Music Fiesta To Be Opened on July 31

The eighth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival will delight August visitors to New England. Under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky, the Boston Symphony Orchestra will play three programs a week at Tanglewood, Mass., near Stockbridge. The concerts will be given on Thursdays, Saturdays and Sundays, beginning Thursday, July 31, and continuing throughout August, according to S. Douglas Malcolm of the American Express.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES

JUL 14 1941

NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE

JUL 14 1941

New Theater Concert Hall Dedicated in Berkshires

Boston Orchestra Members and Students Play at Lenox

Special to the Herald Tribune

BERKSHIRE HILLS, Mass., July 13.—A dedicatory Mozart program of symphonic music and opera fragments was given this afternoon in the new theater concert hall at Tanglewood, Lenox, by members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and B[redacted]Music Center students. Tonight at the Curtis Hotel Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, the conductor, gave a dinner for sixteen in compliment to Eliel Saarinen, architect of the new hall and also of the Tanglewood music shed.

This Clipping From PORTLAND, OREGON
OREGON JOURNAL

JUL 13 1941

Berkshire Symphonic Fete Slated

Koussevitsky to Conduct Opening Concert July 31 With Boston Orchestra

The eighth annual Berkshire Symphonic festival at "Tanglewood," Stockbridge, Mass., will open July 31 with an evening concert by the Boston Symphony orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky conducting. For the first time at Tanglewood, at the invitation of Dr. Koussevitzky, the Berkshire Musical association chorus, Horace Hunt, director, will appear with the orchestra.

Subscriptions for the nine festival concerts are ahead of last year. Works by contemporary composers will be featured. Three Mozart works will be performed the second week of the festival in commemoration of the 150th anniversary of the composer's death.

At an August concert, the Berkshire Festival chorus, made up of students at the Berkshire Music center at Tanglewood, will be heard. The center operates for six weeks, the last three during the period of the festival. The school has classes in conducting, composition, operatic interpretation and symphonic performance.

Music lovers who contemplate attendance at the festival are asked to write to the Berkshire Hills conference, Courthouse, Pittsfield, Mass., for accommodations.

208

This Clipping From
DAYTON, OHIO
SUNDAY JOURNAL HERALD
JUL 13 1941

This Clipping From
HARTFORD, CONN.
COURANT
JUL 13 1941

The World In Music

By PIERRE KEY

We the people, as a people, are assuredly doing ourselves proud musically. How fortunate we are, with so much of the rest of the world in desperate straights, to have all we have in the way of music . . . along with living conditions which thus far have not been disturbed by the foreign conflicts.

Right now we are making more music than in any previous summer. Much of it better music, too, so far as the interpretive side goes.

There is another side of our music activities, however, which is striding steadily ahead: the educational. Schools of every imaginable kind are now in full swing. Perhaps the most notable of these is the Berkshire Music Center, up at Tanglewood (near Lenox, Massachusetts), which got under way a few days ago.

This is a development of the Berkshire Musical Festival begun a few years ago in modest fashion but which, under Serge Koussevitzky's direction and with the backing of wealthy music patrons, has taken a special place in our nation's summertime music enterprises.

Geared to accept a limited number of students, and those only outstandingly advanced and gifted, the Berkshire Music Center is staffed with leading musicians who are serving in the capacity of instructors and counselors.

Other Great Schools.

There are, however, other summer music schools which have quite as much to offer, in certa if not in all respects, as the Berkshire Music Center. And several of these schools are not second to any. It just happens that with the Berkshire Festival in action during the study period of the Center, there are the various performances to be heard, with the Boston Symphony Orchestra holding down the main portion of that job.

Chautauqua, New York state's unique educational and entertainment center, stands right alongside any one may mention; for there is Albert Stoessel and his associates of the Juillard opera department and a fine symphony orchestra taking care of the concert and opera programs. And Ernest Hutcheson is there; and Oscar Wagner also is to give some of his time to Chautaugua.

I could go on naming a string of other music colonies where performances go hand in hand with the practical instruction imparted. One which is more or less new is the Deerstrees Theater at Harrison, Maine, where opera is the princpal music bill of fare, directed by that experienced artist and directress Enrica Clay Dillon.

Public Profits.

Two main points stand out in the accomplishments of these "practical" summer time music schools: the students get the practical experience which is so essential, and so difficult to obtain other than at this period of year; the second adtage comes in being able to work under distinguished music counselors, quite a number of whom are not available for this type of work during the autumn, winter and spring. Besides — summer appears to be the season which makes for projects planned to give their students a type of practical experience they must have to progress in their respective fields.

With students recruited from all over the country, the Deertrees opera project is moving serenely along; as is the colony Opera Guild, recruited from Oscar Seagle's Schroon Lake colony, which started two evenings ago on a pretentious program of opera performances.

And so it is going in varions parts of this country: our young music-makers — instrumentalists, singers, conductors, composers — are strengthening their wings for more important engagements ahead.

This Clipping From TOLEDO, O.
TIMES
JUL 13 1941

Benefit Event Is Scheduled

Concert Will Be Given At Tanglewood

A BENEFIT concert ıor the United Service organizations and the British War Relief, Inc., will be given Aug 15 at Tanglewood, Mass., under the direction of Serge Koussetitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra.

The program, patterned after the successful one last year which netted nearly $25,000 for Allied relief, will be presented at the home of the Berkshire Symphonic festival and the Berkshire Music center

Again all the forces at Tanglewood—the Festival organization the orchestra, Dr. Koussevitzky and the Music center—will co-operate in presenting the concert.

Proceeds turned over to the USO will be used to provide machines and recordings of good music for all boys in the service and now in training at various camps.

This Clipping From
WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM
JUL 13 1941

Concerts at Tanglewood Open July 31

With the number of reservations about a month in advance of 1940, "encouraging response" for subscriptions for the eighth annual season, presenting the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky, is reported by the Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Tanglewood, Mass. Nine concerts will be given on Thursday and Saturday evenings and Sunday matinees between July 31 and Aug. 17.

Works by the contemporary composers, Sibelius, Vaughan Williams, Barber, Piston, Hindemith, Shostakovitch, Villa Lobos, Copland and Hanson are included in this year's program. There will be three Mozart works the second week of the Festival in commemoration of the 150th anniversary of the composer's death. The much discussed Symphony No. 5 by Shostakovitch will be heard in the first series of concerts, July 31 and Aug. 2 and 3. The emiment Brazilian composer, Villa Lobos, will present his Chorous No. 10, also in the first series.

Of special interest to music students is the announcement that Piston, Hindemith, Copland and Hanson are listed either as members of the faculty or lecturers at the Berkshire Music Center, which will be operated for its second year at Tanglewood by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, for six weeks starting the first week in July and ending with the final Festival concert.

Tanglewood, between Stockbridge and Lenox, was given to the Boston orchestra as a permanent home for the Festival in 1937 by Mrs. Gorham Brooks of Brookline, a member of the Festival's board of trustees.

This Clipping From COUNCIL BLUFFS, IA.
NONPAREIL
JUL 13 1941

WORDS ABOUT MUSIC
ALICE BECK

Perhaps one of the most interesting summer music schools in the United States is the Berkshire Music Center, founded by Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony, last season. Dr. Koussevitzky plans to make the center a place where artists, dramatists and leading thinkers will gather as well as musicians. He hopes to create an institution that will be national, even international, in scope, and as a first step, this season's group of students—of which there are 350 enrolled—will include five Latin-American scholarship winners. Dr. Koussevitzky says the chief aim of the Center is to teach interpretation with the idea of improving the taste and developing the imaginations of the students by introducing into their consciousness "the truly spiritual essence of music, which stands high above the level of vulgar amusement and musical diversion." The faculty members of the Berkshire Music Center include; Paul Hindemith, Aaron Copeland, Herbert Graf, Howard Hanson, Gregor Piatagorsky and members of the Boston Symphony orchestra and, of course, Dr. Koussevitsky. The school is held on the estate of Mrs. Gorham Brooks, an almost idyllically beautiful setting, and with the Berkshire Symphonic Festival concerts, which the students will attend and will participate in the Festival chorus, there should be no lack of inspiration to aspiring young musicians.

This Clipping From
ALBANY, N. Y.
TIMES UNION
JUL 13 1941

MUSIC World

By

E. S. VAN OLINDA

The musical "A" on the Berkshire Symphonic festival was sounded last Sunday afternoon when the Tanglewood music center was officially opened in the new opera hall by the trustees of the Boston Symphony orchestra. Dr. Serge Koussevitzky made the principal address.

The eighth annual festival will consist of nine concerts by the Boston Symphony orchestra, taking place each Thursday and Saturday evening and Sunday afternoon, from July 31 through August 17. The subscription list is closed. Individual tickets for each concert are available at the Van Curler Music company. The program for the symphonic festival will include:

SERIES A

July 31, Aug. 2 and 3

Beethoven, Brahms, Handel, Mendelssohn, Debussy, Villa-Lobos, Shostakovitch, Copland, Hindemith.

SERIES B

Aug. 7, 9 and 10.

Programs commemorating the 150th anniversary of Mozart's death; also works of Beethoven, Brahms, Berlioz, Wagner, Debussy, and Hanson.

SERIES C

Aug. 14, 16 and 17.

Beethoven's "Missa Solemnis;" also Wagner, Strauss, Sibelius, Tchaikovsy, Barber, Vaughan Williams.

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
SUNDAY UNION
& REPUBLICAN
JUL 13 1941

TO HOLD BENEFIT AT TANGLEWOOD

17

Program On August 15 Will Aid U. S. O. and British War Relief, Inc.

A Tanglewood program will be given Friday, August 15 under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra. The program, patterned after the eminently successful one of last year which netted nearly $25,000 for Allied relief, will be presented at the home of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival and the Berkshire Music Center. The proceeds this year will be divided equally between the United Service Organizations and the British War Relief, inc.

Again all the forces at Tanglewood —the Festival organization, the orchestra, Dr Koussevitzky and the Music Center will cooperate in presenting the program. Proceeds turned over to the U. S. O. will be used to provide machines and recordings of good music for all boys in the service and now in training at various camps.

Philip R. Allen, prominent industrialist and president of the board of trustees of the New England Conservatory of Music at Boston, has accepted appointment as general chairman for the benefit and to the executive committee he has named trustees of the orchestra and the Festival. On the committee are: Jerome D. Greene, Richard C. Paine and Edward A. Taft of the orchestra board; Dr James Phinney Baxter, 3d, president of Williams College; Mrs William Felton Barrett of Rye, N. Y., and Egremont, and George W. Edman, managing ditor of the Berkshire Eagle in Pittsfield, representing the Festival board. Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, president of the Festival and Ernest B. Dane, president of the orchestra, will be honorary chairmen.

THIS CLIPPING FROM AUGUSTA, ME.
KENNEBEC JOURNAL
JUL 16 1941

The U. S. O. drive is taking unusual forms in some localities. At Tanglewood in the Berkshires, the scene of the annual summer festival of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, on August 15, a benefit performance for U. S. O. funds will be given under the direction of Serge Koussivitsky. The Berkshire Symphonic Festival organization, the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Berkshire Music Center will join forces to present the concert, proceeds of which will be used for buying phonographs and recordings of good music for men in service at the various training camps. Last year a similar concert was given for Allied relief.

This Clipping From
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE
JUL 14 1941

Koussevitzky Entertains After Tanglewood Event

Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra was host at a supper at the Curtis Hotel last night in honor of Eliel Saarinen and Eerio Saarinen, father and son, architects of Bloomfield Hills, Mich., who designed the theatre-concert hall at Tanglewood, dedicated yesterday afternoon. Immediately after the dedicatory exercises, Dr. and Mrs. Koussevitzky entertained at tea at Seranak for the Saarinens.

At the supper were Dr. Koussevitzky, Miss Olga Naumoff, Mr. and Mrs. Eliel Sarrinen, Mr. and Mrs. Eerio Saarinen, Mrs. John Hammond of New York and formerly of Stockbridge, the mother of Mrs. Eerio Saarinen, Dr. and Mrs. Herbert Graf, Mr. and Mrs. Boris Goldovsky, Mr. and Mrs. Richard Rychtarik, Mrs. Margaret Grant, George E. Judd, Mr. and Mrs. George W. Edman, Mr. and Mrs. Richard Burgin, Mr. and Mrs. Stanley Chapple, Lucien Price, Miss Alice Clapp.

This Clipping From
DAYTON, OHIO
SUNDAY JOURNAL HERALD
JUL 13 1941

This Clipping From
HARTFORD, CONN.
COURANT
JUL 13 1941

The World In Music

By PIERRE KEY

We the people, as a people, are assuredly doing ourselves proud musically. How fortunate we are, with so much of the rest of the world in desperate straights, to have all we have in the way of music . . . along with living conditions which thus far have not been disturbed by the foreign conflicts.

Right now we are making more music than in any previous summer. Much of it better music, too, so far as the interpretive side goes.

There is another side of our music activities, however, which is striding steadily ahead: the educational. Schools of every imaginable kind are now in full swing. Perhaps the most notable of these is the Berkshire Music Center, up at Tanglewood (near Lenox, Massachusetts), which got under way a few days ago.

This is a development of the Berkshire Musical Festival begun a few years ago in modest fashion but which, under Serge Koussevitzky's direction and with the backing of wealthy music patrons, has taken a special place in our nation's summertime music enterprises.

Geared to accept a limited number of students, and those only outstandingly advanced and gifted, the Berkshire Music Center is staffed with leading musicians who are serving in the capacity of instructors and counselors.

Other Great Schools.

There are, however, other summer music schools which have quite as much to offer, in certa if not in all respects, as the Berkshire Music Center. And several of these schools are not second to any. It just happens that with the Berkshire Festival in action during the study period of the Center, there are the various performances to be heard, with the Boston Symphony Orchestra holding down the main portion of that job.

Chautauqua, New York state's unique educational and entertainment center, stands right alongside any one may mention; for there is Albert Stoessel and his associates of the Juillard opera department and a fine symphony orchestra taking care of the concert and opera programs. And Ernest Hutcheson is there; and Oscar Wagner also is to give some of his time to Chautaugua.

I could go on naming a string of other music colonies where performances go hand in hand with the practical instruction imparted. One which is more or less new is the Deerstrees Theater at Harrison, Maine, where opera is the princpal music bill of fare, directed by that experienced artist and directress Enrica Clay Dillon.

Public Profits.

Two main points stand out in the accomplishments of these "practical" summer time music schools: the students get the practical experience which is so essential, and so difficult to obtain other than at this period of year; the second advantage comes in being able to work under distinguished music counselors, quite a number of whom are not available for this type of work during the autumn, winter and spring. Besides — summer appears to be the season which makes for projects planned to give their students a type of practical experience they must have to progress in their respective fields.

With students recruited from all over the country, the Deertrees opera project is moving serenely along; as is the colony Opera Guild, recruited from Oscar Seagle's Schroon Lake colony, which started two evenings ago on a pretentious program of opera performances.

And so it is going in varions parts of this country: our young musicmakers — instrumentalists, singers, conductors, composers — are strengthening their wings for more important engagements ahead.

This Clipping From TOLEDO, O.
TIMES
JUL 13 1941

Benefit Event Is Scheduled

Concert Will Be Given At Tanglewood

A BENEFIT concert for the United Service organizations and the British War Relief, Inc., will be given Aug 15 at Tanglewood, Mass., under the direction of Serge Koussetitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra.

The program, patterned after the successful one last year which netted nearly $25,000 for Allied relief, will be presented at the home of the Berkshire Symphonic festival and the Berkshire Music center

Again all the forces at Tanglewood—the Festival organization the orchestra, Dr. Koussevitzky anc the Music center—will co-operate ir presenting the concert.

Proceeds turned over to the USC will be used to provide machine and recordings of good music fo all boys in the service and now ir training at various camps.

This Clipping From
WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM
JUL 13 1941

Concerts at Tanglewood Open July 31

With the number of reservations about a month in advance of 1940, "encouraging response" for subscriptions for the eighth annual season, presenting the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky, is reported by the Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Tanglewood, Mass. Nine concerts will be given on Thursday and Saturday evenings and Sunday matinees between July 31 and Aug. 17.

Works by the contemporary composers, Sibelius, Vaughan Williams, Barber, Piston, Hindemith, Shostakovitch, Villa Lobos, Copland and Hanson are included in this year's program. There will be three Mozart works the second week of the Festival in commemoration of the 150th anniversary of the composer's death. The much discussed Symphony No. 5 by Shostakovitch will be heard in the first series of concerts, July 31 and Aug. 2 and 3. The emiment Brazilian composer, Villa Lobos, will present his Chorous No. 10, also in the first series.

Of special interest to music students is the announcement that Piston, Hindemith, Copland and Hanson are listed either as members of the faculty or lecturers at the Berkshire Music Center, which will be operated for its second year at Tanglewood by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, for six weeks starting the first week in July and ending with the final Festival concert.

Tanglewood, between Stockbridge and Lenox, was given to the Boston orchestra as a permanent home for the Festival in 1937 by Mrs. Gorham Brooks of Brookline, a member of the Festival's board of trustees.

This Clipping From COUNCIL BLUFFS, IA.
NONPAREIL

JUL 13 1941
WORDS ABOUT MUSIC
ALICE BECK

Perhaps one of the most interesting summer music schools in the United States is the Berkshire Music Center, founded by Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony, last season. Dr. Koussevitzky plans to make the center a place where artists, dramatists and leading thinkers will gather as well as musicians. He hopes to create an institution that will be national, even international, in scope, and as a first step, this season's group of students—of which there are 350 enrolled—will include five Latin-American scholarship winners. Dr. Koussevitzky says the chief aim of the Center is to teach interpretation with the idea of improving the taste and developing the imaginations of the students by introducing into their consciousness "the truly spiritual essence of music, which stands high above the level of vulgar amusement and musical diversion." The faculty members of the Berkshire Music Center include; Paul Hindemith, Aaron Copeland, Herbert Graf, Howard Hanson, Gregor Piatagorsky and members of the Boston Symphony orchestra and, of course, Dr. Koussevitsky. The school is held on the estate of Mrs. Gorham Brooks, an almost idyllically beautiful setting, and with the Berkshire Symphonic Festival concerts, which the students will attend and will participate in the Festival chorus, there should be no lack of inspiration to aspiring young musicians.

This Clipping From
ALBANY, N. Y.
TIMES UNION
JUL 13 1941

MUSIC World

By

E. S. VAN OLINDA

The musical "A" on the Berkshire Symphonic festival was sounded last Sunday afternoon when the Tanglewood music center was officially opened in the new opera hall by the trustees of the Boston Symphony orchestra. Dr. Serge Koussevitzky made the principal address.

The eighth annual festival will consist of nine concerts by the Boston Symphony orchestra, taking place each Thursday and Saturday evening and Sunday afternoon, from July 31 through August 17. The subscription list is closed. Individual tickets for each concert are available at the Van Curler Music company. The program for the symphonic festival will include:

SERIES A

July 31, Aug. 2 and 3

Beethoven, Brahms, Handel, Mendelssohn, Debussy, Villa-Lobos, Shostakovitch, Copland, Hindemith.

SERIES B

Aug. 7, 9 and 10.

Programs commemorating the 150th anniversary of Mozart's death; also works of Beethoven, Brahms, Berlioz, Wagner, Debussy, and Hanson.

SERIES C

Aug. 14, 16 and 17.

Beethoven's "Missa Solemnis;" also Wagner, Strauss, Sibelius, Tchaikovsy, Barber, Vaughan Williams.

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
SUNDAY UNION
& REPUBLICAN
JUL 13 1941

TO HOLD BENEFIT AT TANGLEWOOD

Program On August 15 Will Aid U. S. O. and British War Relief, Inc.

A Tanglewood program will be given Friday, August 15 under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra. The program, patterned after the eminently successful one of last year which netted nearly $25,000 for Allied relief, will be presented at the home of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival and the Berkshire Music Center. The proceeds this year will be divided equally between the United Service Organizations and the British War Relief, inc.

Again all the forces at Tanglewood—the Festival organization, the orchestra, Dr Koussevitzky and the Music Center will cooperate in presenting the program. Proceeds turned over to the U. S. O. will be used to provide machines and recordings of good music for all boys in the service and now in training at various camps.

Philip R. Allen, prominent industrialist and president of the board of trustees of the New England Conservatory of Music at Boston, has accepted appointment as general chairman for the benefit and to the executive committee he has named trustees of the orchestra and the Festival. On the committee are: Jerome D. Greene, Richard C. Paine and Edward A. Taft of the orchestra board; Dr James Phinney Baxter, 3d, president of Williams College; Mrs William Felton Barrett of Rye, N. Y., and Egremont, and George W. Edman, managing ditor of the Berkshire Eagle in Pittsfield, representing the Festival board. Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, president of the Festival and Ernest B. Dane, president of the orchestra, will be honorary chairmen.

THIS CLIPPING FROM AUGUSTA, ME.
KENNEBEC JOURNAL

JUL 16 1941

The U. S. O. drive is taking unusual forms in some localities. At Tanglewood in the Berkshires, the scene of the annual summer festival of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, on August 15, a benefit performance for U. S. O. funds will be given under the direction of Serge Koussivitsky. The Berkshire Symphonic Festival organization, the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Berkshire Music Center will join forces to present the concert, proceeds of which will be used for buying phonographs and recordings of good music for men in service at the various training camps. Last year a similar concert was given for Allied relief.

This Clipping From
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

JUL 14 1941

Koussevitzky Entertains After Tanglewood Event

Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra was host at a supper at the Curtis Hotel last night in honor of Eliel Saarinen and Eerio Saarinen, father and son, architects of Bloomfield Hills, Mich., who designed the theatre-concert hall at Tanglewood, dedicated yesterday afternoon. Immediately after the dedicatory exercises, Dr. and Mrs. Koussevitzky entertained at tea at Seranak for the Saarinens.

At the supper were Dr. Koussevitzky, Miss Olga Naumoff, Mr. and Mrs. Eliel Sarrinen, Mr. and Mrs. Eerio Saarinen, Mrs. John Hammond of New York and formerly of Stockbridge, the mother of Mrs. Eerio Saarinen, Dr. and Mrs. Herbert Graf, Mr. and Mrs. Boris Goldovsky, Mr. and Mrs. Richard Rychtarik, Mrs. Margaret Grant, George E. Judd, Mr. and Mrs. George W. Edman, Mr. and Mrs. Richard Burgin, Mr. and Mrs. Stanley Chapple, Lucien Price, Miss Alice Clapp.

209

This Clipping From
PITTSFIELD, MASS. EAGLE
JUL 14 1941

Symphonic Music and Opera Open Tanglewood Theatre

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, Conductor, Addresses 1100 Patrons—Hall Proves Ideal for Musical and Speaking Programs

TANGLEWOOD—As a dedicatory program of both symphonic music and opera "fragments" demonstrated how the new theatre-concert hall at Tanglewood can be used, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and director of the Berkshire Music Center, told 1100 patrons and friend of the musical development yesterday afternoon that "we are not adding just another playhouse to existing ones, we are building a new laboratory in which to put out new problems." This country has the resources to re-create the art of opera, he declared.

It was the formal opening of the new hall, following last Sunday's informal opening as the Music Center season began. Dr. Koussevitzky, who again thanked Eliel Saarinen and Eerio Saarinen for the architectural work on the new hall and had them come up to the stage to speak briefly, was followed by Dr. Herbert Graf, director of the opera department of the Center.

Dr. Graf said the Tanglewood development was getting closer to what Koussevitzky had ~~planned.~~ Opera in this country, he said, is in a decisive stage. It is changing from "the luxury art of European tradition" to the fundamentals, in a condition which one finds in this country.

Closer to Goal

Dr. Graf thanked the donors of the hall, his assistants, Boris Goldovsky and Richard Rychtarik, and the students, who, he said, had started work on the opera scenes given yesterday only four days before and had done the scenery and the costumes as well. Shortly the department will present Mozart's "Cosi Fan Tutte," he added.

"We are closer to the goal now," he declared, "the goal which we might call the modernization of opera in this country.

Expressing in general the same thought about opera, Koussevitzky said that in this "laboratory," the aim would be to re-create the art of opera, which is "in great need of great and radical change."

"No art," continued the famed conductor, "can sink into provincialism with such bad grace as opera. There is a question whether or not it has outlived its day. Is it still needed? Yes, opera is still needed, but on a new basis. It is the most comprehensive form of music, because simultaneously it gives visual and auditory impressions, but new energies and creative powers are needed. The resources of our country are great, and will give us new voices, actors and creators. In our own sphere, there is no room for routine, and that is why I say that this is not just a new opera hall, but a new laboratory."

The senior Mr. Saarinen, stating his son and he had tried to do their best for the Center, added that "instead of building from the ground up, we had to hang the buildings," referring to the arched roof hung from barrel hoop buttresses. Now that they have finished, he said, "the continuance is up to Dr. Koussevitzky."

Center Orchestra Heard

The distinguished audience heard the student orchestra of the Center, with Koussevitzky conducting, in Mozart's "Eine Kleine Nachtmusik," and the Symphony in G Minor. The opera department presented three operatic scenes. Scene 4 of Act 2 of "Don Giovanni," was sung in Italian with Maria San Filippo as Donna Anna and George Tinker as Don Ottavio. The last scene of Act 2 of the Abduction from the Seraglio was sung in English by Helen Wiedemann as Constance; George Tinker as Belmont; Lois McMahon, as Blonde; and Arthur Flemings as Pedrillo. The last was Scene 8 from Act 2 of the Magic Flute, in English, with Gordon Sayre as Papageno; Margaret Lilly as Papagena; and Alba Tosi, Ruth Kratman and Eula Beal as three boys. Musical assistants for the opera scenes were Felix Wolfes, Fred Popper and Lukas Foss.

The simple but attractive opera stage was used for the first time publicly yesterday, the previous informal program having included instrumental and vocal music on the concert stage.

Noticed in the audience yesterday was Mme. Koussevitzky, who appeared publicly for the first time in some weeks, due to illness.

This Clipping From
PITTSFIELD, MASS. EAGLE
JUL 14 1941

200 Soldierboy Musicians May Get Chance To Play At Big Tanglewood Benefit

Berkshire boys, home for the week end from Camp Edwards, Falmouth, professed a deep regret they weren't musicians. The word has gone the rounds at Cape Cod outpost that 200 musicians will be selected from the 26th Division bands to present a concert Aug. 15 at Tanglewood, as part of the joint benefit for the British War Relief and the United Service Organizations.

Although it's just another one of those rumors, some of which placed the 26th Division on the battlefields of Greece long ago, some officers from this section already have applied for the detail of convoying the troops to the Berkshires because they want to be in on at least one of this season's Berkshire Symphonic Festival concerts.

Rumor Brings Results

But the rumor has had its results. As the soldiers were going to chapel yesterday morning there was a certain sanctity about the way the several bands rendered "Onward, Christian Soldiers." Usually Sunday mornings come too soon and too early for the Camp Edwards musicians and their presentations sound accordingly.

According to the report, the musicians and convoying soldiers will bivouack at Tanglewood in military style.

An invitation from the Boston Symphony Orchestra, although it isn't too commonplace, wouldn't be exactly a surprise to the band leaders at Edwards. Early in the spring, Serge Koussevitzky conducted the 182d Infantry band in a Sunday afternoon concert and he was pleased with the performance.

This Clipping From
NEWARK, N. J. STAR-LEDGER
JUL 16 1941

BERKSHIRE BENEFIT CONCERT AUG. 15

A benefit concert in connection with the Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, Mass., will be given Friday, Aug. 15, under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The program, patterned after the successful benefit of last year which netted nearly $25,000 for Allied relief, will be presented at the home of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival and the Berkshire Music Center.

The proceeds this year will be divided equally between the United Service Organizations and British War Relief, Inc.

Philip R. Allen, prominent industrialist and president of the board of trustees of the New England Conservatory of Music at Boston is general chairman for the benefit which is expected to draw an audience from all parts of the United States.

This Clipping From
WATERBURY, CONN. REPUBLICAN
JUL 14 1941

OVERTONES

To attempt in any way a discussion of the importance of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky's current teaching of conductors at the Berkshire Music Center is futile in compressed space, but how that importance may be found within an individual who has been an active participant is discernable.

No one more significantly represents the ideals which govern this great work than the young American conductor, Richard Bales. Although we are not here concerned with biographical data, a few introductory remarks may act as a frame. Mr. Bales received his major musical training at the Eastman conservatory and more recently Juilliard. As conductor he has appeared in both guest and permanent capacities, having already achieved recognition in connection with such noted orchestras as the National symphony of Washington.

With an already varied and inclusive background, he stands on the threshold of truly great artistry and musicianship, the transition being afforded by the invaluable association with one of the world's greatest conductors. As he himself so aptly states, "He (Koussevitzky; is giving us a course right now"—how importantly is already to be observed in the case of Mr. Bales.

The physical and spiritual properties which go into the making of a great conductor must of necessity be inborn, but once present, the molding of them into a vital, vigorous, commanding whole must be painstakingly undertaken. Inasmuch as Mr. Bales possesses in remarkable degree the prime and intangible requisites and has progressed so far along the latter route, we dare to prophesy his preeminence in the musical world of tomorrow.

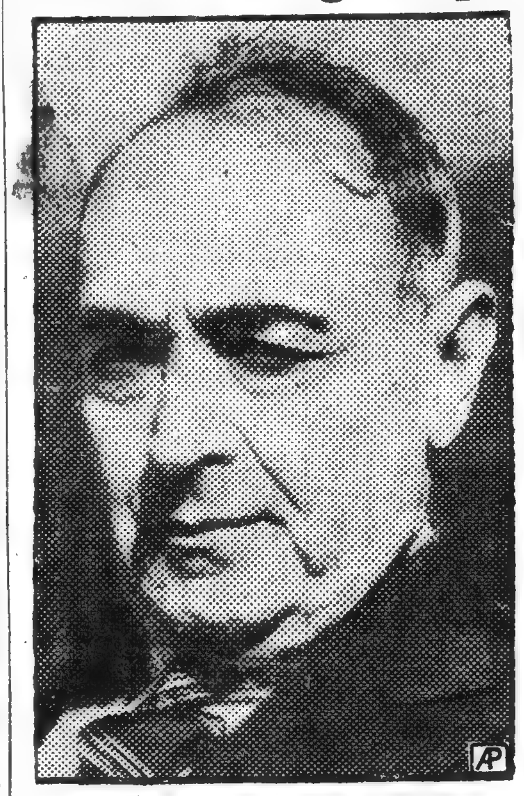
In speaking of Dr. Koussevitzky, Mr. Bales asserted that, "His mind has been a searchlight." Even within the limits of an interview it is apparent that he himself has such a mind. To have achieved a maturity of thought and conception, a firm conviction in fundamental laws in art and life, a constructive philosophy which backgrounds spiritual wisdom, at so young an age, gives evidence of this.

With many of our conductors there is a divorcing of music from life, which leads to interpretation of unsatisfying portent. Mr. Bales has already achieved the balancing of music in harmony with basic pulsing truths of life, and a keen awareness of, and penetrating insight into, the resources of the mind and the inexplicable qualities which we call soul.

He embodies "a complete devotion to the ideal," the "staying power," the communicative art which looms more vitally in orchestral works than any other media of expression, and the vision which must and will carry him along the road that such great interpretors as Koussevitzky have taken before him to a culmination of interpretive art.

CELINE KOESTER

Directs Young People



SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY

Stockbridge, Mass., July 13 — An all-Mozart program conducted by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky marked the official opening of the Theater Concert hall Sunday at the Berkshire Music festival.

More than 500 persons filled the hall to hear the new young people's advanced orchestra perform under the baton of Dr. Koussevitzky.

They heard a brief address by Dr. Herbert Graf, stage director of the Metropolitan Opera company and head of the Berkshire opera department. Several scenes from Mozart operas were sung by members of the opera department.

CELINE KOESTER

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS. REPUBLICAN
JUL 14 1941

Tanglewood Has 1000 Guests At Dedicatory Mozart Program

Lenox, July 13—More than 1000 persons accepted invitations of the trustees of Boston Symphony orchestra, Dr Serge Koussevitzky, conductor, and members of the faculty of Berkshire Music center, to attend this afternoon the dedicatory Mozart program of symphonic music and opera fragments in the new Theater-Concert hall at Tanglewood.

The program follows:—

Eine kleine Nachtmusik
Symphony in G Minor
INTERMISSION

Opera fragments by the opera department, Herbert Graf, director, assisted by Boris Goldovsky and Richard Rychtarik.

The Magic Flute, act 2, scene 8:
(in English)

Papageno	Gordon Sayre
Papagena	Margaret Lilly

Three boys:
Alba Tosi, Ruth Kratman, Eula Beal

Don Giovanni, act 2, scene 4:
(in Italian)

Donna Anna	Maria SanFilippo
Don Ottavio	George Tinker

The Abduction from the Seraglio, act 2, last scene:
(in English)

Constance	Helene Wiedemann
Belmont	George Tinker
Blonde	Lois McMahon
Pedrillo	Arthur Flemings

Musical assistants: Felix Wolfes, Fred Popper, Lukas Foss. Scenery, costumes and properties by the students of the stagecraft class.

At the completion of the concert, the beautiful gardens at Tanglewood, made verdant as in early spring by recent showers, were visited. A guest of Dr Koussevitzky at the performance was Eliel Saarinen, the famous Finnish designer of the new theater and also the great music shed. Tonight at Curtis hotel, Mr Saarinen was the honored guest at a dinner for 16 given by Dr Koussevitzky.

George E. Judd, business manager of the Boston Symphony orchestra, has taken an apartment for occupancy until the close of the festival on August 17 at the Lenox home of Mr and Mrs Valerio Montanari. Mr Judd had as a dinner guest at Curtis hotel tonight Lucien Price, who writes the "Uncle Dudley" column on the editorial page of the Boston Globe.

This Clipping From
PHILADELPHIA, PA. RECORD
JUL 20 1941

Music Festival

TANGLEWOOD, Mass., July 19—The Berkshire Symphonic Festival is scheduled here for a series of three programs on week-ends: Thursdays, Saturdays and Sundays during the month of August beginning Thursday July 31st, says the American Express Travel Service. It features the Boston Symphony Orchestra directed by Serge Koussevitzky.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y. TIMES
JUL 17 1941

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y. HERALD TRIBUNE
JUL 17 1941

Dr. Koussevitsky Gives Dinner

Special to the Herald Tribune

BERKSHIRE HILLS, Mass., July 16.—Dr. Serge Koussevitzky gave a dinner at the Curtis Hotel, Lenox, tonight in honor of five students attending the Berkshire Music Center. They represent Mexico, Brazil, Argentina, Chili and Colombia. Mr. George D. Dutton, former Pittsfield resident, and the Misses Mary B. Beach and Judith Crawford, of Pasadena, Calif., are at the Curtis.

This Clipping From
N. ADAMS, MASS. TRANSCRIPT
JUL 15 1941

SPRINGFIELD, MASS. REPUBLICAN
JUL 15 1941

200 FROM EDWARDS MAY BE IN BENEFIT

26th Division Bandsmen Rumored to Play in U. S. O., British Relief Concert

Pittsfield, July 14—According to reports from Berkshire boys at Camp Edwards today 200 musicians will be selected from the 26th division bands to play at the benefit program of the U. S. O. and British War Relief at Tanglewood, August 15.

None of the Berkshire members of the committee were willing to confirm the report today, referring the matter to Philip Allen of Walpole, chairman.

The reports indicated that an invitation would come as no surprise, since Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra and director of the Berkshire Music center at Tanglewood, conducted the 182d infantry band in May and expressed himself as much impressed by the performance.

26.

This Clipping From
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

JUL 15 1941

Koussevitzky At Rehearsal Of BMA Chorus

Maestro Pleased— Will Take Baton Next Monday

Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, attended a rehearsal of the Berkshire Music Association at the First Congregational Church last night. He expressed himself as pleased with the progress made by the chorus under Horace Hunt's direction in anticipation of its appearance with the orchestra at Tanglewood for the Berkshire Symphonic Festival.

The chorus went through the Villa-Lobos Choros No. 10 which will be given the opening night of the Festival, July 31, and parts of the Mozart Requiem. Before leaving, Dr. Koussevitzky thanked the chorus for its work and fine spirit. With the conductor last night was Lucas Foss, a member of his conducting class at Tanglewood.

Next Monday, Dr. Koussevitzky will conduct the rehearsal and all members of the chorus are requested to be present.

This Clipping From BRISTOL, CONN.
PRESS

JUL 16 1941

Music For Bristol

By WILLIAM J. MURPHY

A New England manifestation, calling everybody from everywhere to Tanglewood for a benefit concert, will be given Friday, August 15, under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of ~~the Boston~~ Symphony Orchestra. The program, patterned after the eminently successful manifestation of last year which netted nearly $25,000 for Allied relief, will be presented at the home of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival and the Berkshire Music Center.

The proceeds this year will be divided equally between the United Service Organizations and the British War Relief, Inc. Again all the forces at Tanglewood—the Festival orchestra, the organization, Dr. Koussevitzky and the Music Center—will cooperate in presenting the manifestation. Proceeds turned over to the USO will be used to provide machines and recordings of good music for all boys in the service and now in training at various camps.

POUGHKEEPSIE, N.Y
NEW YORKER
7/17/41

Musicians Arrive At 'Tanglewood'

Five young musicians, chosen representatives of five Latin-American republics, have arrived at "Tanglewood" in the Berkshire Hills for a special purpose. They are visiting the United States to attend the Berkshire Music center, the school which is having its second session there under auspices of the Boston Symphony orchestra.

Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the orchestra and director of the school, greeted the Latin-American visitors at a reception yesterday, when they met each other for the first time, having traveled many thousand miles by plane and boat from widely distributed points.

The group is attending the school on scholarships offered by the Berkshire Music center.

This Clipping From
SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
UNION-STAR

JUL 18 1941

This Clipping From
ALBANY, N.Y.
KNICKERBOCKER NEWS

JUL 19 1941

This Clipping From
HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES

JUL 18 1941

Latin-Americans Study at Tanglewood

Five distinguished young musicians, chosen representatives of five Latin-American republics, have arrived at Tanglewood in the Berkshire Hills for a special purpose.

They are visiting the United States to attend the Berkshire Music Center, the school which is having its second session there under the auspices of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the orchestra and director of the school, greeted the Latin-American visitors at a reception. Carleton Sprague Smith, musicologist and guest lecturer at the school; Aaron Copland, the American composer who is instructing Blas Galindo, the visiting Mexican composer, and Jesus Maria Sanroma, pianist of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who is a native of Puerto Rico, also greeted the guest scholars.

The five musicians are in addition to Galindo from Mexico, Marcelo Montecino from Santiago, Chile; Alfredo Ianelli from Buenos Aires, Argentina; Alejandro Zagarra from Bogota, Columbia, and Althea Alimonda from San Paolo, Brazil. Miss Alimonda, Mr. Zagarra and Mr. Montecino are violinists, and Mr. Ianelli is a flutist. The five are between the ages of 20 and 30.

They all have come through scholarships offered by the Berkshire Music Center.

Our Berkshires

Pittsfield Eagle July 17, 1941

Tanglewood

By BARTLETT HENDRICKS

Mr. Hendricks is curator of the science department of the Berkshire Museum. Naturalist, skier, hiker and photographer, he is an enthusiastic advocate of Berkshire outdoor recreation.

ONLY in New England would a concert hall capable of seating more than 9000 people be called a shed. And yet in this simple structure Serge Koussevitzky conducts the Boston Symphony Orchestra in what is now acknowledged to be the leading music festival of the world.

The Shed is a modern, functional building, simple and honest. It could not, if requested, furnish enough useless decorations to adorn a one-piece bathing suit.

During the first year the Shed was used, there was a bit of a flurry to raise money to enclose the steel girders which support the roof. A few people had an idea that there was something horrid about a steel girder, standing naked and unashamed. Fortunately even conservative New Englanders have grown used to the Shed, and this expensive idea of putting skirts on the beams has died from lack of nourishment.

* * *

One of the happy things about the Shed, it seems to me, is the way it fits into the landscape and rarely, from any vantage point, seems to be the huge structure it actually is. I have sat or stood through a concert in the front row, middle and last rows in the Shed, and on the lawn a hundred yards away. One night I sat on the grass to the rear of the shell and was surprised to find the acoustics excellent event there, and not being a musical expert, I was able to enjoy the concert despite the accompaniment of crickets and the calls of migrating birds moving southward through the night sky.

Because I was taking movies of the Festival I was able to secure permission to point my telephoto lens out of an open window in the engineer's office at the rear of the Shed, and for that evening I had virtually a private balcony. From this little balcony you can look down on a sea of people, and for once you get an idea of the tremendous number present. During brief intermissions, matches flare all over the great building, like so many fireflies, but when Dr. Koussevitzky raises his baton to play, the "fireflies" go into hiding and few indeed venture out until the next intermission.

* * *

While a majority of the visitors to Tanglewood go to hear the music, it is no secret that many attend to see the celebrities, to be seen themselves, and to tell others that they have been there. Some of us, while we like good music, just do not have the kind of hearing and musical knowledge which make expert appreciation of the finest music possible. We enjoy the idyllic setting of Tanglewood as much as the music itself. We like to roam around the gardens with their pools, clipped hedges and grape arbors. It gives us pleasure to walk under the magnificent white pines and Norway spruces. Above all, we never fail to respond to the view of the Bowl from the lawn in front of old Tanglewood, a scene that even the austere Times last week called "one of the most superb views in the world."

Many Festival visitors inquire about the neatly clipped hedges. Often they express an opinion that these must be some unusual species of evergreen. Actually the hedges are hemlock, the same tree which grows to such majestic proportions in our Berkshire forests. Although clipped hedges of spruce and even white pine are occasionally seen, it is generally true that hemlock is our only native conifer which can be clipped to form a hedge comparable to one of Japanese yew or arbor vitae. A fine hedge could be formed of American yew (commonly called ground hemlock) but this shrub will grow only in deep shade.

* * *

This season conservative Festival visitors will doubtless be shocked by the new concert theatre and the chamber music hall, both of which, like the Shed, were designed by Eliel Saarinen, the Finnish architect. I can just hear some people I know saying "Why, the concert hall looks like the old First Street bridge stuck on top of a pile of lumber." They'll make a great point of the bright orange barrel hoop buttresses, and for a time they will fuss about the doors, each of which is painted a different color.

Well, when people discover how fine and practical these new buildings are inside, and how perfect are the acoustics, they'll soon forget the lack of bric-a-brac, Greek pillars and pretentiousness.

* * *

Don't miss an opportunity this summer to visit Tanglewood on a week-day morning to see the Music Center in operation. Most of the earnest group of 350 students are clean-cut young people and probably you'll be disappointed that few indeed look like your idea of a serious musician.

It is virtually impossible to go more than a few feet about the estate without tripping over a musi-

---

CUE
NEW YORK, N. Y.

JUL 19 1941

ROY HARRIS, American composer, and Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, share the podium in the "Shed" at a rehearsal for the Berkshire Symphonic Festival. Concerts in the famous Tanglewood Shed begin this year, Thursday, July 31.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM
JUL 19 1941

Boston Symphony ~~Going to Ber~~kshires

The first program of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, to take place on July 31, will offer the Boston Symphony Serge Koussevitzky conductor, together with the chorus of the Berkshire Musical Association, in the Villa-Lobos Choros No. 10, and the Debussy Three Nocturnes.

For the rest of the bill the orchestra will play the Handel Organ Concerto, No. 10 in D Minor, and the Beethoven Eroica Symphony.

This Clipping From
WASHINGTON, D. C.
TIMES HERALD

JUL 20 1941

Concert to Benefit U.S.O. and British

Called a "New England Manifestation," the program of the Berkshire Festival for August 15, will enlist the services of the Boston Orchestra, the Festival Chorus, ~~and~~ certain eminent soloists under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky. The public is invited to attend. All proceeds will be given to British relief and the United Service Organization, with the restriction that the U.S.O. share of the returns shall be used to purchase machines and good recordings for the various camps.

This Clipping From
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

JUL 15 1941

Koussevitzky At Rehearsal Of BMA Chorus

Maestro Pleased—Will Take Baton Next Monday

Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, attended a rehearsal of the Berkshire Music Association at the First Congregational Church last night. He expressed himself as pleased with the progress made by the chorus under Horace Hunt's direction in anticipation of its appearance with the orchestra at Tanglewood for the Berkshire Symphonic Festival.

The chorus went through the Villa-Lobos Choros No. 10 which will be given the opening night of the Festival, July 31, and parts of the Mozart Requiem. Before leaving, Dr. Koussevitzky thanked the chorus for its work and fine spirit. With the conductor last night was Lucas Foss, a member of his conducting class at Tanglewood.

Next Monday, Dr. Koussevitzky will conduct the rehearsal and all members of the chorus are requested to be present.

This Clipping From BRISTOL, CONN.
PRESS

JUL 16 1941

Music For Bristol

By WILLIAM J. MURPHY

A New England manifestation, calling everybody from everywhere to Tanglewood for a benefit concert, will be given Friday, August 15, under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of ~~the Boston~~ Symphony Orchestra. The program, patterned after the eminently successful manifestation of last year which netted nearly $25,000 for Allied relief, will be presented at the home of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival and the Berkshire Music Center.

The proceeds this year will be divided equally between the United Service Organizations and the British War Relief, Inc. Again all the forces at Tanglewood—the Festival orchestra, the organization, Dr. Koussevitzky and the Music Center—will cooperate in presenting the manifestation. Proceeds turned over to the USO will be used to provide machines and recordings of good music for all boys in the service and now in training at various camps.

POUGHKEEPSIE, N.Y
NEW YORKER
7/17/41

Musicians Arrive At 'Tanglewood'

Five young musicians, chosen representatives of five Latin-American republics, have arrived at "Tanglewood" in the Berkshire Hills for a special purpose. They are visiting the United States to attend the Berkshire Music center, the school which is having its second session there under auspices of the Boston Symphony orchestra.

Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the orchestra and director of the school, greeted the Latin-American visitors at a reception yesterday, when they met each other for the first time, having traveled many thousand miles by plane and boat from widely distributed points.

The group is attending the school on scholarships offered by the Berkshire Music center.

This Clipping From
SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
UNION-STAR

JUL 18 1941

This Clipping From
ALBANY, N.Y.
KNICKERBOCKER NEWS

JUL 19 1941

This Clipping From
HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES

JUL 18 1941

Latin-Americans Study at Tanglewood

Five distinguished young musicians, chosen representatives of five Latin-American republics, have arrived at Tanglewood in the Berkshire Hills for a special purpose.

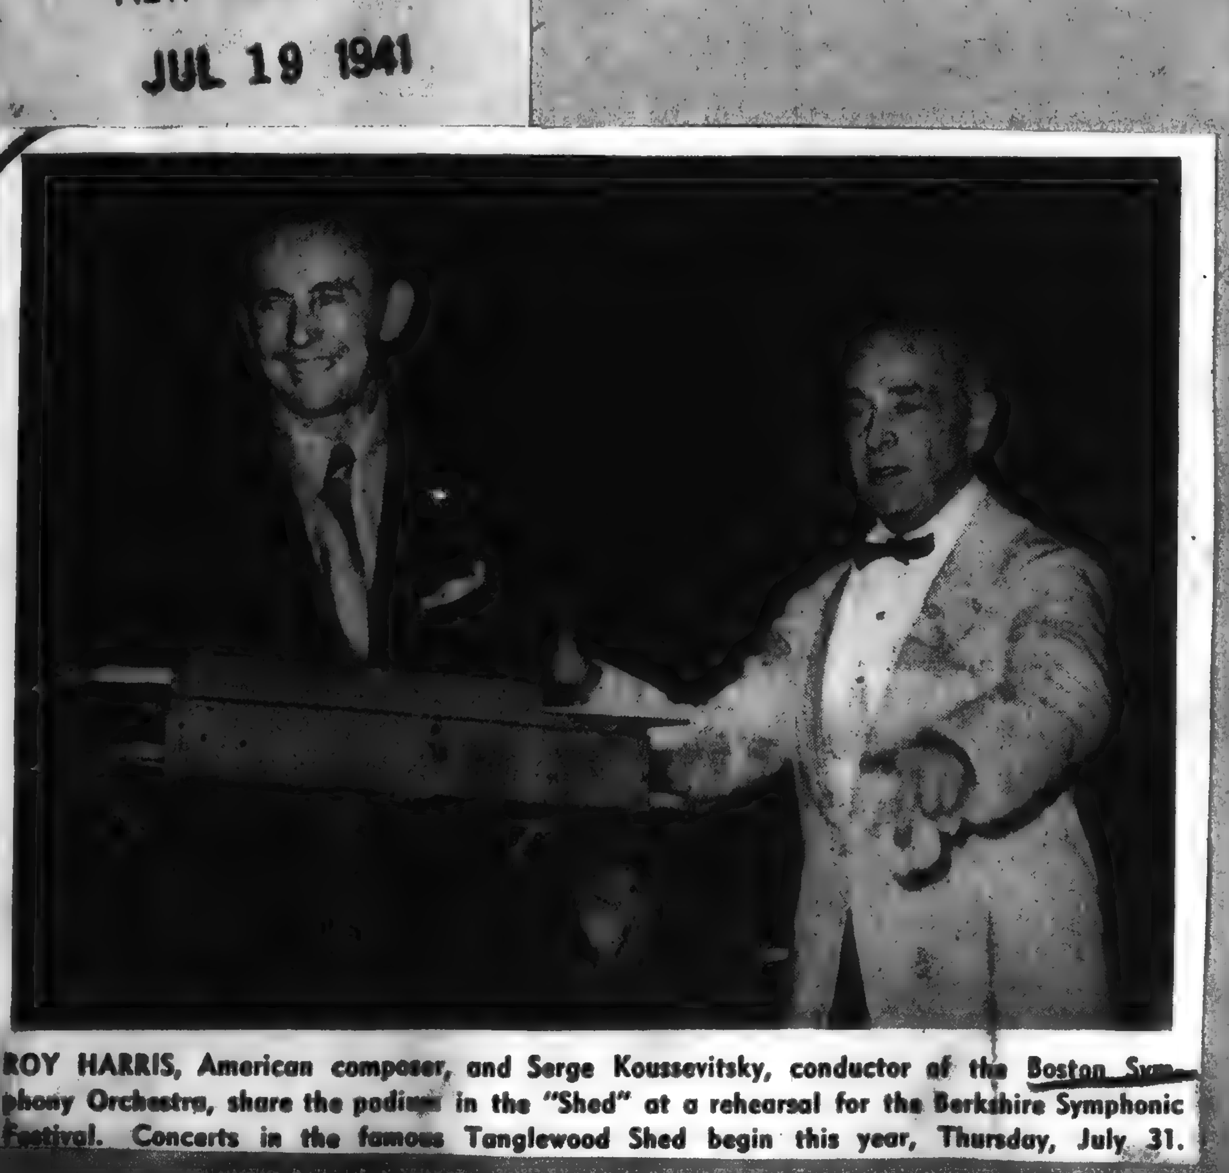
They are visiting the United States to attend the Berkshire Music Center, the school which is having its second session there under the auspices of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the orchestra and director of the school, greeted the Latin-American visitors at a reception. Carleton Sprague Smith, musicologist and guest lecturer at the school; Aaron Copland, the American composer who is instructing Blas Galindo, the visiting Mexican composer, and Jesus Maria Sanroma, pianist of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who is a native of Puerto Rico, also greeted the guest scholars.

The five musicians are in addition to Galindo from Mexico, Marcelo Montecino from Santiago, Chile; Alfredo Ianelli from Buenos Aires, Argentina; Alejandro Zagarra from Bogota, Columbia, and Althea Alimonda from San Paolo, Brazil. Miss Alimonda, Mr. Zagarra and Mr. Montecino are violinists, and Mr. Ianelli is a flutist. The five are between the ages of 20 and 30.

They all have come through scholarships offered by the Berkshire Music Center.

CUE
NEW YORK, N. Y.

JUL 19 1941



ROY HARRIS, American composer, and Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, share the podium in the "Shed" at a rehearsal for the Berkshire Symphonic Festival. Concerts in the famous Tanglewood Shed begin this year, Thursday, July 31.

Our Berkshires

Pittsfield Eagle July 17, 1941

Tanglewood

By BARTLETT HENDRICKS

Mr. Hendricks is curator of the science department of the Berkshire Museum. Naturalist, skier, hiker and photographer, he is an enthusiastic advocate of Berkshire outdoor recreation.

ONLY in New England would a concert hall capable of seating more than 9000 people be called a shed. And yet in this simple structure Serge Koussevitzky conducts the Boston Symphony Orchestra in what is now acknowledged to be the leading music festival of the world.

The Shed is a modern, functional building, simple and honest. It could not, if requested, furnish enough useless decorations to adorn a one-piece bathing suit.

During the first year the Shed was used, there was a bit of a flurry to raise money to enclose the steel girders which support the roof. A few people had an idea that there was something horrid about a steel girder, standing naked and unashamed. Fortunately even conservative New Englanders have grown used to the Shed, and this expensive idea of putting skirts on the beams has died from lack of nourishment.

* * *

One of the happy things about the Shed, it seems to me, is the way it fits into the landscape and rarely, from any vantage point, seems to be the huge structure it actually is. I have sat or stood through a concert in the front row, middle and last rows in the Shed, and on the lawn a hundred yards away. One night I sat on the grass to the rear of the shell and was surprised to find the acoustics excellent event there, and not being a musical expert, I was able to enjoy the concert despite the accompaniment of crickets and the calls of migrating birds moving southward through the night sky.

Because I was taking movies of the Festival I was able to secure permission to point my telephoto lens out of an open window in the engineer's office at the rear of the Shed, and for that evening I had virtually a private balcony. From this little balcony you can look down on a sea of people, and for once you get an idea of the tremendous number present. During brief intermissions, matches flare all over the great building, like so many fireflies, but when Dr. Koussevitzky raises his baton to play, the "fireflies" go into hiding and few indeed venture out until the next intermission.

* * *

While a majority of the visitors to Tanglewood go to hear the music, it is no secret that many attend to see the celebrities, to be seen themselves, and to tell others that they have been there. Some of us, while we like good music, just do not have the kind of hearing and musical knowledge which make expert appreciation of the finest music possible. We enjoy the idyllic setting of Tanglewood as much as the music itself. We like to roam around the gardens with their pools, clipped hedges and grape arbors. It gives us pleasure to walk under the magnificent white pines and Norway spruces. Above all, we never fail to respond to the view of the Bowl from the lawn in front of old Tanglewood, a scene that even the austere Times last week called "one of the most superb views in the world."

Many Festival visitors inquire about the neatly clipped hedges. Often they express an opinion that these must be some unusual species of evergreen. Actually the hedges are hemlock, the same tree which grows to such majestic proportions in our Berkshire forests. Although clipped hedges of spruce and even white pine are occasionally seen, it is generally true that hemlock is our only native conifer which can be clipped to form a hedge comparable to one of Japanese yew or arbor vitae. A fine hedge could be formed of American yew (commonly called ground hemlock) but this shrub will grow only in deep shade.

* * *

This season conservative Festival visitors will doubtless be shocked by the new concert theatre and the chamber music hall, both of which, like the Shed, were designed by Eliel Saarinen, the Finnish architect. I can just hear some people I know saying "Why, the concert hall looks like the old First Street bridge stuck on top of a pile of lumber." They'll make a great point of the bright orange barrel hoop buttresses, and for a time they will fuss about the doors, each of which is painted a different color.

Well, when people discover how fine and practical these new buildings are inside, and how perfect are the acoustics, they'll soon forget the lack of bric-a-brac, Greek pillars and pretentiousness.

* * *

Don't miss an opportunity this summer to visit Tanglewood on a week-day morning to see the Music Center in operation. Most of the earnest group of 350 students are clean-cut young people and probably you'll be disappointed that few indeed look like your idea of a serious musician.

It is virtually impossible to go more than a few feet about the estate without tripping over a musi-

---

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM
JUL 19 1941

Boston Symphony Goi[illegible]shires

The first program of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, to take place on July 31, will offer the Boston Symphony Serge Koussevitzky conductor, together with the chorus of the Berkshire Musical Association, in the Villa-Lobos Choros No. 10, and the Debussy Three Nocturnes.

For the rest of the bill the orchestra will play the Handel Organ Concerto, No. 10 in D Minor, and the Beethoven Eroica Sympho[illegible]

This Clipping From
WASHINGTON, D. C.
TIMES HERALD

JUL 20 1941

Concert to Benefit U.S.O. and British

Called a "New England Manifestation," the program of the Berkshire Festival for August 15, will enlist the services of the Boston Orchestra, the Festival Chorus, and certain eminent soloists under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky. The public is invited to attend. All proceeds will be given to British relief and the United Service Organization, with the restriction that the U.S.O. share of the returns shall be used to purchase machines and good recordings for the various camps.

Musicians of Latin America Given Dinner

Music Center Students Feted At Curtis Hotel

LENOX.—Five young musicians, representing Latin-American republics at the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, were guests at a reception and dinner at the Curtis Hotel last night. Earlier in the day the young musicians had been greeted by Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and director of the Center.

Last night, Carlton Sprague Smith, chief of the music division of the New York Public Library who lectured yesterday to Music Center students, was among those who greeted the students. Others were Aaron Copland, composer and member of the faculty who is instructing Blas Galindo, visiting Mexican composer, and Jesus Maria Sanroma, pianist, and faculty member, who is a native of Puerto Rico.

The five musicians, who are making their first visit to the United States, are in addition to Galindo from Mexico, Marcelo Montecino from Santiago, Chile; Alfredo Ianelli from Buenos Aires, Argentina; Alejandro Zagarra from Bogota, Columbia; and Althea Alimonda from San Paolo, Brazil. Miss Alimonda is a concert violinist of distinguished ability; Mr. Zagarra is a violinist in the orchestra of his native city; Mr. Montecino is also a violinist; and Mr. Ianelli is a flutist in the Buenos Aires Orchestra. Each is said to be a virtuoso of great promise. The five are between the ages of 20 and 30; the four players and the composer have come with the intention of broadening their artistic understanding by their new and distinguished associations. They all have come through scholarships offered by the Berkshire Music Center. The scholarships will further, it is believed, a mutually beneficial reciprocity between the two Americas, it will bring to our closer attention the remarkable musical talent which is fast developing among our southern neighbors, while enabling its representatives to profit by the unprecedented interpretive opportunities of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's summer school.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM

JUL 26 1941

Berkshire Festival Programs Announced

Programs for the three series of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival—with Serge Koussevitzky conducting the ~~Boston Symphony~~—have been announced as follows:

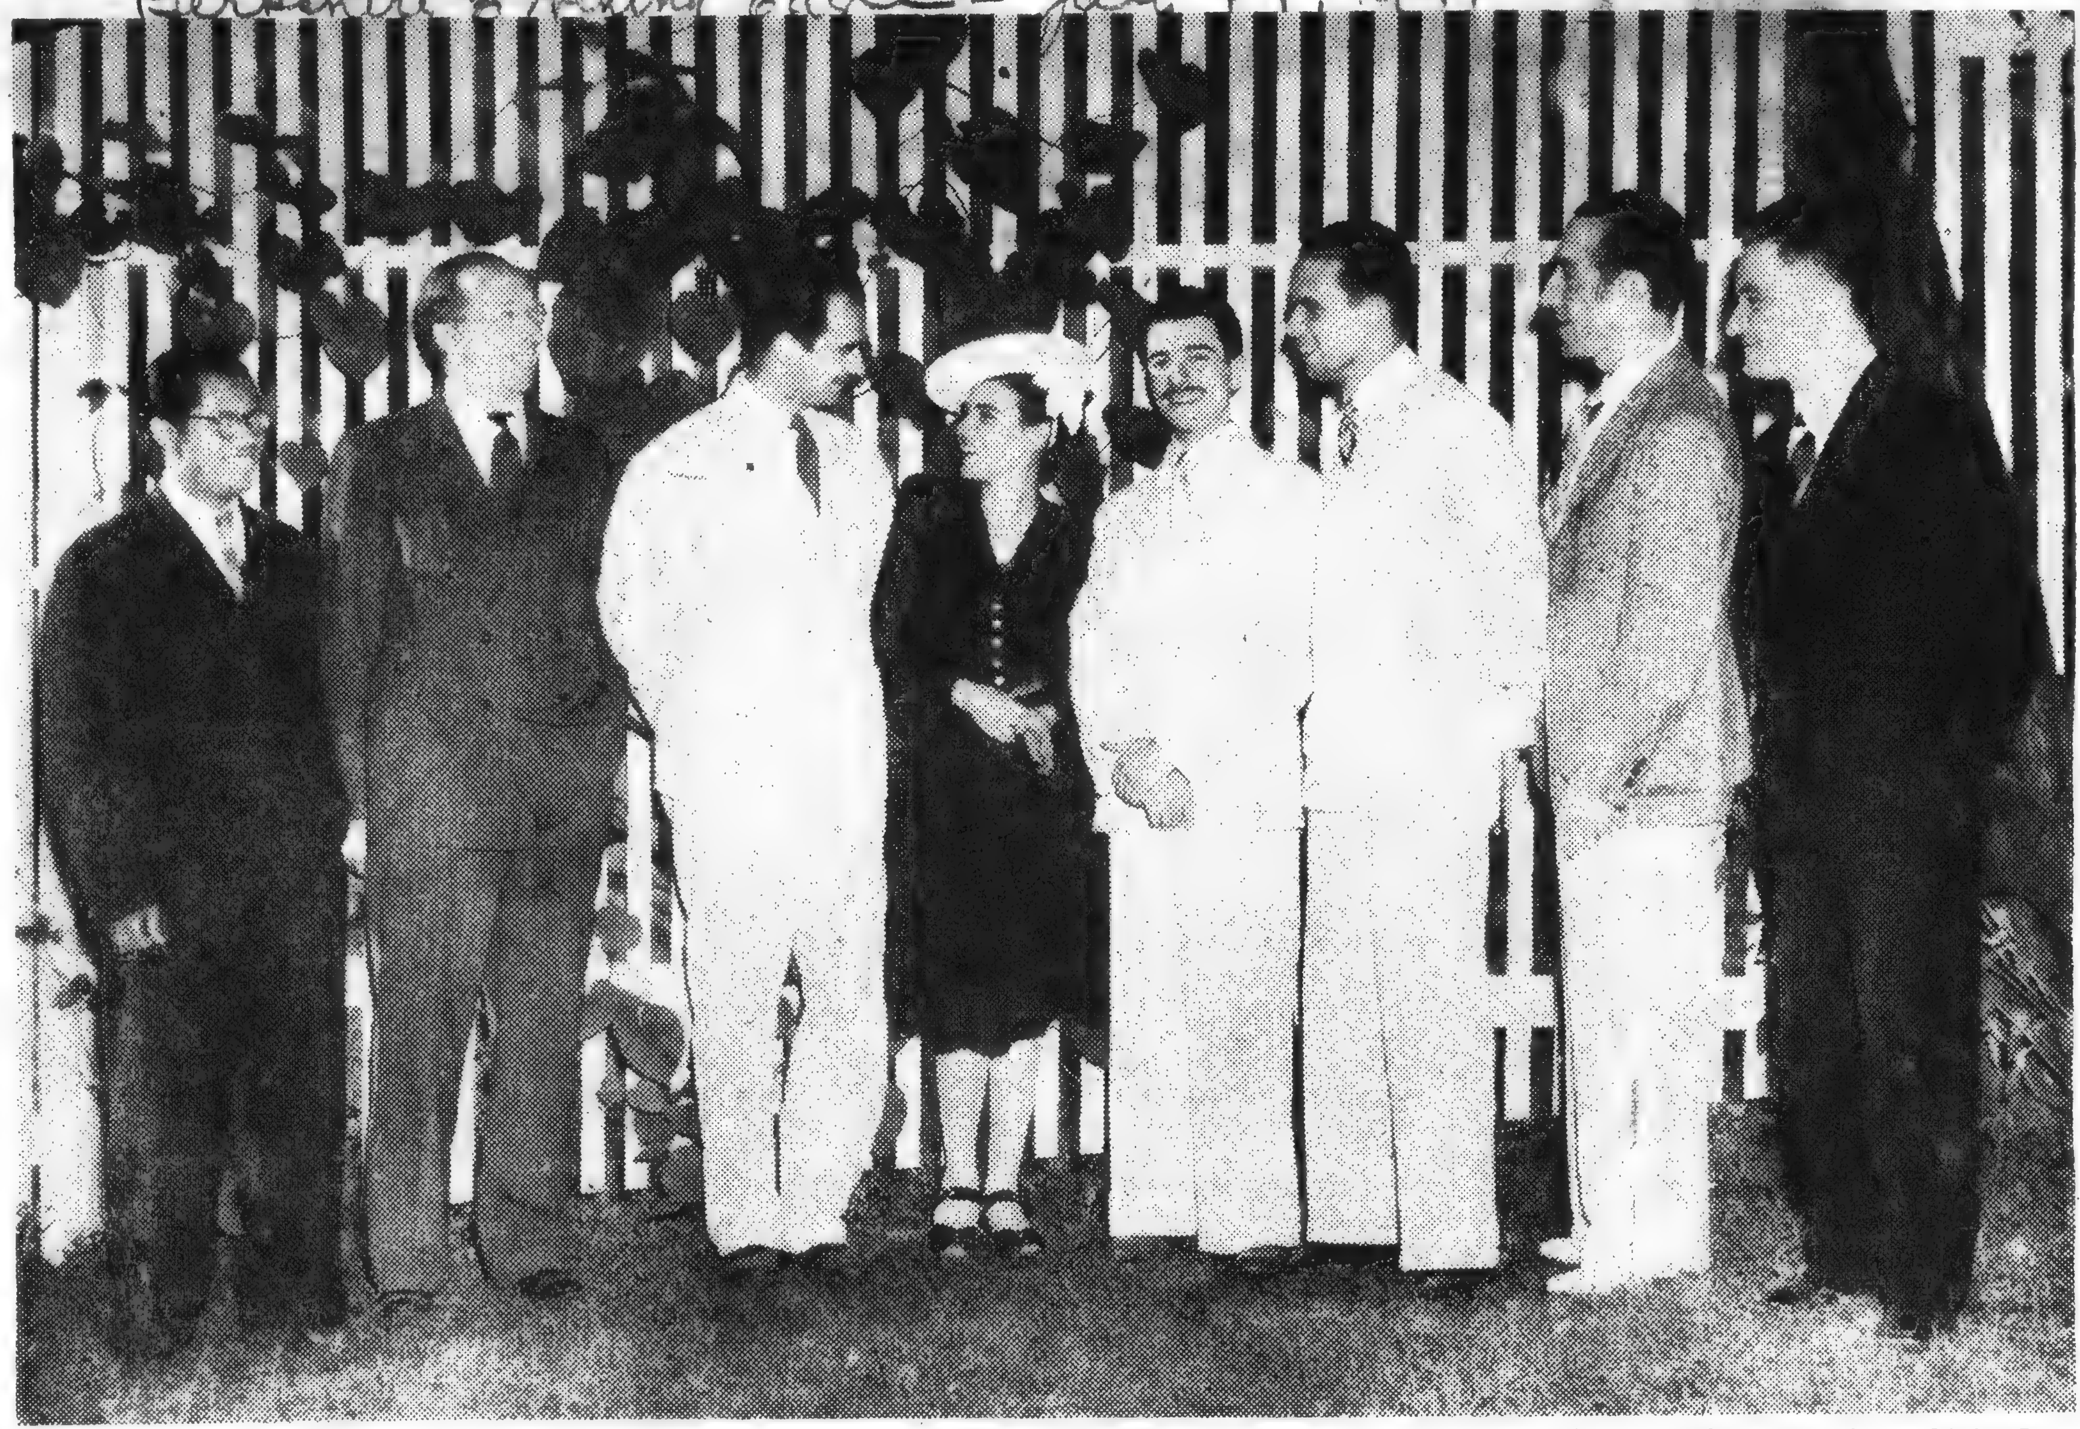
SERIES A—Thursday, July 31—Haydn, G major Symphony; Debussy, Three Nocturnes; Villa-Lobos, Chorus No. 10; Beethoven, Symphony No. 5. Saturday—Mendelssohn, Italian Symphony; Beethoven; Leonore Overture No. 3; Shostakovitch, Symphony No. 5. Sunday—Brahms, Fourth Symphony; Copland, Quiet City; Hindemith, 'Cello concerto (with Gregor Piatigorsky); Rimsky-Korsakoff, Capriccio Espagnol.

SERIES B—Thursday, Aug. 7—Mozart, Requiem; Beethoven, Third Symphony. Saturday—Mozart, Eine Kleine Nachtmusik; Hanson, Romantic Symphony; Brahms, Second Piano Concerto (with Leonard Shure); Wagner, Lohengrin Prelude, Die Meistersinger Prelude. Sunday—Mozart, A major Symphony (K.201); Debussy, La Mer; Berlioz, Fantastic Symphony.

SERIES C—Thursday, Aug. 16—Handel, Organ Concerto in D minor (with E. Power Biggs); Beethoven, Missa Solemnis. Saturday—Vaughan Williams, A London Symphony; Barber, Violin Concerto (with Ruth Posselt); Wagner, Parsifal Prelude and Good Friday Spell, Tannhaeuser Overture. Sunday—Sibelius, Seventh Symphony; Prokofieff, Lieutenant Kije Suite; Tschaikowsky, Fifth Symphony.

Latin-American Music Students Entertained

Berkshire Evening Eagle — July 17, 1941



Honored guests at a dinner at the Curtis Hotel, Lenox, last night, were: Blas Gaslindo, Mexican composer; Aaron Copeland, ~~American composer~~; Carleton Sprague Smith, ~~lecturer~~; Althea Alimonda, Brazilian musician; Alfredo Ianelli, Argentine musician; Alejandro Zagarra, Colombian musician; Jesus Maria Sanroma, ~~pianist of Boston Symphony Orchestra~~; Marcelo Montecino, Chilean musician.

This Clipping From
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

JUL 19 1941

Performance by Tanglewood Students Called "A Marvel"

No Brochures or Speeches Could So Well Reveal Aims and Objects Of Berkshire Music Center

By JAY C. ROSENFELD

TANGLEWOOD — The second Friday evening concert by the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra drew an audience to the great Shed at Tanglewood last night which the new theatre could not have accommodated. The large and predominantly youthful audience heard a program, half of which was directed by Serge Koussevitzky, and the remainder by his conducting pupils.

In memory of Robert A. Gundersen, the violinist of the Boston Symphony Orchestra who died at ~~Richmond only a few~~ days ago, the Andante Cantabile from the Tschaikowsky D major string quartet was played by the string choir of the orchestra. Then followed the first two movements, really tone-poems, from Liszt's "Faust Symphony." After an intermission, Constance Keene played the A major Mozart concerto with a small accompanying orchestra conducted by Richard Korn, of New York, and, to close, the "American Festival Overture," of William Schuman, directed by Leonard Bernstein.

Marvel in Memory

No brochures or speeches could so well reveal the aims and objects and achievements of this really mighty venture as last night's performance, or the preceding one, and, no doubt, those to come. All musical America has been justly proud of a youth orchestra making converts and friends with our fellow-citizens in the South American republics, as well as across our own country, under the leadership of Stokowski; a couple of thousand men and women last night heard a youth orchestra, about two weeks of age, play under the conductorship of the Boston Symphony leader. What they accomplished was a thrill at the moment, but it remains a marvel in one's memory.

It is a tribute to the skill of Dr. Koussevitzky and the instructors of the school he directs, as well as an indication of the calibre of the student the school attracts. The performances do not require analysis to prove their worth. The mature musical discipline evident, the execution of the conductor's indications, the apparent comprehension by the individual of the orchestral problem, everything contributed toward an evening of high musical enjoyment.

The practice of an artist, conceded by all to be one of those paramount in his field, to appear in public with an untried assembly of students, is something new in music, and something of the greatest importance and gratification. Dr. Koussevitzky's rep[illegible]tion was not the issue last night, but it was certainly the inspiration, and it only more fully demonstrates his desire, and his ability, to carry to its fulfillment this new but vigorous child of his artistic vision.

The Schumann overture was given a dynamic and exciting performance by the youthful Bernstein. At the conclusion, on one of his several returns to acknowledge the unbridled applause, he lead out the composer, a young man with many substantial attainments to his credit, and now professor at Sarah Lawrence College. Dr. Koussevitzky, who had taken a seat at the front of the audience for the last half of the program, stepped forward to commend both the composer and the brilliant conductor. There was a confused bestowal of congratulations with kisses, much to the keen amusement of the audience.

This afternoon at the Berkshire Music Center there was a lecture by Olin Downes, music editor of the New York Times, which was illustrated by groups from the department of music and culture.

Tuesday night at 8.30 there will be a chamber music concert in the chamber music hall. Gregor Piatigorsky, world-famous cellist, is in charge of this department.

Boris Goldovsky of the opera department will lecture Wednesday afternoon at 4.30 on "Tempo and Its Problems," at the new theatre.

Wednesday evening at 8.30, in the chamber music hall, Aaron Copland will discuss the program to be played by the student orchestra in the Shed Friday evening at 8.30.

This Clipping From
HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES

JUL 18 1941

Concert-Theater Among Buildings New at Tanglewood

When music lovers from the far reaches of the country arrive at Tanglewood for the opening of the eighth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival July 31, they may observe a number of interesting additions to Tanglewood's facilities.

Already in use by opera students attending the Berkshire Music Center is the new concert-theater dedicated last Sunday, a new chamber music hall and four studios. The buildings were designed by Eliel Saarinen and his son, Eerio, of the Cranbrook Academy of Art, Bloomfield Hills, Mich. Unique is the theater which seats 1,200. Its design is completely functional. Mr. Saarinen was designer of the Festival's shed at Tanglewood.

The first concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge ~~Koussevitsky~~ conductor, will find the chorus of the Berkshire Musical Association, Horace Hunt, director, joining in presenting the Villa Lobos Choros No. 10 and Debussy's "Three Nocturnes." The rest of the program will include Handel's Concerto for Organ and Orchestra No. 10 in D Minor and Beethoven's Symphony No. 3, "Eroica". The concerts July 31 and Aug. 2 will be at 8.30 p. m. and the concert Sunday, Aug. 3, will be at 3:30 p. m.

Audiences will be larger than those of last year, according to advance reservations. Sales are 20 percent ahead of last year, the Festival trustees have announced.

Tickets for single concerts may be obtained at the Festival office in Stockbridge.

Acording to the Berkshire Hills Conference, there are plenty of rooms available within a radius of 10 to 25 miles from Tanglewood. Room reservations may be made by communicating with the Conference at Pittsfield or its Festival Accommodations Bureau in Stockbridge.

This Clipping From
ALBANY, N. Y.
TIMES UNION

JUL 19 1941

This Clipping From
BUFFALO, N.Y.
COURIER-EXPRESS

JUL 20 1941

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
EVENING UNION

JUL 19 1941

This Clipping From
ALBANY, N.Y.
KNICKERBOCKER NEWS

JUL 19 1941

THIS CLIPPING FROM HUDSON, N. Y.
REGISTER

JUL 19 1941

This Clipping From BURLINGTON, VT.
NEWS

JUL 21 1941

212

This Clipping From
CUE
NEW YORK, N. Y.

JUL 19 1941

TANGLEWOOD TALE

REMEMBER to weave into your plans for roving holiday a visit to what has become America's most important and rewarding festival of outdoor music.

The Eighth Annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival, employing Dr. Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra in full Winter proportion, and some distinguished soloists, will begin in the celebrated Shed of Tanglewood, between Lenox and Stockbridge, Mass., on Thursday evening, July 31.

All of Salzburg's sleepy charm, the reverence and dignity of Bayreuth, the mellow dreams of Florence and the zest and eagerness of Glyndebourne—all these you will find, plus a setting of matchless beauty and glorious, unforgettable music.

Among the soloists this year are Gregor Piatigorsky, Russian 'cellist; Ruth Posselt, violinist; Leonard Shure, pianist, and a quartet of fine voices to sing, with the Berkshire Festival Chorus, in a performance of Beethoven's magnificent Missa Solemnis.

Tanglewood, as you may suspect, is the site of Hawthorne's famous tales, a beloved spot for Nathaniel, who occupied a secluded cottage (still standing) and there spun out his immortal fancies. There he wrote The House of the Seven Gables and The Wonder Book. This 200-acre estate, overlooking Stockbridge Bowl, an inland lake set like some glowing opal in a ring of misty hills, was owned until a few years ago by Mrs. Gorham Brooks. She presented the estate to the Boston Symphony Orchestra as a permanent home for the Berkshire Festival, and for the projected Berkshire Music Center, since become a thriving reality.

The Festival itself derives from the busy brain of the late Dr. Henry Hadley, a New Englander by birth and a musical idealist by inclination. It began in 1934, in a horse show ring on the Dan Hanna stock farm at Interlaken, in Stockbridge Township. An improvised "shell" housed the first concert, while thunder roared and rain soaked a sparse audience, huddled under a tent that dripped water like a sieve. In subsequent seasons, marked by a persistent series of deficits, the Festival moved to the Emerson estate, "Holmwood", under a bigger and less casual tent that really protected the dogged audience against the whimsical weather.

The Festival has been abiding at Tanglewood since 1937. The Shed, semi-circular and airy, has a pillared overhang and a sloping roof. Wild storms—they have Summer hummers up there!—bounce from the roof like pebbles from a drum. You can wear your most fetching attire and the heavens can open and not a drop will mar the crisp symmetry of your toilet.

Here are a few musical morsels worth attention if you go: AUG. 2—Shostakovitch, fifth symphony. AUG. 3—Hindemith, 'cello concerto. AUG. 7—Excerpts from Mozart Requiem. AUG. 14—Beethoven, Missa Solemnis. AUG. 17—Strauss, Death and Transfiguration. DATES: July 31, Aug. 2, 3; Aug. 7, 9 and 10; Aug. 14, 16 and 17—Thursday and Saturday evenings; Sunday afternoons. The drive to Tanglewood is direct. Follow Merritt Parkway to Route 7, and thence into Stockbridge and Lenox. Or, you can embark at the Grand Central Station.

This Clipping From
NEW HAVEN, CONN.
REGISTER
JUL 20 1941

U. S. O.

Remember that gala affair given at Tanglewood last season when the Boston Symphony put on a special show for the benefit of British relief? Nearly $25,000 was raised and a large amount of good-will distributed through the efforts of all concerned. This year will witness another such program when the United Service Organizations will benefit by a great program Friday, August 15. One of the most amazing aspects of this affair concerns the purpose for which the funds will be used, and that is to provide phonograph recordings for men in service at their various camp headquarters. This dissemination of good music may have an incalculable benefit on the morale of the service men if it is received with as good a grace as it is given. The Boston Symphony, it will be recalled has recorded for RCA Victor until recently, but the union authority has made it advisable, according to those sponsors, to drop the great orchestra from its future lists. Thus that body of players, loyal and fine Americans all, will no longer record for the phonograph unless some up-and-coming concern with the courage of its convictions insists that freemen shall have the benefits due them. If RCA Victor hasn't, it would be a fine, and a business-like gesture, for Columbia or Decca to sign up the Bostonians immediately.

The Seeing Eye

Dr. Koussevitsky had some enlightening remarks to make a fortnight ago when the brief dedicatory exercises were held for the new theater and concert hall at the Berkshire Music Center. He recognizes the unsurpassed resources of America to bring music into the lives of its people, not by cheapening music, but by uplifting man. Art must not be detached from the people, he adds, indicating that that was one of the greatest vices of European culture. The time has come, says Dr. Koussevitsky, to "exclude the possibility of the severance between culture and the people in the future." "We place great emphasis on the problem of general musical education. The people must be linked with music organically and not merely by an accidental link based on mutual sympathy or taste." "The only ground for our authority (as professionals) is the love we can inspire for our work. If this were absent, all else would be futility and emptiness, however well we might be armed with knowledge and skill."

This Clipping From
N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT
JUL 26 1941

PUPILS TO HEAR SYMPHONY DRILL

Mrs. Grant Has Batch of Tickets for Rehearsal at Tanglewood Week From Today.

A batch of tickets for the Aug. 2. rehearsal of the Berkshire Symphonic festival orchestra at Tanglewood, Stockbridge, has been received by Mrs. Gertrude Grant Graham, public school music supervisor. They will be distributed at the high school building at 9 o'clock in the morning of the rehearsal day, just before the Williamstown delegation departs.

Mrs. Graham had asked that the public school pupils planning to attend the rehearsal which Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra which each summer becomes the festival orchestra, will direct, to make arrangements for their own transportation. Those adults who carry groups of pupils will also be provided with free tickets.

If there are any adults who wish to volunteer in accommodating pupils to Tanglewood, they have been asked to notify Mrs. Graham.

This Clipping From
SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
UNION-STAR

JUL 21 1941

New Facilities Provided At Tanglewood

Concert Theater, Chamber Music Hall Now in Use

Music lovers attending the Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Tanglewood this Summer may observe a number of interesting additions to the facilities. A new concert theater, a new chamber music hall and four studios were dedicated last Sunday and are now in use. The buildings were designed by Eliel Saarinen and his son, Eerio, of the Cranbrook Academy of Art, Bloomfield Hills, Mich. The theater is completely functional in design. Mr. Saarinen was the designer of the festival's shed.

Assisting for the first concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra with Serge Koussevitzky conducting will be the chorus of the Berkshire Musical Association, Horace Hunt, director. The voices will be heard in the Villa Lobos "Choros No. 10," and Debussy's "Three Nocturnes." The rest of the program will include Handel's Concerto for organ and orchestra, No. 10 in D minor, and Beethoven's third Symphony, "Eroica." The program will start at 8:30 p. m. Tickets for single concerts may be obtained at the festival office in Stockbridge.

During the entire period of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, from July 31 to August 17, the South Mountain Association, Willem Willeke, musical director, will have no Sunday concerts, but will give concerts Friday afternoons. The South Mountain Quartet will play at 4 p. m. August 1 in the auditorium on South Mountain with Marvel Granjany, French harpist, as visiting artist. Succeeding concerts will be given August 8 and 15. Harold Bauer, pianist, will assist on the latter program.

This season invitations will not be issued for the concerts. The executive committee, hoping to meet public demand and to encourage public support, has arranged to have moderately priced tickets. These may be obtained from the treasurer, James D. Colt, 777 West Street, Pittsfield, or at the door after 3 p. m. on concert days.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
JOURNAL AMERICAN

JUL 22 1941

This Clipping From BRISTOL, CONN.
PRESS

JUL 23 1941

This Clipping From
BRIDGEPORT, CONN.
POST

JUL 23 1941

Berkshire Festival Revises Its Program

Significantly, whether in keeping with the "V" campaign or not, the Berkshire Symphonic festival today announced a change in programs to be played by the Boston Symphony orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky, conducting.

Beethoven's Symphony No. 5 in C Minor has been transferred from the opening concert of Series B to the opening concert of the Festival, July 31. Beethoven's Symphony, No. 3 ("Eroica") has been shifted to the second series opening.

Additional soloists were also announced today. They will include E. Power Biggs Aug. 14 in Handel's Concerto for Organ and Orchestra No. 10 in D minor, and the following for Beethoven's "Missa Solemnis," scheduled for Aug. 14 with the Berkshire Festival chorus: Rose Dirman, soprano; Hertha Glaz, contralto; John Priebe, tenor; Julius Huehn, bass. Other soloists will be: Gregor Piatigorsky, Aug. 3; Leonard Shure, Aug. 9; Ruth Posselt, Aug. 16.

The Berkshire Musical association chorus, Horace Hunt director, will appear with the orchestra the opening night of the festival in the Villa Lobes Chorus No. 10 and Debussy's Three Nocturnes. The same chorus will appear again Aug. 7 in excerpts from Mozart's Requiem. The excerpts will be: Requiem, Dies Irae, Rex Tremendae, Confutatis, Lacrimosa and Domine Jesu. This chorus is made up of 150 voices from 13 Berkshire communities and has been rehearsing for several months in anticipation of the festival.

There are plenty of tickets available for single concerts, festival trustees stated today.. The Berkshire Hills Conference accommodations bureau at Stockbridge says there are plenty of rooms available within convenient driving distance of Tanglewood. Inquiries for rooms should be addressed to the accommodations bureau.

This Clipping From
ALBANY, N. Y.
TIMES UNION

JUL 24 1941

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS

JUL 26 1941

This Clipping From
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

JUL 26 1941

This Clipping From
POUGHKEEPSIE, N. Y.
SUNDAY COURIER

JUL 27 1941

This Clipping From TOLEDO, O.
TIMES

JUL 27 1941

This Clipping From COLUMBUS, OHIO
DISPATCH

JUL 27 1941

This Clipping From
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

JUL 26 1941

Koussevitzky Given Surprise At Tanglewood

Chorus Performs Foss Composition To Celebrate Birthday

By JAY C. ROSENFELD

There was a lot of mysterious whispering going on last night on the stage of the new theatre at Tanglewood just before the intermission in the concert by the Berkshire Music Center orchestra. Then, Leonard Bernstein, who had just conducted Lambert's "Rio Grande" for orchestra, chorus, and solo contralto and solo piano, and conducted it vividly, incidentally, stepped to the front of the stage, showed the palms of his hands in front of his shoulders for silence, and announced that, in honor of the birthday of Serge Koussevitzky, they would perform a chorus, written especially for the event by Lukas Foss.

The text seemed to reiterate "happy birthday, Koussevitzky, Koussy," and all the other and various endearing and intimate diminutives by which the famous conductor of the Boston Orchestra and director of the Center is familiarly called or affectionately referred to. With the composer at the piano and using as accompaniment the trombone and trumpet choirs, a mixed quartet of vocal soloists did the highly amusing greeting with the support of the large chorus.

Dr. Koussevitzky arose from his place in the audience, beaming and, believe it or not, blushing with gratitude and surprise; he bowed in all directions, gave the old pugilistic gesture of greeting by raising his clasped hands in the air. The applauding huge audience and the stage-full of students would not quiet, and so he stepped to the front of the auditorium and shook the hands of the conductor and of the composer. Of course, he finally had to mount to the podium. There he made the simple but eloquent gesture of showing his palms, this time with the hands hanging heavily only a trifle away from his hips, indicating with complete clarity, "How can anyone find something adequate to say at such a moment?"

The program consisted of four divisions: Walter Hendl conducted first, the Haydn B flat symphony. This was followed by the Lambert work. After intermission came Alfredo Ianelli playing the solo in the Mozart concerto for flute and orchestra. In this the conductor was Richard Duncan. To close, Robert Whitney lead the orchestra in Weber's "Oberon." The audience was larger than the theatre could accommodate, and part of the gathering selected vantage points all around the building, both inside and out.

The orchestra, as before, alert and responsive, played with improved tone, and executed the program with mature musicianship

pping From
CUE
NEW YORK, N. Y.
JUL 19 1941

TANGLEWOOD TALE

REMEMBER to weave into your plans for roving holiday a visit to what has become America's most important and rewarding festival of outdoor music.

The Eighth Annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival, employing Dr. Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra in full Winter proportion, and some distinguished soloists, will begin in the celebrated Shed of Tanglewood, between Lenox and Stockbridge, Mass., on Thursday evening, July 31.

All of Salzburg's sleepy charm, the reverence and dignity of Bayreuth, the mellow dreams of Florence and the zest and eagerness of Glyndebourne—all these you will find, plus a setting of matchless beauty and glorious, unforgettable music.

Among the soloists this year are Gregor Piatigorsky, Russian 'cellist; Ruth Posselt, violinist; Leonard Shure, pianist, and a quartet of fine voices to sing, with the Berkshire Festival Chorus, in a performance of Beethoven's magnificent Missa Solemnis.

Tanglewood, as you may suspect, is the site of Hawthorne's famous tales, a beloved spot for Nathaniel, who occupied a secluded cottage (still standing) and there spun out his immortal fancies. There he wrote The House of the Seven Gables and The Wonder Book. This 200-acre estate, overlooking Stockbridge Bowl, an inland lake set like some glowing opal in a ring of misty hills, was owned until a few years ago by Mrs. Gorham Brooks. She presented the estate to the Boston Symphony Orchestra as a permanent home for the Berkshire Festival, and for the projected Berkshire Music Center, since become a thriving reality.

The Festival itself derives from the busy brain of the late Dr. Henry Hadley, a New Englander by birth and a musical idealist by inclination. It began in 1934, in a horse show ring on the Dan Hanna stock farm at Interlaken, in Stockbridge Township. An improvised "shell" housed the first concert, while thunder roared and rain soaked a sparse audience, huddled under a tent that dripped water like a sieve. In subsequent seasons, marked by a persistent series of deficits, the Festival moved to the Emerson estate, "Holmwood", under a bigger and less casual tent that really protected the dogged audience against the whimsical weather.

The Festival has been abiding at Tanglewood since 1937. The Shed, semi-circular and airy, has a pillared overhang and a sloping roof. Wild storms—they have Summer hummers up there!—bounce from the roof like pebbles from a drum. You can wear your most fetching attire and the heavens can open and not a drop will mar the crisp symmetry of your toilet.

Here are a few musical morsels worth attention if you go: AUG. 2—Shostakovitch, fifth symphony. AUG. 3—Hindemith, 'cello concerto. AUG. 7—Excerpts from Mozart Requiem. AUG. 14—Beethoven, Missa Solemnis. AUG. 17—Strauss, Death and Transfiguration. DATES: July 31, Aug. 2, 3; Aug. 7, 9 and 10; Aug. 14, 16 and 17—Thursday and Saturday evenings; Sunday afternoons. The drive to Tanglewood is direct. Follow Merritt Parkway to Route 7, and thence into Stockbridge and Lenox. Or, you can embark at the Grand Central Station.

This Clipping From
NEW HAVEN, CONN.
REGISTER
JUL 20 1941

U. S. O.

Remember that gala affair given at Tanglewood last season when the Boston Symphony put on a special show for the benefit of British relief? Nearly $25,000 was raised and a large amount of good-will distributed through the efforts of all concerned. This year will witness another such program when the United Service Organizations will benefit by a great program Friday, August 15. One of the most amazing aspects of this affair concerns the purpose for which the funds will be used, and that is to provide phonograph recordings for men in service at their various camp headquarters. This dissemination of good music may have an incalculable benefit on the morale of the service men if it is received with as good a grace as it is given. The Boston Symphony, it will be recalled has recorded for RCA Victor until recently, but the union authority has made it advisable, according to those sponsors, to drop the great orchestra from its future lists. Thus that body of players, loyal and fine Americans all, will no longer record for the phonograph unless some up-and-coming concern with the courage of its convictions insists that freemen shall have the benefits due them. If RCA Victor hasn't, it would be a fine, and a business-like gesture, for Columbia or Decca to sign up the Bostonians immediately.

The Seeing Eye

Dr. Koussevitsky had some enlightening remarks to make a fortnight ago when the brief dedicatory exercises were held for the new theater and concert hall at the Berkshire Music Center. He recognizes the unsurpassed resources of America to bring music into the lives of its people, not by cheapening music, but by uplifting man. Art must not be detached from the people, he adds, indicating that that was one of the greatest vices of European culture. The time has come, says Dr. Koussevitsky, to "exclude the possibility of the severance between culture and the people in the future." "We place great emphasis on the problem of general musical education. The people must be linked with music organically and not merely by an accidental link based on mutual sympathy or taste." "The only ground for our authority (as professionals) is the love we can inspire for our work. If this were absent, all else would be futility and emptiness, however well we might be armed with knowledge and skill."

This Clipping From
N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT
JUL 26 1941

PUPILS TO HEAR SYMPHONY DRILL

Mrs. Grant Has Batch of Tickets for Rehearsal at Tanglewood Week From Today.

A batch of tickets for the Aug. 2 rehearsal of the Berkshire Symphonic festival orchestra at Tanglewood, Stockbridge, has been received by Mrs. Gertrude Grant Graham, public school music supervisor. They will be distributed at the high school building at 9 o'clock in the morning of the rehearsal day, just before the Williamstown delegation departs.

Mrs. Graham had asked that the public school pupils planning to attend the rehearsal which Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra which each summer becomes the festival orchestra, will direct, to make arrangements for their own transportation. Those adults who carry groups of pupils will also be provided with free tickets.

If there are any adults who wish to volunteer in accommodating pupils to Tanglewood, they have been asked to notify Mrs. Graham.

This Clipping From
SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
UNION-STAR
JUL 21 1941

New Facilities Provided At Tanglewood

Concert Theater, Chamber Music Hall Now in Use

Music lovers attending the Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Tanglewood this Summer may observe a number of interesting additions to the facilities. A new concert theater, a new chamber music hall and four studios were dedicated last Sunday and are now in use. The buildings were designed by Eliel Saarinen and his son, Eerio, of the Cranbrook Academy of Art, Bloomfield Hills, Mich. The theater is completely functional in design. Mr. Saarinen was the designer of the festival's shed.

Assisting for the first concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra with Serge Koussevitzky conducting will be the chorus of the Berkshire Musical Association, Horace Hunt, director. The voices will be heard in the Villa Lobos "Choros No. 10," and Debussy's "Three Nocturnes." The rest of the program will include Handel's Concerto for organ and orchestra, No. 10 in D minor, and Beethoven's third Symphony, "Eroica." The program will start at 8:30 p. m. Tickets for single concerts may be obtained at the festival office in Stockbridge.

During the entire period of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, from July 31 to August 17, the South Mountain Association, Willem Willeke, musical director, will have no Sunday concerts, but will give concerts Friday afternoons. The South Mountain Quartet will play at 4 p. m. August 1 in the auditorium on South Mountain with Marvel Granjany, French harpist, as visiting artist. Succeeding concerts will be given August 8 and 15. Harold Bauer, pianist, will assist on the latter program.

This season invitations will not be issued for the concerts. The executive committee, hoping to meet public demand and to encourage public support, has arranged to have moderately priced tickets. These may be obtained from the treasurer, James D. Colt, 777 West Street, Pittsfield, or at the door after 3 p. m. on concert days.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
JOURNAL AMERICAN
JUL 22 1941

This Clipping From BRISTOL, CONN.
PRESS
JUL 23 1941

This Clipping From
BRIDGEPORT, CONN.
POST
JUL 23 1941

Berkshire Festival Revises Its Program

Significantly, whether in keeping with the "V" campaign or not, the Berkshire Symphonic festival today announced a change in programs to be played by the Boston Symphony orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky, conducting.

Beethoven's Symphony No. 5 in C Minor has been transferred from the opening concert of Series B to the opening concert of the Festival, July 31. Beethoven's Symphony, No. 3 ("Eroica") has been shifted to the second series opening.

Additional soloists were also announced today. They will include E. Power Biggs Aug. 14 in Handel's Concerto for Organ and Orchestra No. 10 in D minor, and the following for Beethoven's "Missa Solemnis," scheduled for Aug. 14 with the Berkshire Festival chorus: Rose Dirman, soprano; Hertha Glaz, contralto; John Priebe, tenor; Julius Huehn, bass. Other soloists will be: Gregor Piatigorsky, Aug. 2; Leonard Shure, Aug. 9; Ruth Posselt, Aug. 16.

The Berkshire Musical association chorus, Horace Hunt director, will appear with the orchestra the opening night of the festival in the Villa Lobos Chorus No. 10 and Debussy's Three Nocturnes. The same chorus will appear again Aug. 7 in excerpts from Mozart's Requiem. The excerpts will be: Requiem, Dies Irae, Rex Tremendae, Confutatis, Lacrimosa and Domine Jesu. This chorus is made up of 150 voices from 18 Berkshire communities and has been rehearsing for several months in anticipation of the festival.

There are plenty of tickets available for single concerts, festival trustees stated today. The Berkshire Hills Conference accommodations bureau at Stockbridge says there are plenty of rooms available within convenient driving distance of Tanglewood. Inquiries for rooms should be addressed to the accommodations bureau.

This Clipping From
ALBANY, N. Y.
TIMES UNION
JUL 24 1941

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS
JUL 26 1941

This Clipping From
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE
JUL 26 1941

This Clipping From
POUGHKEEPSIE, N. Y.
SUNDAY COURIER
JUL 27 1941

This Clipping From TOLEDO, O.
TIMES
JUL 27 1941

This Clipping From COLUMBUS, OHIO
DISPATCH
JUL 27 1941

This Clipping From
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE
JUL 26 1941

Koussevitzky Given Surprise At Tanglewood

Chorus Performs Foss Composition To Celebrate Birthday

By JAY C. ROSENFELD

There was a lot of mysterious whispering going on last night on the stage of the new theatre at Tanglewood just before the intermission in the concert by the Berkshire Music Center orchestra. Then, Leonard Bernstein, who had just conducted Lambert's "Rio Grande" for orchestra, chorus, and solo contralto and solo piano, and conducted it vividly, incidentally, stepped to the front of the stage, showed the palms of his hands in front of his shoulders for silence, and announced that, in honor of the birthday of Serge Koussevitzky, they would perform a chorus, written especially for the event by Lukas Foss.

The text seemed to reiterate "happy birthday, Koussevitzky, Koussy," and all the other and various endearing and intimate diminutives by which the famous conductor of the Boston Orchestra and director of the Center is familiarly called or affectionately referred to. With the composer at the piano and using as accompaniment the trombone and trumpet choirs, a mixed quartet of vocal soloists did the highly amusing greeting with the support of the large chorus.

Dr. Koussevitzky arose from his place in the audience, beaming and, believe it or not, blushing with gratitude and surprise; he bowed in all directions, gave the old pugilistic gesture of greeting by raising his clasped hands in the air. The applauding huge audience and the stage-full of students would not quiet, and so he stepped to the front of the auditorium and shook the hands of the conductor and of the composer. Of course, he finally had to mount to the podium. There he made the simple but eloquent gesture of showing his palms, this time with the hands hanging heavily only a trifle away from his hips, indicating with complete clarity, "How can anyone find something adequate to say at such a moment?"

The program consisted of four divisions: Walter Hendl conducted first, the Haydn B flat symphony. This was followed by the Lambert work. After intermission came Alfredo Ianelli playing the solo in the Mozart concerto for flute and orchestra. In this the conductor was Richard Duncan. To close, Robert Whitney lead the orchestra in Weber's "Oberon." The audience was larger than the theatre could accommodate, and part of the gathering selected vantage points all around the building, both inside and out.

The orchestra, as before, alert and responsive, played with improved tone, and executed the program with mature musicianship.

This Clipping From
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE
JUL 24 1941

213

Tanglewood Will Be Music Center of All the World, Luboshutz Tells Rotarians

Tanglewood, home of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival and the Berkshire Music Center, will "shortly" become the music center of "all the world," Pierre Luboshutz, internationally known pianist, told 50 members and guests of the Rotary Club at the weekly luncheon meeting in the Hotel Wendell today.

A friend of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky since he was a child, Mr. Luboshutz told of the dramatic story behind the Berkshire Music Center, which Dr. Koussevitzky often has described as the "fulfillment of a dream."

Mr. Luboshutz went on the famed trip down the Volga, during which Dr. Koussevitzky's orchestra played in towns and villages whose residents scarcely knew of the existence of such a thing as a symphony orchestra. The trip was the first of the conductor's attempts to "play for the masses," and even after the success of that symphonic voyage, Mr. Luboshutz said, Dr. Koussevitzky still was not satisfied; he still wanted to found a school which would nurture the musical talents of the young.

Dr. Koussevitzky's dream was near fulfillment, Mr. Luboshutz said, with buildings ready and even a faculty chosen. Then the World War came, and the revolution in Russia, and Dr. Koussevitzky had to postpone the realization of his dream. And it was not until the Berkshire Music Center opened last year, "that Uncle Serge would admit, at last, the dream had come true."

Mr. Luboshutz was introduced by Jay C. Rosenfeld, music critic of The Eagle.

President Frank A. Woodhead announced that the club had been invited to a joint meeting with the Williamstown club at Mount Hope Farm Tuesday, Aug. 12, at 3. A demonstration of equipment at E. Parmalee Prentice's model farm will be followed by an outdoor steak roast.

Announcements also were made concerning the appearance of Luther King, Negro tenor, at the First Baptist Church at 8.30 Sunday evening, and the pop concert to be held at the GEAA Field Saturday night for the benefit of the Pittsfield Community Music School.

This Clipping From
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE
JUL 24 1941

This Clipping From
WILLIMANTIC, CONN.
CHRONICLE
JUL 25 1941

Camp Edwards Band Coming For Tanglewood Benefit

Will Join in New England Manifestation for USO and British War Relief Aug. 15

Two-hundred fifty musicians will be selected from the 26th Division bands at Camp Edwards to join in the gala manifestation to be made at Tanglewood Aug. 15 for the benefit of the United Service Organizations and British War Relief. The band will bivouac at Tanglewood, on the shore of Lake Mahkeenac.

New England Ring

The manifestation will have a distinct New England ring, calling everybody from everywhere to join hands with the forces at Tanglewood to make the venture a success. Co-operating in the presentation will be the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor, the Berkshire Music Center faculty and students and the Berkshire Symphonic Festival whose annual concerts by the Boston Symphony will be given during the period from July 31 to Aug. 17.

The governors of all New England States have accepted the invitation of Philip Allen of Walpole, chairman, to serve on the sponsoring committee. In commenting on the event, Mr. Allen declared today: "The magnitude of the program, the importance of those who are contributing to it and the nature of the two benefiting organizations should make this an even greater occasion than the similar benefit given last year which had an attendance of 10,000 and which it will be remembered gave more than $23,000 to British relief. I hope every person in New England will feel free and welcome to join us. The program will be enjoyable. The cause is certainly most worthy."

The program which will run from 5.30 PM until late in the evening, will open with a band concert by the 26th Division Band of the United States Army. Dr. Koussevitzky will lead the band. There will then be performances by the departments of the Music Center of opera, orchestral, choral and chamber music in the Shed, the Barn, and the two new auditoriums of the Center. A manifestation will follow in which speakers of international importance will appear on the stage in the Shed. Gov. Leverett Saltonstall of Massachusetts has been invited to preside.

At intermission a New England baked bean supper and other refreshments will be served on the spacious lawns of Tanglewood at a moderate price.

The final concert of the day will be presented in the Shed by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Dr. Koussevitzky conducting. Then will come the draw for prizes, band music on the lawn overlooking Lake Mahkeenac, fireworks and the singing of "The Star Spangled Banner."

Office Opened

The co-chairmen for tickets are Mrs. John H. P. Gould of Lenox and New York and Mrs. George W. Edman of Pittsfield. They opened an office in the winter quarters of the Festival at Stockbridge today. Persons wishing to make reservations for tickets or boxes may communicate with them by mail, telephone or telegraph. Additional chairmen are to be announced.

The money for the USO will be used to supply recording machines and records for many of the major camps in the country. Associated in the USO are the YMCA, the YWCA, the National Catholic Community Service, the Salvation Army, the Jewish Welfare Board and the National Travelers' Aid Association.

WATERBURY, CONN.
REPUBLICAN
JUL 28 1941

This Clipping From
WATERBURY, CONN.
DEMOCRAT
July 29, 1941

PAWTUCKET, R. I.
TIMES
JUL 25 1941

TORRINGTON, CONN.
REGISTER
JUL 25 1941

NEW BEDFORD, MASS.
STANDARD TIMES
JUL 24 1941

This Clipping From
STAMFORD, CONN.
ADVOCATE
JUL 25 1941

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION
JUL 25 1941

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
SUN
JUL 25 1941

Opening of Annual Music Festival Anticipated in the Berkshire Hills

Special to THE NEW YORK SUN.

Berkshire Hills, Mass., July 25.—Hotels will be filled to capacity and many guests will be entertained at Berkshire summer homes for the opening next Thursday evening of the eighth annual music festival at Tanglewood midway between Lenox and Stockbridge.

The estate is rich in history and tradition. It was named for the "Tanglewood Tales" written there by Nathaniel Hawthorne who spent three years from 1850 in a little red cottage on the place. This house was burned June 22, 1890.

About 1847 William Tappan, Boston merchant and banker bought several farms on the north shore of Lake Mahkeenac which he merged into a gentleman's estate. He laid out the garden which was later developed by his daughter Mrs. Richard C. Dixey, a painter whose murals adorn the house that her father built in 1851. This wooden structure is now used as an administration building by the Berkshire Music Center.

In 1938 the present Mrs. Andrew Hopewell Hepburn of Concord, granddaughter of the founder, gave Tanglewood to the Boston Symphony Orchestra and it is being developed into an American musical center. A new theater concert hall seating 1,200 of which Eliel Saarinen was architect, was dedicated this month.

During the festival there will be many special attractions and entertainments throughout the Berkshire Hills. At the Berkshire Playhouse, Stockbridge, Williams Miles manager, Jane Cowl and Peggy Wood will be seen next week in "Old Acquaintance" by John Van Druten; Tallulah Bankhead in "Her Cardboard Lover" by Jacques Duval the week of August 4 and Eve Le Gallienne in "Hedda Gabler" by Henrik Ibsen the week of August 11.

HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES
JUL 25 1941

PRINGFIELD, MASS.
EVENING UNION
JUL 25 1941

WINSTED, CONN.
CITIZEN
JUL 25 1941

THIS CLIPPING FROM WOBURN, MASS.
TIMES
JUL 26 1941

This Clipping From BRISTOL, CONN.
PRESS
JUL 26 1941

This Clipping From
NEW BRITAIN, CONN.
HERALD
JUL 26 1941

This Clipping From
DANBURY, CONN.
NEWS-TIMES
JUL 26 1941

NEW BEDFORD, MASS.
MERCURY
JUL 26 1941

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
SUNDAY UNION
& REPUBLICAN
JUL 27 1941

This Clipping From
NEW HAVEN, CONN.
REGISTER
JUL 27 1941

This Clipping From
WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM
JUL 27 1941

THIS CLIPPING FROM
LEOMINSTER, MASS.
ENTERPRISE
JUL 28 1941

This Clipping From
HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES
JUL 25 1941

Berkshire Festival Lists Changes in Symphony Programs

The Berkshire Symphonic Festival today announced a change in programs to be played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky, conducting.

Beethoven's Symphony No. 5 in C minor has been transferred from the opening concert of Series B to the opening concert of the Festival, July 31. Beethoven's Symphony No. 3 ("Eroica") has been shifted to the second series opening.

Additional soloists were also announced today. They will include E. Power Biggs, Aug. 14, in Handel's Concerto for Organ and Orchestra No. 10 in D minor, and the following for Beethoven's "Missa Solemnis," scheduled for Aug. 14 with the Berkshire Festival Chorus: Rose Dirman, soprano; Hertha Glaz, contralto; John Priebe, tenor; Julius Huehn, bass. Other soloists will be: Gregor Piatigorsky, Aug. 3; Leonard Shure, Aug. 9; Ruth Posselt, Aug. 16.

Berkshire Chorus Listed

The Berkshire Musical Association Chorus, Horace Hunt, director, will appear with the orchestra the opening night of the Festival in the Villa Lobos Choros No. 10 and DeBussy's Three Nocturnes. The same chorus will appear again Aug. 7 in excerpts from Mozart's Requiem. The excerpts will be: Requiem, Dies Irae, Rex Tremendae, Confutatis, Lacrimosa and Domine Jesu. This chorus is made up of 150 voices from 13 Berkshire communities and has been rehearsing for several months in anticipation of the Festival.

There are plenty of single tickets available for single concerts, Festival trustees stated today. The Berkshire Hills Conference Accommodations Bureau at Stockbridge says there are plenty of rooms available within convenient driving distance of Tanglewood. Inquiries for rooms should be addressed to the Accommodations Bureau.

Revised Programs

The revised programs for the Festival follow:

Series A

Thursday, July 31, at 8:30 p. m.
Haydn: Symphony in G major, No. 88
Debussy: Three Nocturnes (Clouds—Festivals—Sirens)
Villa-Lobos: Choros No. 10 (Chorus of the Berkshire Musical Association)
Beethoven: Symphony No. 5, in C minor

Saturday, Aug. 2, at 8:30 p. m.
Mendelssohn: "Italian" Symphony
Beethoven: Overture to "Leonore" No. 3
Shostakovitch: Symphony No. 5

Sunday, Aug. 3, at 3:30 p. m.
Brahms: Symphony No. 4
Copland: "Quiet City"

LYNN, MASS.
ITEM
JUL 29 1941

ALBANY, N.Y.
KNICKERBOCKER NEWS
JUL 29 1941

This Clipping From
ALBANY, N. Y.
TIMES UNION
JUL 27 1941

MUSIC World

By

E. S. VAN OLINDA

The eighth annual Berkshire Sumphonic festival will open next Thursday evening, July 31 at the permanent summer home of the Boston Symphony orchestra, with Serge Koussevitzky conducting, in the great music shed at "Tanglewood," between Lenox and Stockbridge, Mass., inaugurating the first of a series of the three-week's concerts. The programs for Series A are as follows:

Thursday, July 31, at 8:30 p. m.
Concerto for organ and orchestra, No. 10 in D Minor........Handel
Three Nocturnes ("Clouds," "Festivals," "Sirens")....Debussy
Choros, No. 10........Villa-Lobos
(With Berkshire Chorus)
Symphony No. 3 "Eroica" Beethoven

Saturday, August 2, at 8:30 p. m.
"Italian" Symphony.Mendelssohn
Overture to "Loeonore" No. 3 Beethoven
Symphony No. 5...Shostakovitch

Sunday, August 3, at 3:30 p. m.
"Unfinished" Symphony.Schubert
"Quiet City"............Copland
Violoncello Concerto...Hindemith
Soloist: Gregor Piatigorsky
Symphony No. 4.........Brahms

Tickets for individual concerts may be reserved in Albany at the Van Curler Music company.

* * *

Music will be one of the main features of the New York State fair which opens August 24 at Syracuse, N. Y. At 5 p. m. on the opening day in the colliseum, which seats 5,000, there will be 30 pianos on the stage which will be played at various times by 650 performers. One of the novelties will be a fashion show in which Miss June Chandler, undergraduate of Syracuse University, and a resident of Schenectady will be featured. Flah's of Albany will furnish the clothes. Each model will walk up to the podium, turn around, sit down at the piano, while another girl takes her place. When 28 girls are seated, Captain Botts will conduct the group in a performance of "Tales of the Vienna Woods." Pianists of all ages will perform, with Commissioner Holton V. Noyes directing the adult group in "Findlandia" by Sibelius.

* * *

The benefit program whose proceeds will be divided equally between the United Service Organizations and the British War Relief Inc., will be held on Friday, Aug. 15 during the period of the Berkshire Symphonic festival. The Boston Symphony orchestra, directed by Serge Koussevitzky and the various musical groups of the Berkshire Musical center, will take part in the program, which will follow the general line of the event presented at Tanglewood for Allied relief on the corresponding Friday of last August. The proceeds going to the U. S. O. will be used for supplying phonographs and records to men in the service. Philip R. Allen, president of the trustees of the New England Conservatory of Music, is general chairman for this benefit.

This Clipping From
LAWRENCE, MASS.
TRIBUNE

JUL 25 1941

Berkshire Festival Has Leading Place In Musical World

GREAT oaks from little acorns grow," with good reason might be applied to the gradual expansion of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, presented annually at Stockbridge in the picturesque Berkshires. Beginning on a modest scale in 1934, each year since then has witnessed a steady broadening of the scope of activities. The forthcoming eighth season, which opens on next Thursday, July 31, bids fair to take rank with the most pretentious musical festivals ever presented in this country and the time is not far distant when the Berkshire festivals will equal, if not surpass, the great ones of Europe, that again have vanished in the wake of another deadening world conflict.

Significantly, whether in keeping with the "V" campaign or not, conductor Serge Koussevitzky today announced a change in programs to be played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Beethoven's Symphony No. 5 in C Minor has been transferred from the opening concert of Series B to the opening concert of the Festival, July 31. Beethoven's Symphony No. 3 ("Eroica") has been shifted to the second series opening.

Additional soloists were also announced. They will include E. Power Biggs Aug. 14 in Handel's Concerto for Organ and Orchestra No. 10 in D minor, and the following for Beethoven's "Missa Solemnis," scheduled for Aug. 14 with the Berkshire Festival Chorus: Rose Dirman, soprano; Hertha Glaz, contralto; John Priebe, tenor; Julius Huehn, bass. Other soloists will be: Gregor Piatigorsky, Aug. 3; Leonard Shure, Aug. 9; Ruth Posselt, Aug. 16.

The Berkshire Musical Association Chorus, Horace Hunt director, will appear with the orchestra the opening night of the Festival in the Villa Lobos Choros No. 10 and Debussy's Three Nocturnes. The same chorus will appear again Aug. 7 in excerpts from Mozart's Requiem. The excerpts will be: "Requiem," "Dies Irae," "Rex Tremendae," "Confutatis," "Lacrimosa" and "Domine Jesu." This chorus is made up of 150 voices from 13 Berkshire communities and has been rehearsing for several months in anticipation of the Festival.

The revised programs for the Festival follow:

AP

SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY
Conductor of the Boston Symphony and Berkshire Festival

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES

JUL 27 1941

BERKSHIRE CONCERT FOR THE USO AUG. 15

Gala Event at Tanglewood Also to Aid British War Relief

In connection with the Berkshire Symphonic Festival a gala concert will be given Aug. 15 under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., for the benefit of the United Service Organizations and the British War Relief. All the forces at Tanglewood, including the festival organization, the orchestra, Dr. Koussevitzky and the Berkshire Music Center, will cooperate in presenting the program.

In addition, 250 musicians selected from the Twenty-sixth Division bands of the United States Army at Camp Edwards, Falmouth, Mass., will participate in a list of events to run from 5:30 P. M. until late in the evening. The band, directed by Dr. Koussevitzky, will open the program. Thereafter there will be performances by members of the Music Center's departments of operatic, orchestral, choral and chamber music in the Shed, the Barn and the two new auditoriums of the center.

At the "manifestation" to follow, speakers will appear on the stage in the Shed, and Governor Leverett Saltonstall of Massachusetts has been invited to preside. The Boston Symphony Orchestra, led by Dr. Koussevitzky, will give the final concert of the evening. Then will come the draw for prizes, band music on the lawn and fireworks.

Reservations for tickets may be made by communicating with Mrs. John H. P. Gould or Mrs. George W. Edman, co-chairmen for tickets, at the festival office, Stockbridge, Mass.

MISSOULA, MONT.
MISSOULIAN

JUL 27 1941

"Art to function healthily must have some significance for a whole society."

These words were written by a pictorial artist, Thomas Hart Benton, but they apply, and he meant to apply them, to all the arts. Also, it happens, they virtually summarize a recent expression concerning music by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, and they represent the principle behind the organization of the Berkshire Music Center, in which Dr. Koussevitzky is the prime mover.

The Berkshire Festival, whose 1941 celebration opens this Thursday features the Boston Symphony and some of the greatest soloists of our time. It must not be forgotten, however, that the Festival also climaxes the activities of the Center as a school for both specially gifted and purely amateur musicians, and that one of its indispensable participants is a chorus made up of the latter. When the Center opened two weeks ago, about a third of its 350 enrollees were hand-picked for high degree of technical skill, but for the rest the only requirements were love of music and some slight experience of choral singing. The advanced students alone were taken into the orchestra, opera company chamber ensemble, and conducting and composition classes, the time available being too short for Dr. Koussevitzky and his colleagues to carry beginners very far in these fields. But as already stated, the others have their vital parts as members of the Festival Chorus, and all will attend the nine concerts of this season's Festival.

The chorus makes its debut at the opening program of the Festival, singing in the Choros No. 10 of Heitor Villa-Lobos, and subsequently appears in the first concert of each of the other two series. For the remainder of Series A, there's an all-orchestral program Saturday, and a Sunday concert with Gregor Piatigorsky as soloist in the Hindemith Cello Concerto. Series B and C come later.

This Clipping From
BANGOR, ME.
COMMERCIAL

JUL 25 1941

War Relief and USO to Benefit From Gala Berkshire Program

Camp Edwards Band to Join In Tanglewood Manifestation On August 15

Invitations were received here today for the gala benefit at Tanglewood in the Berkshires, to aid the United Service Organizations and British War Relief. The program on August 15, is under the auspices of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival and the Boston Symphony Orchestra with Serge Koussevitzky, conductor.

Two hundred fifty musicians will be selected from the 26 Division bands at Camp Edwards to join in the manifestation to be made at Tanglewood, where the band will bivouack on the shore of Lake Mahkeenac.

The manifestation will have a distinct New England ring, calling everybody from everywhere to join hands with the forces at Tanglewood to make the venture a success. Cooperating in the presentation will be the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky conductor, the Berkshire Music Center faculty and students and the Berkshire Symphonic Festival whose annual concerts by the Boston Symphony will be given during the period from July 31 to August 17.

The governors of all New England States have accepted the invitation of Philip Allen of Walpole, chairman, to serve on the sponsoring committee. In commenting on the event, Mr. Allen declared today:

"The magnitude of the program, the importance of those who are contributing to it and the nature of the two benefitting organizations should make this an even greater occasion than the similar benefit given last year which had an attendance of 10,000 and which it will be remembered gave more than $23,000 to British Relief. I hope every person in New England will feel free and welcome to join us. The program will be enjoyable. The cause is certainly most worthy."

The program which will run from 5:30 p. m. until late in the evening, will open with a band concert by the 26th Division Band of the United States Army. Dr. Koussevitzky will lead the band. There will then be performances by the departments of the Music Center of opera, orchestral, choral and chamber music in the Shed, the Barn, and the two new auditoriums of the Center. A manifestation will follow in which speakers of international importance will appear on the stage in the Shed. Gov. Leverett Saltonstall of Massachusetts has been invited to preside.

At intermission a New England baked bean supper and other refreshments will be served on the spacious lawns of Tanglewood at a moderate price.

The final concert of the day will be presented in the Shed by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Dr. Koussevitzky conducting. Then will come the draw for prizes, band music on the lawn overlooking Lake Mahkeenac, fireworks and the singing of "The Star Spangled Banner."

The co-chairmen for tickets are Mrs. John H. P. Gould of Lenox and New York and Mrs. George W. Edman of Pittsfield. They opened an office in the winter quarters of the Festival at Stockbridge today. Persons wishing to make reservations for tickets or boxes may communicate with them by mail, telephone or telegraph. Additional chairmen are to be announced.

The money for the USO will be used to supply recording machines and records for many of the major camps in the country. Associated in the USO are the YMCA, the YWCA, the National Catholic Community Service, the Salvation Army, the Jewish Welfare Board and the National Travelers' Aid Association.

This Clipping From
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

JUL 28 1941

Autos Needed To Take Children To Tanglewood

Transportation is sought to Saturday morning rehearsals of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood for about 60 of the public school children who have received free tickets from F. Carl Gorman, school music director. Mr. Gorman reports there are that many who have been unable to arrange transportation. He suggests that persons interested in helping work out this problem, fill out their name, address and car capacity on a postal card and mail it to him. He will be at the High School music room daily this week from 1 to 3 to issue tickets to others wishing them.

This Clipping From
WORCESTER, MASS.
GAZETTE

JUL 26 1941

Big Concert And Bean Supper To Be Held Aug. 15

STOCKBRIDGE, July 26 (AP)—With 250 musicians from 26th (Yankee) Division bands participating, nearby Tanglewood will be the scene of a concert benefit for the United Service Organizations and the British War Relief on Aug. 15.

Also taking part in the program will be the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Berkshire Music Center faculty and students. Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the symphony, will lead the soldier-musicians from Camp Edwards.

All New England Governors have accepted invitations to the concert, which will begin at 5.30 p. m. (EDT). A baked bean supper will be served during the intermission.

This Clipping From
ST. ALBANS, VT.
MESSENGER

JUL 26 1941

This Clipping From
MANCHESTER, N. H.
LEADER

JUL 26 1941

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
EVENING UNION

JUL 26 1941

THIS CLIPPING FROM
KEENE, N. H.
SENTINEL

JUL 26 1941

NORTHAMPTON, MASS.
HAMPSHIRE GAZETTE

JUL 26 1941

BIDDEFORD, ME.
JOURNAL

JUL 26 1941

This Clipping From BURLINGTON, VT.
NEWS

JUL 26 1941

THIS CLIPPING FROM
BENNINGTON, VT.
BANNER

JUL 26 1941

This Clipping From
NEW HAVEN, CONN.
REGISTER

JUL 26 1941

This Clipping From
DANBURY, CONN.
NEWS-TIMES

JUL 28 1941

THIS CLIPPING FROM BARRE, VT.
TIMES

JUL 28 1941

This Clipping From
ALBANY, N.Y.
KNICKERBOCKER NEWS

JUL 26 1941

215

'V' Crusade Theme Song To Be Played at Opening, Of Tanglewood Festival

The "V" (for victory) campaign which is sweeping Nazi-dominated Europe will have its echo in the great music shed at Tanglewood, outside Lenox, Mass., when the Berkshire Symphonic Festival gets under way next week.

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, Russian-born conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has ordered a last-minute change in the program placing the Beethoven Fifth Symphony—"theme song" of the "V" crusade—on the opening night next Thursday.

CONDUCTOR of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky, will raise his baton at Lenox, Mass., next Thursday night to open the Tanglewood Festival.

The Beethoven Fifth was to have occupied a later place in the series, and the Third Symphony (known as the "Eroica") of the same composer was scheduled for the initial concert.

The Tanglewood series has been expanded this year to cover three weeks, instead of the previous two. Concerts are given on Thursday and Saturday nights and Sunday afternoons. Several late program alterations were made public today besides the shift of the Beethoven symphonies.

Additional soloists also were announced today. They will include E. Power Biggs Aug. 14 in Handel's Concerto for Organ and Orchestra No. 10 in D minor, and the following from Beethoven's "Missa Solemnis," scheduled for Aug. 14 with the Berkshire Festival Chorus: Rose Dirman, soprano; Hertha Glaz, contralto; John Priebe, tenor; Julius Huehn, bass. Other soloists will be: Gregor Piatigorski, Aug. 3; Leonard Shure, Aug. 9; Ruth Posselt, Aug. 16.

The Berkshire Musical Association Chorus, Horace Hunt director, will appear with the orchestra the opening night of the festival in the Villa Lobos Choros No. 10 and Debussy's Three Nocturnes. The same chorus will appear again Aug. 7 in excerpts from Mozart's Requiem. The excerpts will be: Requiem, Dies Irae, Rex Tremendae, Confutatis, Lacrimosa and Domine Jesu. This chorus is made up of 150 voices from 13 Berkshire communities and has been rehearsing for several months in anticipation of the festival.

There are plenty of tickets available for single concerts, festival trustees stated today.

The revised programs for the festival follow:

This Clipping From PITTSBURGH, PA.
PRESS

JUL 27 1941

* * *

All roads, for summer music enthusiasts, will lead this week to Stockbridge, Mass., where the eighth annual Berkshire Festival featuring the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Serge Koussevitzky will get under way Thursday night. A huge attendance is expected in view of the hectic advance sale.

The opening event will bring to performance Handel's concerto for organ and orchestra, No. 10, in D-minor; Debussy's three nocturnes: Clouds, Festivals and Sirens; Choros No. 10, of Villa-Lobos, the Brazilian composer; and Beethoven's 3rd ("Eroica") symphony.

The second concert of the first series on Aug. 2, will program Mendelssohn's 4th ("Italian") symphony; Beethoven's 3rd "Leonore" overture and Shostakovitch's 5th symphony. Next Sunday afternoon's matinee will feature Schubert's "Unfinished" symphony; Aaron Copland's "Quiet City;" Hindemith's cello concerto with Gregor Piatigorsky as soloist, and Brahms' 4th symphony.

The Festival's "B" concert serie is scheduled for Aug. 7, 9-10; an the "C" series is listed for Au 14, 16-17.

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
SUNDAY UNION
& REPUBLICAN

JUL 27 1941

Changes Announced In Festival Program

Boston Symphony Under Koussevitzky Will Play Beethoven Fifth at Tanglewood On Thursday While the 'Eroica' Will Be Heard in First of B Series Programs

THE Berkshire symphonic festival has announced a change in programs to be played by the Boston Symphony orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky, conducting.

Beethoven's symphony No 5 in C minor has been transferred from the opening concert of series B to the opening concert of the festival on Thursday. Beethoven's symphony No 3 ("Eroica") has been shifted to the second series opening.

Additional soloists were also announced. They will include E. Power Biggs on August 14 in Handel's concerto for organ and orchestra No 10 in D minor, and the following for Beethoven's "Missa Solemnis," scheduled for August 14 with the Berkshire festival chorus: Rose Dirman, soprano; Hertha Glaz, contralto; John Priebe, tenor; Julius Huehn, bass. Other soloists will be: Gregor Piatigorsky, August 3; Leonard Shure, August 9; Ruth Posselt, August 16.

The Berkshire Musical association chorus, Horace Hunt, director, will appear with the orchestra the opening night of the festival in the Villa Lobos Choros No 10 and Debussy's Three Nocturnes. The same chorus will appear again August 7 in excerpts from Mozart's requiem. The excerpts will be: Requiem, Dies Irae, Rex Tremendae, Confutatis, Lacrimosa and Domine Jesu. This chorus is made up of 150 voices from 13 Berkshire communities and has been rehearsing for several months in anticipation of the festival.

There are plenty of tickets available for single concerts, festival trustees stated. The Berkshire Hills Conference Accommodations Bureau at Stockbridge says there are plenty of rooms available within convenient driving distance of Tanglewood. Inquiries for rooms should be addressed to the Accommodations Bureau.

The revised programs for the festival follows:—

Series A
Thursday, July 31, at 8.30 p. m.
Haydn .... Symphony in G major, No 88
Debussy .... Three Nocturnes
(Clouds, Festival, Sirens)
Villa-Lobos .... Choros No 10
(Chorus of the Berkshire Musical Association)
Beethoven .. Symphony No 5, in C minor
Saturday, August 2, at 8.30 p. m.
Mendelssohn .... "Italian" Symphony
Beethoven .. Overture to "Leonore" No 3
Shostakovitch .... Symphony No 5
Sunday, August 3, at 3.30 p. m.
Brahms .... Symphony No 4
Copland .... "Quiet City"
Hindemith .... Violoncello Concerto
(Soloist, Gregor Piatigorsky)
Rimsky-Korsakov ...... Capriccio Espagnol
Series B
(Programs in Commemoration of the 150th Anniversary of Mozart's Death)
Thursday, August 7, at 8.30 p. m.
Mozart .... Requiem (Excerpts)
(Chorus of the Berkshire Musical Association)
Beethoven ...... Symphony No 3 "Eroica"
Saturday, August 9, at 8.30 p. m.
Mozart ...... "Eine Kleine Nachtmusik"
Hanson ..... Symphony No 2 "Romantic"
Brahms, Concerto No 2 in B-flat for Piano
(Soloist, Leonard Shure)
Wagner .... Prelude to "Lohengrin"
Wagner, Prelude to "Die Meistersinger"
Sunday, August 10, at 3.30 p. m.
Mozart .... Symphony in A major (K. 201)
Debussy .... "La Mer"
Berlioz .... Fantastic Symphony
Series C
Thursday, August 14, at 8.30 p. m.
Handel, Concerto for Organ and Orchestra No 10, in D minor
(Soloist, E. Power Biggs)
Beethoven ...., "Missa Solemnis"
Quartet of Soloists Berkshire Festival Chorus
Saturday, August 16, at 8.30 p. m.
Vaughan Williams .... "London" Symphony
Barber .... Violin Concerto
(Soloist, Ruth Posselt)
Wagner .... Prelude to "Parsifal"
Wagner Friday Spell from "Parsifal"
Wagner Overture to "Tannhauser"
Sunday, August 17, at 3.30 p. m.
Sibelius .... Symphony No 7
Prokofieff .... "Lieutenant Kije" Suite
Tchaikovsky .... Symphony No 5

Tanglewood Has Several Additions

When music lovers from the far reaches of the country arrive at Tanglewood for the opening of the eighth annual Berkshire Symphonic festival on the 31st, they may observe a number of interesting additions to Tanglewood's facilities.

Already in use by opera students attending the Berkshire Music Center is the new concert-theater dedicated last Sunday, a new chamber music hall and four studios. The buildings were designed by Eliel Saarinen and his son, Eerio, of the Cranbrook Academy of Art, Bloomfield Hills, Mich. Most unique is the theater which seats 1200. Its design is completely functional. Mr Saarinen was the designer of the festival's shed at Tanglewood.

Audiences at the eighth festival will certainly equal those of last year according to advance reservations. Sales are 20 per cent ahead of last year, the festival trustees stated today. Tickets for single concerts may be obtained at the festival office in Stockbridge.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
JOURNAL AMERICAN

JUL 27 1941

Music Lovers Flock To Berkshire Fete

Boston Symphony to Start Three-Week Program July 31 at Tanglewood

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., July 26.—The usual quiet of the Berkshire Hills has been completely dispelled in anticipation of the greatest influx of visitors to this area in the history of this resort section.

Reason for the unusual activity is the eighth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival, featuring Serge Koussevitzky's Boston Symphony Orchestra, which will open a three-week stand at the Festival's permanent home, Tanglewood, on Thursday evenng, July 31.

Rapidly becoming what native Berkshireites like to refer to as the "Salzburg of America," the Festival has grown from a three-night concert presented in 1934 under a canvas top at the Hanna Farm, Lenox, to one of the nation's foremost musical events.

100,000 EXPECTED.

Last year the nine concerts heard thrice weekly on Thursdays, Saturdays and Sundays, drew a total of 68,839 patrons. But officials believe the average attendance at each concert this year will swell to almost 100,000.

Already a heavy demand for rooming accommodations has been reported by the resort bureaus, and hundreds of private homes in the several towns in the vicinity have become "tourist" places overnight.

Added to the normal population of Stockbridge are 350 students from all over the country who are attending the Festival's Berkshire Music Center, now in its second year.

CHORUS TO ASSIST.

Assisting the orchestra in its first concert Thursday evening, July 31, will be the chorus of the Berkshire Musical Association, which Koussevitzky will conduct in the presentation of Chorus No. 10 by Villa-Lobos.

The Boston Symphony will be heard in Handel's concerto for organ and orchestra, No. 10 in D minor; DéBussy's three nocturnes; and Beethoven's Symphony, No. 3, "Eroisa."

Patrons at this year's Festical will be greeted with two new buildings at Tanglewood, the beautiful Tappan Estate, given as permanent Summer home to the Boston Symphony Orchestra in 1937.

There is a new studio, used mostly for students, and a theatre where opera and plays will be presented.

In addition to its nine concerts, the Festival will present on August 15 a joint British War Relief and USO benefit.

Koussevitzky himself has fallen in love with the Berkshires. Last year he purchased a $40,000 estate here, overlooking the Tanglewood estate, and spends the entire Summer in directing the Berkshire Music Center.

Advanced students at that school will climax the Summer's work with an opportunity to present their work in one of the Festival concerts.

This Clipping From
SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
GAZETTE

ct he to g

JUL 28 1941

Berkshire Lists Change In Programs

The Berkshire Symphonic festival yesterday announced a change in programs to be played by the Boston Symphony orchestra with Serge Koussevitzky conducting. Additional soloists who will take part were also listed. They include E. Power Biggs, organists; Rose Dirman, soprano; Hertha Glaz, contralto; John Priebe, tenor; and Julius Huehn, bass, Aug. 14; Gregor Piatigorsky, Aug. 3; Leonard Shure, Aug. 9, and Ruth Posselt, Aug. 16.

The programs will be as follows:

SYRACUSE, N. Y.
HERALD-AMERICAN

JUL 27 1941

Beethoven on Program July 31

Brahms, Shostakovitch Also Scheduled For Orchestra

The Berkshire Symphonic Festival announces a change in programs to be played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky, conducting at Tanglewood, near Stockbridge, Mass.

Beethoven's Symphony No. 5 in C Minor has been transferred from the opening concert of Series B to the opening concert of the Festival next Thursday night, July 31. Beethoven's Symphony No. 3 "Eroica" has been shifted to the second series opening. Additional soloists also are announced. They will include E. Power Biggs, Aug. 14, in Handel's Concert for Organ and Orchestra No. 10 in D minor, and the following for Beethoven's "Missa Solemnis," scheduled for Aug. 14 with the Berkshire Festival Chorus: Rose Dirman, soprano; Hertha Glaz, contralto; John Priebe, tenor; Julius Huehn, bass. Other soloists will be: Gregor Piatigorsky, Aug. 3; Leonard Shure, Aug. 9; Ruth Posselt, Aug. 16.

The Berkshire Musical Association Chorus, Horace Hunt, director, will appear with the orchestra the opening night of the festival in the Villa Lobos Chorus No. 10 and Debussy's Three Nocturnes. The same chorus will appear again Aug. 7 in excerpts from Mozart's Requiem. The excerpts will be; Requiem, Dies Irae, Rex Tremendae, Confutatis, Lacrimosa and Domine Jesu. This chorus is made up of 150 voices from 13 Berkshire communities and has been rehearsing for several months in anticipation of the festival.

There are tickets available for single concerts. The Berkshire Hills Conference Accommodations Bureau at Stockbridge says there are plenty of rooms available within convenient driving distance of Tanglewood. Inquiries for rooms should be addressed to the Accommodations Bureau.

The program for Thursday night at 8:30 o'clock:

Symphony in G Major, No. 88	Haydn
Three Nocturnes { Clouds Festivals Sirens }	Debussy
Choros No. 10 Chorus of Berkshire Musical Association	Villa-Lobos
Symphony No. 5 in C Minor	Beethoven

For Saturday, Aug. 2, at 8:30 o'clock.

Italian Symphony	Mendelssohn
Overture to "Leonore," No. 3	Beethoven
Symphony No. 5	Shostakovitch

For Sunday, Aug. 3, at 3:30 P.M.

Symphony No. 4	Brahms
Quiet City	Copland
Violoncello Concerto Soloist, Gregor Piatigorsky	Hindemith
Capriccio Espagnol	Rimsky-Korsakov

For U.S.O. and Britain

Two hundred fifty musicians will be selected from the 26th Division bands at Camp Edwards to join in the gala manifestation to be made at Tanglewood Aug. 15 for the benefit of the United Service Organizations and British War Relief. The band will bivouac at Tanglewood, on the shore of Lake Mahkeenac.

The manifestation will have a distinct New England ring, calling everybody from everywhere to join hands with the forces at Tanglewood to make the venture a success. Cooperating in the presentation will be the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky conductor, the Berkshire Music Center faculty and students and the Berkshire Symphonic Festival whose annual concerts by the Boston Symphony will be given during the period from July 31 to Aug. 17.

The governors of all New England States have accepted the invitation of Philip Allen of Walpole, chairman, to serve on the sponsoring committee. In commenting on the event, Mr. Allen declared today:

"The magnitude of the program, the importance of those who are contributing to it and the nature of the two benefitting organizations should make this an even greater occasion than the similar benefit given last year which had an attendance of 10,000 and which it will be remembered gave more than $23,000 to British Relief. I hope every person in New England will feel free and welcome to join us. The program will be enjoyable. The cause is certainly most worthy."

The program, which will run from 5:30 P. M. until late in the evening, will open with a band concert by the 26th Division Band of the United States Army. Dr. Koussevitzky will lead the band. There will then be performances by the departments of the Music Center of opera, orchestral, choral and chamber music in the Shed, the Barn, and the two new auditoriums of the Center. A manifestation will follow in which speakers of international importance will appear on the stage in the Shed. Gov. Leverett Saltonstall of Massachusetts has been invited to preside.

At intermission a New England baked bean supper and other refreshments will be served on the spacious lawns of Tanglewood at a moderate price.

The final concert of the day will be presented in the Shed by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Dr. Koussevitsky presiding. Then will come the draw for prizes, band music on the lawn overlooking Lake Mahkeenac, fireworks and the singing of "The Star-Spangled Banner."

The co-chairmen for tickets are Mrs. John H. P. Gould of Lenox and New York and Mrs. George W. Edman of Pittsfield. They opened an office in the winter quarters of the Festival at Stockbridge today. Persons wishing to make reservations for tickets or boxes may communicate with them by mail, telephone or telegraph. Additional chairmen are to be announced.

The money for the USO will be used to supply recording machines and records for many of the major camps in the country. Associated in the USO are the YMCA, the YWCA, the National Catholic Community Service, the Salvation Army, the Jewish Welfare Board and the National Travelers' Aid Association.

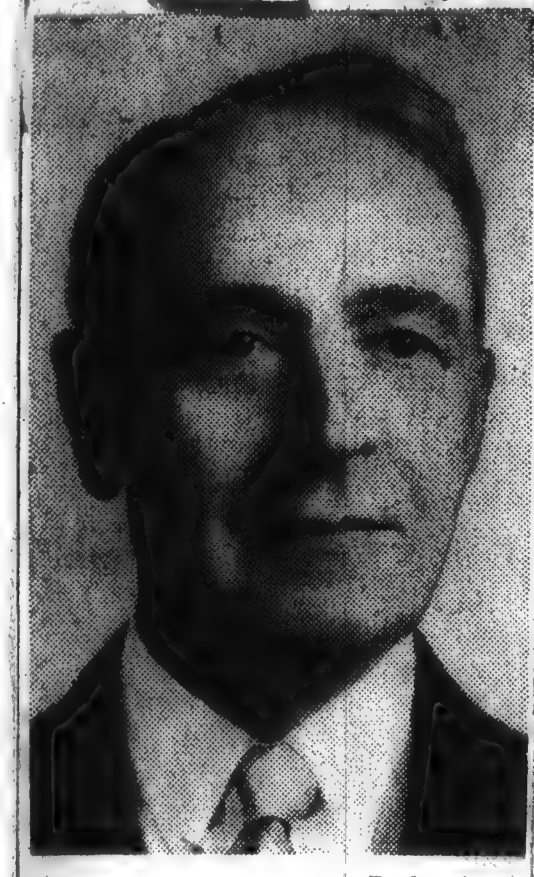
Conductor Has Birthday

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, was 67 yesterday. On Friday he was honored with a birthday party at Tanglewood, Stockbridge, Mass., with faculty and students of the Berkshire Music Center arranging the event.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE

JUL 27 1941

Serge Koussevitzky



Bachrach

Who begins his sixth Berkshire festival season next Thursday

Koussevitzky Opens Series In Berkshires

Eighth Festival Begins Thursday Night; Nine Events Are Scheduled

The eighth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival, and the sixth with the participation of the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky's direction, begins next Thursday night in the Music Shed on the Tanglewood estate, Lenox, Mass. The Berkshire Musical Association Chorus, directed by Horace Hunt, will sing in Debussy's "Sirènes" and Villa-Lobos's tenth "Choros" in the first concert and in excerpts from Mozart's Requiem in the opening concert of Series B on Aug. 7. The nine programs to be conducted by Dr. Koussevitzky are:

Series A

Thursday, July 31, 8:30

Assisting artists, Berkshire Musical Association Chorus
Symphony in G major, No. 88......Haydn
Nocturnes: Nuages, Fetes, Sirenes. Debussy
Choros No. 10................Villa-Lobos
Symphony No. 5, in C minor...Beethoven

Saturday, Aug. 2, 8:30

Symphony No. 4, in A major (Italian) Mendelssohn
Overture to "Leonore," No. 3...Beethoven
Symphony No. 5...........Shostakovitch

Sunday, Aug. 4, 3:30

Soloist, Gregor Piatigorsky, cellist
Symphony No. 4, in E minor......Brahms
Quiet City...................... Copland
Violoncello concerto.......... Hindemith
Capriccio Espagnol..... Rimsky-Korsakoff

Series B

Thursday, Aug. 7, 8:30

Assisting artists, Berkshire Musical Association Chorus
Excerpts from Requiem; Requiem, Dies Irae, Rex Tremendae, Confutatis, Lacrimosa, Domine Jesu.......Mozart
Symphony No. 3, in E flat (Eroica) Beethoven

Saturday, Aug. 9, 8:30

Soloist, Leonard Shure, pianist
Eine kleine Nachtmusik...........Mozart
Symphony No. 2 (Romantic).....Hanson
Piano concerto in B flat major...Brahms
Preludes to "Lohengrin" and "Die Meistersinger" .... Wagner

Sunday, Aug. 10, 3:30

Symphony in A major (K. 201)...Mozart
La Mer......................... Debussy
Fantastic Symphony............. Berlioz

Series C

Thursday, Aug. 14, 8:30

Assisting artists, E. Power Biggs, organist; Berkshire Festival Chorus; Rose Dirman, soprano; Hertha Glaz, contralto; John Priebe, tenor; Julius Huehn, barytone.
Organ concerto No. 10, in E minor. Handel
Missa Solemnis, for orchestra, chorus and soloists................. Beethoven

Saturday, Aug. 16, 8:30

Soloist, Ruth Posselt, violinist
A London Symphony....Vaughan Williams
Violin concerto...........Samuel Barber
Prelude and Good Friday Spell from "Parsifal"; overture to "Tannhaeuser" Wagner

Sunday, Aug. 17, 3:30

Symphony No. 7...................Sibelius
Lieutenant Kije Suite...........Prokofieff
Symphony No. 5, in E minor. .Tchaikovsky

As in the 1940 festival, a benefit program extending from 5:30 in the afternoon until late in the evening will be held at Tanglewood on the last Friday of the festival period, Aug. 15. The proceeds will be divided between the United Service Organizations and British [redacted] Relief, Inc. A special feature will be a concert by 250 musicians of the bands of the 26th Division from Camp Edwards, with Dr. Koussevitzky conducting. The military instrumentalists will camp at Tanglewood on the shore of Lake Mahkeenac.

The next section of the program, Berkshire Music Center on Parade, will illustrate activities of the Center's orchestra, chorus, opera class and instrumental ensembles. Prominent speakers will be heard at the ensuing "Manifestation." After a picnic supper, Dr. Koussevitzky will conduct the Boston Symphony and Berkshire Festival Chorus. All six New England governors have accepted the invitation of Philip Allen, chairman of the event, to serve on the sponsoring committee.

The new theater at Tanglewood, which seats 1,200, is already in use by students at the Center. Other new facilities for the Center which were opened this month are a new chamber music hall and four studios. These buildings were designed by Eliel Saarinen, the designer of the Music Shed, and his son, Eerio.

Although the subscription quota was filled several weeks ago, plenty of tickets are still available for single concerts, and may be obtained in advance at the Berkshire Symphonic Festival office at Stockbridge, Mass., or at the festival's New York office at 113 West Fifty-seventh Street. Rooms are still available within convenient driving distance of Tanglewood. Inquiries for rooms should be addressed to the Berkshire Hills Accommodations Bureau at Stockbridge.

The first two festivals of this series were held under Henry Hadley's direction in 1934 and 1935. The Boston Symphony's affiliation with the festival began in 1936. In 1937, the Tanglewood estate was donated by Mrs. Gorham Brooks, of Boston, and the quota of concerts raised from three to six. The Music Shed was opened in 1938.

This Clipping From

DANBURY, CONN.
NEWS-TIMES

JUL 29 1941

NEW HAVEN, CONN.
REGISTER

JUL 27 1941

Tanglewood Concerts Will Begin This Week

Berkshire Symphonic Festival to Run Three Weeks—Chamber Music Again Heard in the Hills — Samuel Yaffee Makes Recordings

By H. EARLE JOHNSON

PROGRAMS for the Berkshire Symphonic Festival show the usual careful selection, embodying as they do the acknowledged peaks of symphonic literature and incorporating modern and contemporary works, some of them by native American composers. Series 'A' begins this week Thursday at "Tanglewood," with the remaining two of the series on Saturday evening and Sunday afternoon. So the Festival will run for three consecutive weeks. Tickets for entire series are all subscribed, but tickets for individual concerts, including the entire nine, are available by mail or in person, and general admission is provided for those who arrive late, or, perchance, for those who prefer to sit on the grounds outside the Shed where the acoustics are all that can be asked for. Dr. Koussevitsky directs all concerts; the chorus of the Berkshi[redacted]ssociation sings on Thursday and Gregor Piatigorsky, violoncellist, plays on Sunday.

Thursday at 8:30 o'clock

Handel—Concerto for Organ and Orchestra, No. 10
Debussy—Three Nocturnes (Clouds-Festivals-Sirens)
Villa-Lobos—Chorus No. 10
Beethoven — Symphony No. 3, 'Eroica'

Saturday at 8:30 o'clock

Mendelssohn—"Italian" Symphony
Beethoven—Overture to "Leonore" No. 3
Shostakovitch—Symphony No. 5

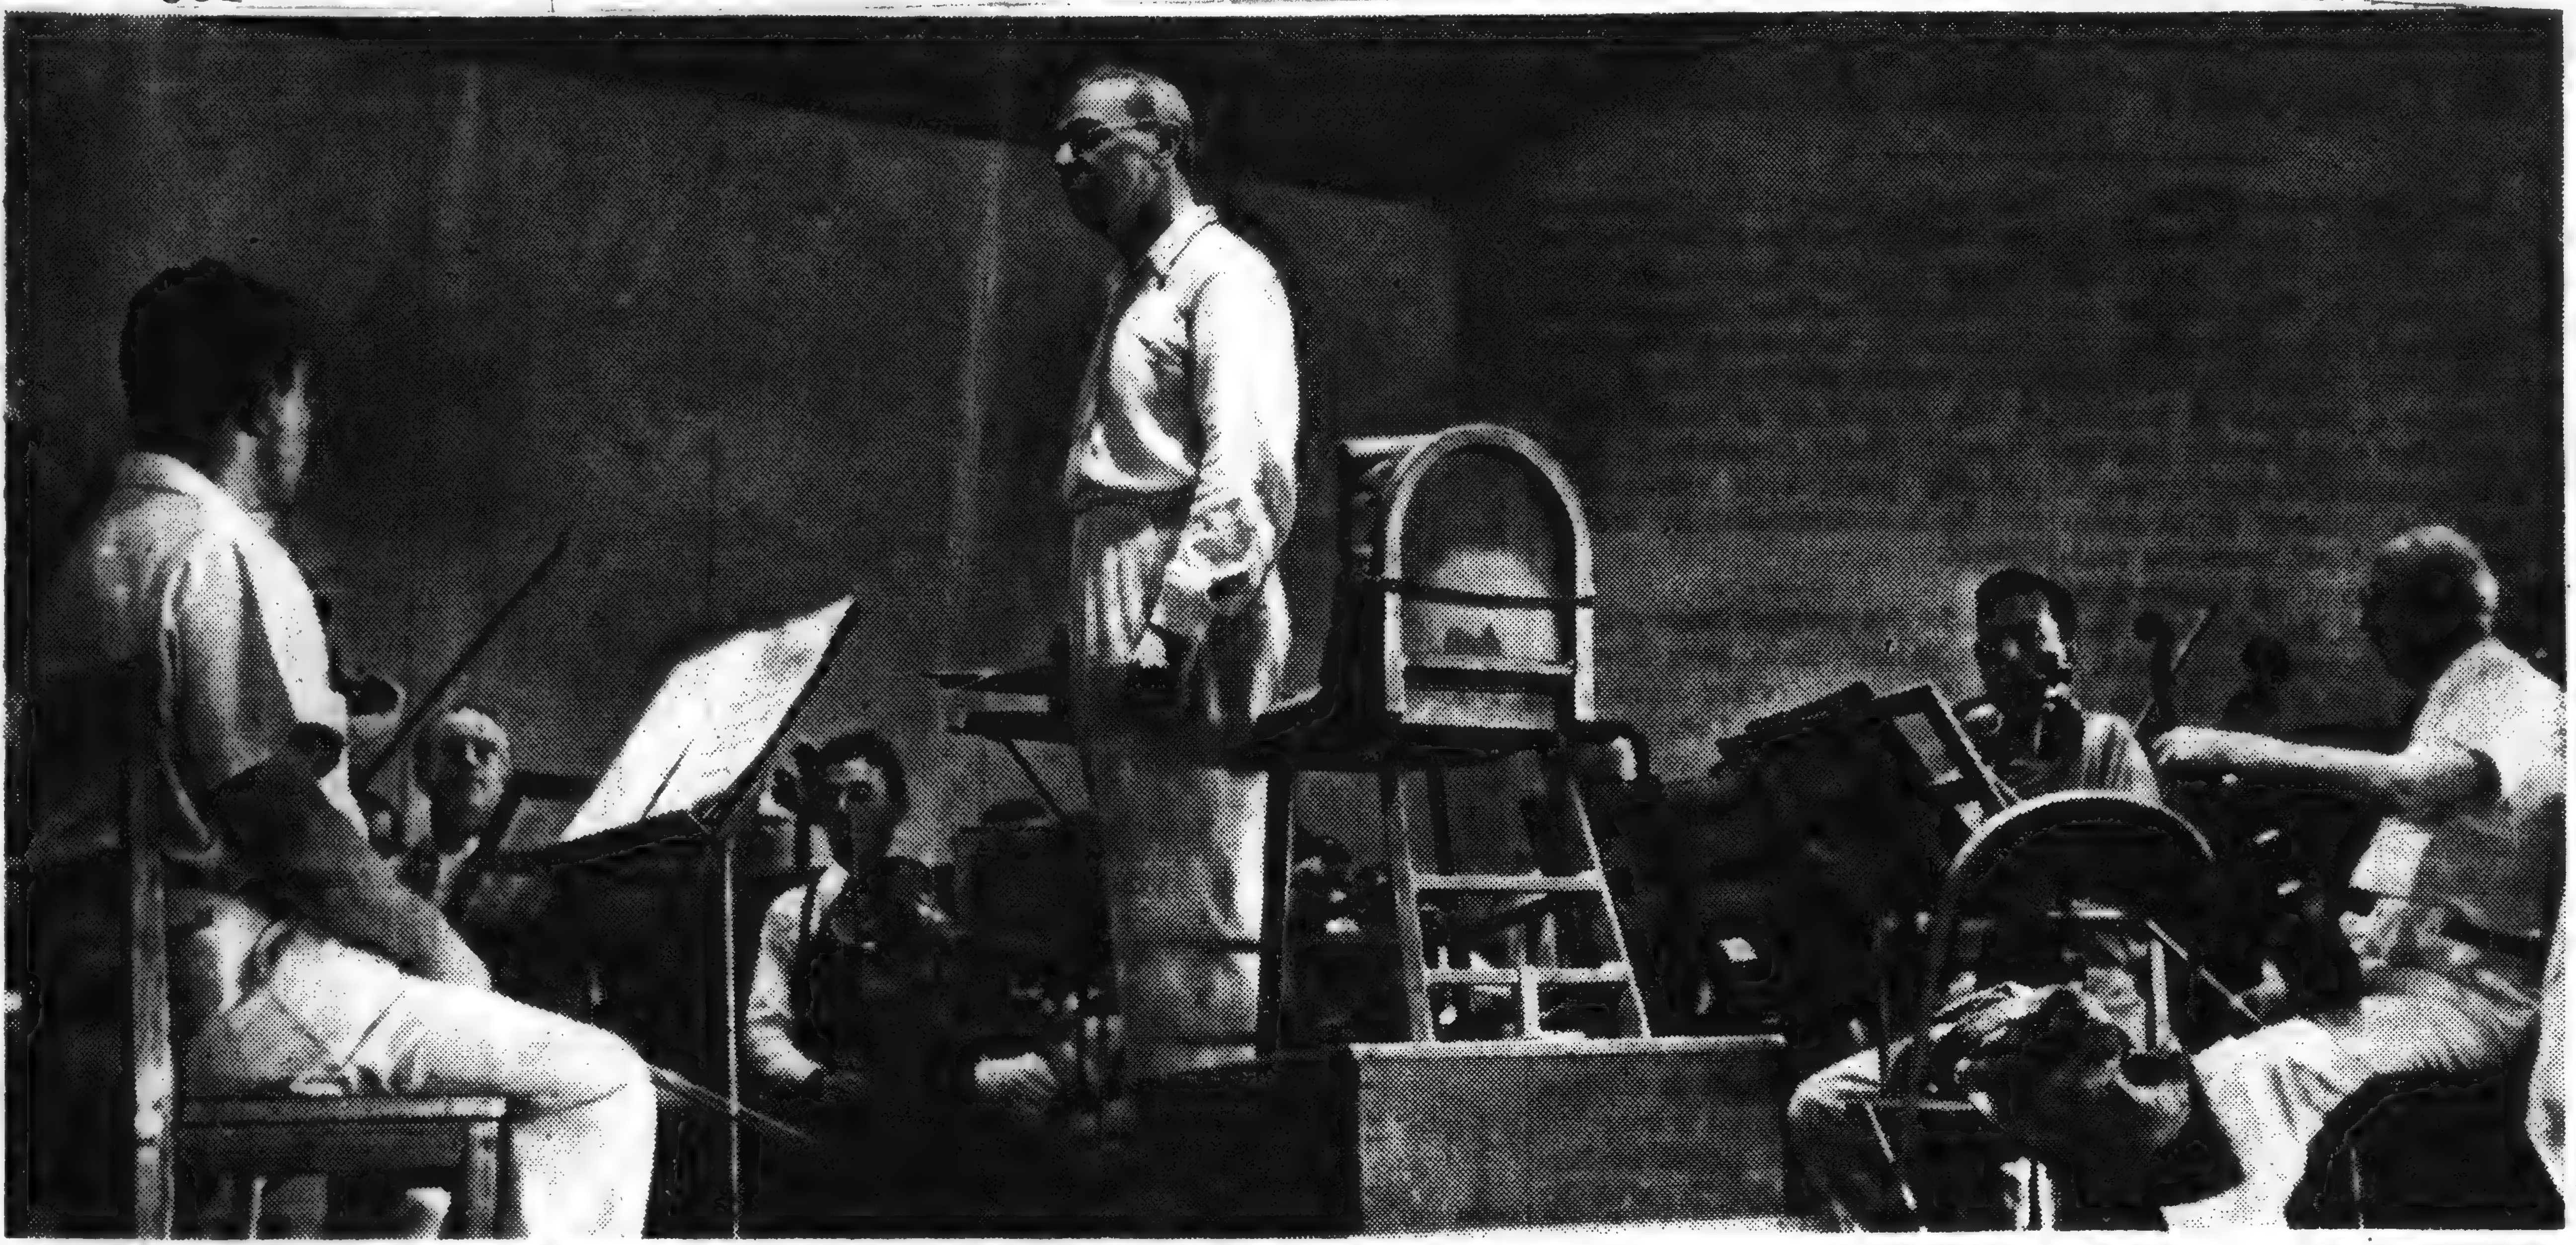
Sunday at 3:30 o'clock

Schubert—"Unfinished" Symphony
Copland—"Quiet City"
Hindemith—Violoncello Concerto
Brahms—Symphony No. 4

In this manner America's greatest festival will get under way. In two short years a new and splendid idea has taken abundant root in the giant hills of New England, secure in both accomplishment and promise to stand comparison with the great festivals of the world. Programs for the Series 'B' include a Mozart Symphony, selections from the same composer's "Requiem," and Beethoven's Fifth Symphony for Thursday, August 7, Mozart's "Eine Kleine Nachtmusik," Hanson's "Romantic" Symphony, Brahms' Concerto No. 2, and two selections from Wagner on Saturday, another Mozart symphony, Debussy's "La Mer," and Berlioz' "Fantastic Symphony" on Sunday. Leonard Shure, Boston pianist, is soloist in the Brahms. Full programs will appear in this column each week.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES

JUL 27 1941



Eric Schaal-Pix

Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra rehearse for the forthcoming Berkshire Festival, which begins its eighth annual series of concerts Thursday.

Eric Schaal-Pix

Since the Music Shed at Tanglewood is unable to accommodate the huge audiences that flock to the Berkshire Symphonic Festival each year, many people listen from the lawn just outside the hall. The bottom picture is a view of the audience inside the Music Shed.

This Clipping From
HACKENSACK, N. J.
BERGEN-RECORD

JUL 30 1941

Music News And Views

By ROGER S. VREELAND

Wagner and Beethoven will lead the eighth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival which starts tomorrow night at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky. There will be nine concerts, in three series this year the longest Festival ever held.

The Berkshire Festival has developed into the most important cultural activity of its kind in America, ranking only with the European Salzburg Festival, which of course has been cast out of the picture this year by the war. The Tanglewood festival will be held on the Thursdays. Saturdays, and Sundays of three successive weeks, starting tomorrow. Sunday concerts are in the afternoon; the others at night. And all are held in the famous fan-shaped shed on the historic Tanglewood estate, where Hawthorne among other greats of American literature once romaed and wrote.

Five Wagner compositions will be performed, two on August 9, the Prelude to "Lohengrin" and the Prelude to "Die Meistersinger"; and three on August 16, the Prelude to "Parsifal", Good Friday Spell from "Parsifal", and overture to "Tannhauser". Four Beethoven numbers will be neard, the Fifth Symphony in C minor, tomorrow night; Overture to "Leonore" No. 3, Saturday night; Symphony No. 3, August 7, and the "Missa Solemnis", August 14.

Mozart will be heard three times, all in the second series, which will commemorate the 150th anniversary of his death. Excerpts from the Requiem will be heard August 7, with the Chorus of Berkshire Musical Association; "Eine Kleine Nachtmusik", August 9. and Symphony in A major (K. 201), August 10. Composers who will be heard twice are Debussy and Brahms.

Contemporary composers will be given their usual prominence. Americans among the mwill be Aaron Copland, "Quiet City"; Howard Hanson, Symphony No. 2, "Romantic"; Samuel Barber, Violin Concerto, with Ruth Posselt as soloist, and Prokofieff, "Lieutenant Kije" Suite. Sibelius and Tschaikowsky will be heard only once each, in the last concert, in Symphonies 7 and 5 respectively. Classicals to be heard besides the Beethoven and Mozart are Haydn and Handel.

* * *

The Bergen County Oratorio Society, under the direction of Fred Semmens, gave its annual guest performance at the Camp of the Masonic Club of Haverstraw Sunday night. The Society sang selections from Mozart's "Requiem". Ina W. Fillmore, the society's accompanist, played numbers from "Elijah", and also a Beethoven number.

219

This Clipping From
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
JOURNAL
JUN 29 1941

Prospects Are Bright for Annual Symphony Season in Berkshires

Number of Reservations for Music Festival at Tanglewood, Mass., Reported to Be About a Month in Advance of 1940.

WITH the number of reservations about a month in advance of 1940, "encouraging response" for subscriptions for the eighth annual season, presenting the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky, is reported by the Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Tanglewood, Mass.

Nine concerts will be given on Thursday and Saturday evenings and Sunday matinees between July 31 and August 17.

Music lovers planning attendance at the Festival are urged to communicate at once with the Berkshire Hills Conference at the Courthouse in Pittsfield for room reservations. Hotels in the immediate vicinity of Tanglewood are already booked nearly to capacity and rooms in private homes in the immediate vicinity are also heavily reserved. Accommodations are obtainable, however, in towns and cities within a radius of 50 miles.

Modern Works Prominent

Works by the contemporary composers, Sibelius, Vaughan, Williams, Barber, Piston, Hindemith, Shostakovitch, Villa Lobos, Copland, and Hanson are included in this year's program. There will be three Mozart works the second week of the Festival in commemoration of the 150th anniversary of the composer's death. The much discussed Symphony No. 5, by Shostakovitch will be heard in the first series of concerts, which will be given on July 31st and August 2nd and 3rd. The eminent Brazilian composer, Villa Lobos, will present his Chorus No. 10, also in the first series.

Of special interest to music students is the announcement that Piston, Hindemith, Copland and Hanson are listed either as members of the faculty or lecturers at the Berkshire Music Centre, which will be operated for its second year at Tanglewood by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, for six weeks starting the first week in July and ending with the final Festival concert.

Music Shed Seats 6000

Tanglewood, between Stockbridge and Lenox, was given to the Boston orchestra as a permanent home for the Festival in 1937 by Mrs. Gorham Brooks of Brookline, a member of the Festival's board of trustees. The estate received its name from the fact that it was in the little red house on a site now marked by a tablet that Nathaniel Hawthorne first told his "Tanglewood Tales" and wrote "The House of the Seven Gables."

Subscriptions were received from throughout the nation to build the Music Shed, which seats 6000 and has standing room in the colonnade for 3000 more. The total attendance last year for nine econcerts and three Saturday morning rehearsals was nearly 90,000.

This Clipping From
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE
JUL 30 1941

Music Lovers Arriving

Music lovers planning to attend the first concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood tomorrow night began to arrive in Lenox yesterday as well as in the surrounding towns, but the greatest number is booked for tonight and tomorrow.

This Clipping From
BRIDGEPORT, CONN.
TIMES-STAR
JUL 29 1941

The Music Box

BY NANCY S. HENDRICK

The Berkshire Symphonic Festival inaugurates its eighth season (the sixth with the Boston Symphony Orchestra) at "Tanglewood," in Lenox, Mass., this Thursday. For three consecutive weeks there will be concerts on Thursday and Saturday evenings and Sunday afternoons, (each three comprising a series). Dr. Serge Koussevitzky is of course the conductor, the Berkshire Musical Association will sing on Thursday and Gregor Piatigorsky, violincellist, will be the soloist Sunday.

SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY

Scene of the concerts is the large, almost new Music Shed, on the grounds of "Tanglewood." There is also "sitting room" on the grounds outside the shed. The listening is good anywhere.

Tickets for each one of the three series, in entirety, are already sold-out, but there are plenty of seats available for each of the nine concerts. You can buy your tickets ahead by mail, but if you go up for a concert or two, you won't be disappointed in getting seats. There is even a general admission for late-comers or ground sitters.

Evening concerts begin at 8:30 o'clock. On Sunday afternoons the time is 3:30. This week's programs for this festival which has become a full-fledged institution are listed below:

Thursday

Handel..Concerto for Organ and Orch.
Debussy .... Three Nocturnes
  Clouds
  Festivals
  Sirens
Villa-Lobos .... Chorus No. 10
Beethoven .. Symphony No. 3, "Eroica"

Saturday

Mendelssohn ....."Italian" Symphony
Beethoven.Overture to "Leonore," No. 3
Shostakovitch .... Symphony No. 5

Sunday

Schubert ..... "Unfinished" Symphony
Copland .... "Quiet City"
Hindemith ...... Violincello Concerto
Brahms .... Symphony No. 4

As can be seen there is a nice balance in these programs between the so-called classic and modern schools, the contemporary and the historic. The great ones, the all-and old-familiars — Handel, Beethoven and Brahms—are juxtaposed with Debussy, Shostakovitch and Hindemith. Modern American is represented. Programs for the succeeding weeks are equally all-encompassing.

This Clipping From
NEWARK, N. J.
STAR-LEDGER
JUL 30 1941

BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL OPENS TOMORROW

Several hundred Jersey music lovers are making plans to leave for the Berkshire Symphonic Festival in Stockbridge, Mass., which begins tomorrow night. The Boston Symphony Orchestra will perform in a series of three week-end concerts under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky.

The program for the first concerts include works by Haydn, Beethoven, Mendelssohn and Brahms, with famed 'cellist Gregor Piarigorsky soloist Sunday afternoon in the Hindemuth concerto.

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS
JUL 31 1941

BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL WILL OPEN TONIGHT AT TANGLEWOOD SHED

Stockbridge, July 31—With the now politically significant Fifth symphony of Beethoven as the principal offering, the eighth annual Berkshire symphonic festival will open tonight at Tanglewood with a concert by Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston symphony orchestra. The Beethoven symphony was moved from the second series to the opening program of the nine concerts at the Tanglewood shed.

At least 6000 persons are expected and all the 80 boxes have been sold. The program tonight at 8.30 will open with the Haydn Symphony in G major, number 88. With the aid of the Berkshire Musical association chorus, Horace Hunt director, the orchestra will present the three Debussy nocturnes, "Clouds," "Festivals" and "Sirens" and the "Choros number 10" of the Brazilian composer, Heitor Villa-Lobos. This series also includes concerts Saturday at 8.30 and Sunday at 3.30.

A gala benefit of the United Service organizations is planned at 5.30 on August 15.

This Clipping From
HARTFORD, CONN.
COURANT
JUL 30 1941

Berkshire Music Festival Program Undergoes Change

Beethoven's Fifth Will Be Opening Concert; New Soloists Added

Significantly, whether in keeping with the "V" campaign or not, the Berkshire Symphonic Festival announces a change in programs to be played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, at "Tanglewood," between Stockbridge and Lenox, Mass., beginning Thursday, July 31.

Beethoven's Fifth Symphony in C Minor has been transferred from the opening concert of Series B, to the opening concert of the whole festival. The "Eroica," originally scheduled for Thursday, will be played on August 7.

Additional soloists are also announced. They will include E. Power Biggs in Handel's Concerto for Organ and Orchestra, No. 10, in D Minor, and the following for Beethoven's "Missa Solemnis", scheduled for August 14, with the Berkshire Festival Chorus:

Rose Dirman, soprano; Hertha Glaz, contralto; John Priebe, tenor, and Julius Huehn, bass.

Other soloists will be Gregor Piatigorsky, 'cellist, August 3, Leonard Shure, pianist, August 9, and Ruth Posselt, August 16.

The Berkshire Musical Association Chorus, Horace Hunt directing, will appear with the orchestra on the opening night of the festival, in the Villa-Lobos Choros, No. 10, and Debussy's "Three Nocturnes." The same chorus will appear again on August 7 in excerpts from Mozart's Requiem, including the "Dies Irae," "Rex Tremendae," "Confutatis," "Lacrimosa" and "Domine Jesu." This chorus is made up of 150 voices from Berkshire communities.

There are plenty of tickets left for single concerts, and plenty of rooms available within convenient driving distance, officials of the festival say.

The complete program of the festival follows:

Thursday, July 31, 8:30 p. m.—Haydn, Symphony in G Major, No. 88; Debussy, "Three Nocturnes" (Clouds — Festivals — Sirens), and Villa-Lobos, Choros No. 10, with Berkshire Musical Association chorus; Beethoven, Symphony No. 5 in C Minor.

Saturday, August 2, 8:30 p. m.—Mendelssohn, "Italian" Symphony; Beethoven, Overture to "Leonore," No. 3; Shostakovitch, Symphony No. 5.

Sunday, August 3, 3:30 p. m.—Brahms, Symphony No. 4; Copland, "Quiet City"; Hindemith, Violoncello Concerto, soloist, Gregor Piatigorsky; Rimsky-Korsakov, "Capriccio Espagnol."

Series B.

Programs in commemoration of the one hundred and fiftieth anniversary of Mozart's death:

Thursday, August 7, 8:30 p. m.—Mozart, Requiem (excerpts), chorus of the Berkshire Musical Association; Beethoven, Symphony No. 3, "Eroica."

Saturday, August 9, 8:30 p. m.—Mozart, "Eine Kleine Nachtmusik"; Hanson, Symphony No. 2, "Romantic"; Brahms, Concerto No. 2 in B Flat, Leonard Shure, pianist; Preludes to "Lohengrin," "Meistersinger," Wagner.

Sunday, August 10, 3:30 p. m.—Mozart, Symphony in A Major, (K. 201); Debussy, "La Mer"; Berlioz, "Fantastic" Symphony.

Series C.

Thursday, August 14, 8:30 p. m.—Handel, Concerto for Organ and Orchestra, No. 10 in D Minor, soloist E. Power Biggs; Beethoven, "Missa Solemnis," Berkshire Festival Chorus and quartet of soloists.

Saturday, August 16, 8:30 p. m.—Vaughn Williams, "London" Symphony; Barber, Violin Concerto, soloist, Ruth Posselt; Prelude to "Parsifal," "Good Friday Spell" from "Parsifal," and Overture to "Tannhauser," Wagner.

Sunday, August 17, 3:30 p. m.—Sibelius, Symphony No. 7; Prokofieff, "Lieutenant Kije" Suite, and Tschaikowsky, Symphony No. 5.

This Clipping From
WORCESTER, MASS.
GAZETTE
JUL 31 1941

TANGLEWOOD CONCERTS

STOCKBRIDGE, July 31 (UP)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra, directed by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, will open its eighth annual symphonic festival at "Tanglewood" tonight before about six thousand visitors who have taxed accommodations here and in nearby towns. The opening program by the orchestra and the Berkshire Musical Association Chorus, directed by Horace Hunt, is comprised of Beethoven's Symphony No. 5, Haydn's Symphony in G Major, the "Three Nocturnes" by Debussy, and the Villa Lobos Chorus No. 10.

This Clipping From
HOLYOKE, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT TELEGRAM
JUL 31 1941

22

This Clipping From
WATERBURY, CONN.
REPUBLICAN
JUN 30 1941

OVERTONES

This coming week, the largest of all musical centers in this country, opens a second season. At the time of its inauguration last year, the Berkshire Music Center was acclaimed the most expansive and ambitious summer school in the world today, and this despite the Berkshire Symphonic Festival which has been in effect for some years.

Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra and director of the center, asserted at the opening of last year's session, "We want to be modest in our promises, but by no means do we want to be modest in our aspirations". This simple statement underlines the entire premise of the Center.

Tanglewood, the estate of Mrs. Gorham Brooks, located midway between Lenox and Stockbridge, Massachusetts, was donated by its owner to the Boston Symphony orchestra three years ago. Until that time, Dr. Koussevitsky's dream of founding a large musical center was unmaterialized, but with the gift of vast grounds and a permanent location on which to erect the necessary buildings for housing the many musical activities, which form a part of a true musical center, that dream became reality.

Although the Berkshire Music Center is by no means the only musical center operating in the Berkshire hills, it is the most unusual one. It is divided into two large sections, the Institute for advanced study, and the Academy of music and culture. Within these two sections, some three hundred students live and work in music for six weeks. While a great many of these students are of college age, the majority are active in professional fields of music. Although the latter is not required the intercharge of ideas and practices among those who are already trained and working in various capacities in towns and cities, not only in the Americas, but in many of the European countries, lends added stimulus to the offerings and life of the Center.

The opera department, theoretically a division of the Institute, is in reality a center within itself. Within recent years, the need for tangible development of native singers and native opera has been stressed by critics and laymen alike. In this department, students of recognized vocal ability are afforded an opportunity to study operatic roles, to learn operatic stage technique and to adjust musical gifts to stringent dramatic demands. Under the expert coaching of Herbert Graf, stage director of the Metropolitan Opera company, many scenes from standard operatic repetoire were studied, rehearsed and presented before audiences. From this training, many of those who participated last season were found in a position to apply for auditions pertinent to positions with the Metropolitan.

This season finds the operatic department with a complete theater in which to work. Somewhat handicapped last year with only a stage shell, the addition of sufficient backstage room should widely effect the professional caliber of presentations.

The massive Music Shed, which was built to house the thousands who attend the three weeks of the Festival concerts, stands out conspicuously on the Tanglewood grounds. Although the nine Boston Symphony concerts, which form the Festival, are the prime purpose of the shed, the large, yellow, conical structure is used daily during the summer session for rehearsals of the Institute symphony orchestra, coaching of the selected conducting students of Dr. Koussevitsky and mass meetings of the student body for lectures and addresses.

The main house, formerly the residence of Mrs. Brooks, is now used for offices, studios and special class rooms. In the midst of the many new buildings on the grounds, this large, grey home seems the only tie to the private estate of yesterday. Surfacely, no changes have been made in this home, except for the addition of a small music shop which may be found in the back. A short tour, however, would find the kitchen being used as a laboratory for conductors by aid of a recording machine, the bedrooms turned into practice studios, and the formal downstairs parlors fully equipped with typewriters, desks, blackboards and a large supply of grand pianos.

Connecting the formal English gardens, a new chamber music auditorium may now be seen, an addition of this season. Built in the rustic mode which similates the opera theater, the small and intimate hall, opening onto the Stockbridge Bowl, is covered sufficiently to form a protection from rain and thaunder showers and afford excellent acoustical properties without giving one a feeling of being inside.

Over the crest of the hill which rolls down to the lake, a small red barn may be found, and here is housed the major activities of the Academy. Although the barn has been renovated somewhat to meet the needs of the large sessions which meet there regularly morning, noon and night, it still maintains its informal countryside air. Even the neighboring pastures of cows have not been disturbed.

During the three weeks which precede the Festival, a quiet and studious group may be seen all over the Tanglewood grounds, but with the advent of the thousands who attend the Festival concerts, not only the Tanglewood estate, but the surrounding villages become a seething mass of cars and people. The grounds become spotted with tents for every purpose attendant to a festival, soft drinks, sandwiches, hot plates, telegraph service, first aid, and souvenirs.

Over it all, center and festival alike, is the towering figure of one of the world's greatest conductors. Dr. Koussevitsky's vision, leadership, enthusiasm and endless vitality form the main pivot of the center's life and being. Under him, a distinguished faculty and managerial board add further prestige.

In days as this, so great an art center takes on double importance. It has been said that music is the highest expression of man's emotions and one of the highest expressions of man's intellect. It is gratifying that, in our country which stands for the ultimate in man's freedom and democratic way of life, such a center could be born and continued despite the horrors of war which surround it.

CELINE KOESTER, MUS. B.

This Clipping From
N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT
JUL 31 1941

MUSIC FESTIVAL TO OPEN TONIGHT

6,000 Expected at Initial Concert

EIGHTH SEASON

All Boxes, Numbering 80, Have Been Sold for First Two Series—"Sell Out" Anticipated.

More than 6,000 persons are expected at the opening concert by the Boston Symphonic orchestra at Tanglewood, Stockbridge, tonight to usher in the eighth season of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival.

Indications this morning were that every seat in the huge shed will be sold before concert time. All boxes, of which there are 80, have been sold for the first two series and yesterday only eight boxes remained for the final series.

Among those who will attend the opening concert this evening will be Gov. and Mrs. Herbert H. Lehman of New York, Lowell Thomas, Cole Porter of New York and Williamstown, Mrs. Edward S. Harkness, Mrs. Alvan T. Fuller and Mrs. Edward Bok. Gov. Leverett Saltonstall will attend later concerts.

Box holders include Mrs. Donald Ford of Williamstown, Series A, B, and C; Mrs. E. Parmalee Prentice of Williamstown, Series A; Professor Philip Marshall Brown of Williamstown, Series A and B; Mrs. Cole Porter of Williamstown, Series B and C; and Mrs. Edward Davis of North Adams, Series A and C.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM
JUL 30 1941

SOCIETY TODAY

Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith Completes Music Festival Plans

By MARGARET FOLLIN EICKS.

Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith made a flying visit from Stockbridge to her Sutton Place South apartment yesterday to transact a few last-minute details of the annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival of which she is founder and president. Dr. Serge Koussevitzky will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in t[illegible]ert of the season tomorrow night at Tanglewood, vast and beautiful Lenox estate given by Mrs. Gorham Brooks as a permanent home for the Music Center.

Miss Robinson Smith, who is a genius at raising funds to support the cultural ventures which interest her, motored back to Stockbridge in time to receive her week-end guests at The Residence, her palatial log cabin. "We had to give a log cabin a highfalutin' name," she explains.

Members of the party include the hostess' mother, Mrs. Charles Robinson Smith, Mrs. Montgomery Hare, Miss Miriam K. Oliver, Mrs. Corning Townsend of Buffalo, Bryn Strandenaes, Malcolm Vaughan, William Miles, director of the Stockbridge Theater, and Stuart Montgomery of Boston. Miss Robinson Smith's guests will occupy her box in the great concert hall at Tanglewood. She will also entertain informally in their honor, between concerts.

"The festival will be bigger and better than ever," said Miss Smith, "with programs particularly well chosen."

A new trustee, Mrs. Myron C. Taylor, will attend this year for the first time with her husband, former Minister to the Vatican.

Mrs. Carlos M. de Heredia of Wheatleigh, Lenox, is another New Yorker enormously interested in the success of the festival. A member of the board of directors, she was acting president one year when Miss Robinson Smith made an unexpected trip to Europe. A regular commuter before the war, the latter could count well over 60 voyages.

All of the big estates in the Berkshires will have a full quota of house guests for the three week ends of concerts. Dr. Koussevitzky's estate, acquired last year, is high in the hills overlooking Tanglewood with a superb view of the mountains and lake. Here he and Mme Koussevitzky are at home to their friends and distinguished visitors the conductor greeting them with his characteristic and charming gesture, a kiss on each cheek.

* * *

Looking for a House in Washington.

John Hay (Jock) Whitney, whose business ventures kept him from attending the opening of Saratoga, is one of the many celebrities house hunting in Washington. He has now turned his efforts towards national defense, working with Nelson Rockefeller's committee.

Jock has his eye on two houses, hopes to be settled in one of them by Sept. 1. He may make the spacious red brick residence of Franklin Mott Gunther on N St. his abode. It boasts a lovely backyard garden and plenty of atmosphere—Admiral Decatur once lived in it. Another house on the preferred list is the fashionable Kalorama Rd. house of Dwight Davis which has been occupied in the past by Mr. Davis' daughter, Mrs. Roger Makins.

Major C. M. Drury, assistant military attache of the Canadian Legation, and Mrs. Drury are making the house their headquarters for the summer months, along with blond Miss Craig McGeachy, who is on the British Embassy staff.

Washington society is definitely looking forward to Jock's addition to its ranks, hoping he'll bring a touch of Hollywood with him. As head of the motion picture section of Mr. Rockefeller's committee, he recently returned from Mexico City and is now involved in forming a better understanding between North and South America by steering clear of pictures which might offend the latter.

The Baron and Baroness Stackelberg and her aunt, Mrs. Martin Vogel, the former Lillie Lewisohn, have leased Representative and Mrs. James Wadsworth's Woodland Drive house in Washington. Painters, carpenters and interior decorators are already busy doing over the place, which is surrounded by spacious grounds studded with fine old trees.

Mr. and Mrs. Martin Vogel, Jr., who are summering on Long Island, expect to spend a good deal of time at the newly leased house of Mr. Vogel's mother and a suite is being arranged for the former Miss Peggy Townsend and her husband. They were married March 7 in Camden, S. C.

* * *

Burns Mar His Sports Schedule.

William Woods Plankinton is miserable at the moment, what with burns on his back to spoil his summer sports schedule.

It happened this way. Bill was driving over from the Atlantic Beach Club to attend John Perona's annual picnic at the Westchester Bath Club when the radiator cap of the car which pulls his enormous trailer blew off. Steam and hot water did the rest and he sat through the barbecue supper with a doctor as constant companion.

Woolworth Donahue and his friend, Clemente Ballen, chartered a plane at Riverhead to fly to the picnic given by El Morocco's owner. Other guests arriving by more usual locomotion included the Ted Bassetts, the Warren Johnsons (she is Adelaide Moffett's sister), and the Bradley Dressers, who hail from Southampton.

Rain descended in the middle of the party, so beach umbrellas were taken from the edge of the swimming pool to protect the women's gowns. There was no unanimity in costumes. Mrs. Johnson wore a black satin evening gown and Mrs. Dresser looked very well indeed in pastel country clothes. South American millionaire Macoco and his pal, Pepino, supplied the laughs of the evening.

221

MILLERTON, N.Y
NEWS
7/31/41

Band of 250 Will Play At Tanglewood

Koussevitzky To Conduct Army Players During Manifestation

Two hundred and fifty musicians will be selected from the 26th Division bands at Camp Edwards to join in the manifestation to be made at Tanglewood on Aug. 15 for the benefit of the United Service Organizations and British War Relief. The band will bivouac at Tanglewood, on the shore of Lake Mahkeenac.

The manifestation will have a distinct New England ring, calling everybody from everywhere to join hands with the forces at Tanglewood to make the venture a success. Co-operating in the presentation will be the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor, the Berkshire Music Center faculty and students, and the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, whose annual concerts by the Boston Symphony will be given during the period from July 31 to Aug. 17.

The governors of all New England States have eccepted the invitation of Phillip Allen, of Walpole, chairman, to serve on the sponsoring committee. In commenting on the event, Mr. Allen declared today:

"The magnitude of the program, the importance of those who are contributing to it, and the nature of the two benefiting organizations should make this an even greater occasion than the similar benefit given last year, which had an attendance of 10,000 and which, it will be remembered, gave more than $23,000 to British Relief. I hope every person in New England will feel free and welcome to join us. The program will be enjoyable. The cause is certainly most worthy."

The program, which will run from 5:30 p. m. until late in the evening, will open with a band concert by the 26th Division Band of the United States Army. Dr. Koussevitzky will lead the band. There will then be performances by the departments of the Music Center of opera, orchestra, choral, and chamber music in the shed, the barn, and the two new auditoriums of the center. A manifestation will follow, in which speakers of international importance will appear on the stage in the shed. Gov. Leverett Saltonstall of Massachusetts has been invited to preside. At intermission, a New England baked-bean supper and other refreshments will be served on the spacious lawns of Tanglewood at a moderate price.

The final concert of the day will be presented in the shed by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Dr. Koussevitzky conducting. Then will come the draw for prizes, band music on the lawn overlooking Lake Mahkeenac, fireworks, and the singing of "The Star Spangled Banner."

The co-chairmen for tickets are Mrs. John H. P. Gould, of Lenox and New York City, and Mrs. George W. Edman, of Pittsfield. They opened an office in the winter quarters of the festival at Stockbridge last Saturday. Persons wishing to make reservations for tickets or boxes may communicate with them by mail, telephone, or telegraph. Additional chairmen are to be announced.

The money for the USO will be used to supply recording machines and records for many of the major camps in the country. Associated in the USO are the YMCA, the YWCA, the National Catholic Community Service, the Salvation Army, the Jewish Welfare Board, and the National Travelers' Aid Association.

THIS CLIPPING FROM

MILLERTON, N.Y
NEWS
7/31/41

Programs Are Revised For Berkshire Festival

Opening Concert Tonight Will Include Beethoven's Fifth, Often Heard In "V" Campaign

Significantly, whether in keep- with the "V" campaign or not, the Berkshire Symphonic Festival last Saturday announced a change in programs to be played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, with Serge Koussevitzky conducting. Beethoven's Symphony No. 5, in C Minor, has been transferred from the opening concert of Series B to the opening concert of the Festival, July 31. Beethoven's Symphony No. 3 ("Eroica") has been shifted to the second series opening.

Additional soloists were also announced. They will include E. Power Biggs, Aug. 14, in Handel's Concerto for Organ and Orchestra No. 10, in D Minor, and the following for Beethoven's "Missa Solemnis", scheduled for Aug. 14 with the Berkshire Festival Chorus: Rose Dirman, soprano; Hertha Glaz, contralto; John Priebe, tenor; Julius Huehn, bass. Other soloists will be Gregor Piatigorsky, Aug. 3; Leonard Shure, Aug. 9; Ruth Posselt, Aug. 16.

The Berkshire Musical Association Chorus, Horace Hunt, director, will appear with the orchestra on the opening night of the festival in the Villa Lobos Choros No. 10 and Debussy's "Three Nocturnes". The same chorus will appear again on Aug. 7 in excerpts from Mozart's "Requiem". The excerpts will be: "Requiem", "Dies Irae", "Rex Tremendae", "Confutatis", "Lacrimosa", and "Domine Jesu". This chorus is made up of 150 voices from thirteen Berkshire communities, and has been rehearsing for several months in anticipation of the Festival.

There are plenty of tickets available for single concerts, Festival trustees stated. The Berkshire Hills Conference Accommodations Bureau at Stockbridge says there are plenty of rooms available within convenient driving distance of Tanglewood. Inquiries for rooms should be addressed to the Accommodations Bureau.

The revised programs for the Festival follow:

Series A:

Thursday, July 31, 8:30 p. m.—Haydn, Symphony in G Major, No. 88; Debussy, Three Nocturnes ("Clouds", "Festivals", "Sirens"); Villa-Lobos, Choros No. 10 (chorus of the Berkshire Musical Association); Beethoven, Symphony No. 5, in C Minor.

Saturday, Aug. 2, 8:30 p. m.—Mendelssohn, "Italian" Symphony; Beethoven, Overture to "Leonore", No. 3; Shostakovitch, Symphony No. 5.

Sunday, Aug. 3, 3:30 p. m.—Brahms, Symphony No. 4; Copland, "Quiet City"; Hindemith, Violoncello Concerto (soloist, Gregor Piatigorsky); Rimsky-Korsakov, "Capriccio Espagnol".

Series B (programs in commemoration of the 150th anniversary of Mozart's death):

Thursday, Aug. 7, 8:30 p. m.—Mozart, "Requiem" (excerpts, chorus of the Berkshire Musical Association); Beethoven, Symphony No. 3, "Eroica".

Saturday, Aug. 9, 8:30 p. m.—Mozart, "Eine Kleine Nachtmusik"; Hanson, Symphony No. 2, "Romantic"; Brahms, Concerto No. 2, in B-flat, for piano (soloist, Leonard Shure); Wagner, Prelude to "Lohengrin", Prelude to "Die Meistersinger".

Sunday, Aug. 10, 3:30 p. m.—Mozart, Symphony in A Major (K. 201); Debussy, "La Mer"; Berlioz, "Fantastic" Symphony.

Series C:

Thursday, Aug. 14, 8:30 p. m.—Handel, Concerto for Organ and Orchestra No. 10, in D Minor (soloist: E. Power Biggs); Beethoven, "Missa Solemnis" (Quartet of soloists and Berkshire Festival Chorus).

Saturday, Aug. 16, 8:30 p. m.—Vaughan Williams, "London" Symphony; Barber, Violin Concerto (soloist, Ruth Posselt); Wagner, Prelude to "Parsifal"; Wagner, "Good Friday Spell", from "Parsifal"; Wagner, Overture to "Tannhauser".

Sunday, Aug. 17, 3:30 p. m.—Sibelius, Symphony No. 7; Prokofieff, "Lieutenant Kije" Suite; Tchaikovsky, Symphony No. 5.

This Clipping From BRISTOL, CONN.
PRESS

JUL 31 1941

This Clipping From
WATERBURY, CONN.
DEMOCRAT

JUL 31 1941

MUSIC FESTIVAL OPENS TONIGHT

Boston Symphony Orchestra to Play at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass.

The eighth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival opens tonight at 8:30 in the Music Shed at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. Serge Koussexitzky will conduct the Boston Symphony orchestra in Haydn's Symphony in G. No. 88. Also on the program will be Debussy's nocturnes, "Nuages," "Fetes," and "Sirenes."

The Berskshire Musical Association chorus will sing in "Sirenes," and in Villa-Lobos Tenth chorus which is also included on tonight's program. Beethoven's Fifth Symphony will also be played. This is the fifth season the concerts have been at Tanglewood, and the fourth in the new Music Shed. Information as to tickets for concerts may be had by calling or writing the main office at Stockbridge, Mass. The concerts will take place, beginning tonight, Thursday, Friday and Saturday nights and Sunday afternoons up to and including August 17.

Saturday night Mendelssohn's Italian Symphony, Beethoven's Third (Leonore), and Shoptakovitch's Fifth Symphony will be played. Sunday afternoon will be heard Brahms' Fourth Symphony, Rimsky Korsakoff's "Saprccia Espagnol" and other numbers.

A benefit program is planned for Friday, August 15, from 5:30 in the afternoon until late in the evening for the United Service Organizations and British War Relief, Inc. On this occasion Dr. Koussevitzky will conduct a band of 250 military musicians selected from the 26th Divisian bands at Camp Edwards.

This Clipping From
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

JUL 31 1941

Clear Weather Predicted For Opening of Festival

Eighth Annual Series Starts Tonight at 8.30 at Tanglewood—Morning Dampness Snaps Strings

Tonight's Program For Opening Festival Concert

The Boston Symphony Orchestra under Dr. Serge Koussevitzky will present the following program at tonight's opening of the 1941 Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Tanglewood, between Stockbridge and Lenox, starting at 8.30:

Symphony in G major, No. 88 — Haydn
L'Apres-Midi d'un Faun . Debussy
Choros No. 10 .... Villa-Lobos
(Chorus of the Berkshire Musical Association.)
Symphony No. 5, in C minor — Beethoven

There was sabotage in the string section of the Boston Symphony Orchestra this morning as Dr. Serge Koussevitzky led his musicians through their last rehearsal before tonight's opening concert of the eighth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Tanglewood.

The saboteur was the weather. Litle rain fell during the morning, but the dampness brought an obbligato of breaking strings for the Haydn, Debussy and Beethoven works which will be played on the opening program which starts at 8.30.

Clear Weather Predicted

The official weatherman sounded an optimistic note, however, by predicting that the skies would clear this afternoon.

All boxes have been sold for tonight, the Festival office announced, and advance ticket sales indicate that for the first time in the eight years of the concerts, all seats will be sold for the initial program. There will be, however, no limit on the number of general admissions sold.

The Berkshire Musical Association chorus, directed by Horace Hunt of Dalton, had their final rehearsal with the orchestra last night. They will be heard twice during the three-weeks' series, tonight in the Choros Number 10 of Villa-Lobos and again next Thursday in excerpts from Mozart's "Requiem."

This Clipping From
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

JUL 31 1941

Camp Edwards Officers Look Over Tanglewood for Benefit

LENOX—Capt. Herman Hoffman of the 180th Field Artillery and Warrant Officer Chester E. Whiting, chief bandmaster of the 26th Division, came to Lenox last night to look over the Tanglewood grounds and the shores of Lake Mahkeenac in preparation for 250 men who will participate in the USO-British Relief concert Aug. 15 with the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The Army men conferred with George E. Judd, manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and Philip R. Allen of Walpole, chairman of the benefit concert, and gave Mr. Judd a ride in state to the Tanglewood grounds in a high olive-drab Army field car. There the group met George W. Edman of Pittsfield, member of the executive committee for the benefit.

Capt. Hoffman and Officer Whiting explained that the convoy of 40 vehicles which will bring the 180th Field Artillery Band will arrive Aug. 14 in time to set up pup tents along the hemlock and pine grove near the former Brotherhood Clubhouse at Lake Mahkeenac, and then attend the Festival concert that night at the invitation of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston orchetsra. The men will travel just as though they were in maneuvers, and they will have mobile kitchens to prepare all their food on the trip and during their stay here, as well as a medical officer and complete medical equipment. There will also be a motor maintenance section.

Capt. Hoffman, who will be in command of the convoy, announced that on the evening the group from Camp Edwards arrives, they will carry out their daily retreat at 5.10, when all units are expected to report for the lowering of the flag as "The Star Spangled Banner" is played. On the evening of the benefit concert, the Army bands will play at the opening at 5.30 and then again with the Boston orchestra at about 9.

Tickets for the benefit are on sale by chairmen in several communities, at the benefit office in Stockbridge and at Symphony Hall in Boston and the Festival office, Steinway Hall, New York.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE
JUL 31 1941

Music Festival Opens Tonight In Berkshires

Koussevitzky Leads Boston Symphony at Lenox; Chorus Also on Program

The eighth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival opens tonight at 8:30 o'clock in the Music Shed on the Tanglewood estate at Lenox, Mass., where Serge Koussevitzky will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Haydn's symphony in G, No. 88; Debussy's nocturnes "Nuages," "Fêtes" and "Sirenes;" Villa-Lobos's tenth Choros, "Rasga o coraçao" and Beethoven's fifth symphony. The chorus of the Berkshire Musical Association, trained by Horace Hunt, will sing in "Sirenes" and the Villa-Lobos work.

Dr. Koussevitzky's program for the second concert of the festival's Series A, next Saturday night, Aug. 2, consists of Mendelssohn's "Italian" symphony, Beethoven's third "Leonore" overture and Shoptakovitch's fifth symphony. The third concert, Sunday afternoon, Aug. 3, at 3:30, includes Brahms's fourth symphony, Aaron Copland's "Quiet City," Hindemith's cello concerto and Rimsky-Korsakoff's "Capriccio Espagnol."

The concerts of Series B will be held on Thursday and Saturday nights and Sunday afternoon, Aug. 7, 9 and 10; those of Series C on Thursday, Saturday and Sunday, Aug. 14, 16 and 17.

Further details were announced yesterday for the extensive benefit program which will be held at Tanglewood on Friday, Aug. 15, from 5:30 until late in the evening for the benefit of the United Service Organizations and British War Relief, Inc. Dr. Koussevitzky will conduct a band of 250 military musicians selected from the 26th Division's bands at Camp Edwards. The next part of the program will be a demonstration of various activities of the Berkshire Music Center, which completes its second season at Tanglewood on Aug. 17. The center's festival chorus, singing Randall Thompson's "Alleluia," will open a "Manifestation" with prominent speakers. After a picnic supper, Dr. Koussevitzky will conduct the Boston Symphony in a concert opening with the first movement of Beethoven's fifth symphony. Mendelssohn's violin concerto, with Albert Spalding as the soloist, and Tchaikovsky's "1812" overture will be among the other numbers.

The 1941 festival is the sixth with the participation of the Boston Symphony, the fifth to be held at Tanglewood and the fourth to be held in the Music Shed. Information about tickets may be obtained from the festival's main office at Stockbridge, Mass., or from its New York office at 113 West Fifty-seventh Street. Information about lodgings is obtainable from the Berkshire Hills Conference's information desk in the Stockbridge headquarters.

During the festival period the South Mountain String Quartet will give its weekly concerts at South Mountain, near Pittsfield, Mass., on Fridays, Aug. 1, 8 and 15, at 4 o'clock.

N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT
JUL 30 1941

TANGLEWOOD OPENS TOMORROW NIGHT

For First of Symphonic Festival Concerts

EIGHTH SEASON

Music Lovers From All Parts of Country to Hear Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The Berkshire Symphonic Festival will begin its eighth season tomorrow evening at Tanglewood in Stockbridge with the presentation of the first of nine concerts by the Boston Symphony orchestra and Serge Koussevitzky, conductor.

Music lovers from all parts of the country, including many persons ranking high in the nation's cultural and social life, will be at Tanglewood for the opening of the season which embraces three weeks. Most of these have procured accommodations somewhere near Tanglewood, with the increased interest in the festival program resulting in a big demand for accommodations. Others will arrive in the county tomorrow in an attempt to secure last minute tickets and accommodations. Concert series tickets have sold steadily ever since first placed on sale and most of the choice tickets have already been sold. General admission tickets will be on sale as usual at each of the concert programs.

Opening Program

Included in the opening night's program tomorrow evening will be numbers by the chorus of the Berkshire Musical association, composed of residents of 13 communities, including nine from North Adams and Williamstown. The chorus will also be heard in the opening program of the second series on Thursday, Aug. 7.

The orchestra's opening program consists of Haydn's Symphony in G, No. 88 and Beethoven's Symphony No. 5, in C minor while the chorus will sing Villa Lobos Chorus No. 10 and Debussy's Three Nocturnes.

The festival program consists of three series of three concerts each. The initial series consists of the opening program tomorrow evening, a concert Saturday evening and another on Sunday afternoon at 3:30 o'clock. At Sunday's concert, Gregor Piatigorsky, 'cello will be the soloist.

The second series consists of concerts Thursday evening, Aug. 7, Saturday evening, Aug. 9, and Sunday afternoon, Aug. 10.

The third and concluding series consists of concerts Thursday evening, Aug. 14, Saturday evening, Aug. 16 and Sunday afternoon, Aug. 17.

Complete Program

The complete and revised program is as follows:

Series A.

First concert, Thursday, July 31, 8:30 p. m., Haydn, Symphony in G, No. 88; Debussy, Three Nocturnes; Clouds; Festivals; Sirens; Villa-Lobos, Choros, No. 10, chorus of the Berkshire Musical association; Beethoven, Symphony No. 5, in C Minor.

Second concert, Saturday, August 2, 8:30 p. m.,; Mendelssohn, "Italian" symphony; Beethoven, Overture to "Lenore," No. 3; Shostakovich, Symphony No. 5.

Third concert, Sunday, Aug. 3, 3:30 p. m., soloist, Gregor Piatigorsky, 'cello; Brahms, Symphony No. 4; Copeland, Quiet City; Hindemith, concerto for 'cello; Rimsky-Korsakoff, Capriccio Espagnol.

Series B, first concert, Thursday, Aug. 7, 8:30 p. m.; Mozart, excerpts from the "Requiem," chorus of the Berkshire Musical association; Beethoven, Symphony, No. 3, "Eroica."

Second concert, Saturday, Aug. 9, 8:30 p. m., soloist, Leonard Shure, piano; Mozart, "Eine Kleine Nachtmusik," Harris, Symphony No. 2 ("Romantic"); Brahms, Concerto No. 2, in B flat, for piano; Wagner, Prelude to "Lohengrin"; Prelude to "Die Meistersinger," Third concert, Sunday, Aug. 10, 3:30 p. m. Mozart, Symphony in A (K. 201); Debussy, LaMer; Berlioz, "Fantastic" symphony.

Series C, first concert, Thursday, Aug. 14, 8:30 p. m. soloist, E. Power Biggs, organ, Handel, Concerto for organ and orchestra, No. 10, in D Minor; Beethoven, Missa Solemnis, Rose Dirman, soprano; Hertha Glaz, contralto; John Priebe, tenor; Julius Huehn, bass; the Berkshire Festival Chorus.

Second concert, Saturday, Aug. 16, 8:30 p. m. soloist, Ruth Rosselt, violin, Vaughan Williams, "London" symphony; Barber, Violin concerto; Wagner, Prelude and Good Friday Spell, from "Parsifal"; Wagner, Overture to "Tannhauser."

Third concert, Sunday, Aug. 17, 3:30 p. m. Sibelius, Symphony No. 7; Prokofieff, "Lieutenant Kije" Suite; Tchaikovsky, Symphony No. 5.

BLANK PAGE

This Clipping From
SYRACUSE, N. Y.
HERALD JOURNAL

AUG 1 - 1941

7,500 Attend Berkshire Festival

Gov. Lehman Is Guest of Honor At Tanglewood

By JOHN SELBY
Associated Press Arts Editor

Stockbridge, Mass., Aug. 1.—Keynoted by the "V for Victory" symbol, the Berkshire Symphonic Festival opened its eighth season last night before the largest attendance in its history.

A check-up today showed that 7,500 persons, instead of the expected 6,000, had turned out despite damp and threatening weather.

When Serge Koussevitzky bowed and turned his back to begin the Haydn Symphony No. 88, his audience represented every state in the union, every class of society, and every degree of musical intelligence.

For guest of honor it had Governor Herbert H. Lehman of New York, and as Dr. Koussevitzky's gesture toward the current World War, it had the famous Fifth Beethoven Symphony as piece de resistance. This had been especially programmed by Koussevitzky because its opening four-note figure has become known as the musical symbol of the "V for Victory" movement. The four notes, if read in Morse code, form the letter "V."

In addition to the two symphonies, Dr. Koussevitzky played a sample of Debussy, and closed the first half of the program with a comparative novelty, the Choros No. 10 by the Brazilian composer Villa-Lobos, in which the chorus of the Berkshire Musical Association was heard for the first time this season. Nobody could deny the excitement engendered by the Brazilian's music; it should be added that those who understood it were in the minority. It sounded much like a musical illustration of the notorious gentleman who leapt upon his horse and rode off in all directions at once.

In addition to the superb playing of the Boston Symphony, only slightly dimmed in the string section by the damp, Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, Festival President, and the large number of Berkshire residents who cooperated with her had the satisfaction of knowing that this is one festival which can care for itself financially.

Last September, all 1,500 Festival memberships were sold; early in June, the 1,600 subscriptions to all series were gone, and the demand for the remaining 2,700 single seats for each concert is 20 per cent ahead of last year.

The first of the three Festival series closes with concerts tomorrow and Sunday.

This Clipping From BURLINGTON, VT.
NEWS

AUG 1 - 1941

This Clipping From
LOCKPORT, N.Y.
UNION SUN JOURNAL

AUG 1 - 1941

THIS CLIPPING FROM WOONSOCKET, R. I.
CALL

AUG 1 - 1941

This Clipping From
BUFFALO, N. Y.
NEWS

AUG 1 - 1941

This Clipping From
ROCHESTER, N.Y.
TIMES UNION

AUG 1 - 1941

PAWTUCKET, R. I.
TIMES

AUG 1 - 1941

NEW BRITAIN, CONN.
HERALD

UG 1 - 1941

THIS CLIPPING FROM DOVER, N. H.
DEMOCRAT

AUG 1 - 1941

LYNN, MASS.
ITEM

AUG 1 - 1941

BENNINGTON, VT.
BANNER

AUG 1 - 1941

NORTHAMPTON, MASS.
HAMPSHIRE GAZETTE

AUG 1 - 1941

CONCORD, N. H.
Monitor & N. H. Patriot

AUG 1 - 1941

THIS CLIPPING FROM TAUNTON, MASS.
GAZETTE

AUG 1 - 1941

This Clipping From
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
BULLETIN

AUG 1 - 1941

ANSONIA, CONN.
SENTINEL

AUG 1 - 1941

KEENE, N. H.
SENTINEL

AUG 1 - 1941

SALEM, MASS.
NEWS

AUG 1 - 1941

MERIDEN, CONN.
JOURNAL

AUG 1 - 1941

UTICA, N. Y.
OBSERVER DISPATCH

AUG 1 - 1941

LEWISTON, ME.
JOURNAL

AUG 1 - 1941

NASHUA, N. H.
TELEGRAPH

AUG 1 - 1941

NEWARK, N. J.
NEWS

AUG 1 - 1941

WORCESTER, MASS.
GAZETTE

AUG 1 - 1941

STAMFORD, CONN.
ADVOCATE

AUG 1 - 1941

BIDDEFORD, ME.
JOURNAL

AUG 1 - 1941

AMSTERDAM, N.Y.
RECORDER DEMOCRAT

AUG 1 - 1941

WILMINGTON, DEL.
JOURNAL EVERY EVENING

AUG 1 - 1941

MANCHESTER, N. H.
LEADER

AUG 1 - 1941

BINGHAMPTON, N. Y.
PRESS

AUG 1 - 1941

DANBURY, CONN.
NEWS-TIMES

AUG 1 - 1941

NEW HAVEN, CONN.
REGISTER

AUG 1 - 1941

MONTPELIER, VT.
ARGUS

AUG 2 - 1941

ST. ALBANS, VT.
MESSENGER

AUG 1 - 1941

CHATTANOOGA, TENN.
TIMES

AUG 1 - 1941

BEETHOVEN'S FIFTH HEARD AT FESTIVAL

our Notes Sung Throughout Europe Are Played by the Berkshire Symphony

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., July 31 (AP).—The four-note opening figure of the Fifth Beethoven symphony—notes that are whistled, played and sung throughout Europe to match the "V for Victory" sign—were sounded tonight at Tanglewood as the Berkshire symphonic festival entered its eighth season.

The work came after the intermission and Dr. Serge Koussevitzky had purposely programmed the symphony as his musical gesture for the day.

The one major music festival in a suffering world which has, practically speaking, no financial problems, had an opening audience of 6,000 persons—the largest in its history.

All its financial worry disappeared early last June, when the subscription lists were closed three weeks early and the staff turned its attention to the more congenial business of preparing the program.

Thirty-three hundred of the 6,000 seats each season are sold in advance. The remainder of the seats are disposed of singly, instead of by series.

When Dr. Koussevitzky raised his baton for the opening bars of Haydn's eighty-eighth symphony the audience had musical cause for gratitude, as always when the Boston symphony plays. There was another reason, however, which is the remarkable "shed" which houses the festival. For "Berkshire luck" did not hold with today's weather, which was wet.

The dampness dulled unavoidably the orchestra's magnificent string section, but affected the audience very little.

Besides the two symphonies, the music included Debussy's "L'apres Midi D'un Faun" and Villa-Lobe's "Chores No. 10," in the last of which the Berkshire musical association chorus made its first appearance of the festival.

The audience this year includes the students of Dr. Koussevitzky's now famous Berkshire music center as well as people from every state in the union. Hotels and inns within a radius of twenty-five miles are crowded with festival guests and many have driven in a hundred miles or more.

The first of the three series which make up the festival will close with concerts Saturday night and Sunday afternoon.

NEW ORLEANS, LA.
TIMES-PICAYUNE

AUG 2 - 1941

275

BRIDGEPORT, CONN.
TELEGRAM

AUG 1 - 1941

'V for Victory' Symphony Opens Berkshire Fete

By JOHN SELBY

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., July 31.—(AP) The four-note opening figure of the Fifth Beethoven symphony—notes that are whistled, played and sung throughout Europe to match the "V for victory" sign—were sounded tonight at Tanglewood as the Berkshire symphonic festival entered its eighth season.

The work came after the intermission and Dr. Serge Koussevitky had purposely programmed the symphony as his musical gesture for the day.

The one major music festival in a suffering world which has, practically speaking, no financial problems, had an opening audience of 6,000 persons—the largest in its history.

All financial worry disappeared early last June, when the subscription lists were closed three weeks early and the staff turned its attention to the more congenial business of preparing the program.

Seats Sold in Advance

Thirty-three hundred of the 6,000 seats each season are sold in advance. The remainder of the seats are disposed of singly, instead of by series.

When Dr. Koussevitky raised his baton for the opening bars of Haydn's 88th symphony the audience had musical cause for gratitude, as always when the Boston Symphony plays. There was another reason, however, which is the remarkable "shed" which houses the festival. For "Berkshire luck" did not hold with today's weather, which was wet.

The dampness dulled unavoidably the orchestra's magnificent string section, but affected the audience very little.

Besides the two symphonies, the music included DeBussy's "L'Apres Midi d'un Faun" and Villa-Lobe's "Chorus No. 10," in the last of which the Berkshire Musical Association chorus made its first appearance of the festival.

The audience this year includes the students of Dr. Koussevitzky's now famous Berkshire music center as well as people from every state in the union. Hotels and inns within a radius of 25 miles are crowded with festival guests and many have driven in a hundred miles or more.

The first of the three series which make up the festival will close with concerts Saturday night and Sunday afternoon.

SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
GAZETTE

AUG 1 - 1941

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS

AUG 1 - 1941

Boston Orchestra Again Superb At Berkshire Festival Opener

Stockbridge, Aug. 1—Another superb concert was added to the long list of successes credited to Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony orchestra, as the eighth annual Berkshire Symphonic festival opened last night at Tanglewood. A crowd of more than 7500 persons defied the intermittent showers to enjoy a well balanced and stunningly played concert.

The rain held off, fortunately, and even the downpour earlier in the day had virtually drained off, making parking and unparking almost no problem. While music is the chief attraction at Tanglewood, the accommodations are on an equally high level, a tribute to the executive body and to the cooperative spirit of those who have made these concerts the principal summer musical event in the East, and possibly in the country. Representatives from approximately 100 news-gathering agencies were present last night, if figures can give any indication of the importance of the festival in the eyes of those who know what news is.

The Beethoven Fifth symphony was the finale last night and comment upon the performance is almost superfluous. This year's nine programs are made up mostly of standards in the orchestral repertory and the rapport between conductor and orchestra is evidenced in the flawless execution of the smallest details. The performance was completely satisfying both to musicians and to interventionists, on the basis of the ovation.

The loving care of the string section of the orchestra was evidenced again in the opening selection, the melodic "Symphony in G major, number 88" of Papa Haydn. The second movement with its lied-like theme; the menuetto with its peasant vigor; and the finale with its almost tarantella speed made the entire symphony a sheer joy.

It was a good night for Debussy, the outlines of haze-obscured Berkshire scenery providing a perfect setting for the first nocturne, "Clouds," while the barbaric brasses and the strident strings of his "Festivals" were a happy contrast.

The third nocturne, "Sirenes," which requires a wordless female chorus was replaced without explanation by the "Afternoon of a Faun." To report that Koussevitzky was unwilling to perform this diabolically difficult score with the members of the Berkshire Musical association may seem unfair to a group which, without apparent effort, surmounted the hazards of tha Villa-Lobos "Choros number 10," but it is also a criterion of the Koussevitzky standard.

The only unfamiliar item on the program was the work of the Brazilian composer and to this reviewer, it was extremely interesting. Attempting to synthesize the different modalities of Brazilian, Indian and popular music, he has added curious instruments in the drum family, native to his own country. While the instrumental portions sounded savage, and certainly far removed from the world of haydn and Beethoven, vocal portions of the serenade "Rend My Heart" are exciting and show a real ability to write for voices.

Using them percussively to bark out the native Indian words against a flowing Portugese text; he has achieved an effect which we found intriguing. To ears not attuned to Latin rhythms, infused with modern tonalities, the result seems raw and unpleasant. It is certainly not likely to be a "must" item, good neighbor policy or no. The chorus which is directed by Horace Hunt deserves a special measure of praise for coping so admirably with the score.

The series continues Saturday at 8.30 with Mendelssohn's "Italian" symphony; Bethoven's third "Overture to Leonore"; and the much discussed Fifth symphony of Shostakovitch.

J. P. D.

QUINCY, MASS.
PATRIOT LEDGER

AUG 1 - 1941

LAWRENCE, MASS.
TRIBUNE

AUG 1 - 1941

"V FOR VICTORY" CONCERT THEME

STOCKBRIDGE, Aug. 1 (UP)—Britain's "V for Victory" campaign was established today as the theme of the eighth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival at "Tanglewood," summer home of the Boston Symphony orchestra.

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, director of the orchestra, made a last-minute program change at last night's opening concert to include Beethovenбs Symphony No. 5.

The orchestra also played as the opening item Haydn's Symphony in G Major, No. 88, which was labelled in the old London Philharmonic Society catalogue as Lebber "V". Dr. Koussevitzky included a piece by Villa-Lobos, the Brazilian composer's Chorus No. 10, to complete the list of "V" music.

More than 7500 persons attended the concert despite fog and misty weather. Another concert was scheduled for tonight.

This Clipping From
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

AUG 1 - 1941

Children Going To Tanglewood

STOCKBRIDGE — School busses to transport students of the Williams High School and Stockbridge Plain School to the rehearsal of the Boston Symphony Orchestra tomorrow morning at Tanglewood will leave the high school promptly at 9.30 AM. The busses will stop on their way to Tanglewood at the Glendale store and at the Interlaken store.

This Clipping From
WATERBURY, CONN.
DEMOCRAT

AUG 1 - 1941

FESTIVAL OPENS AT TANGLEWOOD

Boston Symphony Orchestra Gives Distinguished Performance

It is estimated that seven thousand persons attended the opening concert last night of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Tanglewood, Lenox. There was a completely filled house for this first concert that featured the opening of the festival's eighth season. Dubious weather had no effect on the attendance; traffic was ably handled by Legion soldiers and the entire presentation by the Boston Symphony orchestra with Serge Koussevitzky conducting got off to a favorable start. It was an exciting night in the Berkshire region and cars thronged the roads from New York state, Connecticut, and elsewhere.

Hayden, Debussy, Villa-Lobos and Beethoven were featured on the program. Much interest was displayed in the work of the contemporary Brazilian composer Villa-Lobos, whose Chorus No. 10, "Rasga o coracao" was played by the orchestra with the Berkshire Musical Association Chorus. This number offered a new form of musical composition in which rhythm predominates. The title translated means as explained in program notes, "Rend My Heart."

Haydn's G Major Symphony opened the program and was followed by three nocturnes by Debussy, namely "Nuages," "Fetes," and "Afternoon of a Faun." Beethoven's Symphony No. 5 in C Minor, Opus 67 was the concluding program piece and ended a distinguished performance. There was sufficient to intrigue the listener in the performance. Those who could not digest the news of Villa-Lobos with its original themes were happy in the vigor of the Alleggro con Brio of Beethoven's Fifth, the melodic line of the Andante, the "puzzling" trio as program notes defined the third movement, and the happy sounding march tempo final Allegro.

An enthusiastic audience applauded the men of the band and their conductor garbed in summer white. The next concert will take place Saturday night at 8:30 o'clock.

This Clipping From
ALBANY, N. Y.
TIMES UNION

AUG 1 - 1941

8th Music Festival Opens

Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony orchestra opened the eighth annual Berkshire Symphonic festival last night under near-perfect conditions. An audience of 6,000, including many Albanians, filled the spacious ampitheatre at "Tanglewood," and sprinkled out on the grass beyond. The evening was soft and lovely, and the program lived up to its setting in every way.

Mr. Koussevitzky of course was the dominating figure of the evening. During his program, which was well balanced and developed along artistic lines, he exhibited numerous phases of his talent as a conductor, all of them brilliant.

They ranged from the lightness of the Largo from Haydn's Symphony No. 88, which he and the orchestra spun out to a thin, fine piece of musical delight, to the roaring rhythms and brassy splendour of Villa-Lobos' modernistic piece, "Rasga o coracao."

Grouped with Haydn and Villa-Lobos in the first portion of the program were two of Debussy's nocturnes, "Nuages" and "Fetes,' and the ever-popular "Afternoon of a Faun," which was not listed on the program. The final half was devoted to Beethoven's fifth, in C-Minor. No music lover could ask for more.

During the Villa-Lobos; the orchestra was augmented by the chorus of the Berkshire Musical association, directed by Horace Hunt. The music, although at times interesting and exciting, principally because of its rhythmic patterns, came far from fulfilling the implications of its text, as translated: "Rend my heart...if thou wish to see." It is hard to reconcile the various factors of Villa-Lobos' cleverly-orchestrated hodge-podge. But little fault could be made of the performance as such.

It was the Beethoven symphony, of course, which made the "piece de resistance" of the evening. Little can be said that has not been said before. It was glorious music. The brasses, it seemed in the first movement, were not perfectly integrated with the rest of the orchestra. But we do not complain of slight matters. The music and the orchestra and Mr. Koussevitzky produced a total effect which was too impressives.

H. L. S.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES

AUG 1 - 1941

CONCERT AT LENOX ATTRACTS SOCIETY

Notables From Many States Hear Opening Festival Program

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., July 31—The opening tonight of the eighth annual Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood was-an important midsummer social event to the Berkshire colonists. All boxes had been sold weeks in advance. Noticed in the box section were Governor and Mrs. Herbert H. Lehman.

As in other years, Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, president of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, had Boxes 1 and 2 and her guests tonight were her mother, Mrs. Robinson Smith; Miss Miriam K. Oliver, Mrs. E. Corning Townsend, Montgomery Hare, Stuart Montgomery of Boston, William Miles, Malcolm Vaughan, Leonard Casanova and Bryn Strandasaes of New York.

In a box with Mrs. Serge Koussevitzky, wife of the conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, were Ernest B. Dane Jr., president of the orchestra corporation, and Mrs. Dane.

With Mrs. George Otis Rockwood and her daughter, Princess Diane R. Eristavi, were their house guests at Laurel Mere, Lawrence Smith Butler, Mr. and Mrs. William E. Dodge Stokes and John P. S. Harrison.

BRIDGEPORT, CONN.
TELEGRAM

AUG 1 - 1941

'V for Victory' Symphony Opens Berkshire Fete

By JOHN SELBY

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., July 31.—(AP) The four-note opening figure of the Fifth Beethoven symphony—notes that are whistled, played and sung throughout Europe to match the "V for victory" sign—were sounded tonight at Tanglewood as the Berkshire symphonic festival entered its eighth season.

The work came after the intermission and Dr. Serge Koussevitzky had purposely programmed the symphony as his musical gesture for the day.

The one major music festival in a suffering world which has, practically speaking, no financial problems, had an opening audience of 6,000 persons—the largest in its history.

All financial worry disappeared early last June, when the subscription lists were closed three weeks early and the staff turned its attention to the more congenial business of preparing the program.

Seats Sold in Advance

Thirty-three hundred of the 6,000 seats each season are sold in advance. The remainder of the seats are disposed of singly, instead of by series.

When Dr. Koussevitky raised his baton for the opening bars of Haydn's 88th symphony the audience had musical cause for gratitude, as always when the Boston Symphony plays. There was another reason, however, which is the remarkable "shed" which houses the festival. For "Berkshire luck" did not hold with today's weather, which was wet.

The dampness dulled unavoidably the orchestra's magnificent string section, but affected the audience very little.

Besides the two symphonies, the music included DeBussy's "L'Apres Midi d'un Faun" and Villa-Lobe's "Chorus No. 10," in the last of which the Berkshire Musical Association chorus made its first appearance of the festival.

The audience this year includes the students of Dr. Koussevitzky's now famous Berkshire music center as well as people from every state in the union. Hotels and inns within a radius of 25 miles are crowded with festival guests and many have driven in a hundred miles or more.

The first of the three series which make up the festival will close with concerts Saturday night and Sunday afternoon.

SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
GAZETTE

AUG 1 - 1941

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS
AUG 1 - 1941

Boston Orchestra Again Superb At Berkshire Festival Opener

Stockbridge, Aug. 1—Another superb concert was added to the long list of successes credited to Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony orchestra, as the eighth annual Berkshire Symphonic festival opened last night at Tanglewood. A crowd of more than 7500 persons defied the intermittent showers to enjoy a well balanced and stunningly played concert.

The rain held off, fortunately, and even the downpour earlier in the day had virtually drained off, making parking and unparking almost no problem. While music is the chief attraction at Tanglewood, the accommodations are on an equally high level, a tribute to the executive body and to the cooperative spirit of those who have made these concerts the principal summer musical event in the East, and possibly in the country. Representatives from approximately 100 news-gathering agencies were present last night, if figures can give any indication of the importance of the festival in the eyes of those who know what news is.

The Beethoven Fifth symphony was the finale last night and comment upon the performance is almost superfluous. This year's nine programs are made up mostly of standards in the orchestral repertory and the rapport between conductor and orchestra is evidenced in the flawless execution of the smallest details. The performance was completely satisfying both to musicians and to interventionists, on the basis of the ovation.

The loving care of the string section of the orchestra was evidenced again in the opening selection, the melodic "Symphony in G major, number 88" of Papa Haydn. The second movement with its lied-like theme; the menuetto with its peasant vigor; and the finale with its almost tarantella speed made the entire symphony a sheer joy.

It was a good night for Debussy, the outlines of haze-obscured Berkshire scenery providing a perfect setting for the first nocturne, "Clouds," while the barbaric brasses and the strident strings of his "Festivals" were a happy contrast.

The third nocturne, "Sirenes," which requires a wordless female chorus was replaced without explanation by the "Afternoon of a Faun." To report that Koussevitzky was unwilling to perform this diabolically difficult score with the members of the Berkshire Musical association may seem unfair to a group which, without apparent effort, surmounted the hazards of the Villa-Lobos "Choros number 10," but it is also a criterion of the Koussevitzky standard.

The only unfamiliar item on the program was the work of the Brazilian composer and to this reviewer, it was extremely interesting. Attempting to synthesize the different modalities of Brazilian, Indian and popular music, he has added curious instruments in the drum family, native to his own country. While the instrumental portions sounded savage, and certainly far removed from the world of haydn and Beethoven, vocal portions of the serenade "Rend My Heart" are exciting and show a real ability to write for voices.

Using them percussively to bark out the native Indian words against a flowing Portugese text, he has achieved an effect which we found intriguing. To ears not attuned to Latin rhythms, infused with modern tonalities, the result seems raw and unpleasant. It is certainly not likely to be a "must" item, good neighbor policy or no. The chorus which is directed by Horace Hunt deserves a special measure of praise for coping so admirably with the score.

The series continues Saturday at 8.30 with Mendelssohn's "Italian" symphony; Bethoven's third "Overture to Leonore"; and the much discussed Fifth symphony of Shostakovitch.

J. D. D.

QUINCY, MASS.
PATRIOT LEDGER

AUG 1 - 1941

LAWRENCE, MASS.
TRIBUNE

AUG 1 - 1941

"V FOR VICTORY" CONCERT THEME

STOCKBRIDGE, Aug. 1 (UP)—Britain's "V for Victory" campaign was established today as the theme of the eighth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival at "Tanglewood," summer home of the Boston Symphony orchestra.

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, director of the orchestra, made a last-minute program change at last night's opening concert to include Beethovenbs Symphony No. 5.

The orchestra also played as the opening item Haydn's Symphony in G Major, No. 88, which was labelled in the old London Philharmonic Society catalogue as Lebber "V". Dr. Koussevitzky included a piece by Villa-Lobos, the Brazilian composer's Chorus No. 10, to complete the list of "V" music.

More than 7500 persons attended the concert despite fog and misty weather. Another concert was scheduled for tonight.

This Clipping From
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

AUG 1 - 1941

Children Going To Tanglewood

STOCKBRIDGE — School busses to transport students of the Williams High School and Stockbridge Plain School to the rehearsal of the Boston Symphony Orchestra tomorrow morning at Tanglewood will leave the high school promptly at 9.30 AM. The busses will stop on their way to Tanglewood at the Glendale store and at the Interlaken store.

This Clipping From
WATERBURY, CONN.
DEMOCRAT

AUG 1 - 1941

FESTIVAL OPENS AT TANGLEWOOD

Boston Symphony Orchestra Gives Distinguished Performance

It is estimated that seven thousand persons attended the opening concert last night of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Tanglewood, Lenox. There was a completely filled house for this first concert that featured the opening of the festival's eighth season. Dubious weather had no effect on the attendance; traffic was ably handled by Legion soldiers and the entire presentation by the Boston Symphony orchestra with Serge Koussevitzky conducting got off to a favorable start. It was an exciting night in the Berkshire region and cars thronged the roads from New York state, Connecticut, and elsewhere.

Hayden, Debussy, Villa-Lobos and Beethoven were featured on the program. Much interest was displayed in the work of the contemporary Brazilian composer Villa-Lobos, whose Chorus No. 10, "Rasga o coracao" was played by the orchestra with the Berkshire Musical Association Chorus. This number offered a new form of musical composition in which rhythm predominates. The title translated means as explained in program notes, "Rend My Heart."

Haydn's G Major Symphony opened the program and was followed by three nocturnes by Debussy, namely "Nuages," "Fetes," and "Afternoon of a Faun." Beethoven's Symphony No. 5 in C Minor, Opus 67 was the concluding program piece and ended a distinguished performance. There was sufficient to intrigue the listener in the performance. Those who could not digest the news of Villa-Lobos with its original themes were happy in the vigor of the Allegro con Brio of Beethoven's Fifth, the melodic line of the Andante, the "puzzling" trio as program notes defined the third movement, and the happy sounding march tempo final Allegro.

An enthusiastic audience applauded the men of the band and their conductor garbed in summer white. The next concert will take place Saturday night at 8:30 o'clock.

This Clipping From
ALBANY, N. Y.
TIMES UNION

AUG 1 - 1941

8th Music Festival Opens

Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony orchestra opened the eighth annual Berkshire Symphonic festival last night under near-perfect conditions. An audience of 6,000, including many Albanians, filled the spacious ampitheatre at "Tanglewood," and sprinkled out on the grass beyond. The evening was soft and lovely, and the program lived up to its setting in every way.

Mr. Koussevitzky of course was the dominating figure of the evening. During his program, which was well balanced and developed along artistic lines, he exhibited numerous phases of his talent as a conductor, all of them brilliant.

They ranged from the lightness of the Largo from Haydn's Symphony No. 88, which he and the orchestra spun out to a thin, fine piece of musical delight, to the roaring rhythms and brassy splendour of Villa-Lobos' modernistic piece, "Rasga o coracao."

Grouped with Haydn and Villa-Lobos in the first portion of the program were two of Debussy's nocturnes, "Nuages" and "Fetes,' and the ever-popular "Afternoon of a Faun," which was not listed on the program. The final half was devoted to Beethoven's fifth, in C-Minor. No music lover could ask for more.

During the Villa-Lobos; the orchestra was augmented by the chorus of the Berkshire Musical association, directed by Horace Hunt. The music, although at times interesting and exciting, principally because of its rhythmic patterns, came far from fulfling the implications of its text, as translated: "Rend my heart...if thou wish to see." It is hard to reconcile the various factors of Villa-Lobos' cleverly-orchestrated hodge-podge. But little fault could be made of the performance as such.

It was the Beethoven symphony, of course, which made the "piece de resistance" of the evening. Little can be said that has not been said before. It was glorious music. The brasses, it seemed in the first movement, were not perfectly integrated with the rest of the orchestra. But we do not complain of slight matters. The music and the orchestra and Mr. Koussevitzky produced a total effect which was too impressives.

H. L. S.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES

AUG 1 - 1941

CONCERT AT LENOX ATTRACTS SOCIETY

Notables From Many States Hear Opening Festival Program

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., July 31—The opening tonight of the eighth annual Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood was an important midsummer social event to the Berkshire colonists. All boxes had been sold weeks in advance. Noticed in the box section were Governor and Mrs. Herbert H. Lehman.

As in other years, Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, president of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, had Boxes 1 and 2 and her guests tonight were her mother, Mrs. Robinson Smith; Miss Miriam K. Oliver, Mrs. E. Corning Townsend, Montgomery Hare, Stuart Montgomery of Boston, William Miles, Malcolm Vaughan, Leonard Casanova and Bryn Strandasaes of New York.

In a box with Mrs. Serge Koussevitzky, wife of the conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, were Ernest B. Dane Jr., president of the orchestra corporation, and Mrs. Dane.

With Mrs. George Otis Rockwood and her daughter, Princess Diane R. Eristavi, were their house guests at Laurel Mere, Lawrence Smith Butler, Mr. and Mrs. William E. Dodge Stokes and John P. S. Harrison.

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN

AUG 1 - 1941

Berkshire's Music Festival Leading Event for Society

Gov and Mrs Lehman of New York Among Prominent Boxholders—Many Have Guests for Opening of Eighth Annual Event

Special Dispatch to The Republican

Berkshire Hills, July 31—As a society event, the opening tonight of the eighth annual Berkshire music festival at Tanglewood, between Lenox and Stockbridge, was an important midsummer event. All boxes had been sold weeks in advance. Noticed in that section were Gov and Mrs Herbert H. Lehman of New York, who expect to attend all three first-series concerts.

As in other years, Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, president of the Berkshire Symphonic festival, had boxes 1 and 2, and her guests tonight were her mother, Mrs Robinson Smith; Miss Miriam K. Oliver, Mrs E. Corning Townsend, Mrs Montgomery Hare, Stuart Montgomery of Boston, William Miles, Malcolm Vaughan, Leonardo Casanova and Bryn Strandanaes of New York.

In a box with Mrs Serge Koussevitzky, wife of the conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra, were Ernest B. Dane, Jr., president of the orchestra corporation, and Mrs Dane.

With Mrs George Otis Rockwood and daughter, Princess Diane R. Eristavi, was their house guest at Laurel Mere, Lawrence Smith Butler; also Mr and Mrs William E. Dodge Stokes and John P. S. Harrison.

Mr and Mrs Walter Atherton had as guests, Mr and Mrs Ray Atherton of Washington, formerly of the American embassy at Copenhagen, and Mr and Mrs Alexander Whiteside of Boston. In the box with Mr and Mrs Samuel Gilbert Colt, of Pittsfield, were Mrs James D. Colt and Mrs Clement S. Houghton of Chestnut Hill.

Mrs W. Rockwood Gibbs had as box guests her brother-in-law and sister, Mr and Mrs Edward De Witt Shumway of Lake Forest, Ill; Mr and Mrs C. Lambert Heyniger, Ensign Arthur Edward Anderson, Miss Kathleen Parlow and David Donald.

Following a dinner party at Great Barrington, Mr and Mrs Thomas H. Blodgett had in their box, Mr and Mrs August J. Cordier, Mr and Mrs Daniel G. Tenney, Mrs Ward C. Belcher and Mr and Mrs Walter H. Mann.

Noticed with Miss M. Symphorosa Bristed were Mrs Andrew Varick Stout, Mrs John B. Casserly, Mrs R. High Carleton, Dr Emil Enthoven of New York and Richard Jenkins of Baltimore. With Mr and Mrs J. Dwight Francis were Robert H. Pitney and Howell Forbes.

Mr and Mrs Maclin P. Davis and Mrs Robert W. Whiton Stuart were with Mr and Mrs Norman H. Davis.

Among others who had box guests were, Mr and Mrs John Barry Ryan, Mr and Mrs Eldridge Gerry Chadwick, Mr and Mrs John W. Garrett, Mrs Edward S. Harkness, Rev Dr and Mrs Anson Phelps Stokes, Misses Edith Scoville and Edith J. Clapp, Mrs John S. Newberry, Mrs Benjamin Rogers, Mrs Frederic A. Keep, Mr and Mrs John Shepard, Jr., Mr and Mrs Donald F. McPherson, Mr and Mrs Myron C. Taylor, Mrs Donald J. Warner, Mr and Mrs Bruce Crane and Col and Mrs E. Parmalee Prentice.

With Mr and Mrs John Butler Swann at Cherry Hill, Stockbridge, for the music festival are Dr Lewis Perry, headmaster of Phillips-Exeter academy at Exeter, N. H., and Mrs Perry; Mrs John Templeton Coolidge, Jr., Mr and Mrs Horace P. Binney, Misses Anne P. and Cora W. Peabody of Milton; Miss Marion J. Homans of Marlboro street, Boston, and Miss Phyllis Robbins of Commonwealth avenue, Boston, also Mrs George S. Mumford of Chestnut Hill.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
HUDSON, N. Y.
DAILY STAR

AUG 1 - 1941

BERKSHIRE MUSIC FESTIVAL OPENED THURSDAY EVENING

The eighth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival opened last evening in the huge Music Shed at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., with Serge Koussevitsky conducting in his magnificent way the Boston Symphony Orchestra in a program of Haydn, Debussy, Villa-Lobos and Beethoven.

If there were any vacant seats in the Music Shed, they were not easily discernible, and, despite the threatening weather, an audience of between four and five thousand had assembled for the first concert at what is now the acknowledged music center of the world.

There was unbounded enthusiasm for the great Koussevitsky and for the Boston Symphony's brilliant rendition of the following program: Haydn's Symphony in G-Major, No. 88, Debussy's Nocturnes, "Nuages," "Fetes," "Sirene's," Villa-Lobos' tenth, "Choros" and Beethoven's Symphony No. 5 in C Minor. The chorus of the Berkshire Musical Association, under the direction of Horace Hunt, sang in Debussy's "Sirenes" and in the Villa-Lobos number.

During the intermission, many visited the new Theatre-Concert Hall, and the new Chamber Music Hall.

The traffic problem was skillfully handled, and a problem it certainly was, with cars from here, there and everywhere. Cars, as someone once said, in another connection, with "their license plates calling the roll of the Union."

Among those from this vicinity who attended last night's concert were Miss Mary C. Rainey and her guests, Mrs. Charles W. Rainey and Miss Elizabeth Rainey of Omaha, Neb., Mrs. William G. Studwell, Mr and Mrs Henry E. Burt, Mrs. Frank B. Holsapple, Miss Dorothy Holsapple and Howard E. Rainey, of this city; Mrs. William B. Kerr, of Maplewood, N. J., and Mrs. David Symmes Oliver, of Cincinnati, Ohio, who are visiting in this city; Mr and Mrs Carleton E. Underwood, of Chatham; James E. Leath, of Kinderhook, who had as guests in his box the Rev. and Mrs. Charles B. Thompson, Mrs. O. H. Bradley, Gerald S. Bliss, of this city, and Miss Julie Pruyn, of Kinderhook.

This Clipping From
HACKENSACK, N. J.
BERGEN-RECORD

AUG 1 - 1941

Music News And Views

By ROGER S. VREELAND

Tanglewood, Mass., Aug. 1 — With the Fifth Symphony of Beethoven still ringing in its ears, the first-night audience of the eighth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival applauded long and loud last night, after a thrilling performance by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky.

This was the best attended opening night in the history of the festival, almost double last year's opening. Approximately 8,000 persons attended from nearly all States. Capacity of the fan-shaped shed is 6,000. The other 2,000 general admissions occupied side and rear seats outside the shed, and, as usual, the lawn.

More than the usual number of New Jersey cars were noted as the traffic streamed into the several entrances starting at 7 o'clock, although the concert wasn't scheduled to begin until 8:30, and of these, Bergen County cars were predominent. While the weather doesn't get a good rating, rain in the afternoon halted in time for dry parking, although the sky remained overcast.

The one sympahty that defies boredom to the oldest veterans, a warhorse in some ways, but ever typical of the greatness of Beethoven, was given a round, sound performance, buring anew the nameless passions that credited it. The extremes of volume were in Koussevitzky's matchless control, and excellent intonations were carried through consistently by the leaders of all choirs.

For a contemporary offering, the prolific Brazilian Villa-Lobos received the honor in his Choros No. 10, Ragas O Coracao, with the assistance of the Berkshire chorus. Exciting music, calling upon primitive themes, a conglommeration of rhythms, and an excessive assortment of percussions, it was favorably intoxicating.

Debussy's music should never be played at a symphonic concert (of course it's always good dinner music) unless Koussevitzky conducts it. As far as we're concerned, the Debussy music received, the most distinctive performances. It consisted of nuages, fetes, and the Afternoon of a Faun substituted for Sirenes.

We understand the chorus was ready for Sirenes. Koussevitzky's Debussy virtues lie chiefly in its delicacy of modulations, and his refusal to be blatant.

The opening number was Haydn's G Major Symphony, No. 88, which, although conspicuously on the Boston repertoire, is not one of the best known Haydn works of the form.

This Clipping From
LAWRENCE, MASS.
TRIBUNE

AUG 1 - 1941

Boston Symphony in Gala Benefit At Tanglewood Music Festival

Serge Koussevitzky has chosen the Allegro con brio from Beethoven's Symphony No. V as the opening number when the Boston Symphony Orchestra gives a concert as a feature of the Gala Benefit at Tanglewood on Friday, August 15. Tchaikovsky's "1812" Overture will also figure on the program. Albert Spalding, who will be one of the soloists (others are to be announced) will appear in Mendelssohn's Violin Concerto.

Besides conducting his famous Orchestra, Koussevitzky will lead a picked band of 250 players drawn from the 26th Division of the United States Army. He will conduct military marches. The players, guests for the occasion, will bivouac on the grass slopes of Tanglewood, in Lenox.

Another musical program at the Gala Benefit will be presented by the members of the Berkshire Music Center, consisting of a symphony concert in the Shed, a choral concert in the Barn, opera in the new Theatre-Music Hall, and chamber music in the new Chamber Music Hall.

Randall Thompson's "Alleluia" will introduce the "Manifestation," when speakers of national fame will address the audience in the Shed. The "Alleluia" will be sung by the Festival Chorus, which consists of pupils of the school and which is likewise to appear in the Berkshire Symphonic Festival in Beethoven's "Missa Solemnis" on the night previous.

The Gala Benefit will be given to aid the fund of the United Service Organizations and the Britsih War Relief. It is hoped that there will be an even larger attendance and proceeds than last year, when a similar Benefit at Tanglewood brought 10,000pe ople and netted $23,000 for Allied Relief.

This Clipping From
WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM

AUG 1 - 1941

Beethoven's Victory Notes Open Berkshire Festival

Stockbridge Music 'Shed' Filled by 6000 Persons to Hear Boston Symphony Play

By JOHN SELBY
Associated Press Arts Editor

STOCKBRIDGE, July 31 (AP) — The four-note opening figure of the Fifth Beethoven symphony—notes that are whistled, played and sung throughout Europe to match the "V for Victory" sign—were sounded tonight at Tanglewood as the Berkshire symphonic festival entered its eighth season.

The work came after the intermission and Dr. Serge Koussevitzky had purposely programmed the symphony as his musical gesture for the day.

The one major music festival in a suffering world which has, practically speaking, no financial problems, had an opening audience of 6000 persons—the largest in its history.

No Financial Worry

All its financial worry disappeared early last June, when the subscription lists were closed three weeks early and the staff turned its attention to the more congenial business of preparing the program.

Thirty-three hundred of the 6000 seats each season are sold in advance. The remainder of the seats are disposed of singly, instead of by series.

When Dr. Koussevitzky raised his baton for the opening bars of Haydn's 88th Symphony the audience had musical cause for gratitude, as always when the Boston Symphony plays. There was another reason, however, which is the remarkable "shed" which houses the festival. For "Berkshire Luck" did not hold with today's weather, which was wet.

Dampness in Strings

The dampness dulled unavoidably the orchestra's magnificent string section, but affected the audience very little.

Besides the two symphonies, the music included DeBussy's "L'Apres Midi d'Un Faun" and Villa-Lobe's "Chores No. 10," in the last of which the Berkshire Musical Association chorus made its first appearance.

The audience this year includes the students of Dr. Koussevitzky's now famous Berkshire music center as well as people from every State in the Union. Hotels and inns within a radius of 25 miles are crowded with festival guests and many have driven in a hundred miles or more.

The first of the three series which make up the festival will close with concerts Saturday night and Sunday afternoon.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE

AUG 1 - 1941

Koussevitzky OpensFestival In Berkshires

Crowd Defies Rain to Hear Boston Orchestra Usher In Series at Tanglewood

By Francis D. Perkins

LENOX, Mass., July 31.—Damp but improving weather marked the opening of the eighth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival here tonight in the music shed on the Tanglewood Estate, where a large audience applauded the playing of the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky.

His program for the first of the nine festival concerts began with a familiar and well loved work, Haydn's symphony in G major, No. 88, and closed with the still more familiar fifth symphony of Beethoven. The other works were Debussy's Nocturnes, Clouds and Festivals and his "Afternoon of a Faun," and "Rasga O Coracao" by Brazil's best known composer, Heiter Villa Lobos. "The Afternoon of a Faun" was substituted for Debussy's originally announced "Sirenes." In the Brazilian work, which was first heard in New York in a Schola Cantorum concert about ten years ago, the chorus was that of the Berkshire Musical Association, trained by Horace Hunt.

Showers End Early

This is the sixth festival to be held with the participation of the Boston Symphony under Dr. Koussevitzky, the fifth to be held at Tanglewood and the fourth to take place in the music shed. In this connection the vagaries of the weather had proved ultimately beneficial four summers ago, when a memorable thunder shower graphically demonstrated the necessity of providing such a building as soon as possible. Today the weather was not particularly benign to begin with; the dampness caused the rupture of a number of instrumental strings during the morning rehearsal. But the showers culminated in the afternoon, and during the hour before the concert there was no rain to hinder the arrival of the festival patrons and the parking of several thousand cars. It cleared sufficiently to allow various music lovers to follow the familiar Tanglewood custom of listening to the music from seats on the grass outside the auditorium. Meanwhile, the audience was said to be the largest which has attended a Berkshire festival Thursday night program thus far.

Acoustics Unimpaired

The music shed has undergone no apparent change since last summer and retains its excellent acoustic qualities; it was remarkable how well every detail of the Haydn score, every nuance of dynamics and instrumental color, could be heard from the outer rim of the vast structure and from some distance beyond it.

Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, president of the festival, has announced that contributions are still necessary to complete the structure as planned, particularly the supply of roll shutters to protect the audiences against sudden storms and to close the shed during the winter. The Berkshire Music Center, which completes its second season with this festival, has acquired a new building for opera performances and concerts and various other new facilities. A third season has already been announced for 1941.

Owing to considerations of time, comment on the performance itself must be deferred until tomorrow. In general, the noted orchestra's playing of the Haydn and Debussy music was characterized by its traditional high standards of performance, and the Berkshire Choristers sang with notable spirit in Villa Lobo's pungently rhythmic music.

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN

AUG 1 - 1941

Berkshire's Music Festival Leading Event for Society

Gov and Mrs Lehman of New York Among Prominent Boxholders—Many Have Guests for Opening of Eighth Annual Event

Special Dispatch to The Republican

Berkshire Hills, July 31—As a society event, the opening tonight of the eighth annual Berkshire music festival at Tanglewood, between Lenox and Stockbridge, was an important midsummer event. All boxes had been sold weeks in advance. Noticed in that section were Gov and Mrs Herbert H. Lehman of New York, who expect to attend all three first-series concerts.

As in other years, Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, president of the Berkshire Symphonic festival, had boxes 1 and 2, and her guests tonight were her mother, Mrs Robinson Smith; Miss Miriam K. Oliver, Mrs E. Corning Townsend, Mrs Montgomery Hare, Stuart Montgomery of Boston, William Miles, Malcolm Vaughan, Leonardo Casanova and Bryn Strandanaes of New York.

In a box with Mrs Serge Koussevitzky, wife of the conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra, were Ernest B. Dane, Jr., president of the orchestra corporation, and Mrs Dane.

With Mrs George Otis Rockwood and daughter, Princess Diane R. Eristavi, was their house guest at Laurel Mere, Lawrence Smith Butler; also Mr and Mrs William E. Dodge Stokes and John P. S. Harrison.

Mr and Mrs Walter Atherton had as guests, Mr and Mrs Ray Atherton of Washington, formerly of the American embassy at Copenhagen, and Mr and Mrs Alexander Whiteside of Boston. In the box with Mr and Mrs Samuel Gilbert Colt, of Pittsfield, were Mrs James D. Colt and Mrs Clement S. Houghton of Chestnut Hill.

Mrs W. Rockwood Gibbs had as box guests her brother-in-law and sister, Mr and Mrs Edward De Witt Shumway of Lake Forest, Ill; Mr and Mrs C. Lambert Heyniger, Ensign Arthur Edward Anderson, Miss Kathleen Parlow and David Donald.

Following a dinner party at Great Barrington, Mr and Mrs Thomas H. Blodgett had in their box, Mr and Mrs August J. Cordier, Mr and Mrs Daniel G. Tenney, Mrs Ward C. Belcher and Mr and Mrs Walter H. Mann.

Noticed with Miss M. Symphorosa Bristed were Mrs Andrew Varick Stout, Mrs John B. Casserly, Mrs R. High Carleton, Dr Emil Enthoven of New York and Richard Jenkins of Baltimore. With Mr and Mrs J. Dwight Francis were Robert H. Pitney and Howell Forbes.

Mr and Mrs Maclin P. Davis and Mrs Robert W. Whiton Stuart were with Mr and Mrs Norman H. Davis.

Among others who had box guests were, Mr and Mrs John Barry Ryan, Mr and Mrs Eldridge Gerry Chadwick, Mr and Mrs John W. Garrett, Mrs Edward S. Harkness, Rev Dr and Mrs Anson Phelps Stokes, Misses Edith Scoville and Edith J. Clapp, Mrs John S. Newberry, Mrs Benjamin Rogers, Mrs Frederic A. Keep, Mr and Mrs John Shepard, Jr., Mr and Mrs Donald F. McPherson, Mr and Mrs Myron C. Taylor, Mrs Donald J. Warner, Mr and Mrs Bruce Crane and Col and Mrs E. Parmalee Prentice.

With Mr and Mrs John Butler Swann at Cherry Hill, Stockbridge, for the music festival are Dr Lewis Perry, headmaster of Phillips-Exeter academy at Exeter, N. H., and Mrs Perry; Mrs John Templeton Coolidge, Jr., Mr and Mrs Horace P. Binney, Misses Anne P. and Cora W. Peabody of Milton; Miss Marion J. Homans of Marlboro street, Boston, and Miss Phyllis Robbins of Commonwealth avenue, Boston, also Mrs George S. Mumford of Chestnut Hill.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
HUDSON, N. Y.
DAILY STAR

AUG 1 - 1941

BERKSHIRE MUSIC FESTIVAL OPENED THURSDAY EVENING

The eighth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival opened last evening in the huge Music Shed at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., with Serge Kousevitsky conducting in his magnificent way the Boston Symphony Orchestra in a program of Haydn, Debussy, Villa-Lobos and Beethoven.

If there were any vacant seats in the Music Shed, they were not easily discernible, and, despite the threatening weather, an audience of between four and five thousand had assembled for the first concert at what is now the acknowledged music center of the world.

There was unbounded enthusiasm for the great Koussevitsky and for the Boston Symphony's brilliant rendition of the following program: Haydn's Symphony in G-Major, No. 88, Debussy's Nocturnes, "Nuages," "Fetes," "Sirene's," Villa-Lobos' tenth, "Choros" and Beethoven's Symphony No. 5 in C Minor. The chorus of the Berkshire Musical Association, under the direction of Horace Hunt, sang in Debussy's "Sirenes" and in the Villa-Lobos number.

During the intermission, many visited the new Theatre-Concert Hall, and the new Chamber Music Hall.

The traffic problem was skillfully handled, and a problem it certainly was, with cars from here, there and everywhere. Cars, as someone once said, in another connection, with "their license plates calling the roll of the Union."

Among those from this vicinity who attended last night's concert were Miss Mary C. Rainey and her guests, Mrs. Charles W. Rainey and Miss Elizabeth Rainey of Omaha, Neb., Mrs. William G. Studwell, Mr and Mrs Henry E. Burt, Mrs. Frank B. Holsapple, Miss Dorothy Holsapple and Howard E. Rainey, of this city; Mrs. William B. Kerr, of Maplewood, N. J., and Mrs. David Symmes Oliver, of Cincinnati, Ohio, who are visiting in this city; Mr and Mrs Carleton E. Underwood, of Chatham; James E. Leath, of Kinderhook, who had as guests in his box the Rev. and Mrs. Charles B. Thompson, Mrs. O. H. Bradley, Gerald S. Bliss, of this city, and Miss Julie Pruyn, of Kinderhook.

This Clipping From
HACKENSACK, N. J.
BERGEN-RECORD

AUG 1 - 1941

Music News And Views

By ROGER S. VREELAND

Tanglewood, Mass., Aug. 1 — With the Fifth Symphony of Beethoven still ringing in its ears, the first-night audience of the eighth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival applauded long and loud last night, after a thrilling performance by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky.

This was the best attended opening night in the history of the festival, almost double last year's opening. Approximately 8,000 persons attended from nearly all States. Capacity of the fan-shaped shed is 6,000. The other 2,000 general admissions occupied side and rear seats outside the shed, and, as usual, the lawn.

More than the usual number of New Jersey cars were noted as the traffic streamed into the several entrances starting at 7 o'clock, although the concert wasn't scheduled to begin until 8:30, and of these, Bergen County cars were predominent. While the weather doesn't get a good rating, rain in the afternoon halted in time for dry parking, although the sky remained overcast.

The one sympahty that defies boredom to the oldest veterans, a warhorse in some ways, but ever typical of the greatness of Beethoven, was given a round, sound performance, buring anew the nameless passions that credited it. The extremes of volume were in Koussevitzky's matchless control, and excellent intonations were carried through consistently by the leaders of all choirs.

For a contemporary offering, the prolific Brazilian Villa-Lobos received the honor in his Choros No. 10, Ragas O Coracao, with the assistance of the Berkshire chorus. Exciting music, calling upon primitive themes, a conglommeration of rhythms, and an excessive assortment of percussions, it was favorably intoxicating.

Debussy's music should never be played at a symphonic concert (of course it's always good dinner music) unless Koussevitzky conducts it. As far as we're concerned, the Debussy music received, the most distinctive performances. It consisted of nuages, fetes, and the Afternoon of a Faun substituted for Sirenes.

We understand the chorus was ready for Sirenes. Koussevitzky's Debussy virtues lie chiefly in its delicacy of modulations, and his refusal to be blatant.

The opening number was Haydn's G Major Symphony, No. 88, which, although conspicuously on the Boston repertoire, is not one of the best known Haydn works of the form.

This Clipping From
LAWRENCE, MASS.
TRIBUNE

AUG 1 - 1941

Boston Symphony in Gala Benefit At Tanglewood Music Festival

Serge Koussevitzky has chosen the Allegro con brio from Beethoven's Symphony No. V as the opening number when the Boston Symphony Orchestra gives a concert as a feature of the Gala Benefit at Tanglewood on Friday, August 15. Tchaikovsky's "1812" Overture will also figure on the program. Albert Spalding, who will be one of the soloists (others are to be announced) will appear in Mendelssohn's Violin Concerto.

Besides conducting his famous Orchestra, Koussevitzky will lead a picked band of 250 players drawn from the 26th Division of the United States Army. He will conduct military marches. The players, guests for the occasion, will bivouac on the grass slopes of Tanglewood, in Lenox.

Another musical program at the Gala Benefit will be presented by the members of the Berkshire Music Center, consisting of a symphony concert in the Shed, a choral concert in the Barn, opera in the new Theatre-Music Hall, and chamber music in the new Chamber Music Hall.

Randall Thompson's "Alleluia" will introduce the "Manifestation," when speakers of national fame will address the audience in the Shed. The "Alleluia" will be sung by the Festival Chorus, which consists of pupils of the school and which is likewise to appear in the Berkshire Symphonic Festival in Beethoven's "Missa Solemnis" on the night previous.

The Gala Benefit will be given to aid the fund of the United Service Organizations and the Britsih War Relief. It is hoped that there will be an even larger attendance and proceeds than last year, when a similar Benefit at Tanglewood brought 10,000pe ople and netted $23,000 for Allied Relief.

This Clipping From
WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM

AUG 1 - 1941

Beethoven's Victory Notes Open Berkshire Festival

Stockbridge Music 'Shed' Filled by 6000 Persons to Hear Boston Symphony Play

By JOHN SELBY
Associated Press Arts Editor

STOCKBRIDGE, July 31 (AP) — The four-note opening figure of the Fifth Beethoven symphony—notes that are whistled, played and sung throughout Europe to match the "V for Victory" sign—were sounded tonight at Tanglewood as the Berkshire symphonic festival entered its eighth season.

The work came after the intermission and Dr. Serge Koussevitzky had purposely programmed the symphony as his musical gesture for the day.

The one major music festival in a suffering world which has, practically speaking, no financial problems, had an opening audience of 6000 persons—the largest in its history.

No Financial Worry

All its financial worry disappeared early last June, when the subscription lists were closed three weeks early and the staff turned its attention to the more congenial business of preparing the program.

Thirty-three hundred of the 6000 seats each season are sold in advance. The remainder of the seats are disposed of singly, instead of by series.

When Dr. Koussevitzky raised his baton for the opening bars of Haydn's 88th Symphony the audience had musical cause for gratitude, as always when the Boston Symphony plays. There was another reason, however, which is the remarkable "shed" which houses the festival. For "Berkshire Luck" did not hold with today's weather, which was wet.

Dampness in Strings

The dampness dulled unavoidably the orchestra's magnificent string section, but affected the audience very little.

Besides the two symphonies, the music included DeBussy's "L'Apres Midi d'Un Faun" and Villa-Lobe's "Chores No. 10," in the last of which the Berkshire Musical Association chorus made its first appearance.

The audience this year includes the students of Dr. Koussevitzky's now famous Berkshire music center as well as people from every State in the Union. Hotels and inns within a radius of 25 miles are crowded with festival guests and many have driven in a hundred miles or more.

The first of the three series which make up the festival will close with concerts Saturday night and Sunday afternoon.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE

AUG 1 - 1941

Koussevitzky OpensFestival In Berkshires

Crowd Defies Rain to Hear Boston Orchestra Usher In Series at Tanglewood

By Francis D. Perkins

LENOX, Mass., July 31.—Damp but improving weather marked the opening of the eighth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival here tonight in the music shed on the Tanglewood Estate, where a large audience applauded the playing of the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky.

His program for the first of the nine festival concerts began with a familiar and well loved work, Haydn's symphony in G major, No. 88, and closed with the still more familiar fifth symphony of Beethoven. The other works were Debussy's Nocturnes, Clouds and Festivals and his "Afternoon of a Faun," and "Rasga O Coracao" by Brazil's best known composer, Heiter Villa Lobos. "The Afternoon of a Faun" was substituted for Debussy's originally announced "Sirenes." In the Brazilian work, which was first heard in New York in a Schola Cantorum concert about ten years ago, the chorus was that of the Berkshire Musical Association, trained by Horace Hunt.

Showers End Early

This is the sixth festival to be held with the participation of the Boston Symphony under Dr. Koussevitzky, the fifth to be held at Tanglewood and the fourth to take place in the music shed. In this connection the vagaries of the weather had proved ultimately beneficial four summers ago, when a memorable thunder shower graphically demonstrated the necessity of providing such a building as soon as possible. Today the weather was not particularly benign to begin with; the dampness caused the rupture of a number of instrumental strings during the morning rehearsal. But the showers culminated in the afternoon, and during the hour before the concert there was no rain to hinder the arrival of the festival patrons and the parking of several thousand cars. It cleared sufficiently to allow various music lovers to follow the familiar Tanglewood custom of listening to the music from seats on the grass outside the auditorium. Meanwhile, the audience was said to be the largest which has attended a Berkshire festival Thursday night program thus far.

Acoustics Unimpaired

The music shed has undergone no apparent change since last summer and retains its excellent acoustic qualities; it was remarkable how well every detail of the Haydn score, every nuance of dynamics and instrumental color, could be heard from the outer rim of the vast structure and from some distance beyond it.

Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, president of the festival, has announced that contributions are still necessary to complete the structure as planned, particularly the supply of roll shutters to protect the audiences against sudden storms and to close the shed during the winter. The Berkshire Music Center, which completes its second season with this festival, has acquired a new building for opera performances and concerts and various other new facilities. A third season has already been announced for 1941.

Owing to considerations of time, comment on the performance itself must be deferred until tomorrow. In general, the noted orchestra's playing of the Haydn and Debussy music was characterized by its traditional high standards of performance, and the Berkshire Choristers sang with notable spirit in Villa Lobo's pungently rhythmic music.

227

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE

AUG 1 - 1941

Gov. and Mrs. Lehman At Berkshire Festival

Opening Concert Draws Crowd to Tanglewood, Lenox

Special to the Herald Tribune

BERKSHIRE HILLS, Mass., July 31.—Governor and Mrs. Herbert H. Lehman of New York attended the opening of the eighth annual Berkshire Musical Festival tonight at Tanglewood, Lenox. With Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, president of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, Inc., were her mother, Mrs. Robinson Smith, Miss Miriam K. Oliver, Mrs. E. Corning Townsend, Mrs. Montgomery Hare, Messrs. William Miles, Malcolm Vaughn, Leonardo Casanova, Bryn Strandanaes, of New York, and Stuart Montgomery, of Boston.

Mr. Ernest B. Dane jr., president of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and Mrs. [redacted] visiting Dr. and Mrs. Serge Koussevitzky, were in their box.

Mr. and Mrs. Thomas H. Blodgett gave a dinner at Great Pine Farm, Great Barrington, and took their guests Mr. and Mrs. August J. Cordier, Mr. and Mrs. Walter H. Mann, Mr. and Mrs. Daniel G. Tenney and Mrs. Ward C. Belcher to the concert.

With Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Gilbert Colt were Mrs. Clement S. Houghton and Mrs. James D. Coit. With Miss Symphorosa Bristed were Mrs. John B. Casserly, Mrs. R. High Carleton, Mrs. Andrew Varick Stout, Dr. Emil Enthover, of New York, and Mr. Richard Jenkins, Baltimore. With Mrs. W. Rockwood Gibbs were Mr. and Mrs. Edward De Witt Shumway, of Lake Forest, Ill.; Mr. and Mrs. C. Lambert Heyniger, Miss Kathleen Parlow, Ensign Arthur Edwards Anderson, U. S. N., and Mrs. David Donald.

Mrs. George Otis Rockwood and daughter, Princess Diane R. Eristavi, had as guests Mr. Lawrence Smith Butler, Mr. and Mrs. William E. Dodge Stokes and Mr. John P. S. Harrison.

With Mr. and Mrs. Walter Atherton were Mr. and Mrs. Ray Atherton, of Washington, formerly of the American Embassy in London; Mrs. Atherton and Mr. and Mrs. Alexander Whiteside, Boston. Mr. and Mrs. James Dwight Francis's guests were Messrs. Robert H. Pitney and Howell Forbes.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
SUN

AUG 1 - 1941

DEBUT OF CHORUS AT STOCKBRIDGE

Koussevitzky Conducts a Villa-Lobos Novelty.

By OSCAR THOMPSON.

Special to THE NEW YORK SUN.

Stockbridge, Mass., Aug. 1.—Though two days of rain did nothing to help the ticket sellers, the eighth annual Berkshire Music Festival opened at Tanglewood last night. Of the 7,500 estimated to have heard the Boston Symphony Orchestra perform its program of Haydn, Debussy, Villa-Lobos and Beethoven under the always vitalizing leadership of its regular conductor, Serge Koussevitzky, more than a thousand were outside the shed, where they could not see the leader or his players. This was no new story at Tanglewood, but it meant that hundreds had brought blankets or other protection with them to enable them to sit or recline on the damp grass a few hours after the day's downpour was over.

The new element of last night's concert was found in the participation for the first time of the chorus of the Berkshire Musical Association, an organization of about 150 voices, of which Horace Hunt is the conductor. Last night it was merged with the orchestra under Dr. Koussevitzky's baton to provide the requisite vocal and instrumental ensemble for a novelty from Brazil. This was "Rasga O Coracao," No. 10 of that curiously varied series of works to which Heitor Villa-Lobos has given the general title Choros, rather dubiously translated as serenade.

The particular Choros has had performances in New York and elsewhere in this country, but it remains a strange and absorbing composition that is little known. The use of various curious pulsatile instruments, including a glass bottle filled with gravel and called a caxambu, results in a succession of unusual effects in the long instrumental introduction that leads into the choral section. With the entry of the voices the work becomes a rhythmic orgy. Last night's performance was genuinely a stirring one, if not faultless in its co-ordination.

The chorus was also to have been heard in the third of the Debussy "Nocturnes," "Sirens," but perhaps because the Villa-Lobos work was so difficult a task the purely orchestral "Afternoon of a Faun" was substituted. This, together with "Clouds" and "Festivals," was exquisitely played.

The concert began with a finely polished presentation of Haydn's "Paris" Symphony in G major (No. 88) and closed with the great striding brasses of Beethoven's Fifth Symphony. Now that the "fate" of "Thus fate knocks at the door" has been changed to "victory" it was interesting to have recalled that the Haydn G major symphony long ago was labeled in the London Philharmonic Society catalogue as "Letter V." But as last night's demonstrations were plainly for the conductor and his ensemble, here was obviously a case of V for virtuoso.

This Clipping From
HOLYOKE, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT TELEGRAM

AUG 1 - 1941

Berkshire Festival Lacks Nothing; 7500 Sit In On Brilliant Opening

To the ears of one of the Boston symphony orchestra musicians, the performance opening the eighth annual Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood last night was a brilliant one—smooth and full of virtuosity. One might claim that he'd be expected to give his own team the best of it, but he said everything seemed to go right last night, which isn't always the case.

As if to show that he wasn't giving a sales talk, he allowed that the Haydn symphony was played too fast. "He didn't take it so fast at rehearsal," the violinist said. "He" at the Berkshire Festival is always Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, conductor of the orchestra, director of the Festival, originator of the summer music school, and general guiding genius of the whole Tanglewood development. "He," our violinist told us, considers the achievement at Tanglewood the greatest accomplishment of his career. A glance at the 7500 people who traveled from countless states in dubious weather to hear Koussevitsky's orchestra last night would more than justify this view.

The Haydn Symphony in G major may have been a little fast but it was bright and gay and seemed to reflect the enthusiasm with which both audience and orchestra greeted a new season at Tanglewood. It was chosen, however, not for this reason as much as for the fast that it was iriginally listed in the London Philharmonic society catalogue as "V." A work by Villa-Lobos, and a finale of Beethoven's Fifth symphony repeated the symbol of imperial victory, particularly appropriate in this stronghold of pseudo-British aristocracy.

Perhaps it was a wistful tribute to the French to include Debussy in the program. At any rate, his Nuages," "Fetes" and "L'Apres-Midi l'un Faune" were a shimmering addition to a program which lacked nothing in variety, including as it did early and high classic, romantic, and modern compositions.

The color of the evening came with the debut of the Berkshire Chorus, a local amateur group trained close to professional standards by Koussevitsky. They sang with the orchestra Choros No. 10 by the Brazilian composer, Villa-Lobos, a startling conglomeration of rhythms and melodies, combining native and popular motives in a completely refreshing, if surprising, manner.

Then after intermission the audience settled down in satisfied silence to hear the favorite of all symphonies, Beethoven's C minor, which in spite of its present use to bolster the morale of suppressed populations was of a grandeur to make one forget for a while that there are such things as suppressed populations.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
PM

AUG 1 - 1941

Berkshire Festival Is World's Best, By Heck and By Default

By HENRY SIMON

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 1.—Like the Lewisohn Stadium concerts this season, the Berkshire Festival opening attracted a record-breaking crowd last night. In spite of muggy weather everywhere and a rainy afternoon in some directions, over 7500 came to the Tanglewood Music Shed to hear Serge Koussevitzky conduct the Boston Symphony in the first of the nine programs that will constitute the Festival.

In many respects, this is the most important summer music festival in the U. S. A. —probably, today, in the world. It marks the culmination of a summer's study and work in pretty nearly ideal surroundings for several hundred music students from all parts of the country. They take back with them the musical insight and experience they have gained from an unusually able group of leaders headed by Mr. Koussevitzky, who is the founder, guide and inspiration of the whole project.

The chorus of the Berkshire Musical Association, trained by Horace Hunt, is made up of students. It took part last night in the Villa-Lobos Choros No. 10 an exciting, difficult modern work with a firm basis of Debussy laid over with Shostakovich and Senor Villa-Lobos's own highly colored orchestration, syncopated rhythms and Brazilian folk-like themes.

New Yorkers have heard this work before but it was the only number approaching novelty on the program. The rest constituted the Haydn Symphony in G (No. 88), Nuages Fetes and Afternoon of a Faun by Debussy and the Beethoven Fifth or Victory Symphony.

Most of the works done at these festivals are from the standard repertoire of the orchestra. There is not the adventurousness one might expect in a great music festival. But the purpose seems to be to play the greatest of music in the greatest manner. This it invariably succeeds in doing and last night's concert was no exception. One might point out weaknesses here and there—even a clinker in the Beethoven Fifth—but the high standard of performance in general, the intensity of the playing and its general precision and beauty testify to the devotion of Mr. Koussevitzky to this work, the value of adequate rehearsal time (which most summer programs don't get), and the rightness of every Bostonian's conviction that his is the best orchestra going.

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
EVENING UNION

AUG 1 - 1941

BIGGEST CROWD AT OPENING OF CONCERT SERIES

Boston Symphony Delights Thousands by Program at Tanglewood

By Willard M. Clark

STOCKBRIDGE, Aug. 1—In spite of weather that constantly threatened to, but did not, loose another downpour of the sort that has drenched Western Massachusetts this week, the largest opening crowd in Berkshire Music Festival history attended this year's initial concert at Tanglewood last night.

Aside from soggy parking fields, which almost but not quite bogged down some of the thousands of cars, no untoward incidents marred a program which was outstanding when judged even by the high standard of the Berkshire concerts.

It was very much like an old home week. Many people have occupied the same seats or boxes for several seasons and the atmosphere was informal and friendly. Dr. Serge Koussevitzky was greeted with prolonged applause when he entered, the orchestra rising to greet him. Out on the lawn little groups braved the threatening weather and enjoyed the concert in solid comfort. The refreshment stand did a land office business. This year there are two new buildings, the theater and studio. Functional in design, they have been built with a definite end in view and make possible an enlarged program of activities.

Chorus Introduced

Dr. Koussevitzky introduced tonight the chorus of the Berkshire Musical Association, a group of 150 singers who have been trained by Horace Hunt. They made their debut in "Choros No. 10" a work by Villa-Lobos. The women's chorus was to have sung the third of the Debussy nocturnes, "Sirens" but this was omitted and it was rumored that the group did not approximate Dr. Koussevitzky's conception of singing sirens. As a whole, the chorus negotiated the difficult passages of the Villa-Lobos work with a deal of style and tonal vigor.

Aside from this work there was nothing new on the program. It was made up of numbers long in the repertoire and which Dr. Koussevitzky has made particularly his own. The program opened with a delightful performance of Haydn's "Symphony in G Major," surely one of the finest symphonies of this prolific composer. Its lovely, large, rugged minuet and breezy finale were played according to the best traditions of this grea orchestra.

The audience was particularly fortunate in hearing a definitive performance of Debussy's Prelude to "The Afternoon of a Faun." Few conductors are as happy in the interpretation of the music of this composer as Dr Koussevitzky. Like the two nocturnes "Nuages" and "Fetes," the prelude was painted in myriad colors with every nuance, every rhythm given its due.

In sharp contrast to the pastel this "Choros" or serenade by Villa-Lobos. According to the composer, it represents a new form in musical composition in which are synthesized the different modalities of Brazilian, Indian and popular music having for principal elements rhythm and any typical melody of popular character. Percussion instruments, new and strange to North American orchestras, are used effectively and the music at times becomes downright brutal, yet it has contrasting passages of simple melodies. The chorus sings a chant to a highly rhythmic accompaniment. First the men and then the women take the melody, against a sort of patter accompaniment. It is difficult music to sing and the chorus came through nobly.

The final number was Beethoven's "Fifth Symphony," a perfect choice for these troubled days when the British are using its opening phrase of three short notes and one long note to denote "V" for victory.

Dr. Koussevitzky gave a heroic, electrifying reading. The music hurled its defiance to the heavens and there was no gainsaying its forthright, sweeping storminess.

The audience was enraptured as audiences always are when Dr. Koussevitzky piles climax on climax, and with his men he received a veritable ovation at the close.

Saturday night the program includes the "Italian Symphony" by Mendelssohn; the third overture to "Leonora" by Beethoven and the Fifth Symphony," by Shostakovitch.

Wet Parking Field Causes Trouble

STOCKBRIDGE, Aug. 1 — Wet grounds failed to dampen the enthusiasm of more than 2500 motorists, who with their passengers made up the oversold shed at the opening of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival last night. Packed in row on row in the great field to the north of the shed, the autos had little trouble getting in, but more in getting out. For two days the skies have poured more than three and a half inches of rain on the Berkshires, and the gods refused to bow even before the majesty of Serge Koussevitzky and kept dumping it down. But by concert time, the [illegible] had cleared, leaving as a reminder of the two days of storm a badly soaked parking field. Cars slithered and slid and while there were no serious tie-ups, and only one or two had to have assistance, officials of the festival for a time were worried.

Noted in the distinguished audience were Gov. Herbert H. Lehman and Mrs. Lehman of New York; Mrs. A. A. Berle, whose husband is assistant secretary of state; Mrs. Edward Bok of Philadelphia; Norman Davis, national chairman of the American Red Cross, and Mrs. Davis; Cole Porter, the composer, of New York City and Mrs. Porter; Kathleen Parlow, eminent violinist; Albert Spalding, violinist, and Mrs. Spalding; Rev. Anson Phelps Stokes of the Washington Cathedral and Mrs. Stokes; Lowell Thomas, the author, and Mrs. Thomas. In a central box full of guests was Mrs. Koussevitzky, wife of the conductor of the Boston orchestra.

Low-hanging clouds enveloped the Berkshire summits when the crowd was going home and made driving hazardous particularly for those going toward Springfield, but no accidents were reported.

228

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM

AUG 1 - 1941

Koussevitzky Opens Festival

Record Crowd Hears Program at Tanglewood

By ROBERT BAGAR.

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 1.—The hullabaloo, the excitement and the generally frantic atmosphere surrounding the opening of the eighth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Tanglewood, between Stockbridge and Lenox, Mass., last evening were all worth it, thanks to the magnificent management of the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky.

From far and wide the music lovers have come to this amazing shrine to music, which every year increases in scope and grandeur.

The weather, none too promising during the day, turned out agreeable after all, and last night was a perfect night for music in the socially picturesque and, one may even say, inspiring environment of the festival grounds.

* * *

Balanced Program.

Mr. Koussevitzky, with his usual savoir faire, had devised one of those beautifully balanced programs, which covered a variety of schools and styles. There was the Haydn Symphony in G Major, No. 88; three items by Debussy, including Nuages, Fetes and the Afternoon of a Faun; the Villa-Lobes Chorus No. 10 and the Beethoven Fifth Symphony. The chorus of the Berkshire Musical Assn., some 150 voices, took part in the performance of the Villa-Lobes number.

It wouldn't be a sinecure to describe the feats accomplished by the Bostonians in the delivery of the Debussy pieces, for instance. The composer employs a palette that calls for few colors but an infinite host of shadings.

This sort of thing lies perfectly within the performing range of this group of musicians. Mr. Koussevitzky made whole worlds materialize before the rapt ears and eyes of the 8000 present, the largest crowd ever to attend an opening night of the festival. He was the alchemist, and the ingredients he mingled were the myriad thoughts and moods supplied him by Debussy.

One shall not easily forget the provocative finish and gloss to the account of Nuages and the fiery, tempestuous and yet many-sided revelry of Fetes.

* * *

Resourceful Reading.

As if this weren't enough, he called into play the whole battery of the orchestra's and the chorus' resources in the reading of the Villa-Lobes. Here the music runs a course of strange pagan, fierce and exultant experiences comparable, perhaps, to the frenzied contrast of life itself.

One sustained section of the work reached a zenith of some kind or other for massed hysteria. The rhythm plunges forward at a medium foxtrot tempo, but the thematic material surveys the idioms of a hemisphere from salon tunes to the jungle cries of barbaric peoples.

No report of the proceedings would be complete without mention of the fine classicism displayed in the performance of the Haydn and, for more than good measure, the authoritative exposition of the Beethoven. Needless to say, the gathering went wild after each contribution.

This Clipping From
PEEKSKILL, N. Y.
EVENING STAR

AUG 1 - 1941

Berkshire Festival Opened Last Night

Music lovers from this community who have attended previous festivals at Tanglewood, Stockbridge, Mass., are looking forward to the eighth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival, which opened last night and will continue through August 17.

The new concert-theater dedicated last Sunday is being used. Last night's concert featured the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky, conductor, assisted by the chorus of the Berkshire Musical Association under the direction of Horace Hunt. This evening's program will include the South Mountain Quartet with Marcel Grandjany, French harpist as visiting artist. Harold Bauer, noted pianist, is to be the guest-artist on August 15.

This Clipping From
UTICA, N. Y.
OBSERVER DISPATCH

AUG 1 - 1941

Valley Women Attend Bay State Music Fest

Herkimer—The Mohawk Valley was represented Thursday night at the first open air concert to be given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Stockbridge, Mass.

Mrs. Bronson Quackenbush, Herkimer, drove to the Berkshires Music Festival, accompanied by Mrs. Gilbert Jones, San Diego, Mrs. H. M. Dexter and Miss Eleanor Brennan, Ilion, and Mrs Mervin Williams, Lyons Falls.

This Clipping From
HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES

AUG 1 - 1941

Honor Guests at Opening of Berkshire Festival

—(AP Photo

Governor Lehman of New York in contemplative mood listens to a Haydn symphony. He and Mrs. Lehman occupied a box at the first concert of the eighth annual symphonic series of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood.

This Clipping From
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

AUG 1 - 1941

Miss Tracy Lee Chairman for Symphony Benefit

LEE.—Miss Magdalen Tracy of Park Street has been named chairman in Lee for the annual gala benefit at Tanglewood Aug. 15. This benefit is held for the United Service Organization and the British War Relief, under the auspices of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival and the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Miss Mary Shaughnessy is in charge of tickets on prizes. Admission tickets for the benefit may be purchased now.

This Clipping From
HOLYOKE, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT TELEGRAM

AUG 1 - 1941

The Oracle

Men in the region of Springfield, Vt., who are working in the busy defense industries there, have the same transportation problems that Holyokers have who are employed at Pratt & Whitney. This is from the Windham, Vt., correspondent of the Brattleboro Reformer: "Rupert Carleton began work Monday for Bryant Chucking Grinder Co., in Springfield. This makes five Windham men who drive each day to work in Springfield. As none of them work the same hours it is hard to double up on transportation. For a few weeks Richard Field has been riding with L. G. Stowell."

◇ ◇

One of the very great hours of the entire Berkshire Festival will be on Aug. 15 when the bands of the 26th Division will play under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky. The director went down to Camp Edwards one day and the bands played for him. He was so thrilled that he asked them to come to Stockbridge for the day when the British War Relief and USO will divide the proceeds of one of the biggest benefit playdays the nation will have this year. There will be 260 men in those bands and Koussevitsch will do them the honor of conducting them.

Koussevitzky OpensFestival In Berkshires

Aug. 1. 1941

Crowd Defies Rain to Hear Boston Orchestra Usher In Series at Tanglewood

By Francis D. Perkins

LENOX, Mass., July 31.—Damp but improving weather marked the opening of the eighth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival here tonight in the music shd on the Tanglewood Estate, where a large audience applauded the playing of the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky's.

This program for the first of the nine festival concerts began with a familiar and well loved work, Haydn's symphony in G major, No. 88, and closed with the still more familiar fifth symphony of Beethoven. The other works were Debussy's Nocturnes, Clouds and Festivals and his "Afternoon of a Faun," and "Rasga Ocoracao" by Brazil's best known composer, Heiter Villa Lobos. "The Afternoon of a Faun" was substituted for Debussy's originally announced Sirenes. In the Brazilian work, which was first heard in New York in a Schola Cantotrum chorus about ten years ago, the chorus was that of the Berkshire Musical Association, trained by Horace Hunt.

This is the sixth festival to be held with the participation of the Boston Symphony under Dr. Koussevitzky, the fifth to be held at Tanglewood and the fourth to take place in the music shed. In this connection the vagaries of the weather had proved ultimately beneficial four summers ago, when a memorable thunder shower graphically demonstrated the necessity of providing such a building as soon as possible. Today the weather was not particularly beingn to begin with; the dampness caused the rupture of a number of instrumental strings during the morning rehearsal. But the showers culminated in the afternoon, and during the hour before the concert there was no rain to hinder the arrival of the festival patrons and the parking of several thousand cars. It cleared sufficiently to allow various music lovers to follow the familiar Tanglewood custom of listening to the music from seats on the grass outside the auditorium. Meanwhile, the audience was said to be the largest which has attended a Berkshire festival Thursday night program thus far.

Acoustics Unimpaired

The music shed has undergone no apparent change since last summer and retains its excellent acoustic qualities; it was remarkable how well every detail of the Haydn score, every nuance of dynamics and instrumental color, could be heard from the outer rim of the vast structure and from some distance beyond it.

Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, president of the festival, has announced that contributions are still necessary to complete the structure as planned, particularly the supply of roll shutters to protect the audiences against sudden storms and to close th[illegible] shed during the winter. The Berk[illegible]re Music Center, which complete[illegible]s second season with this fest[illegible] has acquired a new building f[illegible] opera performances and concerts and various other new facilities. A third season has already been announced for 1941.

Owing to considerations of time, comment on the performance itself must be deferred until tomorrow. In general, the noted orchestra's playing of the Haydn and Debussy music was characterized by its traditional high standards of performance, and the Berkshire Choristers sang with notable spirit in Villa Lobo's pungently rhythmic music.

SCARSDALE, N.Y
INQUIRER
8/1/41

Donald Rogers Wins Music Scholarship

Donald Rogers of 7 Roosevelt Place, who has been singing and studying this summer at the Berkshire School of Music, Lenox, Massachusetts, has just received a music scholarship there. The scholarship will enable him to do special work this summer.

Mr. Rogers has been singing in the Berkshire Festival Chorus and taking the opera-dramatics course.

Last Saturday night, the young man from Scarsdale sang a special arrangement of the "Happy Birthday" song in honor of Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony, which "brought the house down," according to reports.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM
AUG 1 - 1941

Koussevitzky Opens Festival

Record Crowd Hears Program at Tanglewood

By ROBERT BAGAR.

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 1.—The hullabaloo, the excitement and the generally frantic atmosphere surrounding the opening of the eighth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Tanglewood, between Stockbridge and Lenox, Mass., last evening were all worth it, thanks to the magnificent management of the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky.

From far and wide the music lovers have come to this amazing shrine to music, which every year increases in scope and grandeur.

The weather, none too promising during the day, turned out agreeable after all, and last night was a perfect night for music in the socially picturesque and, one may even say, inspiring environment of the festival grounds.

* * *

Balanced Program.

Mr. Koussevitzky, with his usual savoir faire, had devised one of those beautifully balanced programs, which covered a variety of schools and styles. There was the Haydn Symphony in G Major, No. 88; three items by Debussy, including Nuages, Fetes and the Afternoon of a Faun; the Villa-Lobes Chorus No. 10 and the Beethoven Fifth Symphony. The chorus of the Berkshire Musical Assn., some 150 voices, took part in the performance of the Villa-Lobes number.

It wouldn't be a sinecure to describe the feats accomplished by the Bostonians in the delivery of the Debussy pieces, for instance. The composer employs a palette that calls for few colors but an infinite host of shadings.

This sort of thing lies perfectly within the performing range of this group of musicians. Mr. Koussevitzky made whole worlds materialize before the rapt ears and eyes of the 8000 present, the largest crowd ever to attend an opening night of the festival. He was the alchemist, and the ingredients he mingled were the myriad thoughts and moods supplied him by Debussy.

One shall not easily forget the provocative finish and gloss to the account of Nuages and the fiery, tempestuous and yet many-sided revelry of Fetes.

* * *

Resourceful Reading.

As if this weren't enough, he called into play the whole battery of the orchestra's and the chorus resources in the reading of the Villa-Lobes. Here the music runs a course of strange pagan, fierce and exultant experiences comparable, perhaps, to the frenzied contrast of life itself.

One sustained section of the work reached a zenith of some kind or other for massed hysteria. The rhythm plunges forward at a medium foxtrot tempo, but the thematic material surveys the idioms of a hemisphere from salon tunes to the jungle cries of barbaric peoples.

No report of the proceedings would be complete without mention of the fine classicism displayed in the performance of the Haydn and, for more than good measure, the authoritative exposition of the Beethoven. Needless to say, the gathering went wild after each contribution.

This Clipping From
PEEKSKILL, N. Y.
EVENING STAR
AUG 1 - 1941

Berkshire Festival Opened Last Night

Music lovers from this community who have attended previous festivals at Tanglewood, Stockbridge, Mass., are looking forward to the eighth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival, which opened last night and will continue through August 17.

The new concert-theater dedicated last Sunday is being used. Last night's concert featured the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky, conductor, assisted by the chorus of the Berkshire Musical Association under the direction of Horace Hunt. This evening's program will include the South Mountain Quartet with Marcel Grandjany, French harpist as visiting artist. Harold Bauer, noted pianist, is to be the guest-artist on August 15.

This Clipping From
UTICA, N. Y.
OBSERVER DISPATCH
AUG 1 - 1941

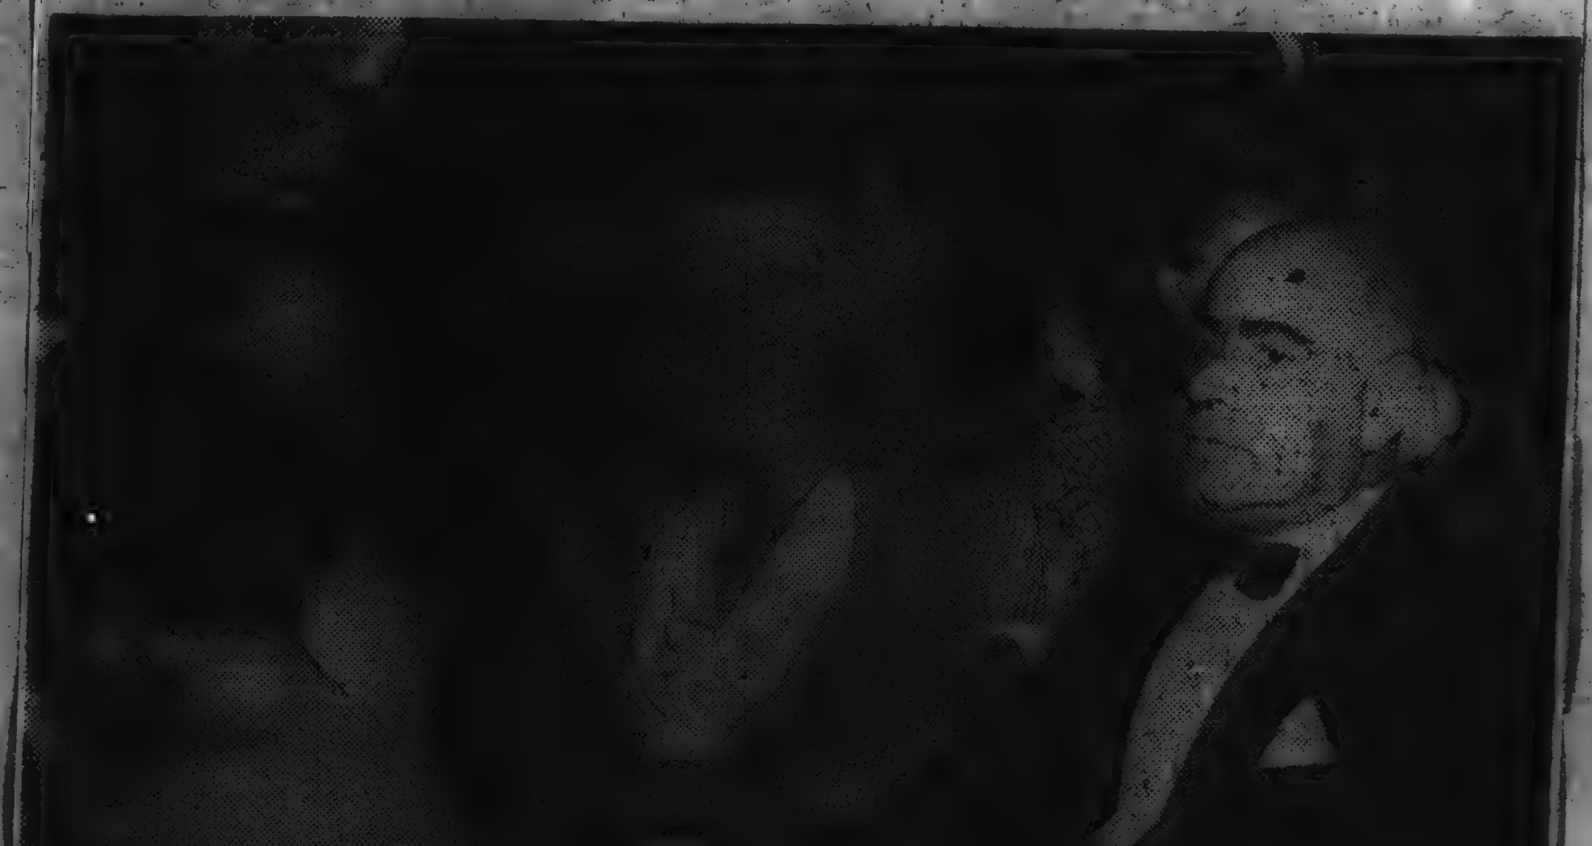
Valley Women Attend Bay State Music Fest

Herkimer—The Mohawk Valley was represented Thursday night at the first open air concert to be given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Stockbridge, Mass.

Mrs. Bronson Quackenbush, Herkimer, drove to the Berkshires Music Festival, accompanied by Mrs. Gilbert Jones, San Diego Mrs. H. M. Dexter and Miss Eleanor Brennan, Ilion, and Mrs Mervin Williams, Lyons Falls.

This Clipping From
HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES
AUG 1 - 1941

Honor Guests at Opening of Berkshire Festival



—[AP Photo

Governor Lehman of New York in contemplative mood listens to a Haydn symphony. He and Mrs. Lehman occupied a box at the first concert of the eighth annual symphonic series of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood.

This Clipping From
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE
AUG 1 - 1941

Miss Tracy Lee Chairman for Symphony Benefit

LEE—Miss Magdalen Tracy of Park Street has been named chairman in Lee for the annual gala benefit at Tanglewood Aug. 15. This benefit is held for the United Service Organization and the British War Relief, under the auspices of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival and the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Miss Mary Shaughnessy is in charge of tickets on prizes. Admission tickets for the benefit may be purchased now.

This Clipping From
HOLYOKE, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT TELEGRAM
AUG 1 - 1941

The Oracle

Men in the region of Springfield, Vt., who are working in the busy defense industries there, have the same transportation problems that Holyokers have who are employed at Pratt & Whitney. This is from the Windham, Vt., correspondent of the Brattleboro Reformer: "Rupert Carleton began work Monday for Bryant Chucking Grinder Co., in Springfield. This makes five Windham men who drive each day to work in Springfield. As none of them work the same hours it is hard to double up on transportation. For a few weeks Richard Field has been riding with L. G. Stowell."

☼ ☼

One of the very great hours of the entire Berkshire Festival will be on Aug. 15 when the bands of the 26th Division will play under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky. The director went down to Camp Edwards one day and the bands played for him. He was so thrilled that he asked them to come to Stockbridge for the day when the British War Relief and USO will divide the proceeds of one of the biggest benefit playdays the nation will have this year. There will be 260 men in those bands and Koussevetsch will do them the honor of conducting them.

Koussevitzky Opens Festival In Berkshires

Aug. 1. 1941

Crowd Defies Rain to Hear Boston Orchestra Usher In Series at Tanglewood

By Francis D. Perkins

LENOX, Mass., July 31.—Damp but improving weather marked the opening of the eighth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival here tonight in the music shd on the Tanglewood Estate, where a large audience applauded the playing of the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky's.

This program for the first of the nine festival concerts began with a familiar and well loved work, Haydn's symphony in G major, No. 88, and closed with the still more familiar fifth symphony of Beethoven. The other works were Debussy's Nocturnes, Clouds and Festivals and his "Afternoon of a Faun," and "Rasga Ocoracao" by Brazil's best known composer, Heiter Villa Lobos. "The Afternoon of a Faun" was substituted for Debussy's originally announced Sirenes. In the Brazilian work, which was first heard in New York in a Schola Cantotrum chorus about ten years ago, the chorus was that of the Berkshire Musical Association, trained by Horace Hunt.

This is the sixth festival to be held with the participation of the Boston Symphony under Dr. Koussevitzky, the fifth to be held at Tanglewood and the fourth to take place in the music shed. In this connection the vagaries of the weather had proved ultimately beneficial four summers ago, when a memorable thunder shower graphically demonstrated the necessity of providing such a building as soon as possible. Today the weather was not particularly beingn to begin with; the dampness caused the rupture of a number of instrumental strings during the morning rehearsal. But the showers culminated in the afternoon, and during the hour before the concert there was no rain to hinder the arrival of the festival patrons and the parking of several thousand cars. It cleared sufficiently to allow various music lovers to follow the familiar Tanglewood custom of listening to the music from seats on the grass outside the auditorium. Meanwhile, the audience was said to be the largest which has attended a Berkshire festival Thursday night program thus far.

Acoustics Unimpaired

The music shed has undergone no apparent change since last summer and retains its excellent acoustic qualities; it was remarkable how well every detail of the Haydn score, every nuance of dynamics and instrumental color, could be heard from the outer rim of the vast structure and from some distance beyond it.

Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, president of the festival, has announced that contributions are still necessary to complete the structure as planned, particularly the supply of roll shutters to protect the audiences against sudden storms and to close the shed during the winter. The Berkshire Music Center, which complete[illegible]s second season with this fest[illegible] has acquired a new building fo[illegible] opera performances and concerts and various other new facilities. A third season has already been announced for 1941.

Owing to considerations of time, comment on the performance itself must be deferred until tomorrow. In general, the noted orchestra's playing of the Haydn and Debussy music was characterized by its traditional high standards of performance, and the Berkshire Choristers sang with notable spirit in Villa Lobo's pungently rhythmic music.

/41

Donald Rogers Wins Music Scholarship

Donald Rogers of 7 Roosevelt Place, who has been singing and studying this summer at the Berkshire School of Music, Lenox, Massachusetts, has just received a music scholarship there. The scholarship will enable him to do special work this summer.

Mr. Rogers has been singing in the Berkshire Festival Chorus and taking the opera-dramatics course.

Last Saturday night, the young man from Scarsdale sang a special arrangement of the "Happy Birthday" song in honor of Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony, which "brought the house down," according to reports.

This Clipping From
HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES
AUG 1 - 1941

229

Koussevitzky Opens Berkshire Festival With Haydn, Beethoven Symphonies

Boston Orchestra Again Draws Throng To Tanglewood

By CARL E. LINDSTROM
Special to The Hartford Times

Lenox, Mass.—In these parlous times when plans are made from year to year with more than ever the God-willing proviso, it has pleased all the elements that might have prevented it to stand aside for the opening last night of another Berkshire Symphonic Festival.

To disregard any more sinister forces, the rain, which couldn't have stopped it anyway, laid its barrage before and after but with reasonable decency held off while a crowd officially counted at 7,500 got to the grounds and away again. There were fewer lawn sitters than usual, perhaps, but it would scarcely be a Tanglewood concert without a representation of these, too.

The concert began with a minimum of fuss and feathers. There was a hearty and prolonged ovation at the sight of Koussevitzky, members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra arising as he entered.

Eschewing anything suggestive of the dedicatory pomp of brass and cymbal of circumstance, Koussevitzky immediately addressed himself to a composition which he has played a great deal and which he does better than anyone else, the unpretentious but glowing G major Symphony of Haydn, No. 88. The effect was to make of the year since the last Tanglewood concert just a brief interval.

All was as it should be, familiar, beautiful, and with an accent upon not only the permanence but the eternal continuity of this kind of beauty. The pattern of his gestures was traditional even to the point where in the minuet he stood imperious, motionless and with only glances conducted the aristrocratic and melodious measures.

There was nothing in the rest of the concert superior to this opening symphony, from start to finish transparent, exquisite.

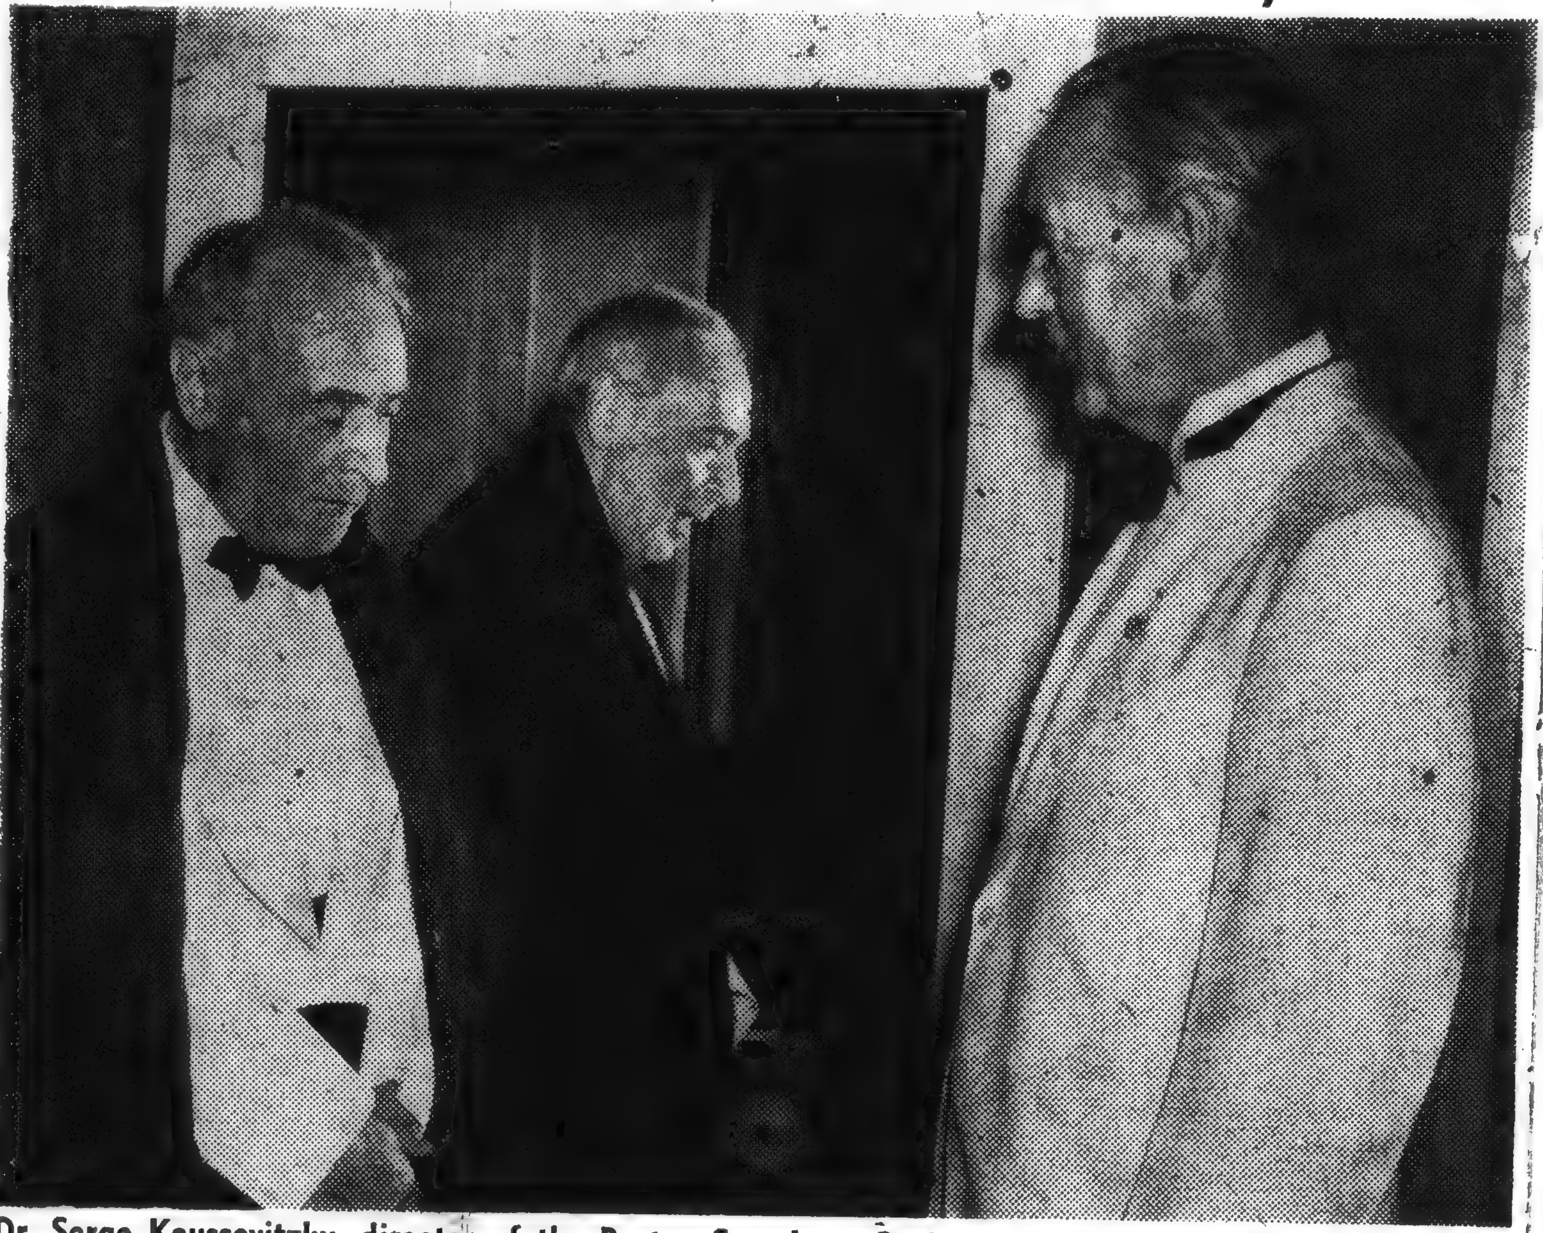
Program Changed

The program had been subjected to considerable adjustment. As a last minute change, Debussy's "Sirenes," which as the neglected third of the Nocturnes would have added novelty to the program, was dropped in favor of "Afternoon of a Faun." Several days ago Beethoven's "Eroica" was dropped for the Fifth, whose motto was recently enlisted for whatever use it might have in confounding Germans and ending the war, a bit of childishness that was almost immediately perceived even by those who first thought of it.

Those who know and love it best are most aware that such a theme cannot be endowed overnight with new significances. And they are not too sure it is a "Fate" motif either. Since about 1881 keen ears have been able to pick up on the streets of Boston or in crowded places these four tones whistled. Their significance has been simply that one member of the Boston Symphony Orchestra has recognized another from a distance and is desirous of calling his attention. It has always been called the "symphony whistle;" in fact, its use now is common to musicians everywhere even unto the second and third generations. Traditions like that are not changed at the whim of propagandists.

As for the symphony itself, Koussevitzky has a commanding and very individual interpretation for it but it was decidedly held in reserve this time. The work had lost its heaven-storming qualities and without becoming one whit less beautiful took on a brooding, passionless character. The slow movement, easily the best, had its clamant moments but it soon withdrew to darkling philosophies.

Pictures Do Lie—There's Only One Koussevitzky!



Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is doubled by the mirror background in this picture as he talks with Horace Hunt, who trained the chorus for the opening concert of the Berkshire Music Festival.

A Villa Lobos Work

As the only novelty of the program, Choros No. 10 by Villa Lobos drew mixed comments. Noisy, reiterative and rhythmically strong willed, it threw a heavy burden upon the Chorus of the Berkshire Musical Association, which had been rehearsed by Horace Hunt.

Nor was it a very grateful task because the composer, who in the orchestral preparatory matter had used a great variety of unusual coloring, gave the voices nothing to do which couldn't have been just as effectively accomplished with instrumental timbres. There was nothing about this music that members of the chorus could take home to sing in their respective bathtubs. Perhaps this composition is as well known in Brazil as the Fifth Symphony. Personally, I should like to have further opportunities to hear Choros No. 10, subtitled "Rasga o coraçao."

It is one of the wonders of the orchestral world that the Boston players are able to maintain their year-round balance on the edge of perfection, for it is a fact that in the middle of the summer they play at concert season peak. For finish, for fastidiousness of expression not only in the whispered moments but in the great sweeping periods as well, the orchestra is unrivalled. This has been said before but it remains true.

Observed before but to be especially remarked again in Debussy's "Nuages" and "Fetes" was Koussevitzky's genius for composing the colors of his orchestral palette while they are yet fluid, creating while interpreting, and thus presenting familiar pictures which are ever new.

The second program, to be given Saturday night at 8:30, follows: Mendelssohn's Italian Symphony, Beethoven's Overture to "Leonore," No. 3; and Shostakovitch's Symphony No. 5.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES
AUG 1 - 1941

BERKSHIRE THRONG AT MUSICAL FETE

Eighth Season at Tanglewood Opened by Koussevitzky Before Full House

MORE THAN 7,000 PRESENT

Audience Comes Early, Defying Rain—Familiar Works on the Evening's Program

By HOWARD TAUBMAN
Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LENOX, Mass., July 31—The Berkshire Symphonic Festival swung into its eighth year tonight, a secure and going concern. Nor rain, nor threat of it, nor wet roads could stay it from beginning the new season with a full house. For the first time since the festival began every reserved seat for the opening concert had been sold days before the event. More than 7,000 persons, the biggest Thursday night audience in Festival history, was on hand. The public of America has become Berkshire Festival-conscious.

On the other side of the footlights the festival continues to flourish mightily. Tonight's music-making was as good as anything to be had in the country, or the world, with Serge Koussevitzky directing a rested, refreshed and splendidly keyed-up Boston Symphony Orchestra. He himself, reinvigorated by his work with some of the finest young talents of the nation at the school which complements the festival, directed as if every work he touched was new to him.

Program Largely Familiar Music

The program was largely familiar music, with a seasoning of a contemporary work by the eminent Brazilian, Heiter Villa-Labos. Haydn's Symphony in G, No. 88, a work of joyous and moving inspiration, began the proceedings. Then came Debussy's two nocturnes, "Nuages" and "Fetes," and his Prelude to "The Afternoon of a Faun."

Villa-Lobas was represented by his boldly original Chorus No. 10, with the chorus of the Berkshire Musical Association assisting. The evening ended with Beethoven's Fifth Symphony, as if Mr. Koussevitzky were minded not only to end a note of towering affirmation, but add his own endorsement and that of his orchestra to the campaign of V for victory.

As in previous years, Tanglewood, the far-ranging and richly endowed estate that is the festival home, was the attraction for yesterday and early this afternoon. The thousands of the audience behaved as if the grounds were not wet and as if further rain did not seem to threaten. They came early, some bringing picnic suppers and others taking pot-luck under the refreshment tent.

New Theatre and Concert Hall

There were new sights for veteran Tanglewood concertgoers. Besides four little studios tucked away in the woods for individual practice, which the casual visitor might not come upon, there was a new theatre and a new chamber music concert hall. The theatre, which seats 1,200 and was built at a cost of about $40,000, was designed by Eliel Saarinen, architect of the lofty and gracious music shed where the main concerts are held. Bare in outline, the theatre in its simplicity merges well with the clean outlines of the shed. Its stage is admirably equipped, and here the young men and women in the opera-dramatic department are completing several productions, including Mozart's "Cosi Fan Tutte."

The theatre, which is also meant to serve as a medium-sized concert hall, flanks the entrance to Tanglewood's formal English gardens of meticulously clipped hemlock and pine hedges. On the other side of the garden, at a ninety degree angle from the theatre, stands the new small concert hall, similarly simple in design. It is surrounded by gracious old trees and one side has sliding glass doors to make possible an increased audience seated on the lawn and in the garden.

The hold of the festival on the public imagination, which continues to stride forward, had new and revealing proofs tonight. There were people in the audience who had planned their vacations in the Berkshires to coincide with the concerts. The hotels, camps, tourist houses were crowded and turning away business. People came from long distances by motor, train and airplane, and there were several hardy souls who made the festival the objective of bicycle trips of several hundred miles.

Best Advance Sale on Record

The advance sale was the best in the festival's thriving career. Fifteen hundred memberships for each of the three series of three concerts were sold last Sept. 30 and 1,800 subscriptions for each series were disposed of by the first week in June, three weeks ahead of the deadline, when the books were closed. Festival officials expected a booming business in general admissions, with the lawn that fringes the shed serving as a familiar resting spot for hundreds of listeners.

As in past seasons, the opening night concert was attended by an audience that had a happy balance of famous people and average men and women whose only claim to fame was their interest in the music at Tanglewood. Among the boxholders for tonight's opening were Governor Herbert H. Lehman of New York and Mrs. Lehman.

There was, as always, overflowing responsiveness to the performances of Mr. Koussevitzky and his players; whatever the preoccupations that disturb the minds of men in a grim world the music was the thing tonight. And the music—particularly the flaming essaying of Beethoven's fifth—was a reminder that the creative spirit of man must and will triumph.

This Clipping From
WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM

AUG 1 - 1941

Koussevitsky Opens Berkshire Festival

Rain Threat Fails to Dampen Enthusiasm of 6000 Persons at Stockbridge Shed

By RAYMOND MORIN

STOCKBRIDGE, July 31 — Serge Koussevitsky led the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the first of the eighth annual series of concerts in the Berkshire symphonic festival tonight at "Tanglewood" in Stockbridge. In spite of the threat of showers, 6000 persons assembled from virtually every state in the union and from many foreign countries to attend the initial performance of America's most famous Summer music festival.

A substantially classic program was wisely chosen. The late 18th and the early 19th centuries reaped a harvest of masterworks that this 20th Century confidently endows with responsibility. Tonight's performances of Haydn and Beethoven lifted the audience to musical heights. The instrumented works of Bach are increased proportionately in stature by today's orchestral resources. The classics also seem to assume new hues of color and significance of being transferred from the confines of a concert hall to the castness of an open area.

Koussevitsky is said to physically resemble the "grand old man of Esterhazy Court." Certainly the superiority of his interpretation of Haydn's "G Major Symphony" is more than mere speculation. As he stood on his rostrum, Koussevitsky seemed diminutive in stature, but his control of Haydn's elusive subtleties was magical. No detail escaped complete articulation. The glaring lights from overhead seemed to give clearer perspective to every motion, and the slight overlapping of sounds, induced by the out of doors, tended to emphasize the sharp dynamic changes that the Boston Symphony Orchestra effect so precisely. One wondered if much of the delicacy of Haydn isn't accoustically obliterated by being wrapped up in a building.

Debussy Scores

The three "Nocturnes" by Debussy—clouds, festivals and the prelude to "The Afternoon of a Faun"—provided temporary departure from class severity to the freedom of impressionism. It was a welcomed chance. These selections did not decrease Haydn's firm imprints, but they did demonstrate beauties of sound and the astonishing technical solvency of the orchestra. These gentlemen transcend the problems of obvious technical manipulation and seem only concerned with interpretative expression. Sc it is that Koussevitsky need only command. The three selections were vividly contrasted, and performed as they were in this picturesque setting, were inspiringly effective.

The "Choros No. 10" by Villa-Lobos added a bright South American flavor to the program and also featured the Berkshire Musical Association chorus of 150 voices, directed by Horace Hunt. Like the other 13 of Villa-Lobos "Serenades", this selection —titled "Rend My Heart", is based on a popular Brazilian melody supported by a clear cut rhythmic background. This music did not achieve great import, but it did provide a refreshing interlude. Necessary to its performance were other than the conventional instruments—Palso employed were a glass filled with gravel, a ratchet stick and a wooden rattle.

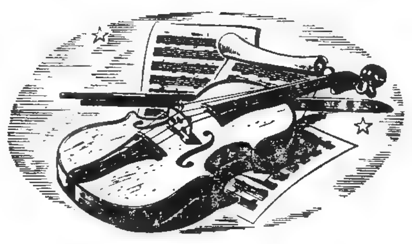
Beethoven's Fifth

Reverting back to the realms of classicism, Koussevitsky gave a memorable reading of Beethoven's lofty "Fifth Symphony". This Brusk, appealing, triumphant work seared. Somehow the brief but sharply compelling opening figure predicted a performance of unusual power. It is doubtful if this "Sacre du Printemps" of the early 19th Century has ever been listened to more avidly. The unsurpassed string section played its sweeping phrases with brilliance—the variations of the second movement were interwoven with rare craftmanship—the transition between the third and fourth movements was breath-taking. These are a few of the reasons for the ovation that was accorded. There will be eight more concerts ending on Aug. 17 and comprising a highly varied and interesting repertory.

THINK
NEW YORK CITY
AUG, 1941

Music in the Berkshires

Koussevitzky's summer school, designed to cultivate in professional and amateur a feeling for music's "spiritual essence."



A DREAM has been fulfilled. Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has been longing these many years to direct a summer music school. Last year it was established in Stockbridge, Massachusetts, home of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, which in the past five or six years Mr. Koussevitzky and his orchestra have built up into a national institution. This year the school is in operation. Everyone remembers how, after Mrs. Gorham Brooks had contributed for the purpose the magnificent estate of Tanglewood, the summer festival at Stockbridge started in a tent in a season so hot that even the formal leader shed his coat and invited the orchestra and the male members of the audience to do likewise; how the tent was succeeded by the "Shed," with its classical columns and impressive architecture, and how late arrivals drove up in their cars silently.

Things have changed since last year. The "Shed" remains, but there is in addition a new theatre which has been designed either as an opera house or as a concert hall.

* * *

THEN there is the new chamber music hall, which is a small edition of the opera-concert hall. Seating four hundred, it will serve the leader for conducting classes. In the red barn choral classes will receive instruction. An old garage has been converted into a rehearsal hall, with studios above.

All this is a part of Mr. Koussevitzky's main desire. The school with him is the thing. He has been supervising details of its arrangement down to the transportation of the five Latin American scholarship winners. He wishes to make this a place where artists, dramatists and thinkers will foregather, as well as musicians, so that thoughts of the élite may be freely interchanged. The school is the fruition of ambitions dating back more than a quarter-century when Mr. Koussevitzky was in Moscow.

About 350 students are enrolled in the summer school at Stockbridge. Nearly a third of them are selected young musicians and singers with a high degree of technical skill. The others are amateurs, persons who love music and have had some experience in choral singing. This combination of amateur and professional is fundamental in Mr. Koussevitzky's plan. Even the audience is invited to attend rehearsals in order that the music education of auditors and players and singers alike may go steadily forward. A distinguished faculty includes such persons as Paul Hindemith, Aaron Copland, Herbert Graf, Howard Hanson, Gregor Piatigorsky and members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

It is interesting to note that the general students will form the Festival Chorus, while also enrolled in lectures on the history of music. Both advanced and general students will attend the nine concerts of the festival, in accordance with the belief of their leader that they should work under the influence of living performances.

* * *

THE chief aim of this center, we are informed, is interpretation. Tastes must be improved and imaginations developed by a feeling for "the truly spiritual essence of music, which stands high above the level of vulgar amusement and musical diversion."

Mr. Koussevitzky has a passionate desire to help all who love art.

230

This Clipping From
WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM

AUG 1 - 1941

Koussevitsky Opens Berkshire Festival

Rain Threat Fails to Dampen Enthusiasm of 6000 Persons at Stockbridge Shed

By RAYMOND MORIN

STOCKBRIDGE, July 31 — Serge Koussevitsky led the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the first of the eighth annual series of concerts in the Berkshire symphonic festival tonight at "Tanglewood" in Stockbridge. In spite of the threat of showers, 6000 persons assembled from virtually every state in the union and from many foreign countries to attend the initial performance of America's most famous Summer music festival.

A substantially classic program was wisely chosen. The late 18th and the early 19th centuries reaped a harvest of masterworks that this 20th Century confidently endows with responsibility. Tonight's performances of Haydn and Beethoven lifted the audience to musical heights. The instrumented works of Bach are increased proportionately in stature by today's orchestral resources. The classics also seem to assume new hues of color and significance of being transferred from the confines of a concert hall to the castness of an open area.

Koussevitsky is said to physically resemble the "grand old man of Esterhazy Court." Certainly the superiority of his interpretation of Haydn's "G Major Symphony" is more than mere speculation. As he stood on his rostrum, Koussevitsky seemed diminutive in stature, but his control of Haydn's elusive subtleties was magical. No detail escaped complete articulation. The glaring lights from overhead seemed to give clearer perspective to every motion, and the slight overlapping of sounds, induced by the out of doors, tended to emphasize the sharp dynamic changes that the Boston Symphony Orchestra effect so precisely. One wondered if much of the delicacy of Haydn isn't accoustically obliterated by being wrapped up in a building.

Debussy Scores

The three "Nocturnes" by Debussy—clouds, festivals and the prelude to "The Afternoon of a Faun"—provided temporary departure from class severity to the freedom of impressionism. It was a welcomed chance. These selections did not decrease Haydn's firm imprints, but they did demonstrate beauties of sound and the astonishing technical solvency of the orchestra. These gentlemen transcend the problems of obvious technical manipulation and seem only concerned with interpretative expression. Sc it is that Koussevitsky need only command. The three selections were vividly contrasted, and performed as they were in this picturesque setting, were inspiringly effective.

The "Choros No. 10" by Villa-Lobos added a bright South American flavor to the program and also featured the Berkshire Musical Association chorus of 150 voices, directed by Horace Hunt. Like the other 13 of Villa-Lobos "Serenades", this selection —titled "Rend My Heart", is based on a popular Brazilian melody supported by a clear cut rhythmic background. This music did not achieve great import, but it did provide a refreshing interlude. Necessary to its performance were other than the conventional instruments—Palso employed were a glass filled with gravel, a ratchet stick and a wooden rattle.

Beethoven's Fifth

Reverting back to the realms of classicism, Koussevitsky gave a memorable reading of Beethoven's lofty "Fifth Symphony". This Brusk, appealing, triumphant work seared. Somehow the brief but sharply compelling opening figure predicted a performance of unusual power. It is doubtful if this "Sacre du Printemps" of the early 19th Century has ever been listened to more avidly. The unsurpassed string section played its sweeping phrases with brilliance—the variations of the second movement were interwoven with rare craftmanship—the transition between the third and fourth movements was breath-taking. These are a few of the reasons for the ovation that was accorded. There will be eight more concerts ending on Aug. 17 and comprising a highly varied and interesting repertory.

THINK
NEW YORK CITY
AUG., 1941

Music in the Berkshires

Koussevitzky's summer school, designed to cultivate in professional and amateur a feeling for music's "spiritual essence."

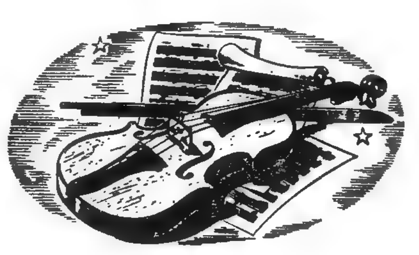
A DREAM has been fulfilled. Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has been longing these many years to direct a summer music school. Last year it was established in Stockbridge, Massachusetts, home of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, which in the past five or six years Mr. Koussevitzky and his orchestra have built up into a national institution. This year the school is in operation. Everyone remembers how, after Mrs. Gorham Brooks had contributed for the purpose the magnificent estate of Tanglewood, the summer festival at Stockbridge started in a tent in a season so hot that even the formal leader shed his coat and invited the orchestra and the male members of the audience to do likewise; how the tent was succeeded by the "Shed," with its classical columns and impressive architecture, and how late arrivals drove up in their cars silently.

Things have changed since last year. The "Shed" remains, but there is in addition a new theatre which has been designed either as an opera house or as a concert hall.

* * *

THEN there is the new chamber music hall, which is a small edition of the opera-concert hall. Seating four hundred, it will serve the leader for conducting classes. In the red barn choral classes will receive instruction. An old garage has been converted into a rehearsal hall, with studios above.

All this is a part of Mr. Koussevitzky's main desire. The school with him is the thing. He has been supervising details of its arrangement down to the transportation of the five Latin American scholarship winners. He wishes to make this a place where artists, dramatists and thinkers will foregather, as well as musicians, so that thoughts of the élite may be freely interchanged. The school is the fruition of ambitions dating back more than a quarter-century when Mr. Koussevitzky was in Moscow.



About 350 students are enrolled in the summer school at Stockbridge. Nearly a third of them are selected young musicians and singers with a high degree of technical skill. The others are amateurs, persons who love music and have had some experience in choral singing. This combination of amateur and professional is fundamental in Mr. Koussevitzky's plan. Even the audience is invited to attend rehearsals in order that the music education of auditors and players and singers alike may go steadily forward. A distinguished faculty includes such persons as Paul Hindemith, Aaron Copland, Herbert Graf, Howard Hanson, Gregor Piatigorsky and members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

It is interesting to note that the general students will form the Festival Chorus, while also enrolled in lectures on the history of music. Both advanced and general students will attend the nine concerts of the festival, in accordance with the belief of their leader that they should work under the influence of living performances.

* * *

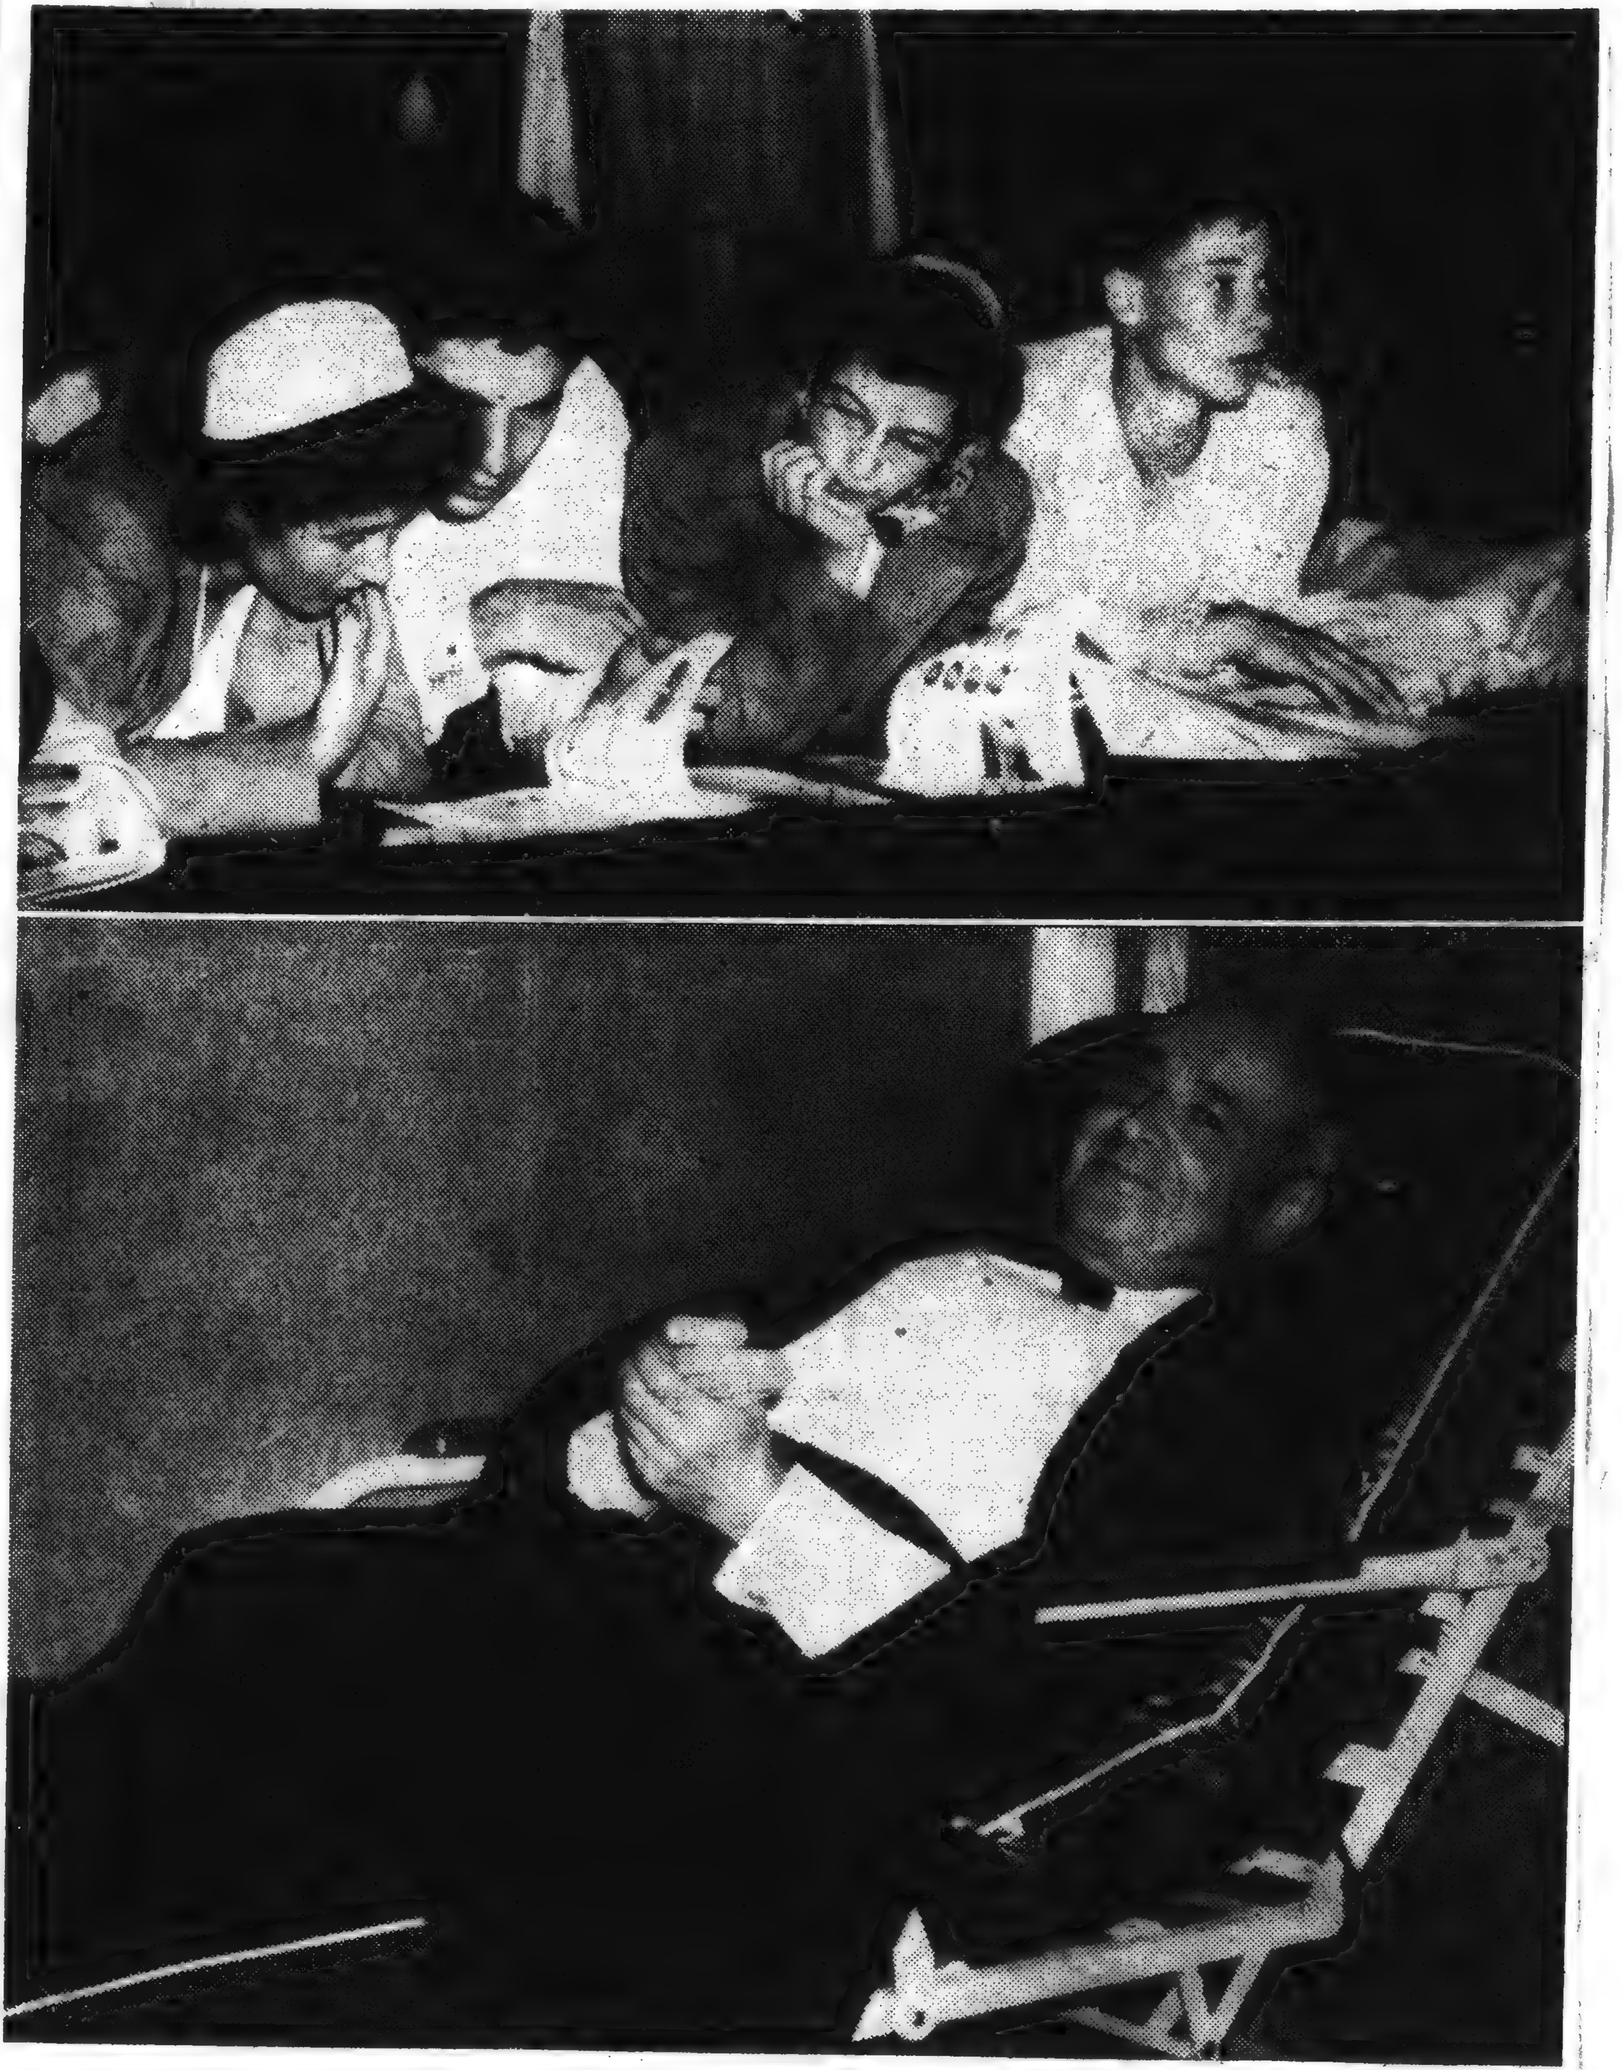
THE chief aim of this center, we are informed, is interpretation. Tastes must be improved and imaginations developed by a feeling for "the truly spiritual essence of music, which stands high above the level of vulgar amusement and musical diversion."

Mr. Koussevitzky has a passionate desire to help all who love art.

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION

AUG 1 - 1941

At Season's First Berkshire Concert



Don Jose Browning Photos

Upper: Countless numbers who went to the first Berkshire concert of the season last night found convenient spots on the spacious grounds surrounding the music shed and made themselves comfortable. Lower: For those who wonder what the great maestro, Serge Koussevitzky, does during those intermissions, here's a peek behind the scenes. He wraps himself loosely with a cloak, reclines for a brief period.

About 8000 at Opening Of Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Tanglewood

Prolonged Applause Greets Koussevitzky; Chorus Makes Its Debut; Beethoven's Fifth, With "V" for Victory Notes, on Program

By Willard M. Clark

STOCKBRIDGE, July 31—The opening concert of the eight annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival by the Boston Symphony Orchestra tonight at Tanglewood brought out an audience estimated at 8000 people, which according to officials is the largest audience for an opening concert in the history of the festival.

It was very much like an old home week. Many people have occupied the same seats or boxes for several seasons and the atmosphere was informal and friendly. Dr. Serge Koussevitzky was greeted with prolonged applause when he entered, the orchestra rising to greet him. Out on the lawn little groups braved the threatening weather and enjoyed the con-

(Continued on Sixth Page)

Celebrities Attend First Concert

Don Jose Browning Photo

Many celebrities attended the opening night concert which never fails to bring society members from all over the country. Facing camera in Box No. 1, is Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, president of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival.

About 8000 at Opening Of Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Tanglewood

(Continued From First Page)

cert in solid comfort. The refreshment stand did a land office business. This year there are two new buildings, the theater and studio. Functional in design, they have been built with a definite end in view and make possible an enlarged program of activities.

Chorus Introduced

Dr. Koussevitzky introduced tonight the chorus of the Berkshire Musical Association, a group of 150 singers who have been trained by Horace Hunt. They made their debut in "Choros No. 10" a work by Villa-Lobos. The women's chorus was to have sung the third of the Debussy nocturnes, "Sirens" but this was omitted and it was rumored that the group did not approximate Dr. Koussevitzky's conception of singing sirens. As a whole, the chorus negotiated the difficult passages of the Villa-Lobos work with a deal of style and tonal vigor.

Aside from this work there was nothing new on the program. It was made up of numbers long in the repertoire and which Dr. Koussevitzky has made particularly his own. The program opened with a delightful performance of Haydn's "Symphony in G Major," surely one of the finest symphonies of this prolific composer. Its lovely, large, rugged minuet and breezy finale were played according to the best traditions of this great orchestra.

The audience was particularly fortunate in hearing a definitive performance of Debussy's Prelude to "The Afternoon of a Faun." Few conductors are as happy in the interpretation of the music of this composer as Dr. Koussevitzky. Like the two nocturnes "Nuages" and "Fetes," the prelude was painted in myriad colors with every nuance, every rhythm given its due.

In sharp contrast to the pastel beauties of the Debussy music was this "Choros" or serenade by Villa-Lobos. According to the composer, it represents a new form in musical composition in which are synthesized the different modalities of Brazilia Indian and popular music having f principal elements rhythm and a typical melody of popular charact Percussion instruments, new a strange to North American orcl tras, are used effectively and music at times becomes downrig brutal, yet it has contrasting pa sages of simple melodies. The choru sings a chant to a highly rhythmi accompaniment. First the men an then the women take the melody against a sort of patter accompan ment. It is difficult music to sir and the chorus came through nobly.

The final number was Beethoven's "Fifth Symphony," a perfect choice for these troubled days when the British are using its opening phrase of three short notes and one long, note to denote "V" for victory.

Dr. Koussevitzky gave a heroic, electrifying reading. The music hurled its defiance to the heavens and there was no gainsaying its forthright, sweeping storminess.

The audience was enraptured as audiences always are when Dr. Koussevitzky piles climax on climax, and with his men he received a veritable ovation at the close.

Saturday night the program includes the "Italian Symphony" by Mendelssohn; the third overture to "Leonora" by Beethoven and the Fifth Symphony," by Shostakovitch.

Wet Parking Field Causes Trouble

STOCKBRIDGE, July 31 — Wet grounds failed to dampen the enthusiasm of more than 2500 motorists, who with their passengers made up the oversold shed at the opening of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival tonight. Packed in row on row in the great field to the north of the shed, the autos had little trouble getting in, but more in getting out. For two days the skies have poured more than three and a half inches of rain on the Berkshires, and the gods refused to bow even before the majesty of Serge Koussevitzky and kept dumping it down. But by concert time, the skies had cleared, leaving as a reminder of the two days of storm a badly soaked parking field. Cars slithered and slid and while there were no serious tie-ups, and only one or two had to have assistance, officials of the festival for a time were worried.

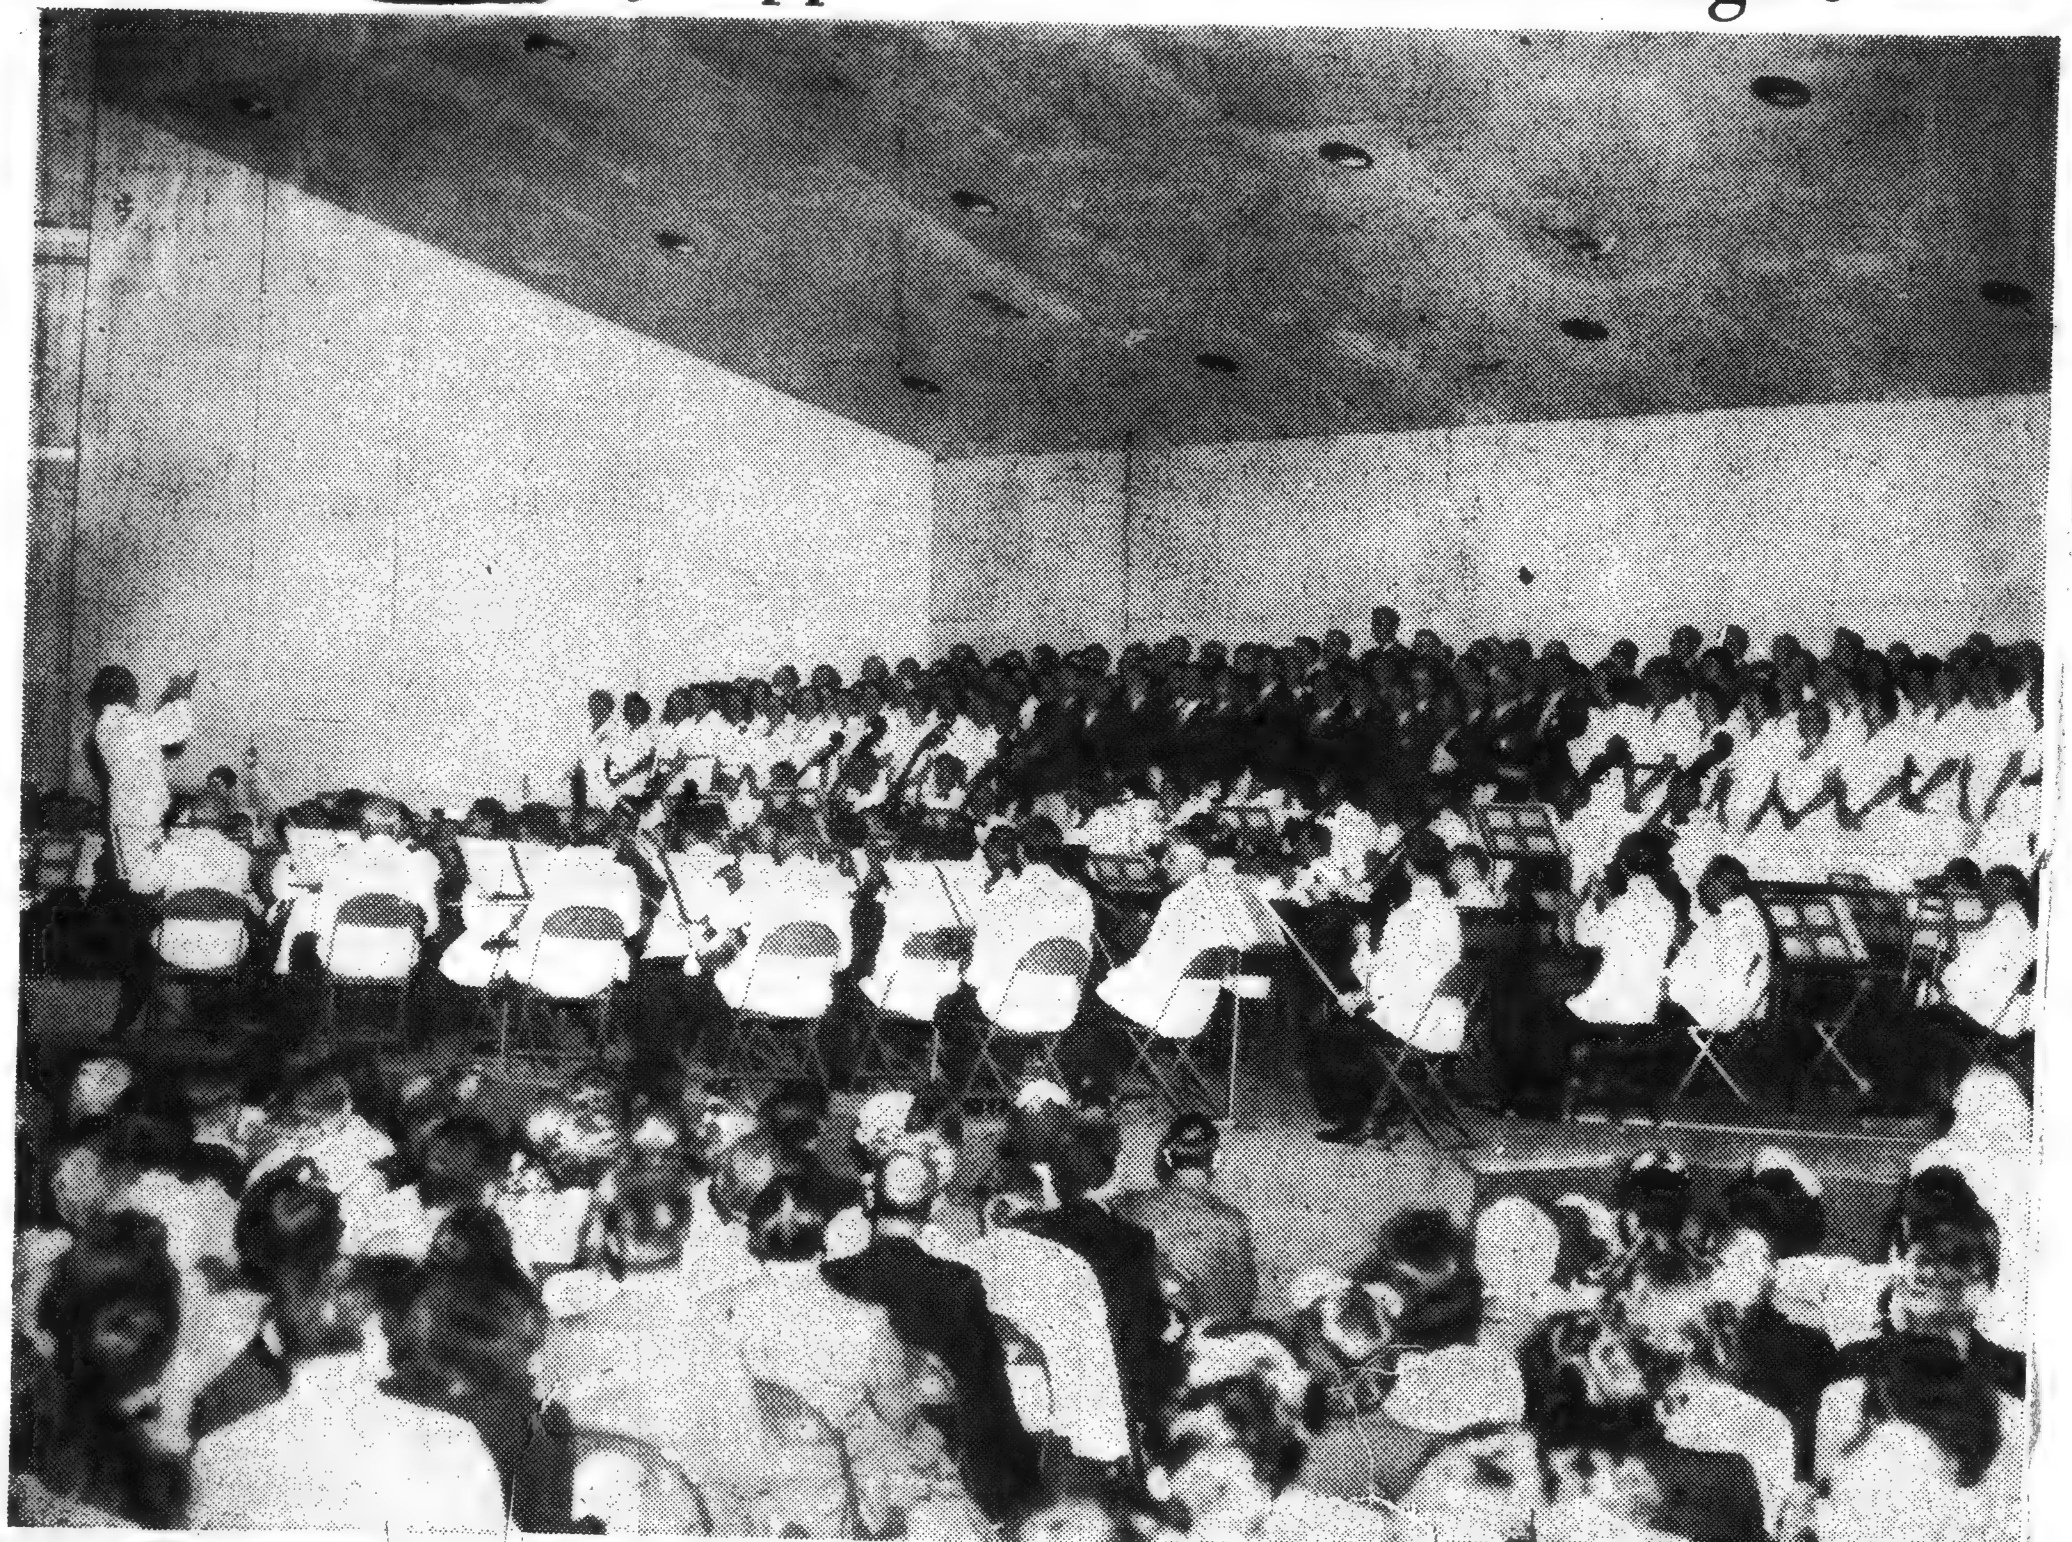
Noted in the distinguished audience were Gov. Herbert H. Lehman and Mrs. Lehman of New York; Mrs. A. A. Berle, whose husband is assistant secretary of state; Mrs. Edward Bok of Philadelphia; Norman Davis, national chairman of the American Red Cross, and Mrs. Davis; Cole Porter, the composer, of New York City and Mrs. Porter; Kathleen Parlow, eminent violinist; Albert Spalding, violinist, and Mrs. Spalding; Rev. Anson Phelps Stokes of the Washington Cathedral and Mrs. Stokes; Lowell Thomas, the author, and Mrs. Thomas. In a central box full of guests was Mrs. Koussevitzky, wife of the conductor of the Boston orchestra.

2-33

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

AUG 1 - 1941

Koussevitzky Applauds His Berkshire Singers



Colorful Crowd Attends Music Festival Opening

Chorus of Berkshire Musical Association Augments Boston Symphony Led by Koussevitzky

By JAY C. ROSENFELD

The eighth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival was launched last night at Tanglewood when the Boston Symphony Orchestra, assisted by the chorus of the Berkshire Musical Association, gave a program of Haydn, Debussy, and Beethoven, with an exciting serenade of the Brazilian composer, Villa-Lobos, thrown in for spice. The uncertain weather which in turn frightened and appeased most of the day, finally resolved as evening drew on, to maintain a steady gray tone, which, at least, was dependable. Nothing, however, dampened the ardour of the great throng which had planned to attend, and so, well before 8 o'clock (the concert was scheduled for 8.30), the vast lawns, and the improved paths and walks were filled with colorful groups engaged in the pleasant milling-about which is always such an agreeable feature of the Festival concerts.

Crowd in Gala Spirit

Arriving by the various routes which make possible the speedy parking of the thousands of cars, the record audience, concentered from all states of the union, if number-plates are any indication, was on hand well in advance of the concert, clad in holiday attire and seeming to be in gala spirit.

As the lights in the great Shed were dimmed, and those in the ceiling of the shell became, by contrast, more luminous, the men of the orchestra, clad in white formal coats and black trousers, seemed to rise as though pushed gently upward on an elevating stage. The appearance of Serge Koussevitzky, the famous leader, was the signal for the concertmaster, Richard Burgin, to motion to the orchestra-men to rise, and for the audience to break out into a more than cordial outburst of welcoming applause. Koussevitzky and Burgin clasped hands.

This is the sixth summer the peerless orchestra and its outstanding conductor have played in the Berkshires, and the deep admiration of the audiences for their ability has in it by now a large ingredient of loyalty to the artists and affection for the individuals. The enthusiasm during the evening seemed to be cumulative. The inaugural offering was the Haydn G

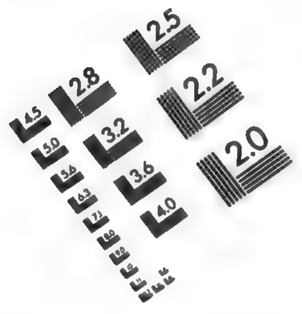
Festival
Continued on 18th Page

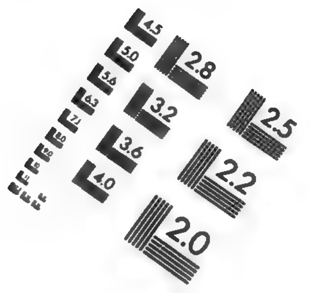
REDUCTION
RATIO
16x

2.5 mm
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

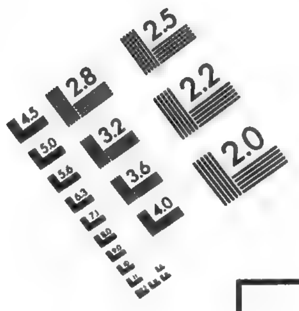
2.0 mm
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

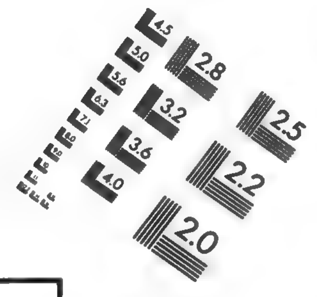
1.5 mm
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

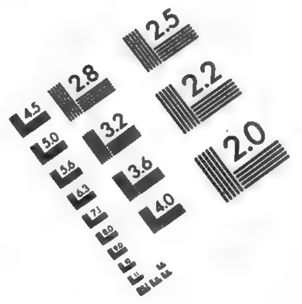


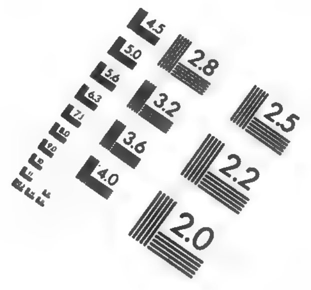


PM-MGP 13″x18″
METRIC GENERAL PURPOSE TARGET
PHOTOGRAPHIC





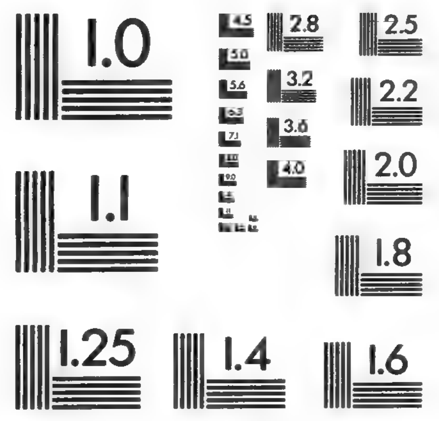




200 mm

150 mm

100 mm



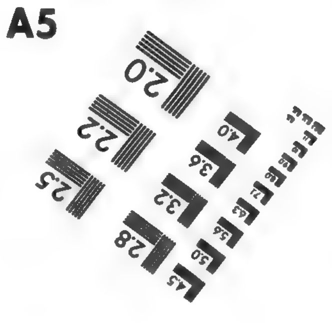
1.0 mm
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

1.5 mm
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

2.0 mm
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

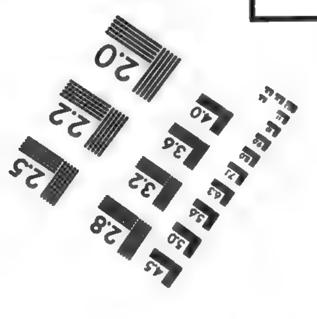
2.5 mm
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

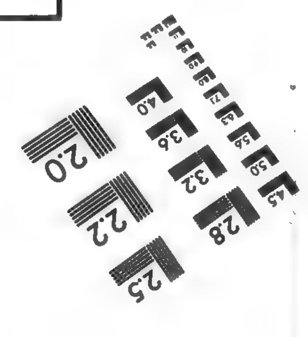
A5



A4

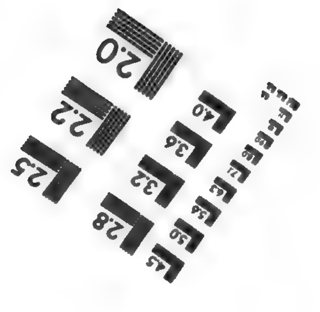
A3

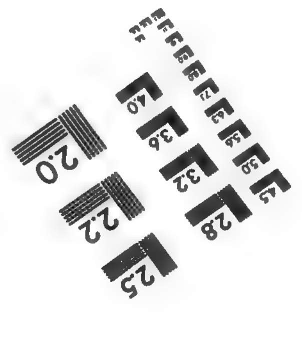




PRECISION℠ RESOLUTION TARGETS

Century
A&P
1303 Geneva Avenue
St. Paul, MN 55119





4.5 mm
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

3.5 mm
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

3.0 mm
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

Opening of Berkshire Symphonic Festival Is Social Success

Governor and Mrs. Lehman Head Distinguished Guests

Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith and Her Guests Again Occupy Boxes 1 and 2—Danes Are Guests of Koussevitzkys

Socially, the 1941 Berkshire Symphonic Festival got off to a handsome start at the opening concert last night. New York and Boston social registerites flooded the select box section and prominent citzens from many cities were noted throughout the audience generally. Gov. Herbert H. Lehman of New York and Mrs. Lehman were among the distinguished guests.

The Lehman box was directly in back of the two boxes, 1 and 2, which Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith has again this year. With the Lehmans was Mrs. John A. Warner, daughter of former New York Gov. Alfred E. Smith. Guests of Miss Robinson Smith were her mother, Mrs. Robinson Smith; Miss Miriam K. Oliver, Mrs. E. Corning Townsend, Mrs. Montgomery Hare, Stuart Montgomery of Boston, William Miles, Malcolm Vaughan, Leonardo Casanova and Bryn Strandanaes of New York.

In Mrs. Koussevitzky's box were Ernest B. Dane of Boston, president of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Mrs. Dane.

Other Box Holders

Some of the other box holders and their guests were:—

Mrs. E. Griswold Hollister of Toledo and Lenox: Miss Olive Colton, Toledo, Mrs. Zorah Bowman and Miss Katharine Geddes of Chappaqua, N. Y., and Mrs. W. G. Cavanaugh, New York City.

Mrs. Harry Adams, Canaan, N. Y.: Mrs. Griffith Best, Dallas, Texas, Mrs. William Adams, Canaan, Mrs. Donald Bates Lawson, Boston, and Mr. and Mrs. Frank R. Harnden of Hancock.

Mr. and Mrs. Leonard Clark Feathers, Lenox: Mrs. Chester L. Dane, New York, Mrs. J. Harwood Priddy, New York, Miss Edith Hollyday, Bedford Hills, Miss Edith Ingalls, Cleveland, and Miss Henrietta Feathers.

Mr. and Mrs. Walter Atherton, Windsor: Mr. and Mrs. Ray Atherton, Washington, D. C., formerly of the American Embassy at Copenhagen, Mr. and Mrs. Alexander Whiteside of Boston.

Mr. and Mrs. Samuel G. Colt, Pittsfield: Mrs. James D. Colt and Mrs. Clement S. Houghton of Chestnut Hill.

Mr. and Mrs. Norman H. Davis, Stockbridge: Mr. and Mrs. Maclin P. Davis of Tennessee, Mrs. Robert W. Whiton Stuart.

Mr. and Mrs. Thomas H. Blodgett, Great Barrington: Mr. and Mrs. Auguste J. Cordier, New York; Mr. and Mrs. Walter H. Mann, Old Greenwich, Conn.

Mrs. W. Rockwood Gibbs, Richmond: Mr. and Mrs. Edward DeWitt Shumway, Lake Forest, Ill., brother-in-law and sister of Mrs. Gibbs; Ensign Arthur Edward Anderson, Berkeley, Cal.; Mr. and Mrs. C. Lambert Heyniger, New Lebanon, N. Y.

Others who had guests in their boxes were Mrs. Rodney Procter, Mrs. John Barry Ryan, Mr. and Mrs. William Felton Barrett, Mr. and Mrs. Adolf A. Berle, Mrs. Alvan T. Fuller, Mrs. Charles A. Cass, Mrs. John W. Garrett, Mr. and Mrs. Eldridge Gerry Chadwick, Mrs. Edward S. Harkness, Canon and Mrs. Anson Phelps Stokes, Miss Mabel Choate.

Comfort Is Fashion Keynote Of Tanglewood Concert Goers

Comfort seemed to be the keynote of attire at last night's opening Tanglewood concert rather than style show evening, concerts in other years have proved. The cool weather no doubt had a lot to do with it, but we prefer to think it an indication of growing sincerity on the part of the audience in going primarily to hear the music rather than to witness a spectacle.

Two Schools of Thought

On the lawn, of course, anything goes. Approaching the Shed, one was conscious of two opposite schools of thought on the comfort question: An unexpected number of bare legs glistened in the light from the Shed, yet more slack ensembles were in evidence than ever before, even at an afternoon program where apparel is naturally [illegible] beach chairs were in use than heretofore, it was noticed, but at the same time there were also more listeners who disdained anything sturdier to sit on than a coat.

Inside the Shed, sport-like afternoon dresses were the prime favorite—the comfortable kind with pleated skirts, in solid, pastel shades—and light summer coats were a necessity. Conspicuous in the crowd were the women members of the Berkshire Musical Association who participated in last night's program, all gowned in short, white dresses at the maestro's request. Hats were in a distinct minority all through the audience.

Even those in the box section seemed to have comfort in mind. Their costumes were colorful, though not so glittering as they probably will be at the Saturday night concerts, if former years are any indication. Dinner dresses were the most popular, dark ones with bright flowers splattered from neck to hem predominating. Luxuriant fur jackets, worn as a rule no matter how warm the weather, were welcome complements for many ensembles in the cool of last evening. Shawls, the favorite of last season, were only occasionally in [illegible]

The same degrees of formality and comfort in dress held for male concert-goers, their outfits ranging all the way from open-necked sport shirts with vari-colored slack suits to tuxedo or white dinner coat.

It remains to be seen how the weather at the next concerts will affect the trend in attire established at the opening last night.

Festival

Continued From First Page

major symphony, No. 88. The orchestra had not played the majestic introduction before it became evident that they were at top form. The whole symphony was played with impeccable purity, if with a bit of restraint. This Haydn, the Debussy "Afternoon of a Faun" and the Beethoven fifth symphony, which was used for the final number, are well-known to Festival audiences. The novelties were two nocturnes of Debussy, 'Clouds" and "Festivals," and the Villa-Lobos choral number.

Chorus Does Itself Proud

Our local singers had the right to be very proud of their accomplishments in this exciting composition. It is not exactly new. It was composed in 1925, but it was only in 1939, at the World's Fair, it was first played in this country. There is quite a long portion devoted exclusively to the orchestra before the voices come in. All the battery of percussion is called for, and some instruments that are quite unknown, especially the caxambu, a glass bottle filled with gravel, the puita, reco-reco, xucalho, etc., all devices for producing special rattling noises.

At first hearing the form or outline is not discernible, but there is an irrisistible driving force which gives impact and power to the music. The voices were demanded in their extreme capacities most of the time, and whatever Koussevitzky called for, the chorus, trained by its able director, Horace Hunt, was prepared to deliver. Their attacks were well-placed and strong, and they sustained the difficult tones, in the face of a very heavy orchestra, without sacrificing the musical quality of their voices. The words sung to the music are in Portuguese, while the running chant which accompanies it is in native Indian words of Brazil. It was a pity that Mr. Hunt might not have acknowledged personally the tribute which was most certainly his due, on the merits of the performance of his chorus.

Last night marked the second appearance of the Berkshire Musical Association chorus on Festival programs, the first having taken place at the second Festival on the Hanna Farm.

The delicate, fragile quality of tone which the orchestra produced in the Debussy nocturnes and the "Afternoon" was on a plane not surpassed in the orchestral domain. We did not feel that the players were going all-out on their variety of tone color, but for luscious and voluptuous effects, these were present in abundance.

At the conclusion of the "Afternoon of a Faun" the conductor graciously motioned the oboe soloist, Ferdinand Gillet, and the flute soloist, George Laurent, to their feet to acknowledge the plaudits won by their superlative playing.

Program Lacks Kick

The fact is, there was not enough kick to the program itself. Except for the Villa-Lobos there was an overabundance of too familiar selections. Music lovers are attracted by the standard of the music, and by the unique setting, but repeaters will be more easily brought back if the programs hold items which will pique their curiosity.

The most rousing moments of the evening were reached in the Beethoven symphony. One cannot avoid thinking of the special added significance of this piece in these days. Very few will dispute the statement that it is the most popular in the symphonic repertory. The superb architecture of its structure was never more formidably portrayed than in the interpretation with which Koussevitzky favored it last night. There was a conviction to the performance which was unquestionably lofty, sincere, and determined.

The closing bridge of the scherzo was masterfully built up to prepare for the truly majestic utterance of the C major triad which opens the finale. At its first blast and again at its reprise, the breadth of its sweep was the climax of the evening. The spirit pervading it had something above the mere expression of an emotion; it was a pledge to that which we all recognize as paramount.

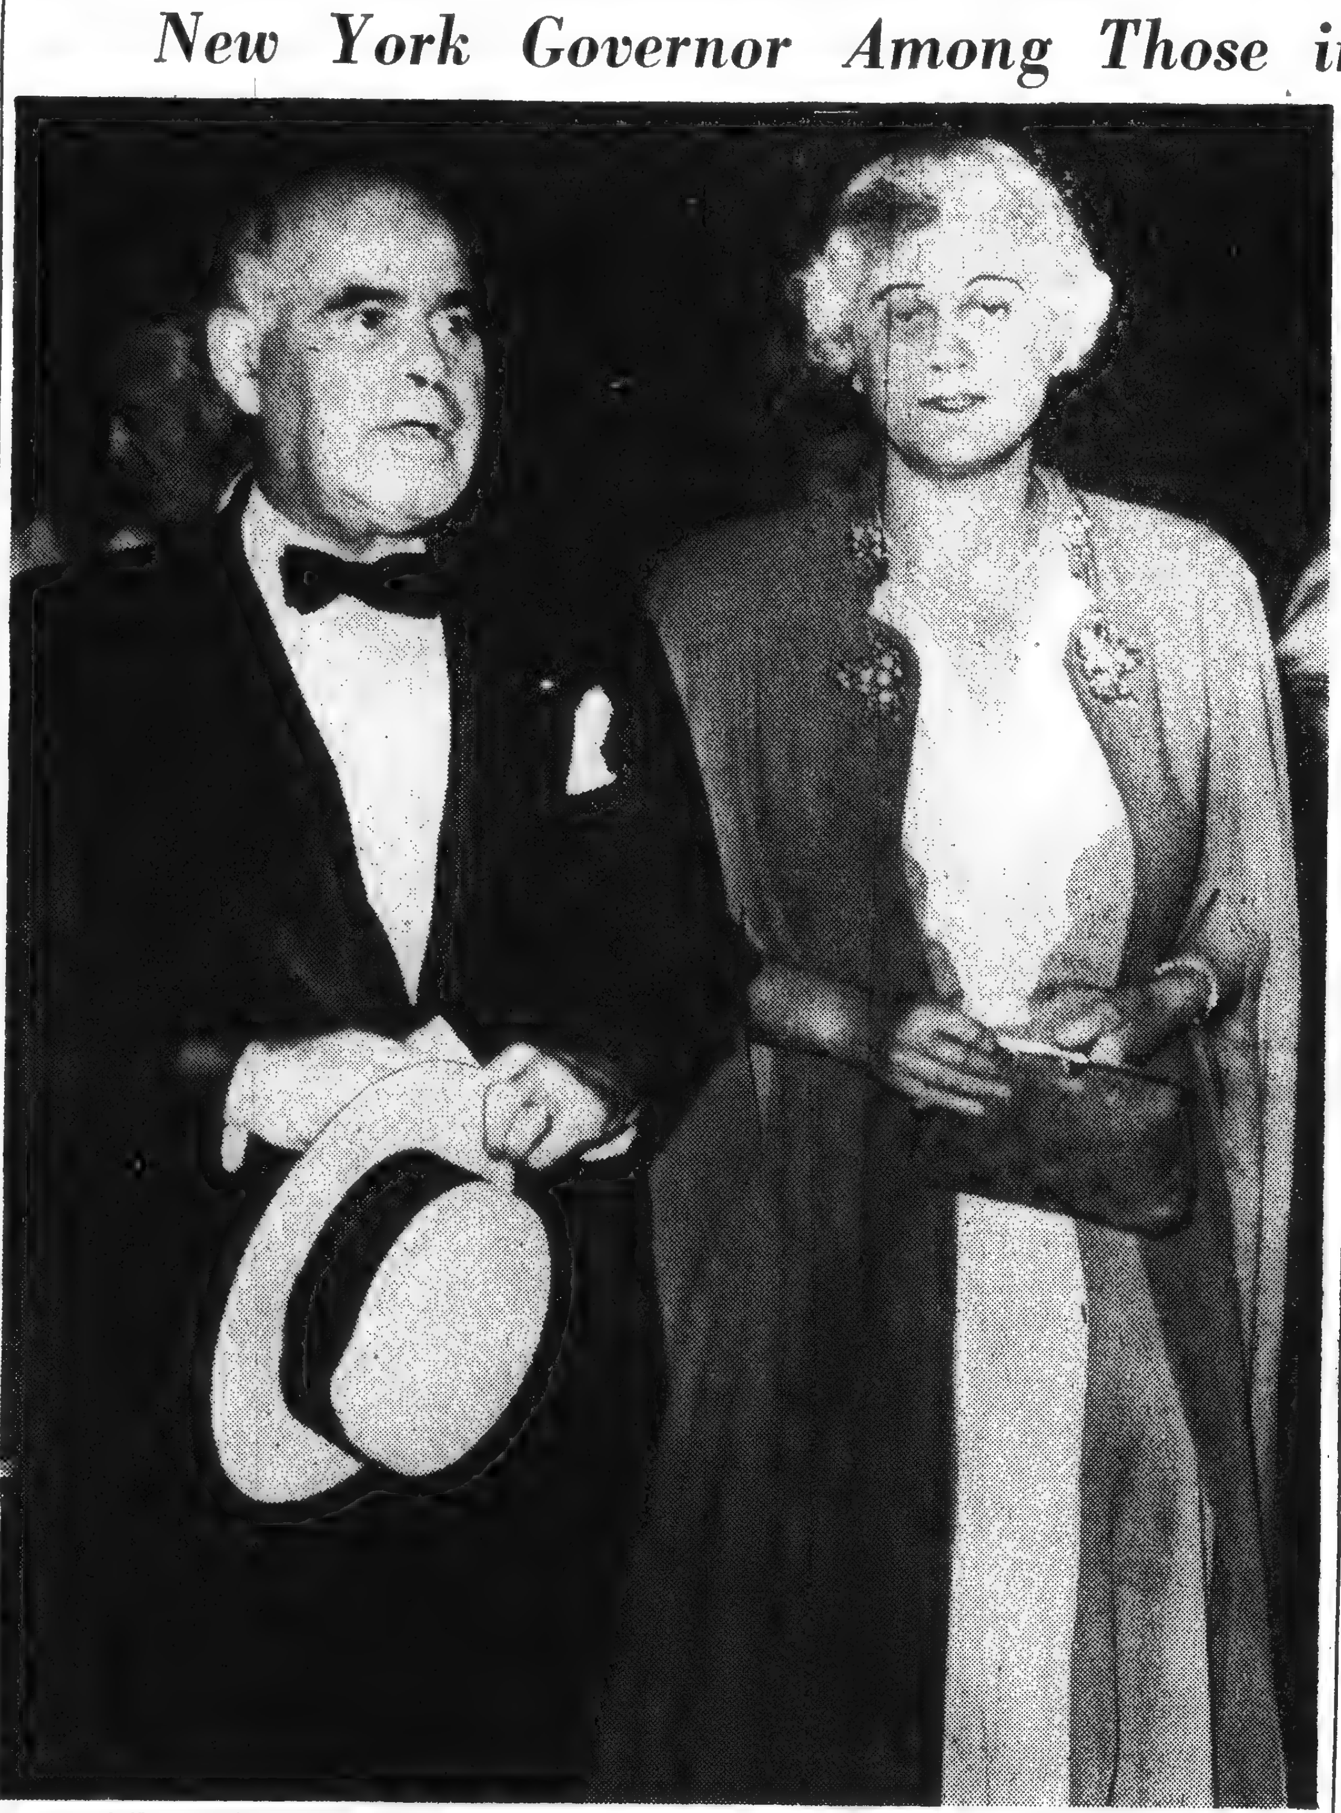
This was stimulation of the highest degree and it was so appreciated by the audience. The tempi were on the deliberate side, the better to allow the details to be absorbed by the tensely listening audience. The majesty of the performance gave new meaning to this most familiar work. If, as is so often reiterated, Beethoven was putting to music his conception of one's encounters with Fate throughout life, the range of his emotions, from despair to bliss, could easily be visualized, and, in the finale, the ascent to triumph was stupendous.

Hopkins Sees Another Raid

MOSCOW (UP)—Harry L. Hopkins slept through the latter part of a German air raid on Moscow early today after conferring for a second time last night with Josef Stalin. The air raid alarms sounded while Hopkins, U. S. Ambassador Laurence Steinhardt and their party were dining in the famous Caucasian Restaurant.

The party was escorted by the restaurant management to a nearby municipal shelter where they spent some time and then continued back to the embassy and retired for the night.

New York Governor Among Those in Attendance at Opening of Festival



Present at the opening last night of the eighth annual Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood were Gov. and Mrs. Herbert H. Lehman of New York.

Former New York State Gov. Alfred E. Smith's daughter, Mrs. John A. Warner, was with the Lehmans.

Among Southern Berkshire residents attending was Dr. Robert Metz of Chicago and Fernbrook, Lenox.

Sports Editor Has No V-Neck Sweater, but Takes a Chance And Covers Beethoven's Fifth

By JOHN M. FLYNN

Sports Editor of The Eagle

TANGLEWOOD. — When Mel Shaffer, business manager of the Pittsfield baseball club of the Canadian-American League, informed me the game between the Electrics and Gloversville, scheduled for last night at Dorothy Deming Field, had been postponed because of wet grounds I got in touch with George W. Edman, managing editor of The Eagle and praise agent for the Berkshire Symphonic Festival. He told me that Serge Koussevitzky and his squad from Boston would start pitching at 8.30 regardless of the weather but he was not worrying because indications were that it would be a pleasant night in and near the Shed. That was the tip for me to prepare to be present at the opening of the eighth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival.

With Beethoven's Symphony No. 5 in C minor on the program it naturally became "V" night. You know that "V" campaign they have in England making everybody victory-conscious and I am happy to learn they are doing more than talking about such a culmination. I hunted high and low but could not find a V-neck sweater. It was just about as hard to find a "V," which a $5 bill is called when there is occasion to call it at all. Nevertheless the dark suit which I have for funerals, weddings and practically every other occasion was neatly pressed and Abe Michelson agreed not only to provide transportation for me but also to be my bodyguard. Bill Cunningham and Walter Winchell have bodyguards and I can see no reason why I should not have one.

Leaves Chorus to Jay

I shall skip over Haydn's Symphony in G Major as quickly as a deer leaps over a three-foot fence, and concerning Debussy's Three Nocturnes I shall just mention that the order was correct as the clouds were in evidence for days, the Festival opened auspiciously and sirens were heard as the crowd left the grounds. The chorus of the Berkshire Musical Association will be dealt with at length by Jay C. Rosenfeld who reviews these things as a business while I just write about them for fun.

(Editor's note—Debussy's Prelude to "The Afternoon of a Faun" was played instead of the Nocturne "Sirenes.")

Beethoven's Symphony No. 5 in C Minor—that is the dish that I shall try to serve you in bits, delicate or otherwise.

Ludwig van Beethoven was born Dec. 16, 1770 and died at Vienna March 26, 1827. Thus he lived during a period when we had two wars with England but he was a composer and not a war correspondent. We are not fighting England now, anyway. We are trying to help that country and at the same time help ourselves, which seems to be quite a sensible plan.

I shall quote this from the program: "Something in the direct, impelling drive of the first movement of the C minor symphony commanded the general attention when it was new, challenged the skeptical and soon forced its acceptance. Goethe heard it with grumbling disapproval, according to Mendelssohn but was astonished and impressed in spite of himself. Lesueur, hidebound professor at the Conservatoire was talked by Berloiz into breaking his vow never to listen to another note of Beethoven and found his prejudices and resistances quite swept away. A less plausible tale reports Maria Malibran as having been thrown into convulsions by this symphony." I think Maria carried it a little too far.

Concluding, the program says: "The mysterious mood of the scherzo, the suspense of the soft drum beats preparing a new disclosure, the sudden radiance of the major tonality, these wonders of the dreaming and creating artist no technician will ever account for in factual terms."

If the experts are unable to explain it in factual terms I shall stop right here and keep in mind that my business is judging base hits and errors and not symphonic hits and errors.

"Abe Is Like That"

Serge was given a warm greeting when he stepped on the platform before the opening of the program but he did not receive as much applause at the end as I had expected. Perhaps there were too many movie fans present. My bodyguard, however, explained that the big cheers would come Sunday afternoon when the persons delivering the applause could be seen. Abe is like that. He says what he thinks and his thoughts are sound.

To some persons the sweetest music is the sound of rain falling on a tin roof. Still that would not delight the ears of the powers behind or in front of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival. Rain might fill Lake Mahkeenac to overflowing but would not help to fill the music Shed with cash customers.

I know of individuals who consider the finest music is the sound of a cash register ringing frequently. To others the quitting whistle is most pleasing to the ears.

Larry MacPhail, the financial head of the Brooklyn Dodgers, says that the grandest music of all is provided by wrens at his place near Lake Michigan. The wren is a small, more or less brown, singing bird in the family Troglodytidae. (Imagine mentioning that family to a Brooklyn fan). Webster's reminds us that the Wren (an acrostic formed from the initials of the title) is a member of the Women's Royal Naval Service, a nauxiliary of the British Navy established during the first World War. MacPhail of course had in mind the birds and not the uniformed ladies across the sea as the makers of such enchanting music.

Symphonic Shorts

Thomas Kilduff, Congressman Allen T. Treadway's very valuable aid, mentioned that Tanglewood is in the town of Stockbridge although closer to the Lenox post office than it is to the building where Stockbridge residents get their mail. Tom, however, would not quibble over the fact that Tanglewood often is referred to as being in the town of Lenox because the Congressman appreciates votes from Lenox just the same as from Stockbridge.

Atty. Hugh P. Drysdale of North Adams, who was quite a baseball player at Williams College and an excellent golfer for many years, was among those present.

George Markell of Boston, former owner and manager of the Strand Theatre, Boston, is taking in all three series with Mrs. Markell. George, a Harvard man, always sits in the Crimson cheering section in the annual football classic at the Bowl or the Stadium, but I noticed they went right past the Harvard sector last night and were seated down front with the blues or the Yales. George inquired about Pittsfield's baseball club in the Canadian-American League. He was a generous contributor to the Hillies when he lived in Pittsfield.

I would suggest that since Mozart's Requiem is on the program for next Thursday night's concert that our church editor, Norman H. Ransford be assigned to cover it. I say church editor instead of religious editor because all editors on The Eagle are religious.

Not a [illegible] was paged during the [illegible] formance. I was [illegible] somebody would put [illegible] the double-header to [illegible] at the Dorothy Deming [illegible] tonight between Pittsfield [illegible] Gloversville.

A gala benefit program is to be put on at Tanglewood Friday night Aug. 15 for the United Service Organizations and British War Relief. The Pittsfield baseball club did their bit for Canadian relief recently when in playing at Quebec and Three Rivers they lost six games, won one and tied one.

I hunted out Bill Sistaire, head usher, who was about as easy to find as the main entrance. He told me that the attendance was about 8000 and that is a large number not only of persons but even of pennies.

The musicians managed to keep their instruments dry during the heavy rains the past few days. Some critics even intimated that at times the music was dry.

Serge Koussevitzky, the conductor, worked hard but at no time was he as busy as a bartender during a golf tournament and nobody ever heard any cheers for the fellow who mixes the drinks.

Came From Near and Far

In the Festival audience last night were people from most of the 48 states. Charles Wirth Jr., and his daughter, Miss Alma Wirth, above, traveled all the way from New Orleans for the opening.

Newsmen Sent 10,500 Words From Tanglewood

TANGLEWOOD.—Manager Robert Tryon of Western Union reported that newsmen filed 10,500 words on last night's opening, a 25 per cent increase over last year's 8000. Statisticians are still working on an estimate as to how many typewriter ribbons were worn out in the process, the 10,500 final words meaning about 20,000 original words if the writers have as many second thoughts as most of us do.

Tanglewood Tales

Last night's audience of 7500 represented the largest for an opening night in the eight-year history of the Festival. The total excludes an interested toad, whose crashing of the blue section was reported with understandable glee by Manager George E. Judd of the Boston Symphony.

* * *

An enquiring reporter climbed a tree over the warning bell at the corner of the Shed to interview a katydid who, during the Haydn, propounded his age-old question of whether Katy did or didn't. Asked why he didn't just listen, with a view to being inspired to remove the slight scratch in his voice, the katydid said, "Who's Haydn?"

* * *

Early arrivers last night found themselves playing tag with mowing machines on the huge lawns. Because of the rain, the cutting had to be delayed until the last minute.

* * *

More than a few of the ushers, after putting in the usual exacting job of not getting more than one person in the same seat, went up on the platform to sing with the Berkshire Musical Association chorus. On the platform, they had to find their own seats.

* * *

Miss Annabelle Burkhardt of the arch-Republican Holyoke Transcript spent most of her free minutes during the evening seeking Congressman Allen T. Treadway for picture purposes. But Mr. Treadway was in Washington. She went back to Holyoke with a picture of Owen Johnson.

* * *

Festival officials report that the big parking field was cleared in 25 minutes, thus scattering the clouds of worry which hung on the brows of those in charge after the continued rain.

* * *

To methods of transportation used for reaching Tanglewood, add horseback. A group of young men and women rode to the concert from the Lenox Ridng Academy via the Under Mountain and Sanctuary Roads.

* * *

Some 90 newspapers, magazines and radio stations have representatives covering the Festival in toto or in part. All major news services sent special correspondents. Most of the New York, Boston, Philadelphia, Pittsburgh, Washington, Buffalo and Toledo papers have personal coverage, not to mention the Homer (La.) Guardian Journal.

* * *

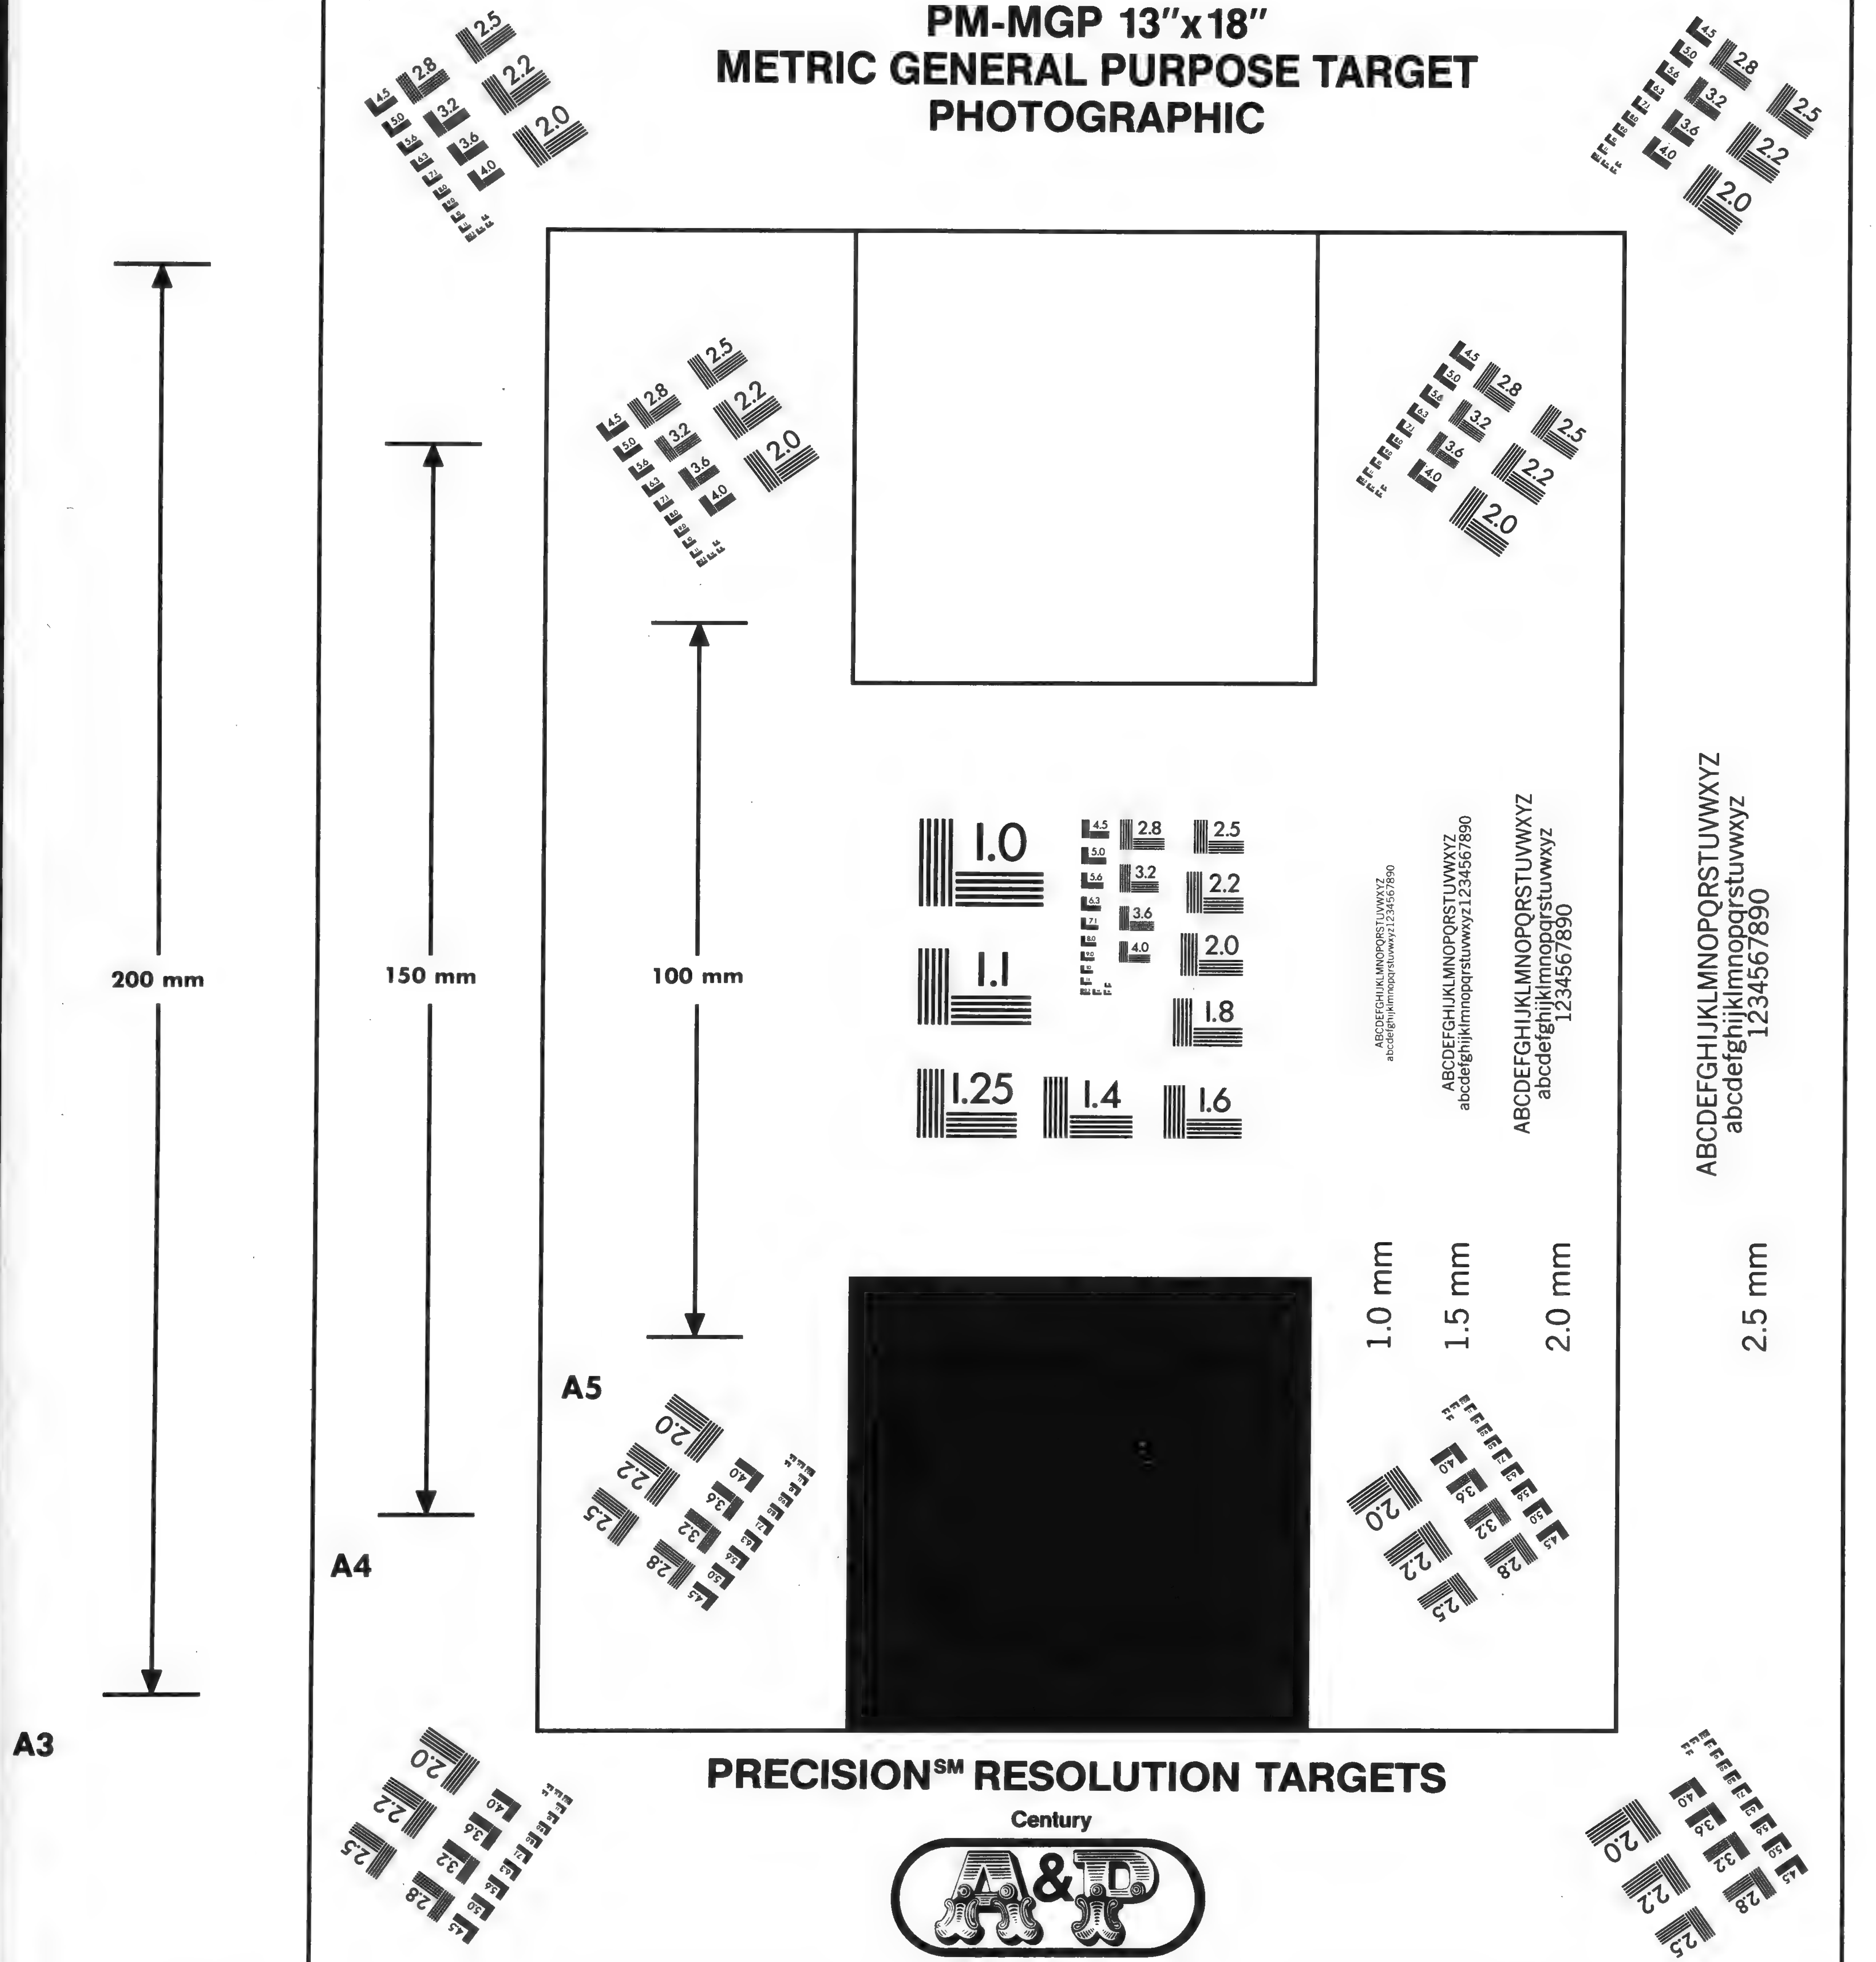
At least one man got stung at last night's concert. He was a member of the Legion parking squad, and he ran afoul of a hornet's nest. He was one of the first aid tent's few customers.

* * *

The national scope of the Festival was a geographical fact unknown to one worried driver. At the end of the concert he approached a member of the parking crew and asked solemnly, "Have you seen a car with Pennsylvania license plates?"

REDUCTION
RATIO
14x

PM-MGP 13″x18″
METRIC GENERAL PURPOSE TARGET
PHOTOGRAPHIC



200 mm
150 mm
100 mm
A5
A4
A3
1.0
1.1
1.25
1.4
1.6
1.8
2.0
2.2
2.5
2.8
3.2
3.6
4.0
4.5
5.0
5.6
6.3
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890
1.0 mm
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890
1.5 mm
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890
2.0 mm
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890
2.5 mm

PRECISION℠ RESOLUTION TARGETS

Century
A&P
1303 Geneva Avenue
St. Paul, MN 55119

Opening of Berkshire Symphonic Festival Is

Governor and Mrs. Lehman Head Distinguished Guests

Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith and Her Guests Again Occupy Boxes 1 and 2—Danes Are Guests of Koussevitzkys

Socially, the 1941 Berkshire Symphonic Festival got off to a handsome start at the opening concert last night. New York and Boston social registerites flooded the select box section and prominent citizens from many cities were noted throughout the audience generally. Gov. Herbert H. Lehman of New York and Mrs. Lehman were among the distinguished guests.

The Lehman box was directly in back of the two boxes, 1 and 2, which Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith has again this year. With the Lehmans was Mrs. John A. Warner, daughter of former New York Gov. Alfred E. Smith. Guests of Miss Robinson Smith were her mother, Mrs. Robinson Smith; Miss Miriam K. Oliver, Mrs. E. Corning Townsend, Mrs. Montgomery Hare, Stuart Montgomery of Boston, William Miles, Malcolm Vaughan, Leonardo Casanova and Bryn Strandanaes of New York.

In Mrs. Koussevitzky's box were Ernest B. Dane of Boston, president of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Mrs. Dane.

Other Box Holders

Some of the other box holders and their guests were:—

Mrs. E. Griswold Hollister of Toledo and Lenox: Miss Olive Colton, Toledo, Mrs. Zorah Bowman and Miss Katharine Geddes of Chappaqua, N. Y., and Mrs. W. G. Cavanaugh, New York City.

Mrs. Harry Adams, Canaan, N. Y.: Mrs. Griffith Best, Dallas, Texas, Mrs. William Adams, Canaan, Mrs. Donald Bates Lawson, Boston, and Mr. and Mrs. Frank R. Harnden of Hancock.

Mr. and Mrs. Leonard Clark Feathers, Lenox: Mrs. Chester L. Dane, New York, Mrs. J. Harwood Priddy, New York, Miss Edith Hollyday, Bedford Hills, Miss Edith Ingalls, Cleveland, and Miss Henrietta Feathers.

Mr. and Mrs. Walter Atherton, Windsor: Mr. and Mrs. Ray Atherton, Washington, D. C., formerly of the American Embassy at Copenhagen, Mr. and Mrs. Alexander Whiteside of Boston.

Mr. and Mrs. Samuel G. Colt, Pittsfield: Mrs. James D. Colt and Mrs. Clement S. Houghton of Chestnut Hill.

Mr. and Mrs. Norman H. Davis, Stockbridge: Mr. and Mrs. Maclin P. Davis of Tennessee, Mrs. Robert W. Whiton Stuart.

Mr. and Mrs. Thomas H. Blodgett, Great Barrington: Mr. and Mrs. Auguste J. Cordier, New York; Mr. and Mrs. Walter H. Mann, Old Greenwich, Conn.

Mrs. W. Rockwood Gibbs, Richmond: Mr. and Mrs. Edward DeWitt Shumway, Lake Forest, Ill., brother-in-law and sister of Mrs. Gibbs; Ensign Arthur Edward Anderson, Berkeley, Cal.; Mr. and Mrs. C. Lambert Heyniger, New Lebanon, N. Y.

Others who had guests in their boxes were Mrs. Rodney Procter, Mrs. John Barry Ryan, Mr. and Mrs. William Felton Barrett, Mr. and Mrs. Adolf A. Berle, Mrs. Alvan T. Fuller, Mrs. Charles A. Cass, Mrs. John W. Garrett, Mr. and Mrs. Eldridge Gerry Chadwick, Mrs. Edward S. Harkness, Canon and Mrs. Anson Phelps Stokes, Miss Mabel Choate.

New York Governor Among Those in Attendance at Present at the opening last night of the eighth annual Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood were Gov. and Mrs. Herbert H. Lehman of New York.

Former New York State Gov. Alfred E. Smit ter, Mrs. John A. Warner, was with the

Comfort Is Fashion Keynote Of Tanglewood Concert Goers

Comfort seemed to be the keynote of attire at last night's opening Tanglewood concert rather than style show evening concerts in other years have proved. The cool weather no doubt had a lot to do with it, but we prefer to think it an indication of growing sincerity on the part of the audience in going primarily to hear the music rather than to witness a spectacle.

Two Schools of Thought

On the lawn, of course, anything goes. Approaching the Shed, one was conscious of two opposite schools of thought on the comfort question: An unexpected number of bare legs glistened in the light from the Shed, yet more slack ensembles were in evidence than ever before, even at an afternoon program where apparel is naturally more casual than at night. More beach chairs were in use than heretofore, it was noticed, but at the same time there were also more listeners who disdained anything sturdier to sit on than a coat.

Inside the Shed, sport-like afternoon dresses were the prime favorite—the comfortable kind with pleated skirts, in solid, pastel shades—and light summer coats were a necessity. Conspicuous in the crowd were the women members of the Berkshire Musical Association who participated in last night's program, all gowned in short, white dresses at the maestro's request. Hats were in a distinct minority all through the audience.

Even those in the box section seemed to have comfort in mind. Their costumes were colorful, though not so glittering as they probably will be at the Saturday night concerts, if former years are any indication. Dinner dresses were the most popular, dark ones with bright flowers splattered from neck to hem predominating. Luxuriant fur jackets, worn as a rule no matter how warm the weather, were welcome complements for many ensembles in the cool of last evening. Shawls, the favorite of last season, were only occasionally in evidence.

The same degrees of formality and comfort in dress held for male concert-goers, their outfits ranging all the way from open-necked sport shirts with vari-colored slack suits to tuxedo or white dinner coat.

It remains to be seen how the weather at the next concerts will affect the trend in attire established at the opening last night.

Festival

Continued From First Page

major symphony, No. 88. The orchestra had not played the majestic introduction before it became evident that they were at top form. The whole symphony was played with impeccable purity, if with a bit of restraint. This Haydn, the Debussy "Afternoon of a Faun" and the Beethoven fifth symphony, which was used for the final number, are well-known to Festival audiences. The novelties were two nocturnes of Debussy, 'Clouds" and "Festivals," and the Villa-Lobos choral number.

Chorus Does Itself Proud

Our local singers had the right to be very proud of their accomplishments in this exciting composition. It is not exactly new. It was composed in 1925, but it was only in 1939, at the World's Fair, it was first played in this country. There is quite a long portion devoted exclusively to the orchestra before the voices come in. All the battery of percussion is called for, and some instruments that are quite unknown, especially the caxambu, a glass bottle filled with gravel, the puita, reco-reco, xucalho, etc., all devices for producing special rattling noises.

At first hearing the form or outline is not discernible, but there is an irrisistible driving force which gives impact and power to the music. The voices were demanded in their extreme capacities most of the time, and whatever Koussevitzky called for, the chorus, trained by its able director, Horace Hunt, was prepared to deliver. Their attacks were well-placed and strong, and they sustained the difficult tones, in the face of a very heavy orchestra, without sacrificing the musical quality of their ist, Ferdinand Gillet, and the flute soloist, George Laurent, to their feet to acknowledge the plaudits won by their superlative playing.

Program Lacks Kick

The fact is, there was not enough kick to the program itself. Except for the Villa-Lobos there was an overabundance of too familiar selections. Music lovers are attracted by the standard of the music, and by the unique setting, but repeaters will be more easily brought back if the programs hold items which will pique their curiosity.

The most rousing moments of the evening were reached in the Beethoven symphony. One cannot avoid thinking of the special added significance of this piece in these days. Very few will dispute the statement that it is the most popular in the symphonic repertory. The superb architecture of its structure was never more formidably portrayed than in the interpretation with which Koussevitzky favored it last night. There was a conviction to the performance which was unquestionably lofty, sincere, and determined.

The closing bridge of the scherzo was masterfully built up to prepare for the truly majestic utterance of the C major triad which opens the finale. At its first blast and again at its reprise, the breadth of its sweep was the climax of the evening. The spirit pervading it had something above the mere expression of an emotion; it was a pledge to that which we all recognize as paramount.

This was stimulation of the highest degree and it was so appreciated by the audience. The tempi were on the deliberate side, the better to allow the details to be absorbed by the tensely listening audience. The majesty of the performance gave new meaning to this most familiar work. If, as is so often reiterated, Beethoven was putting to music his conception of

Sports Editor Has No V-Neck Sweater, but Takes a Chance And Covers Beethoven's Fifth

By JOHN M. FLYNN

Sports Editor of The Eagle

TANGLEWOOD. — When Mel Shaffer, business manager of the Pittsfield baseball club of the Canadian-American League, informed me the game between the Electrics and Gloversville, scheduled for last night at Dorothy Deming Field, had been postponed because of wet grounds I got in touch with George W. Edman, managing editor of The Eagle and praise agent for the Berkshire Symphonic Festival. He told me that Serge Koussevitzky and his squad from Boston would start pitching at 8.30 regardless of the weather but he was not worrying because indications were that it would be a pleasant night in and near the Shed. That was the tip for me to prepare to be present at the opening of the eighth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival.

With Beethoven's Symphony No. 5 in C minor on the program it naturally became "V" night. You know that "V" campaign they have in England making everybody victory-conscious and I am happy to learn they are doing more than talking about such a culmination. I hunted high and low but could not find a V-neck sweater. It was just about as hard to find a "V," which a $5 bill is called when there is occasion to call it at all. Nevertheless the dark suit which I have for funerals, weddings and practically every other occasion was neatly pressed and Abe Michelson agreed not only to provide transportation for me but also to be my bodyguard. Bill Cunningham and Walter Winchell have bodyguards and I can see no reason why I should not have one.

Leaves Chorus to Jay

I shall skip over Haydn's Symphony in G Major as quickly as a deer leaps over a three-foot fence, and concerning Debussy's Three Nocturnes I shall just mention that the order was correct as the clouds were in evidence for days, the Festival opened auspiciously and sirens were heard as the crowd left the grounds. The chorus of the Berkshire Musical Association will be dealt with at length by Jay C. Rosenfeld who reviews these things as a business while I just write about them for fun.

(Editor's note—Debussy's Prelude to "The Afternoon of a Faun" was played instead of the Nocturne "Sirenes.")

Beethoven's Symphony No. 5 in C Minor—that is the dish that I shall try to serve you in bits, delicate or otherwise.

Ludwig van Beethoven was born Dec. 16, 1770 and died at Vienna March 26, 1827. Thus he lived during a period when we had two wars with England but he was a composer and not a war correspondent. We are not fighting England now, anyway. We are trying to help that country and at the same time help ourselves, which seems to be quite a sensible plan.

I shall quote this from the program: "Something in the direct, impelling drive of the first movement of the C minor symphony commanded the general attention when it was new, challenged the skeptical and soon forced its acceptance. Goethe heard it with grumbling disapproval, according to Mendelssohn but was astonished and impressed in spite of himself. Lesueur, hidebound professor at the Conservatoire was talked by Berloiz into breaking his vow never to listen to another note of Beethoven and found his prejudices and resistances quite swept away. A less plausible tale reports Maria Malibran as having been thrown into convulsions by this symphony." I think Maria carried it a little too far.

Concluding, the program says: "The mysterious mood of the scherzo, the suspense of the soft drum beats preparing a new disclosure, the sudden radiance of the major tonality, these wonders of the dreaming and creating artist no technician will ever account for in factual terms."

If the experts are unable to explain it in factual terms I shall stop right here and keep in mind that my business is judging base hits and errors and not symphonic hits and errors.

"Abe Is Like That"

Serge was given a warm greeting when he stepped on the platform before the opening of the program but he did not receive as much applause at the end as I had expected. Perhaps there were too many movie fans present. My bodyguard, however, explained that the big cheers would come Sunday afternoon when the persons delivering the applause could be seen. Abe is like that. He says what he thinks and his thoughts are sound.

To some persons the sweetest music is the sound of rain falling on a tin roof. Still that would not delight the ears of the powers behind or in front of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival. Rain might fill Lake Mahkeenac to overflowing but would not help to fill the music Shed with cash customers.

I know of individuals who consider the finest music is the sound of a cash register ringing frequently. To others the quitting whistle is most pleasing to the ears.

Larry MacPhail, the financial head of the Brooklyn Dodgers, says that the grandest music of all is provided by wrens at his place near Lake Michigan. The wren is a small, more or less brown, singing bird in the family Troglodytidae. (Imagine mentioning that family to a Brooklyn fan). Webster's reminds us that the Wren (an acrostic formed from the initials of the title) is a member of the Women's Royal Naval Service, a nauxiliary of the British Navy established during the first World War. MacPhail of course had in mind the birds and not the uniformed ladies across the sea as the makers of such enchanting music.

Symphonic Shorts

Thomas Kilduff, Congressman Allen T. Treadway's very valuable aid, mentioned that Tanglewood is in the town of Stockbridge although closer to the Lenox post office than it is to the building where Stockbridge residents get their mail. Tom, however, would not quibble over the fact that Tanglewood often is referred to as being in the town of Lenox because the Congressman appreciates votes from Lenox just the same as from Stockbridge.

Atty. Hugh P. Drysdale of North Adams, who was quite a baseball player at Williams College and an excellent golfer for many years, was among those present.

George Markell of Boston, former owner and manager of the Strand Theatre, Boston, is taking in all three series with Mrs. Markell. George, a Harvard man, always sits in the Crimson cheering section in the annual football

Newsmen Sent 10,500 Words From Tanglewood

TANGLEWOOD.—Manager Robert Tryon of Western Union reported that newsmen filed 10,500 words on last night's opening, a 25 per cent increase over last year's 8000. Statisticians are still working on an estimate as to how many typewriter ribbons were worn out in the process, the 10,500 final words meaning about 20,000 original words if the writers have as many second thoughts as most of us do.

put on at Tanglewood Friday night Aug. 15 for the United Service Organizations and British War Relief. The Pittsfield baseball club did their bit for Canadian relief recently when in playing at Quebec and Three Rivers they lost six games, won one and tied one.

I hunted out Bill Sistaire, head usher, who was about as easy to find as the main entrance. He told me that the attendance was about 8000 and that is a large number not only of persons but even of pennies.

The musicians managed to keep their instruments dry during the heavy rains the past few days. Some critics even intimated that at times the music was dry.

Serge Koussevitzky, the conductor, worked hard but at no time was he as busy as a bartender during a golf tournament and nobody ever heard any cheers for the fellow who mixes the drinks.

Came From Near and Far

7.34

Opening of Berkshire Symphonic Festival Is Social Success

overnor and Mrs. Lehman ead Distinguished Guests

Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith and Her Guests Again Occupy Boxes 1 and 2—Danes Are Guests of Koussevitzkys

ocially, the 1941 Berkshire phonic Festival got off to a lsome start at the opening ert last night. New York Boston social registerites led the select box section and ninent citzens from many s were noted throughout the ence generally. Gov. Herbert ehman of New York and Mrs. nan were among the distin-
ed guests.

e Lehman box was directly in of the two boxes, 1 and 2,
Miss Gertrude Robinson has again this year. With Lehmans was Mrs. John A.
er, daughter of former New
Gov. Alfred E. Smith. Guests iss Robinson Smith were her er, Mrs. Robinson Smith; Miss m K. Oliver, Mrs. E. Corn-ownsend, Mrs. Montgomery
Stuart Montgomery of Bos-
William Miles, Malcolm han, Leonardo Casanova and Strandanaes of New York.

Mrs. Koussevitzky's box were t B. Dane of Boston, presiof the Boston Symphony Ora and Mrs. Dane.

Box Holders

ne of the other box holders heir guests were:—

s. E. Griswold Hollister of To-and Lenox: Miss Olive Col-Toledo, Mrs. Zorah Bowman iss Katharine Geddes of Chap-
, N. Y., and Mrs. W. G. Cava-
, New York City.

s. Harry Adams, Canaan, N. Y.:
Griffith Best, Dallas, Texas,
William Adams, Canaan, Mrs.
d Bates Lawson, Boston, and
Mr. and Mrs. Frank R. Harnden of Hancock.

Mr. and Mrs. Leonard Clark Feathers, Lenox: Mrs. Chester L. Dane, New York, Mrs. J. Harwood Priddy, New York, Miss Edith Hollyday, Bedford Hills, Miss Edith Ingalls, Cleveland, and Miss Henrietta Feathers.

Mr. and Mrs. Walter Atherton, Windsor: Mr. and Mrs. Ray Atherton, Washington, D. C., formerly of the American Embassy at Copenhagen, Mr. and Mrs. Alexander Whiteside of Boston.

Mr. and Mrs. Samuel G. Colt, Pittsfield: Mrs. James D. Colt and Mrs. Clement S. Houghton of Chestnut Hill.

Mr. and Mrs. Norman H. Davis, Stockbridge: Mr. and Mrs. Maclin P. Davis of Tennessee, Mrs. Robert W. Whiton Stuart.

Mr. and Mrs. Thomas H. Blodgett, Great Barrington: Mr. and Mrs. Auguste J. Cordier, New York; Mr. and Mrs. Walter H. Mann, Old Greenwich, Conn.

Mrs. W. Rockwood Gibbs, Richmond: Mr. and Mrs. Edward DeWitt Shumway, Lake Forest, Ill., brother-in-law and sister of Mrs. Gibbs; Ensign Arthur Edward Anderson, Berkeley, Cal.; Mr. and Mrs. C. Lambert Heyniger, New Lebanon, N. Y.

Others who had guests in their boxes were Mrs. Rodney Procter, Mrs. John Barry Ryan, Mr. and Mrs. William Felton Barrett, Mr. and Mrs. Adolf A. Berle, Mrs. Alvan T. Fuller, Mrs. Charles A. Cass, Mrs. John W. Garrett, Mr. and Mrs. Eldridge Gerry Chadwick, Mrs. Edward S. Harkness, Canon and Mrs. Anson Phelps Stokes, Miss Mabel Choate.

mfort Is Fashion Keynote Tanglewood Concert Goers nfort seemed to be the key-of attire at last night's openanglewood concert rather than show evening concerts in years have proved. The cool er no doubt had a lot to do t, but we prefer to think it lication of growing sincerity part of the audience in go-rimarily to hear the music than to witness a spectacle.

Schools of Thought the lawn, of course, anything Approaching the Shed, one onscious of two opposite of thought on the comfort on: An unexpected number e legs glistened in the light the Shed, yet more slack ens were in evidence than ever even at an afternoon pro-where apparel is naturally casual than at night. More chairs were in use than ore, it was noticed, but at me time there were also isteners who disdained anyturdier to sit on than a coat.

e the Shed, sport-like after-dresses were the prime e—the comfortable kind eated skirts, in solid, pastel —and light summer coats necessity. Conspicuous in the crowd were the women members of the Berkshire Musical Association who participated in last night's program, all gowned in short, white dresses at the maestro's request. Hats were in a distinct minority all through the audience.

Even those in the box section seemed to have comfort in mind. Their costumes were colorful, though not so glittering as they probably will be at the Saturday night concerts, if former years are any indication. Dinner dresses were the most popular, dark ones with bright flowers splattered from neck to hem predominating. Luxuriant fur jackets, worn as a rule no matter how warm the weather, were welcome complements for many ensembles in the cool of last evening. Shawls, the favorite of last season, were only occasionally in evidence.

The same degrees of formality and comfort in dress held for male concert-goers, their outfits ranging all the way from open-necked sport shirts with vari-colored slack suits to tuxedo or white dinner coat.

It remains to be seen how the weather at the next concerts will affect the trend in attire established at the opening last night.

tival

tinued From First Page symphony, No. 88. The or-had not played the majestic ction before it became evi-at they were at top form.

ole symphony was played peccable purity, if with a estraint. This Haydn, the "Afternoon of a Faun"
Beethoven fifth symphony, vas used for the final num-well-known to Festival au-
The novelties were two es of Debussy, 'Clouds" and als," and the Villa-Lobos umber.

Does Itself Proud

ocal singers had the right
ery proud of their accomnts in this exciting compo-
It is not exactly new. It nposed in 1925, but it was 1939, at the World's Fair, first played in this country.
s quite a long portion de-xclusively to the orchestra he voices come in. All the of percussion is called for, ne instruments that are nknown, especially the caxa glass bottle filled with the puita, reco-reco, xucal-
, all devices for producing rattling noises.

st hearing the form or out-not discernible, but there is istible driving force which npact and power to the
The voices were demanded extreme capacities most of e, and whatever Kousse-called for, the chorus, by its able director, Horace vas prepared to deliver.
tacks were well-placed and and they sustained the difnes, in the face of a very rchestra, without sacrific-musical quality of their
The words sung to the e in Portuguese, while the chant which accompanies native Indian words of ist, Ferdinand Gillet, and the flute soloist, George Laurent, to their feet to acknowledge the plaudits won by their superlative playing.

Program Lacks Kick

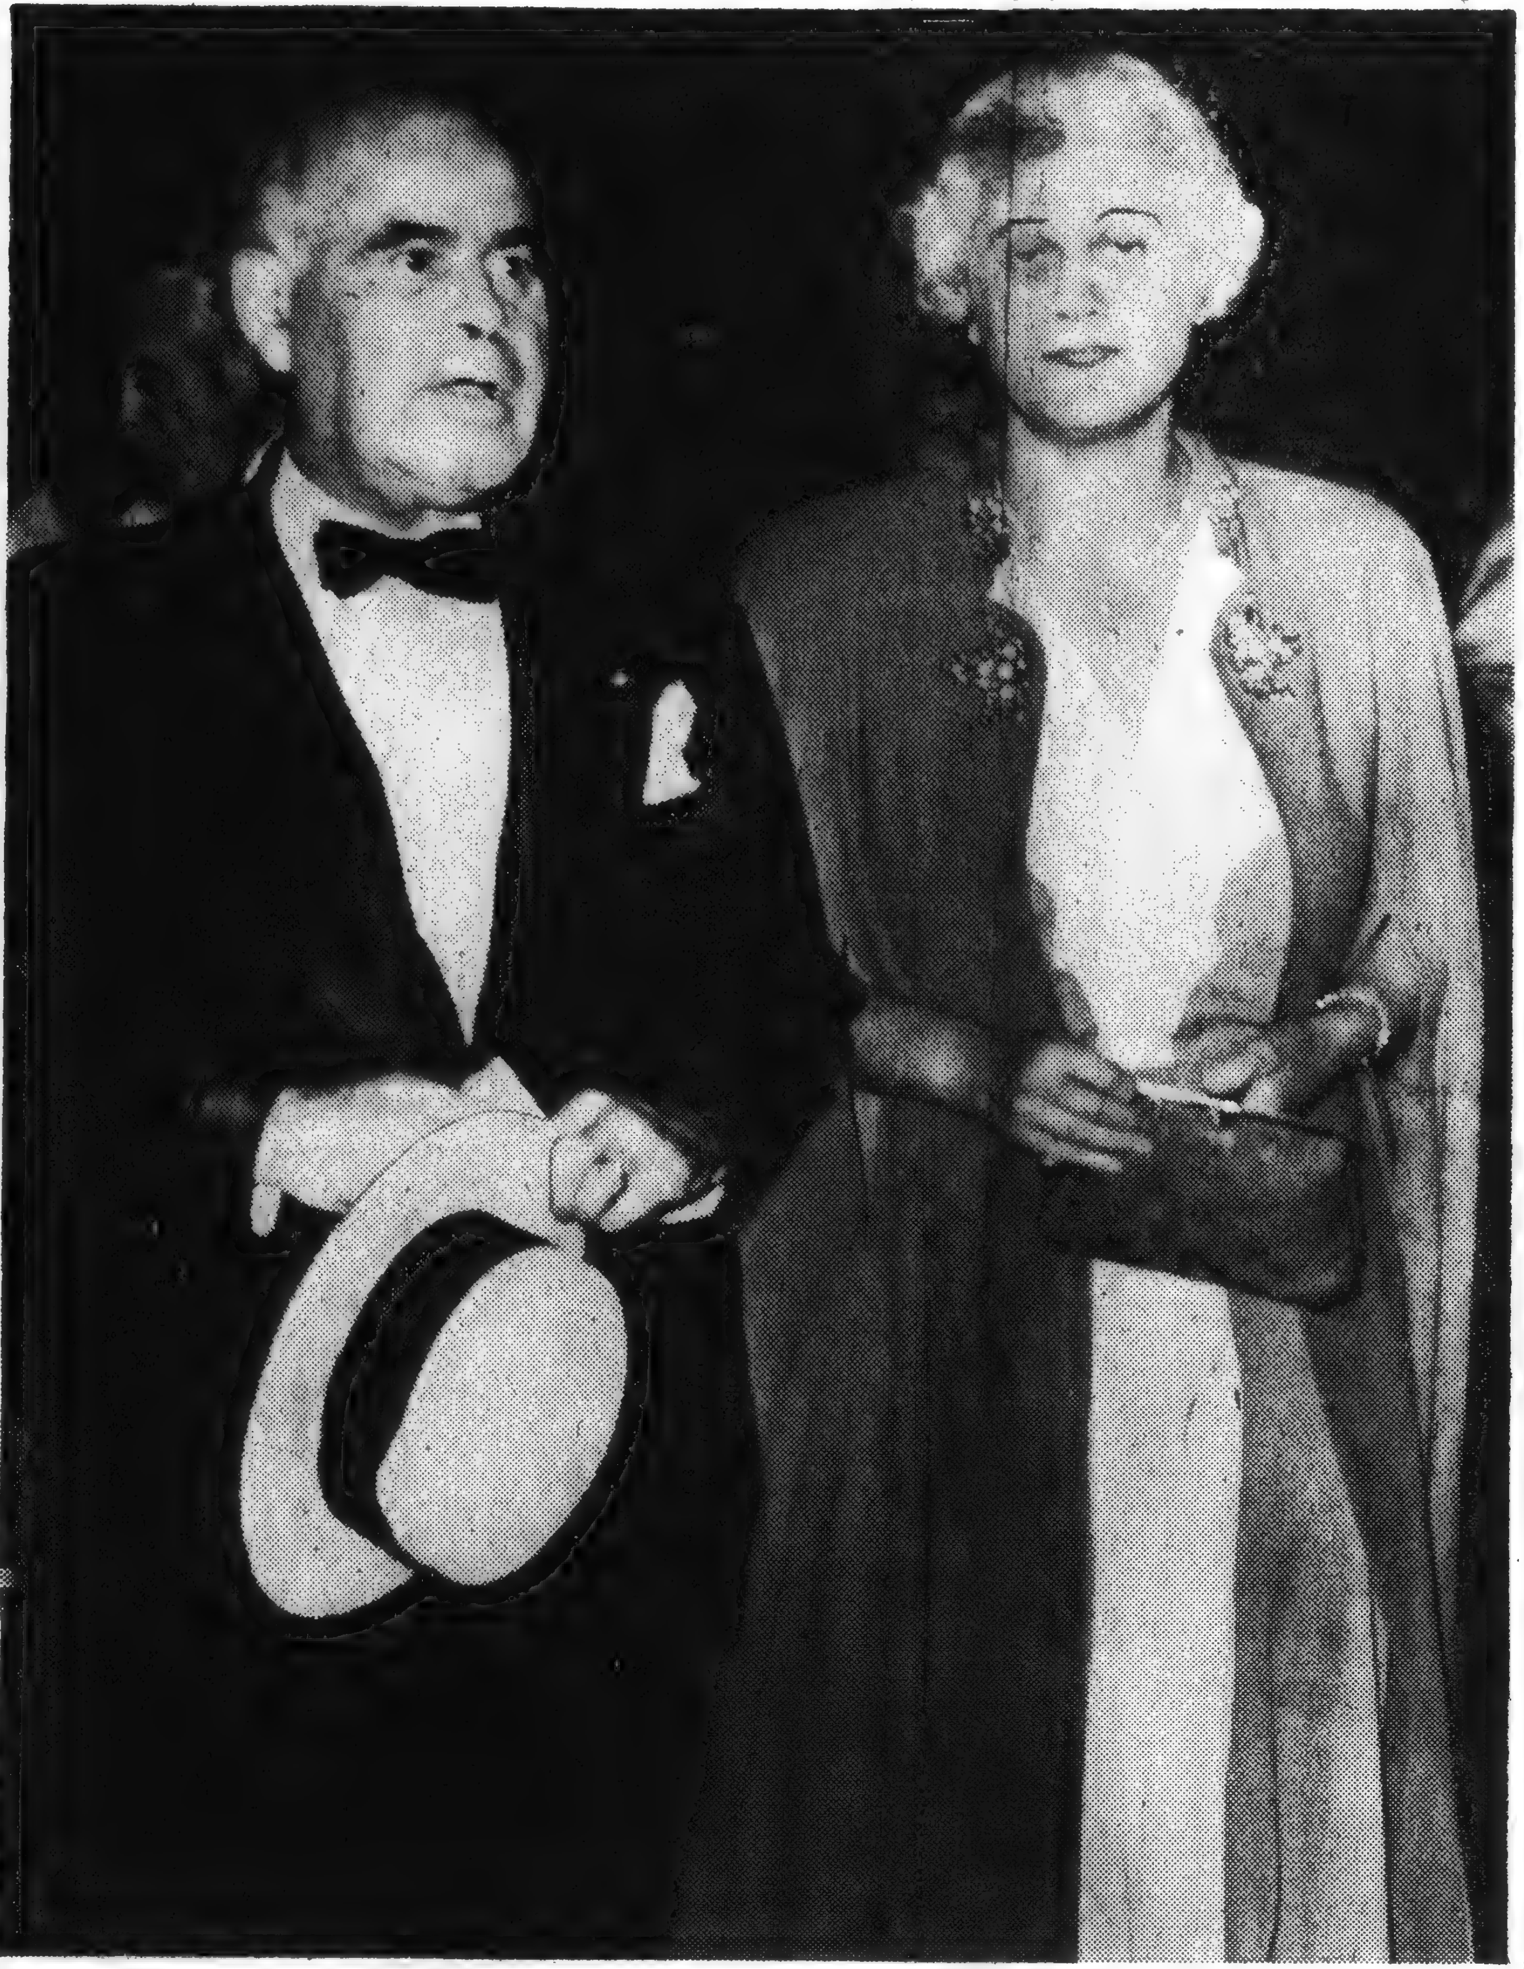
The fact is, there was not enough kick to the program itself. Except for the Villa-Lobos there was an overabundance of too familiar selections. Music lovers are attracted by the standard of the music, and by the unique setting, but repeaters will be more easily brought back if the programs hold items which will pique their curiosity.

The most rousing moments of the evening were reached in the Beethoven symphony. One cannot avoid thinking of the special added significance of this piece in these days. Very few will dispute the statement that it is the most popular in the symphonic repertory. The superb architecture of its structure was never more formidably portrayed than in the interpretation with which Koussevitzky favored it last night. There was a conviction to the performance which was unquestionably lofty, sincere, and determined.

The closing bridge of the scherzo was masterfully built up to prepare for the truly majestic utterance of the C major triad which opens the finale. At its first blast and again at its reprise, the breadth of its sweep was the climax of the evening. The spirit pervading it had something above the mere expression of an emotion; it was a pledge to that which we all recognize as paramount.

This was stimulation of the highest degree and it was so appreciated by the audience. The tempi were on the deliberate side, the better to allow the details to be absorbed by the tensely listening audience. The majesty of the performance gave new meaning to this most familiar work. If, as is so often reiterated, Beethoven was putting to music his conception of one's encounters with Fate throughout life, the range of his emotions, from despair to bliss,

New York Governor Among Those in Attendance at Opening of Festival



Present at the opening last night of the eighth annual Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood were Gov. and Mrs. Herbert H. Lehman of New York.

Former New York State Gov. Alfred E. Smith's daughter, Mrs. John A. Warner, was with the Lehmans.

Among Southern Berkshire residents attending was Dr. Robert Metz of Chicago and Fernbrook, Lenox.

Sports Editor Has No V-Neck Sweater, but Takes a Chance And Covers Beethoven's Fifth

By JOHN M. FLYNN

Sports Editor of The Eagle

TANGLEWOOD. — When Mel Shaffer, business manager of the Pittsfield baseball club of the Canadian-American League, informed me the game between the Electrics and Gloversville, scheduled for last night at Dorothy Deming Field, had been postponed because of wet grounds I got in touch with George W. Edman, managing editor of The Eagle and praise agent for the Berkshire Symphonic Festival. He told me that Serge Koussevitzky and his squad from Boston would start pitching at 8.30 regardless of the weather but he was not worrying because indications were that it would be a pleasant night in and near the Shed. That was the tip for me to prepare to be present at the opening of the eighth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival.

With Beethoven's Symphony No. 5 in C minor on the program it naturally became "V" night. You know that "V" campaign they have in England making everybody victory-conscious and I am happy to learn they are doing more than talking about such a culmination. I hunted high and low but could not find a V-neck sweater. It was just about as hard to find a "V," which a $5 bill is called when there is occasion to call it at all. Nevertheless the dark suit which I have for funerals, weddings and practically every other occasion was neatly pressed and Abe Michelson agreed not only to provide transportation for me but also to be my bodyguard. Bill Cunningham and Walter Winchell have bodyguards and I can see no reason why I should not have one.

Leaves Chorus to Jay

I shall skip over Haydn's Symphony in G Major as quickly as a deer leaps over a three-foot fence, and concerning Debussy's Three Nocturnes I shall just mention that the order was correct as the clouds were in evidence for days, the Festival opened auspiciously and sirens were heard as the crowd left the grounds. The chorus of the Berkshire Musical Association will be dealt with at length by Jay C. Rosenfeld who reviews these things as a business while I just write about them for fun.

(Editor's note—Debussy's Prelude to "The Afternoon of a Faun" was played instead of the Nocturne "Sirenes.")

Beethoven's Symphony No. 5 in C Minor—that is the dish that I shall try to serve you in bits, delicate or otherwise.

Ludwig van Beethoven was born Dec. 16, 1770 and died at Vienna March 26, 1827. Thus he lived during a period when we had two wars with England but he was a composer and not a war correspondent. We are not fighting England now, anyway. We are trying to help that country and at the same time help ourselves, which seems to be quite a sensible plan.

I shall quote this from the program: "Something in the direct, impelling drive of the first movement of the C minor symphony commanded the general attention when it was new, challenged the skeptical and soon forced its acceptance. Goethe heard it with grumbling disapproval, according to Mendelssohn but was astonished and impressed in spite of himself. Lesueur, hidebound professor at the Conservatoire was talked by Berloiz into breaking his vow never to listen to another note of Beethoven and found his prejudices and resistances quite swept away. A less plausible tale reports Maria Malibran as having been thrown into convulsions by this symphony." I think Maria carried it a little too far.

Concluding, the program says: "The mysterious mood of the scherzo, the suspense of the soft drum beats preparing a new disclosure, the sudden radiance of the major tonality, these wonders of the dreaming and creating artist no technician will ever account for in factual terms."

If the experts are unable to explain it in factual terms I shall stop right here and keep in mind that my business is judging base hits and errors and not symphonic hits and errors.

"Abe Is Like That"

Serge was given a warm greeting when he stepped on the platform before the opening of the program but he did not receive as much applause at the end as I had expected. Perhaps there were too many movie fans present. My bodyguard, however, explained that the big cheers would come Sunday afternoon when the persons delivering the applause could be seen. Abe is like that. He says what he thinks and his thoughts are sound.

To some persons the sweetest music is the sound of rain falling on a tin roof. Still that would not delight the ears of the powers behind or in front of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival. Rain might fill Lake Mahkeenac to overflowing but would not help to fill the music Shed with cash customers.

I know of individuals who consider the finest music is the sound of a cash register ringing frequently. To others the quitting whistle is most pleasing to the ears.

Larry MacPhail, the financial head of the Brooklyn Dodgers, says that the grandest music of all is provided by wrens at his place near Lake Michigan. The wren is a small, more or less brown, singing bird in the family Troglodytidae. (Imagine mentioning that family to a Brooklyn fan). Webster's reminds us that the Wren (an acrostic formed from the initials of the title) is a member of the Women's Royal Naval Service, a nauxiliary of the British Navy established during the first World War. MacPhail of course had in mind the birds and not the uniformed ladies across the sea as the makers of such enchanting music.

Symphonic Shorts

Thomas Kilduff, Congressman Allen T. Treadway's very valuable aid, mentioned that Tanglewood is in the town of Stockbridge although closer to the Lenox post office than it is to the building where Stockbridge residents get their mail. Tom, however, would not quibble over the fact that Tanglewood often is referred to as being in the town of Lenox because the Congressman appreciates votes from Lenox just the same as from Stockbridge.

Atty. Hugh P. Drysdale of North Adams, who was quite a baseball player at Williams College and an excellent golfer for many years, was among those present.

George Markell of Boston, former owner and manager of the Strand Theatre, Boston, is taking in all three series with Mrs. Markell. George, a Harvard man, always sits in the Crimson cheering section in the annual football classic at the Bowl or the Stadium, but I noticed they went right past the Harvard sector last night and were seated down front with the

Came From Near and Far

Newsmen Sent 10,500 Words From Tanglewood

TANGLEWOOD.—Manager Robert Tryon of Western Union reported that newsmen filed 10,500 words on last night's opening, a 25 per cent increase over last year's 8000. Statisticians are still working on an estimate as to how many typewriter ribbons were worn out in the process, the 10,500 final words meaning about 20,000 original words if the writers have as many second thoughts as most of us do.

put on at Tanglewood Friday night Aug. 15 for the United Service Organizations and British War Relief. The Pittsfield baseball club did their bit for Canadian relief recently when in playing at Quebec and Three Rivers they lost six games, won one and tied one.

I hunted out Bill Sistaire, head usher, who was about as easy to find as the main entrance. He told me that the attendance was about 8000 and that is a large number not only of persons but even of pennies.

The musicians managed to keep their instruments dry during the heavy rains the past few days. Some critics even intimated that at times the music was dry.

Serge Koussevitzky, the conductor, worked hard but at no time was he as busy as a bartender during a golf tournament and nobody ever heard any cheers for the fellow who mixes the drinks.

Tanglewood Tales

Last night's audience of 7500 represented the largest for an opening night in the eight-year history of the Festival. The total excludes an interested toad, whose crashing of the blue section was reported with understandable glee by Manager George E. Judd of the Boston Symphony.

* * *

An enquiring reporter climbed a tree over the warning bell at the corner of the Shed to interview a katydid who, during the Haydn, propounded his age-old question of whether Katy did or didn't. Asked why he didn't just listen, with a view to being inspired to remove the slight scratch in his voice, the katydid said, "Who's Haydn?"

* * *

Early arrivers last night found themselves playing tag with mowing machines on the huge lawns. Because of the rain, the cutting had to be delayed until the last minute.

* * *

More than a few of the ushers, after putting in the usual exacting job of not getting more than one person in the same seat, went up on the platform to sing with the Berkshire Musical Association chorus. On the platform, they had to find their own seats.

* * *

Miss Annabelle Burkhardt of the arch-Republican Holyoke Transcript spent most of her free minutes during the evening seeking Congressman Allen T. Treadway for picture purposes. But Mr. Treadway was in Washington. She went back to Holyoke with a picture of Owen Johnson.

* * *

Festival officials report that the big parking field was cleared in 25 minutes, thus scattering the clouds of worry which hung on the brows of those in charge after the continued rain.

* * *

To methods of transportation used for reaching Tanglewood, add horseback. A group of young men and women rode to the concert from the Lenox Ridng Academy via the Under Mountain and Sanctuary Roads.

* * *

Some 90 newspapers, magazines and radio stations have representatives covering the Festival in toto or in part. All major news services sent special correspondents. Most of the New York, Boston, Philadelphia, Pittsburgh, Washington, Buffalo and Toledo papers have personal coverage, not to mention the Homer (La.) Guardian Journal.

* * *

At least one man got stung at last night's concert. He was a member of the Legion parking squad, and he ran afoul of a hornet's nest. He was one of the first aid tent's few customers.

* * *

The national scope of the Festival was a geographical fact unknown to one worried driver. At the end of the concert he approached a member of the parking crew and asked solemnly, "Have you seen a car with Pennsylvania license plates?"

Governor and Mrs. Lehman Head Distinguished Guests

Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith and Her Guests Again Occupy Boxes 1 and 2—Danes Are Guests of Koussevitzkys

Socially, the 1941 Berkshire Symphonic Festival got off to a handsome start at the opening concert last night. New York and Boston social registerites flooded the select box section and prominent citzens from many cities were noted throughout the audience generally. Gov. Herbert H. Lehman of New York and Mrs. Lehman were among the distinguished guests.

The Lehman box was directly in back of the two boxes, 1 and 2, which Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith has again this year. With the Lehmans was Mrs. John A. Warner, daughter of former New York Gov. Alfred E. Smith. Guests of Miss Robinson Smith were her mother, Mrs. Robinson Smith; Miss Miriam K. Oliver, Mrs. E. Corning Townsend, Mrs. Montgomery Hare, Stuart Montgomery of Boston, William Miles, Malcolm Vaughan, Leonardo Casanova and Bryn Strandanaes of New York.

In Mrs. Koussevitzky's box were Ernest B. Dane of Boston, president of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Mrs. Dane.

Other Box Holders

Some of the other box holders and their guests were:—

Mrs. E. Griswold Hollister of Toledo and Lenox: Miss Olive Colton, Toledo, Mrs. Zorah Bowman and Miss Katharine Geddes of Chappaqua, N. Y., and Mrs. W. G. Cavanaugh, New York City.

Mrs. Harry Adams, Canaan, N. Y.: Mrs. Griffith Best, Dallas, Texas, Mrs. William Adams, Canaan, Mrs. Donald Bates Lawson, Boston, and Mr. and Mrs. Frank R. Harnden of Hancock.

Mr. and Mrs. Leonard Clark Feathers, Lenox: Mrs. Chester L. Dane, New York, Mrs. J. Harwood Priddy, New York, Miss Edith Hollyday, Bedford Hills, Miss Edith Ingalls, Cleveland, and Miss Henrietta Feathers.

Mr. and Mrs. Walter Atherton, Windsor: Mr. and Mrs. Ray Atherton, Washington, D. C., formerly of the American Embassy at Copenhagen, Mr. and Mrs. Alexander Whiteside of Boston.

Mr. and Mrs. Samuel G. Colt, Pittsfield: Mrs. James D. Colt and Mrs. Clement S. Houghton of Chestnut Hill.

Mr. and Mrs. Norman H. Davis, Stockbridge: Mr. and Mrs. Maclin P. Davis of Tennessee, Mrs. Robert W. Whiton Stuart.

Mr. and Mrs. Thomas H. Blodgett, Great Barrington: Mr. and Mrs. Auguste J. Cordier, New York; Mr. and Mrs. Walter H. Mann, Old Greenwich, Conn.

Mrs. W. Rockwood Gibbs, Richmond: Mr. and Mrs. Edward DeWitt Shumway, Lake Forest, Ill., brother-in-law and sister of Mrs. Gibbs; Ensign Arthur Edward Anderson, Berkeley, Cal.; Mr. and Mrs. C. Lambert Heyniger, New Lebanon, N. Y.

Others who had guests in their boxes were Mrs. Rodney Procter, Mrs. John Barry Ryan, Mr. and Mrs. William Felton Barrett, Mr. and Mrs. Adolf A. Berle, Mrs. Alvan T. Fuller, Mrs. Charles A. Cass, Mrs. John W. Garrett, Mr. and Mrs. Eldridge Gerry Chadwick, Mrs. Edward S. Harkness, Canon and Mrs. Anson Phelps Stokes, Miss Mabel Choate.

Comfort Is Fashion Keynote Of Tanglewood Concert Goers

Comfort seemed to be the keynote of attire at last night's opening Tanglewood concert rather than style show evening concerts in other years have proved. The cool weather no doubt had a lot to do with it, but we prefer to think it an indication of growing sincerity on the part of the audience in going primarily to hear the music rather than to witness a spectacle.

Two Schools of Thought

On the lawn, of course, anything goes. Approaching the Shed, one was conscious of two opposite schools of thought on the comfort question: An unexpected number of bare legs glistened in the light from the Shed, yet more slack ensembles were in evidence than ever before, even at an afternoon program where apparel is naturally more casual than at night. More beach chairs were in use than heretofore, it was noticed, but at the same time there were also more listeners who disdained anything sturdier to sit on than a coat.

Inside the Shed, sport-like afternoon dresses were the prime favorite—the comfortable kind with pleated skirts, in solid, pastel shades—and light summer coats were a necessity. Conspicuous in the crowd were the women members of the Berkshire Musical Association who participated in last night's program, all gowned in short, white dresses at the maestro's request. Hats were in a distinct minority all through the audience.

Even those in the box section seemed to have comfort in mind. Their costumes were colorful, though not so glittering as they probably will be at the Saturday night concerts, if former years are any indication. Dinner dresses were the most popular, dark ones with bright flowers splattered from neck to hem predominating. Luxuriant fur jackets, worn as a rule no matter how warm the weather, were welcome complements for many ensembles in the cool of last evening. Shawls, the favorite of last season, were only occasionally in evidence.

The same degrees of formality and comfort in dress held for male concert-goers, their outfits ranging all the way from open-necked sport shirts with vari-colored slack suits to tuxedo or white dinner coat.

It remains to be seen how the weather at the next concerts will affect the trend in attire established at the opening last night.

Festival

Continued From First Page

major symphony, No. 88. The orchestra had not played the majestic introduction before it became evident that they were at top form. The whole symphony was played with impeccable purity, if with a bit of restraint. This Haydn, the Debussy "Afternoon of a Faun" and the Beethoven fifth symphony, which was used for the final number, are well-known to Festival audiences. The novelties were two nocturnes of Debussy, 'Clouds" and "Festivals," and the Villa-Lobos choral number.

Chorus Does Itself Proud

Our local singers had the right to be very proud of their accomplishments in this exciting composition. It is not exactly new. It was composed in 1925, but it was only in 1939, at the World's Fair, it was first played in this country. There is quite a long portion devoted exclusively to the orchestra before the voices come in. All the battery of percussion is called for, and some instruments that are quite unknown, especially the caxambu, a glass bottle filled with gravel, the puita, reco-reco, xucalho, etc., all devices for producing special rattling noises.

At first hearing the form or outline is not discernible, but there is an irrisistible driving force which gives impact and power to the music. The voices were demanded in their extreme capacities most of the time, and whatever Koussevitzky called for, the chorus, trained by its able director, Horace Hunt, was prepared to deliver. Their attacks were well-placed and strong, and they sustained the difficult tones, in the face of a very heavy orchestra, without sacrificing the musical quality of their voices. The words sung to the music are in Portuguese, while the running chant which accompanies it is in native Indian words of Brazil. It was a pity that Mr. Hunt might not have acknowledged personally the tribute which was most certainly his due, on the merits of the performance of his chorus.

Last night marked the second appearance of the Berkshire Musical Association chorus on Festival programs, the first having taken place at the second Festival on the Hanna Farm.

The delicate, fragile quality of tone which the orchestra produced in the Debussy nocturnes and the "Afternoon" was on a plane not surpassed in the orchestral domain. We did not feel that the players were going all-out on their variety of tone color, but for luscious and voluptuous effects, these were present in abundance.

At the conclusion of the "Afternoon of a Faun" the conductor graciously motioned the oboe soloist, Ferdinand Gillet, and the flute soloist, George Laurent, to their feet to acknowledge the plaudits won by their superlative playing.

Program Lacks Kick

The fact is, there was not enough kick to the program itself. Except for the Villa-Lobos there was an overabundance of too familiar selections. Music lovers are attracted by the standard of the music, and by the unique setting, but repeaters will be more easily brought back if the programs hold items which will pique their curiosity.

The most rousing moments of the evening were reached in the Beethoven symphony. One cannot avoid thinking of the special added significance of this piece in these days. Very few will dispute the statement that it is the most popular in the symphonic repertory. The superb architecture of its structure was never more formidably portrayed than in the interpretation with which Koussevitzky favored it last night. There was a conviction to the performance which was unquestionably lofty, sincere, and determined.

The closing bridge of the scherzo was masterfully built up to prepare for the truly majestic utterance of the C major triad which opens the finale. At its first blast and again at its reprise, the breadth of its sweep was the climax of the evening. The spirit pervading it had something above the mere expression of an emotion; it was a pledge to that which we all recognize as paramount.

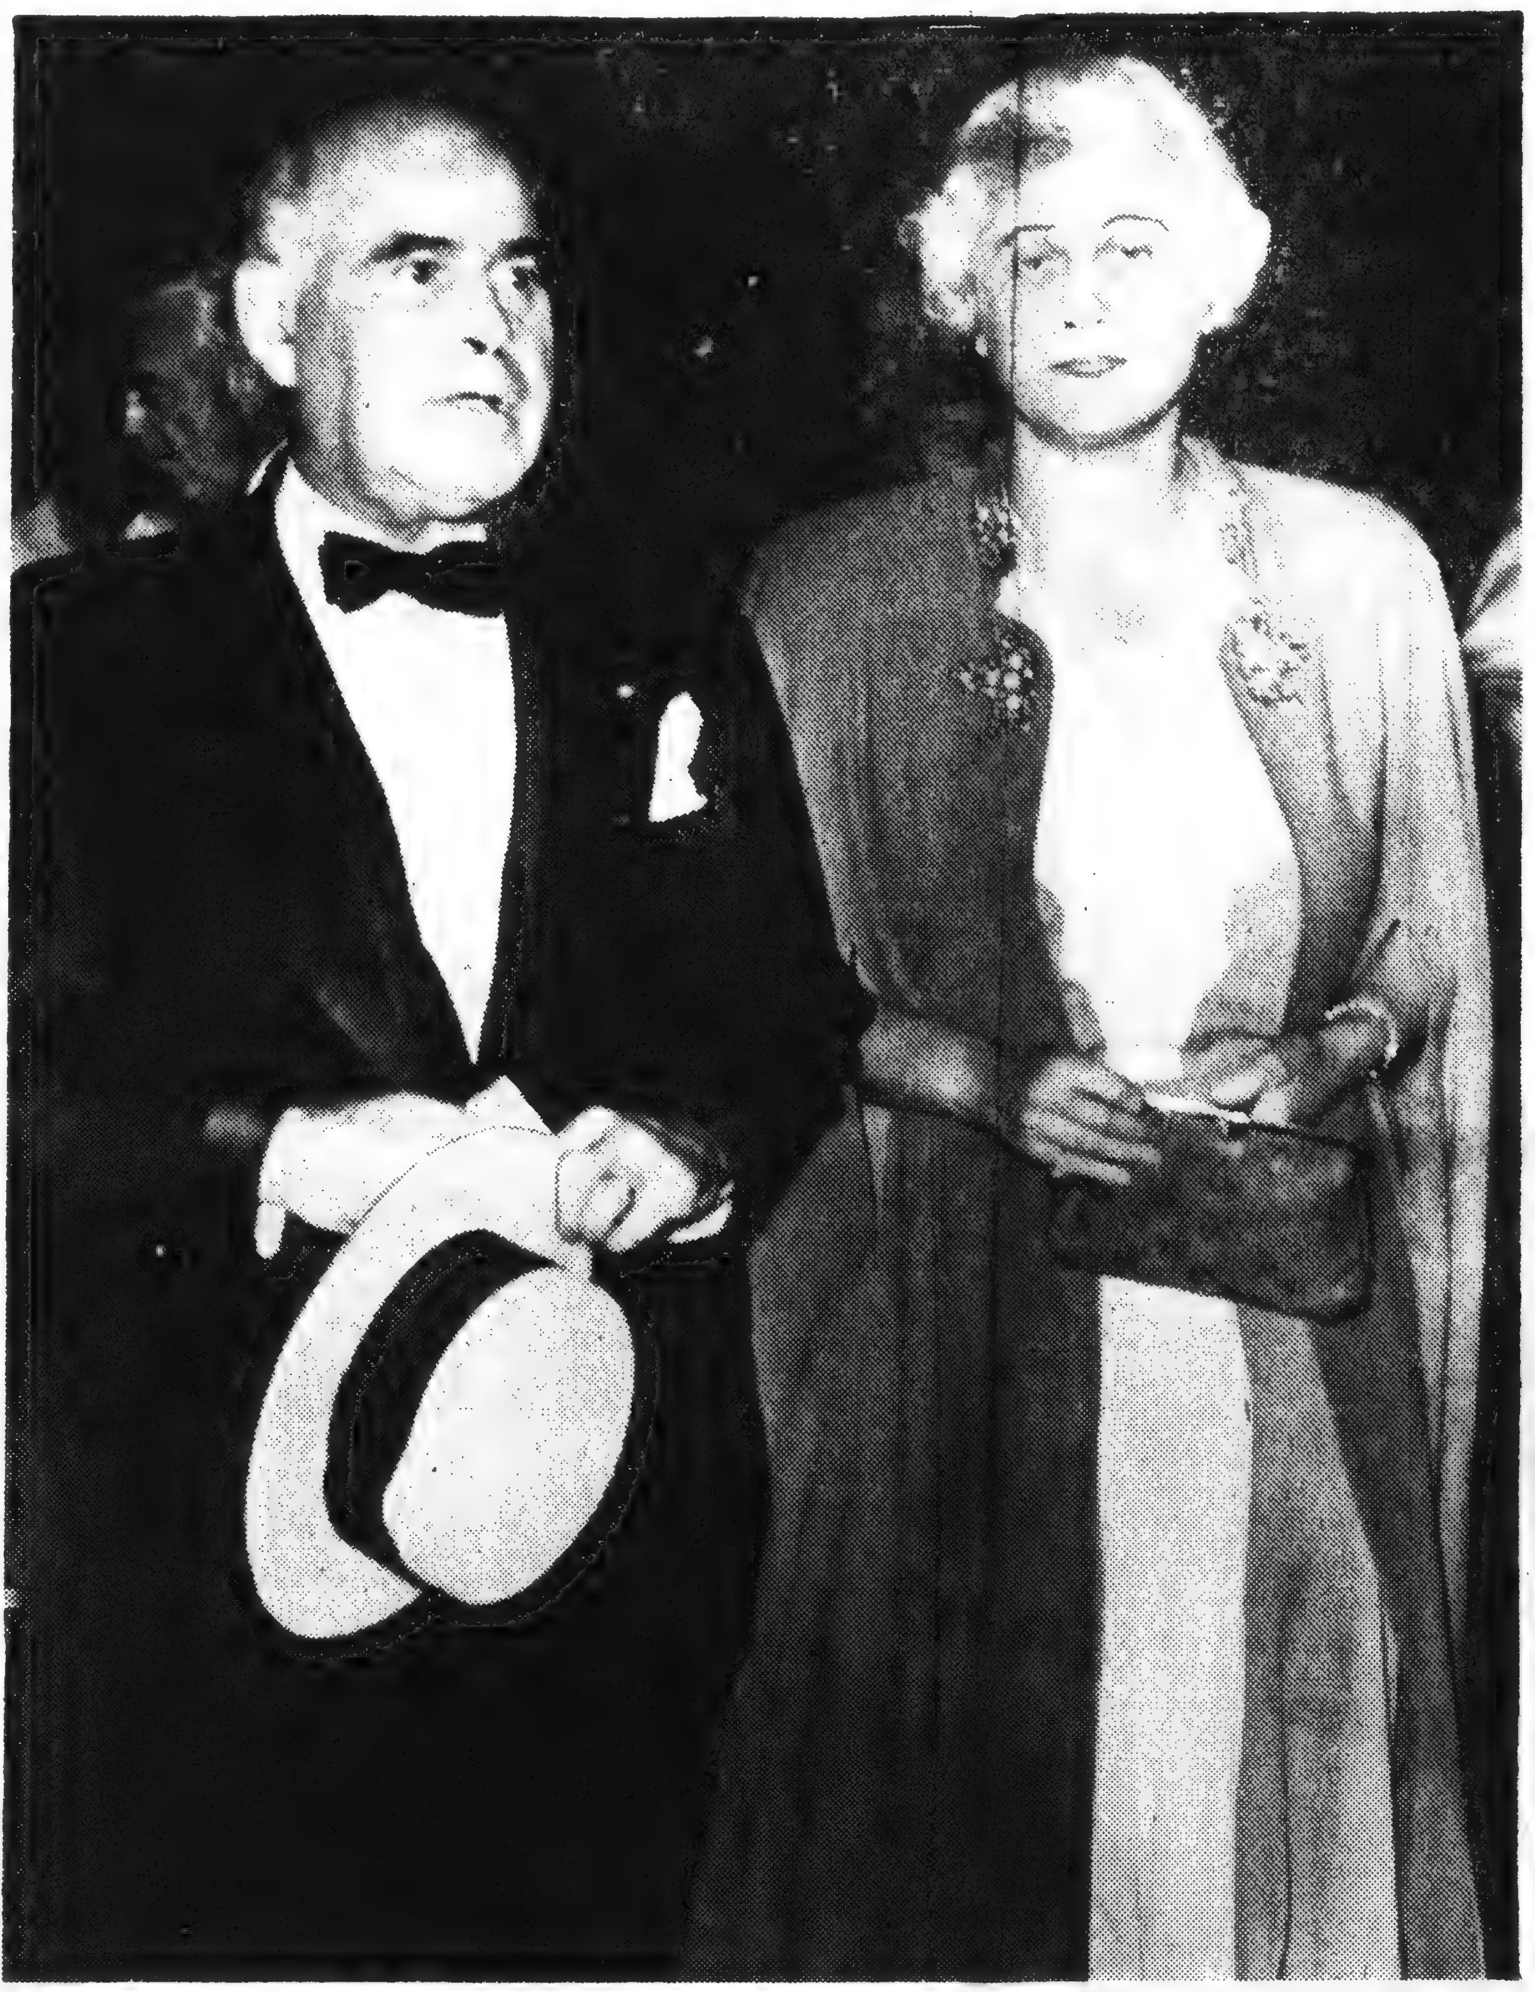
This was stimulation of the highest degree and it was so appreciated by the audience. The tempi were on the deliberate side, the better to allow the details to be absorbed by the tensely listening audience. The majesty of the performance gave new meaning to this most familiar work. If, as is so often reiterated, Beethoven was putting to music his conception of one's encounters with Fate throughout life, the range of his emotions, from despair to bliss, could easily be visualized, and, in the finale, the ascent to triumph was stupendous.

Hopkins Sees Another Raid

MOSCOW (UP)—Harry L. Hopkins slept through the latter part of a German air raid on Moscow early today after conferring for a second time last night with Josef Stalin. The air raid alarms sounded while Hopkins, U. S. Ambassador Laurence Steinhardt and their party were dining in the famous Caucasian Restaurant.

The party was escorted by the restaurant management to a nearby municipal shelter where they spent some time and then continued back to the embassy and retired for the night.

New York Governor Among Those in Attendance at Open



Present at the opening last night of the eighth annual Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood were Gov. and Mrs. Herbert H. Lehman of New York.

Former New York State Gov. Alfred E. Smith's dau ter, Mrs. John A. Warner, was with the Lehman

Sports Editor Has No V-Neck Sweater, but Takes a Chance And Covers Beethoven's Fifth

By JOHN M. FLYNN
Sports Editor of The Eagle

TANGLEWOOD. — When Mel Shaffer, business manager of the Pittsfield baseball club of the Canadian-American League, informed me the game between the Electrics and Gloversville, scheduled for last night at Dorothy Deming Field, had been postponed because of wet grounds I got in touch with George W. Edman, managing editor of The Eagle and praise agent for the Berkshire Symphonic Festival. He told me that Serge Koussevitzky and his squad from Boston would start pitching at 8.30 regardless of the weather but he was not worrying because indications were that it would be a pleasant night in and near the Shed. That was the tip for me to prepare to be present at the opening of the eighth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival.

With Beethoven's Symphony No. 5 in C minor on the program it naturally became "V" night. You know that "V" campaign they have in England making everybody victory-conscious and I am happy to learn they are doing more than talking about such a culmination. I hunted high and low but could not find a V-neck sweater. It was just about as hard to find a "V," which a $5 bill is called when there is occasion to call it at all. Nevertheless the dark suit which I have for funerals, weddings and practically every other occasion was neatly pressed and Abe Michelson agreed not only to provide transportation for me but also to be my bodyguard. Bill Cunningham and Walter Winchell have bodyguards and I can see no reason why I should not have one.

Leaves Chorus to Jay

I shall skip over Haydn's Symphony in G Major as quickly as a deer leaps over a three-foot fence, and concerning Debussy's Three Nocturnes I shall just mention that the order was correct as the clouds were in evidence for days, the Festival opened auspiciously and sirens were heard as the crowd left the grounds. The chorus of the Berkshire Musical Association will be dealt with at length by Jay C. Rosenfeld who reviews these things as a business while I just write about them for fun.

(Editor's note—Debussy's Prelude to "The Afternoon of a Faun" was played instead of the Nocturne "Sirenes.")

Beethoven's Symphony No. 5 in C Minor—that is the dish that I shall try to serve you in bits, delicate or otherwise.

Ludwig van Beethoven was born Dec. 16, 1770 and died at Vienna March 26, 1827. Thus he lived during a period when we had two wars with England but he was a composer and not a war correspondent. We are not fighting England now, anyway. We are trying to help that country and at the same time help ourselves, which seems to be quite a sensible plan.

I shall quote this from the program: "Something in the direct, impelling drive of the first movement of the C minor symphony commanded the general attention when it was new, challenged the skeptical and soon forced its acceptance. Goethe heard it with grumbling disapproval, according to Mendelssohn but was astonished and impressed in spite of himself. Lesueur, hidebound professor at the Conservatoire was talked by Berloiz into breaking his vow never to listen to another note of Beethoven and found his prejudices and resistances quite swept away. A less plausible tale reports Maria Malibran as having been thrown into convulsions by this symphony." I think Maria carried it a little too far.

Concluding, the program says: "The mysterious mood of the scherzo, the suspense of the soft drum beats preparing a new disclosure, the sudden radiance of the major tonality, these wonders of the dreaming and creating artist no technician will ever account for in factual terms."

If the experts are unable to explain it in factual terms I shall stop right here and keep in mind that my business is judging base hits and errors and not symphonic hits and errors.

"Abe Is Like That"

Serge was given a warm greeting when he stepped on the platform before the opening of the program but he did not receive as much applause at the end as I had expected. Perhaps there were too many movie fans present. My bodyguard, however, explained that the big cheers would come Sunday afternoon when the persons delivering the applause could be seen. Abe is like that. He says what he thinks and his thoughts are sound.

To some persons the sweetest music is the sound of rain falling on a tin roof. Still that would not delight the ears of the powers behind or in front of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival. Rain might fill Lake Mahkeenac to overflowing but would not help to fill the music Shed with cash customers.

I know of individuals who consider the finest music is the sound of a cash register ringing frequently. To others the quitting whistle is most pleasing to the ears.

Larry MacPhail, the financial head of the Brooklyn Dodgers, says that the grandest music of all is provided by wrens at his place near Lake Michigan. The wren is a small, more or less brown, singing bird in the family Troglodytidae. (Imagine mentioning that family to a Brooklyn fan). Webster's reminds us that the Wren (an acrostic formed from the initials of the title) is a member of the Women's Royal Naval Service, a nauxiliary of the British Navy established during the first World War. MacPhail of course had in mind the birds and not the uniformed ladies across the sea as the makers of such enchanting music.

Symphonic Shorts

Thomas Kilduff, Congressman Ailen T. Treadway's very valuable aid, mentioned that Tanglewood is in the town of Stockbridge although closer to the Lenox post office than it is to the building where Stockbridge residents get their mail. Tom, however, would not quibble over the fact that Tanglewood often is referred to as being in the town of Lenox because the Congressman appreciates votes from Lenox just the same as from Stockbridge.

Atty. Hugh P. Drysdale of North Adams, who was quite a baseball player at Williams College and an excellent golfer for many years was among those present.

George Markell of Boston, former owner and manager of the Strand Theatre, Boston, is taking in all three series with Mrs. Markell. George, a Harvard man, always sits in the Crimson cheering section in the annual football classic at the Bowl or the Stadium, but I noticed they went right past the Harvard sector last night and were seated down front with the blues or the Yales. George inquired about Pittsfield's baseball club in the Canadian-American League. He was a generous contributor to the Hillies when he lived in Pittsfield.

I would suggest that since Mozart's Requiem is on the program for next Thursday night's concert that our church editor, Norman H. Ransford be assigned to cover it. I say church editor instead of religious editor because all editors on The Eagle are religious.

Not a doctor was paged during the entire performance. I was hoping that somebody would put in a plug for the double-header to be played at the Dorothy Deming Field tonight between Pittsfield and Gloversville.

A gala benefit program is to be put on at Tanglewood Friday night Aug. 15 for the United Service Organizations and British War Relief. The Pittsfield baseball club did their bit for Canadian relief recently when in playing at Quebec and Three Rivers they lost six games, won one and tied one.

I hunted out Bill Sistaire, head usher, who was about as easy to find as the main entrance. He told me that the attendance was about 8000 and that is a large number not only of persons but even of pennies.

The musicians managed to keep their instruments dry during the heavy rains the past few days. Some critics even intimated that at times the music was dry.

Serge Koussevitzky, the conductor, worked hard but at no time was he as busy as a bartender during a golf tournament and nobody ever heard any cheers for the fellow who mixes the drinks.

Came From Near and Far

In the Festival audience last night were people from most of the 48 states. Charles Wirth Jr., and his daughter, Miss Alma Wirth, above, traveled all the way from New Orleans for the opening.

Newsmen Sent 10,500 Words From Tanglewood

TANGLEWOOD.—Manager Robert Tryon of Western Union reported that newsmen filed 10,500 words on last night's opening, a 25 per cent increase over last year's 8000. Statisticians are still working on an estimate as to how many typewriter ribbons were worn out in the process, the 10,500 final words meaning about 20,000 original words if the writers have as many second thoughts as most of us do.

T

Last night's represented th ing night in t of the Festival an interested of the blue s with understa ager George E Symphony.

*

An enquirin tree over the corner of the katydid who, propounded hi whether Katy why he didn't view to being the slight scra katydid said, "

*

Early arrive themselves pla ing machines
Because of the to be delayed u

*

More than a after putting i job of not get person in the on the platfor
Berkshire M u chorus. On the to find their o

*

Miss Annabe arch-Republica spent most o during the ev gressman Alle picture purpos way was in W

235

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES
AUG 2 - 1941

BERKSHIRE GROUP HEARD IN CONCERT

South Mountain String Quartet Plays Work by Paul Hindemith at the Temple of Music

CLASSES AT TANGLEWOOD

Advanced Student Orchestra Led by 4 Conducting Pupils Before Invited Audience

BY HOWARD TAUBMAN
Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 1—There was no public concert today at Tanglewood, where the eighth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival is in progress, but that did not mean an abatement of the musical activity on the grounds here and in the vicinity. All over the estate that is the home of the festival and Berkshire Music Center, there is music-making morning, noon, afternoon and night. And at near-by South Mountain at Pittsfield, Mass., the South Mountain String Quartet has shifted its weekly Sunday concerts to Friday afternoon so that there will be no conflict with the festival.

The South Mountain String Quartet, consisting of Kathleen Parlow, Edwin Ideler, Conrad Held and Willem Willeke, assisted by Marcel Grandjany, harpist, who was the guest artist, played a program of Handel, Mozart, Rieti and Paul Hindemith. The last-named composer is on the faculty of the Berkshire Music Center, providing a direct link from the festival. Moreover, many of the festival patrons attended at the Temple of Music on South Mountain.

At Tanglewood there were classes of every kind — solfège, counterpoint, orchestral conducting, chamber music and opera-dramatics and rehearsals for orchestra, chorus and chamber music units. This evening the advanced orchestra, led by four of Serge Koussevitzky's most talented conducting pupils, gave a concert in the new theatre before an invited audience.

The young conductor who has made the biggest splash among Mr. Koussevitzky's group of handpicked students is Leonard Bernstein, who tonight directed a movement from Brahms's Second piano concerto, with Carlos Moseley as the student piano soloist. Walter Hendl, Richard Korn and Thor Johnson were the other student conductors, and their efforts met with the approval of their fellow-students and invited visitors.

Of last night's opening concert, which ended too late for extended critical comment, there is little to add. In familiar music by Haydn, Debussy and Beethoven, Mr. Koussevitzky and his Boston Symphony played with clarity and lift, even though the humid evening imposed burdensome obstacles on string players. But there were almost no "bloopers," and a sour entrance in the Beethoven Fifth symphony was quickly forgotten in the sweep and drive of the interpretation as a whole.

The novelty of the evening, as far as Tanglewood was concerned, was the Chorus No. 10 by Heitor Villa-Lobos. This score did not build up to the climax that Mr. Koussevitzky probably sought for it. At the end the work of the chorus bulks large, and last night's ensemble was the chorus of the Berkshire Musical Association, a local amateur organization of good-will. This group sang with straightforward competence, but there was not the wildness inherent in the score, and one had the feeling that Mr. Koussevitzky was holding the orchestra for the sake of the chorus.

The Haydn G major symphony, No. 88, had a classical purity of line which suited it well. It could also have been treated with more passion and come through with equal persuasiveness. Mr. Koussevitzky gave Debussy's "Nuages," "Fetes" and prelude to "The Afternoon of a Faun," glinting, magical, richly colored performances. As for Beethoven's Fifth symphony, it had the throbbing passion and vitality that make it, despite a hundred hearings, meaningful for our times.

Tommorrow night's concert will be devoted to Mendelssohn's "Italian" symphony, Beethoven's "Leonore" overture and Shostakovich's Fifth symphony.

The festival authorities joyously report a bullish market for the wares they sell. All the reserved tickets for Sunday's concert have been sold, and there are not many left for tomorrow night. But they add that the lawns are spacious, and there will be as many general admissions available as there is demand.

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN
AUG 2 - 1941
This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION
AUG 2 - 1941

U. S. O. Benefit Set for Aug. 15

Tanglewood Affair Also for British War Relief

PITTSFIELD, Aug. 1—A large Pittsfield committee has been named for the gala benefit at Tanglewood Aug. 15 for the U. S. O. and British war relief to be presented by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Berkshire Symphonic Festival and the Berkshire Music Center.

Mrs. George S. Reynolds and Mrs. Donald F. McPherson are cochairmen, assisted by Miss Margaret Hall. There are 58 on the committee. They will not only have tickets for the benefit but tickets for the prizes as well.

Tickets also are on sale at the Festival booth on the first floor of England Bros., at the British War Relief Society headquarters, 164 North Street, the Open Book and the banks.

Calls for information may be made to Mrs. Reynolds or Miss Hall. There will be a meeting of the committee Wednesday at 10.30 at the home of Mrs. Reynolds, 593 Holmes Road.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE
AUG 2 - 1941

Second Concert Slated Tonight In Berkshires

Koussevitzky to Lead Works by Shostakovitch and Mendelssohn at Lenox

By Francis D. Perkins

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 1.—Serge Koussevitzky will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the second concert of the eighth Berkshire Symphonic Festival in the music shed on the Tanglewood Estate tomorrow night.

The program will include Mendelssohn's Italian symphony, which was first heard more than a century ago; Dimitri Shostakovitch's fifth symphony, first heard four years ago, and Beethoven's third Leonore overture.

A capacity audience is expected. Almost all the reserved seats had been sold by yesterday afternoon, and it was said that all reserved places had been sold for the third concert Sunday afternoon. An ample supply of general admission tickets was available for both concerts.

Although today offered no formal festival program in the music shed, there was no lack of activity in various parts of the grounds, where the day's schedule of the Berkshire Music Center called for twenty-two rehearsals, classes and lectures of various kinds between 8 a. m. and 6 p. m. with Dr. Koussevitzky, Gregor Piatgorsky, Aaron Copland and Paul Hindemith among the instructors.

Tonight offered a concert by the center's advanced orchestra under several student conductors in the new theater and concert hall, whose stage can be adjusted either for a purely musical or for a musico-dramatic work.

Record Opening Audience

With the largest opening-night audience in the history of this series, yesterday's concert gave the festival a promising start. The estimated attendance of 7,500 included approximately 800 persons who stood or sat on benches on the outskirts of the music shed and on neighboring parts of the Tanglewood lawn.

The weather, if not ideal, was quite considerate, limiting its showers to the afternoon, and the gathering and dispersal of the audience's cars went as expeditiously as the capacity of Route 183 permitted.

Both tomorrow's and yesterday's programs are of a type which characterizes many of Dr. Koussevitzky's Tanglewood lists, presenting two or more works from the standard repertoire and a less familiar, relatively modern composition.

As a rule these modern works are not absolute novelties. Last night's choice, Heirot Villa-Lobos' tenth Choros, Rasga Coracao for chorus and orchestra, was first sung in New York more than ten years ago by Hugh Ross's Schola Cantorum and was also performed in 1939 in a World's Fair Brazilian concert under Burle Max. The word serenade, the composer notes, gives an approximate idea of the significance of the term "choros."

With its rhythmic emphasis, vividness of color and timbre and exotic and sometimes primitive atmosphere, the work makes a notable impression at a first hearing. For this reviewer, that impression does not repeat itself with the same intensity when the music is heard a second or third time, but much of the composition remains absorbing.

The Berkshire Musical Association chorus, trained by Horace Hunt, sang laudably from a vocal and expressive point of view. The tone quality was good and the sonority imposing. The general atmosphere of the music might have been enhanced by giving slightly more prominence to the constantly repeated rhythmic refrain, but the rhythmic difficulties of the work were successfully dealt with.

Two Symphonies Played

There was much to delight in the playing of Haydn's 88th Symphony in G major. The performance of Beethoven's fifth symphony also revealed the high instrumental standards which mark the Boston Symphony's playing. But the tempo in the first three movements seemed unwontedly deliberate. The volume and mass of sound in outspoken measure were very effective, but one sometimes missed a sense of contrast of mood and elasticity of pace.

Debussy's "Festivals" was brilliantly and vigorously played, and the conductor and orchestra dealt well with the French composer's "Clouds" and "Afternoon of a Faun."

Festival patrons had an opportunity to listen to chamber music this afternoon on South Mountain, where Marcel Grandjany, French harpist, was the assisting artist with the South Mountain String Quartet in Handel's suite in B flat, Op. 4, a work originally written for harp and strings, although perhaps better known in its arrangement for organ.

The playing of Mr. Grandjany, who added an impressive cadenza of his own, deserved the highest praise, and he was called upon for two short solos at the close.

The members of the quartet, Kathleen Parlow, Edwin Ideler, Conrad Held and Willem Willeke, gave pleasing performances of Beethoven's quartet in G, Op. 18, and Paul Hindemith's early quartet, Op. 10.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE
AUG 2 - 1941
ALBANY, N.Y.
KNICKERBOCKER NEWS
AUG 2 - 1941
This Clipping From
HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES
AUG 2 - 1941

Tanglewood Benefit To Open with Part Of Beethoven Vth

Serge Koussevitzky has chosen the Allegro con brio from Beethoven's Symphony No. V as the opening number when the Boston Symphony Orchestra gives a concert as a feature of the gala benefit at Tanglewood Friday, Aug. 15.

Tchaikovsky's "1812" Overture will also figure on the program. Albert Spalding, who will be one of the soloists (others are to be announced), will appear in Mendelssohn's Violin Concerto.

Besides conducting his famous orchestra, Koussevitzky will lead a picked band of 250 players drawn from the 26th Division of the United States Army. He will conduct military marches. The players, guests for the occasion, will bivouac on the grass slopes of Tanglewood in Lenox.

Another musical program at the gala benefit will be presented by the members of the Berkshire Music Center, consisting of a symphony concert in the shed, a choral concert in the barn, opera in the new theater-music hall, and chamber music in the new chamber music hall.

Randall Thompson's "Alleluia" will introduce the "Manifestation," when speakers of national fame will address the audience in the shed. The "Alleluia" will be sung by the festival chorus, which consists of pupils of the school and which is likewise to appear in the Berkshire Symphonic Festival in Beethoven's "Missa Solemnis" on the night previous.

The general program, beginning at 5:30, will last late into the evening and will also include a lawn party and fireworks.

The gala benefit will be given to aid the fund of the United Service Organizations and the British War Relief. It is hoped that there will be an even larger attendance and proceeds than last year, when a similar benefit at Tanglewood brought 10,000 people and netted $22,000 for Allied Relief.

This Clipp
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

AUG 2 - 1941

Musical Tribute Paid to Norval Busey As Symphony Rehearses for Big Week End

Beethoven's "Eroica" Played At Tanglewood

Big Attendance Expected Tonight And Tomorrow

One of the largest rehearsal audiences in Berkshire Symphonic Festival history this morning heard Dr. Serge Koussevitzky lead his Boston Symphony Orchestra through the program for the second concert in the first series at Tanglewood tonight at 8.30.

Most of the several thousand children and 500 members of the Festival eligible to attend the special rehearsal apparently came, because the crowd was estimated at more than 4000. The entire blue section, which has 3000 seats, was full, and the boxes, part of the red section and the lawn outside provided seats for at least 1000 more.

Audience Pays Tribute

Early in the rehearsal, Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith announced that Dr. Koussevitzky had chosen the funeral march from the "Eroica" symphony of Beethoven to play in memory of Norval H. Busey Jr., of Lee, vice-president of the Festival, who was killed in an automobile accident early this week. Before the symphonic tribute to Mr. Busey, the audience stood for several seconds in his honor.

The increase in attendance which has characterized the opening concert Thursday night and this morning's rehearsal, gave promise of continuing tonight. Festival officials announced that a few seats in the Shed were available this morning. With clear weather predicted for both tonight and tomorrow afternoon's concert, an all-time record for attendance was in prospect.

The children attending this morning's rehearsal were students at the nine public and parochial schools in Berkshire County which gave the Festival-sponsored layman's music course last year.

Tomorrow afternoon's concert, scheduled for 3.30, will be highlighted by two works by noted American composers, both members of the faculty of the Berkshire Music Center. First to be played will be Aaron Copland's "Quiet City." Paul Hindemith's violincello concerto will follow, with Gregor Piatigorsky as soloist.

Music Festival Programs for Week-end Concerts

TONIGHT at 8.30

Italian Symphony .... Mendelssohn
Overture to Leonore No. 3......Beethoven
Symphony No. 5 .... Shostakovitch

TOMORROW at 3.30

Symphony No. 4 .... Brahms
Quiet City .... Copland
Violincello Concerto .... Hindemith
Soloist—Gregor Piatigorsky
Capriccio Espagnol .... Rimsky-Korsakov

235

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES
AUG 2 - 1941

BERKSHIRE GROUP HEARD IN CONCERT

South Mountain String Quartet Plays Work by Paul Hindemith at the Temple of Music

CLASSES AT TANGLEWOOD

Advanced Student Orchestra Led by 4 Conducting Pupils Before Invited Audience

BY HOWARD TAUBMAN
Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 1—There was no public concert today at Tanglewood, where the eighth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival is in progress, but that did not mean an abatement of the musical activity on the grounds here and in the vicinity. All over the estate that is the home of the festival and Berkshire Music Center, there is music-making morning, noon, afternoon and night. And at near-by South Mountain at Pittsfield, Mass., the South Mountain String Quartet has shifted its weekly Sunday concerts to Friday afternoon so that there will be no conflict with the festival.

The South Mountain String Quartet, consisting of Kathleen Parlow, Edwin Ideler, Conrad Held and Willem Willeke, assisted by Marcel Grandjany, harpist, who was the guest artist, played a program of Handel, Mozart, Rieti and Paul Hindemith. The last-named composer is on the faculty of the Berkshire Music Center, providing a direct link from the festival. Moreover, many of the festival patrons attended at the Temple of Music on South Mountain.

At Tanglewood there were classes of every kind — solfège, counterpoint, orchestral conducting, chamber music and opera-dramatics and rehearsals for orchestra, chorus and chamber music units. This evening the advanced orchestra, led by four of Serge Koussevitzky's most talented conducting pupils, gave a concert in the new theatre before an invited audience.

The young conductor who has made the biggest splash among Mr. Koussevitzky's group of handpicked students is Leonard Bernstein, who tonight directed a movement from Brahms's Second piano concerto, with Carlos Moseley as the student piano soloist. Walter Hendl, Richard Korn and Thor Johnson were the other student conductors, and their efforts met with the approval of their fellow-students and invited visitors.

Of last night's opening concert, which ended too late for extended critical comment, there is little to add. In familiar music by Haydn, Debussy and Beethoven, Mr. Koussevitzky and his Boston Symphony played with clarity and lift, even though the humid evening imposed burdensome obstacles on string players. But there were almost no "bloopers," and a sour entrance in the Beethoven Fifth symphony was quickly forgotten in the sweep and drive of the interpretation as a whole.

The novelty of the evening, as far as Tanglewood was concerned, was the Chorus No. 10 by Heitor Villa-Lobos. This score did not build up to the climax that Mr. Koussevitzky probably sought for it. At the end the work of the chorus bulks large, and last night's ensemble was the chorus of the Berkshire Musical Association, a local amateur organization of good-will. This group sang with straightforward competence, but there was not the wildness inherent in the score, and one had the feeling that Mr. Koussevitzky was holding the orchestra for the sake of the chorus.

The Haydn G major symphony, No. 88, had a classical purity of line which suited it well. It could also have been treated with more passion and come through with equal persuasiveness. Mr. Koussevitzky gave Debussy's "Nuages," "Fetes" and prelude to "The Afternoon of a Faun," glinting, magical, richly colored performances. As for Beethoven's Fifth symphony, it had the throbbing passion and vitality that make it, despite a hundred hearings, meaningful for our times.

Tommorrow night's concert will be devoted to Mendelssohn's "Italian" symphony, Beethoven's "Leonore" overture and Shostakovich's Fifth symphony.

The festival authorities joyously report a bullish market for the wares they sell. All the reserved tickets for Sunday's concert have been sold, and there are not many left for tomorrow night. But they add that the lawns are spacious, and there will be as many general admissions available as there is demand.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE
AUG 2 - 1941

Second Concert Slated Tonight In Berkshires

Koussevitzky to Lead Works by Shostakovitch and Mendelssohn at Lenox

By Francis D. Perkins

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 1.—Serge Koussevitzky will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the second concert of the eighth Berkshire Symphonic Festival in the music shed on the Tanglewood Estate tomorrow night.

The program will include Mendelssohn's Italian symphony, which was first heard more than a century ago; Dimitri Shostakovitch's fifth symphony, first heard four years ago, and Beethoven's third Leonore overture.

A capacity audience is expected. Almost all the reserved seats had been sold by yesterday afternoon, and it was said that all reserved places had been sold for the third concert Sunday afternoon. An ample supply of general admission tickets was available for both concerts.

Although today offered no formal festival program in the music shed, there was no lack of activity in various parts of the grounds, where the day's schedule of the Berkshire Music Center called for twenty-two rehearsals, classes and lectures of various kinds between 8 a. m. and 6 p. m. with Dr. Koussevitzky, Gregor Piatgorsky, Aaron Copland and Paul Hindemith among the instructors.

Tonight offered a concert by the center's advanced orchestra under several student conductors in the new theater and concert hall, whose stage can be adjusted either for a purely musical or for a musico-dramatic work.

Record Opening Audience

With the largest opening-night audience in the history of this series, yesterday's concert gave the festival a promising start. The estimated attendance of 7,500 included approximately 800 persons who stood or sat on benches on the outskirts of the music shed and on neighboring parts of the Tanglewood lawn.

The weather, if not ideal, was quite considerate, limiting its showers to the afternoon, and the gathering and dispersal of the audience's cars went as expeditiously as the capacity of Route 183 permitted.

Both tomorrow's and yesterday's programs are of a type which characterizes many of Dr. Koussevitzky's Tanglewood lists, presenting two or more works from the standard repertoire and a less familiar, relatively modern composition.

As a rule these modern works are not absolute novelties. Last night's choice, Heirot Villa-Lobos' tenth Choros, Rasga Coracao for chorus and orchestra, was first sung in New York more than ten years ago by Hugh Ross's Schola Cantorum and was also performed in 1939 in a World's Fair Brazilian concert under Burle Max. The word serenade, the composer notes, gives an approximate idea of the significance of the term "choros."

With its rhythmic emphasis, vividness of color and timbre and exotic and sometimes primitive atmosphere, the work makes a notable impression at a first hearing. For this reviewer, that impression does not repeat itself with the same intensity when the music is heard a second or third time, but much of the composition remains absorbing.

The Berkshire Musical Association chorus, trained by Horace Hunt, sang laudably from a vocal and expressive point of view. The tone quality was good and the sonority imposing. The general atmosphere of the music might have been enhanced by giving slightly more prominence to the constantly repeated rhythmic refrain, but the rhythmic difficulties of the work were successfully dealt with.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE
AUG 2 - 1941

ALBANY, N.Y.
KNICKERBOCKER NEWS
AUG 2 - 1941

This Clipping From
HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES
AUG 2 - 1941

Tanglewood Benefit To Open with Part Of Beethoven Vth

Serge Koussevitzky has chosen the Allegro con brio from Beethoven's Symphony No. V as the opening number when the Boston Symphony Orchestra gives a concert as a feature of the gala benefit at Tanglewood Friday, Aug. 15.

Tchaikovsky's "1812" Overture will also figure on the program. Albert Spalding, who will be one of the soloists (others are to be announced), will appear in Mendelssohn's Violin Concerto.

Besides conducting his famous orchestra, Koussevitzky will lead a picked band of 250 players drawn from the 26th Division of the United States Army. He will conduct military marches. The players, guests for the occasion, will bivouac on the grass slopes of Tanglewood in Lenox.

Another musical program at the gala benefit will be presented by the members of the Berkshire Music Center, consisting of a symphony concert in the shed, a choral concert in the barn, opera in the new theater-music hall, and chamber music in the new chamber music hall.

Randall Thompson's "Alleluia" will introduce the "Manifestation," when speakers of national fame will address the audience in the shed. The "Alleluia" will be sung by the festival chorus, which consists of pupils of the school and which is likewise to appear in the Berkshire Symphonic Festival in Beethoven's "Missa Solemnis" on the night previous.

The general program, beginning at 5:30, will last late into the evening and will also include a lawn party and fireworks.

The gala benefit will be given to aid the fund of the United Service Organizations and the British War Relief. It is hoped that there will be an even larger attendance and proceeds than last year, when a similar benefit at Tanglewood brought 10,000 people and netted $22,000 for Allied Relief.

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN
AUG 2 - 1941

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION
AUG 2 - 1941

U. S. O. Benefit Set for Aug. 15

Tanglewood Affair Also for British War Relief

PITTSFIELD, Aug. 1—A large Pittsfield committee has been named for the gala benefit at Tanglewood Aug. 15 for the U. S. O. and British war relief to be presented by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Berkshire Symphonic Festival and the Berkshire Music Center.

Mrs. George S. Reynolds and Mrs. Donald F. McPherson are cochairmen, assisted by Miss Margaret Hall. There are 58 on the committee. They will not only have tickets for the benefit but tickets for the prizes as well.

Tickets also are on sale at the Festival booth on the first floor of England Bros., at the British War Relief Society headquarters, 164 North Street, the Open Book and the banks.

Calls for information may be made to Mrs. Reynolds or Miss Hall. There will be a meeting of the committee Wednesday at 10.30 at the home of Mrs. Reynolds, 593 Holmes Road.

This Clipp
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE
AUG 2 - 1941

Musical Tribute Paid to Norval Busey As Symphony Rehearses for Big Week End

Beethoven's "Eroica" Played At Tanglewood

One of the largest rehearsal audiences in Berkshire Symphonic Festival history this morning heard Dr. Serge Koussevitzky lead his Boston Symphony Orchestra through the program for the second concert in the first series at Tanglewood tonight at 8.30.

Most of the several thousand children and 500 members of the Festival eligible to attend the special rehearsal apparently came, because the crowd was estimated at more than 4000. The entire blue section, which has 3000 seats, was full, and the boxes, part of the red section and the lawn outside provided seats for at least 1000 more.

Audience Pays Tribute

Early in the rehearsal, Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith announced that Dr. Koussevitzky had chosen the funeral march from the "Eroica" symphony of Beethoven to play in memory of Norval H. Busey Jr., of Lee, vice-president of the Festival, who was killed in an automobile accident early this week. Before the symphonic tribute to Mr. Busey, the audience stood for several seconds in his honor.

The increase in attendance which has characterized the opening concert Thursday night and this morning's rehearsal, gave promise of continuing tonight. Festival officials announced that a few seats in the Shed were available this morning. With clear weather predicted for both tonight and tomorrow afternoon's concert, an all-time record for attendance was in prospect.

Big Attendance Expected Tonight And Tomorrow

The children attending this morning's rehearsal were students at the nine public and parochial schools in Berkshire County which gave the Festival-sponsored layman's music course last year.

Tomorrow afternoon's concert, scheduled for 3.30, will be high lighted by two works by noted American composers, both members of the faculty of the Berkshire Music Center. First to be played will be Aaron Copland's "Quiet City." Paul Hindemith's violincello concerto will follow, with Gregor Piatigorsky as soloist.

Music Festival Programs for Week-end Concerts

TONIGHT at 8.30
Italian Symphony	Mendelssohn
Overture to Leonore No. 3	Beethoven
Symphony No. 5	Shostakovitch
TOMORROW at 3.30
Symphony No. 4	Brahms
Quiet City	Copland
Violincello Concerto	Hindemith
Soloist—Gregor Piatigorsky
Capriccio Espagnol	Rimsky-Korsakov

Two Symphonies Played

There was much to delight in the playing of Haydn's 88th Symphony in G major. The performance of Beethoven's fifth symphony also revealed the high instrumental standards which mark the Boston Symphony's playing. But the tempo in the first three movements seemed unwontedly deliberate. The volume and mass of sound in outspoken measure were very effective, but one sometimes missed a sense of contrast of mood and elasticity of pace.

Debussy's "Festivals" was brilliantly and vigorously played, and the conductor and orchestra dealt well with the French composer's "Clouds" and "Afternoon of a Faun."

Festival patrons had an opportunity to listen to chamber music this afternoon on South Mountain, where Marcel Grandjany, French harpist, was the assisting artist with the South Mountain String Quartet in Handel's suite in B flat, Op. 4, a work originally written for harp and strings, although perhaps better known in its arrangement for organ.

The playing of Mr. Grandjany, who added an impressive cadenza of his own, deserved the highest praise, and he was called upon for two short solos at the close.

The members of the quartet, Kathleen Parlow, Edwin Ideler, Conrad Held and Willem Willeke, gave pleasing performances of Beethoven's quartet in G, Op. 18, and Paul Hindemith's early quartet, Op. 10.

256

This Clipping From
HACKENSACK, N. J.
BERGEN-RECORD

AUG 2 - 1941

Music News And Views

By ROGER S. VREELAND

Tomorrow afternoon Serge Koussevitzky will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, Tanglewood, Mass., in two modern works in addition to Brahms's Fourth Symphony and Rimsky-Korsakoff's "Capriccio Espagnol". The Festival's first soloist this season, Gregor Piatigorsky, will play Hindemith's Cello Concerto. The other number is Aaron Copland's "Quiet City", for trumpet, English horn and strings.

"Quiet City" will also be heard at the New York Stadium, by the Philharmonic-Symphony Orchestra, Friday night, August 8, with Alexander Smallens conducting.

"Quiet City" was composed as an orchestral piece in the summer of 1940, and had its first performance by the Saidenberg Little Symphony at Town Hall, New York City, on Jan. 28, 1941.

Concerning the work, Aaron Copland writes:

"In the spring of 1939 I was asked by my friend, Harold Clurman, director of the Group Theater, to supply the incidental musical score for a new play by Irwin Shaw, author of "Bury the Dead", "The Gentle People", and other dramas. His new opus was entitled "Quiet City" and was a realistic fantasy concerning the night thoughts of many different kinds of people in a great city. It called for music evocative of the nostalgia and inner distress of a society profoundly aware of its own insecurity.

"Several friends urged me to make use of some of the thematic material used in my score as the basis for an orchestral piece. This is what I did in the summer of 1940, as soon as my duties at the Berkshire Music Center were finshed. I borrowed the name, the trumpet, and some themes from the orignal play. The addition of the Englsh horn and the string orchestra (I was limited to clarinet, saxophone, and piano, plus the trumpet of course, in the stage version), and the form of the piece as a whole, was the result of work in a barn-studio two miles down the road from Tanglewood. The orchestration was completed in late September, and the score dedicated to Ralph Hawkes, junior member of the London firm of Boosey and Hawkes, who published the composition recently."

This Clipping From HANOVER, PA.
SUN
AUG 2 - 1941

THE SUN DIAL

Berkshire Boldness

THE trustees of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival never made a wiser move than when, some years ago, they decided to plunge in and get the best. Orchestrally the best than as now meant the Boston Symphony and its leader, Serge Koussevitsky. This bold move, which might have landed its sponsors in financial trouble, has proved a brilliant success; and the Berkshire Festival is now unsurpassed.

The war, naturally enough, has been a boon to it, for it offers about the only place for a summer musical pilgrimage. This year, too, new buildings have been finished; and we may probably expect interesting developments in opera and chamber music.

Some people not unreasonably complain of the huge crowds and the traffic problem on country roads which is the inevitable discomfort of the festival. But this has its compensation, for the vast size of the audiences will defend the festival from the curse of fashionable and intellectual snobbery which so seriously affected the last years of Salzburg. We may not get the opera that the Austrian resort produced, but at least we shall avoid, by keeping the symphonic repertoire as the chief aim of the festival, the sorry business of cliquishness and dissension, which are so often hangers-on of the artistic word.—Boston Herald

---

This Clipping From HANOVER, PA.
SUN

AUG 2 - 1941

The eighth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival opened Thursday night in the Music Shed on the Tanglewood estate at Lenox, Mass., where Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra is presenting three concerts each weekend through August 17.

On Friday, Aug. 15, from 5:30 until late in the evening an extensive benefit program will be given for the United Service Organizations and the British War Relief, Inc. Dr. Koussevitzky will conduct a band of 250 military musicians selected from the 26th Division's bands at Camp Edwards. The next part of the program will be a demonstration of various activities of the Berkshire Music Center. The center's festival chorus, singing Randall Thompson's "Alleluia," will open a "Manifestation" with prominent speakers. After a picnic supper, Dr. Koussevitzky will conduct the Boston Symphony in a concert opening with the first movement of Beethoven's fifth symphony. Mendelssohn's violin concerto, with Albert Spalding as the soloist, and Tchaikovsky's "1812" overture will be among the other numbers.

The 1941 festival is the sixth with the participation of the Boston Symphony, the fifth to be held at Tanglewood and the fourth to be held in the Music Shed. Information about tickets may be obtained from the festival's main office at Stockbridge, Mass., or from its New York office at 113 West Fifty-seventh street. Information about lodgings is obtainable from the Berkshire Hills Conference's information desk in the Stockbridge headquarters.

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
EVENING UNION
AUG 2 - 1941

Festival Programs At Tanglewood

Following are the musical programs of the concerts of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival yet to come. The concerts are played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky.

Series A

Saturday, August 2—at 8.30 p. m.
"Italian" Symphony .... Mendelssohn
Overture to "Leonore" No. 3 .. Beethoven
Symphony No. 5 .... Shostakovitch
Sunday, August 3—at 3.30 p. m.
"Unfinished" Symphony ...... Schubert
"Quiet City" .... Copland
Violoncello Concerto .... Hindemith
(Soloist: Gregor Piatigorsky)
Symphony No. 4 .... Brahms

Series B

(programs in commemoration of the 150th anniversary of Mozart's death.)
Thursday, August 7—at 8.30 p. m.
Symphony in G Minor (K. 550) .. Mozart
Requiem (Excerpts) .... Mozart
(Chorus of the Berkshire Musical Association)
Saturday, August 9—at 8.30 p. m.
"Eine Kleine Nachtmusik" ..... Mozart
Symphony No. 2, "Romantic" .. Hanson
Concerto No. 2 in B-flat for piano . Brahms
(Soloist: Leonard Shure)
Prelude to "Lohengrin" .... Wagner
Prelude to "Die Meistersinger" . Wagner
Sunday, August 10—at 3.30 p. m.
Symphony in E-flat major (K. 543) Mozart
"La Mer" .... Debussy
Fantastic Symphony .... Berlioz

Series C

Thursday, August 14—at 8.30 p. m.
Prelude and Fugue in C major
Bach-Koussevitzky
"Missa Solemnis" .... Beethoven
(Quartet of soloists—Berkshire Festival Chorus)
Saturday, August 16—at 8.30 p. m.
"London" Symphony .. Vaughan Williams
Violin Concerto .... Barber
(Soloist: Ruth Posselt)
Prelude to "Parsifal" .... Wagner
Good Friday Spell from "Parsifal"
Wagner
Overture to "Tannhauser" ...... Wagner
Sunday, August 17—at 3.30 p. m.
Symphony No. 6 .... Sibeliu
"Death and Transfiguration" .... Strau
Symphony No. 5 .... Tchaikovsky

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM

AUG 2 - 1941

MUSIC and RECORI

Berkshire Music Is Serious

Symphonic Fete Lures Vacationists

By ROBERT BAGAR.

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 2.—The visitors who come to the Berkshire Symphonic Festival take both their vacations and their music seriously. They roll both into one, as a matter of fact, and the devil take care and worries.

There are quite a number of persons, however, whose aims up here begin and end with work. That would be the considerable contingent of young students, specially gifted ones, mind, who are enrolled in the Berkshire Music Center.

This is the second year of the center's existence, which began a year ago as a dream of Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. He believes not only in propagating the cause of music through his magnificent concerts, but also by way of spreading the gospel among the young.

On Hawthorne's Grounds.

On the same grounds where Nathaniel Hawthorne wrote Wonder Book and the House of the Seven Gables, the aspiring Koussevitzkys, Carusos, Melbas, Heifetzes, Wagners, Bachs and Brahmses put in many solid hours of hard and unremitting labor. From 9 in the morning to 6 at night every day, except Sunday, during the school's session you can see them, hear them. They get in one another's hair, in your own. The place becomes a thriving monument to toil, all for a career and, indirectly, a cause.

A walk over the grounds yesterday revealed many interesting sights. A group was rehearsing Mozart's Cosi Fan Tutte under the watchful eye of Herbert Graf at the Theater Concert Hall. This auditorium, by the way, is a new building, capable of holding 1172 persons.

A few hundred yards farther on you might come across a youth gesticulating wildly—or so you would think. That chap, you soon discover, is communing with Bach or Beethoven. You look closely and you see propped in front of him on a makeshift conductor's desk a symphonic score. Alongside a phonograph is playing. The boy is conducting, you see.

Then there are orchestras of various sizes and sorts in the center.

Advanced Class Plays.

Last night the orchestra of the advanced class gave a concert. It had no less than four conductors, all special students. One of the young men who served in a batonistic capacity was Richard Korn, an athletic-looking fellow. His assignment was to conduct the Richard Strauss Don Juan, and a right good job he made of it. He was once a member of District Attorney Dewey's office staff. But law degree or no law degree, he now is on the way to his true love—conducting. He is one of Leon Barzin's assistants and he has led the National Orchestral Assn.

One of the things that might amaze the staid, perhaps stuffy music lover is the informal, relaxed manner in which some of the younger listeners take their music on regular concert nights. They sprawl on the ground at all conceivable points of vantage completely at ease.

Beethoven Wins Over Jive.

An amusing incident took plac toward the end of the intermis sion period on opening nigh Some budding Benny Goodman a little away from the center o things was jiving for all he wa worth. He had gathered a crow of listeners around him, who wer encouraging him like mad.

The Beethoven Fifth Symphony suddenly started and for a moment it looked like a tug of wa between the old and new. But soon, the tootler and his constituents made a beeline for the shed And just about half of the company plunged down on their faces to listen to Beethoven. They make the transition from the classics to the American folk like nothing here.

This Clipping From NORFOLK, VA.
VIRGINIAN PILOT
AUG 2 - 1941

Smooth Susan at Play

By Nell Giles

Make it a point to learn more about some subjects this summer. If it's music you want how about Tanglewood?

Set a Definite Goal

If you don't need to go to school in a classroom, we'd suggest you study in a freer way.

You've probably been to school all winter. You are probably sick of it, too . . . and you need a rest and a change of pace. So we suggest that this summer of study be something creative.

Whatever it is that you are most interested in, say to yourself this summer, that by September you're going to know more about that something. If it is an art or a craft, you are going to be so much better at it than you are now that you can see a definite improvement. There was a time when you only made little jugs and bowls but now you can make hammered copper plates.

If it is sport, such as swimming or sailing, take lessons so that at the end of the summer you feel that you have mastered something. Don't feel that all this burst of energy and this self discipline will make a sissy of you. Far from it. Neither will you belong to a self-culture club when you get through. But what you will have is a little starch which won't hurt you. Also, you will have learned to give yourself a push, which is the hardest thing in the world to do!

All the big cities of the United States have summer concerts, so that if music is your field, you can study music by ear for the whole summer. Or, if you leave the city and go to a music festival, you might go to the Berkshires, where since 1933, the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Sarge Koussevitsky, has conducted an annual symphonic festival. This is patterned after the old Salzburg festival. From the end of July into the middle of August, at "Tanglewood," which is between Lenox and Stockbridge, the festival is held in a natural amphitheatre of green hills.

The Berkshire Music Center, which is sponsored by trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has classes from the first part of July through the middle of August, and included in the tuition is admission to the nine concerts given in the festival . . . and also the music pupils may attend some of the Symphony orchestra rehearsals. This Music Center is especially for training in orchestra work and in collective singing.

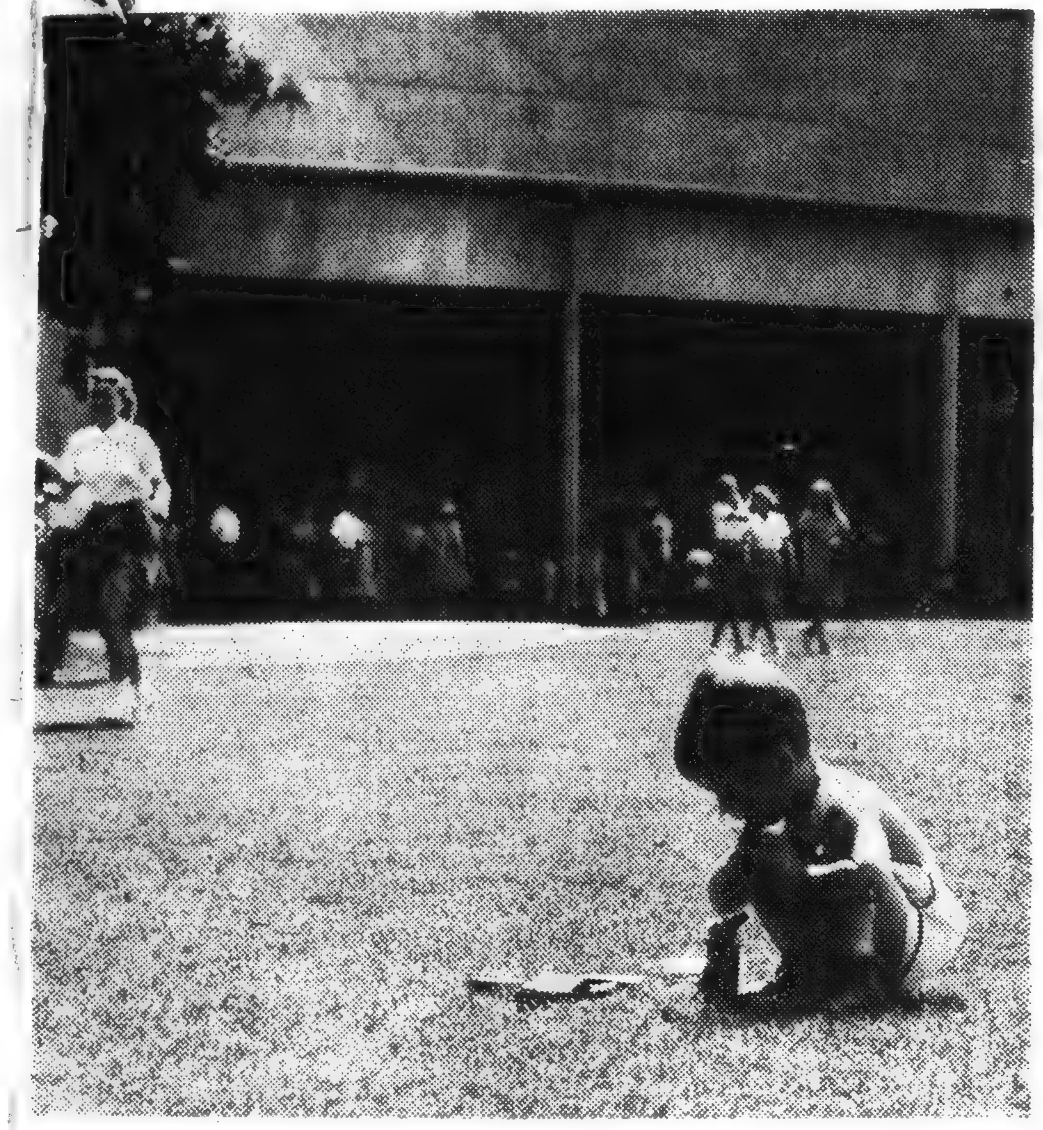
(Released by The Bell Syndicate, Inc.)

This Clipping From
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

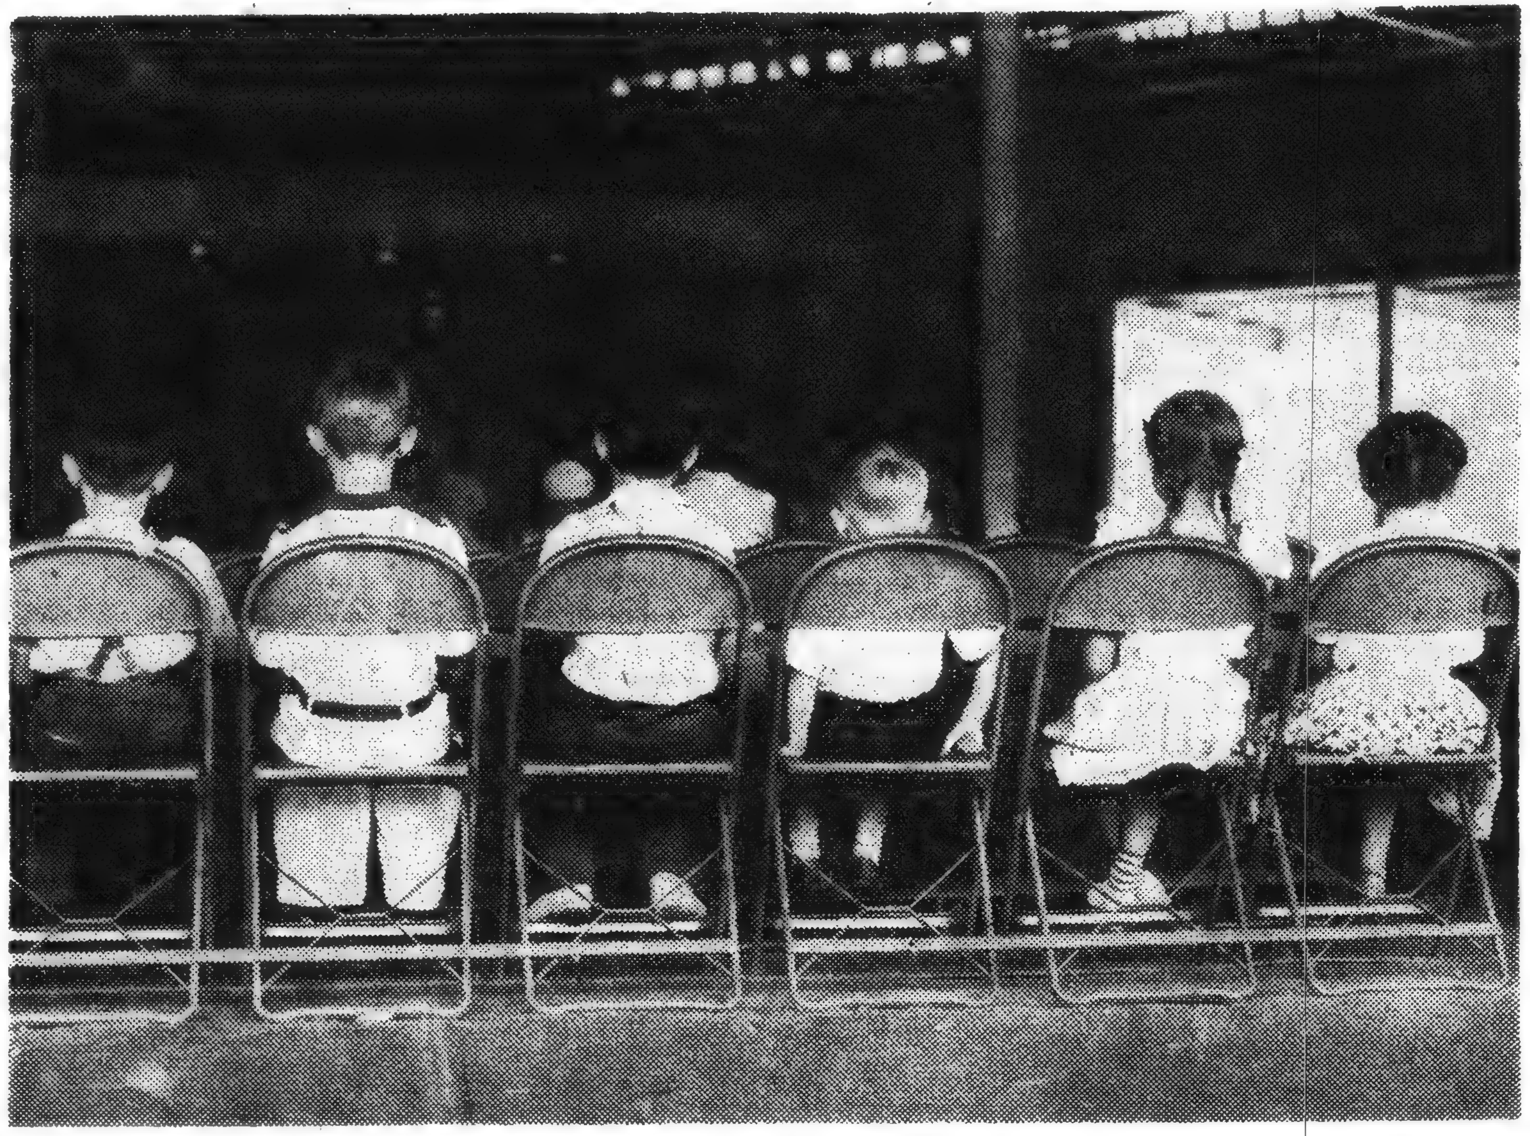
237

AUG 2 - 1941

Berkshire's Children Hear a Boston Symphony Rehearsal



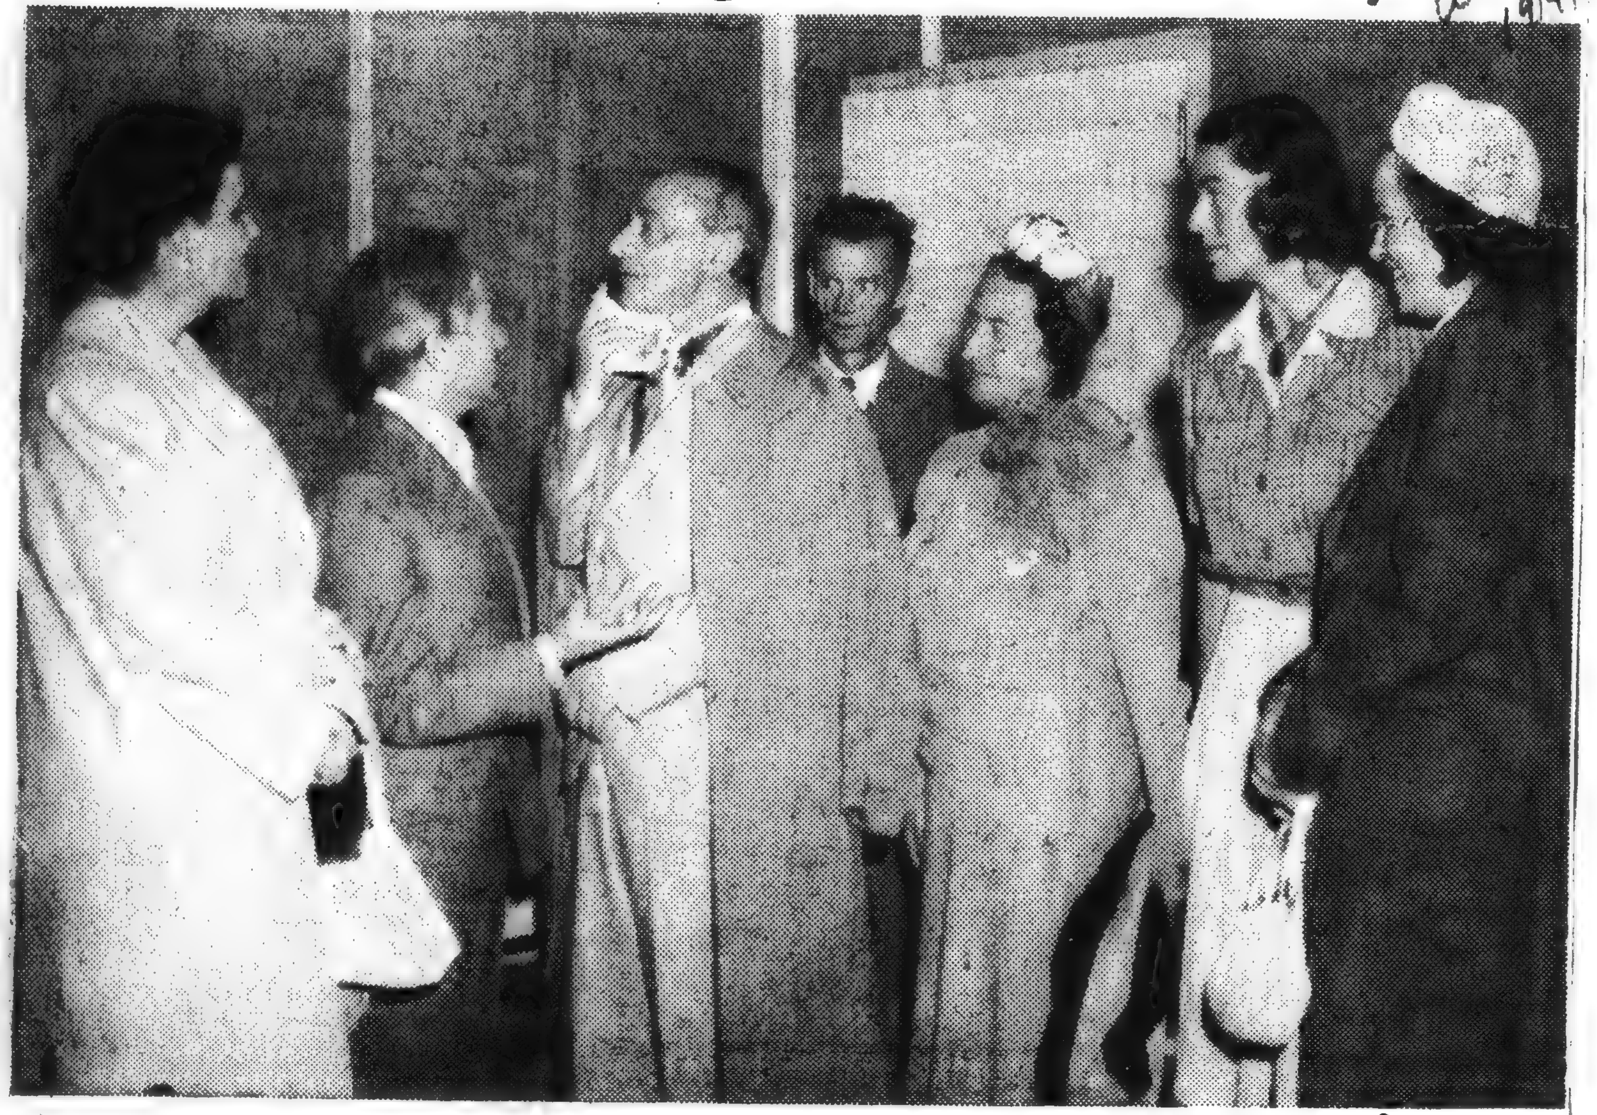
Probably the youngest attendant at this morning's rehearsal at Tanglewood was 2½-year-old William Miles, son of Mr. and Mrs. Collins L. Miles of Washington.



This panorama of pigtails and summer haircuts was typical of the audience at this morning's rehearsal by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood for the especial benefit of the thousands of Berkshire school children who took the Festival music course last winter.

Congratulating Dr. Koussevitzky

Aug 1941



Don Jose Browning Photo

"Mais oui, maestro, it was grand!" quoth this group of music lovers, artists and director as they greeted Dr. Serge Koussevitzky at the conclusion of yesterday's concert at Tanglewood. In the famed conductor's dressing room are: left to right, Mlle. H. Grenier, of Montreal; Dr. Desire Defauw, noted Belgian conductor who now directs the Montreal Symphony orchestra, Dr. Koussevitzky, Mme. Defauw, Mrs. Hollis Carlisle, Springfield, and Miss Hernrietta Schumann, well known singer. Keeping a watchful eye on things is Dr. Koussevitzky's faithful valet, seen in background.

This Clipping From
WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM

AUG 2 - 1941

Social News

Worcester Residents at Berkshire Festival

Worcester residents are attending in the eighth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Tanglewood, Stockbridge, which opened this weekend with concerts under the direction of Sergei Koussevitzky, permanent conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Mrs. Lawrence Kelton Miller of Pittsfield, the former Amy Bess Williams of this city, is entertaining her mother, Mrs. Frederick R. Williams of 56 William street, and her sister, Miss Marjorie Ann Williams, this weekend and next. For the final series, Aug. 14 to 17, she will have as her guests Miss Ella D. Porter of the Museum of Modern Art in New York and Mrs. Katherine S. Choate of Topsfield and Boston.

Mr. and Mrs. George Edman of Pittsfield will be hosts for a cocktail party this afternoon for the press representatives at the Festival. Miss Marion W. Emerson (Nancy Burncoat of the Sunday Telegram) will be among the guests.

Rodney Colton of Millbury is attending also.

Feature of next week's series is the benefit concert Friday night for British War Relief and the U. S. O.

This Clipping From PORTLAND, ME.
EXPRESS

AUG 2 - 1941

Koussevitzky To Conduct Band And Symphony

The New England gala benefit at Tanglewood, home of the Berkshire Music Festival, in Massachusetts to be held Friday, Aug. 15 will feature as the opening number by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Allegro con brio from Beethoven's Symphony No. 5, conducted by Serge Koussevitzky. Tchaikovsky's 1812 Overture will also figure on the program. Albert Spalding, who will be one of the soloists, will appear in Mendelssohn's Violin Concerto.

Besides conducting his famous orchestra, Koussevitzky will lead a picked band of 250 players drawn from the 26th division of the United States Army. He will conduct military marches. The players, guests for the occasion, will bivouac on the grass slopes of Tanglewood at Lenox, Mass.

Another musical program at the Gala Benefit, given to aid the fund of USO and the British War Relief, will be presented by the members of the Berkshire Music Center, consisting of a symphony concert in the Shed, a choral concert in the Barn, opera in the new Theater Music Hall, and chamber music in the new Chamber Music Hall.

The general program, beginning at 5.30 p. m. will last late into the evening and will also include a lawn party, a draw for prizes and a display of fireworks.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th ST., NEW YORK
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Circ. (D 25,253)
This Clipping From
SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
GAZETTE

AUG 4 - 1941

Will Play Part Of Beethoven's 5th Symphony

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 3—Serge Koussevitzky has chosen the Allegro con brio from Beethoven's Symphony 5 as the opening number when the Boston Symphony orchestra gives a concert as a feature of the gala benefit at Tanglewood Friday, Aug. 15. Tchaikovsky's "1812" Overture will also figure on the program. Albert Spaulding, who will be one of the soloists, will appear in Mendelssohn's violin concerto.

Besides conducting his famous orchestra, Koussevitzky will lead a picked band of 250 players drawn from the 26th Division of the United States army. He will conduct military marches. The players, guests for the occasion, will bivouac on the grass slopes of Tanglewood, in Lenox.

Another musical program at the gala benefit will be presented by the members of the Berkshire Music Center, consisting of a symphony concert in the Shed, a choral concert in the Barn, opera in the new Theater-Music Hall and chamber music in the new Chamber Music hall.

Randall Thompson's "Alleluia" will introduce the "Manifestation," when speakers of national fame will address the audience in the Shed. The "Alleluia" will be sung by the Festival chorus, which consists of pupils of the school and which is likewise to appear in the Berkshire Symphonic festival in Beethoven's "Missa Solemnis" on the night previous.

The general program, beginning at 5:30, will last late into the evening and will also include a lawn party, a draw for prizes and a display of fireworks.

The gala benefit will be given to aid the fund of the United Service Organizations and the British War Relief. It is hoped that there will be an even larger attendance and proceeds than last year, when a similar benefit at Tanglewood brought 10,000 people and netted $23,000 for allied relief.

Music Crowd At Stockbridge Sets Record

By JOHN SELBY

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 3 (AP)—Before the largest crowd to hear a concert at Tanglewood, Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony orchestra brought to a close today the first week-end series of the eighth Berkshire Symphonic Festival.

A few more than 9,700 persons heard the curiously varied program in the unique wedge-shaped music shed—setting an attendance record for the three-concert series which attracted a total of 26,400.

A few seats are still available for the next section opening on Thursday, however everything but general admission tickets are gone for next Saturday night and Sunday afternoon.

A number of things account for the phenomenon of such attendance here in the Berkshires, with no large city near, and no circus stunts provided to whip up a ballyhoo, and first of these is Dr. Koussevitzky.

It is not only his conducting, and his orchestra, but his absolute refusals to play more than three concerts a week. He can, he maintains, rehearse no more than that, and provide performances up to his winter standard. Nightly concerts would exhaust both him and his men—so they are taboo.

A second reason is the natural beauty of the 210 acres which overlook the famous Stockbridge bowl. A third is the fact that the acoustics of the "shed" approach perfection, largely by accident, since no summer music auditorium of comparable size has been designed in the shape of a huge wedge of pie before.

This was demonstrated last night with a performance of Beethoven's "Lenore No. 3" overture. The score calls for off-stage trumpet calls. These were sounded outside the "shed," and were heard at least three times because of the echo, although the music from the stage was perfect.

Today Dr. Koussevitzky played first the Fourth Symphony of Johannes Brahms, revising the usual order of things by serving the meat before the appetizers.

Then came Aaron Copland's nocturne-like "Quiet City" for trumpet, English horn and strings; Hindemith's 'Cello Concerto with Gregor Piatigorsky as soloist, and the flashy Spanish Caprice of Rimsky-Korsakoff, a virtuoso piece for orchestra which, as played today, brought the audience up cheering.

The Hindemith work served better to prove the abilities of Mr. Piatigorsky than those of Hindemith, the concerto being one of those workmanlike jobs which leads the listener to wonder, at the end, just what has been constructed, if anything.

The festival resumes Thursday night with a Mozart-Beethoven program.

HENRY
THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
NEW YORK
220 WEST 19th ST., NEW YORK
Tel. CHelsea 3 - 8860
THIS CLIPPING FROM
HUDSON, N. Y.
DAILY STAR

AUG 4 - 1941

BOSTON SYMPHONY IN GALA BENEFIT

Serge Koussevitzky has chosen the Allegro con brio from Beethoven's Symphony No. V as the opening number when the Boston Symphony Orchestra gives a concert as a feature of the Gala Benefit at Tanglewood Friday, August 15. Tchaikovsky's "1812" Overture will also figure on the program. Albert Spalding, who will be one of the solosists (others are to be announced) will appear in Mendelssohn's Violin Concerto.

Besides conducting his famous Orchestra, Koussevitzky will lead a picked band of 250 players drawn from the 26th Division of the United States Army. He will conduct military marches. The players, guests for the occasion, will bivouac on the grass slopes of Tanglewood, in Lenox.

Another musical program at the Gala Benefit will be presented by the members of the Berkshire Music Center, consisting of a symphony concert in the Shed, a choral concert in the Barn, opera in the new Theatre-Music Hall, and chamber music in the new Chamber Music Hall.

Randall Thompson's "Alleluia" will introduce the "Manifestation," when speakers of national fame will address the audience in the Shed. The "Alleluia" will be sung by the Festival Chorus, which consists of pupils of the School and which is likewise to appear in the Berkshire Symphonic Festival in Beethoven's "Missa Solemnis" on the night previous.

The general program, beginning at 5:30, will last late into the evening and will also include a lawn party, a draw for prizes and a display of fireworks.

The Gala Benefit will be given to aid the fund of the United Service Organizations and the British War Relief. It is hoped that there will be an even larger attendance and proceeds than last year, when a similar benefit at Tanglewood brought 10,000 people and netted $23,000 for Allied Relief.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th ST., NEW YORK
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Circ. (D 15,417)
This Clipping From
WATERBURY, CONN.
REPUBLICAN

AUG 4 - 1941

program.

SPALDING SOLOIST AT BENEFIT EVENT

Tanglewood Benefit To Be Staged Aug. 15

Serge Koussevitzky has chosen the Allegro con brio from Beethoven's Symphony No. V as the opening number when the Boston Symphony orchestra gives a concert as a feature of the gala benefit at Tanglewood Friday, Aug. 15.

Tchaikowsky's "1812" Overture will also figure on the program. Albert Spalding, who will be one of the soloists (others are to be announced) will appear in Mendelssohn's Violin Concerto.

Besides conducting his famous orchestra, Koussevitzky will lead a picked band of 250 players drawn from the 26th division of the U. S. army. He will conduct military marches. The players, guests for the occasion, will bivouac on the grass slopes of Tanglewood in Lenox.

Another musical program at the gala benefit will be presented by the members of the Berkshire Music Center, consisting of a symphony concert in the shed, a choral concert in the barn, opera in the new theater-music hall, and chamber music in the new chamber music hall.

Randall Thompson's "Alleluia" will introduce the "Manifestation," when speakers of national fame will address the audience in the shed. The "Alleluia" will be sung by the festival chorus, which consists of pupils of the school and which is likewise to appear in the Berkshire Symphonic festival in Beethoven's "Missa Solemnis" on the night previous.

The general program, beginning at 5:30, will last late into the evening and will also include a lawn party and fireworks.

The gala benefit will be given to aid the fund of the United Service Organizations and the British War relief. It is hoped that there will be an even larger attendance and proceeds than last year, when a similar benefit at Tanglewood brought 10,000 people and netted $23,000 for Allied Relief.

238

Second Concert Slated Tonight In Berkshires

Koussevitzky to Lead Works by Shostakovitch and Mendelssohn at Lenox

By Francis D. Perkins

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 1.—Serge Koussevitzky will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the second concert of the eighth Berkshire Symphonic Festival in the music shed on the Tanglewood Estate tomorrow night.

The program will include Mendelssohn's Italian symphony, which was first heard more than a century ago; Dimitri Shostakovitch's fifth symphony, first heard four years ago, and Beethoven's third Leonore overture.

A capacity audience is expected. Almost all the reserved seats had been sold by yesterday afternoon, and it was said that all reserved places had been sold for the third concert Sunday afternoon. An ample supply of general admission tickets was available for both concerts.

Although today offered no formal festival program in the music shed, there was no lack of activity in various parts of the grounds, where the day's schedule of the Berkshire Music Center called for twenty-two rehearsals, classes and lectures of various kinds between 8 a. m. and 6 p. m. with Dr. Koussevitzky, Gregor Piatigorzky, Aaron Copland and Paul Hindemith among the instructors.

Tonight offered a concert by the center's advanced orchestra under several student conductors in the new theater and concert hall, whose stage can be adjusted either for a purely musical or for a music-dramatic work.

Record Opening Audience

With the largest opening-night audience in the history of this series, yesterday's concert gave the festival a promising start. The estimated attendance of 7,500 included approximately 800 persons who stood or sat on benches on the outskirts of the music shed and on neighboring parts of the Tanglewood lawn.

The weather, if not ideal, was quite considerate, limiting its showers to the afternoon, and the gathering and dispersal of the audience's cars went as expeditiously as the capacity of Route 183 permitted.

Both tomorrow's and yesterday's programs are of a type which characterizes many of Dr. Koussevitzky's Tanglewood lists, presenting two or more works from the standard repertoire and a less familiar, relatively modern composiitno.

As a rule these modern works are not absolute novelties. Last night's choise, Heirot Villa-Lobos' tenth Choros Rasga Coracao for chorus and orchestra, was first sung in New York mare than ten years ago by Hugh Ross's Schola Cantorum and was aiso performed in 1939 in a World's Fair Brazilian concert under Burle Max. The word serenade, the composer notes, gives an approximate idea of the significance of the term "choros."

With its rhythmic emphasis, vividness of color and timbre and exotic and sometimes primitive atmosphere, the work makes a notable impression at a first hearing. For this reviewer, that impression does not repeat itself with the same intensity when the music is heard a second or third time, but much of the composition remains absorbing.

The Berkshire Musical Association chorus, trained by Horace Hunt, sang laudably from a vocal and expressive point of view. The tone quality was good and the sonority imposing. The general atmosphere of the music might have been enhanced by giving slightly more prominence to the constantly repeated rhythmic refrain, but the rhythmic difficulties of the work were successfully dealt with.

This Clipping From
NEWARK, N. J.
CALL

AUG 3 - 1941

This Clipping From
WATERBURY, CONN.
REPUBLICAN
AUG 3 - 1941

FORT LAUDERDALE, FLA.
NEWS & SENTINEL

AUG 3 - 1941

BRIDGEPORT, CONN.
POST

AUG 3 - 1941

NEW BEDFORD, MASS.
STANDARD TIMES

AUG 3 - 1941

PROVIDENCE, R. I.
JOURNAL

AUG 3 - 1941

Dinner Jackets And Chic Wraps, Short Dresses And Slacks Worn At Berkshire Music Festival

By JOHN SELBY

Stockbridge, Mass., Aug. 2.—(AP)— Audiences at the Berkshire festival in this famous summer "society belt" tend definitely toward the low income groups.

This was clearly indicated by a survey of tonight's audience of approximately 7,200 at Tanglewood, where the Boston Symphony is currently presenting what is undoubtedly the finest of all American summer music.

There were still plenty of dinner jackets and short chinchilla wraps. But there also were plenty of slacks and plenty of women in short dresses, and even a few young men in shorts.

And this is exactly what festival authorities want.

In addition, those who heard one of Serge Koussevitzky's best planned programs included one of the most important musical groups in America—the 339 students enrolled in the Berkshire musical center. This is Dr. Koussevitzky's now world-known school which each summer begins functioning three weeks ahead of the festival, and reaches its climax with the annual choral program.

The climax will be a performance of Bethoven's "Missa Solemnis" Thursday, Aug. 14, in which the Berkshire festival chorus will be heard for the first time this summer.

Tonight's program constituted a brief survey of music from Beethoven to the present. It included his imperishable "Leonore No. 3" overture, the "Italian" symphony of the arch-romantic, Mendelssohn and, after the intermission, the fifth symphony of the young Soviet composer, Dmitri Shostakovitch.

The orchestra had, for the first time this summer, a fair chance to prove its mettle. Banks of hurrying clouds hid the sun all day but brought no rain, and the damp, which dimmed a little the glorious strings of the Boston Symphony last Thursday night, did not damage tonight.

The result was a performance which in every technical respect was as close to perfect as is likely to be heard anywhere in the world.

The performance of the Shostakovitch symphony minimizes certain of its musical inconsistencies and enabled the audience to hear the work as probably, in a world disturbed as this one, its composer has never himself heard his music.

Tomorrow's concert will present the first soloist of the current festival, cellist Gregor Piatigorsky, who will play the Hindemith concerto for the first time in these surroundings. Most important of the remaining music will be the fourth Brahms symphony.

This Clipping From
NEW HAVEN, CONN.
REGISTER

AUG 3 - 1941

The North American Way

In its own quiet manner the Boston Symphony Orchestra has been furthering cultural relations between the Latin-American republics to the south of us. At "Tanglewood" five distinguished young musicians, chosen representatives of five nations, have been in residence at the Berkshire Music Center at the invitation of the Orchestra; Dr. Koussevitsky greeted them at a reception and the young people, making their first visit here and strangers to each other, were presented all around at the beginning of a fruitful experience in musical and cultural relationships. There is one young woman in the lot, Miss Althea Alimonda from Sao Paulo, Brazil, a violinist and composer of reputation in her native country. The four men are Blas Galindo, composer from Mexico, Marcelo Montecino from Santiago, Chile, Alfredo Ianelli from Buenos Aires, and Alejandro Zagarra from Bogota, Columbia. All are between the ages of twenty and thirty and come here through scholarships designed to further a mutually beneficial reciprocity between the two Americas. These evidences of good-will will bring to our closer attention the remarkable musical talent which is fast developing among our southern neighbors, while enabling its representatives to profit by the unprecedented interpretive opportunities of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's summer school.

Two Symphonies Played

There was much to delight in the playing of Haydn's 88th Symphony in G major. The performance of Beethoven's fifth symphony also revealed the high instrumental standards which mark the Boston Symphony's playing. But the tempo in the first three movements seemed unwontedly deliberate. The volume and mass of sound in outspoken measure were very effective, but one sometimes missed a sense of contrast of mood and elasticity of pace.

Debussy's "Festivals" was brilliantly and vigorously played, and the conductor and orchestra dealt well with the French composer's "Clouds" and "Afternoon of a Faun."

Festival patrons had an opportunity to listen to chamber music this afternoon on South Mountain, where Marcel Grandjany, French harpist, was the assisting artist with the South Mountain String Quartet in Handel's suite in B flat, Op. 4, a work originally written for harp and strings, although perhaps better known in its arrangement for organ.

The playing of Mr. Grandjany, who added an impressive cadenza of his own, deserved the highest praise, and he was called upon for two short solos at the close.

The members of the quartet, Kathleen Parlow, Edwin Ideler, Conrad Held and Willem Willeke, gave pleasing performances of Beethoven's quartet in G, Op. 18, and Paul Hindemith's early quartet, Op. 10.

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
SUNDAY UNION
& REPUBLICAN

AUG 3 - 1941

Berkshire Festival Concerts This Week

The Berkshire Symphonic festival will have the third concert in series A this afternoon at 3.30. Soloist in today's concert is Gregor Piatigorsky, cellist who will play Hindemith's concerto for cello. The Boston Symphony orchestra will play Brahm's Fourth symphony, Quiet City by Copeland and spirited Capriccio Espagnol by the Russian composer Rimsky-Korsakoff. Dr Serge Koussevitsky will conduct.

Series B will open Thursday night and the other two concerts in the group will be given Saturday night and Sunday afternoon. Thursday night the chorus of the Berkshire Music association will be heard with the orchestra in excerpts from Mozart's Requiem. Beethoven's Eroica symphony will be played on the same program.

Leonard Shure, pianist, is soloist for Saturday's concert and he will play Brahm's second concerto on B flat. The orchestra will present Eine Kleine Nachtmusick by Mozart; the Romantic symphony by Harris and the preludes to Wagner's Lohengrin and Die Meistersinger.

The year's is the eighth annual one Berkshire Music Festival association and, since the music shed was built at Tanglewood, Lenox, huge audiences have flocked to the concerts. Again this year, each concert is expected to be a sellout with hundreds listening from the lawn just outside the hall.

This Clipping From
BUFFALO, N.Y.
COURIER-EXPRESS

AUG 3 - 1941

Music World

By Isabelle Workman Evans

Looking forward with keen anticipation, the editor of this column will be on the road early Monday morning to attend that superlatively fine music center, the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, on assignment by The Courier-Express. Musicians and music lovers from all over the world are reveling in the opportunities offered both by the educational departments of the music center, now in its second season, and by the series of concerts featuring the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky.

Barring unforseen circumstances, beginning with the Tuesday issue of The Courier-Express, there will be daily commentaries on events at Tanglewood. The activities include: Orchestral conducting, Serge Koussevitzky and Stanley Chapple; choral conducting, Wallace Woodworth and Hugh Ross; the Music Center Orchestra; composition, Aaron Copland and Paul Hindemith; chamber music, Gregor Piatigorsky; opera, Herbert Graf, Boris Goldovsky and Richard Rychtarik; lectures by Olin Downes, Howard Hanson and Carleton Sprague Smith, as well as concerts and rehearsals by the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

LOWELL, MASS.
SUNDAY TELEGRAM

AUG 3 - 1941

POUGHKEEPSIE, N. Y.
SUNDAY COURIER

AUG 3 - 1941

This Clipping From TOLEDO, O.
TIMES

AUG 3 - 1941

Boston Group Sets Benefit

Symphony Orchestra To Give Concert

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 2—Serge Koussevitzky has chosen the Allegro con brio from Beethoven's "Symphony No. 5" as the opening number when the Boston Symphony orchestra gives a concert as a feature of the gala benefit at Tanglewood Friday, Aug. 15. Tschaikowsky's "1812" overture will also figure on the program. Albert Spalding will be one of the soloists (others are to be announced) and will appear in Mendelssohn's "Violin Concerto."

Besides conducting his famous orchestra, Koussevitzky will lead a picked band of 250 players drawn from the 26th division of the United States army. He will conduct military marches. The players, guests for the occasion, will bivouac on the grass slopes of Tanglewood, in Lenox.

Another musical program at the gala benefit will be presented by the members of the Berkshire Music center, consisting of a symphony concert in the shed, a choral concert in the barn, opera in the new theater-music hall, and chamber music in the new chamber music hall.

Randall Thompson's "Alleluia" will be sung by the Festival chorus, which consists of pupils of the school and which is likewise to appear in the Berkshire Symphonic festival in Beethoven's "Missa Solemnis" on the night previous.

The general program, beginning at 5:30, will last late into the evening and will also include a lawn party, awards and a display of fireworks.

The gala benefit will be given to aid the fund of the United Service organizations and the British War Relief. It is hoped that there will be an even larger attendance and proceeds than last year, when a similar benefit at Tanglewood brought 10,000 people and netted $23,000 for Allied relief.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
SUNDAY UNION
& REPUBLICAN

AUG 3 - 1941

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
SUNDAY UNION
& REPUBLICAN

AUG 3 - 1941

ORCHESTRAL MUSIC MARKS CONCERT AT TANGLEWOOD SHED

Beethoven's Overture 'Leonore' No. 3 and Mendelssohn's 'Italian' Symphony Included On Program

By FRANCIS REGAL

Stockbridge, Aug. 2 — The second concert of the Berkshire Symphonic festival, given tonight by the Boston symphony orchestra under the leadership of Dr Serge Koussevitzky, again drew an audience which overflowed the ample spaces of the Music Shed, and it may be remarked that listeners in these outside seats lose little of the beauty of the music. The program tonight was entirely orchestral and might almost be called entirely symphonic, since the Beethoven overture, "Leonore" No. 3, which separated the two symphonies presented has in it more of the symphony than of the theater, except for the offstage fanfare of trumpet which the composer took from his opera.

This romantic and thrilling overture has long been the favorite among the four overtures which Beethoven wrote for "Fidelio," and it rivals his greatest symphonies in withstanding the terrific wear and tear to which the most celebrated masterpieces are nowadays subjected. Even the theatrical trick of the trumpet call heralding the approach of the governor to save Florestan from death has not lost its magic, and the climaxes never fail to stir when the work is so superbly given as was the case tonight.

This was the one work of indisputable greatness on tonight's program, but the two symphonies were both interesting in their widely different ways. Mendelssohn's "Italian" symphony, which the composer conceived in youth and never published because he could never shape it quite to his satisfaction, has become one of his most popular works, many good judges preferring it to his more brilliant and imposing "Scotch" symphony. It is not very recognizably Italian in character except for the finale, in which the lively Saltarello dance rhythm is used, yet it is likely that much of its charm comes from the impressions of Italy during a tour at the age of 21, when much of the material of the symphony was conceived.

Classics and modern works are fairly distributed among the festival programs. At the first concert the novelty was the rambunctious Brazilian novelty, "Choros No 10," for chorus and orchestra by Heitor Villa-Lobos. Tonight the orchestra presented the fifth symphony of the young Russian composer Dmitri Shostakovitch, a work written for the celebration, in 1937, of the 20th anniversary of the U. S. S. R., but not at all revolutionary in character.

In fact the Soviet public did not like the symphonies, No. 2 and No. 3, which as a loyal child of the revolution he had written with a revolutionary program. His first symphony, produced in 1925, had been a popular hit, and after the failure of his propaganda symphonies he was officially advised to return to writing music.

The fifth symphony was the result and its success in Russia was immediate, while its vogue elsewhere has been steadily growing; in our country it was first heard in a broadcast on April, 9, 1938, by the NBC orchestra, Arthur Rodzinski conducting. At 35 Shostakovitch has become the outstanding Soviet composer, and this original and pleasing symphony shows that in Russia music has escaped from the thrall of politics.

Perfect weather added brilliance to the strings and throughout the evening the playing of the orchestra was at its magnificent best. In Beethoven's overture it plumbed the depths and the climaxes were powerful without extravagance. In the Mendelssohn the tone was rich and suave and the saltarello was played with dazzling virtuosity.

239

This Clipping From
ALBANY, N. Y.
TIMES UNION

AUG 3 - 1941

MUSIC World

By

E. S. VAN OLINDA

The second week of the Berkshire Symphonic festival by the Boston Symphony orchestra, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor, will be opened next Thursday night, in the Tanglewood Music Shed, beginning at 8:30 o'clock.

The program will consist of excerpts from Mozart's "Requiem," in which the chorus of the Berkshire Musical association will be heard. The symphony to be given is Beethoven's "Eroica."

* * *

The second in a series of three Friday afternoon chamber music concerts will be given August 8 at 4 p. m. by the South Mountain String Quartet, South Mountain auditorium, Pittsfield, Mass. The program is as follows:

Quartet in G Major	Beethoven
Quartet in C Minor (first performance)	Henk Badings
Piano Quartet in C Minor	Brahms

* * *

A special concert for the benefit of the United Service Organizations and the British War Relief will be held at Tanglewood, August 15, at 5:30 p. m., under the auspices of the Boston Symphony orchestra.

The program, which will run until late in the evening, will open with a band concert by the 26th Division band of the United States Army. Dr. Koussevitzky will lead the band. There will then be performances by the departments of the Music Center of opera, orchestral, choral and chamber music in the Shed, the Barn, and the two new auditoriums of the Center. A manifestation will follow, in which speakers of international importance will appear on the stage in the Shed. Gov. Leverett Saltonstall of Massachusetts has been invited to preside.

At intermission, a New England baked bean supper and other refreshments will be served on the spacious lawns of Tanglewood at a moderate price.

The final concert of the day will be presented in the Shed by the Boston Symphony orchestra, Dr. Koussevitzky conducting. Then will come the draw for prizes, band music on the lawn overlooking Lake Mahkeenac, fireworks and the singing of "The Star Spangled Banner."

The co-chairmen for tickets are Mrs. John H. P. Gould of Lenox and New York and Mrs. George W. Edman of Pittsfield. They opened an office in the winter quarters of the Festival at Stockbridge today. Persons wishing to make reservations for tickets or boxes may communicate with them by mail, telephone or telegraph. Additional chairmen are to be announced

The money for the USO will be used to supply recording machines and records for many of the major camps in the country. Associated in the USO are the YMCA, the YWCA, the National Catholic Community Service, the Salvation Army, the Jewish Welfare Board and the National Travelers' Aid Association.

* * *

The roster of soloists for the second Bach concert by the Maverick chorus of Woodstock, announced for Thursday evening, at the Maverick Concert hall, will be the same as that of the first concert—Ilse Dunbar, soprano; Jean Bryan, alto; Frank Baker, tenor, and Paul Matthen, bass.

This Clipping From
WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM

AUG 3 - 1941

6000 at Tanglewood For Berkshire Festival

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky Conducts Orchestra in Excellent Program at Outdoor Music Shed

By NANCY BURNCOAT

TANGLEWOOD, Stockbridge, Aug. 2—Music under the stars followed the drone of more than 6000 voices dying away to silence as Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of 110 men of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the informality of white coats and dark trousers, raised his baton in the music shed at "Tanglewood" tonight. The gesture opened the second concert of the eighth year of the Berkshire Symphonic Music Festival.

The concert, before thousands in a beautiful natural frame of trees, dark against the sky, surrounding the man-made amphitheater, was a far cry from the dream of a few music-loving women spending the Summer in the hills of Northern Massachusetts of a little good music for a small circle of likeminded friends, in the open.

"Tanglewood," the beautiful site of the new music shed between Stockbridge and Lee, was another step in the realization of the dream. The unconditional gift of a Bostonian, the new music shed, a school known as the Berkshire Music Center, with its increasing usefulness in the programs of Dr. Koussevitzky, with chorus and enthusiastic students, is further expansion of what has become the great Summer festival of America. Cars from every state in the Union, and across the border from Canada, are here tonight.

Setting Enhances Music

Officials of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, Inc., say that where every persuasion is represented, the common meeting-ground is music. In eight years in these hills, this has been chiefly classical. Dr. Koussevitzky has been openminded to the works of contemporary composers many of whom have been seen, as their works have been heard, on the stage of the music shed.

It is hard to say exactly why the music is enhanced by the setting, but the fact is evident. Whether the concert-goers sit in the tiers of boxes or in the seats of the orchestra or outer rim, acoustics are perfect, and the stillness, as the vast audience pays tribute to great music, magnificently performed, is profound. Lights go up for stage and down for the shed at the appointed time for every concert of the three weekend series, three to a week, Thursday night, Saturday night and Sunday afternoon. The audience is there, and there are no stragglers.

Cushion Trade Pleased

Here the "cushion trade," those who bring car robes or pillows and sit on the grass outside the shed, are happy in their distant but excellent reception of the concert. Even at the entrance gates the music is enchanting. Tonight is flawless. In five years of concert-going it has never been otherwise. There are those, however, who have sat through first-night concerts in the days when there were either one series or two in successive weekends, when the rain descended, the lightning flashd and the thunder crashed in competition with Dr. Koussevitzky's choice of "Ride of the Valkyries." They sat, and outlasted the wind and the weather and gave their tumultuous approval at the end.

The comparatively new music shed has been a blessing, for in three weekends there must be some variation in the weather from year to year. Since 1938, when the vast concert hall, open on all sides but the stage, was dedicated, the annual music festival has drawn many thousands in an August season. Tonight's concert was a new exaltation to the assemblage, with another of Dr. Kusevitzky's incomparably-chosen programs of three composers only: Mendelssohn, "The Italian Symphony," Beethoven, "Overture to Lenore, No. 3;" and Shostakovitch "Symphony No. 5."

Aid "Gas" Conservation

At intermission, strolling around the grounds at Tanglewood and greeting festival habitues, and in spite of the fact that hundreds of Worcester people were there, I encountered only a few. It may have something to do with seating plans. The all too brief intermission, no previous plan for meeting, or even the confusion of voices and lights.

There was an evident eagerness to aid in the new gasoline conservation plan, subject to much intermission conversation. Deadline for the first Sunday, 7 o'clock, will find many on their homeward way to Worcester tonight. According to talk before and after this second concert, there will be no empty tanks. Others had walked to not too distant points, all had tried to drive moderately to save gasoline, and the cars that covered the hillside like a carpet will take on a new importance to their owners as homegoing time arrives late tomorrow afternoon.

Special event of the series is the benefit concert on which the women of the festival board are working, for the evening of Aug. 15. Mrs. George W. Edman, wife of the clerk of the Festival Association, tells me the boxes are going very well, with a program that increases in interest every day, and proceeds going to the U. S. O. and British war relief equally. Last year a similar event brought a fabulous sum to a war cause. There are more than 100 music critics and special writers here this year, another indication of the increasing interest in this exceptional festival.

This Clipping From
HARTFORD, CONN.
COURANT

AUG 3 - 1941

The World In Music

By PIERRE KEY

Everything is set, at this moment of writing, for the opening of the Berkshire's Festival's eighth annual activities . . . a program of solid music with the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Conductor Serge Koussevitzky were scheduled to perform last Thursday.

Much has been accomplished since the start of this enterprise on the beautiful Tanglewood estate near Lenox, Massachusetts. Simple physical aids have been succeeded by a fine "shed" which makes a suitable out of doors auditorium, and the series of programs has grown to one of major proportions.

The performances have become as unique as the enterprise itself; for there is now an established school catering to specially gifted "pupils" who are guided by masters in their own particular crafts.

The three series of programs which will take place on succeeding Thursdays, Saturdays, and Sundays during this month range extensively across the available classic and modern orchestra repertory: Beethoven, Brahms, Mozart, Handel, Haydn and Wagner will vie with Debussy, Hindemith, Shostaovitch, Villa-Lobos and our own Aaron Copland, Roy Harris, and Samuel Barber.

This is as it should be: compositions chosen for their seeming fitness regardless of nationally. It is when a composer is able to hold his own in any company, or ranked as worthy of such association, that he gains a place of acceptance.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE

AUG 3 - 1941

3,000 Attend OpenRehearsal In Berkshires

Koussevitzky Leads Boston Players in Music Shed for an Invited Audience

By Francis D. Perkins

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 2.—Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symph[illegible]estra held the first of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival's special semi-public Saturday rehearsals in the Tanglewood Music Shed this morning before an invited audience of more than 3,000 persons. These had opportunity to listen to almost four hours of music making, including Dimitri Shostakovitch's fifth symphony, which was also heard in tonight's regular festival program with Mendelssohn's Italian symphony and Beethoven's third Leonore overture.

Besides the remarkable recently wrought Russian work, which was the subject of Olin Downes's lecture in the intermission, the orchestra also played much of the program which will be heard in the third concert tomorrow afternoon, including Brahms's fourth symphony, Aaron Copland's "Quiet City," with Georges Mager as solo trumpeter and Louis Speyer as English horn soloist, and Rimsky-Korsakoff's "Capriccio Espagnol."

It was well after 1 o'clock when Gregor Piatigorsky joined the orchestra for a final rehearsal of Paul Hindemith's cello concerto.

Those who are admitted to these Saturday sessions are festival members, Berkshire Music Center students and faculty members and children from schools of the county who attended music-appreciation classes during the last academic year.

For these, the opportunity to hear the Boston Symphony present a program which virtually amounts to a concert and a half is particularly valuable.

In spite of the presence of a large audience, the event remained an actual rehearsal; the conductor did not hesitate to halt his musicians here and there for special study of a particular phrase or passage with the aim of attaining the fullest realization of the interpretation which he had in mind.

He traversed the Shostakovitch symphony, however, with hardly a stop. Of this work, which he has conducted both in Boston and New York, he has a high opinion, and this morning's performance left this reviewer agreeing with him.

Further comment on this symphony and on tonight's concert must be deferred, however, until tomorrow's installment of this narrative. All reserved seats for tonight were sold by mid-afternoon.

This Clipping From
NEW BEDFORD, MASS.
STANDARD TIMES

AUG 3 - 1941

Tanglewood Concert Planned To Aid U.S.O., British Relief

Special to Standard-Times

LENOX, Aug. 2—A New England manifestation calling everybody from everywhere to Tanglewood will be given Friday, Aug. 15 under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The program, patterned after the successful event last year which netted nearly $25,000 for Allied relief, will be presented at the home of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival and the Berkshire Music Center.

The proceeds this year will be divided equally between the United Service Organizations and British War Relief, Inc.

Again all the forces at Tanglewood, the Festival organization, the orchestra, Dr. Koussevitzky and the Music Center, will cooperate in the presentation.

Proceeds turned over to the U.S.O. will be used to provide machines and recordings of good music for all boys in the service and now in training at various camps.

Philip R. Allen, prominent industrialist and president of the board of trustees of the New England Conservatory of Music at Boston, has accepted appointment as general chairman for the benefit and to the executive committee he has named trustees of the orchestra and the Festival. On the committee are:

Jerome D. Greene, Richard C. Paine and Edward A. Taft of the orchestra board; Dr. James Phinney Baxter 3d, president of Williams College; Mrs. William Felton Barrett of Rye, N. Y., and Egremont, and George W. Edman, managing editor of the Berkshire Eagle in Pittsfield, representing the Festival board. Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, president of the Festival, and Ernest B. Dane, president of the orchestra, will be honorary chairmen.

This Clipping From MISSOULA, MONT.
MISSOULIAN

AUG 3 1941

The Music Box

By Allegra

Twenty years ago today the morning newspapers carried a dispatch that shocked and profoundly grieved millions of music-lovers the world over. Enrico Caruso had died the day before, in his native Naples. He was only 48, and although he had been having serious throat trouble, he could still sing like nobody else in his own or recent times, and was supposedly convalescing rapidly from his latest operation. Death overtook him in the midst of eager plans for resuming his place at the Metropolitan Opera in the fall.

Natural gifts and hard work brought Caruso the blazing fame that still endures and makes it unnecessary to repeat here the oft-told account of his career. The words of W. J. Henderson in his New York Sun article of August 3, 1921 are as true in 1941: "No other tenor remembered by living opera-goers had so beautiful a voice. No other had better technic. . . . In sincerity, in fervor, in devotion to his art, he was the peer of any opera singer in history."

The Berkshire Festival concludes its Series A today and begins its Series B on Thursday. For today, Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony have Gregor Piatigorsky as soloist in the Hindemith Cello Concerto, and play orchestral works by Brahms, Aaron Copland, and Rimsky-Korsakov. On Thursday, excerpts from the Mozart "Requiem" feature the Festival Chorus, and the other offering on the program is Beethoven's Third ("Eroica") Symphony. Saturday's program again includes a modern American composition, Roy Harris' Second ("Romantic") Symphony, together with music by Mozart and Wagner, and the Brahms Second Piano Concerto with Leonard Shure as soloist. Series B ends next Sunday with an all-orchestral program of Mozart, Debussy and Berlioz.

The Chicago, Philadelphia and New York Philharmonic schedules for the week can not be given in such exact detail, but here is the available information: Georg Szell concludes his Ravinia park engagement with the Chicago Symphony today, Pierre Monteux taking over on Tuesday to stay through next Sunday, his presentations including all-Wagner concerts with Helen Traubel as soloist on Saturday and Sunday. The Philadelphia Orchestra's Robin Hood Dell offering on Tuesday features Baritone John Charles Thomas and Saul Caston conducts on Thursday. The Philharmonic has among its Lewisohn Stadium concerts for the week an all-Bach program on Tuesday, Hans Wilhelm Steinberg conducting the A Minor Concerto for Four Pianos with Harold Bauer, Charles Naegele, Beveridge Webster and Mosche Paranov at the keyboards, and the Fifth Brandenburg Concerto with Bauer, Violinist John Corigliano and Flutist Georges Barrere featured; then an all-Wagner program under Hermann Adler on Wednesday, with Helen Traubel.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE

AUG 3 - 1941

Mozart Music Will Be Heard In Berkshires

Koussevitzky to Conduct Third Festival Event Today at Tanglewood

Serge Koussevitzky will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra today at 3:30 at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., in the third concert of Series A of the eighth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival. The program includes Brahms's fourth symphony; Aaron Copland's "Quiet City" with Georges Mager, trumpet and Louis Speyer, English horn, as soloists; Hindemith's cello concerto with Gregor Piatigorsky as soloist and Rimsky-Korsakoff's "Capriccio Espagnol."

The concerts of Series B will be held next Thursday and Saturday nights at 8:30 and next Sunday afternoon, Aug. 10, at 3:30. Dr. Koussevitzky will conduct the following programs:

Thursday

Requiem, Dies Irae, Rex Tremendae, Confutatis, Lacrimosa, Domine Jesu, from Requiem .... Mozart
Berkshire Musical Association Chorus, Horace Hunt, director
Symphony No. 3, in E flat (Eroica) .... Beethoven

Saturday

Eine kleine Nachtmusik .... Mozart
Symphony No. 2 (Romantic) .... Hanson
Piano Concerto No. 2, in B flat major .... Brahms
Leonard Shure
Preludes to "Lohengrin" and "Meistersinger" .... Wagner

Next Sunday

Symphony in A major (K. 201) .... Mozart
La Mer .... Debussy
Fantastic Symphony .... Berlioz

The Mozart works on this program are presented in commemoration of the hundredth anniversary of the compbsers death (Dec. 5, 1791).

Next Week's Schedule

Series C begins Thursday night, Aug. 14, when the Berkshire Festival Chorus, trained this summer at the Berkshire Music Center, will take part in Beethoven's "Missa Dolemnis" in D. This will be preceded by Handel's tenth organ concerto, in D Minor, with E. Power Biggs as soloist. On Saturday night, Aug. 16, Ruth Posselt will be the soloist in Samuel Barber's violin concerto. Dr. Koussevitzky will also conduct Vaughan Williams's "London" symphony and excerpts from Wagner's "Parsifal" and Tannhauser." The closing program on Sunday afternoon, Aug. 17, consists of Sibelius's seventh symphony, Prokofieff's "Lieutenant Kije" suite and Tchaikovsky's fifth symphony.

The benefit program at Tanglewood on Friday, Aug. 15, for the United Service Organizations and British War Relief, Inc., will begin at 5:30 and last until late in the evening. Dr. Koussevitzky will conduct a band of 250 musicians chosen from the bands of the 26th Division at Camp Edwards. Various activities of the Berkshire Music Center will then be illustrated. A "Manifestation," with noted speakers taking part, will begin with the singing of Randal Thompson's "Alleluia" by the festival chorus. The closing event of the benefit will be a concert by the Boston Symphony under Dr. Koussevitzky, with Albert Spalding as soloist in Mendelssohn's violin concerto. The program also includes the first movement of Beethoven fifth symphony and Tchaikovsky's "1812" overture.

The Berkshire Music Center's opera department, directed by Dr. Herbert Graf, will give two performances of Mozart's "Cosi fan tutte," in English, in its new theater on the Tanglewood estate on Tuesday and Wednesday nights, Aug. 12 and 13, with two student casts. Boris Goldovsky will conduct. The scenery and costumes are designed by Richard Rychtarik and executed by the department's stagecraft students.

Information about tickets may be obtained from the office of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival in Stockbridge, Mass., or its New York office at 113 West Fifty-seventh Street. Inquiries about lodgings may be directed to the Festival Accommodations Bureau of the Berkshire Hills Conference at the Stockbridge office.

This Clipping From
NEW HAVEN, CONN.
REGISTER

AUG 3 - 1941

MUSIC SEASON AT STOCKBRIDGE PROMISES WELL

No immediate circumstance could be asked to make the opening of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival Thursday a more fortunate occasion. The threats of rain passed away, the sharp breeze gave pith and moment to the sound of strings and brass in the open air, and the usual brilliant audience gave willing ear to the familiar works of the opening program. The Boston Symphony members appeared refreshed and eager, and Dr. Koussevitsky discovered new graces and new meanings in the works selected for performance. Another season is begun, already assured of the largest audiences yet to visit "Tanglewood," and full of promise for artistic accomplishments of a high order.

The spacious estate high in the Berkshire Hills has been improved each year, and a visit to these concerts carries with it the opportunity to trespass on the entire range of the far-flung musical community. Two new buildings have been added to accommodate student activities. A concert hall and opera stage are constructed near the formal gardens, the former for small recitals and chamber music, the latter being presently made ready for a performance of Mozart's "Cosi fan tutte." Both buildings are plainly designed with complete equipment and every comfort needed for the school; glass doors are provided in one hall which, by sliding back, extend the range of hearing to persons seated outside. Tucked away in out-of-the-way corners are three private studios for practice, doubtless a very welcome refuge for performers of all types.

